Peace and Good Will

By G. C. BREWER

Nearly two thousand years ago the shepherds that watched their flocks on the moonlit hills of Judæa heard the strains of the angelic anthem, "Peace on Earth, Good Will to Men." The music floated softly over the earth and its melody filled the night as though the moonbeams, like the strings of a harp, vibrated to the touch of the heavenly musicians. The shepherds, filled with awe and wonder, heard from the lips of the angel the glad announcement of the birth of the Babe of Bethlehem. To this lone angel was given the honor of first bringing the message of mercy to men, but these shepherds were also permitted to hear a great host of angels as they celebrated the occasion with songs of praise. This was not intended primarily as an announcement, but it was that the joy and rejoicing of the angels in heaven overflowed to earth. For these angels that encamp around the servants of God to deliver them, and that desire to look into the marvelous dispensations of Jehovah toward man, and that rejoice when a sinner repents, may well be supposed to have made the heavens ring and reverberate with a joy unequalled in eternity and inconceivable to man when the Babe was born that was to bring peace to all the peoples of earth and surcease from sin and sorrow for all the suffering sons of men. The glory was to God in the highest heaven for his marvelous mercy and love, and the message was to men of the lowest regions, of peace and hope and light and joy. O, sweet old story! Ah, glorious night! Tell me again of the Babe and the mother and the manger. Tell me again of how the angels sang and the shepherds wondered. Tell me of the wise men and of the star in the East, and let me weep with joy as its meaning fills my soul. Let skeptics doubt, higher critics deny, and atheists deride; but the minds of mortals can never conceive of a story so sublimely sweet, and the wicked and war-weary world will ever delight to believe in a Redeemer to whom it can go for peace and salvation, as it has the wisdom to see that its sins and sinful devices have plunged it into ruin irreparable. As the world now stands blood-stained and still bleeding from the most terrible conflict in its history, it is small wonder that its statesmen are pleading for peace and peace provisions and that the people of the nations take up again and shout the angel chorus of "Peace on earth, good will to men."

THE PRINCE OF PEACE.

The prophets had foretold that the long-looked-for Messiah would be a Prince of Peace and that of the increase of his kingdom and of peace there would be no end. And the song that the shepherds heard was a prelude of the peace that was in the plan of Jehovah when he gave the Babe to the earth. His principles are principles of peace, and his life was a demonstration of their efficacy. And like a gentle river flowing on in power and beauty, peace, sweet peace, has ever swept over the nation or the individual that has adopted these principles and lived by them. Yet we are often reminded that he told us himself that he came not to send peace, but a sword among the children of men. Even so; and the history of his message in the earth has proved that statement true, also. But it is because men oppose themselves, blindly fight against that which would bring them joy, and bitterly strive against those who would point the way of peace, that the sword goes with the message. No man who had subscribed to the doctrine of Christ, who had surrendered to his will, and who was imbued with his spirit, ever precipitated a battle of any sort, or willingly had part in one that others precipitated. The trouble is, men will not surrender; they will not be taken captive by the Prince of Peace; but when they do, and as they do, the promised peace and the sweetest rest come to their souls. Like the sick child that fights its kindly nurse when she would minister to its comfort, but finally submits to her ministrations, and, scathed to rest, falls asleep upon her bosom, the rebellious old earth may some day, when it has worn itself out by its senseless wars, surrender to the Savior and be calmed to rest upon his gentle breast. At least some men of earth will come into this blessed condition, and may God speed the day when even those who dare to call him Lord, but do not the things that he commands, shall see their folly and give up to his will and find peace.

"MY PEACE I GIVE."

The dying legacy of the Lord Jesus Christ to his disciples was peace. "Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you; not as the world giveth, give I unto you. Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid." (John 14: 27.) Our Lord not only pronounced a benediction upon them in the words, "Peace I leave with you," but he bequeathed to them the peace he himself enjoyed. "My peace I give unto you." And that this is a heart condition or soul state is made certain by the next sentence: "Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid." "Such tranquillity of soul, such uninterrupted happiness of mind, such everlasting friendship with God as I enjoy, may ye all enjoy." In such a manner and in such a fervent spirit did the Savior pass his peace on to his followers. And such peace has ever filled the soul of him who has enthroned the Prince of Peace in his heart. Temptations and troubles cannot avail to mar his peace, for he casts all his care upon Him and calmly trusts his promise. Amid all the wickedness of the world and the mutations of time he has the Savior's peace. When the world conditions are gloomy and the outlook is grim, the Christian has peace; for he knows Him in whom he has believed, and he knows that all things will work out for his good. In the presence of death he has assurance, and on the brink of the grave his heart is not troubled. Even when he comes to stand in the presence of the great I Am, he has no fear, for his peace has been made and reconciliation has been effected. Such is the condition of the soul in which the Savior reigns; and thus he is seen to be all that the prophets said he would be and to bring the blessing of which the angels sang at his birth. Let the world own him, and peace will reign throughout its borders and good will will come to all the distressed and distraught men of earth.

The citation of any example of the unselfish spirit makes good reading, and such examples are not to be confined by any means to great and heroic deeds. The unselfish spirit manifested in doing what may seem to be very small things is rare enough to be beautiful and inspiring. A note from the widow of the lamented David Lipscomb relative to her receiving the Gospel Advocate reads as follows: "In appreciation of the kindness that puts my name on the Advocate list free, I send this check for two dollars to send the paper to some poor sister who is unable to pay for it. [Signed] Margaret Lipscomb." The management of the Gospel Advocate had no thought of doing a kind act when the name of this saintly woman was placed on the complimentary list. It was only fair and just that this should be done as a little token of love and appreciation for the widow of the man who had given the greatest energies of his life to building up the paper and in whose sacrifices she always shared. When we begin to review the history of the Gospel Advocate, there is no grander lesson to be impressed than that afforded by the sacrifices of those who have struggled to keep it in existence in the belief that it was doing good for the cause of Christ. No money consideration was ever involved in what David Lipscomb did for his fellow human beings. He taught the Bible, preached the gospel, and wrote articles for fifty years free of charge. He was criticized time and again for giving too much of his time and money to the paper and the school, but no living man ever accused him of "commercializing the gospel" or making the way of godliness a way of gain. It would be a fine thing if we of the younger generation could always remember this crowning trait of unselfishness which stood out so prominently in David Lipscomb's activities, and which is being reproduced in the life of his widow, and practice it ourselves. For, after all, he and all others who have striven in this unselfish spirit shall receive the greatest reward, a hundredfold and everlasting life.

Not infrequently mention is made of some brother who is destined to wear, or who would like to wear, the mantle of David Lipscomb. He himself never encouraged such a thing, but the rather stressed the frailties of all mankind. But if there are any such candidates in the field, let me humbly suggest that they might begin by emulating his unselfish spirit in teaching and preaching the word.

The true way to succeed a great and good man is not by merely occupying his place, but by standing for the principles of truth and righteousness for which he stood.

Not long since W. H. Book, the noted preacher and author who leads in the activities of the Tabernacle Christian Church at Columbus, Ind., printed some reasons why young men should enter the ministry. He made some good points, but there are two or three of his "reasons" to which some may take exceptions. One of these reads:

I recommend the ministry because it is the most appreciated job in the world. Tell me any other class that has so many privileges granted and that receives so many words of cheer and praise. Who does not remember the visit of the minister to the home when he came to spend the night and to be entertained in the home? He got the best bed, the best room, the best there was to eat, and all showed him reverence. I have been there.

Some fastidious souls may object to the reference to the preacher's calling as a "job," but I pass that by. The term "job" implies work, and certainly every honest preacher will work. Elbert Hubbard once said: "The difference between the boy who looks for a position and the boy who looks for a job is that the latter gets it." But Brother Book is mistaken about its being "the most appreciated job in the world." That does not usually follow. The gospel preacher who shuns not to declare the whole counsel of God is likely to receive more of criticism and blame than words of cheer and praise. Some of us do remember the big ado that was made when the preacher came to spend the night and got the best bed and everything, but that was back in grandma's time. Perhaps the old-time hospitality still thrives in Brother Book's congregation, but it is a thing of the past in most places. Nowadays the visiting preacher is "entertained" in a hotel or a boarding house. That which was formerly regarded as a pleasure is now considered a real problem—"Who will take care of the preacher?" There is indeed a fragrant recollection belonging to my boyhood days of the times when the preacher came to our house and the whole family sat quietly to hear him read a chapter from the Bible and knelt with him in prayer. But such scenes are rare nowadays. They went out with the breaking up of that great institution, the American home. The spirit of reverence went out when the spirit of worldliness came in. In these modern times, when the preacher comes at all, he is formally entertained like any other guest. Sometimes the parents are not quick enough to hide the deck of cards, and the young people are conniving to escape boredom and get away to a ball or a picture show.

I do not write these lines in any cynical spirit. There is a difference between candor and cynicism. Cynicism tells the evil just for the sake of telling it; candor states the facts as they are, ever seeking a remedy. After all, preachers of the gospel should not seek to be entertained. Jesus said that all who would become his disciples must take up the cross and follow him. There is no cross when we get the best of everything. Ours is not to be a way of "many privileges" of the earthly kind, but a way of unceasing opportunities. Over and above every other consideration, we must hear the Master's impelling words: "We must work the works of him that sent me while it is day: the night cometh, when no man can work."

Here is another one of Brother Book's reasons for entering the ministry:

I recommend the ministry because it is a life that opens up more avenues for service than any other. He is permitted to associate with the best people on earth—the aristocracy of heaven. He has for his companions the choicest spirits of earth or heaven. No need for him to be lonely, for he has the promise that Jesus will go with him all the way.

It is indeed a privilege to associate with the best people on earth, but we should not use that privilege to the extent that we neglect those who are bad and whose souls need to be saved. Jesus Christ, our great Exemplar, came not to call the righteous, but sinners, to repentance. He taught us how to associate with sinners without partaking of their sins. Some of the brightest jewels in his crown have been dug from the mire and scum of the earth. The preacher who overestimates the worth of the "aristocracy" will more than likely overlook the diamond in the rough.

While Jesus brings a helpful message to all mankind, his supreme message is not to the righteous, but to sinners in all walks of life. The preacher's business is to find sinners and bring them that message, with the assurance that Jesus can save to the uttermost. Opportunity cries:

"Wait not for precious chances passed away;
Weep not for golden ages on the wane!
Each night I burn the records of the day;
At sunrise every soul is born again.

"Though deep in mire, wring not your hands and weep;
I lend my arms to all who say, 'I can!'
No shame-faced outcast ever sank so deep
But could rise again to be a man."

There Is No Campbellite Church.

BY J. W. ATKISSON.

There is no Campbellite Church nor any Campbellites, except in the imagination of partisans and ignorant men and women.

I know that the enemies of apostolic Christianity very confidently affirm that Alexander Campbell is the head and founder of a religious sect. But all well-informed, unprejudiced persons deny it, because they know better. In a letter addressed to an editor in New Orleans, Mr. Campbell said:

"I have always repudiated all human heads and human names for the people of the Lord, and I shall feel very thankful if you will correct the erroneous impression which your article may have made in thus representing me as the founder of a religious denomination."

So you see that the enemies of apostolic Christianity are mistaken about it. Mr. Campbell never founded a sect. He spent most of his life in writing and preaching against founding sects. The great work of his life was earnest and powerful opposition to "sects" among the people of God. Nor are Mr. Campbell's writings at all authoritative among his brethren. That great man never intended his writings to be authoritative anywhere. No one ever labored more earnestly against all human authority in religion than he. No body of people can be found in this or any other country whose members profess to be Campbellites. We, as a people, have never accepted that name. Mr. Campbell never intended that we should. No man ever labored more earnestly against all human names in religion than he. He believed that "a kingdom divided against itself cannot stand." Hence, his aim was to discourage party names and divisions; his aim was to found no sect, or denomination, but to restore the one New Testament church which had been rent asunder and destroyed by sectarian divisions, creeds, and parties.

Mr. Campbell taught that the Bible, the whole Bible, and nothing but the Bible, should be the religion of Christians. He said that all Christians everywhere ought to accept the Bible alone as the man of their counsel and the only rule of faith and practice in all religious work and worship. His motto was: "Where the Bible speaks, we speak; where the Bible is silent, we are silent." He taught that men and women ought to cease to be governed by human creeds and be governed by the Bible alone. He also taught that they ought to cease to be sectarians and be Christians only. He taught that Christ founded one church, and only one. He taught that all people should become and be members of this one church that Christ built, and no other. He exhorted them to cease to be Baptists, Methodists, Presbyterians, etc., and be just simply Christians, or disciples of Christ, such as we read about in the New Testament. He taught that all ought to become and be just simply Christians, or disciples of Christ, and nothing else; to become and be members of the church of Christ, and nothing else; to teach exactly what is taught in the New Testament, and nothing else; to practice exactly what was practiced, or recommended, by the inspired apostles of Christ, and nothing else. This will make all Christians one body in Christ, and enable them "to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace," in the one body, or church, of Christ. Then there would be one fold and one Shepherd; one body, or church, and one Spirit; one hope, one Lord, one faith, and one baptism. Then all Christians would be one, as the Father and Son are one, and the world would believe in Jesus and be saved. This is what Alexander Campbell undertook to accomplish. This was, and is, the object of Campbell's restoration movement, and not to found a new sect, or church. (Read John 17: 20, 21; Ps. 133: 1; 1 Cor. 1: 10; Rom. 16: 17.)

When Brother Campbell began to search for the truth, he found that there were no congregations worshipping as they did in the apostolic age; hence, like Nehemiah of old, he began the work of restoring the city (church) of God, by calling the people back to the ancient worship, but he did not make any new church. He taught that whatever is new in religion is not true, and whatever is true is not new. He taught that nothing is worth a cent in religion which is not as old as the New Testament. So you can see that Mr. Campbell's work was in its very nature hostile to all denominations as such; not, of course, to the good people among the denominations, but to denominationalism itself. To found or build up and maintain a mere sect or denomination, however excellent, or however superior to those already in existence it might be, was not within the scope of Alexander Campbell's purpose. Then, as I said before, no body of people can be found in this country whose members profess to be Campbellites. We, as a people, have never accepted that name. Mr. Campbell never intended that we should. We are Campbell's brethren, not his followers. Campbell was not crucified for us, and we were not baptized into his name, and therefore we are not Campbellites. But Christ was crucified for us, and we were baptized in his name; therefore we are Christians, and not Campbellites. Is not that plain? (Read 1 Cor. 1: 12, 13.)

But we are told that the above unchristianizes all others but ourselves. We, however, fail to see the matter so. We dechristianize nobody. Does our professing to be Christians unchristianize others? Certainly not. How, then, do we unchristianize all but ourselves? Does our wearing the Christian name logically imply that nobody else is a Christian? It certainly does not. As a matter of fact, Alexander Campbell and his brethren have ever held, from the beginning of their effort to return to the pure, primitive, apostolic Christianity, and do hold, that every Christian, whether identified with any of the denominations or not, not only has the right to be, but ought to be, simply a Christian and nothing else, and wear only New Testament names as we ourselves are endeavoring to do. We claim no exclusive right to anything in the New Testament. We claim for all that it contains primitive, apostolic Christianity; that we all can learn from it what the Lord would have us believe, and do, and be, and hope, and attain; that if all good people will turn away from all human standards to this divine one, they may get rid of all that is human and false and be united upon what is divine and true. If we believe just what the inspired apostles believed, confess just what they confessed, and do just what they did—if, in other words, we believe just what they required people to believe, confess what they required people to confess, and do what they required them to do, and are content to be what they required people to be—will not that reproduce apostolic Christianity and restore the original church which Christ builded upon the rock? If not, then will some one please tell us just what will restore it? Show us one thing we teach, practice, or advocate for which we cannot read a "Thus saith the word of God," and we will quit it at once; or show us one thing the Bible requires us to teach, practice, or advocate that we are neglecting, and we will begin it at once in the interest of the Master's cause. We want to be sure that we are right. Our motto is: "Where the Bible speaks, we speak; and where the Bible is silent, we are silent." (Read Isa. 8: 20; 1 Pet. 4: 11.) Is not that plain?

It is said that during the Civil War two preachers of different denominations, who were quite friendly, as all preachers should be, and would be if it were not for the unscriptural dogmas and divisions, concluded to hold a meeting together in a good settlement in Northern Kentucky. The understanding was that each was to lay aside his denominational peculiarities, and they would labor together to preach the gospel and turn sinners from darkness to light, without reference to denomination. Then, at the conclusion of the meeting, the converts, if any, should be left free to identify themselves with either denomination, as they preferred. It is said that there were about thirty converts. They were all brought to a hearty trusting faith in Christ and to repentance of sins, and were buried with Christ in baptism, and were walking in newness of life. But instead of joining either or any denomination, they decided to join no church, but to remain just as they were. But what were they? They were Christians. This every one must admit; for if they were not Christians, then believing in Christ and obeying the gospel does not make one a Christian. But what else were they? Nothing. They were simply Christians; nothing more, nothing less. Is not that plain? But to what church did they belong? To the church of Christ. But to what denomination did they belong? They did not belong to any. They belonged to Christ and were members of his body; nothing more, nothing less. They occupied a position in which all Protestants, at least, admit them to be Christians and members of the church of Christ. They also continued to meet together to edify one another and to keep the ordinances as they were observed by the first Christians under the leadership of the inspired apostles. Then what were they? The world must answer: They were Christians and nothing else. To what denomination did they belong? To none. They stood precisely where the first Christians stood in all these respects and they constituted just such a congregation as Alexander Campbell and his brethren have been constituting all over this land for the last hundred years and more.

Alexander Campbell admonished all good people to cease to sectize around the ordinance of baptism or anything else. He wanted them to abandon and abolish all sectarian denominations and walk with God. He wanted to break down, abandon, and abolish all denominational lines and let all the children of God become and be one, as Christ and the Father are one, in order that the whole world might believe in the Lord and be saved. (See John 17: 20, 21; Matt. 28: 19; 1 Cor. 1: 10; Ps. 133: 1; Rom. 16: 17, 18.)

Christ and the Church and War.

BY J. L. HINES.

All authority in heaven and earth were given unto Christ upon his resurrection and coronation as King of the universe (Matt. 28: 18), God having handed to him the rule of the kingdom of heaven, which was for its subjects—all Christians. Christ fulfilled and took out of the way the only law, that given by Moses, which provided for war; and that was given to one nation only, the Jewish (Deut. 5: 3), until Christ came, and, as the Prince of Peace, set up the long-promised kingdom, a government of peace (Gal. 3: 19; Col. 2: 14).

Christ's laws are above all laws. Nowhere does he make a different code for our political relations, but teaches obedience to rulers and those in authority in the kingdom of men, except when their laws conflict with those of God, as in Acts 5: 29. His teaching gives neither to any nation nor to his followers the right to engage in carnal warfare. Such was the teaching of Christ, his apostles, the New Testament writers, and the early Christians for about two centuries or more after Christ's ministry on earth. Such has been the teaching of ministers, evangelists, teachers, and elders of the "Restoration Movement" from its beginning until now, except with a few during the great War.

I here give a few of the scriptures which prohibit Christ's followers taking part in combatant military service. Jesus says: "Love your enemies, and pray for them that persecute you." (Matt. 5: 44.) "But I say unto you, Resist not him that is evil." (Verse 39.) Jesus, in the parable of the wheat and tares, forbids his servants to seek to destroy any, even the wicked, claiming that as his right in the end of the world. (Matt. 13: 24-42.) He forbids to us the use of the sword (carnal weapons), saying to Peter (and to us as well): "For all that use the sword shall perish with the sword." (Matt. 26: 52.) "Therefore all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them." (Matt. 7: 12.) Jesus says: "My kingdom is not of this world: if my kingdom were of this world, then would my servants fight, that I should not be delivered to the Jews." (John 18: 26.) The Holy Spirit, through Paul, said: "For though we walk in the flesh, we do not war after the flesh: (for the weapons of our warfare are not carnal)." (2 Cor. 10: 3-5.) "For we wrestle not against flesh and blood." (Eph. 6: 12.) Paul, writing to the Hebrews, whose country was about to be invaded by the Roman armies, fighting the Jews, commanded those Hebrew Christians: "Follow peace with all men, and holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord." (Heb. 12: 14.) Christ, through the Holy Spirit, forbids us to indulge in lusts: "For the grace of God that bringeth salvation hath appeared to all men, teaching us that, denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live soberly, righteously, and godly, in this present world." (Tit. 2: 11, 12.) "I beseech you as strangers and pilgrims, abstain from fleshly lusts, which war against the soul." (1 Pet. 2: 11.) "From whence come wars and fightings among you? come they not hence, even of your lusts that war in your members?" (James 4: 1.)

I conclude, there never was a war, moral or physical, which did not come from lusts which are forbidden by the Christ of the church. The New Testament further teaches that it is contrary to the doctrine of Christ to rebel against any government, no matter how despotic, or take up arms against any nation. (Rom. 13: 2.)

Alexander Campbell, in his treatise on "War," published in 1838, said:

The apostle Peter calls Christians a holy nation, a royal priesthood, a peculiar people. . . . Christ has one grand kingdom, composed of all Christian communities in the world, of which he is himself the proper sovereign, law-giver, and king.

The right given to the Jews to wage war is not vouchsafed to any other nation, for they were under a theocracy, and were God's sheriff to punish nations; consequently no Christian can argue from the wars of the Jews in justification or extenuation of the wars of Christendom. The Jews had a divine precept and authority; no existing nation can produce such a warrant.

The precepts of Christianity positively inhibit war, by showing that wars and fightings come from men's lusts and evil passions, and by commanding Christians to follow peace with all men.

David Oliphant, a Canadian, in the Christian Banner, in Volume 8, No. 3, in March, 1854, discussing the subject of war, said:

Great unanimity upon any question could not be asked than now exists among us as a people in relation to the whole war question. My opinion is that not two individuals are associated with the Disciples in Canada who entertain what is called "war views."

For it is certain that the Disciples in Canada will not take up arms.

It is a cause of great rejoicing that the Disciples are so well united upon the expediency of letting the government know their views and principles relative to war, and giving due notice by political prayer that they decline engaging in it either now or hereafter.

David Lipscomb said:

He [Paul] told the disciples they could not execute vengeance, and that the weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty through God to the pulling down of strongholds (2 Cor. 10: 4), showing clearly that Christians could not use those civil powers to promote righteousness, morality, or good to humanity. Christians cannot use them. ("Civil Government," page 86.)

Christ's subjects are in the world, but not of it. His kingdom is not of this world; his servants cannot fight with carnal weapons. (Pages 89, 90.)

A man cannot cherish in his heart two spirits—one to rule his religious life, the other to rule his civil life. He cannot adopt two standards of morality—one for his church life, the other for his political life. (Page 134.)

David King, of Birmingham, England, in the British Millennial Harbinger, Volume 15, page 28, said in 1861:

The only weapons which a Christian can use without offense to the Lord are those which are not carnal. . . . Being followers of the Prince of Peace, we will not, because we dare not, deal out death and destruction; the work of slaughter cannot be ours. If world power must do this work, those who serve the world, and not the servants of the Lord Christ, must engage in it.

Moses E. Lard, in his article, "Should Christians Go to War?" published in Lard's Quarterly, in April, 1866, says:

Why has Christ decreed that all who take the sword shall die by it? The sole reason is because it is wrong to take the sword. If it were right to take the sword, then it would be wrong to decree that he who takes it shall die by it. To die by the sword is appointed to be the penalty of taking it; it is the punishment due to him who uses it. But this it could not be if using the sword were right. It is hence wrong, universally wrong. No Christian, then, may use it. Consequently, no Christian can go to war.

Next, the specific direction: "Put up the sword again into its place." But why put it up? Because, says the defendant of war, it was not allowable to use it in furtherance of Christ's kingdom. Granted. But this is not the reason assigned by the Savior for putting up the sword. That reason is: "For all that take the sword shall die by it." Clearly the train of thought, which yields the specific direction is this: All who take the sword shall die by it, because it is wrong ever to take it. Then, Peter, you must not use it.

Christians cannot go to war, for they cannot become men of violence.

Consequently, if the State command him to go to war, let him mildly and gently, but firmly and unalterably, decline. If the State arrest him and punish him, be it so; never let him go to war.

In his "Commentary on Romans," he says on Rom. 13: 1, 2:

But crises often occur in which the seeming interests of the State and the duty of the Christian clash. What is then to be done? For example, where a State is engaged in war, and commands its Christian subjects to bear arms and fight, what is his duty? My opinion is, he must refuse obedience to the command of the State, even at the expense of his life. For no Christian man can, according to the New Testament, bear arms and take human life.

J. W. McGarvey, in his "Commentary on Matthew," says on Matt. 26: 52, regarding use of the sword:

It should be further observed here that the reason for commanding Peter to put up the sword was not drawn from the circumstances of the case. It was not because the use of the sword would prevent Jesus from dying for the world; nor because its use was wrong in the cause of Jesus, but innocent in other causes; but because "all who take up the sword shall perish with the sword." The universality of the proposition made it applicable in the case of Peter. The statement has the form of a prediction and the force of a prohibition in reference to appeals to the sword, whether by churches, nations, or other organized bodies of men.

I believe that it can be said without successful contradiction that the people of the "Restoration Movement" stood as a unit upon the question of Christians going to war until the United States of America declared a state of war existed with Germany. Why the change of attitude? Did the "law of Christ" change? No, the "law of Christ" did not change; but I know that the positions of some preachers did change, and that in a very short time. I heard one of our able preachers, while in a debate with a Baptist, in the year 1915 or 1916, ridicule the Baptist preacher for having two hundred and sixty preaching brethren in the German army. He also said that a Christian could not take up the sword, and ridiculed the idea of this Baptist preacher contending that he could. (I am in a position to prove every statement I make here by about eighteen preachers.) This same brother changed his position after the United States went to war, for after the war he said to me: "If the government had called me, I would have gone to the trenches and tried to shoot every German who stuck his head up."

Some of my brethren argue thus: "Don't do it yourself, but wait until the government calls you to do, then do it; the responsibility will be upon the government and not upon you." Educated men will even argue as just stated, for I have talked to some of them and tried to get their view of logic into my head.

Here are their scriptures: "Be in subjection to the higher powers." (Rom. 13: 1.) "Be subject to every ordinance of man for the Lord's sake." (1 Pet. 2: 13.) Applied: The power (State) says: "Go to war, make widows and orphans, tear down and smash up; but remember, you [Christians and individuals] are not, in the least, responsible for this terrible carnage which you have engaged in, but the State is."

Let us try this logic: "Ye wives, be in subjection to your own husbands." (1 Pet. 3: 1.) "Wives, be in subjection unto your own husbands, as unto the Lord." (Eph. 5: 22.) "But as the church is subject to Christ, so let the wives also be to their husbands in everything." (Verse 24.) But an unbelieving husband says to his wife: "Don't go to communion, the prayer meeting; but when you do go to services, don't put anything into the collection plate when it is passed around, but take something out. Take a gun and kill that rascal who called me a liar." Of course, every one can see that the wife could do all these things and not be responsible (?), because her husband told her to do it, and God said: "Wives, be in subjection to your husbands in everything."

Now, when Eph. 5: 22-24 and 1 Pet. 3: 1 are explained, then Rom. 13: 1-8 and 1 Pet. 2: 13 will have been explained, and we will all say together, with Christ, "Put up the sword."

The True Friend.

Let us lay hold of friendship. In the eternal life, shall we not have friends for evermore? I used to think that "friendship" meant happiness; I have now learned that it means discipline.

Seek how we may, we shall never find a friend without faults, imperfections, traits, and ways that vex, grieve, annoy us. Strive as we will, we ourselves can never fully fulfill the idea of us that is in our friend's mind; we inevitably come short of it; yet, let us not give up friendship.

To be a friend is to have a solemn and tender education of soul from day to day. A friend gives us confidence for life. A friend remembers us when we have forgotten ourselves; he takes loving heed of our health, our work, our aims, and our plans.

A friend may praise us and we are not embarrassed; he may rebuke us, and we are not angered. If he be silent, we understand. It takes a great soul to be a true friend—a large, catholic, steadfast, and loving spirit. One may forgive much, forget much, and forbear much. It costs to be a friend or to have a friend; there is nothing else in life except motherhood that costs so much. It not only costs time, affection, strength, patience, love—sometimes a man must lay down his life for his friend. There is no true friendship without self-sacrifice.

Let us be slow to make friends; but having once made them, let us pray that neither life nor death, misunderstanding, distance, nor doubt, may ever come between us, to vex our peace. Let us be patient, let us be self-possessed in friendship.—Selected.

Is There Room for Compromise?

BY W. T. STIRLING.

I have to thank the editor of the Gospel Advocate for publishing my article under the same heading as above in the issue of October 13, also to thank Brother Kurfees for his long and patient criticism. It is evident that he appreciates the importance of these proposals for unity and that he has given much time and thought to their consideration.

This exchange of views already has gone far enough to demonstrate how religious controversy thrives on misunderstanding. Antagonists seldom define their terms or dig down deep enough to uncover the fundamental assumptions. I suppose, for two generations, opponents of instrumental music have attacked one phase of the subject and its advocates have defended another. Their trains of thought have run on separate tracks and they have passed each other unscathed and unconvinced.

If, as Brother Kurfees assumes, there is a definite formula for public worship prescribed in the New Testament; if congregational singing is one of the items in that formula; and if any persons should propose to add another item consisting of instrumental music, or, worse yet, should propose to substitute instrumental music for the item of singing—why, then, I most heartily agree that they would be guilty of what Brother Kurfees calls turning from God's way into man's way, and of doing something as bad as substituting sprinkling for immersion, a cow for a sheep, or water for wine. I admit, too, that it would be impossible to compromise with such people for the reasons Brother Kurfees mentions. There is only one alternative—to use the instrument as a means of worship, or not to use it. There is no middle ground.

I should like very much to examine these assumptions, but why waste time on a hypothetical case? Brother Kurfees knows as well as I do that in practically every church where division has occurred, the organ has been introduced as an aid to the singing, and for the most part is so maintained. If an organ voluntary is played before or after the service, it, probably, is performed for the purpose of entertainment rather than worship and must be attacked on other grounds.

So, let us get back to the question in hand. Is there room for compromise? That is to say, is there any basis of understanding which disciples of Christ in both groups may accept that will consign this controversy to lie with so many others in the graveyard of oblivion?

A clear distinction between instrumental music as being in itself a means of worship and substitute for singing and instrumental music simply as an aid to singing does a lot to clarify the issue. The first is what I understand Brother Kurfees so violently attacks and which I do not undertake to defend. The second deserves our serious consideration.

Nor is this a merely fanciful distinction. A concert recital on a piano is instrumental, but a concert given by a singer is vocal even though the singer throughout sings to the accompaniment of the piano. In the latter case, the instrument is recognized as subordinate and is scarcely advertised or mentioned. Its use is to enable the vocalist to sing with greater ease and accuracy in pitch, time, and rhythm. The conscientious singer in his desire to please his audience is satisfied with nothing short of his noblest effort aided by all the means at his command. The conscientious worshiper has God for his audience. Is he to blame if he thinks that nothing less is good enough for Him?

Here, then, is the real point at issue. Is the organ justifiable as an aid to singing? I will give the answer in Brother Kurfees' own words. Under caption 5, page 1008, is found this pregnant sentence, in which, for emphasis, he puts the important words in italics:

"If it [the organ] did nothing more than aid the singing—that is, aid in doing the thing which God says do—nobody could properly object to it; but that is the width of the poles from the fact."

This is an extremely frank and generous admission which with Brother Kurfees' great influence will carry us far on the way to reconciliation. Here is a basis for compromise more liberal than I could have advocated or imagined. And, although the difference between this ideal use of the organ which Brother Kurfees approves and the present fact may be the width of the poles apart, I believe that, in view of the strong desire for unity, the gap may be closed. So far as Ontario is concerned, I am sure there is no congregation that would not willingly give up the organ as a solo instrument, provided the use of it might be maintained as an aid to the singing.

However, it was no part of my intention to argue for or against the use of instrumental music. In my former letter I only went so far as to say that its use as an aid to singing is a matter of opinion which each congregation should decide for itself, and that its use or nonuse should be no barrier to brotherly intercourse and coöperation. And there I stand. I have not proposed to use the organ in our own congregation nor in any other from which it is now absent, and I realize the full force of conscientious objections. "The head and front of my offending hath this extent, no more."

I notice that Brother Kurfees makes no reference to what I said about the English method of doing away with missionary and other societies by holding a representative annual meeting and appointing committees for the ensuing year to manage such business as can be best carried on in a coöperative way. This method seems to have much to recommend it on the score of simplicity, efficiency, and scripturalness, and it offers the much-desired common ground upon which all may unite. It would be interesting to know Brother Kurfees' views on the subject.

The present disposition of the religious world with regard to sectarian differences seems to afford the opportunity of a lifetime for the healing of old sores and the bringing in of a better day. I appeal to disciples of Christ who speak through the press and pulpit not to hinder the cause of unity by captious criticism and verbal quibbling. Now is the time for full, frank, and earnest discussion. Now is the time for generous concession wherever it can be made without sacrifice of principle or violation of conscience. Let us now forget our old antagonisms and our old prejudices, and let us seek to promote better acquaintance, which almost invariably will lead to better understanding.

May the day soon come when, without a lie on our lips or a reservation in our hearts, with or without an organ, we may sincerely sing:

"Like a mighty army moves the church of God;
Brothers, we are treading where the saints have trod:
We are not divided, all one body we—
One in hope and doctrine, one in charity."

The Integrity of God's Word.

BY JAMES E. SCODEY.

There is one proposition which admits of little, if any, controversy. If there is a God, there is a devil. That there is a God, who created the heavens and the earth, needs no argument either a priori or a posteriori with those who accept the Bible as a revelation from God. Indeed, I think it wholly impossible for any man to have any clear conception of the attributes of God reasoning a priori (from cause to effect) or a posteriori (from effect to cause). A genuine philosopher and reasoner viewing the heavens and the earth would, perhaps, conclude there was a cause producing them, and he might conclude that there was a great spiritual power as the source or cause of the creation. There is another class of scientists, called "lexotheists," who believe the creation of all things come in some way according to natural law, and have developed into the things we daily see; that man had his origin in a lower species of being, and by continued change, becoming more perfect, through the millions of years which have rolled by in time, until, by what they call "evolution," he has reached that stage of development in which he presents himself to-day. This whole theory contradicts what God has revealed with reference to the creation, as stated in the first verse of the Bible, as well as that which is stated in reference to the origin of man. It also contradicts the statement made by Paul, the apostle of the Lord Jesus Christ, where he says in his letter to the Hebrews (1: 10-12): "Thou, Lord, in the beginning hath laid the foundation of the earth; and the heavens are the work of thine hands: they shall perish; but thou remainest; and they all shall wax old as doth a garment; and as a vesture shalt thou fold them up, and they shall be changed: but thou art the same, and thy years shall not fail." Any man who contradicts the statements of God in reference to any matter which he has been pleased to reveal to man makes God a liar and is a rank infidel, though he claim to be a Christian, or a religionist.

It is a well-known fact to many of the best-informed men in all the denominations that both men and women are employed in our public schools, colleges, and universities, who believe and teach the infidel and atheistic doctrines of evolution, and what is called "hypercriticism," which denies that the Bible is wholly a revelation of God. It is seen that these teachers are sowing the seeds in the hearts and minds of the rising generation, which will produce an abundant crop of infidels who will reject God's teaching, the result of which may overturn and ruin our religious civilization. The civilization of all countries is largely the result of their prevailing religion. If our country should become infidel, reject God and Christ, as France once did, history might respect itself and we become involved in bloody revolution.

Good men and women in all the churches, fearing for the safety of our civil and religious institutions, are writing long and strong essays upon the value and necessity of religious education. They are not only writing, but they are calling on their adherents for millions of money for Christian education.

Two objects they would accomplish. First, the desire to successfully roll back the tide of material infidelity which is rising and threatening to engulf them. Second, and hardly inferior to the first, is the desire and purpose to preserve their creeds or teachings on the subject of religion from being displaced by any different teaching, and withal to increase their membership. They all seek additions to their membership, that sinners may be saved, as they believe, and because numbers add greatly to their prestige and power. As honest men, they hardly could desire and do less. I am thoroughly of the opinion that any religion which accepts God and the morality, justice, and judgment of Christ's Sermon on the Mount is better for the people of a nation than no religion, or even one which sets aside God's word and adopts human reason and science, falsely so called, as the faith they embrace. Jeremiah, the prophet of God, said: "O Lord, I know that the way of man is not in himself: it is not in man that walketh to direct his steps."

In view of what I have written, if what I have said is true, there is a grave responsibility resting on us who profess to take God at his word and to be guided by it in all things that pertain to life and godliness. We should see to it that we train our children, and all others whom we may be able to influence, reverence God and his word, and if circumstances permit, patronize the schools where the Bible is daily read and taught. Thus we would be doing something in opposing the menace of infidelity and atheism, and at the same time be able to expose and correct erroneous teaching on the part of our religious cotemporaries whether of the church of Christ or of the denominations.

I may follow this with another article on the wiles of the devil.

Abraham: God's Sevenfold Promise to Him.

BY H. LEO BOLES.

We have seen that Jehovah called Abraham, and have emphasized Abraham's prompt obedience to the call. We are now to notice the promises which Jehovah made to Abraham. These promises were not made to him with a view of hiring him to obey the call, neither are they given in order to persuade Abraham to get out from that country. They are given him as a reward of his faith and obedience. This is the principle upon which Jehovah has always acted. We misinterpret the blessings and promises of God when we make them the wages for obedience.

If we are correct in saying that the first call came to Abraham while he was in Ur and was repeated to him after he came out of Ur and while he sojourned in Haran, then the fullness of the promise was not made to him until after he had obeyed the call. If any promise was made to him in Ur, there is no record of it; the first record we have of the promise is found in Gen. 12: 2, 3. These promises, it seems, prepare the way for the covenant which was later made. In giving the call, Jehovah states explicitly that if Abraham would get out of his country and go into the land that Jehovah would show him, that then "I will make of thee a great nation, and I will bless thee, and make thy name great; and be thou a blessing; and I will bless them that bless thee, and him that curseth thee will I curse: and in thee shall all the families of the earth be blessed." (Gen. 12: 2, 3.) There is a sevenfold blessing in these promises. Jehovah is always liberal in his blessings; from his bounty he richly and freely gives; from his overflowing treasury he generously bestows; out of his wonderful love he mercifully blesses.

The first promise is, "I will make of thee a great nation." At this time Abraham was seventy-five years old and was childless; but he should be the beginning of a great nation. It seems that Abraham is to understand that independent of his father's family his fleshly descendants are to become so numerous that they can be called a nation. At Abraham's age this was a gigantic promise which called for an unwavering faith to accept it. Abraham does not question how Jehovah will fulfill this promise; by faith he accepts it. It is fulfilled in the fleshly descendants of Abraham, who made the nation of Israel, and also in all of God's people to-day, who constitute spiritual Israel. "It is not the children of the flesh that are children of God; but the children of the promise are reckoned for a seed." (Rom. 9: 8.)

The second promise is, "I will bless thee." How full of meaning is this simple statement! The future history of Abraham and his family reveals the fullness of this promise. When Jehovah promises a blessing, you may be sure that it will be fulfilled. This blessing is promised with all the positiveness of the character of Jehovah; the wisdom, power, and love of Jehovah are pledged in the fulfillment of this promise. To doubt Jehovah's keeping this promise is to doubt Jehovah's omnipotence and goodness.

The third promise is, "And [will] make thy name great." One has only to read the Old and New Testament Scriptures to see how great the name of Abraham is. It is a name which stands out prominently through all the generations; a name which is synonymous with greatness; a name that all the future history of Israel testifies is great; a name which all of God's people to-day honor as great. The name of Abraham shines as a star of the first magnitude in the constellation of the patriarchs. It is possible that Abraham did not fully understand the full meaning of this promise, yet Jehovah understood it and has vouchsafed to Abraham the greatness of his name. Jehovah has made it so great that every one who "walks in the steps of his faith" shall inherit some of his greatness.

The fourth promise is in the form of a command. It is stated thus: "And be thou a blessing." Jehovah purposes to make Abraham a blessing to others. It is an honor and a blessing to be a blessing to others. This expresses a general law of Jehovah's will; as one becomes the recipient of a blessing, that one is in turn to be a blessing. We misunderstand the purpose of God's blessings if we think they are to stop with us; we are made the chosen channel for them to flow through unto others. So often what would be a blessing to us if passed on to others becomes a curse when we selfishly retain it. Running water refreshes, purifies, and blesses; while still, dead, or stagnant water pollutes and curses. Wherever Abraham went, he was to be a blessing to others.

The fifth promise is, "I will bless them that bless thee." The benefactors of Abraham should receive a blessing from God; it was a blessing to any one to bless father Abraham. To bless Abraham, one must indorse his faith and obedience and encourage the life which he lived. For one to do this, one must harmonize his life with Jehovah's purpose and will. When one does this, Jehovah blesses that one. In this promise Jehovah gives encouragement to all who will bless Abraham; he assures them that they shall be blessed. This principle is true to-day with God's people. Those who help Christians, those who help God's people, are bringing a blessing upon themselves in helping the righteous. One may not fully accept Christianity; one may not faithfully live the Christian life; but as one helps and encourages the right, God in turn blesses the lovers of righteousness.

The sixth promise is that Jehovah will curse "him that curseth thee." The one who can find it in his heart to curse Abraham while he is faithfully following Jehovah, that very condition of heart, mind, or character will Jehovah curse. "I will curse him that curseth thee." Jehovah will curse the enemies of Abraham. Jehovah will bless his friends and benefactors, and will curse his enemies and malefactors.

The last promise. It is stated in this language: "In thee shall all the families of the earth be blessed"—I will bless all the families of the earth through you. What a rich blessing unto the children of men! The history of the Jewish family testifies that wherever and whenever the Jewish nation was faithful to God, it was a blessing to the nations of earth. Any member of Abraham's family, fleshly or spiritual, so far as it remains faithful to God throughout all the meanderings here upon earth, becomes a blessing to all those who come under its influence. But this is not the full meaning of the promise; the promise includes the coming of Christ, who shall bless all nations.

The Glowing Prospect.

The Christian life has many precious promises in its favor for this life and for the life to come. The desire for immortality is inborn and the promises of God reinforce that desire and seal it with infallible proofs. Once take firm hold of this great and absorbing truth and the fact concerning the future life and the coming of the King, and it will afford a bright and hopeful outlook along every avenue of life and bring indescribable gladness to the weary and burdened heart. What would aching hearts do were it not for the resurrection assurances and a well-founded hope of a blessed immortality?

The incarnation, sufferings, death, and the resurrection of Christ make such a hope possible and valid, for it is still true: "If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable." It is Christ who has brought life and immortality to light through the gospel. That glorious truth and incontrovertible fact throws a halo of light across the moral heavens, radiating through every avenue of life, filling trusting hearts with joy and peace.

Hope which has reference to future realizations yields a wonderful power over the children of men. It guards against discouragement and despair, infusing new life and new energy, steadying the soul in the midst of dire calamities. It has caused Christians to rejoice with a joy unspeakable and full of glory at the stake and in the dungeon. It has helped to stop the mouths of lions, rendered harmless devouring flames, and enabled men and women to triumph over well-nigh insuperable difficulties.

The prospect of a life to come has buoyed up many a weary pilgrim on his heavenward journey and enabled him to walk by faith, because such a hope is begotten of God and maketh not ashamed, nor does it disappoint, but is an anchor of the soul both sure and steadfast.—The Evangelical Messenger.

One Touch of the Divine.

BY APPELLA S. MARTIN.

A little stream grows turbulent, in restless motion whirled. As though it moaned in secret an earthly sin or wrong; But as the waves grew calm at last, lo, pictured on its breast

The smiling starry sky, the calm that spoke of peace and rest.

Thus earthly sorrows, heaven's joy is blended into song That some one caught within the soul and sings it to the world.

One little ray dawns on our sky, in glory there to shine And to reflect upon our earth the light of worlds unseen; It paints the lily's pure white breast, the rose with heart of gold,

And lays on land and hill and plain one living, glowing sheen;

It blesses yet both cloud and sea and all our eyes behold. We find a breath of heaven there, a touch of the Divine.

A star arose upon our sky, one brilliant shining gem That lighted all the world and every corner of the earth; It brought to all a message full of mercy and love, And there was healing in its beam, a glory in its birth, A touch of beauty all divine, a blessing from above. It was our Star of Destiny—of lowly Bethlehem.

Management of the Gospel Advocate.

Beginning with the new year, I have entered a new line of work and am no longer at the office of the McQuiddy Printing Company, nor connected with the business and editorial management of the Gospel Advocate. The control of the paper is in the hands of Brother J. C. McQuiddy, with whom I have had most cordial and pleasant relations for about ten years. I still retain a financial interest in the Gospel Advocate and shall write for its columns in the hope of doing good in the Master's name.

Brother Lipscomb has voluntarily discontinued his services in the office of the Gospel Advocate, where he has very efficiently labored to give our readers a first-class paper without assuming control or direction of the affairs of the paper in any particular. He retains his interest in the Gospel Advocate and will continue to write for the paper. For his services he will not expect a salary, but will labor at something else for a livelihood. This step is taken by him and without any suggestion from me.

Our relations have always been cordial and pleasant in the highest degree, and I sincerely regret that he deems it advisable to make the change. He is remarkably well equipped for office work, knows how to make a readable paper, and is a versatile and forceful writer. In the separation, I suffer a distinct loss. I am glad to have the assurance from him that he will cheerfully assist me in the arduous duties of the office, when possible, until another is secured for the work.

The prayers and good wishes of our entire force go with him in every noble work he may undertake. Already efficient, we shall rejoice in every opportunity to help him to greater usefulness and efficiency. J. C. McQUIDDY.

At Home and Abroad

T. W. Phillips reports seven additions at Osceola, Texas, in a recent meeting.

C. C. Merritt, the editor of Harvest Work, was among our visitors last week. He is devoting his energies to missionary work.

R. A. Craig, evangelist for the church at Shelbyville, Ky., reports a total of $160.70 toward their building fund and a total of $594 on the lot.

Married, at Owen's Cross Roads, Ala., on December 25, Mr. Ulas Kennamer and Miss Mattie Craig. J. Frank Jenkins officiating. Congratulations!

Joe L. Netherland, of Miami, Fla., will be back in Tennessee, beginning July 1. He will be glad to assist in meetings. Address 1250 N. W. Second Street, Miami, Fla.

A brother from Haleyville, Fla., who forgot to sign his name, writes: "The meeting that was to have convened at Haleyville, January 24-31, has been canceled. Some of the members thought it best to call it off."

From A. M. Fellows, Columbus, Ohio, December 31: "We had a fine meeting on Lord's-day morning. D. W. Harkins preached for us. The house was filled with good, attentive listeners. The church is prospering greatly."

W. Silas Moody preached for the Twelfth Avenue congregation last Sunday, morning and evening, to large and attentive audiences. There was one confession. This congregation will enlarge their building in the near future.

J. W. Grant wishes all his friends and correspondents to note that he is now located in Lakeland, Fla. His home and mailing address are 607 North Kentucky Avenue, Lakeland, Fla. His telephone number in the city exchange is 649, blue.

From C. G. Vincent, Knoxville, Tenn., December 30: "I have given up the work here to labor with the church at Corsicana, Texas. Our chief purpose in making this change is to be in a position to do more for foreign missions. Our work here has been most pleasant, and we regret to have to leave the good brethren in Knoxville. We purpose to motor to Texas, leaving here on January 9. After that date correspondents will please address me at Corsicana, Texas."

From Aruna Clark, Lakeland, Fla., December 26: "We are in the land of flowers and sunshine in the interest of my wife's health. Brethren, remember us in your prayers. I preached twice here yesterday to good audiences. The church is planning to do great things here. J. W. Grant is locating in this beautiful little city to devote his time to the building up of the congregation here. I will probably resume my labors in Tennessee in a short time, if suitable arrangements can be made for my wife to remain here through the winter."

J. O. Barnes writes: "The writer closed a six-days' meeting at New Hope church of Christ on December 23, with a good attendance and good attention during the entire meeting, but no additions. New Hope is located two and one-half miles from Lake City, and where the cause of Christ was established about seven years ago and flourished for five years; but on account of members moving away and other conditions, the worship was abandoned, and for two years the house has been closed. But we hope to reestablish the worship there some day. I walked to and fro each night for six nights, making a total of twenty-five miles walked. No remuneration was received; but I am so glad that God opened the door for me, and I feel that he through me did some good. I am glad to 'suffer for his name,' and in the future I will receive the reward in heaven."

M. C. Cayce writes from Jackson, Miss.: "For a number of years a few met on the third floor of the Odd Fellows' Hall in Vicksburg, Miss. It was, and is, a very undesirable place to meet; and no growth was made, not even so much as having a protracted meeting for the past ten years. Last summer I held a tent meeting for them, during which thirty-one were added to the church and the few stirred to renewed effort. It was agreed at that time that unless a suitable building could be bought, as was done in Jackson and Columbus, a house must be built. A well-located corner lot has now been purchased for the sum of one thousand dollars, and the restrictive clause is in the deed. This one thousand dollars they have paid themselves, without asking for any help; but it has exhausted their resources and demonstrated an earnest, self-sacrificing spirit. Now they want to build a meeting-house to cost about three thousand dollars; and if those who read this and who love the Lord will assist them by contributing one thousand dollars, they can then borrow two thousand dollars, and will themselves take care of the loan by continuing to give as they are prospered. 'Bear ye one another's burden, and so fulfill the law of Christ.' This is a most worthy call. The house is needed right now, and the future growth and usefulness of the church in Vicksburg requires that they have a place to meet. You can see they are willing to sacrifice, and, therefore, ought to be helped. So please, all who read this, send them a contribution and a few words of cheer. They need it and they deserve it. Let us help Vicksburg. 'Remember the word of the Lord Jesus, how he himself said, It is more blessed to give than to receive.' Mail your check to W. F. Hanes, treasurer, 1201 First North Street, Vicksburg, Miss."

NEW YEAR'S MESSAGES.

The Gospel Advocate is sent to a new subscriber with the following message: "New Year's greeting to Gail S. Moss and wife, 1985 Court Avenue, Memphis, Tenn. In loving remembrance of his mother fifty-two times for the year 1922."

New Orleans, La., December 23, 1921.—Editors Gospel Advocate: I wish to express my appreciation of the Gospel Advocate and wish for it for the year 1922 a better, "bigger" year than it has ever known. It has helped me in many ways, and I certainly would hate to be without it. It is hard to measure the good it has done in our family. Being without Christian association, it has helped fill the need, coming as it does each week. I thank God for its earnest writers and pray for its wider usefulness.—Mrs. W. B. Morgan.

Good-by, 1921! Good morning, 1922! With Christian greetings to all the saints and best wishes to you all for a prosperous and happy New Year in both temporal and spiritual affairs during 1922. Let us "put on the whole armor of God" and enter bravely into "the good fight" against our greatest foe, Satan, and his servants, and thus, as "workers together with God," gain a great victory for Christ and his church. "Let brotherly love continue." I leave Lake City on January 6 for a mission tour on the East Coast, beginning a meeting on January 8, at Maytown. We hope to have the prayers of all the brethren and to succeed in accomplishing much good in the name of our Master.—J. O. Barnes, Lake City, Fla.

Washington, D. C., January 1, 1922.—The church of Christ in Washington, D. C., faces the New Year with stronger faith and greater zeal than ever before, and with the resolution to do more than in any other year of her history. It is our desire to pay off the debt on the house of worship and plant another mission before the end of the year, and to this end we shall pray in harmony with Jas. 5: 16. Those who have friends here whom they desire to have come to the place of worship may write me at 1319 Harvard Street, N. W., and I shall take pleasure in calling on them and welcoming them to the services. Those who desire to reach the place of worship may take any Fourteenth Street car (cars are marked, "Fourteenth and Colorado," "Fourteenth and Decatur," "Takoma Park"), and leave car at Fourteenth and Newton, which is almost in front of the building. May the New Year be the best in the history of the church of Christ in all the world.—W. S. Long.

As the year is nearing its close, and as I have been accustomed to write on such occasions to the dear old Gospel Advocate, I am reminded that not a single writer for the Advocate now that wrote when I began reading it. Very few are living. I do not see D. L. and E. G. S. as in other days. Those two men have done a work for the church that will never be known in this world, but is sure to be known when the many they have taught the way of salvation join in praises to the Father in heaven through the Lord Jesus Christ forever and ever. I am glad Brother Sewell is still with us on this side, though he does not write now. I have noticed others coming and going as writers. Almost every one has been helpful to me. To my way of thinking, there are few men who can teach the Bible as well as Brother Elam. May he live long to work for the Master. To those in charge of the Advocate now I will say, you have a great work ready prepared to your hand. This generation needs sound counsel. Give them a good paper. Warn them of the dangers confronting them. I expect to read your paper as long as I live. So I want you to keep it clean and pure. I pray God's blessings upon each of you and on every reader of your paper—W. P. Sims, Hillsboro, Tenn.

If you wish us to stop your paper, write us to that effect; but do not ask it unless you have paid all arrears, if there are any. Do not ask your postmaster to attend to it for you, but do it yourself.

The date on your tab shows the time to which your subscription is paid. When money is received, the date will be changed, which will answer for a receipt. Two weeks' time must ordinarily occur from the time your remittance is sent before the tab on your paper is changed; if no change by that time, notify us at once.

Subscribers, after paying for their papers, will favor us by noting whether the date on the address label is changed, and, if it is not changed within a month, by writing to us. We are careful, but mistakes may occur or letters may be lost. Our rule is to change the date on the day payment is received; but the mechanical work of correcting and printing the list takes time, and payments even from near-by places may not appear the first week. Credits for payments from a distance may be even more delayed. Mistakes are easily rectified if prompt notice is given.

Editorial

Rightly Dividing the Truth.

BY J. C. M'C.

The Old Testament is the best commentary on the New. It is in no way binding on us to-day, but in it is much that helps us to a better understanding of the New. The law of Moses led us to Christ; but after faith is come, we are no longer under the law of Moses. Christ says: "Think not that I came to destroy the law or the prophets: I came not to destroy, but to fulfill. For verily I say unto you, Till heaven and earth pass away, one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass away from the law, till all things be accomplished." (Matt. 5: 17, 18.) Christ filled the law full.

In the New Testament we find many prophecies of the Old fulfilled. The New Testament is a book of order and is adapted to our needs. Only in one book of the New Testament do we learn what people did to enjoy the remission of their past sins. But before men can be saved from sin they must have faith. "And without faith it is impossible to be well-pleasing unto him; for he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that seek after him." (Heb. 11: 6.) The gospel, consisting of four records of testimony written by Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John, is calculated to produce faith in Christ.

Beginning with the first chapter of Matthew, we learn that Christ was born of the virgin Mary as predicted by Isaiah, the prophet. Beginning with the second chapter of the same book, we read that he was born in Bethlehem of Judæa, which is a fulfillment of Mic. 5: 2. Then we learn that, on account of the persecution of Herod, Joseph took the young child and his mother into Egypt, where he remained "until the death of Herod; that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the Lord through the prophet, saying, Out of Egypt did I call my Son. Then Herod, when he saw that he was mocked, of the Wise-men, was exceeding wroth, and sent forth, and slew all the male children that were in Bethlehem, and in all the borders thereof, from two years old and under, according to the time which he had exactly learned of the Wise-men." All of which was a fulfillment of "that which was spoken through Jeremiah the prophet, saying, A voice was heard in Ramah, weeping and great mourning, Rachel weeping for her children; and she would not be comforted, because they are not." And then we read that when Joseph "heard that Archelaus was reigning over Judæa in the room of his father Herod, he was afraid to go thither; and being warned of God in a dream, he withdrew into the parts of Galilee, and came and dwelt in a city called Nazareth; that it might be fulfilled which was spoken through the prophets, that he should be called a Nazarene." Next in order we are told of the work of John the Baptist, the harbinger of Christ, who came to prepare a people for Christ, which is a fulfillment of Isa. 40: 3. With such evidence, it is easier for one to believe than to doubt. How wonderful that the prophets foretold these things so long before they came to pass! Only men inspired of God could have done it.

John the Baptist was a prophet of God, and his mission was restricted to the Jews only, and was fulfilled while the law of Moses was still in force. He was therefore a prophet under the Mosaic dispensation. Matthew summarizes his preaching in this brief sentence: "Repent ye, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." He baptized penitent Jews who "confessed their sins," requiring them to believe on the coming Messiah. He baptized Christ himself. Christ's personal ministry was limited to Jews only. John and Christ lived in the evening of the Mosaic dispensation, but in their preaching we can easily see the dawn of a better day. It was the time of twilight. Christ chose the apostles, and when all authority on earth and in heaven had been committed to him, he commissioned them to go "into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature," enjoining upon them to tarry in Jerusalem until they should be endued with power from on high. Mark, Luke, and John are of the same nature and character as Matthew, and were written for the same purpose. They corroborate and strengthen the testimony given by Matthew. In the records of the four evangelists we find perfect agreement and the very strongest evidence. In the eighty-nine chapters composing the gospel we read of the fulfillment of many prophecies, of the many miracles Jesus wrought, and of his cruel death on the cross and his resurrection from the tomb. John tells us why these things were written: "Many other signs therefore did Jesus in the presence of the disciples, which are not written in this book: but these are written, that ye may believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God; and that believing ye may have life in his name." (John 20: 30, 31.) If a person is a disbeliever, tell him to read Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John. If he does not believe when he has read them through, tell him to turn back and read again, and so on until he does believe. I do not think that a responsible person with an unbiased mind can read the gospel without eventually believing that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the living God. This is the central truth of the Bible.

When a man believes with all the heart that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the living God, he accepts the truth of the Bible, from the first word in Genesis to the last "amen" in Revelation. The believer is ready to inquire, "What must I do to be saved?" Where shall he read to learn? In the book of Revelation? No. The book for him to read is the next book in order, Acts of Apostles. This book does not purport to be a complete record of all the apostles did under the commission to disciple the nations, yet it is sufficiently full to show what they preached and what they required sinners to do to be saved, as well as how they constituted churches. It is simply "Acts of Apostles"—that is, some acts of some apostles. Luke, as a matter of fact, confines himself mainly to some acts of Peter and Paul, the latter being called and constituted an apostle after the ascension and whose mission was more especially to the Gentiles. Then, if the sinner would know what to do to be saved, he must read Acts of Apostles. We learn that the apostles were assembled in an upper room in Jerusalem. On the day of Pentecost, "they were all filled with the Holy Spirit," baptized in the Spirit. Peter, standing up with the eleven, preached Christ unto the assembled multitude. He commands them to "know assuredly, that God hath made him both Lord and Christ, this Jesus whom ye crucified." Here is a command to believe, and it is evident that they did believe, for the next verse says: "Now when they heard this, they were pricked in their heart, and said unto Peter and the rest of the apostles, Brethren, what shall we do?" If they had not believed the message of Peter, they would not have been cut to the heart. To these believers Peter said: "Repent ye, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ unto the remission of your sins; and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit." (Acts 2: 38.) The apostles were commissioned to require sinners to believe, repent, and be baptized in order to the remission of their sins. On the day of Pentecost, when the kingdom was set up, those who obeyed the truth believed, repented, and were baptized. It is true that Peter, in response to their question, said, "Repent ye, and be baptized," for they had already believed. Even so today we should tell believers, "Repent ye, and be baptized," just as did Peter. In Acts of Apostles we read of believers being baptized: "But when they believed Philip preaching good tidings concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized, both men and women." (Acts 8: 12.) The believing Ethiopian nobleman was baptized: "And as they went on the way, they came unto a certain water; and the eunuch saith, Behold, here is water; what doth hinder me to be baptized? And he commanded the chariot to stand still: and they both went down into the water, both Philip and the eunuch; and he baptized him." (Acts 8: 38, 39.) The believing, penitent Saul refused to break his fast of three days until he had been baptized. And Crispus, the ruler of the synagogue, believed in the Lord with all his house; and many of the Corinthians hearing believed, and were baptized." (Acts 18: 8.) Believers are baptized; disbelievers are not. Christ says: "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." (Mark 16: 16.) If one is a disbeliever, he should read the gospel. If inquiring what to do to be saved, he should read Acts of Apostles, the book of conversions, the book in which we have an account of the conversion to Christ of many thousand souls. Every one did exactly the same thing in order to the remission of his sins.

"Is There Room for Compromise?"

BY M. C. K.

On page 6 of this issue will be found a second article from Brother W. T. Stirling, of Toronto, Canada, on the foregoing question. It was misplaced at our office and not sent to me until it was impracticable to publish it till now. I regret the delay, but could not prevent it under the circumstances. In this case again, I shall consider the points which seem to be germane to the issue.

1. So far as this issue is concerned, it is wholly immaterial whether there is or is not "a definite formula for public worship prescribed in the New Testament." I remind Brother Stirling and others that "formula" or no "formula," vocal music is definitely "prescribed in the New Testament" as the specific kind of music which God says we are to make in praising him, and it is just as obligatory upon Christians to observe what God tells them to do when it is not a part of a formula as it is when it is a part of a formula. If not, why not? No matter whether immersion in water is a part of a formula or not, it is definitely "prescribed in the New Testament," and to sprinkle persons instead of immersing them would be as much of a departure from God's will as it would be if immersion were a part of a formula. Again I say, if not, why not? When God tells people to offer a sheep in sacrifice, or to make vocal music in his praise, they who offer a cow and make instrumental music are "turning from God's way into man's way" just as much as if offering a sheep and making vocal music were a part of a formula. In the name of reason, how can the question of turning from what God commands to something he does not command be, in any way, affected by its being or not being in a formula? If God commanded it, he commanded it whether it is in a formula or not.

2. What if the organ is introduced "as an aid to the singing," what has that to do with the point here at issue? Even were it granted that it aids the singing—some think it aids and others think it hinders—that is not the question before us. It is astonishing that any thoughtful person cannot see that "a clear distinction between instrumental music as being in itself a means of worship and substitute for singing and instrumental music simply as an aid to singing," instead of doing "a lot to clarify the issue," does not even touch the issue. Let us see. God commands immersion. He does not command sprinkling. He does not even say anything about the latter, but he commands the former. On precisely the same principle, God commands vocal music. He does not command instrumental music. He does not even say anything about the latter, but he commands the former.

Now, in the latter case, Brother Stirling, argues that when instrumental music is introduced, provided it is not introduced "as being in itself a means of worship and substitute for singing," but "simply as an aid to singing," it is all right. Then, if that be true, when sprinkling is introduced, provided it is not introduced "as being in itself a means of worship and substitute for" immersion, but "simply as an aid to" immersion, in the case of sick persons or circumstances of great inconvenience for immersion—which, by the way, is the identical ground on which it was originally introduced—what could our brother say? Please do not tell me here that sprinkling is not an aid to immersion, for neither are you nor am I to be the judge of this point. Multitudes of Christians do not agree that instrumental music is an aid to singing. Yea, they think it hinders and interferes with the singing in the worship of God; but whether it does or does not is not the point here demanding our attention. This point is that, in this case, persons claim that it is an aid to singing, and on that ground introduce it in spite of the fact that others think it is not an aid; and in the other case, precisely as history shows, persons claimed that sprinkling, in the case of sickness and for convenience, is an aid in the service of God, and on that ground introduced it in spite of the fact that others, including Brother Stirling and myself, are convinced that it is not an aid.

3. He proposes to answer the question, "Is the organ justifiable as an aid to singing?" by giving my words to the effect that "if it did nothing more than aid the singing—that is, aid in doing the thing which God says do—nobody could properly object to it." I still say that, but he overlooks the very point in my statement which concerns the issue between us—namely, "if it did nothing more than aid the singing;" but precisely at this point is where the insurmountable difficulty is encountered. It does do more. It makes another and a different kind of music—two kinds where God selected and commanded the one, and did not select and command the other. A cow and a sheep are not only both animals, but they are co-ordinates as quadrupeds, and yet they are two kinds of animals. Now, if God commands us to offer a cow in sacrifice, would Brother Stirling feel justified in offering a sheep? If not, why not? In this case he would no more be departing from and violating God's order than he departs from and violates God's order when God commands us to make one kind of music and Brother Stirling makes another kind. To say that he retains both kinds, and therefore has what God commands, does not help him out of the difficulty any more than it would help a man, in the other case, who says he retains both kinds of animals—a cow and a sheep—and therefore has what God commands; for in neither case is doing the added thing obeying God, but it is adding to his word—a thing which is distinctly forbidden. "Every word of God is tried; he is a shield unto them that take refuge in him. Add thou not unto his words, lest he reprove thee, and thou be found a liar." (Prov. 30: 5, 6.) Hence, whether my "influence" is "great" or small, I am trying to use it all to get Brother Stirling and others to abide by the word of God, and, therefore, to get them to see that when God commands the sacrifice of one kind of an animal, a cow, for example, they must not bring another kind, but must confine themselves to the kind commanded; and on precisely the same principle, when God commands the use of one kind of music, vocal, for example, they must not bring another kind, but must confine themselves to the kind commanded.

4. Owing to pressure of other matters, I must ask Brother Stirling to excuse me from entering into a discussion of the society question at present, further than to add that I am glad to see, according to his statement, that our English brethren are making efforts in the direction of unity and co-operation. This is praiseworthy, and even if conclusions first reached are not altogether what they should be, such efforts are calculated to lead those making them nearer and nearer to the truth and they may ultimately be entirely successful. Any method that is careful to stay clear of general organization and centralization in religion is not apt to be far wrong in principle.

[Note.—Our review of the Payne book on psallo, to be resumed in the issue two weeks from now, was suspended to make room for Brother Stirling's article and our reply; but I trust our correspondents will kindly refrain from further discussion of the music question in our columns until our review of this book is finished.—EDITOR.]

The Situation in Which the Society Brethren Find Themselves. No. 2.

BY F. W. SMITH.

Brother Collis continues his disclosures of the situation by reference to "a great stir" in society ranks some twelve years ago as follows:

Some twelve years ago a great stir was caused in our ranks over the appointment of Guy Sarvis to China. Mr. Sarvis was generally believed to hold the views of the members of the Campbell Institute. He was made the living link of Mr. Ames' church. Mr. Ames' views were as well known then as they are now. He was not the man to have one represent his church who was not in sympathy with the things for which he and his church stood. Protests against this appointment availed nothing. Mr. Sarvis was hurried off. Soon after his arrival in China, he was appointed to a professorship in the Nanking University, where our Chinese preachers are educated.

Subsequently, brethren visiting in Jamaica informed our missionaries there that churches in America had adopted open membership, upon which the missionaries received a few unimmersed people into their congregations to enjoy the same standing as did those who had been immersed into Christ. This procedure was criticized, and the practice was discontinued. With these missionaries the question seemed to be, not, "What does the Bible say?" but, "What do the brethren want?"

Then the trouble about China began. Letters were made public from missionaries in China asking for authority to do two things: (1) To surrender the independence of our churches and to put them under the control of a super-organization; (2) to admit the unimmersed into the full fellowship of our churches when it should become necessary in the interests of a united church in China. These revelations created a mighty stir in the brotherhood. C. C. Morrison, editor of the Christian Century, asked, "Why all this fuss?" He affirmed that open membership was already practiced in our China mission, that officers were appointed over our churches and evangelists were employed who had never been immersed. Mr. Morrison appeared at the St. Louis Convention to substantiate his charges by reading letter from China. His chief correspondent was our missionary, G. B. Baird. These assertions were denied by China missionaries, who asserted that the unimmersed were not received into actual membership. There seemed to be much confusion of thought as to what constitutes church membership in China.

Anxiety was considerably allayed by the passing of what is known as the Medbury Resolution. This resolution expressed disapproval of any control of our mission churches by a district association, or of the advocacy or practice of open membership on any mission station supported by our Foreign Society; it asked our missionaries to subscribe to that position; but, if they could not, to exercise their right to withdraw from our mission. Brethren returned from St. Louis with the hope that our United Society would be governed by the spirit of that resolution; that our missionaries would gladly fall in with its requirements, and that all cause for doubt concerning our work on the foreign field would be removed. But our National Board soon set us to guessing as to what its policy is.

A short time after the St. Louis Convention a move was made by the United Society which, many thought, revealed a spirit that was not unfriendly to open membership. W. M. Cunningham died early in the year. He was the enlisting secretary of the College of Missions, whose duty it was to find recruits for the foreign field. Alexander Paul, a former missionary in China, was chosen to fill his place. A letter from Brother Paul to the Foreign Society reveals sympathy with his associates in China who are ready to practice open membership if the brethren give them permission. He says in his letter:

"The question of entrance into the church will not depend upon any particular mode of baptism.

"The emphasis that the Chinese place upon the mode of baptism is almost insignificant. They believe in allowing the individuals to interpret this for themselves."

"Mode of baptism!"

A stalwart advocate of the principles of our Restoration movement could not possibly write a letter like Mr. Paul's. It is easy to guess what kind of young people would be preferred for missionaries by Mr. Paul. Certainly he could not be expected to choose those who would make trouble for the missionaries in China that are ready to practice open membership.

Alexander Paul had been teaching in the College of Missions. His removal made it necessary to secure a teacher to fill his place. George W. Brown was selected, who, until about four years ago, had been a missionary in India. Since his return to the United States he had served as a professor in the College of the Bible in Lexington. Brother Brown has been quite outspoken in expressing his views, and has not hesitated to advocate our giving up some things that have been regarded by us as very sacred and very essential. He claims that our mission is to bring about Christian union, not to restore New Testament Christianity. That you may know what he stands for, I quote a few sentences from an article written by him and published in the Christian Union Quarterly of April, 1919. He says:

"To the originators of the [our] movement, the Bible was the source of authority. The principles of the reformers were demonstrated by direct appeals to the sacred Book. It is easy to carry a thing of this kind too far. It is easy to fall into a sort of super-reverence for the Book, while the Spirit is made to suffer accordingly. . . . We shall not find people as literalistic as we once did, and they will not be ready to do a thing because it seems to be a literal command of the Bible, or because it appears to be an approved precedent. . . . Let us determine anew how the church may be united, and then, under the leadership of the Spirit of God, set about reunion. . . . So it is incumbent upon us to take up anew the subject of union, and get right with the present generation."

This Mr. Ames has played a very prominent part in bringing the society upon the present evil days, and the Christian Century seems to have been one of the chief powers behind the throne.

The present installment closes with reference to George W. Brown, which shows to what extent men will go when they begin to depart from the plain teaching of God's word. The way in which this man Brown disconnects the Bible and exalts human reason in religion is but the legitimate fruit of the seed planted many years ago by those who were not satisfied with God's wisdom and ways.

A Talk With Our Readers.

BY J. C. M'Q.

This is the first issue of the Gospel Advocate for 1922. We now cease to write 1921 and henceforth write 1922 on all our letters and periodicals. How rapidly the years pass by! With this issue I begin my thirty-eighth year of service on the paper. The thirty-seven years that have come and gone have been years full of work and full of changes, with much disappointment and with some measure of success. During those years great sorrows have come into my life—sorrows that should soften one and make him realize how unavailing is this world to give permanent happiness and joy. During all the years that have passed it has been my constant aim to be true to the truth, regardless of the frowns of the populace. I believe a man had better suffer his right arm severed from his body than to sacrifice the truth simply to please men. But while this journal stands for the truth in its simplicity, yet it firmly contends that personal bitterness and strife should not have any place in its columns. Personal wrangles are not in the least edifying. In the past thirty-seven years I have been severely criticized, for which I am thankful. I believe that we should profit by adverse criticism, and that we are unworthy a compliment if we do not welcome criticism. My desire is to make as few mistakes as possible; for I know that, while doing the very best that I can do, I will make mistakes.

I have made no change in my business that I did not think best for the cause of Christ. I have sought to make changes that would improve our literature, that would best serve the churches and best advance the cause of Christ. These changes have been with malice toward none, but simply with a desire to elevate the standard of our publications. With this in view, I have already contracted for a very high-grade paper on which the Gospel Advocate is to be published during the next year. It is also our purpose to make radical changes in our advertising department. It shall be the purpose of the management of the paper to see that only high-grade advertisements appear in its columns. While we do not object to clean advertising, I do believe that advertisements of an improper nature should be rejected. It is probable that we will suffer loss by making a change in the management of the advertising; but when we handle the advertising ourselves, we will solicit only such advertising as we wish to appear in the paper. Quite a number of our readers have complained at the character of the advertisements that sometimes find their way in our columns. I have been too busy to look especially after the character of the advertising appearing in the paper and have intrusted this to others. In making this change, I shall be glad to have the hearty support and encouragement of all our readers.

While we are paying war-time prices for labor, yet we have reduced the price of the Advocate from $2.50 per year to $2 per year. This also entails quite a loss and must be overcome by the securing of more subscribers. If we could double and quadruple the circulation of the paper, we would be able to manufacture the paper at a much less cost for each paper. We are depending on our readers, on their good will and hearty coöperation, to support us in the changes that we are making.

I have been at the desk doing office work for a long time.

Many of our readers know that my health is not the very best. My physician says that I need the open air and that I should spend more time in the open air. Appreciating the fact that I must save my strength, I have decided to sell an interest in the religious part of the McQuiddy Printing Company. It is thought best to separate the religious work entirely from the commercial printing. We are now making up a stock company and expect to organize this company in a very short time. When the company is organized, the directors will elect some younger man to be trained into the management of the paper. While I do not intend to turn over the business at once to an untrained mind and hands, yet I hope in a short time to have some one so trained that I can be relieved very largely from the active duties of the office. I shall be glad to continue to write for the paper, to encourage it and help it in any way I can without financial consideration, which I have done for many years. I do not believe that any one should cease to work; in fact, the busy man, and the man who has spent his life in the service, hardly knows how to quit work. My friends have insisted that I cease to work so much, but somehow I have never felt that it was the best thing for me to do. Stagnation means death. There is no reason why the circulation of the Gospel Advocate and our literature should not be doubled. If we can interest the brethren to help us and coöperate with us in the work, it will be done. Active work rightly directed always accomplishes great things. I appeal to every reader of this paper to make it a point to send us at least one new subscriber within the next few weeks. We have in mind very important changes. We are now maturing plans with a view to interesting other good writers for the paper. Brother G. C. Brewer has been secured as an editorial writer for the paper. He will contribute a page or more each week. This will sometime appear on the first page, and sometimes on another page, owing to which best suits the make-up of the paper. The first page is in no way better than other pages. We congratulate ourselves upon this addition to our writers. He is a pleasing, clear, and forceful writer. His first installment appears in this issue. It is our purpose to encourage our young preacher's in the work. Nothing will encourage and develop them so much as giving them the work to do. We have in view great things, and, by the help of the Lord, shall endeavor to make 1922 the best year of our lives. Shall we have your help and personal coöperation? We take this occasion to extend our appreciation to all our workers and friends who have stood so nobly by us in the past. If we want a first-class journal, we must pay the price. Without effort, without prayer, and without work, we cannot hope to accomplish much in the name of Jesus Christ.

The Value of a Life.

Of how much value is a life? What is it worth? To whom is its value to be awarded? By what criterion is its appraisement to be made? In the final analysis and conclusion, a man is worth to himself only what he is worth to the world in which he lives. The principle of exchange has caught him in its nets of fixed destiny. In order that he himself may realize what he is worth, he must of a fact put his life into the hands of the "exchangers" and be acknowledged as proper currency in the markets of public confidence. This deposit of personality into the lives of others means unselfish existence, and that means perpetual being. The quality of lastingness enters largely into the value of a commodity. How long are you going to live—in this world? Just as long as the influence for good exists in the lives of your successors whom you have helped to a better life and to a higher plane of usefulness. Men are to be valued by what they make it possible for the generation after them to achieve, not so much by what they are able to do in person as by what they accomplish through their successors.—Baptist and Reflector.

"Be Near Me, Lord."

Be with me, Lord! My house is growing still
As one by one the guests go out the door;
And some who helped me once to do thy will,
Behold and praise thee on the heavenly shore.

Uphold my strength! My task is not yet done,
Nor let me at the labor cease to sing,
But from the rising to the setting sun
Each faithful hour do service to my King.

Show me thy Light! Let not my wearied eyes
Miss the fresh glory of his passing day,
But keep the light of morn, the sweet surprise
Of each new blessing that attends my way.

And for the crowning grace, O Lord, renew
The best of gifts Thy best of saints have had!
With the great joy of Christ my heart endue
To share the whole world's tears and still be glad.

Lords and Ladies in Waiting.

It is within the power of most people to plan out, and carry out to the full, their course of life, but there is a class of men and women who, while they have the same power, find their life's work already mapped out for them. These are they who find that their duty lies in waiting on a father, mother, brother, or sister, and to spend their lives in this noble service. It is of this class of men and women I write, and for a title call them "lords and ladies in waiting."

They are to be found in every part of the globe, and among high and low, rich and poor. Their worth is seen by far-seeing men and women, who, on bended knees, make great offers to them, and implore them to accept; but with tears in their eyes, and with thankfulness in their hearts, they say to the kind offerers: "We must remain at our post of duty." If the whole world were offered to them, they would not change their place, nor their name, while there was one to wait on. Even when father, mother, brother, or sister plead with them to give up waiting on them, and accept an offer of some other place, they will say: "Intreat us not to leave thee; for where thou goest, we will go, and where thou lodgest, we will lodge." They see visions and dream beautiful dreams of what they should like to be and do, and, when they awake out of sleep, will tell their dream to intimate friends in the words:

"We slept, and dreamt our life was beauty,
But awoke to find that it was duty."

Love, devotion, and self-sacrifice lie beneath the surface of their lives, and, through all the changing scenes of life, they remain steadfast and unchangeable.

As each day dawns, these "lords and ladies" are found "in waiting" at their place. The years come and go, and they get older in years and service, but count not the number of their years, nor the years of service, because their hearts, heads, and hands are set upon the work to which they are called. It may seem foolish to spend so many years "in waiting" when some of them could be spent "in resting," but they cannot rest while loved ones at home need their presence and help. They have made a solemn vow before God and in their own hearts that they would from that day forward wait on father, mother, brother, or sister, for better or worse, for richer or poorer, in sickness or in health, till death them do part. Like other great men and women, the good they have done will live after them and will be a memorial to them.

Whenever we come across these noble lords and ladies in waiting, we are encouraged to do our duty in that state of life to which we are called, and we are inspired to say to one another:

"Let us then be up and doing,
With a heart for any fate;
Still achieving, still pursuing,
Learn to labor and to wait."

God's Transplantings.

In many parts of the world I have found Christian people who feel that they have been "driven" by force of circumstances into untried scenes. Considerations of health, business, or other reasons have induced a change. The consequences were not always as carefully considered as subsequent events proved would have been best.

A few years ago in Colorado I saw some men removing a few good-sized trees. The air was biting cold. The men chopped off the spreading branches, and dug around the roots, breaking away from mother earth the smaller rootlets. Then big grappling irons and strong chains encircled the denuded trees and they were taken by many horses across to a new position by the street curb. Here they were lowered into immense holes prepared by the master gardener. It seemed harsh usage in the depth of winter. Yet did not the master have some good end in view?

One year later I passed by those trees. Two handsome new houses adorned their original site. They now stood by the irrigation ditch, and clear, sweet mountain water babbled and danced beneath them. An exquisite bit of graded sward caressed their feet. They had been of small account before—now they were conspicuous additions to the beauty of the street. The gardener knew where to place them.

Thus very often are the transplantings of God's children. He sometimes permits men to cut away the beautiful things that we have rejoiced over in our dear old homes. He digs about the very roots of our lives with the spade of adversity. The sharp ax of material losses or ill health cuts into our being.

To question the divine care is dangerous. God cannot make mistakes. Let us acquiesce in his wise judgments. Let him replant us, as he wills, by the running waters of his peace. Possibly we shall not forget the sad transplanting in the wintry season of the long ago. But were not choice spiritual and material lessons learned in those hours of trial? Will not the unseen spiritual realities outlast the material things that now we so vainly try to understand and see? Shall we not sing the immortal song:

"Goodness and mercy shall follow me
All the days of my life,
And I shall dwell in the house
Of the Lord forever."

The Nature of Wisdom.

On the nature of wisdom, the teaching of Holy Scripture is clear and striking. It says there is a wisdom of man, and this is the knowledge of the true end or purpose of life—call it happiness, call it perfection, or what you will—a knowledge which answers to some extent those ever-recurring questions, "Why was I made?" and "What am I now?" and "Whither am I going?" This is the wisdom which the author of Ecclesiastes sought for everywhere, and yet hardly found. It is this over which, as discovered, the book of Proverbs rejoices as more precious than gold and jewels, and from the rough ore of which it forges the current coin of its proverbial philosophy. But there is also a wisdom of God, and this is the idea or purpose of his dispensation to man, rolling alike in the stately march of Nature's law or in the little world of the soul within. The fear of the Lord is declared to be the beginning of wisdom, and to the desponding author of Ecclesiastes it seems to be the whole treasure of man.—Bishop Barry.

Commending the Quarterlies.

"I have received and examined the Advanced, Intermediate, and Primary Quarterlies which you sent me. I suppose I am fairly well acquainted with the many different helps to Bible teaching for our Sunday Bible schools. I regard your series of lesson helps the best I have ever seen. For systematic graded lessons in the teaching of the Bible to our students of the Bible schools, they are very fine. For this work I believe they are the best system of studies we have. While your Quarterlies in the past have been good—the best I have seen—your new Quarterlies for 1922 are a decided improvement over those of the past. I shall mention two improvements. (a) The arrangement of the scriptures, (b) the arrangement of the comments on the lessons. The comments are not so wordy—more direct and to the point. I know of no man who can make a point stick out plainer than F. W. Smith. Knowing the ability and adaptability of Smith and Srygley, I have full confidence that you will maintain the high standard you have had in the past. I am not so much interested in who writes the comments on the lessons as I am in the comments themselves. On the whole, I am pleased with your Quarterlies. We are glad to be able to use them." (John E. Dunn, Waxahachie, Texas.)

"I have received and examined, though not thoroughly or critically, the Quarterlies edited by Brethren Smith and Srygley; and while I note some changes in the make-up and appearance which I regard as improvements, the lessons are, as they have ever been and should ever be, set forth in 'sound speech that cannot be condemned.' They are capable of doing great good if used and not abused, as is too often the case. But with this indorsement and commendation, with love toward all and malice toward none, I desire to say that when, with reference to such things, there is enough of the Spirit and mind of Christ among the older and more experienced, who are, and for years have been, teachers, preachers, and editors, to enable them to 'be of the same mind, having the same love, being of one accord, of one mind; doing nothing through faction or through vainglory, but in lowliness of mind each counting other better than himself; not looking each of you to his own things, but each of you also to the things of others' (Phil. 2: 2-5), there will be more zeal, faith, hope, love, joy, and peace among the brethren in general, who are less experienced in the Christian graces; and so may it be." (J. Pettet Ezell, Cookeville, Tenn.)

"I have received and examined the Advanced, Intermediate, and Primary Quarterlies for the first quarter of 1922, and to say I am pleased with the work is to but feebly express myself as to their worth. Knowing the writers, Brethren F. W. Smith and F. B. Srygley, as I do, I had right and reason to expect something good, but they surpassed even my most sanguine expectations. Both of these brethren being experienced and gifted preachers and writers and strictly loyal to the truths of the Bible, we have every human assurance that those who study the Book during the coming year, through the assistance of these Quarterlies, will not only have a profitable, but also a very pleasing, course of study. Brother Smith repays the price of the Advanced in the short paragraph in Lesson II., division 4, under the heading, 'Acting Upon Divine Assurance.' No one can read and digest that short paragraph without having a stronger faith and brighter hope. Brother Srygley's comments on the scriptural lessons are pleasingly made and are such as are calculated to interest and instruct the student for which they are intended. I hope this work will have the circulation and study it so richly deserves, and am sure all who study these Quarterlies and the scriptural references they cite will have a much broader and deeper knowledge of God's word, 'the lamp unto our feet.'" (Andy T. Ritchie, Madison, Tenn.)

"I received sample copy of 'Teachers' Quarterly from your office sometime since, and have examined it pretty thoroughly, and wish to commend it to any one studying the international lessons as the best help I have ever seen. I am sure that preaching brethren who desire helps in preparing sermons will find what they are looking for in the Quarterlies edited by Smith and Srygley. I consider the coming generation very fortunate in having within their reach the benefit of Bible study for years from men who have earnestly contended for a 'Thus it is written,' also practiced the same. You certainly made a wise choice when you chose Smith and Srygley for this work." (J. G. Allen, Muskogee, Okla.)

"Received your Quarterlies. They are all right. The four churches for which I preach monthly will use them for the year, and have placed their orders with you for the first quarter. Another church, where I preach on fifth Sundays, has a small 'anti-literature' crowd, but has compromised on the Nichol-Whiteside 'Sound Doctrine.' They do not regard this as 'literature.'" (Batsell Baxter, Abilene, Texas.)

"I received copies of the literature for the first quarter of 1922, and I have examined them as thoroughly as my time would allow. I am delighted with them. They are written in simple, plain English that will make them attractive to all lovers of the beauty and forcefulness of our language. But, above that, one is constantly and solemnly impressed with the necessity of whole-hearted consecration to God and faithful obedience to him, for he loves us and cares for us and will reward us abundantly above all that we ask or think. These lesson helps, as powerful sermons, cannot fail to brighten and better and bless, and raise upon a higher plane of thinking and acting and being all who use them right—as helps and not as the word of the Lord itself." (W. A. Schultz, El Paso, Texas.)

"Having received from the McQuiddy Printing Company a copy of the Primary, Intermediate, and Advanced Quarterly for the first quarter of 1922, with request to examine them carefully and critically and express my conviction concerning them fully and frankly, I hasten, after due consideration and satisfactory examination, to say I believe I have never seen anything better in their line, and I know no reason why the saints and faithful everywhere should not be perfectly satisfied with them. I predict for them popularity and gratifying usefulness wheresoever they may go. So note it be, if they prove to be as satisfactory and serviceable as I believe they will be." (T. B. Larimore, Fresno, Cal.)

"I have carefully examined the Advanced, Intermediate, and Primary Quarterlies for the first quarter of 1922, and consider them most excellent. In accordance with the request of the publisher, I paid especial attention to the Primary Quarterly, the teaching of primary classes being my favorite work in Sunday school. I consider this Quarterly very fine indeed for the pupils for whom it is intended, and heartily commend it to the teachers of primary classes in the study of the Bible." (Emma P. Larimore, Fresno, Cal.)

"We are highly pleased with the improvement you have made in the literature. Brethren Smith and Srygley strike at the core of the lessons, and will, I think, with their ripe experience, bring many to a knowledge of the truth." (R. A. Craig, Shelbyville, Ky.)

"Apples of Gold in Pictures of Silver."

BY W. M. WILSON.

A word fitly spoken's like apples of gold
In pictures of silver, we're told,
Inspiring the heart to nobler deeds;
Then onward with cheering words speed.
There are these who are sad and forlorn
And bent with burdens long borne;
Go speak to them a kind word,
'Twill bring them glad joys when they've heard.

A word kindly spoken the soul can transform.
Can sweeten its bliss and can charm;
The good it may do to those bowed low
Will tell in a sunny smile's glow.
How pleasant 'twill be after a while.
The memory of a sweet smile
You caused by just a kind word
You spoke and somebody heard!

Then pass it on, brother, to your fellow man.
A kind word to-day while you can;
Don't wait till he's numbered with the dead,
But speak while he's living instead.
Kind words and wreaths of sweet flowers,
Give them in lifetime's hours.
He scents not the sweet perfume
Of flowers placed on his tomb.

The many prove the wisdom of Hesiod, who says that the road to wickedness is smooth and very short, and there is no need of perspiring; but before virtue the immortal gods have placed the sweat of labor, and long and steep is the way thither, and rugged at first; but when you have reached the top, then, however difficult, it becomes easy.—Plato.

Query Department

By J. C. McQUIDDY.

Miss Manilla Patrick, Elora, Tenn., asks for an explanation of Mark 11: 12-14. The scripture of which an explanation is desired reads as follows: "And on the morrow, when they were come out from Bethany, he hungered. And seeing a fig tree afar off having leaves, he came, if haply he might find anything thereon: and when he came to it, he found nothing but leaves; for it was not the season of figs. And he answered and said unto it, No man can eat fruit from thee henceforward forever. And his disciples heard it." It is very clearly stated that it was not the season of figs. It was perhaps April when Jesus visited this fig tree, and so green figs ought to have appeared among the leaves at this time, though the fruit began ripening in June. Even at this time Jesus had positive proof of its barrenness, so he said: Let no fruit grow on thee henceforth forever. In verse 21 Peter calls this cursing the fig tree. Figs were very common in Palestine.

B. F. Tarpley inquires to know if there are children of God in all denominations. He says: "Our preacher in a sermon last Sunday said that God had children in all denominations. Please tell us what you think about this statement."

I am sure I do not know just where your preacher got his information. I know he did not get it from the Bible, for the Bible does not teach anything concerning denominationalism. I am sure no preacher should make such a statement as this. The truth is that all who do the will of God are his children. The Bible clearly teaches that the person who believes with all his heart that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the living God, who repents of his sins and, upon a confession of his faith, is baptized into the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, thereby enters the kingdom of God. In other words, he becomes a Christian in the doing of these things. All who do this are children of God. Some people are not satisfied with simply being children of God, and do things in order to become members of a denomination. This is a mistake; it is enough to be a Christian. We should not be ashamed of the name of Christ, should be ready to suffer as a Christian, and ready always to honor and glorify God in this name. "The disciples were called Christians first in Antioch."

Dr. B. H. Burnett is interested in knowing the correct spelling of the Greek for "Christian," and also wishes to know about the manuscripts. Here is what he says: "I desire to know the exact spelling of the Greek words from which our English word 'Christian' is translated in the New Testament. (Acts 11: 26; 26: 28; 1 Pet. 4: 16.) Advise as to each of the following manuscripts: Codex Vaticanus, Codex Sinaiticus, Codex Washington. Also as to any other manuscript or fragments of the fourth century or earlier. Any other information bearing on the original spelling is desired."

The Greek for "Christian" is, in the nominative, "Christianos." I have no information concerning the Codex Washington. I think our brother refers to the Codex Alexandrinus. There are three principal manuscripts—Codex Sinaiticus, Codex Vaticanus, and Codex Alexandrinus. Codex Sinaiticus is in St. Petersburg, obtained by Tischendorf from the convent of St. Catherine, Mount Sinai, in 1859. The New Testament is entire, and the Epistle of Barnabas and part of the Shepherd of Hermas are added. The whole manuscript was published in 1862 by Tischendorf at the expense of the Emperor of Russia. It is probably the oldest of the manuscripts of the New Testament and of the fourth century. This is in possession of the great Catholic Church. A Codex Alexandrinus is in the British Museum, a manuscript of the entire Greek Bible with the Epistles of Clement added. It was given by Cyril Lucar, patriarch of Constantinople, to Charles I. in 1628, and is now in the British Museum. It contains the whole of the New Testament with some chasms. It was probably written in the first half of the fifth century. This is the property of the Protestants. Codex Vaticanus (No. 1209) manuscript of the Greek Bible which seems to have been in the Vatican Library almost from its commencement. Cir. A.D. 1450. It consists of the New Testament entire to Heb. 9: 14. The rest of the Epistle to the Hebrews, the pastoral Epistles, and the Apocalypse were added in the fifteenth century. This manuscript is in the hands of the Roman Catholic Church.

Elbert B. Taylor sends me the following questions to answer: "(1) Was Matthias an apostle, and was he recognized as one by the Holy Spirit? (2) Could any one except an apostle impart the Spirit through the laying on of hands? (3) Did Ananias impart the Spirit to Saul through the laying on of his hands?"

1. Evidently Matthias was an apostle. The Holy Spirit is clear upon this point. Judas was an apostle, and Matthias was chosen to fill the vacancy made by his falling away. Simply because we learn little or nothing of Matthias after his election is no evidence that he was not an apostle. The truth is, none of the apostles figured prominently in the work of the conversion of the world, save Peter and Paul. Peter is prominent up to the thirteenth chapter of Acts, and after this Paul is an active apostle. It is true we learn of James being beheaded, and learn something of John; but when it comes to being active workers, Peter and Paul are very much more prominent than any of the other apostles.

2. In the case of the seven of which we read in the sixth chapter of Acts, hands were laid on them by the apostles. Whether hands were to be laid on by others than by inspired men has always been a difficult question for me to decide. Hands were laid upon persons occasionally during the ministry of the apostles. On all occasions except two, this one and Barnabas and Saul (Acts 13), it is specifically stated that it was done to impart the Holy Spirit or that the Holy Spirit was imparted in doing it. On the two occasions referred to this is not stated, yet the parties on whom hands were laid did work miracles, of which no account is given previous to the laying on of hands. It is true it is stated of the seven deacons that men were to be selected full of the Holy Ghost, yet this does not necessarily mean miraculously endowed, but full of the influence of the divine Spirit. If the object of laying on of hands was always for the purpose of conferring the Holy Spirit upon persons, then the laying on of hands was confined to persons possessed of spiritual gifts.

3. Ananias was sent to Saul in order that he might receive his sight and be filled with the Holy Spirit. Whether he was to receive the Holy Spirit by the laying on of hands or after he had been baptized by Ananias is not clear to me.

The law of worthy life is fundamentally the law of strife. It is only through labor and painful effort, by grim energy and resolute courage, that we move on to better things.—Theodore Roosevelt.

Rheumatism Grows Worse If Neglected

It is a Uric Acid Trouble.

It makes its presence known by local aches and pains, inflamed joints and stiff muscles but cannot be permanently relieved by local applications. Its cause is constitutional and it must have constitutional treatment.

Take Hood's Sarsaparilla, which corrects the acid condition of the blood on which the disease depends and makes you feel young again.

"Three doctors said I could not be cured of rheumatism but at 64 I am still alive, well and strong, thanks to the yearly use of Hood's Sarsaparilla. I am convinced there is nothing better for rheumatism." C. E. Goodrich, Bolivar, Mo.

Hot Springs Waters Wonderfully Successful in the Treatment of Rheumatism

The peculiar properties of the waters of the Hot Springs of Arkansas are due to radio activity, found in them to an exceptionally marked degree, and their equal has never been known in the treatment of rheumatism, and all uric-acid troubles. These springs are owned and controlled by the United States Government.

Rest.

I asked for Peace—
My sins arose
And bound me close;
I could not find release.

I asked for Truth—
My doubts came in,
And with their din
They wearied all my youth.

I asked for Love—
My lovers failed—
And griefs assailed

I asked for Thee—
And Thou didst come
To take me home
Within Thy heart to be.

Wheat and Chaff.

BY A. ELLMORE.

Let us start right at the beginning of the new year, and keep right, so that at its close we may have traveled another year toward the everlasting city.

Our lives are made up of days, and every day there are two lines for us to observe—first, things we must do; second, things we must not do; and one is as binding as the other.

There is one train which never backs up nor sidetracks; it runs in cold weather and in warm weather at the same rate of speed, and always has the right of way, and it never releases a passenger until he gets to the end of his journey—the train of time.

As men travel the forenoon of life they are hopeful and anxious, and wish to work more and possess more—more land, more cattle, more money—and desire to live in mansions; but by mid-afternoon their action is gone and their strength is waning, and most of their early associates are in their graves or have moved away, and by sundown they desire to go home and be at rest.

Preachers will likely have results from three sources at judgment—(1) from what they said when in the pulpit, (2) from what they did when out of the pulpit, and (3) from what they neglected to say and refused to do while mingling with a world of poor and discouraged people. Alas! The world needs faithful evangelists and the church needs scriptural bishops.

"Woman is the divinely ordained queen of this realm, and the tendency of modern life is to take her out of it and place her indiscriminately in all positions of social, civic, and industrial activity. This is a blow at the home. God bless the women who aspire to proficiency as workers at home and whose ambition is to fill in all respects the vitally important and sublime mission to which God has assigned the sex. If there be any difference in degrees touching the importance of the spheres assigned the two sexes, surely the palm goes to woman, since, according to God's own decree and word, she is in position to mold the character and determine the destiny of the race." (M. C. Kurfees, in Gospel Advocate, 1912.) Nine years ago I saw the foregoing jot in the Advocate, and I was so pleased with it that I placed it in my scrapbook. If Brother Kurfees could see the extravagant and unreasonable positions taken nine years ago by women, what can he see now? She has gone entirely beyond the rules of modesty and refinement. She is heady, she is loud, she is rude, and in dress she is immodest. And compared with our mothers sixty years ago in the home, what examples to the church and to the world now! We must go to the home for the material we obtain for the church; and the purer we find the home, the better will be the church.

After astronomers and scientists of various kinds had puzzled over this apparently simple question, the blue of the sky, for many hundreds of years, Prof. John Tyndall, a famous scholar of the last century, solved the mystery with the following explanation:

Sunlight is pure white light, made up of rays of the seven primary colors which are seen in the rainbow—red, orange, yellow, green, blue, indigo, and violet. The sky, which is really the air which surrounds the earth, is filled with myriads of tiny specks of particles of matter, which absorb some of the colors in the rays of sunlight and reflect others—forming the combination which we have come to know as "sky blue."

The variations in shade of this blue are due to the fact that the atmosphere is filled with dust particles at different times and also to the varying angles at which the sunlight strikes upon them. After a rain, however, the air is washed comparatively clear and the sky then appears at its true blue, which we are accustomed to associate with it. If one could penetrate outside the shell of air which surrounds the earth, the "sky," instead of being blue, would appear to be pure white, because there would be nothing to impede the direct rays of the white sunlight.—Selected.

Letter from the Palmetto State.

BY THOMAS H. BURTON.

Two years and ten months ago it was our lot to land in this field to take up the work as the only workers of the church of Christ. Many have been our disappointments and pleasures. First we met in our home, next in a picture-show house, then to other homes, from there to the Chamber of Commerce hall, then to the tent, and from there to a rented dark hall over a store; but now I am delighted to report that we have about as comfortable a place to meet as anybody in this town. Our house is almost completed, and is something that any brother should feel good to meet in and invite any friend. Three years ago this town knew absolutely nothing concerning “the church,” and to-day it has a firmly established congregation that is determined to keep the “glad tidings” going. We have baptized seventy people in this town—twenty-eight this year. It has been our good fortune and pleasure to have with us in the work Brother McCaleb for three nights; Brother Alfred Traylor for about three months, supported by the Bible School congregation; Brother Sam Nix for several months, supported by the Bethlehem congregation. Wilson County, Tenn.; and Brother H. M. Phillips, of Tuscumbia, Ala., supported by his home congregation. Brother Tommie Nicks was also with us at the same time as Brother Phillips. These brethren were with us last spring in a meeting; and if ever two men worked in a meeting, these two did. Last to come to us was Brother Gilbert Gibbs and wife, who are still in the field, and we think now that they will continue in the work. His home congregation—the congregation at Lawrenceburg, Tenn.—has been supporting him, and we hope that they will continue to do so. He is now planning to begin the work in Greenville, a city of about forty thousand people. We are hoping and praying that within twelve months the Lord's cause will be well represented in that field. The brotherhood has been far better to us personally, perhaps, than we deserve, but we are very thankful for the fellowship which has made it possible for us to do this work. May Heaven's richest blessings ever be theirs. Too, the brotherhood has been extra generous in helping to build our house, and I will say for the congregation here that we are all as thankful as people can be. We are now very anxious to get the remainder of the indebtedness paid off (which will amount to about eight hundred dollars) so we can support a preacher in some other part of the State. Our papers have also been very liberal with space for this work and have made it possible for us to do much that we have. The Williams Printing Company and Brother Fuqua have been very liberal in furnishing us tracts. A congregation in Nashville and the Cookeville and Lebanon congregations have furnished us with tents and equipment. Pikeville also had a hand in this. All of this and many other things too numerous to mention have gone to make this work what it is. May God bless every interested soul in this and all other work of the kingdom. Pray for us.

RENWAR VS. RHEUMATISM.

It is certainly a pity that so many people suffer year after year the intense pains of rheumatism when it can be so easily expelled from the system by the simple treatment of taking Renwar Rheumatic Salts. Rheumatism is caused by uric acid in the blood; and in order to effect a complete cure, it is necessary to entirely eliminate this acid from the blood. Renwar is guaranteed to relieve, or your money refunded. It contains no injurious drugs. It is the one sure remedy, and it does not in the slightest degree injure the stomach or affect the heart. Mr. Joseph L. Boehmer says: “One 50c bottle has done me more good than all sanatorium treatments; and what it did for me, why should it not do the same for others? Should any one doubt the virtue of Renwar and the certainty of curing this malady, refer them to me.” For sale by druggists; price, 50c; or by mail on receipt of price from WARNER DRUG COMPANY, NASHVILLE, TENN.

Field Reports

Jackson, Miss., December 22.—Two good services here last Sunday. All feel encouraged over the increased attendance and the interest shown.—M. C. Cayce.

Athens, Ala., December 25.—Last Lord's day I preached in the Hayes Mill Schoolhouse, with about thirty present. To-day I met and worshiped with the brethren here in Athens. Brother J. W. Brents preached his last sermon to the Athens brethren to-day. Brother Brents is going to preach next year for a church in Springfield, Mo. I am to begin a meeting in Harris, Ala., on the first Monday in January.—W. W. Still.

Lecanto, Fla., December 23.—We are located in Lecanto. Wife and I arrived here on December 7, and found the church doing fairly well. I have been here over two Lord's days and preached twice each Lord's day to very good-sized audiences. I have been very sick for the past ten days, but am some better at this writing. I fear the climate is not going to agree with me. My wife is doing fairly well, better than she did last winter. I have several calls for meetings in this State, and will conduct them if I can have my health here.—R. E. L. Taylor.

Magness, Ark., December 26.—I preached at Magness, Ark., Christmas Day and night to good crowds. I am to wind up the year's work at a place near Swifton, Ark., on Saturday night, and begin the new year by preaching on Lord's day and night. My work during 1921 has been all I could expect. I have put in the whole year in the work, and quite a number have been added to the one body and churches edified. I only regret that I could not accomplish more. I shall enter the new year with all the zeal of my soul, thanking the Father of all good for his wonderful blessings in the year that is now passing and looking forward to the future. We will put our trust in him.—W. F. Lemmons.

Imboden, Ark., December 23.—I preached a few discourses at Black Rock, Ark., last week. Brother C. M. Greer did the song leading. Brother Greer is a fine singer, as well as a good preacher. One made the good confession. The brethren at Black Rock are few in number and poor in this world's goods, but they are doing things for His cause. They are now bringing to a finish a cozy little house in which to meet and worship God as "it is written." Think of them, brethren, in your prayers. I shall spend the Christmas holidays with the Birdell congregation; then to Battle-Ax for the first Lord's day in 1922. I am to begin a mission meeting at Alicia, Ark., beginning on January 9. Brother Greer will assist in this meeting. We are going without price, trusting that our good brethren will hold up our hands while we make the good fight. Alicia is a fine mission point; the sects are almost dead there. Brother Otto Millner has secured the Odd Fellows' Hall to meet in. We must seat, heat, and light the hall at our own expense. But my whole soul shall be in the work, as if I knew I would get good support.—A. H. Porterfield.

Armona, Cal., December 20.—I wish to give a brief report of the work of J. W. Ballard in the San Joaquin Valley. His first meeting, held in the city of Fresno, continued two weeks, and there were six confessions and baptisms. The attendance was very good. He then went to Dinuba and spent two weeks with the congregation there; and while there were no visible results, the church was pleased with his preaching. From there he went to Tulare and spent two weeks, with one who had become unfaithful returning to the fold. He had a fine hearing at Tulare. He next came to Hanford, my home congregation, and preached three and one-half weeks there, and at Armona, with three young men to make the good confession and a number returning to their "first love." The hearing at Hanford was more than we had expected. At this place the house we had secured was packed, and many times we could not accommodate those who came. The preaching was well done, and the church and all of us take courage and press on to higher things. He has gone to Los Angeles, thence to Riverside, and then will go home. May the Lord bless Brother Ballard for his noble efforts and labor of love.—L. D. Perkins.

RECIPE FOR GRAY HAIR

To half pint of water add 1 ounce Bay Rum, a small box of Barbo Compound, and ¼ ounce of Glycerine. Any druggist can put this up, or you can mix it at home at very little cost. Apply to the hair twice a week until the desired shade is obtained. It will gradually darken streaked, faded, or gray hair and make it soft and glossy. It will not color the scalp, is not sticky or greasy, and does not rub off.

THE SAFEST WAY TO DESTROY UNSIGHTLY HAIR

It is difficult to find anything more repulsive than an unnecessary display of unsightly hair on the person of an otherwise highly refined and beautiful lady.

The failure and danger connected with many so-called hair removers has discouraged many ladies and caused the needless and very unsatisfactory use of the razor, an instrument intended for the coarse skins of men only.

Unsightly hair on the exposed portions of the body can be destroyed with the roars safely and without injury to the skin, but the remedy must go deeper than the surface.

Nu-Art, a highly successful preparation, scientifically prepared, goes into the hair follicles and destroys the hair roots without injury to the skin or complexion. Thousands have found it highly successful and gratifying.

A Good Woman Called.

BY W. H. CARTER.

In the evening of December 23, 1921, as the light of the sun was beginning to fade, the brightness of a mother in the home of Brother A. W. Parker was removed by the hand of death when the meek and quiet spirit of his beloved life partner, his devoted and loving companion, was called to return to God who gave it.

Sister Judith Roark was born on January 8, 1851, and departed this life in triumphs of faith on December 23, 1921. She was the daughter of W. S. Roark, a member of one of the oldest and most respected families of this county. On April 23, 1878, she was united in holy wedlock to Brother A. W. Parker, with whom a happy life was spent to the time of her going out into the higher, greater, and sweeter life.

Her parents were of the Primitive Baptist faith, and, of course, she was brought up under its influence; but receiving no impression that she was one of the elect, and being honest with herself and God, she decided to read the Bible and learn God's will. This led her to see that it spoke of but one church, the church of Christ, and that it was entered by obedience to the gospel; so she decided to obey and be a Christian only and a member of this one church. So the writer was called, and in the creek near their home she was buried by baptism into Christ's death, and from that day she lived in newness of life. The Bible was her daily companion. She read it, taught it, and lived it.

She was the mother of four boys, whom she helped to rear to be good, honest, moral, and useful. Three of them, William, Luther, and Andrew, are in the Citizens' Bank, and Walter runs the farm. Two, Luther and Andrew, are members of the church. Their father is old and feeble, and ere long will join her in the glory land.

In Sister Parker we have a typical model woman—a devoted wife, a loving mother, a good neighbor, a "keeper at home," a true Christian. Her light has not gone out, but will continue to shine in the lives of her boys. They miss her and sorrow after her, but not as those who have no hope. The promise of the right to the tree of life is to those who keep His commandments, and the blessing is pronounced upon those who die in the Lord. She entered Christ, walked in him, died in him. After services at the home, we carried her to her childhood home and laid her to rest in the family burying place to await the coming of the Lord. May God comfort Brother Parker in his declining days, and lead their children to follow their mother as she followed the Christ.

Old People Lonely.

As men grow older, and as the death of people at a given age becomes more certain, they feel the pangs of increasing sorrows. At the age of twenty, a young man thinks little of the deaths of people around seventy. By the time he is forty, men whom he may have known in adult life for twenty years are then passing away. By the time he is sixty, not only most of his fellow workers older than himself have gone to the better country, but many of those younger as well. This shifting of age and the almost stationary limit of seventy cause the old person to become lonely unless he makes vigorous efforts to make new friends among young people.—Western Christian Advocate.

Now.

It is common for folks to say, "Never was there a time," etc. In so saying people do not mean to claim familiarity with all times; they only mean that they have never known a time, etc. Yet we doubt if history reveals a time since the planting of the Christian faith in Palestine when the call was more urgent for Christians to be at their very best than now. The world was never more needy. Neither was it ever more ready to receive Christ than it is to-day. Doors of opportunity are open everywhere. We are at a crisis in the progress of Christianity. If, like a well-trained army at the crisis of battle, every Christian would put his very best into the conflict at this hour, what wonderful things could be accomplished for Christ.—Central Methodist.

Evil Hinders Unity.

BY H. M. PHILLIPS.

If every one was free from evil, there would be nothing between them and God; and since all would be like God, and as God is not divided, therefore unity would prevail. Evil may be seen in various ways. Let us notice some ways in which it does its destructive work in the church today.

If one is ignorant, and for that reason causes division, it is because of evil, for it is evil to be ignorant. Disobedience or lack of obedience to God's commands results in evil; and since we are commanded to grow in grace and knowledge, when we fail to do such we sin, for sin is transgression of law. Wherever unity is lacking, it is because of evil, either by intention or otherwise.

Often a lack of really understanding each other causes unity to be broken, and it should be the part of all to wait till all the facts are learned before a decision is made. Under the stress and strain of argument one often becomes heated and speaks that which only tends to widen the breach. It seems that a little allowance has to be made for heated statements, and we are not all willing to do so. Then, so often we are not clear in our calm statements. We speak in a way that it can be taken in either of two ways, and it seems to be our nature to take it in the way that causes strife. It is possible to settle troubles and bring unity only when each one has fully understood the other and each possesses a good measure of the Spirit of Christ. When there is disagreement, which one shall give in? This is often the question. Well, it should be the one that is wrong, and that may be both parties; but self-glory and a desire to stand often causes one to fail to acknowledge the wrong; of course such is evil.

Unity will never prevail where evil is, and evil will never be removed till the word of God is obeyed. I often wonder what causes man to try to hide from man what he knows God sees, and that he will have to give an account of it. Mules are a little like people—they are stubborn; and nothing but the spirit of our Lord reigning in our hearts will remove this great barrier to unity. Why is it that so many churches are not at unity, and so many who claim to be saved are divided? It is really because evil exists in some form. Find where it is and remove it in God's way, and it will bring unity.

"OLD LIMBER"
or
THE TALE OF THE TAYLORS
by
DE LONG RICE

"ALF and BOB TAYLOR, with their eloquence, their fiddles, and their fox hounds, have wrought for themselves a niche of eternal melody in the hearts of their country."

So states the author of this little book, which we present as the best product of the pen of DeLong Rice. Into one hour of reading he has gathered the strange and romantic story of the two most wonderful political campaigns of Tennessee—the thrilling tale of the happy comradeship and the life-long rivalry of the two famous brothers—a disclosure of the remarkable and heretofore unpublished incidents that attended the political division of the Taylor family—the wonder of "The War of the Roses" that attracted the attention of the world—and the truth about "OLD LIMBER," the peerless and now immortal fox hound that played the leading role of sentiment in the political campaign of last fall, from the Mississippi River to the Unaka Mountains.

With a "Cast of Characters extending from a President of the United States to a fox hound," the story touches a wide range of human sentiment; and through it all is the aroma of crackling camp fires and the music of the chase.

THE BOOK is beautifully printed and bound, appropriately illustrated, and packed in a neat gift box, ready for mailing.

Atonement.

BY W. P. SIMS.

I desire to call attention to the Bible use of the word "atonement" in contrast with the use made of it in these latter days. The word has a plain meaning and use throughout the Bible. In the New Testament (Authorized Version) it is found one time—Rom. 5. In the American Version it is not found, but "reconciliation" is in its place. It seems that we can get the proper meaning of the word if we will only consult those in position to define its use and meaning. The Old Testament is plain as to its use, and who made it, and for whom and how and where it was made. I will leave this for the readers to investigate for themselves.

I remember that many years ago I was reading the American Christian Review, and one of Brother Ben Franklin's sermons was there. I gave it to a neighbor, an old man of good judgment and sound sense. He read the sermon and returned it. He said one of three things is true: either all mankind will be saved, or an elect few will be saved, or those that obey God will be saved. And he said: "You may be right." He had studied the question, and I am sure that he was correct. He passed away long ago believing that all mankind would be saved.

I will relate an incident that Brother Jesse Sewell told me. He said he heard a preacher preach in Kentucky on the atonement, and said that Christ made atonement on the cross for all mankind. Two Universalists were in the house. At the close of the sermon they went to the preacher, shook his hand, and claimed him as a brother Universalist. This preacher claimed to be Arminian in belief. Arminius taught that Christ made atonement for all in contradistinction to Calvin, who claimed that Christ made atonement for the elect before the foundation of the world. So the two theories taught by Calvin and Arminius are taught more or less by all denominations. According to Calvin, man has no volition or choice in his salvation. According to Arminius, Christ made atonement for all, but all are not saved. Two great men differ so much as these do, and yet those that follow their teaching work together in revivals for the salvation of sinners. Such is not consistent.

Where does the Bible say Christ made atonement on the cross for anybody? The priests were the ones who made atonement for the people. Christ was no priest until he was made Priest and King in heaven. So, while he died for all the world on the cross, he only made provisions for the atonement which he makes for the sinner when he obeys the gospel and enters Christ's body, the church. It is in Christ where sinners are reconciled to God. "There is therefore now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit."

I trust the foregoing will do some good in the way of bringing about a better understanding of the Bible.

My Last Trip.

BY J. D. TANT.

I returned a few days ago from Tennessee, where I went for two debates; but the Primitive Baptist backed out.

I then went to Whiteville and heard F. O. Howell and Nunnery for three days. I was glad to hear Howell in debate. I have heard much of him. I found him to be one of the ablest speakers in the church of Christ. I have heard nearly all of our leading debaters, and I am bound to classify Howell among those at the top as a debater, and no congregation will make a mistake in getting him to defend their teaching.

I closed my last debate for the year 1921 with J. R. Clark, Missionary Baptist. Clark is among their ablest debaters and knows the Baptist doctrine.

During the past month I have met

Clark, Bogard, and Riley, all Missionary Baptists, and am booked for two debates during January with the Adventists.

I am now at my new home, Quitman, Ark., and am planning for a mission meeting here, which I hope will result in building up a church of Christ, as my family has to worship alone at my home, we being the only members here.

A Visit to Columbus, Miss.

BY FRANK BAKER.

Through a kind invitation of my old-time friend, Brother Howell, who is one of the pillars in the church at Columbus, I visited and preached for them on the second Lord's day in December. I found in Columbus one of the most zealous, devoted, and efficient little bands of Christian workers that I have met in all my labors of more than twenty years. Brother Cayce truly showed himself a workman classed with those mentioned by Paul in 2 Tim. 2: 15. This little band is working hard and sacrificing much to meet their obligations on their house of worship. I would be glad if many who have much of this world's goods could see the real duty they owe to God in the using of it. I am sure they would come to the help of these good people. As I understand, they have met every obligation on the property, but they need at least two hundred dollars' worth of repairs on the inside of the house. Brethren, why not spend some of that which the Lord has intrusted you with in a way that you will get credit for it when you stand at heaven's gate? Some help for the Lord's cause in Columbus at the present time will mean much for his cause there in the future.

Yet in thy dark streets shineth the everlasting light;
The hopes and fears of all the years are met in thee to-night.*

*For Christ is born of Mary, and, gathered all above,
While mortals sleep, the angels keep their watch of wond'ring love.
O morning stars, together proclaim the holy birth,
And praises sing to God, the King, and peace to men on earth.*

*How silently, how silently the wondrous gift is given!
So God imparts to human hearts the blessings of his heaven.
No ear may hear his coming, but in this world of sin,

BY A. B. LIPSCOMB

The normal and healthy exercise of our bodies is attended with pleasure. This is a fundamental principle and is what the sociologists call the "play instinct." Since play has to do with health, it is just as necessary for grown-ups to play under proper restrictions as it is for children. For man to work, on the other hand, is not a natural instinct. It is an acquired disposition. We must be trained to work. Work implies some factor or personality behind us. There are three leading factors that influence us to work.

The first motive I mention is that of compulsion. Children must be trained to work. That is the chief purpose of our educational system. Most people talk as if work were natural to man, and the main problem, they think, is to find enough work for everybody and to pay fair wages. But the original problem in dealing with primitive races and the serious problem in dealing with the great masses of the people to-day is to get them to go to work. We might consider, for example, the North American Indians in their primitive state. The men did no work, unless we should call hunting and fishing work. The only real work was done by the squaws. Nobody worked but mother, and her life was given to drudgery. A study of the races reveals the fact that the capacity to labor was acquired, transmitted in minute additions from one generation to another until great numbers of men were at last born with the constitutional power to apply themselves to monotonous tasks during their whole lives.

The most plausible excuse that has ever been offered for slavery is that it was not really brutal treatment of one race by another, but the direction of disciplined minds over undisciplined. How did the original negroes ever learn to work? Did the needs of existence teach them self-denial or persuasion tone down a wild, unsettled nature? In reply, we might observe that they are just as wild now in Africa. No, it required a more imperative and coercive force. Without discussing here its many objectional features, we may truly say that the social and underlying mission of slavery was to teach the negro to work, to translate mere activity into something useful. When you come to think of it, the noblest traditions of the negro race have to do with that period when he was undergoing this training process. To this period belong his quaint old songs, his lullabies, his love lyrics, the finest expressions of his religion and the best examples of his chivalry.

Because slavery is a good thing for one age does not mean that it is a good thing for another age. Some one has said that "sin is the persistency of relations." Hanging on to an institution or a custom after it has outgrown its usefulness is utter folly. "The times of ignorance therefore God overlooked; but now he commandeth men that they should all everywhere repent."

Another motive behind our work is ambition. Some people work themselves to death. They do far more than necessity requires. Half the work they do would meet their wants. But ambition in the form of the love of distinction spurs them on. There is the desire to gratify the appetite with choice viands, to dress in finer raiment, to live in a bigger house, and to ride in a more expensive automobile.

There are some very discouraging features about our modern civilization. Consider for a moment the drift to the cities. If country folks would only bring their old-fashioned ideals of work with them when they come to town, it would not be so bad. But they soon discard them in favor of city ways. Time was when boys vied with one another as to which could plow the most ground or cut the most wood; but now the rivalry has to do with clothes and sports and cars. Time was when the favorite pastime among young women was swapping recipes. A good cook was a kind of social heroine. But times have changed wonderfully. An elderly gentleman dining in a modern home complimented the dessert and asked the hostess if she made it. "No, the cook made it," was her curt reply. What does this imply? It implies that our ideals of honest work are breaking down, being succeeded by the spirit which says: "I don't have to cook, nor nurse children, nor ride on the street cars." It seems to me that we are getting back to the unworthy ideal of the ancient Greeks, who held that manual labor was despicable and only performed by slaves or by those a little above them.

And all the while the example of Jesus Christ, the carpenter's Son, stares us in the face, and the words of the tentmaker stand as a constant rebuke: "For even when we were with you, this we commanded you, If any will not work, neither let him eat."

Still another motive behind our work is commission. Compulsion is a force working from without; ambition comes from within: commission comes from without or from above, and but lays its hold upon the heart. There is an obligation to our friends, to the State, to the church, and to God, that needs to be performed. We feel that we are sent, intrusted with a task, endowed with a sacred responsibility, and thus commission is behind our labor. Sometimes all three forces coincide as in the parents' responsibility for the education of a child. Here are combined stern necessity and lofty ambition and sacred trust.

When Jesus Christ worked, he was prompted entirely by this third influence, the principle of commission. He was unceasing in his labors, because the time was short and he must finish the work which the Father had given him to do. This is the highest influence behind the work of his followers. There is little or no pleasure where one works purely through necessity; there is a little more of pleasure when one is stirred by an earthly ambition; but the best work is accomplished by those who have a commission from a source that is revered because it is higher than the earth. So said the apostles Peter and John: "We ought to obey God rather than men." It was this motive that carried the gospel to the heart of Africa, to the frozen North, and to the far-off islands of the sea. The true Christian makes no sharp distinction between "home" and "foreign" missions, since the Great Commission includes them both. The man sent is the man sent for a definite purpose whether at home or abroad.

The main thing to remember is that the commission given to the apostles has been handed down to us and that we must do our best for Jesus' sake.

"The only feet he can use are ours;

The only hands he has, he must borrow from us:

The only lips he can speak with are ours."

Most of us do not have burdens heavy enough to hold us to the stable quiet life. The footfalls of the pedestrian will cause the East River suspension bridge to shake, but the weight of a freight train will hold it steady. There are many among us who suffer great nervousness under the lighter load, who exhibit perfect composure when great distresses come. It is easier to have the larger faith under the greater demand for it than to exercise a large faith when it is less consciously needed. There is no paradox here; it is simply the practical working of grace in the soul, so that "deep answers to deep" and the measure of tranquillity is determined by the extent to which the tide of life corresponds to that of its circumstances, finding its completeness in that volume where the inside is level with the outside, so there is equilibrium and calm.—Selected.

Observations on Singing.

BY EARNEST C. LOVE.

From time immemorial singing has been a part of the worship of God. Men need not be commanded to sing: it is a natural impulse of the human heart. No one commands the little bird to find the topmost twig of a tree and fairly split his throat making sweet melody. I said no one commands him, but perhaps that is not entirely correct. May not God, who fashioned his little throat, have done so that he might fill the air with music for the very joy of living?

However that may be, it is a fact that there is in man, as well as in birds, that which makes him sing. If there were no command to sing, man would sing anyway. But he would not always be careful as to what he sang. Hence, James says: "Is any cheerful? let him sing praise." (James 5: 13.) Man sings not only when he is cheerful, but also when he is sad. Birds do the same thing. It is nature.

In our more cheerful moods, we may feel like singing "Yankee Doodle" or some other flippant or silly song. But God forbids that, and restricts our singing to "psalms and hymns and spiritual songs." (Eph. 5: 19, 20; Col. 3: 16, 17.) These passages show that our music in Christian worship must be confined to songs that praise with words that teach and admonish.

The singing in the churches has undergone great changes in the past half a century. The plaintive minor music of fifty or seventy-five years ago has given place to more cheerful major music. In the modern music there is no place for tears, and nothing to stir the deeper emotions of the heart. But most singers try to defend the cheerful music and positively ridicule the old-time melodies. Most congregations object to singing anything that will make them cry or even anything that will make them think seriously. It is claimed that Christians should be the happiest people in the world, and therefore they should sing no mournful songs.

Perhaps a closer study of the church would reveal conditions that should wring tears from the coldest Christian heart. During this very period while the plaintive music was being supplanted by the cheerful there was such desolation in Zion as has scarcely been equaled in the history of the world. If Jeremiah was justified in weeping bitterly over the desolation of Jerusalem, certainly this has been no time for mirth. The departure of the Christian church from the "old paths," with the strife, malice, anger, back-biting, division, incident thereto, and the shame of a separation among those claiming to stand for unity, make a picture that should banish mirth and bring tears to every eye. Even among ourselves conditions are far from encouraging. "I love thy church, O God!" We sing it; do we mean it? If so, what is wrong with mournful songs and plaintive melodies while our Lord's church is undergoing such tribulation? Should there not be lamentation and great mourning over Zion's desolation?

The music has not changed more than the words. Far too many of the modern songs are weak and puerile and without force either in music or words. Sometimes even the grammar is incorrect.

Many of the modern church tunes have more effect on the feet than the heart. They are too much like: "Hey-diddle, heydiddle; the cat's in the fiddle; the cow jumped over the moon." They have a rattle, but that's all. Of course, no one is brought to tears of sorrow over past sins or tears of joy in anticipation of heavenly pleasures.

There may be some tears shed. It may make angels weep to see the mess we are making of our singing. In the ultra modern books, it is hard to find a hymn suitable for an invitation hymn. Some invitation songs I have heard would come nearer scaring people out the windows than drawing them forward to confess Christ.

Why all this? Why can't we sing as in former times? There are evidently several reasons. The world has come between us and our God. We don't want to sing the old-time sentimental songs, because we have no emotion to express. The rattle and jingle suits us better, because it is soon over and sooner forgotten, like the songs of the world around us.

Another hindrance to our singing is the instruments in the home. Nearly every home now has its piano or phonograph, or both. These are allowed to furnish the music for the home, instead of the old-time singing. Formerly, at evening the mother took the old hymn book, the oldest son held the lamp, the other children stood close by, father punched up the fire and settled back and closed his eyes, and they all sang: "I would not live always, I ask not to stay where storm after storm rises dark o'er the way;" or, "The angels that watched round the tomb;" or, "Amazing grace! How sweet the sound!" Now this is all changed. Too often now the mother reads a novel, the father reads the daily paper, the little ones read the "funnies," the oldest son goes out somewhere with the car, the oldest girl goes with her beau to the show, while the ten-year-old cranks up the phonograph and puts on one of Mrs. Scatoutsky's latest. No wonder they have no taste for the sweet old solid hymns of the long ago when they go to church.

There is still another thing that contributes to bad singing in the congregations, and that is the fearful disease of "songbookitis." If ever a people had that disease in a malignant form, it is the church of Christ. Until twenty-five years ago, few song books had been published by us. But this disease took us and we broke out all over at once. New song books have followed each other so rapidly that, when a new book starts into a meetinghouse, it is lucky if it does not meet itself coming out. The consequences are that the congregations never learn the songs well enough to sing them. A few of the best singers learn them and sing them, and the rest mumble along trying to catch the tune, but it generally eludes them. I am now at Covington, Ind., and they have the best singing I have heard in years, and they have not changed song books in fifteen years. A hint to the wise is sufficient.

The publishing of so many new song books has another evil effect. It has brought many songs into demand to fill up these books. A half dozen good songs are enough to sell a book, and too often the rest is mere padding. Songs are sometimes printed to be sold rather than to be sung and enjoyed.

New song writers and poets should not be discouraged, but none of them should be overworked. It is asking too much of most men to expect them to compose hundreds and hundreds of good hymns. By throwing his very best efforts into the work, a man might produce a dozen good songs, but I believe there are few who can make a living writing good songs.

Our age is against the production of poets and musicians. Only events that shake empires and make and destroy nations and kingdoms can bring out the poetic. There must be poetic vision and inspiration. The great poets of the renaissance wrote to the tune of crashing empires and by the light of martyr fires. Then, to give this poetry a religious turn, there must be a great awakening among the people. No matter how great a man is, he cannot do his best without either violent opposition or generous response.

Whitefield and the Wesleys preached to tens of thousands at a time, while the dying words of martyrs were still ringing in their ears. Thousands rejoiced at seeing even a glimmer of light after the long night of the "Dark Ages." This brought out the poetic. Preaching to an audience of from forty to sixty, and some of them asleep, or plowing a mule, or cranking a Ford, is not conducive to poetic inspiration. That is why very few really good hymns are being produced to-day. No one is to blame. The age is against the poet. For this reason the songs of a hundred or two hundred years ago are for the most part better than any being composed to-day. Let us seek for the "old paths," in music as in doctrine. (Jer. 6: 16.)

A Grand Old Man.

BY S. H. HALL.

Much has been said about the qualifications and duty of elders, and much more could be said without saying too much, but I am constrained to say a few things about one of the elders under whom I have labored for the past fifteen months—viz., Brother A. C. Brown, of South Pasadena, Cal.

I had not long been with the Los Angeles brethren until his letters began coming to me. I would be glad to publish every one of them, but space forbids. Suffice it to say, however, that these letters contained words of encouragement and commendation, suggestions along needed lines, and criticisms; and I think I appreciated the latter quite as much, to say the least, as the former. No one has ever, in all my experience, come more nearly being, indeed, an elder to one whom the church had called into their midst than Brother Brown has been to me.

At the time I was asked to expose Adventism in conjunction with Samuel E. Witty's splendid work at Ontario, Cal., several letters came from this grand old man with sufficient scriptural references and suggestions to put any Adventist to flight. I felt quite well equipped for the battle, having met them several times in the Georgia work; but I found much in the matter he sent me that was very helpful, and I know I made some points stronger and more effective because of his help. Then, when the battle was on, in spite of the fact that he is very old and it is a good long drive out to Ontario, he was there with his presence and prayers to help.

And last, but by no means least, I now recall one letter that came with criticism couched in the kindest of language. It was so easy to see he was only desiring to help, not to hinder, the work. The criticism I carefully considered, and it was helpful to me. And when it was announced by me that I felt duty bound to return to the East for a while, the following letter came from this good man and his family:

Dear Brother Hall and Family: I wish to assure you of our love and Christian esteem for your untiring devotion to the work of the ministry to which you have been called to labor. California is a fruitful field, and while we regret that circumstances are such (over which we have no control) that impels you to leave us, we will still maintain the blessed hope "that all things work together for good to those who love the Lord" and put their trust in him. Your sojourn with the brethren in California has been so brief that it will seem, in after years, to be only a dream. May I indulge the hope that in the changing vicissitudes with which we are always surrounded, that your stay in the East may be brief, and that you can prevail upon your dear old mother to accompany you to this "Garden of Eden" to spend the few remaining years allotted to her. Tell her for me that California is a mighty good place to live in and to go to heaven from.

Not desiring to trespass upon your valuable time, and in conclusion, let me breathe the hope that we may again meet in the flesh, and that circumstances may present themselves so that you can make California your earthly abiding place, the pacific conditions of which I fully believe you with your family keenly realize.

Yours in faith, A. C. BROWN AND FAMILY.

Brother Brown will never know how much I appreciate him, simply because words fail me when it comes to trying to express my appreciation.

There is one thing I know—viz., that the work of the church of Christ is the biggest business in the world, and that the elders of the local church have a responsibility resting upon them that but few elders realize. That they should study their duty, the welfare of the church, and combine the very best there is in them for the welfare of the church, must be admitted. That nothing in the local church should be a source of more help and encouragement to a minister than that loving sympathy and helpfulness that comes from real elders must also be admitted. But that too often is it the case that some elders continually hinder and never help must be admitted.

I felt constrained to say this much of this good man, and I believe his associate elders fully appreciate what I have said. The Lord bless him and his and make his last days his sweetest and best, and, to use his own words, "in conclusion, let me breathe the hope that we may again meet in the flesh."

MISCELLANEOUS CALIFORNIA NOTES.

Before leaving California for the East, I made a hurried trip to Santa Rosa, Graton, San Francisco, Berkeley, and Fresno. I preached once at each place, and found the work going well.

Felix Owen, an untiring worker, was the cause of my going to Santa Rosa. I had promised him a number of times that I would visit that place, and I am so glad I went. He has one of the neatest houses of worship I think I have ever seen, and he has the best singing of any congregation I visited in California.

O. W. Gardner was responsible for my going to Graton. They have one of the best schools, for its size, at Graton that I have ever seen. I wish time would permit my giving fully the work of this school. Brother Gardner and his patrons are delighted, and so is the student body, and real work is being done. It was a genuine pleasure to me to address the student body and say all I could to encourage them and the parents assembled. I esteem Brother and Sister Gardner as two of our very best. Their lives are given wholly to the cause of Christ.

James H. Sewell was responsible for my going to Berkeley and San Francisco. I spoke at the regular place of meeting in San Francisco and at the Y. M. C. A. building in Berkeley. A more consecrated and determined body of believers I have never met than "the faithful few" who are keeping the work going in that big city. The effective and abiding influence of Brother T. B. Larimore and wife was one of the most outstanding things that I observed there. They love him, and his sound teaching and pure life give the work a support that knows no failure. I very much appreciated the very urgent appeal to join Brother Larimore in that work.

Brother W. H. Trice was the cause of my visiting Fresno, and I am so glad I stopped. We were students together in the Nashville Bible School, and I have watched his work with pleasure ever since. He is doing a fine work in Fresno. In his splendid wife he has a help that counts, and nothing but good do I ever expect to hear from their work wherever they may go.

The Fresno stop was made all the more delightful because of my meeting there the following: Brother T. B. Larimore and wife, Brother L. D. Perkins and wife, Brother J. A. Craig, Brother Charlie Sewell, and others from nearby congregations. I was also glad to meet Brother Earnest C. Love's wife, daughter, and son-in-law, and Brother and Sister Byars. I had known the latter at Dibrell, Tenn. Sister Byars is a sister of Brother H. Leo Boles' wife.

I would so much love to say more about these good people and the work they are doing, but time forbids this.

This trip was hurriedly made, and I had but little time at any place.

California is a most wonderful State, and we hated to leave. The work is growing, in spite of some handicaps. Our Los Angeles friends we can never forget, and it will be a sore disappointment if we do not get to work with them again.

I am glad to say to all that our trip was safely made, and these lines were written in the home of my dear old mother. The first night in Nashville was spent in the home of Sister Hamilton, the sister of Sisters Larimore and Sewell, of Berkeley, Cal. Our first service at Russell Street was encouraging indeed. I came to the work with a feeling of fear, but the fear is all gone and I am now ready to contribute all there is in me to help make it the greatest church on earth. It was good to see Brother and Sister E. G. Sewell in the congregation, and even their son, E. E. Sewell, whom I once almost hated because he nearly made me write my fingers off when I was studying English under him. But Sunday I was compelled to thank him for it, for the hardest thing I ever tried to do when I began to preach was to write. I told him Sunday had it not been for such help as he gave, perhaps I would never have written.

Efficient Organization.

BY JAMES A. ALLEN.

An intelligent man does not ask, "Who wrote the Bible?" To say nothing of its general composition or of the plan upon which it is constructed, the thoughts that it contains and the ideas that it advances are not such thoughts as the most learned of men could think, or ideas that could have proceeded from a human mind. Only from God could have come such thoughts and such ideas as are found in the Bible.

The church founded on earth by Christ is the most remarkable and marvelous organization the mind of man can contemplate. The system upon which it is constructed is not such a system as the most practical and advanced of men are competent to construct. The greatest minds, both in the church and out of it, in the presence of such an organization, recognize the work of a superhuman Architect. The simple and yet adequate arrangement of the work of its varied members, from the bishops and deacons of a congregation down to those who are babes in Christ, guarantees an efficiency that cannot be duplicated in any other organization or corporation known to the world. The efficiency exhibited in the smooth running of the Standard Oil Company, one of the most thorough of human organizations, is a hideous bungle compared with what is possible under the system of government found in the church.

If any one desires a first-class illustration of this, we need only refer to the past history of the American Christian Missionary Society, with its Home Office at Cincinnati, Ohio. This institution proposes to do a work that Divine Wisdom planned and organized the church to do. A glance at the system upon which it is organized exhibits an interesting comparison—if it be permissible to compare something human with that which is divine—between God's idea of how the work should be done and man's idea concerning it. Although very few of those who work through the society realize what it is, I can only, in this place, refer briefly to its general make-up; and yet, in so doing, as I do not have access to the books of the society, I cannot make an accurate statement concerning it. But it is enough to say that it is a large organization, with general offices and their expense, with general office employees and their salaries, and that it has a president, secretary, and other salaried officials. It is not controlled by the elders and deacons of any congregation, nor is it under the jurisdiction of any church; but it is operated and controlled by a board of directors on the same principle as the Standard Oil Company. In its various branch offices it has State evangelists, whose duties as such are not so much to evangelize or preach the gospel in new places as they are to visit established congregations and encourage them to contribute for the heathen through the society. When A. McLean was president of the society, I understood some years ago that his salary was seven thousand five hundred dollars a year. I presume it was not less than ten thousand dollars a year at the time of his death. When J. T. McKissick was State evangelist of Tennessee, I understood that he received seventeen hundred dollars a year and his traveling expenses.

Indeed, it would seem enough, in this place, to say that the society, through its various agents, collects huge sums from the churches; and these sums, it should be remembered, are the freewill offerings of the people of God, the gifts of the poor as well as the rich, and in which, it is reasonable to presume, there are many widows' mites contributed upon the impulse of conscience at a great personal sacrifice. Some years ago Brother F. L. Rowe, editor of the Christian Leader, published at Cincinnati, had an accountant calculate what per cent of contributions given through the society really went to the heathen. The reader need not be informed that out of every dollar contributed by the churches, only a few cents reaches a foreign shore. And the question that confronts the churches is as to whether or not those who are carrying the burden would so contribute if they were aware that the great bulk of what they give, instead of going for the purpose for which it is given, goes into the disbursements of a large corporation and into the salaries of a few swivel chairs.

In contrast with all of this—if it can be in contrast with something as far above it as the heavens are higher than the earth—is the plan of missionary enterprise carried out by the apostles, in the early churches, under the guidance of the Spirit of God. In those days the church itself was recognized as "the light of the world," as "the salt of the earth," and as "the pillar and support of the truth." All its members were missionaries to the extent of their talents and opportunities. The inspired historian of that period says: "They therefore that were scattered abroad went about preaching the word." Every congregation, under the jurisdiction of its own bishops, was recognized as a missionary center, as a center of light. "For from you," wrote Paul to the congregation in Thessalonica, "hath sounded forth the word of the Lord, not only in Macedonia and Achaia, but in every place your faith to God-ward is gone forth; so that we need not to speak anything." Their evangelists in the field were amenable to no foreign board, nor were they hired or fired by a president of a federation of churches; but, on the other hand, they were in direct contact with the churches at home. "For even in Thessalonica," said Paul to the church at Philippi, "ye sent once and again unto my need." Such part of their contributions, taken upon the first day of the week, as was intended for foreign work, went as a whole to the evangelist in the field.

But I cannot, in a short article, any more than advert briefly to the apostolic plan. The efficiency of the primitive organization of the church stands unchallenged as the marvel of the world. Under it one hundred per cent of all funds went into the work for which they were contributed. That those who have gone out from us may see the error of their way and that they may, for the honor of the Lord Jesus and in answer to his prayer, retrace the steps of their apostasy, is the ardent hope of many hearts and the unceasing burden of many prayers.

Wealth of character is more enduring than wealth of gold. Character is the bed rock of manhood and the abiding thing in life.—The Christian Oracle.

The Old Year and the New.

BY MRS. T. L. POARCH.

The Old Year dies—yes, dies to-day;
But kindly deeds will live alway.
And all the deeds of kindness done
In nineteen hundred twenty-one
Will live throughout time's hidden years,
And bloom again where no sad tears
Shall e'er bedim the eyes of those Whose path not often found the rose,
But oft did thorns and briers find,
While passing down the stream of time.

But since the year has hurried through
To nine hundred twenty-two,
May every heartache now be past,
Because the years not long will last.
And may the Father overlook
The things recorded in his book
Against his creatures here below
Who blinded through this life may go,
And know not that the vain and proud
Must with the beggar don the shroud,

Perhaps before the evening dew
Of nineteen hundred twenty-two Shall vanish 'neath the sunlit rays
Which brighter makes the springtime days,
Or yet before the winter's chill
And frosts have fled from every hill.
Or if it should yet sooner be,
When death arrests some ship at sea,
O may the gentle Savior guide
Its journey to the other side.

But while the grand Old Year is dead,
And we list for the New Year's tread
Upon the silent midnight hour,
We know that God alone has power
To add another link to time,
All unobserved, save for the chime
Of ticking-ticking dials old
Which long have told this same story told.
But soon the links of time shall break,
And many souls shall cower and quake,

Because their King they did not know
While they through this sad world did go.
But may we form our ways anew
In nineteen hundred twenty-two,
And seek the Lord while he is near,
For soon again will close the year.
Yes, seek Him while he may be found,
Ere death's dark shadows hasten round,
And linger close beside our bed
Till we are gathered with the dead.

And if our souls should then be lost,
Too late 'twill be to count the cost!
For none from thence shall e'er return,
E'en though Jehovah's truth they spurn.
And none will that sad story tell
Not e'en to save the infidel!
Then let us journey on with Him
Whose word dispels the shadows dim,
That we a better world may see
In nineteen hundred twenty-three.

Abraham: God's Covenant with Him.

BY H. LEO BOLES.

The etymological meaning of "covenant" is somewhat indefinite; however, the Biblical use of it seems to be clear enough. It is uncertain whether it comes from a Hebrew roots or is of Assyrian origin. Whether from either of the above sources, it has the common meaning of "fetter," "to bind" or "to cut." It has always had the import of a solemn, mutual agreement; it has been translated to mean "testament."

"Covenant" was originally used to express an agreement between men, both parties being on equality and using the liberty of free will in making the agreement. The agreement was voluntary, but binding. There were different degrees of solemnity exercised in making different covenants between men. The solemnity was an index to the importance of the elements entering into the covenant. The solemnity of the covenant called for the religious vows. The earliest history of the covenant is found practiced between clans or members of the same clan. When a stranger became a member of a clan, he entered into a covenant with the clan or chief of the clan to perpetuate the interest of that clan. The ceremony for the initiation included the drinking of the blood of some member of the clan and some representative of the clan drinking the blood of the stranger. Hence the blood of the covenant; this signified that the lives became common and mutual. Later the use of various substitutes for the drinking of each other's blood became common, such as the drinking together of the blood of the sacrifice which was cut at the time that the covenant was entered into; again, the custom of sprinkling the blood of the sacrifice on each party of the covenant; also, eating together the flesh of the sacrifice. It has been a question whether these uses and customs connected with the covenant were taken from the Bible or whether the Biblical uses were taken from the common practices of the people. The preponderance of evidence seems to favor the latter, as the people practiced these things before the Bible account of them was given.

There were four principal elements entering into every covenant made between men, as is shown by the Old Testament. Some of the details are not explicitly stated, but they may be inferred. The first element was a statement of the terms agreed upon. (See Gen. 26: 28, 29: 31: 50-52.) The second element was an oath by each party to observe the terms and calling upon God to witness. (Gen. 26: 31: 31: 48-53.) Because of the oath and its solemn obligation, the oath has been referred to as the covenant and made synonymous with it. (Ezek. 17: 13.) The third element calls for a curse to be invoked upon the one who disregarded or violated the covenant. Some have made the curse a part of the oath; others consider it a separate element. The fourth element was the formal ratification of the covenant by some solemn external act. (Ex. 24: 4-8.) The formal ratification varied with different nationalities. In the case of Abraham, many of these customs were followed.

The immutability of a covenant is regarded as sacred. The most direful results were to be expected should the covenant be modified, charged, altered, or nullified. Paul, in speaking of the general principle of the covenant, said: "Brethren, I speak after the manner of men: Though it be but a man's covenant, yet when it hath been confirmed, no one maketh it void, or addeth thereto." (Gal. 3: 15.) The covenant, when it hath been confirmed, must stand under the protection of the prevailing custom in the country or under the legality of the civil law; nothing can be legally erased, added to, or substituted for any part of the covenant; it is immutable because of its importance and sacredness between men. Of course, there is included in the covenant promises from each party; this implies faithful obedience on the part of both to fulfill the obligations binding in the covenant.

So far we have noticed only briefly covenants between men and nations. We are now to consider covenants between God and men. It is generally understood that Jehovah has used the word with the meaning that it had between men. The idea of a covenant between God and men arose from the idea of the covenants between men. The general thought and custom that prevailed in a covenant between men is found in a covenant between God and men. Of course, there will be found some modification. In the case of a covenant between God and men, it is not an agreement between parties who stand on an equality. Jehovah is superior to man, and this calls for some modification and changes in the general custom of covenants. The superior always takes the lead or the initiative in making the covenant. Sometimes this initiative assumes the form of a command, or, at least, the promises are conditioned on man's obedience. A covenant between God and man "is a divine ordinance, with signs and pledges on God's part, and with promises for human obedience and penalties for disobedience, which ordinance is accepted by men." Sometimes it assumes the form of friendship between Jehovah and men. "The friendship of Jehovah is with them that fear him; and he will show them his covenant." (Ps. 25: 14.)

It is interesting to know how covenants between God and man were made; we can then more fully understand the covenant that God made with Abraham. "And I will give the men that have transgressed my covenant, that have not performed the words of the covenant which they made before me, when they cut the calf in twain and passed between the parts thereof: the princes of Judah, and the princes of Jerusalem, the eunuchs, and the priests, and all the people of the land, that pass between the parts of the calf; I will even give them into the hands of their enemies, and into the hand of them that seek their life; and their dead bodies shall be for food unto the birds of the heavens, and to the beasts of the earth." (Jer. 34: 18-20.) In this there is reference to the ancient custom of the dividing of the sacrificial animal into two parts and placing the parts opposite to each other so that the parties to the covenant could pass between the parts. This they did, entering the passage at each end and meeting in the middle, where the oath of the covenant was taken. Both parties then feasted upon the sacrifice. Abraham was required to prepare the animals and separate them, leaving a passage between the parts. (See Gen. 15: 9-17.) The covenant between Jehovah and Abraham was made under such conditions. "In that day Jehovah made a covenant with Abram, saying, Unto thy seed have I given this land, from the river of Egypt unto the great river, the river Euphrates." (Gen. 15: 18.)

In my next article I purpose to dwell more upon the covenant with Abraham.

Influence.

BY LOULA MAY ADKISSON.

One of the strongest of the silent, invisible forces of the world is that subtle, intangible thing called "influence." It had its origin ages ago in that beautiful and perfect garden of Eden, when Eve was influenced by the serpent, and Adam in turn was influenced by Eve to eat of the forbidden fruit. That influence, as man in every age and every clime has learned to his utmost sorrow, was an evil one. Since then mankind has swayed like a pendulum to and fro between good and evil forces.

Influence is a silent, subtle force that seems to twine itself around our souls, impelling us to do what we had not intended doing, what we sometimes have no wish to do. Here I am reminded of a certain little incident. Two girls were sitting in a window of a fashionable seminary, idly watching the passers-by. Presently a friend who was attending a near-by business college came along. "O," said one girl, promptly turning her head away, "here comes Agnes; pretend you don't see her." In surprise, the other wavered an instant, then coolly nodded to the passing friend. She had compromised between her desire to speak as pleasantly as usual and to do as she was bidden. The snobbish behavior of her companion lowered her in her estimation, while she reproached herself, as we often do when we make a compromise with the wrong.

A very striking example of one swaying between good and evil forces is that of the great King Agrippa, before whom the matchless apostle stood and reasoned. On one hand, the mighty word of God and the powerful logic of Paul; on the other, the worldly influences of a lifetime. How Agrippa's soul must have been torn between the two!

Another vivid illustration is that of the gentle captive maid who exerted such a beneficent influence over the arrogant captain of the Syrian host. Strange to say, he heeded the servant's words, and, in obedience to the injunction of Elisha and Elisha's God, sought the country of Samaria, dipped himself seven times in the beautiful waters of the Jordan, and was healed. If it had not been for the kindly influence of the little captive maid and other servants, no doubt the haughty Naaman, in his willful pride, would have suffered to the end of his days.

Every one exerts some kind of an influence, either good or evil. Some one has so beautifully said of the ideal mother: "Her influence, though as silent as sunshine and as subtle as the rose, will be as lasting as eternity, reaching out and down to the third and fourth generations, and in ever-widening, deepening circles, like the ripples on water when a careless hand has cast a pebble on its surface."

Even the strongest character is not quite immune, while the weaker one is tossed as a frail bark by the great waves of influence. All of us have at one time or another been caught in the depths of its dark or golden meshes. Some of the most regrettable deeds of our lives are often traceable to this very thing. We should train ourselves to be very susceptible to good influences; but where evil ones are concerned, our motto should ever be:

"Come one, come all!
This rock shall fly
From its firm base
As soon as I."

The Savior was doubtless the only one who was wholly impregnable to influence, though Satan sought in all his willingness to weave its strongest threads about him.

Evil influences are so prevalent in the world to-day that it is exceedingly hard for a Christian to live as he should. We are all more or less prone to be as "the nations" around us, as were the Israelites of old. But regardless of what others may do, may we have the courage and strength of purpose to say with Israel's great leader: "As for me and my house, we will serve the Lord."

Good Wishes for the Gospel Advocate.

My Dear Brethren and Fellow Workers in the Master's Vineyard: Here is my renewal check for the dear old Gospel Advocate. It has withstood the storms of more than a half century of foes without and of foes within, and is stronger to-day than at any time in its history. The spirit of the illustrious David Lipscomb will surely help to guard and keep its pages clean and loyal to "the faith which was once for all delivered unto the saints."

I cannot express my estimate of the worth of J. C. McQuiddy. "Little Mack," as he is sometimes called by those who know him best and who love him most, has been a "Gibraltar" in the ocean of strife and turmoil—the varying scenes through which we have passed since he became connected with the paper. Not only has he been a tower of strength in the management of the paper, but he has also been a bulwark of strength in his writings. I regard Brother McQuiddy one of the most accurate and one of the ablest and safest men in the brotherhood. The talented and versatile A. B. Lipscomb is one of the greatest assets of the Gospel Advocate. A few weeks ago his page was worth several times the price of the paper. Then there is that wonderful logician, F. W. Smith. Brother Smith is a man who wields a facile and trenchant pen. The more one reads Smith, the better he likes him.

I should be surprised if these brethren have no enemies even among those who claim to stand with them religiously. Men who do things, men of strength, have enemies. A man who has no enemies is a man who is wholly negative, therefore a worthless man.

Brethren, let us stand by the Gospel Advocate and make it even a greater power for God and truth and righteousness by giving it a wider circulation.

Praying God's richest blessings upon the management, upon the editors, the contributors, and the readers, during the year 1922, I beg to subscribe myself,

A brother in the faith,
C. E. HOLT.

At Home and Abroad

Change of address: J. Will Henley, from Coleman to Cordell, Okla.

A. B. Lipscomb will preach for the church at Ashland City, Tenn., next Sunday.

Charles E. Metcalfe, of Tyler, Texas, is ready to assist in meetings. He wishes to make 1922 "the best year of my life as a preacher."

Little Miss Edith Lynn is the newest addition to the home of T. B. Thompson at Huntsville, Ala. She arrived with the new year.

S. H. Hall preached at Russell Street Church, this city, on Lord's day. One made confession at the morning service and will be baptized on Wednesday evening.

W. G. Wilson writes: "I held a meeting at Curlee's Chapel, in Cannon County, Tenn., and baptized two young men. I preached on Pleasant Ridge on Christmas Day. I will preach at Rush Creek on the second Lord's day in January."

From W. P. Skaggs, Itasca, Texas: "The work of the Lord in Itasca is doing very well, and all are at peace; and while we do not have additions at every service, our attendance has a healthy growth. Our Sunday-school attendance exceeds our total membership, and I am persuaded that this is doing well."

From William W. Still, Harris, Ala., January 5: "I am here in Harris in a two-weeks' meeting. There are Methodists, Baptists, Presbyterians, and a few members of the church of Christ here. I will bring this meeting to a close next Thursday night. Next Saturday night and Lord's-day night week I will preach in Tanner."

From J. C. Mosley, Mayflower, Ark., January 4: "I have landed here, and find everybody friendly. I will stay here a while. Some here wanting to be baptized. I went to Jones Hill and found everybody getting along fine. I will begin a meeting here Friday night. I have been called to go to Fort Smith, Ark., to hold a meeting."

From M. S. Mason, Springfield, Mo., January 4: "I closed at Mount Grove, Mo., without visible results. The people there are hard to reach. L. E. Campbell is faithful there in leading a few brethren in worship. I was at Rogersville last Sunday. I will be at Turner and Ramsey Streets, this city, next Sunday. I am ready for calls for protracted-meeting work any time."

Charles F. Hardin, of Springfield, Mo., sends a brief report of his labors for 1921: "I was in fifteen meetings, which resulted in one hundred and sixty-two additions to the congregations where I worked. I also taught two music normals, conducted three funerals, performed one marriage ceremony, had one discussion, and did much personal work. I have greater things planned for 1922."

A debate is announced to be held at Liberty Church, beginning on February 27, between O. C. Dobbs, of the church of Christ, and C. F. Parker, Primitive Baptist. Liberty is about halfway between Barton and Russellville, Ala., about fourteen miles from each place. Any one wishing to attend from a distance may write M. E. Smelser, Russellville, Ala., Route 4, and conveyance will be prepared.

From A. D. Dies, Mobile, Ala., January 6: "This leaves me in a mission meeting in this great and wicked city. There are only a very few members of the church here. I am preaching in a rented storehouse. I hope to do some good—at least, sow the seed. I wish some of our preachers would emigrate to this field. The pure gospel is unknown here. It is a great field for mission work. Who will volunteer?"

From L. R. Wilson, Henderson, Tenn., January 5: "I have just closed a good meeting at Remmel, Ark. Although it was very cold during the entire time I was there, we had good crowds, fine interest, and splendid singing. We hope that much good was done by way of strengthening the church. Brethren, why not wake up and have a few-days' meeting in the winter occasionally? It will do you good."

From J. H. McBroom, Shelbyville, Tenn., December 21: "Upon the request of the brethren, I have withdrawn my resignation and will remain with the Main Street Church.

The work moves on splendidly. Heretofore I have been devoting only one month in the year to meetings, but next year I expect to hold meetings from July until November. I have time for two or three meetings. Churches desiring my help should write me at once."

Here is how Willie Hunter, of Livingston, Tenn., spent the holidays: "On Christmas Day I preached at Baxter. We had two services, with very good crowds, considering bad weather. On New Year's Day I preached three times, twice at Willow Grove and once at St. John, in Clay County. I also preached on Saturday night before New Year's Day at Willow Grove; one was reclaimed. They have their new house nearly completed at Willow Grove, and it is a splendid house."

From Joe Pendleton, Brush Creek, Tenn.: "The little band at Grant, in this (Smith) county, is trying to raise funds to build a frame house. A lot in Grant has been given the church. The restrictive clause is in the deed. They have only ten members, but set to work last September. The congregation is young and weak financially, but strong in faith. Contributions will be gratefully acknowledged. Send to Joe Pendleton, Route 2, Brush Creek, Tenn."

E. S. Jelley writes as follows concerning crop conditions in India: "The last two years were years of famine in this district, but this year some rain has fallen and there was about one-fourth of a crop. It is cold here at night now, but the sun is fierce by day. Several have asked for baptism at Ahmednagar, but we have been unable to find water there, for the river has dried up." Brother Jelley's address is Christ House, Vambori, Ahmednagar District, British India.

We have received a copy of the Evening Post, Louisville, Ky., of December 24, 1921, with a lengthy write-up of M. C. Kurfees' ministry with the Campbell Street Church, extending over a period of thirty-five years. The article carries a splendid likeness of the minister and gives a history of the church from its beginning and the splendid work it has done under the ministry of Brother Kurfees. His ministry dates further back than that of any other minister in the city of Louisville, and his power and influence are as great or greater now than at any previous time.

From J. W. Brents, Springfield, Mo., 804 South Grant Street, December 30: "The churches in Nashville are to be congratulated in their prospective tabernacle meeting. Every old Henderson boy feels honored in that N. B. Hardeman is to do the preaching. We have long been convinced that Brother Hardeman has few equals as a preacher. I have never seen anything printed from his pen or tongue. It would be a serious loss to the entire church if this series of sermons should not be published. There are enough Henderson boys and girls to get behind this and make this possible. Let others speak. Here is my order for twenty-five copies."

From C. E. Holt, Florence, Ala.: "Nothing so logically sound, so convincingly clear, has come under my attention as Brother Kurfees' masterly review of O. E. Payne's book on instrumental music in divine worship. Payne's position is self-refuting. He contends that one cannot obey the instruction given by Paul in Eph. 5: 19 and Col. 3: 16 without the use of some kind of an instrumental accompaniment. His use of the lexicons is very misleading. So skillfully does he argue his point in this department of his book that the casual reader is likely to be swept off his feet. Kurfees is no less than wonderful in ferreting out the weak and lame points in Payne's arguments. I strongly recommend that Kurfees' review be put in tract form for general distribution."

J. W. Grant writes: "I closed my term of service with the church at Avon Park, Fla., last Lord's day (the last in the year), and will begin the work in Lakeland next Lord's day (the first in the new year). I had a most enjoyable work at Avon Park and regretted to leave them. Our relations were most pleasant all the time with all the members, and I left them only because my new field seemed to promise more opportunity for doing good in the Master's work. A. G. Freed, of Henderson, Tenn., will begin a meeting with them on the fourth Lord's day in January. They have three local preachers, all good ones; but these are employed in the surrounding territory on Lord's days and in meetings on suitable occasions; and the church helps them as they need it, and also supports the work by having others to labor there at home in word and doctrine, both in continued meetings and in constant work in their home community. I am sure God will bless them for their fidelity and activity in the work."

The meeting that was announced to convene at Haleyville, Ala., for January 24-31, has been called off. J. H. Horton writes us to this effect.

F. B. Shepherd, of Amarillo, Texas, makes a report of total receipts for Forest Vale Mission, amounting to $51.59. Lack of space forbids our printing names of individual donors.

Marriage Announcement.—It was a great pleasure for me to officiate at the wedding of George W. Dickson and Sister Ethel Randolph, both of Dinuba, Cal. Brother Dickson is one of our best preachers. He attended school at Abilene, Texas. Sister Randolph is the accomplished daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John A. Randolph, who live in Dinuba, but formerly lived in White County, Tenn., where they are well known. The Lord's richest blessings go with this couple.—L. D. Perkins.

From J. A. Hudson, Oklahoma City, Okla., January 3: "Last Sunday was filled with interest to the faithful workers here. We had our monthly business meeting in prosecution of the Master's work. We are trying to plan and look ahead in such a way that we can get results that will make the cause of Christ brighter. At night one young married woman was buried with her Lord in baptism. Two were identified with us at the morning hour. The membership of the Tenth and Francis Streets Church is now quite a bit above four hundred."

From Charley Nichols, Parrish, Ala., January 3: "I enter the new year with a determination to do more for my Master than I did last year. Last year I gave all of my time to the ministry of the word, for which I received $302. We have three in the family. Our expenses were $395. House rent, $72; traveling expenses, $97; clothes and the necessary things for food, $226. You can see that I am in debt $93 for last year's preaching. All of my time was spent in Alabama. We need about one thousand rich preachers to move to Alabama and teach the brethren to support the gospel and encourage the young men to prepare for the great work of the Master. Brethren, how long do you think men can stay in the field at the above figure? Let us all sacrifice more, live better, and preach more than we did last year."

From Andrew Perry, Dugger, Ind., January 5: "I left home to help again in our Master's great harvest field on Thursday of last week. My first stop of two nights was at Covington, Ind. I was with Brother E. C. Love in the fine meeting he has been holding at that place. Brother Love preached two fine sermons. There were six baptisms during the meeting. I came on Saturday to Fairview (Clinton post office) and remained till Tuesday. Brother Watson, of Cookeville, Tenn., was there in a meeting. I listened to three good sermons from him also. We had an enjoyable meeting for worship on Lord's day. I am now going to visit and preach for several near-by congregations. I have not planned my spring and summer meetings yet; so, brethren, at any point where you may need my services, write your needs and let us arrange the work. Address me at Box 116, Route 4, Watseka, Ill."

From John Hayes, Box 111, Bradentown, Fla., January 5: "In response to the appeal in the Gospel Advocate of December 15 asking the brethren to help me buy a horse and buggy, I have received sixty-seven dollars and forty cents. I have written to each one, thanking them for this help. I have received from personal letters written by me one hundred dollars. I still need over one hundred more to get the horse and buggy. I trust that others will respond to this appeal, for we want to move by the last of March, that I may plant some corn and garden truck. It is my purpose to build up the cause of Christ in the country around and hold meetings through the summer months. With a good horse and buggy, I can support my family and reach many destitute places. I am at this writing painting a house here, then I will go to a mission meeting. Will others respond right away? We hope and pray they will."

From W. C. Hall, Nashville, Tenn., January 4: "The church at Hartsville, Tenn., is doing splendidly. It has just closed a very prosperous year in good fellowship and Bible knowledge. Every Thursday night a very interesting lesson from the lives of some of the great characters of the Bible is taught. This is taken up biographically by some of the competent leaders, while the class, having studied the assignment carefully before trying to recite, give in detail the facts connected with the character they are studying. From these facts lessons of faith, honesty, righteous living, and our duty to God in general are taught successfully. Mrs. Joyner, the oldest member of the congregation, is now confined to her bed. Her faithfulness in church life is an inspiration to all who know her. I began another year's work with them last Sunday. The report of the attendance and work of the Bible-study classes on Sunday made a very favorable increase over former years. There is no schism and faction in the church. All seem devoted and loving one toward another."

An Appeal from Coble, Tenn.—I wish to say to my brethren, especially those who know me, that for more than twenty years I have labored under much embarrassment on account of a nervous breakdown. I have been trying to keep up my regular work of farming and preaching under much exhaustion. I am now unable to work, preach, or study to amount to anything. Brethren, I do not want to live without being about my Father's business, and my only chance is to be relieved from this dread disease. I want to go to Nashville and take treatment, but have not the money. I have a flour mill that I have been trying to sell to meet this expense, but have failed so far. Now, if I can find a brother or congregation that will furnish me the money until I can sell this mill or raise the money otherwise, I will replace the money at the earliest convenience. Now, brethren, in this condition life is not only a great burden, but a failure; it is almost profitless. Remember, I am not asking any one to give me a penny, notwithstanding I am a very poor man, but I want to bear my own burden. I would give what little of this world's goods I have to just be myself again. Any favor conferred will be highly appreciated.—W. A. Sisco.

From James E. Scobey, Nashville, Tenn., January 3: "During the past year I have preached every Sunday. I visited and preached for twenty-one congregations whom I had served when a much younger man. My efforts were not specially what may be called evangelistic, but rather that of teaching the assemblies of the saints the duties and responsibilities of Christians, to make them strong in the Lord, and the power of his might, that they may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil. I hope to have done some good in that direction. I began the new year by preaching at Charlotte Avenue Church on Sunday evening. There was a good-sized and quite an attentive audience present. Any ordinary church house would have been full; but in an auditorium fifty by eighty feet, as this house has, it was, perhaps, not more than one-third full. I enjoyed my visit there very much, and would be pleased to be with them again sometime when desirable on their part and when it suits our convenience. It is my purpose, health and strength remaining and the Lord willing, to visit these congregations the coming spring and summer. I shall preach next Sunday at Fairview, on the Hillsboro road. May peace, plenty, and prosperity be with the brethren. May they be able to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace."

Editorial

Rightly Dividing the Truth.

BY J. C. M'Q.

Having learned the conditions of pardon from Acts of Apostles, the alien sinner bows in humble submission to God's will and is baptized into Christ, arising out of the waters of baptism to walk in newness of life. But it is not enough to enlist as a Christian, but it behooves the newborn babe in Christ to live the life of a Christian. The babe that goes to sleep on the border line will never sing hymns of everlasting praises in the heavenly home. It is now in order to inquire, what must the Christian do to inherit eternal life? In the apostolic Epistles we may learn how the apostles carried out the second chapter of their commission—"teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I commanded you." As we should consult Acts of Apostles to learn how Christians are made, so we should consult the Epistles to learn what Christians must do to live the Christian life. The fundamental design of the Epistles is to furnish and equip the disciples for the Christian life, yet in them are many references to other matters from which we may learn many good and profitable lessons.

The book of Romans, containing sixteen chapters, is placed in the New Testament just after Acts of Apostles. This book is addressed to Christians just as if God had reached down his hand from his eternal throne and said: "Come, my dear children, I will take you by the hand and guide you over life's stormy sea into the port of eternal glory." The book of Romans abounds in teaching and admonition to Christians. It warns them against the folly of seeking to be justified by the law of Moses. It is full of exhortation and many comforting promises. "And we know that to them that love God all things work together for good, even to them that are called according to his purpose." (Rom. 8: 28.) The two books addressed to the church at Corinth are also full of teaching for Christians. They warn against the sin of division and worldliness in the church. The book of Galatians shows that the object of the law of Moses was to lead us to Christ in order that we may be justified by faith. The law of Moses contains no justification for Christians. This book enumerates the works of the flesh and of the Spirit. "Now the works of the flesh are manifest, which are these: fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness, idolatry, sorcery, enmities, strife, jealousies, wraths, factions, divisions, parties, envyings, drunkenness, revelings, and such like; of which I forewarn you, even as I did forewarn you, that they who practice such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God. But the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, meekness, self-control; against such there is no law." Next we find Ephesians, Philippians, Colossians, and First and Second Thessalonians. These books all abound in exhortation, encouragement, and promises for Christians. In Colossians we learn that "the bond written in ordinances that was against us, which was contrary to us," has been blotted out. In the Philippian letter, which is a model of choice literature and which is so full of comfort to every child of God, we read this: "Brethren, I count not myself yet to have laid hold: but one thing I do, forgetting the things which are behind, and stretching forward to the things which are before. I press on toward the goal unto the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus." (Phil. 3: 13, 14.) Then we turn over to the two books written by Paul to Timothy, the one to Titus, and the one to Philemon, all teaching these young preachers of the gospel how they should behave themselves in the house of God. The book of Hebrews is next in order. This book is a long and argumentative letter to the Hebrews warning them against rejecting Christ and turning back to the law of Moses. Christ is the last sacrifice for sin. There will be made no other offering for sin. Then we may read the book of James, written to the twelve tribes which are of the Dispersion. This encourages us to fidelity. The man who continues in well-doing shall be blessed. It also teaches that by works a man is justified, and not only by faith. The book is full of wholesome teaching calculated to inspire the Christian to a nobler life. Next we may read the two books of Peter, the three of John, and the one of Jude; and when the last mentioned is finished, we will have read the twenty-one Epistles, containing one hundred and twenty-one chapters. Fourteen of the Epistles were written by Paul and contain one hundred chapters. In these books we have found food for the soul in every condition of life in almost all conceivable circumstances. Indeed, we may say in the language of Paul: "Every scripture inspired of God is also profitable for teaching, for reproof, for correction, for instruction which is in righteousness: that the man of God may be complete, furnished completely unto every good work." (2 Tim. 3: 16, 17.)

The Bible is the Book. It illuminates eternity past and eternity future. It teaches me whence I came, what I am, and whither I go. Its precious promises and its fearful warnings should bring out the best that is in man. The Bible, used as God intends we shall use it, will fit us for usefulness in this life and life eternal in the world to come. How strange that we neglect it and use it as though it were a book thrown together without a purpose! Such conduct is an insult to God. What folly to read the Bible without intelligence and at random! "Give diligence to present thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, handling aright the word of truth." (2 Tim. 2: 15.) Is a man an unbeliever? Advise him to read the gospel. Is he a believer wanting to know what to do to be saved? Acts of Apostles is the book for him to study. Then those who are already Christians should read the Epistles.

THE APOCALYPSE.

This book very appropriately closes the New Testament canon. It expresses itself almost wholly in symbolic visions, and few, if any, can be relied on as safe interpreters of its visions and symbolism. It is the only strictly prophetic book of the New Testament, and its prophecy, too, is of a peculiar character. It contains some very practical teaching to the seven churches of Asia. It is the most explained book of the New Testament and least understood by the critics and commentators. Some of its prophecies have been fulfilled and some are yet unfulfilled. The name of this book means revelation, disclosure, discovery, and this is its peculiar feature. It reveals a glorious future for the church after the time of battle and trial. It reveals to us the grandeur of the heavenly home. How sweet to be at home after the heartaches, misunderstandings, and battles of life are over!

Making Public Thrusts at Brethren.

BY M. C. K.

Brother Flavil Hall, of Trion, Ga., sends the following communication for publication in the Gospel Advocate, which I gladly lay before our readers:

WAS IT A LACK OF COURAGE?

BY FLAVIL HALL.

Commenting on a statement from me in the Gospel Advocate of December 15, Brother M. C. Kurfees says: "It is not the first time this brother has made a thrust at me without having the courage to give my name."

Sometime ago Brother Kurfees criticized some brethren severely, not giving any one's name. He was urged to give their names, but he would not. Did he lack courage? David Lipscomb replied to R. H. Boll's views on prophecy without giving the latter's name. Did Brother Lipscomb lack courage?

Brother Kurfees says he is willing to help me circulate anything I may have to say in so far as he is made the target. I do not want to make him a target. I have the deepest respect for his superior ability, his stainless character, and his age. But if he holds the position that Christians may give time and talent to the interests of civil government and that they may bear the sword and have a part in the spread of death and desolation, when called on by the civil rulers to do so, then I am ready to make his position a target, and shall not lack the courage to exchange articles with him on this subject, with the view of getting them published in the Gospel Advocate, or in booklet form.

I looked as carefully as I could in the little time I had to see what was treated and what was not treated in "Queries and Answers," by Lipscomb and Sewell, collated by M. C. Kurfees; and not finding the Christian's relation to war and government (with which the writings of David Lipscomb were featured), I wrote as I felt—that it should not have been passed over; but because of kindly feelings toward the editor and publisher of the book, and in consideration of the wishes of the publisher of the Leader, I used no names. Surely Brother Kurfees should have corrected my mistake simply by quoting from the book or citing the pages on which the subject was treated, instead of writing more than seven hundred words to convict me of lacking in courage and brotherly love and of not being careful to tell the truth.

I hastened to make correction in the Leader when I learned of my mistake, and every one who knows me would have known that this is what I would do. I am not immune from overlooking things when searching for them, and so may make such a mistake again, though this is the first time, so far as I can remember. I am glad I was mistaken, but sorry I was not corrected without an effort to reflect upon my courage and integrity. But I have no bitter feelings to express.

Notwithstanding his charge against me, I here assure Brother Hall that I have none but brotherly feelings for him, and concerning the episode, I think it proper now to say:

1. I never objected to being "criticized" even "severely" by Brother Hall or by any one else, without my name being given. There is no impropriety in this. But I did object to making underhand thrusts at brethren before the public or anywhere else without giving their names. Making thrusts such as in this case, either with or without giving names, is the primary wrong.

2. He "looked as carefully as" he "could in the little time" he "had to see what was treated and what was not treated." Then, as he only spent a "little time" looking over the book and could not, by his own acknowledgment, know whether certain things were or were not in it, he should have taken a "little time" to make inquiry of the editor of the book instead of rushing before the public with an ugly charge against the editor.

3. In making that thrust at me, he says he omitted my name "because of kindly feelings toward" me "and in consideration of the wishes of the publisher of the Leader." I do not question Brother Hall's honesty nor his motive in making that statement, but I hope he will yet come to see that it is hardly consistent to claim to be governed by "kindly feelings toward" a brother and at the same time charge him with dishonorable conduct either with or without giving his name when he does not know that the charge is true. "Kindly feelings" do not operate that way. And with all due respect for him and for "the wishes of the publisher of the Leader," I should be glad, so far as I am concerned, for both of them to have "kindly feelings" in at least sufficient degree to find out whether charges of such conduct are true before rushing to the public with them.

4. He says: "Surely Brother Kurfees should have corrected my mistake simply by quoting from the book or citing the pages on which the subject was treated." And "surely" this is exactly what "Brother Kurfees would have done if Brother Hall had given him an opportunity to do it instead of rushing before the public with it. He seems to think it all right for him to impale a brother before the public with an ugly charge which he cannot know is true when he makes it, but which, if not true and is yet believed, will be detrimental to the brother, but all wrong for the brother to go before the public with the facts showing that it is not true, and therefore that such a charge, under such circumstances, is reprehensible. And he is "sorry" that he "was not corrected without an effort to reflect upon" his "courage and integrity." But I think he should rather be "sorry" that he rushed before the public with a detrimental charge before he knew whether it was true or not, which would not only "reflect upon my courage and integrity," but upon my honor as an author, showing, if the charge be true, that I am unfit to be assigned to the task of collating the writings of David Lipscomb or those of anybody else.

5. Finally, I received from Brother Hall a private communication substantially the same as this one, to which I sent a private reply. As it contains an answer to his challenge for a debate and covers the remaining points of his present article, I here reproduce it, although I had no thought of publishing it when it was written, and this must close the incident so far as the Gospel Advocate is concerned:

Louisville, Ky., December 27, 1921.—Mr. Flavil Hall, Trion, Ga.—Dear Brother Hall: With numerous and various tasks pressing upon me for attention, I would merely acknowledge the receipt of your letter of December 17, respectfully declining to reply to it at all were it not that it plainly seems to be my serious duty to reply. Hence, "in the sight of God and of Christ Jesus," and fully and solemnly aware of my accountability to them, I shall try to deal properly with the situation brought about by your public thrust at me and your private letter, and wish, therefore, to say:

1. I deeply regret that you did not promptly and generously seize the opportunity to do the one and only honorable thing which every Christian in such a case should do and which you would surely have done if you had properly appreciated the situation. It may help you to such an appreciation to see the following statements from letters sent me by influential preachers who read your thrust and my comments in the Gospel Advocate of December 15, 1921:

"I am certainly glad to read your rebuke of Hall, and I trust he has learned a lesson from it that will do him good."

"I have read with pleasure your reply to Brother Hall and think you went after him right. It seems he used rather poor judgment in writing such an article."

"On page 707, 'Queries and Answers by Lipscomb and Sewell,' in answer to a question on 'Voting,' there are incidental allusions to, or contrasts between, the kingdom of God and the world sufficiently clear and strong to convince even Brother Hall that you are not guilty of that grave charge of 'not giving a word' of Brother Lipscomb's position on civil governments. I certainly think Brother Hall, if he is the man I have all the time thought him to be, will come down with that 'honest confession which is good for the soul.'"

The following is the substance of what I said to all of them in reply:

"In view of the plain and significant facts in the case, I, too, hoped that Brother Hall would make the confession and apology of which you speak, but so far he has not done so. In the Leader this week he says he has been 'informed privately' that 'Rom. 13: 1-4' and 'the Christian's relation to war and government are embodied in the book,' but he makes no confession of wrong in, or apology for, making a false charge against me. Christians are frequently slow to make such amends, but it is discouraging to see preachers exhibit this fault."

2. You had a fine opportunity, my dear brother, to show yourself magnanimous by simply making the amende honorable, which could easily have been done in two or three lines and which would cordially and gladly have been accepted by me with everything made right; but instead of that, you make a seven-page threefold effort to defend yourself, to convict me of wrong in charging you with a lack of courage in making underhand thrusts at brethren and withholding their names, and in an amusing challenge to debate the war question with you.

3. Your comparisons submitted as proof are as pitiable as they are groundless in the extreme. "David Lipscomb replied to Robert H. Boll's writings on prophecy without using his name. Was it because of a lack of courage?" No, and the same concise and unqualified answer applies to your question about me. It was not only entirely proper in Lipscomb, and is in myself, you or anybody else, sometimes to criticize the position of brethren without giving their names, but I have never said nor done anything that even remotely implies anything to the contrary; but the brave and magnanimous Lipscomb, as is true of myself and all other right-thinking persons, would have been far from making an underhand thrust at Robert H. Boll or anybody else without giving his name. The two things are the width of the heavens apart.

4. By your own acknowledgment you not only had given "but little time to read 'Queries and Answers,' by Lipscomb and Sewell," but without the common courtesy and brotherly consideration of a single word of inquiry to me, you rush before the public with the charge that I "suppressed" the writings of David Lipscomb on war, and you make it with the ugly insinuation that I did it to prevent the circulation of his writings on that subject. The charge, my dear brother, is not only positively and unqualifiedly false in toto, but it shows that you make such ugly charges against brethren when you cannot possibly know that they are true; and when you tell me that, in making such an underhand thrust at me, you omitted my name "from a feeling of respect and brotherly regard" for me, you must excuse me, my dear brother, for believing that you are either deceived in yourself at this point or you do not know what "respect and brotherly regard" are, one or the other.

5. There is no "bitterness" in my words, and I was not conscious of any in my heart when I wrote them, nor am I conscious of any such condition now; but, in harmony with plain New Testament teaching, they did contain and were meant to contain the rebuke which such a rash and unbrotherly act merits. To me such a duty is by no means pleasant, but I assure you, my brother, that it was discharged with only the conscious aim to obey God and to accomplish good. I devoutly trust that, upon reflection, you will yet be sufficiently magnanimous to view it in this light and to act accordingly.

6. Finally, as to your challenge, even if such a debate were necessary or if I had the time for it, neither of which is the case, it would still be time enough to talk about it when you show where I have ever said "Christians at the call of the government could slay their fellow man." When you and a few others get your eyes opened to the strange readiness and rashness with which you jump at ugly conclusions unwarranted by the premises and even proclaim and circulate them about some of your brethren, of the correctness of which conclusions you could not possibly know without consulting such brethren themselves, which, so far as I am concerned, you have carefully avoided doing, it is to be hoped the lesson will profit you.

With assurances of brotherly love and the earnest prayer that God may bless you "in every good work and word," I remain,

Yours most fraternally,

[Signed] M. C. KURFEES.

The Situation in Which the Society Brethren Find Themselves. No. 3.

BY F. W. SMITH.

Brother Collis comments on Professor Brown as follows:

No longer, according to Professor Brown, are we "to speak where the Scriptures speak and to be silent where the Scriptures are silent," but we are "to speak where the present generation speaks, and where the present generation is silent, we are to be silent." The above quotations show the convictions of Professor Brown, and suggest the question:

Is it the desire of our United Society that the training of our missionaries should be committed to those who have abandoned our plea for the restoration of New Testament Christianity and the great principle that has guided us for more than a century: "Where the Scriptures speak, we speak; and where the Scriptures are silent, we are silent?"

A paragraph which appeared in the Christian Century of September 8 throws light on the influences that have, in the past, surrounded our missionaries in training. It reads:

"Dr. Clarence E. Reidenbach, who, for several years has been pastor of Downey Avenue Christian Church of Indianapolis, has accepted a call to Westminster Congregational Church of Kansas City. . . . His position in Indianapolis was important, as he was pastor of the church adjacent to Butler College and the College of Missions. Secretaries and other Disciple leaders were in his congregation."

The paragraph further states that Dr. Reidenbach is a member of the Campbell Institute, and that during the past year he has been the editor of The Scroll, the organ of that institute. The editor of The Century, who is the most outspoken advocate of the new theology and of open membership among us, doubtless found pleasure in the publishing of this item of news, which tells us that a preacher for the church where secretaries and other "Disciple leaders" were members has such views that he could easily exchange one of our pulpits for a Congregational pulpit; that he was a member of the Campbell Institute, the organization that has carried on so persistently, and so insidiously, the propaganda of the new theology, and that he was the editor of The Scroll, the organ of this organization. Is it unreasonable to think that this kind of preacher was acceptable to the secretaries and "other Disciple leaders," and that this was the kind of preacher under whose influence they wished the missionaries, while in training, to be kept?

The United Society seems to be anxious about the atmosphere surrounding our College of Missions, and the opportunities afforded its students; and, for that reason, the Society has been contemplating the removal of the college to some seat of higher learning. This removal is of the utmost importance to every one of us who is concerned about our missionary interests. Locate the college where the students will breathe an atmosphere of faith, where they will receive instruction from godly men who accept the deity of Christ and regard the Scriptures as an infallible guide, and we shall send forth men and women into the dark places of the earth who will not dim that light which God has sent to lighten every man that cometh into the world. We have not been told to what university or divinity school our college is to be taken. Rumor says Yale. Yale is one of the most radical schools in the land. The fact that Prof. Charles R. Brown, the dean of the Yale Divinity School, delivered two addresses at Winona seemed to indicate that Yale is looked upon with favor. The pleasing personality of the dean and his inspiring addresses would make friends for Yale. Was that the reason for giving such a prominent place to Professor Brown on the program of our National Convention? It will be an evil day for our cause in the foreign field when the finishing touches are put upon our missionaries at Yale or at any school like it where rationalism is dominant.

Much that had taken place in the nine months following the St. Louis Convention, to some of which I have referred in this paper, seemed to indicate the spirit of the United Society, and its report at the Winona Convention was looked forward to with deep concern. This report stated that the resolution adopted by the Convention in St. Louis, October 20, 1920, had been presented to the Jamaica Mission and to the China Mission, and that the Jamaica missionaries gladly avowed their loyal support of the same. But the report further brought out the fact that the China missionaries were not ready to abide by the resolution and requested the brethren to think further about these questions before making the resolution permanent and binding in the full breadth of its statement regarding the missionaries and their work in China. In other words, the brethren were to think further before forbidding the surrender of our churches to the control of some district organization, and forbidding the practice of open membership in our churches when the time shall, in the opinion of the missionaries, demand it.

From the foregoing it is easy to see the deplorable condition of things among those who have organized institutions unknown to the word of God for the propagation of Christianity and to which so many churches have been committed. The entanglement is of such a nature as to admit of but one solution—viz., a complete repudiation of the whole thing and a return to the New Testament way of doing mission work. We have an inspired record as to how it was done by the first missionaries, and why not conform to that?

Commending the Quarterlies.

"The new Quarterlies are fine and ought to be used extensively." (M. C. Cayce, Jackson, Miss.)

"I am well pleased with the Intermediate and Primary Quarterlies. They will prove very helpful to Bible students." (James H. Aiken, Brownsville, Tenn.)

"I received the Quarterlies and have given them a brief examination. I can safely say they are good. If they are judiciously used and not abused, they will be of much benefit to those who use them. We have confidence in the ability and integrity of the men who prepare the comments." (D. T. Broadus, Wichita, Kan.)

"I am glad to note the many improvements made in the Quarterlies. Fewer words and to the point evidently was the aim of the authors. I consider them by far the best helps I have seen for class use. They are most excellent, and I wish to commend them to the brethren. Both the authors and the publishers are to be congratulated." (Samuel I. Jones, formerly professor in David Lipscomb College, Nashville, Tenn.)

"After a careful examination of the Advanced, Intermediate, and Primary Quarterlies, I can heartily commend them to all, as they are fully up to the high standard of excellence that has always commanded the very highest esteem of all thoughtful students of the holy Scriptures, which your literature had attained under the editorship of our beloved Brother Elam. Brother Smith's notes on the Golden Text are especially to be commended." (John H. Arms, Hermitage Springs, Tenn.)

"I received the Quarterlies you sent me, and will say that they appeal to me as being thorough, yet plain and simplified to the extent that they convey to the pupil a great store of information and Bible teaching on the subjects treated, with but reasonable study on his part. I also believe that the manner in which they conform to the teaching of the Bible is but a demonstration of that faithful and loyal spirit to stick by the word of God which has characterized the church of Christ, with its faithful leaders, since Campbell. There is a striking contrast between these Quarterlies and those of David Cook which are used by the Sunday school here. I fail, however, to find any great difference between the ones you sent me and those formerly published by you, which I understand were gotten up by Brother Elam." (C. G. Caldwell, Blue Diamond, Ky.)

Good Results.

We are glad to state to our readers that the new subscribers and renewals to the Gospel Advocate are coming in rapidly at the present time. Our friends are at work, and many of them are sending in a number of subscribers. A number have worked to get to send us twenty-five new subscriptions so as to get the Matthew Henry Commentary. If any one has a number of subscriptions on this commentary who is not able to complete the list, I suggest that they confer with us. We will do our best to help them out in any possible way. The Fountain Pen that we are giving for each new subscription at $2 and $1 additional is not a regular premium pen, but it is a first-class fountain pen that would sell at $2.50 or $3 in the store. Those who get this Pen are delighted with it. If you can send us two new subscribers, we will be glad to give you the Fountain Pen outright. We wish to suggest to our workers that they keep up the campaign and let us add many thousand new subscribers to the paper. It can be done if our readers will only cooperate fully with us. I am anxious to see the list of subscribers to the Gospel Advocate double before retiring from the active management of the paper.

We are still receiving contributions for the Sinking Fund. Recently a brother gave us $250 for this fund, which will be devoted to sending the paper to those who are not able to pay for it. Every cent of it shall go in this way, as this was the wish of the donor. Others, among whom are Sister Margaret Lipscomb, the widow of David Lipscomb, and Brother J. W. Grant, are making contributions for this fund. There are so many people who really want to read the paper and have not the means to pay for it. You can do a good work in contributing to this fund.

MATTHEW HENRY'S COMMENTARY FOR OUR READERS

The greatest preachers of the past two centuries attribute much of their inspiration and usefulness to Matthew Henry's Commentary on the whole Bible. Born in the seventeenth century, his name and his work still live and are household words. Thousands of homes treasure this commentary second only to the Bible, and many a man traces his right start to the loving advice and homely counsel of Matthew Henry.

Charles H. Spurgeon said: "Every minister ought to read Matthew Henry entirely and carefully through once at least. He will acquire a vast store of sermons; and as for thoughts, they will swarm around him like twittering sparrows around an old gable toward the close of autumn." Dr. Philip Schaff, compiler of Schaff's Bible Dictionary, pronounces it "the best practical and devotional commentary for English readers." Here you will find a mine of expository knowledge and a complete preachers' commentary.

The management of the Gospel Advocate is fortunate in securing twenty-five sets of this unrivaled commentary, which will be sent as a premium to every reader who will send twenty-five new subscribers at the regular subscription price of $2 per year. This is undoubtedly the most attractive commentary offer ever made. You will receive six portable volumes of twelve hundred pages each, large, clear, unbroken type, with substantial Roxborough binding, and will have the satisfaction of knowing that the work of the prince of commentators is in your library. If you wish to pay cash, the price for the six volumes is $17.50, not prepaid. When sent as a premium, we pay all charges.

When My Dad Was a Boy.

Wonder why I don't have fun
Like my pa sez he had
W'en he wuz some one else's son
An' got spanked by his dad?
Pa sez it use to snow so deep
The house wuz all hid
Jest in the night when he's asleep—
When my dad was a kid.

An' nex' day he'd climb out the roof
Wif snow so high about,
They made big fires—an' that's the troof—
To melt my grandma out;
An' nen, he sez, he tuk his sleigh
Up top a hill, an' slid,
An' slid, an' never stopped all day—
When my dad was a kid.

An' nen pa made a big snow man,
More'n seventy feet high,
Wif reg'lar stairs inside wot ran
Most clean up to the sky.
O, golly! wouldn't I jes' shout
To have fun like pa did!
I guess it snowed the snow all out
When my dad was a kid. —Selected.

Rosamond Sees Herself.

"Ain't she a sight?" giggled Rosamond Lyon, nudging Dolly Paterick, who sat beside her on the street car.

"Sh-h," cautioned kind little Dolly. "I'm afraid she heard you, Rose."

Rosamond wiggled her plump shoulders. "Don't do you any harm to know how you look to other folks," she said. "If she knew how she looks, she'd pull that hat further down on her head and not look such a guy."

Old Miss Belinda Maybrick's face flushed painfully. She had heard the thoughtless speech. Presently she put up her thin, wrinkled hand and gave a stealthy jerk to the shabby hat which was perched so unfashionably on her scant topknot of hair.

"Washington Street!" called the conductor, and the two little girls jumped up to join the crowd getting off. They were bound for a store to buy color boxes, but just this side there was an electric supply shop with windows full of lamps and irons and newfangled toasters.

"O, look at that cute little electric iron!" cried Dolly, catching Rosamond's arm. "Stop just a minute!"

An odd sound made her look around. Rosamond was staring wide-eyed at her reflection in the mirror which formed the back of the show window.

"Dolly!" she gasped. "How awful I look! Am I as fat and dumpy as that?" Dolly, a slender wisp of a child, gazed in her turn, feeling a secret thrill of satisfaction at her own unusually robust look. But Rosamond did indeed present a queer, unattractive appearance. Her face looked as broad as it was long, her neck seemed ridiculously short, and her waist as thick as a meal bag tied in the middle.

She ran desperately over to the other window. How clumsy her feet looked!

"O, dear!" she wailed. "I didn't know I looked like that!"

"I thought you said it didn't matter how we looked to other people," Dolly reminded her, suddenly remembering Miss Belinda's face. "You said it did people good to know—"

Rosamond's eyes filled with tears. "I didn't know how it felt," she said. "I know I'm fat, but I didn't know—"

A step backward and her angle of vision was altered, and with a glad scream she seized Dolly. "O, Dolly! It's a curved glass—don't you see? I'm gettin' squarer an' squarer the farther away I get. O, I don't look that way to other people, after all!"

With intense amusement the children stood and watched others come within the line of the convex mirrors and pass out again, and as they went on at last Rosamond said soberly: "Catch me ever laughing at people's looks any more, Dolly. I don't want them to feel like I did when I saw myself just now!"—Janet Allan Bryan, in Junior Life.

A Hero of Ireland.

"Spud" Murphy, a corporal, of Fall River, Mass., saw half a dozen forms stealing through the darkness toward his listening post "over there" one night. He warned his two companions. Stealthily they crept forward thirty yards and opened fire on a German raiding party, which scattered immediately. Then a grenade came and knocked Murphy unconscious.

Fortunately, it was dark, or Murphy would have been left, for the section west of Montdidier was too active to expose soldiers by removing wounded in daylight.

Murphy arrived, still unconscious, at a field hospital, several miles behind the lines, a few hours after he was wounded. His head, except the tip of his nose and mouth, was swathed in bandages, and others were wrapped around his chest and ribs. The wound tag said that his left eye was gone, a fragment of the grenade as large as a thumb was in the back of his neck, and his lungs were punctured.

"Put him into bed," said the receiving surgeon. "Apply hot-water bottles. Can't operate now, but we may save him."

Several hours later the major commanding the hospital entered the ward and was surprised to hear the mummified Murphy speak. The corporal was puzzled to find himself in bed surrounded by other wounded men. The voice coming from the bandaged head asked: "What is your name, buddy? I'm 'Spud' Murphy. Didn't I know you in the Philippines?" The same question was put to each wounded comrade near by.

"How are you feeling, corporal?" asked the major, approaching the bed.

"Fine and dandy," replied Murphy. "Gimme a cigarette."

"Better get a few hours' sleep now," advised the major.

The next morning the corporal was operated on. Pieces of iron were taken from almost all parts of his body. The blood was pumped out of his lungs. The hole in his chest was plugged and patched up. When he recovered from the effects of the ether, an orderly put a cigarette in his mouth. The corporal stretched on his bed, watched the smoke through one blackened eye, and said: "This is the life, ain't it, buddy?"

The surgeon smiled crookedly, and "Spud" Murphy squinted at him with his one good eye.

"I know what you're thinking," he said, the cigarette dangling from his lower lip. "You're saying to yourself: 'This guy's done in almost—no more Hun huntin' for him—the lucky stiff.' But that's where you're way off, doc. I'm goin' to fool you—for I'm Irish."

"I wouldn't have believed it," replied the "doc," with a real smile.—Ladies' Home Journal.

Is God's presence a practical power in our lives? Does it ever try a fall with some strong sin and come off conqueror? Is it a principle of life for us? Does it come into our calculations and rule our estimate of things? Does it rise within us ever like a fountain of fresh force when we find ourselves near one in need of help? Does it sometimes surprise us with its suddenness of assistance, its strange opportunity of aid? Does it fill our future for us? Is life for us a growing experience of getting to know God?—R. W. Letter from Lakeland, Fla.

The following letter from Brother J. W. Grant will be read with interest by the readers of the Gospel Advocate:

Lakeland, Fla., December 29, 1921.—Dear Brother McQuiddy: I am now located here, to serve the band who through Brother R. D. Cherry requested you to recommend and help to get a preacher for them. Brother A. B. Lipscomb indorsed me as suitable, and sent the request and indorsement to me. I then came here to look over the situation and prospects. I was so well pleased with the town and prospects, and the brethren were so well pleased with me, that we soon made an agreement that I would locate here permanently and they would employ all my time; and I am now so located. We have no meetinghouse, and it is difficult for us to secure and keep a suitable place to meet in; but there is a deal of zeal and earnestness among the members, and we will make some arrangements to have regular services, with preaching in the city at least every Lord's day and night and other services in the week as may be demanded. We have had two cottage meetings this week, resulting in one confession and baptism. The preaching at these two meetings, as well as at two last Lord's day and night, was done by Brother Aruna Clark, of Chattanooga, Tenn., who is here with his wife and her sister for a few days. The two sisters will stay the rest of the winter, but Brother Clark expects to leave for his home in Chattanooga right soon, possibly to-day. I arrived with my family last Monday and will take up the work immediately. We will have another cottage meeting to-night.

Lakeland is a beautiful little city of ten thousand population, having nine beautiful lakes within and partly within its borders. Three of these, and possibly more, are completely belted by very fine asphalt boulevards, and there are fine asphalt roads out of the town in almost all directions. It is also quite a railroad center, and at the junction of the A. C. L. roads from Fort Myers and Tampa to Jacksonville; while the great brick and asphalt road from Jacksonville to Tampa, one of the finest roads in the world of its length, passes through here.

Brethren and sisters from farther north wishing to spend the season in Florida, and to be where they can worship with a wide-awake loyal church, could not do better, I think, than to come here. I live at 607 North Kentucky Avenue, which is my mailing address. My telephone is No. 649, blue.

Jesus in the Temple.

"How is it that ye sought me? Know ye not that I must be in my Father's house?" (Luke 2: 49.)

These eighteen words are the only authentic words on record that were spoken by Jesus during his childhood. They were addressed to his mother who had rebuked him right there in the temple before the seminary professors, and for conduct in which there was no fault.

The two questions in this scripture shows us how needless had been her worry about him. His first seven words show surprise that she had not first looked for him where she looked last. They indicate that he had not departed from the temple. They disclose the picture of a friendless lad in a large city. In how many American cities could Jesus spend three days, three whole days, at a single visit to the individual churches?

Is it impossible that we preachers are presenting to our congregations so little of Jesus that they tire of the services in a single hour? Can it be that they weary of the companionship of Christ in so short a time, when we present him in our sermons?

His second question contains a manifold must. He must be there because he had arrived at the age so meaningful to Jewish boys brought up in accordance with Jewish religion. He must be there because he loved the place too well to go anywhere else when his time in Jerusalem was so short. He must be there because it was his Father's house. He must be there because his Father had come there to meet him, and desired him to stay.

His earthly mission was the trans-action of his Father's business, and to the seminary professors in the temple was committed the teaching of divine business methods until he should come to show them the New Covenant. He must be there to show that those who lose him may always find him by returning to the place where they lost him.—R. H. Dudley.

The Old Year and the New.

BY WILL W. SLATER.

The year 1921, with all its joys, pleasures, mistakes, pain, disappointments, heartaches, and successes, is nearing its close. It has been a very busy year for me. I have made many mistakes, some serious ones, but I really think that my mistakes have been fewer, that I am on "higher ground" than I was at the close of last year. However, I feel my weakness, unworthiness, and inability, and need the prayers and assistance of God's people everywhere, and more than ever I realize my dependence upon Him who "doeth all things well." The Lord has been good to me, and I have had more work than I could do, more calls than I could fill. I worked with the Park Hill Church at Fort Smith, Ark., until July 1. However, I was granted permission by this church to do some outside work in the spring, and through their kindness I was permitted to hold meetings at Lamar, Okla.; Bates, Ark.; and Sedalia, Mo. I also taught a singing school at Atkins, Ark., and one at Obion, Tenn. I began my summer campaign July 1, and held meetings as follows: Grant, Okla.; Atkins, Ark.; Spaulding, Tipton, and Weatherford, Okla.; England, Ark., Route 3; Beaumont, Texas; Harveyville, Kan.; Grove Spring, Mo.; and Braman, Okla. At this writing I am engaged in a seventeen-days' singing normal with the Blakemore Church, Route 2, England, Ark. I have to borrow six days of the new year in which to finish up this work. The brethren have been good to me in every way and have given me a good support. I have done my very best, and have accomplished some good, I think. I have baptized seventy-eight souls into Christ, conducted several funerals, and performed six marriage ceremonies. I have been accused of being "unsound" and a "digressive" by some, and "too sound" by others. I have also been accused of "preaching only for money." I have this proposition to make to the brethren: I will meet any man halfway in any missionary effort. If you are alone at some place and want a meeting, you pay half my expenses and pay me just half what would be considered a reasonable support, and I will hold a meeting for you anywhere at any time. I will also make the following proposition to any congregation: If you want to hold a mission meeting somewhere and will employ me to do the work, pay me what is called a good support, I will then let you select another place and I will hold the meeting free of all charges. Is it a fair proposition? Or will you still say that I preach only for the money? Brethren, let us do more missionary work. As a whole, the year has been a profitable and successful year for me. I thank God for his goodness, and am very thankful to my friends and brethren everywhere who have contributed to my feeble efforts and have made my work a success. I am weak and sometimes "fall by the way," am "only a sinner saved by grace;" but, by the help of God, I shall keep going on and on unto a "perfect day." I have made some enemies along life's pathway, and some of them I have hated with all the power of my soul; but I thank God that, through his great love and goodness, I have been able to crush that spirit of hatred out of my heart and can truly say that I envy no man, hate no one, but love and pity all my enemies, and pray for them every day. I love and appreciate my preaching brethren and would do anything in my power for them, and God knows that I do not envy them. With the Lord's help, I expect to do greater and better work next year than I have ever done before.

I will close my singing school on January 6 and leave for Beaumont, Texas, to begin work with the South Park Church on Sunday, January 8, the Lord willing, and shall be there for six months. I expect to enter the evangelistic field again the first of July. Part of my time has already been engaged. Brethren may write me at 393 Essex Street, Beaumont, Texas.

Sandy.

On the morning of December 12, 1921, the death angel kissed the eyelids down of the beloved Brother W. S. Sandy, of Pearl, Miss. He was in his fifty-seventh year, and, after eight weeks' confinement, died from cancer of the stomach. Brother Sandy was a forcible preacher of the truth, and by his able teaching many were caused to obey the gospel. He leaves a host of friends and loved ones, and all who knew him loved him. His body was laid to rest at Sherman, Miss.

J. R. VAUGHAN.

Smith.

Johnnie B. Smith was born in July, 1884, and departed this life on December 27, 1921. He was the son of Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Smith. He was a member of the Christian Church. He leaves his mother and father to mourn his departure, but he has gone from this world of sorrow to join the heavenly band where sorrow never comes. He died of typhoid fever, and bore his sickness quietly and humbly till death relieved him. Funeral services were conducted by J. E. Bollis, and his body was laid to rest in the family graveyard. A large number of friends and neighbors attended his funeral. We all mourn his loss, but we weep not as those who have no hope. May God bless his mother and father in their bereavement.

ABEL HALE.

Little.

The spirit of Mrs. Robert H. Little, Jr., née Arminie Creacy, bade farewell to its earthly abode shortly after midnight on November 19, 1921, at their home in Livingston, Tenn. She was born on March 29, 1889. In her girlhood she was baptized into Christ. She was married on November 10, 1912. She is survived by her husband and one daughter, her father, three sisters, and four brothers. She was a good woman. Funeral services were held at the church of Christ. The crowded house bore evidence of the high esteem in which she and her husband were held. From our viewpoint, hers was an unfinished life; but we have reasons to hope that it will be finished in heaven. Late Saturday afternoon the body was buried in Good Hope cemetery, near Livingston, there to await the resurrection at the last day.

E. GASTON COLLINS.

Watson.

J. F. Watson was born in Tennessee on July 16, 1847, and departed this life, at his home in Hope, N. M., on December 16, 1921. He was married to Martha Farrar on December 16, 1868. To this union were born ten children—eight boys and two girls. Four of the boys and one girl are still living, and all were present at the death of their father except the daughter, who lives in Tennessee. Funeral services were held by the writer in the church of Christ at Hope, and his body was laid to rest in the Woodvine Cemetery at Artesia, N. M. The high esteem in which Brother Watson was held as a citizen and a Christian was manifested by the large concourse of people who attended the funeral services. Brother Watson was baptized into Christ in the year 1883 and lived a consistent Christian life up to the day of his death. His wife and children mourn his loss, but do not sorrow as those who have no hope. I pray that God's grace, mercy, and love may ever be with and sustain the bereaved ones and their sympathizing friends.

A. J. COX.

Laird.

Sister Josephine Laird was born on June 10, 1859; was "born again" in 1902; and died on December 22, 1921. She leaves three girls and three boys to mourn her loss. Brother James E. Laird, her eldest son, has developed into a strong defender of "the faith," of whom she was very proud. Early in life she became a member of the Methodist Church, of which she remained a member until 1902, when she learned "the way of the Lord more perfectly." She at once accepted "the way" and walked therein until death called her away. Sister Laird was a meek, humble, patient character, and was greatly loved by all who knew her. The writer was called to Burrus Chapel, in Lake County, Tenn., to speak words of comfort to the bereaved family on December 23, where her body was laid beneath the sod to await the trumpet's call at the last day. "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints." I would say to her children: Mourn not for mother, but strive to live as she lived and "die the death of the righteous," so as to meet her where sad partings come not.

JOHN R. WILLIAMS.

Haskill.

After an illness of several months, Mrs. Bertha Haskill passed to her reward on Thursday evening, December 15, 1921, at a Springville hospital. Her husband was at her bedside and did all that loving hands could do. Gentle, patient, sweet, none knew her but to love her. She was born in Meaford, Ontario, Canada, on April 19, 1880, and had lived in California about two years. At an early age she was baptized into Christ, and hers was a rich, full life of a true Christian. She was united in marriage to Harry Haskill on October 22, 1902. Besides her husband, she leaves a father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. William Boyd, and three sisters and two brothers in Canada, and one brother in Detroit, Mich., to mourn her departure. After funeral services at the church of Christ in Tulare, conducted by Brother L. D. Perkins, of Armona, Cal., her body was laid to rest in the Tulare cemetery to await the resurrection. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them."

A Stubborn Cough Loosens Right Up

This home-made remedy is a wonder for quick results. Easily and cheaply made.

Here is a home-made syrup which millions of people have found to be the most dependable means of breaking up stubborn coughs. It is cheap and simple, but very prompt in action. Under its healing, soothing influence, chest soreness goes, phlegm loosens, breathing becomes easier, tickling in throat stops and you get a good night's restful sleep. The usual throat and chest colds are conquered by it in 24 hours or less. Nothing better for bronchitis, hoarseness, croup, throat tickle, bronchial asthma or winter coughs.

To make this splendid cough syrup, pour 2½ ounces of Pinex into a pint bottle and fill the bottle with plain granulated sugar syrup and shake thoroughly. If you prefer use clarified molasses, honey, or corn syrup, instead of sugar syrup. Either way, you get a full pint—a family supply—of much better cough syrup than you could buy ready-made for three times the money. Keeps perfectly and children love its pleasant taste.

Pinex is a special and highly concentrated compound of genuine Norway pine extract, known the world over for its prompt healing effect upon the membranes.

To avoid disappointment ask your druggist for "2½ ounces of Pinex" with full directions, and don't accept anything else. Guaranteed to give absolute satisfaction or money promptly refunded. The Pinex Co., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

Some Yearly Reports.

The year 1921 is now in the past and the new year is before us. The mistakes that we have made can only in a small measure be corrected. Opportunities for doing good that we have let pass cannot be called back; they are a complete loss. What, then, shall we do? As this is a time for new resolutions, let us resolve that we will avail ourselves of every opportunity to do something that will help some one to bear the burdens of life, and in so doing never let go an opportunity to direct their attention to those things that are of a higher and holier nature that will tend to lead them to joys untold that shall come to those who love and serve our loving Heavenly Father.

My work of the past year has not been in vain, though I feel that I should have done more. A brief summary of the visible results of six meetings is here given. My first meeting was held at Old Union, in Carroll County, Miss., and continued twelve days, with twenty baptisms and nine restorations. From there I went to Ridgeland, Miss., where I preached at a mission which was suggested and arranged for by Brother M. C. Cayce. This meeting continued two weeks, with no additions. My next meeting was at Rockwood, Tenn., beginning on the fourth Lord's day in August. This was the first meeting held there by those who worship as "it is written." We were there five and one-half weeks, and from this effort seventy-three were turned to the Lord. My next meeting was at Reid Avenue, in Nashville. The meeting continued eighteen nights, and nineteen persons were baptized and three were restored. In company with Brother T. T. Pack, who started a meeting at Jefferson City, Tenn., I labored for ten days, our work resulting in three baptisms. Two were baptized by Brother Pack the first week. I went next to Jackson Street, in Nashville, where I preached two weeks to the colored people, with three baptized and, we trust, the church edified. I am now in East Tennessee, where I am to remain this year, working with two small but earnest congregations—at Dayton and at Rockwood. There is enough work at these places for a number of preachers, as there is only one church in Roane County that is content to work as the Lord directs. There are a number of mission points that should be worked, and I will do what I can in this way. My only handicap is in not being able to get to and from the different points. I expect to hold a number of mission meetings during the summer. My address is Rockwood, Tenn.

WILL J. CULLUM.

The Highland Park church of Christ, in Montgomery, Ala., has just closed what is said to be the greatest year of its existence. The Bible school on Sunday morning has grown from fifty-five to an average attendance of one hundred. We now have seven classes. The worship on Lord's day is well attended. The house is full. The prayer meeting conducted every Wednesday evening is moving along nicely. During the past year we studied Smith's "Outlines of the Bible." The ladies' Bible class is taught by the minister every Tuesday afternoon. This class not only studies the Bible, but visits the hospitals and sews for the poor and orphans. They have sent time and again to the Potter Home. Every first Sunday night in each month the church comes together to plan the work for the month. Our record shows we have done a great work, but we are not satisfied; we must move on. Our contributions have increased fifty per cent. Seventy-five have been added to the congregation. We have lost three by death. The church has supported two meetings at home and one mission meeting at Ozark, Ala. The church has a great future before her, and she plans to do a greater work in 1922 than ever before in her history as a church.

The church met yesterday (Sunday) to formulate plans for a new church building. It was decided to erect a brick-vencer building on the present site at the cost of approximately ten thousand dollars. This building will have eight class rooms and an auditorium with a seating capacity of four hundred. About three thousand dollars was raised at this meeting, to be paid before June 1, at which time the work on the new building will begin. Besides this great task, the church is helping to support an evangelist, W. T. Grider, of Dozier, Ala., in Southern Alabama.

J. H. HINES

Since resigning the work in Murfreesboro, Tenn., October 10, I have held meetings at Columbia, David Lipscomb College, and Covington; and I have preached at Sparta, Manchester, and at Murfreesboro on Christmas Day. The work at these places has been pleasant, and I was well supported in every way. I have moved into the home I bought in Murfreesboro, and Brother Pullias has taken up the work with the church here. I had the pleasure of hearing him last Sunday. He is fine, and I am sure he will do a great work.

I am leaving this week for a three-months' trip to Texas, where I am to assist Brethren Showalter and Robertson with the Bible-chair matters. I was connected with this work in its beginning, and I have never ceased to be interested in it. I think we could hardly do a greater thing than to sustain such men at our great universities to look after the spiritual welfare of our boys and girls. Correspondents will please address me at Austin, Texas, until further notice.

My first meeting this year is to begin at Columbia, Tenn., on April 9. I am also to hold a meeting at Fayetteville, Tenn., beginning on the first Lord's day in June. Other meetings have been promised. I still have some time open that others may have, if they desire my assistance.

The new year is now upon us with all of its promise and responsibility. We need to drive the wretched worldliness out of the church by preaching and practicing the pure truth of God, and to be drawn closer together in Christian love and fellowship. Here is my hand to this end, brethren, and I urge every one to rally to this high ideal for the Master's cause this year. May God help us. A. B. BARRET.

Christ's Love for Little Children.

While our dear Lord lived here upon earth, he had a great deal to teach and not very much time in which to teach it all. We must remember that he had come down from heaven to bring mankind nearer to God, and save people from their sins, and teach every one how to live better lives and to be happy because of the light within their own souls.

The Lord Jesus was never idle. He was either doing great and good acts or he was teaching the truths of God and explaining things to those who wanted to know. For, of course, being God, he knew the answer to all questions and the way out of all troubles.

One day people brought their children to him. Wouldn't it have been wonderful if we could have been among those children?

But the disciples thought children would bother him and distract his thoughts from more important things. So they found fault with the people for bringing them.

When our Savior heard that the disciples wanted the children taken away, he was displeased, and told them he wanted the children always to come to him. Then he told the disciples that the kingdom of God was made up of people who were, in many ways, like little children. For whoever will not open their hearts truly to God, and come to him in perfect and childlike trust, cannot know and love God as they should. Our Lord said no one could get really close to God who had not the heart of a child.

We are told that then he took the little ones up in his arms and blessed them. So you see he loved them very dearly indeed.

As we grow up, we must try to keep our hearts sweet and loving and pure and trustful toward God; we must try to see the good in everything, and be satisfied with what God sends us; we must pray often and earnestly, and learn to feel that God is always near us—not far away up in the sky somewhere, forgetting all about us. He never forgets us, and he is always taking care of us. Think what a great heart God has, to want to have all the people of the earth love him! He has love enough for every one who ever lived or ever will live: and we must see to it that we try to hear his dear voice guiding us in the right way.—Shepherd's Arms.

Making Bad Things Worse.

Winter, as if it were an evil spirit, seems to take delight in making bad things worse. Rheumatism twists harder, twinges sharper, catarrh becomes more annoying, and the many symptoms of scrofula are developed and aggravated. These are common diseases, and it is a wonder that more people do not get rid of them.

Hood's Sarsaparilla has been very successful in the treatment of these complaints. It is easily obtained, and there is abundant testimony that its effects are radical and permanent.

In cases where a laxative or cathartic is needed, it is well to supplement Hood's Sarsaparilla with Hood's Pills, which are gentle, thorough, and effective.

A Brand-New Book

"OLD LIMBER" or THE TALE of THE TAYLORS by DELONG RICE

"ALF and BOB TAYLOR, with their eloquence, their fiddles, and their fox hounds, have wrought for themselves a niche of eternal melody in the hearts of their country."

So states the author of this little book, which we present as the best product of the pen of DeLong Rice. Into one hour of reading he has gathered the strange and romantic story of the two most wonderful political campaigns of Tennessee—the thrilling tale of the happy comradeship and the lifelong rivalry of the two famous brothers—a disclosure of the remarkable and heretofore unpublished incidents that attended the political division of the Taylor family—the wonder of "The War of the Roses" that attracted the attention of the world—and the truth about "OLD LIMBER," the peerless and now immortal fox hound that played the leading role of sentiment in the political campaign of last fall, from the Mississippi River to the Unaka Mountains.

With a "Cast of Characters" extending from a President of the United States to a fox hound, the story touches a wide range of human sentiment; and through it all is the aroma of crackling camp fires and the music of the chase.

THE BOOK is beautifully printed and bound, appropriately illustrated, and packed in a neat gift box, ready for mailing.

Field Reports

McMinnville, Tenn., Route 4, January 3.—Our attendance at church here on the first Sunday in the new year was very encouraging. Over an average attendance. Brother F. C. Sowell, from Columbia, will preach for us in July.—P. G. Potter.

Miami, Fla., January 2.—Yesterday was a busy day with me. I preached twice at home and baptized two persons. I preached at Homestead in the afternoon. The church here intends to make 1922 the most successful year of its history.—Joe L. Netherland.

Gallatin, Tenn., January 2.—The first Sunday in 1922 was a cold Sunday in Gallatin. Very good crowds at both services. Brother H. L. Olmstead, former minister for the congregation here, preached at night to an appreciative audience. Two came over from Westmoreland to be baptized at the night service. Brother Olmstead baptized them.—T. B. Clark.

Horse Cave, January 2.—Services were well attended at Beckton yesterday. A noble man (head of a family) made the good confession and was baptized into Christ this morning. The ice was cut in order to baptize; but when folks really want to obey the Savior, they do not wait for warm weather. The work at Beckton starts off well for the year.—Emmett G. Creacy.

Dyersburg, Tenn., January 3.—I closed my eighteenth meeting for 1921 on December 30. Six were mission meetings and resulted in four congregations being planted. We started the new year in Dyersburg with two additions. I preach three times every Sunday and continuously through the week. May we be more serviceable than ever before.—J. W. Dunn.

Wellington, Texas, December 26.—Our work here is doing fine. Good crowds at every service. One addition to-day. We have three meetings during the week besides the Lord's-day meeting. The sisters are taking quite an interest in charity work and will also send a box to the orphans' home. We hope to be able to show the world that the local church can do the work of the Lord without an aid society.—Lee Sanders.

Owens Cross Roads, Ala., January 2.—A few faithful ones have been walking in the name of Jesus over on Gunter'sville Mountain, in Marshall County, at the meeting place called "Mount Shade," four months. We started the Lord's-day worship with a few active members. Brother Roy Howell is leading in the work. This is a good mission point. We have arranged for a meeting there next summer, to be held by Brother W. M. Oakley.—J. Frank Jenkins.

Estill Springs, Tenn., December 30.—G. H. Oneal preached for us last Sunday. We were all well pleased with him. He is young in the cause, but strong in the faith. He wants to move to Estill Springs the first of April. Any one wanting a good man to hold a meeting should write him at Kelso, Tenn. Brother S. M. Spears will begin his monthly preaching at this place on the next fourth Sunday. We are glad to have Brother Spears back with us.—J. A. Mason.

Sinton, Texas, January 2.—Our building has been enlarged. Our number grows toward two hundred. I spent five days at Bayside. Two were baptized, several returned to their "first love," and about fifteen will keep house as "it is written." Other mission meetings are to follow. A get-together meeting of South Texas churches will be held here, beginning on January 31 and continuing four days. We are arranging to care for large crowds. I am also booking meetings for 1922, and will be glad to hear from those desiring my services.—J. E. Wainwright.

Dry Fork, Ky., December 28.—I will now give a report of my meetings. I preached one week in June in Celina, Tenn., with little interest and no additions; one week in July in Free State, with fine interest and three baptized; one week in August at Vernon, Ky., with fine interest and one baptized; ten days in October at Rich Pond, Ky., with fine interest, overflow audiences during latter part of the meeting, and twenty-four baptized; one week in November at Hendersonville, Tenn., with not much interest at the first, but increased interest toward the last, and three baptized. I would like to hold more meetings next year, if the brethren can use me.—J. D. Smith.

Elmdale, Montana, December 21.—Not much preaching at present. The temperature stands at about thirty degrees below zero, with quite a bit of snow on the ground. We meet at Mona each Lord's day. We also have our midweek meetings there, with about sixty in attendance. Regardless of the extreme cold, wife says we must go to-night. This is a seven-mile drive with a very slow team; but our minds are set on things above, not on things on the earth. I must also go to the Reservation soon to see Louie, the Indian, as all things are now made ready for him to go to Bible school, and I must do my best to get him to Abilene, Texas, by January 1. Brother D. L. Cooper, of Abilene, has taken the matter in hand to see to the Indian's board and schooling. All that remains is the means to pay his transportation. There will be no delay on this account. Next month I expect to go to Sumatra. This is where the Methodists locked the doors on me, but I stayed until five souls obeyed the truth. So I must return before they perish.—J. O. Golphenee.

Dear Friends:

I want to tell you, as well as thank you, for what your preparation has done for my baby. He was a little, cross, crying baby, awfully constipated all the time, when I started to give it to him. But now he is a big, fat baby, and I cannot speak too highly of your preparation.

I know there is nothing that can come up to Mrs. Winslow's Syrup for a baby and I feel that it was a God-sent blessing to me. I will tell any mother what it has done for my baby.

Armona, Cal., December 31.—Arrangements have been made for evangelistic meetings during the fall and winter of 1922 to be held at the following places: Los Angeles, thirty days, at Sichel and Altura Streets; Bakersfield, thirty days; Hanford, thirty days; Long Beach, thirty days; Fresno, fifteen days, at Nevada Avenue; Madera, fifteen days. These meetings are to be held by Brother C. R. Nichol, of Clifton, Texas. We are looking forward to a great ingathering of souls. Bakersfield is a new congregation, and a number of devoted men and women are meeting. There is no church of Christ in Long Beach. A large Christian Church is there, and a congregation after the Apostolic Review order. We should have had a faithful congregation at Long Beach long ago, and did at one time, but the Review people secured money that was left for a loyal church and used it in building their house. There are a number of faithful people who meet with the Review congregation that will come out, no doubt, when an effort is put on to establish a church there, and we expect to put forth such an effort with Brother Nichol. Let all begin to plan that we may have good meetings at every place, and keep constantly before the congregations the coming meetings.—L. D. Perkins.

The Modern Minister.

The modern minister needs to be constructive rather than destructive in all his pulpit work. The people have doubts enough of their own. They are not primarily interested in questions of critical scholarship, but their souls are hungering for a message that will help them to bear their trials and give them comfort in their troubles. We should see that their souls have been fed with the bread of life and not given indigestible theological and critical stones. The modern day, like every other day, demands that the sermon be Christocentric, never egocentric. For a man to use his pulpit as a platform for the display of his own accomplishments is a disgrace. Our business is too serious. We must never stand before the cross, but always behind it. It is the gospel of the love of Christ and his atoning death for a lost world that has the power to bring conviction, conversion, consecration, and comfort. To this gospel we must give our best time and thought and effort. "I am not ashamed of the gospel; for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth."—Selected.

Try This For Sore Throat

On retiring fill your nostrils with Eucapine Salve. Sniff the salve back into the air passages of the head and throat until it reaches the tonsils and uvula and you taste the salve. This is best done lying down, pillow under back, head thrown back that the melting salve may reach the head cavities. Also turn the head down and forward and to right and left; to flow the salve over the inflamed surfaces in the cavities of the head. In the morning the pain and soreness will be gone. To make sure place Eucapine Salve on the back of the tongue with your finger. Same treatment for colds, nose sores, catarrhal headaches, catarrh of the head, nose and throat. Annual Report of Work in Mississippi.

BY MATTHEW C. CAYCE.

A report of our work in Mississippi for 1921, I hope, will prove a means of encouraging other congregations to send more men into such places. I have baptized one hundred and fifty persons. Of these, twenty-nine were Baptists and eight were Methodists. Also, five from the Baptists, one from the Holiness, four from the "digressives," and two from the Methodists, believing they were scripturally baptized, took a stand with us on the Bible, and the Bible only, agreeing to lay aside all the teaching and practice of men and be simply Christians. Thirty-nine were restored by complying with the law of pardon to erring Christians, confessing their sins and praying one for another and consecrating their lives anew to the best beautiful and reasonable service of our Master.

Three congregations were planted in new places, and in one place, where former efforts had been made, but no meeting of the church for worship for the past four years, they were re-established in the faith, and with renewed courage and determination returned to work, I believe, to be faithful until death. We might say this was more important, if possible, than to start a congregation in a new place. (See 2 Pet. 2: 20-22.) These were good people, but discouraged. They are now looking for a suitable lot upon which to build a meetinghouse.

A congregation was started in Jackson upon my coming here last year that has never failed to meet for Lord's-day worship; but until April of this year they had no permanent place to meet, but used the Odd Fellows' Hall, Woodmen of the World Hall, and a part of the time met in the courthouse. Last April we bought a nice, comfortable meetinghouse from the Presbyterians, which was paid for in full without one line being published in any paper. A few personal letters to congregations, and a ready, willing, generous response on the part of some Nashville congregations, together with the amount given by the faithful few here, made this possible. If more congregations would do as a few in Nashville are doing, sending men and helping in other ways, the time would soon come when churches of Christ would be thickly scattered all over this and other States where New Testament Christianity is now almost or entirely a stranger.

We also bought a well-located, substantial brick meetinghouse from the Cumberland Presbyterians in Columbus, Miss., upon which a cash payment of five hundred and thirty-seven dollars and fifty cents was made; the

We have no societies through which to work, and yet the church of Christ is doing a great work, is missionary in spirit and in deed, and does what it does in and through the church, without show or blow. In Vicksburg a lot has been bought and paid for. Help them build a house, and do it now.

I am making my home in Jackson, but, while building a congregation here, I am trying to help as many other places as possible, confining my work to the State of Mississippi.

Last year Brother Will J. Cullum, backed by some Nashville churches, spent one month very profitably here, holding a meeting in Carroll County and also one at Ridgeland, doing some sound gospel preaching that we appreciated and that will do good a long time. Send him again to us. Keep him busy. He is needed.

Brother Andrew Perry, from Illinois, also spent considerable time in mission work in the northern part of the State.

H. D. Jeffcoat is doing a grand work in and near his home county. We need more Jeffcoats.

There are whole counties here in which primitive New Testament teaching is a stranger. So why not more churches send more men? It is truly missionary, and God will reward you.

We will work and pray that during the coming year we may do a greater work. I am doing my best to teach these people that the church needs no drones. An idler is worthless. We must all become soul winners for Jesus. Pray for the work and for me, that utterance may be given unto me, that I may open my mouth boldly to make known the gospel. Please send names of persons I might interest by a personal visit. Address M. C. Cayce, 143 Wacaster Street, Jackson, Miss.

BY JOHN R. WILLIAMS.

As I have been on borrowed time since the thirtieth day of December, 1921, when I reached threescore and ten years, I thought I would give a few "notes" of my life which might encourage some young preacher who is just starting on the work of evangelist.

I am well aware of the fact that there are some young preachers who know a great deal more than the older ones do, and there are some who are anxious to consult with and accept the advice of the older ones and learn from them.

My life began in Marshall County, Tenn., in two miles of Lewisburg, on December 30, 1851—seventy years ago. I was born of poor and humble parents, who bequeathed to me their poverty. In my sixth year my father died, leaving my mother and her three children, myself and two sisters. My mother made a living for her family by weaving. To this good day I carry the scar on my left forefinger made by the thread in filling quills for my mother. In a few years she married again—married a man with a large family, and the atmosphere that surrounded that large family was not congenial for me and five stepbrothers; so life in real earnest, with all its stern and stubborn facts, set in with me.

When I was ten years old, the Civil War began, which closed the doors of the schoolhouse to me; so I "jest grewed up" when I was not kicked up.

In November, 1869, together with my uncle and his family, I left Marshall County and came to Obion County.

Young, stout, and ignorant, I knew nothing but work, and work I did. In my ignorance I did not learn to save the wages paid for my labor; hence, I still retained what my parents bequeathed to me.

It came to pass in November, 1871, that I was married to Miss Mary R. Moultrie. To us nine children—five boys and four girls—were born. Six of them—three boys and three girls—still live; two boys and one girl have crossed the great divide and are now on the other side.

The old home nest is now empty and the old home so still and lonesome until cheered and brightened by the appearance of children and grandchildren.

The childless home—how sad and lonely! And sadder still when in some homes pug dogs, cats, and canary birds take the place of children. Yes, some homes that claim to be Christian homes are childless—want no children. Sad, sad!

During the time our children were growing up I attended a public school about fourteen months in all. Two of my children attended the same school I did.

In early life I was taken into the Methodist Church on probation for six months. As they never referred to the matter again, I took it for granted that my conversion would not stand the test—would not pass muster; so, by a general consent of silence, the whole matter ended and I drifted on. However, before I married, I was converted again, so they told me, and I was received into full fellowship of the Methodist Church, with no six-months appendage attached.

About this time Brother Isaac C. Sewell appeared in Obion County and began to preach what I was taught to hate. Later Brother J. H. Roulhac appeared, and he and Brother Sewell created no little excitement and religious criticism in the community. Well do I remember many hard things said of those two men; in fact, I joined in to help out in the matter. I have always been so constituted that if I believed a thing, I was not afraid to hear it opposed, and was always ready to defend, to the best of my ability, what I believed to be right. This stand upon my part was the centering wedge to my conversion.

I heard these men preach and was very anxious to have a Methodist preacher meet them in debate. The debate did not come. Why? Will tell later.

That Was Father's Way

Rough and hard he seemed to be;
Blustered round a lot;
Tried to hide, it seemed to me,
The tender, loving spot.
But, as mother used to say,
"That is father's way."

Worked from dawn till night;
Never had much time
To laugh and play; and yet the light
Of love deep and sublime
For him is mine to-day;
I knew 'twas father's way.

Rough his hands had grown with toil;
His face was tan;
His heart was true, no spot of soil;
He was a man!
That, too, I'm glad to say—
That, too, was father's way!

Brave his soul and unafraid;
Face always to the light;
A simple, wholesome life he made,
And then came to the night.
An eye to smile, a lip to pray;
And that was father's way!

BY A. B. LIPSCOMB

Now that the holiday season is almost a month behind us and nothing remains but to cheerfully pay the bills, we might do well to take an inventory of what we received and what we gave, and ask why and in what spirit was it done. The subject of gifts is always interesting, and enters so deeply into our lives that the Bible is full of teaching upon it. Indeed, the greatest theme of the Bible has to do with God's supreme gift to the world—a gift without which the world would be poor indeed.

In speaking and writing, it was a characteristic habit of the apostle Paul to burst forth into adoration when the greatness of his theme overwhelmed him. In discussing God's dealings with the Jews, he exclaims: "O the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and the knowledge of God! how unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways past tracing out!" When he reaches the conclusion of his argument on the resurrection, there comes the climactic outburst: "O death, where is thy victory? O death, where is thy sting?" Again, when writing to the Corinthian church about the offering for the poor, he lifts his eyes from the disciples' gift to that of God, and cries: "Thanks be to God for his unspeakable gift!" In other letters he emphasizes the fact that the gift is free, but here he calls it "unspeakable." During the St. Louis Fair there were exhibited in this country the Jubilee gifts to Queen Victoria. It was the most valuable collection ever gotten together. But splendid as were these gifts, their value could be expressed in some measure—some in terms of money, some in the language of human life. But this is not true of the gift of God's beloved Son. Its value cannot be adequately expressed; it is beyond computation; it is unspeakable.

There are four searching tests that may be applied in the consideration of gifts.

1. The motive. In the absence of a better name, there is the "duty gift." As the holiday season approaches we hear a woman say: "She always remembers me, and I must not forget to send her something." It is simply a matter of tit for tat. In this same class is the "policy gift." A man observes: "He will be useful to me in my business." The gift will bring dividends, and he will lose nothing by it. Like bread cast upon the waters, it will come back to him. I heard a traveling salesman complain once because his house had cut off a certain allowance that had been allowed for whisky and cigars with which he had been accustomed to treat his customers. It was a niggardly business policy, he thought, to discontinue this allowance. Church history records the case of a certain king who tried very hard to secure the papal favor. The pope had deaf ears until the king finally sent him a couple of ships. That won the papal favor when all else had failed. We can readily see that this is but a swapping of commodities. The spirit of the true gift is lacking. "For if ye love them that love you, what reward have ye? do not even the publicans the same?" Our God is neither a tradesman nor an opportunist. We have not placed him under obligations, nor is he flattering us with his attentions that he may receive the benefit of our good will. Let us not deceive ourselves at this point.

The highest gift of all is that which rises to self-sacrifice; and the greater the sacrifice, the greater the gift. The best gift is the "love gift." The supreme love gift is described in John 3: 16: "For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have eternal life."

2. The intrinsic value of the gift is an important consideration. Character is more precious than gold, even as the spiritual is of more value than the material. Socrates far outstrips Croesus in the struggle for the highest good. Samuel rebukes the sin of Saul with this pertinent question: "Hath the Lord as great delight in burnt offerings and sacrifices, as in obeying the voice of the Lord. Behold, to obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams." Our adorning should not be for outward show; "but let it be the hidden man of the heart, in that which is not corruptible, even the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price."

In describing the glory of Messiah's reign the prophet Isaiah uses this language: "I will make a man more precious than fine gold." The prophecy was abundantly and superlatively fulfilled in Jesus. In him truth and love are supreme; in him we find the highest moral character and the greatest spiritual power. He is "the fullness of him that filleth all in all." * * *

3. The uniqueness of the gift attracts attention. Scores of people pride themselves upon their originality in making a gift. With them the real problem is not how much to spend, but what to get. They are determined upon one thing at least; and that is, the gift must be different. There are others who present the customary gifts. Consequently, when the bride makes an inventory of her collection, there are some unique gifts and there are the usual salad forks and butter knives.

Jesus Christ was the most unique gift of all. How will you classify him? He is neither ancient nor modern, neither east nor west; he is more than a Jew, but he is not a Gentile. In the Catholic Encyclopedia there are pictures of the head of Christ as conceived by twenty-four of the world's greatest artists. Not any two of them are alike. One artist brings him out with strong masculine features; another shows the delicate tenderness of a woman's face. It is hardly possible that any one of them got the correct features. But this shows that Jesus is the example and inspiration of the strongest men and the frailest women. He is the Savior of them all. He is unique in his teachings, in his power, in his meekness, and in his sinlessness.

4. The usefulness of the gift is a prime consideration. Did you ever receive a gift that puzzled you? We do not know just what to do with some of our gifts, whether to lay them away in a drawer or to put them in a museum. Some are neither useful nor ornamental. They must be classified as curious specimens.

God's great gift has been tested throughout the ages. We know well its usefulness. Jesus Christ satisfies the craving of every hungry heart, the need of every sinful soul. "There was the true light," writes John, "even the light which lighteth every man, coming into the world." But we should note how he adds the significant statement: "But as many as received him, to them gave he the right to become the children of God, even to them that believe on his name." In the matter of reconciliation there is a twofold movement—a redemptive action on God's part and an appropriating and determinative response on man's part. It matters not how great and beautiful the gift, if the human response is lacking. We cannot buy God's gift; we can simply accept it. Unless we do accept it in accord with the terms of the gospel, the real value of the gift is lost, so far as we are concerned.

Paul says: "Thanks be unto God." Words, like knives, need now and again to be sharpened. The root idea in the word "thanks" is the causing of joy or the giving of pleasure. It is only when we accept our Father's gift that we gladden his heart and save our own souls.

Retrospections and Resolutions.

BY G. C. BREWER.

The beginning of a new year is always a time for reflection, retrospection, and resolution. We are all inclined to be meditative and perhaps more or less melancholy, because as the old year dies out and the new year dawns upon us we are made cognizant, for a few hours at least, of the rapidity with which the years race by us. Also at such a time we seem disposed to recall the experiences of the year that is passing out, and, while in the mood for looking back, we often turn the pages of memory back to the very first chapter of life and read again the story that we ourselves have written. And what a variety of conflicting emotions swell our bosoms as the scenes of our lives reappear before us. We experience feelings of shame and chagrin as we pass over deeds that were unworthy and sinful, and in vain we try to blot them from the pages of life's story. But that is impossible; they are there, and there they must stay. Like Pilate, what we have written we have written, and it is impossible to make a single correction. We can never undo any deed that was done. Some deeds may be counteracted and their influence in a measure corrected, but undone—never. Life is made up of daily deeds; and what we are is the sum of what we have done. The time taken up in a sinful act is as much a part of life as the same length of time employed in the noblest deeds of service or in the most solemn devotions. It matters not how much we may regret the waste of time or how genuinely we may repent of the misconduct, we can never recall the time or reverse the conduct. If our bitter, briny tears of remorse and repentance could flow forever, they could not wash one sinful stain from life's escutcheon. If we should never waste another moment of time, the days that are already lost could not be regained. There is no such thing as "redeeming time," and the translators showed by their marginal reading that Paul meant to convey a different idea in that Ephesian passage. As the philosophical but pessimistic poet, the unbelieving Omar Khayyam, sadly said:

The Moving Finger writes; and having writ,
Moves on; nor all your piety nor wit
Shall lure it back to cancel half a line,
Nor all your tears wash out a word of it.

When such thoughts as these intrude into our meditations, or rather when this awful truth stares us in the face, how sweet it is to hear Jehovah tenderly saying concerning the wicked man who turns from his sins to obey the Lord, "None of his transgressions that he hath committed shall be remembered against him" (Ezek. 18: 22); and concerning those under the New Covenant who have been washed in the blood of the Lamb, "And their sins and their iniquities will I remember no more" (Heb. 10: 17). But even Jehovah does not promise to avert a man's record—that is impossible with Omnipotence; but in his mercy our Father forgives and forgets. What a gracious provision this is for us! And how grateful we should be, as we see our utter helplessness before our own failures in life, to know that when all of our years have come and gone and all our deeds have been recorded, Infinite Love will spread the mantle of oblivion over our sins and we shall pass through grace into glory forever!

If we err in human blindness,
And forget that we are dust;
If we miss the law of kindness
In our struggle to be just;
Snowy wings of love shall cover
All the faults that cloud our way,
When the weary watch is over,
And the mists have cleared away.

But as we re-read life's story we do not find it all unpleasant. On the contrary, we come upon scenes that thrill us and upon which we delight to dwell. In memory we live again the days that are forever gone and enjoy associations that can never again exist in reality. And here it is strangely true that "distance lends enchantment," for the days and experiences that are furthest away seem the sweetest.

Our early days—how often back
We turn on life's bewild'ring track
To where o'er hill and valley plays
The sunlight of our early days!

Things that seemed trivial as we passed them on life's highway now loom large in the distance, and we return in memory to bestow upon them the consideration that was perhaps their due. It is unfortunate that we cannot properly value things that are present. We are so much inclined to look for some "better day" and to aspire to do some "great thing" that we undervalue the present moment and overlook the opportunities for noble deeds that every day brings to us. Then soon life is over, and that better day never dawned and that great thing was never done. Life is not made up of great things. It is given to only a very few men to do that which the world calls great, and even in their lives that which made them famous—the great thing they did—occupied only a few days or, at most, a few years of their allotted time on earth. Perhaps threescore years of their whole threescore and ten were spent in toil and sacrifice. Those years were filled with little things, commonplace things, prosy things; but it would be safe to say, if those men were truly great, that all these little duties had been faithfully discharged. Neither man nor God will make a man lord over many things who has not been faithful over a few things. A person who is not punctual, diligent, and loyal in the ongoings of daily life will not rise to the opportunity for a great deed when the opportunity comes. Should we not, therefore, guard against our disposition to stand between a dream of the future and vision of the past and let the precious present moments pass unheeded? It was Shelley who said:

We look before and after
And pine for what is not;
Our sincerest laughter
With some pain is fraught;
Our sweetest songs are those
That tell of saddest thought.

When we pause to review our lives and when we see our mistakes; when we consider the somewhat trite but ever true philosophy that life is made up of little things, it is but natural that we should form resolutions for the future. It is a bad indication for a person to reach the point where he never reviews, regrets, repents, and resolves. Only the fatted, fatuous person is satisfied with himself and his achievements. And a purposeless, aimless life is worthless. Nothing worth while ever comes through accident. A man who is unintentionally good is good for nothing. Unless we purpose in our hearts to be better than we have ever been, it is certain that we will be no better. We should form a definite plan for work and service for God and humanity, and then use all our energies in the prosecution of that plan. The past cannot be recalled. The present is ours and its demands are great.

Let us, then, be up and doing,
With a heart for any fate;
Still achieving, still pursuing,
Learn to labor and to wait.

Riches Do Not Satisfy.

He that loveth silver shall not be satisfied with silver; nor he that loveth abundance with increase: this is also vanity. When goods increase, they are increased that eat them; and what good is there to the owners thereof, saving the beholding of them with their eyes?—Eccles. 5: 10, 11.

BY FLOYD S. LEE.

Yesterday (January 1), being the first day of the week, the first day of the month, the first day of the new year 1922, and also the first meeting of a new congregation at the place of worship in Flower Auditorium, 1720 South Flower Street, corner Eighteenth Street, the establishing of another place of worship in this large city of nearly seven hundred thousand people, will be a day long to be remembered. It was indeed a glorious day. In spite of the fact that it rained most of the day, we had one hundred and twenty-four present at the first service, with eighty-four enrolling their names with the new congregation as their desire to work and worship with us. Our contribution went over sixty-seven dollars, showing the spirit in which they went to work for the Master's cause. At the evening service, though it was raining very hard, forty-five assembled themselves together again.

Samuel E. Witty, of Ontario, did the preaching both morning and evening, and gave us two fine lessons. Brother Witty is a strong man, and a great personal worker as well, and a great friend of S. H. Hall, who has done such a great work in and around Los Angeles the past year and a half and is now laboring with the Russell Street Church, in Nashville, Tenn., and a man whom we never can forget. May God bless both him and Sister Hall in their new work at Nashville.

Brother Witty will be with us for some time to help in getting the work started here, and I want to thank him for his untiring effort to see the church work move on and on; and he is taking no backward step in the work at the Central church of Christ of this city. And not only do we want to thank Brother Witty, but we want to also thank the church at Ontario for allowing us to have the service of Brother Witty. We know that they will miss him, for he has been doing a great work with that church, and they now own their own lot and have about six thousand dollars raised toward a building which they expect to start in the near future. May God's richest blessing be with them in their effort.

Christians should pray for the word of God to have free course and be glorified. "Finally, brethren, pray for us, that the word of the Lord may have free course, and be glorified, even as it is with you." (2 Thess. 3: 1.)

Christians should watch in order for their prayers to be heard—watch their words, actions, thoughts, conduct, hearts. The Savior taught his disciples to watch and pray, that they enter not into temptation. "Watch and pray, that ye enter not into temptation: the spirit indeed is willing, but the flesh is weak." (Matt. 26: 41.) Christians could overcome temptation if they would pray more.

God will hear the prayers of the righteous. "The eyes of the Lord are upon the righteous, and his ears are open unto their cry. The face of the Lord is against them that do evil, to cut off the remembrance of them from the earth. The righteous cry, and the Lord heareth, and delivereth them out of all their troubles." (Ps. 34: 15-18.)

The Christian's prayer, if he prays in faith, will be heard. "But let him ask in faith, nothing wavering. For he that wavereth is like a wave of the sea driven with the wind and tossed." (James 1: 6.) The Christian's prayer will not be heard unless he hears the law. Many a Christian's prayer has never been heard, I fear, because he failed to hear the law. "He that turneth away his ear from hearing the law, even his prayer shall be abomination." (Prov. 28: 9.) To hear the law is to keep the commandments. "And whatsoever we ask, we receive of him, because we keep his commandments, and do those things that are pleasing in his sight." (1 John 3: 22.) If we do his will, God will hear us. "Now we know that God heareth not sinners: but if any man be a worshiper of God, and doeth his will, him he heareth." (John 9: 31.) For God to hear Christians, they must pray with the spirit and with the understanding. "What is it then? I will pray with the spirit, and I will pray with the understanding also." (1 Cor. 14: 15.) They must believe that God will hear them ask in faith. "Therefore I say unto you, What things soever ye desire, when ye pray, believe that ye receive them, and ye shall have them." (Mark 11: 24.) If Christians have any enemies, they will have to forgive them before God will hear them. "And when ye stand praying, forgive, if any have aught against any; that your Father also which is in heaven may forgive you your trespasses. But if ye do not forgive, neither will your Father which is in heaven forgive your trespasses." (Mark 11: 25, 26.)

Christians must have confidence in the Lord. He will do everything he says he will do. They must not doubt him. "And this is the confidence that we have in him, that, if we ask anything according to his will, he heareth us; and if we know that he hear us, whatsoever we ask, we know that we have the petitions that we desired of him." (1 John 5: 14, 15.)

The Christian can and will pray to God, and God will hear his prayer; but the person who is full of conceit and who feels abundantly able to guide and direct his own course in life will not and cannot pray to God. A man must feel his need of the Savior to direct his steps. "Blessed are the poor in spirit: for theirs is the kingdom of heaven." (Matt. 5: 3.) A person must be humble, must realize his own dependence upon God, before he will seek God in the sacred hour of prayer.

The righteous people must humble themselves, their hearts must be humble, for God to hear their prayers. "If my people, which are called by my name, shall humble themselves, and pray, and seek my face, and turn from their wicked ways: then will I hear from heaven, and will forgive their sin, and will heal their land." (2 Chron. 7: 14.)

The Christian should pray at least three times a day. David did. "Evening, and morning, and at noon, will I pray, and cry aloud: and he shall hear my voice." (Ps. 55: 17.) Paul says: "Pray without ceasing." (1 Thess. 5: 17.) Again, he says: "In everything give thanks: for this is the will of God in Christ Jesus concerning you." (1 Thess. 5: 18.)

The Way of Salvation.

BY H. W. JONES.

The way of salvation, as revealed in God's word, is considered to be, by many, the way of ruin; and the many "broad" ways that "lead to destruction" are considered by many to be "the way that leadeth to life." (Matt. 7: 13, 14.) "There is a way that seemeth right unto a man, but the end thereof are the ways of death." (See Prov. 14: 12; 16: 25.) Yes, every one of those "ways" that "seemeth right unto men," independent of divine revelation in the Bible, is "a way," not "the way." There is many "a way" in the world to-day, but one "the way."

The way of salvation, as a matter of course, goes directly through Christ Jesus our Lord and "his body" on earth, "which is the church." Jesus says: "I am the way, and the truth, and the life: no one cometh unto the Father, but by me." So "the way, and the truth, and the life" are according to the teaching of the Christ and his inspired apostles as found in the sacred Scriptures of the New Testament. Yes, Jesus, the Son of the living God, "became the author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey him." (Heb. 5: 9.) Yes, "salvation, eternal," is "unto all them [responsible beings] that obey him," Christ Jesus our Lord. Hence, "eternal salvation" is conditional —depending on our obeying the Son. "But he that obeyeth not the Son shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him." (John 3: 36.) Now, as the converse of every proposition is as true as the proposition or statement itself, therefore it follows that he that obeyeth the Son shall see life and avoid the wrath of God. There is no escape from this. It is plain. It is logical. It is scriptural. It is "the truth"—the basic truth—of our salvation, all Calvinistic theories to the contrary notwithstanding. But we cannot "obey the Son" till we first have (know or learn) his commandments and then "keep" or "do" them. (See John 14: 21; Rom. 22: 14.) Hence, our dependence on divine revelation, the Bible, for the way of life and salvation. What, then, are God's revealed commandments, to aliens, in order to his remission of their past or alien sins, in order to his pardon or salvation? I answer, in God's own words, "Hear ye him"—the Son of God! He says, in a positive way, that all must "believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the living God." (John 20: 30, 31; Matt. 16: 15-20.) This is the foundation—the bed-rock truth upon which the church is built. Yes, "Let all . . . know assuredly [believe with all the heart], that God hath made him [Jesus, who was crucified] both Lord and Christ." (Acts 2: 36.) So this faith or belief is enjoined upon all capable of exercising it. "But now He commandeth all men everywhere to repent." (Acts 17: 30.) Thus we see repentance is enjoined upon all in a positive way. "Teach all nations, baptizing them into the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit," "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved," says Jesus. Yes, "Repent ye, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ unto the remission of your sins." (Acts 2: 38.) So, we see, baptism is equally enjoined upon all, with faith and repentance, in a positive way. "But couldn't we 'except' (take out) one or more of these conditions?" some would ask. Now, let's see about that. (1) Jesus says, "Except ye believe that I am he, ye shall die in your sins." So, if you "except" (take out) belief, "ye shall die in your sins." (2) "Except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish," says Jesus. So repentance cannot be "excepted" (taken out of the plan) without "perishing" for it—awful doom! (3) "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter the kingdom of God," says the same Jesus. And if we never enter the kingdom, we can never be saved. So "except" (take out) the water (baptism), and we have no promise of being "saved." (Mark 16: 16.) No wonder, then, that Peter said: "Can any man forbid [except] the water, that these should not be baptized?" So faith, repentance, and baptism are bound on us in a negative way. Is that all? Are we "baptized and done with it?" No, we have just begun it—must live soberly, righteously, and godly. (Read Tit. 2: 11-14; 2 Pet. 1: 5-8; 3: 18.)

A Friendly Letter from Brother Book.

Mr. Editor: You are giving us a good paper, and I enjoy it.

With your permission, I will give you my estimate of the self-conceited and would-be debater.

Did you ever see a man obsessed with the idea that he is a debater, and that it is his business to challenge to a public debate every one who fails to see the scripturalness of his position? He imagines that God has ordained that he must guard the open places in the walls of spiritual Zion, and with consummate egotism and overflowing ignorance, of which he is profoundly unaware, he walks about in high places with the chip on his shoulder. He is itching for a fight. He is a fool and does not know it. He imagines that Solomon, in all his glory, was not so wise as he. Paul, in his palmiest days, was not so well fitted to defend the faith as is he. He is ready and anxious to meet any one. Brains count for nothing with him. When he gets before an audience, he goes everywhere preaching the word. He handles the word of God deceitfully. He will lie, if he is forced to do so, to gain a point. He debates for victory. He is soothed at the sound of his own voice and comforted at a consciousness of his own patent grin. Argument counts nothing with him. He is incapable of seeing a point when it is made. He is absorbed with one idea: "I am a debater—the champion of the Lord's truth." He loves notoriety, and he knows that the only way he can get it is to meet some man of reputation in debate, and then it will be published abroad that — and — debated at — place on — date. He will debate any question and with any man. He loves to tell of the times he has debated. It is as easy for him to brag as it is for water to pour forth from a burst pipe. His head leaks at the mouth. His speeches are characterized more by words than for ideas. He is apostolic only in one thing — when he opens his mouth, there comes forth a sound that fills the whole house. Like a bantam rooster, he knows how to crow, and he does it in a defiant way. He is so high-top-loftical in the appreciation of self that he imagines the affairs of the whole universe hinge very largely on his own individuality. Had he been on the stage of action fifty years ago, he might have saved old debaters and the father from many a blunder!

We have had a good year at the Tabernacle Church of Christ at Columbus, Ind. Three hundred and nine have been added. Some individual members have given largely to independent missions and loyal colleges.

The Vitality of Religion.

The liberty, the freedom, the democracy we spoke so much about are big ideas and require more of those enjoying their benefits than we are apt to realize. I see no vehicle but the church, with its message to the secret spirit of men, by which to fashion an essential character. This institution, imperfect as it is, divided as it is, partial, priest-ridden, pew-rented, full of dry-bone doctrine and deadly traditionalism, is, in spite of all its defects, the one institution dedicated to making character and basing its message upon the Sermon on the Mount. This badly battered, upheaved world needs nothing so much as a high type of integrity and lofty character, the making of which is the real work of religion.—Dr. Karl Reiland.

The Hebrew Bible.

Hebrew's as old as the races of men,
Precious more than gold's ever been;
Faithful custodian, and brave and pure,
Of art, religion, and literature.

Record of creation in ages past,
Work of God that will ever last;
Lives of the men who were great and good,
Those who conquered in flame and flood.

Storehouse of wisdom of all the years,
Deposit of prophets, sages, and seers;
Guide everlasting to a homeward way,
It points to the dawn of a coming day.

Beacon bright of a starlight age,
Whose luster grows brighter with every page;
Illumes the shadows of the long, dark night,
Till the morning breaks with Heaven's light.

Guiding surely to Messiah's feet,
Leading to rest and peace so sweet;
Herald of the message that angels sing
To waiting shepherds of a Savior-King.

Treasure so dear to all dispensations,
Heritage rare of ages and nations;
Boundless may thy influence be Till all men honor and turn back to thee!

"The Righteousness of the Scribes and Pharisees."

BY S. H. HALL.

Christ, in Matt. 5: 20, says: "For I say unto you, that except your righteousness shall exceed the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees, ye shall in no wise enter into the kingdom of heaven."

This is a strong and positive statement, and we would do well to lay hold of it with an undying faith. We should keep our minds charged with the fact that we simply cannot be saved with such a righteousness as the scribes and Pharisees had.

Now, there is another very positive statement of our Lord—viz.: "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except one be born of water and the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." (John 3: 5.) It is well for us to drive it home to every lost and undone soul that he cannot enter the kingdom unless he is born of water and of the Spirit.

Now, to those who claim to be members of the church of Christ, just a quiet talk with you. I think we are all perfectly united on this second statement of our Lord and with one voice declare it unto the people. And well it is that we do so, and may we never think of compromising this fundamental statement.

But why not stand as unitedly and determinedly on the first statement? It is just as certain that we cannot be saved unless we do better than the scribes and Pharisees as it is that a man cannot enter the kingdom without a birth of water and Spirit. Christ says that unless your righteousness exceed that of the scribes and Pharisees, ye shall in no wise enter the kingdom of heaven. The people to whom he said this were not in the kingdom, for it did not then exist; but he would have them know that something better, in the way of obedience, than what the Pharisees had was necessary if they did enter when it was established. The principle that was absolutely essential was stated in the preceding verse—viz., "do and teach" the commandments of our God. This man would be called "great" in the kingdom of heaven. This man had some assurance of coming to know fully God's will; for, as stated in John 8: 31, 32 to the believing Jews: "If ye abide in my word, then are ye truly my disciples; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."

But, in Matt. 23: 2, 3, Christ tells us exactly what the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees is. Listen to his words: "The scribes and the Pharisees sit on Moses' seat: all things therefore whatsoever they bid you, these do and observe; but do not ye after their works; for they say, and do not."

Teaching what God says and not doing it ourselves, then, is to have such righteousness as the scribes and Pharisees had. This avails us nothing, and we should see to it that we do better.

THE MERCIFUL.

Christ says: "Blessed are the merciful; for they shall obtain mercy." (Matt. 5: 7.) Christ also says, in Luke 6: 36: "Be ye merciful, as your Father also is merciful." James (2: 13) says: "For judgment is without mercy to him that hath showed no mercy." It pays to be merciful!

Well, to be frank, when I hear some brethren talk about each other, it sounds to me like they are wholly strangers to the spirit of mercy. James (2: 8) says again: "Howbeit if ye fulfill the royal law, according to the scripture, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself, ye do well." Christ expressed this same truth in the following words: "All things therefore whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, even so do ye also unto them." (Matt. 7: 12.)

Speaking of others and acting toward others as we would have them speak of and act toward us is getting the matter about right. When we are just as careful and kind when we speak of others as we want people to be careful and kind when they speak of us, we are getting in the way in which our Lord walked and lived and where we can have an undisturbed joy and peace.

But I am asking you, my brother, are you so living? You need not say you hope you are, for you know you are or you know you are not so living. And when we teach others to "love as brethren," to "speak not one against another," to be "tender-hearted, humble-minded, not rendering evil for evil, or reviling for reviling," and at the same time fail to do these things ourselves, what better are we than the scribes and Pharisees? Well indeed would it be for us to let the words of Paul fall unhindered upon our hearts: "Try your own selves, whether ye are in the faith; prove your own selves. Or know ye not as to your own selves, that Jesus Christ is in you? unless indeed ye be reprobate." (2 Cor. 13: 5.)

If Christ is in us, the great lesson given above from his own words and that of his inspired apostles, undoubtedly, will control us. But just as certain as we are not "doing and teaching" what he commands us in regard to being merciful, he lives not in our souls.

Will we not learn indeed the words of Micah: "And what doth Jehovah require of thee, but to do justly, and to love kindness, and to walk humbly with thy God?" (Mic. 6: 8.) You are not loving kindness just because you want others to be kind to you. You are loving kindness only when you love to be kind to others. You are not loving justice just because you want others to be just to you. You love justice only when you have a desperate desire to be just to others. And that man who says he can enter Christ's kingdom without a birth of water and Spirit is not walking very humbly with his God. But no more so than those of us who claim to be Christians and shout that we are on the way to heaven and at the same time "bite and devour one another." James says: "This wisdom is not a wisdom that cometh down from above, but is earthly, sensual, devilish." A "devilish" wisdom has never adorned the doctrine of Christ; it has never made a preacher a power to save among the lost; it has never made a paper a leaven for good; it has never caused a local church to become as a city whose light cannot be hidden. Let this "devilish" wisdom go back to its father, and let us who claim to be Christians stand upon higher ground.

The Church of Christ at Town Creek, Ala.

BY C. E. HOLT.

This congregation has been in existence many years. Some of our best preachers have conducted meetings at Town Creek. Brother T. B. Larimore has conducted meetings there. Brother G. C. Brewer held meetings there in 1919 and 1920. Brother B. F. Harding held the annual protracted meeting for the congregation in 1921.

I have conducted meetings for the congregation at different times covering a period of more than twenty years. I have preached regularly for the congregation for the last four years. Brethren J. T. Harris, Thomas C. Kling, and J. Pettey Ezell have also labored with the congregation.

Recently, in a letter to Brother J. E. Thornberry, of Lawrenceburg, Tenn., the charge was made, insinuatingly, at least, that the congregation has strong "digressive tendencies," and Brother Thornberry was invited to visit them with a view of counteracting and correcting them. From reports that have reached me, this matter is being given publicity, to the detriment, possibly, of the Town Creek congregation and myself. I deny the charge. I positively assert that the congregation at Town Creek is not digressive. If it is, then every congregation in Alabama and Tennessee is digressive, so far as my knowledge extends. In other words, if the congregation at Town Creek is digressive, then I do not know of a loyal congregation in the United States. Why do I say this?

First, because the Town Creek congregation has a splendid Bible school in which the Bible helps published by the McQuiddy Printing Company are used. It uses song books published and sold by said company. The members who read religious papers at all read the Gospel Advocate. I know of one member who reads the Firm Foundation and one who reads or takes the Christian Standard. Secondly, they have no organ, piano, nor any other musical instrument in the worship, and have never had such things. I have never heard a single member express a desire for such things. They are not, in any sense, connected with any missionary society or any other kind of a society. They do their work through the local congregation, the only divinely authorized organization. They make contributions to the Orphans' Home at Columbia, Tenn. Now, I ask in all candor, is this congregation digressive? Is it not doing the congregation a gross injustice to thus speak of it? Brethren should be careful how they hurl the charge of digression at congregations and at preachers who may not happen to favor some particular hobby.

In this connection I will take occasion to mention the fact that for several years I have been, occasionally, called "digressive." More than once I have been called "digressive" because I favored the use of printed helps, such helps as Brother E. A. Elam has prepared, and which were published and sold by the McQuiddy Printing Company. Again, the same charge has been made against me because I favor the use of the individual cup in the communion service; and again, because I favored the training of the young men and the young women of the congregation.

I have never been connected in any way with that part of the church that uses musical instruments and that works through societies. For a number of years I was field editor of the Firm Foundation, but for several years I have written and worked for the Gospel Advocate. I have also contributed to the Christian Leader. I worked with the congregation at Florence, Ala., my present home, from 1905 to 1912. While thus engaged the report was circulated that I was "digressive" and that the congregation at Florence was likewise unsound. I then worked with the Catoma Street church of Christ at Montgomery, Ala., for five years, and while there the report was circulated that I was "pastorating" for a "big digressive church in Montgomery." I spent one year with the little church of Christ on Broadway, in Knoxville, Tenn. The same charge of "digression" was made against me while there.

To write along these lines and to call attention to such misrepresentations is very distasteful to me, and this is why I have refrained from noticing them for so long a time. We have so many unpleasant things in our papers, so much faultfinding, harsh and unbrotherly criticism, that I always dislike to take space in the Gospel Advocate to discuss such things. It is not that I am afraid of discussion; not this, for I believe in a full and free and impartial investigation of all questions which are vital to the interests and welfare of the church of Christ. The stigmata that go with the word "digressive" serve to make it a very convenient epithet. It comes to the relief and assistance of many who, for various reasons, want to damage the reputation and influence of others. The word may mean much or it may mean little when applied to religious matters. For instance, the editors of the Gospel Advocate and those who stand with them are styled the "new digressives" by a certain school of disciples. Why are they thus designated? Chiefly because they favor the use of the Bible in our colleges, making it a part of the curriculum.

But the calling of Brother Thornberry to Town Creek to correct the "digressionism" which was reported to be so prevalent there was like calling a physician to see a patient who was not sick, or like calling out the fire department of a city to put out a fire that cannot be found or that has not been started. Brother Thornberry answered the call, but did not find the trouble. I here give his own statement of the case:

Lawrenceburg, Tenn., December 27, 1921.—Dear Brother Holt: In reply to your recent inquiry as to whether or not I saw evidences of "digression" in the church at Town Creek, Ala., when I was there in November, I am glad to say I saw none. I had heard that there were some in the church there that had digressive tendencies; but if there were such, I saw no evidence of it in their worship. You understand that I was there only one Sunday, and I am judging only by what I saw in the two services that we had on that day. Most fraternally, J. E. THORNBERRY.

What Brother Thornberry saw in the Town Creek church on that Sunday is what is seen there every Sunday.

Look Forward With Hope, Not Fear.

"God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world; but that the world through him might be saved." If the great Father believed that there was a saving remnant in human nature worthy of consideration, worthy of his Son's life, then we must believe that, even in the face of all that we read and hear to-day, there are elements in our nature that, once aroused and brought into active service, must make for a better world and a more wholesome one in the days that lie ahead. It is true, and we cannot blink the fact, that the postwar period, perhaps more than the actual war period, has disclosed in a conspicuously offensive way the frailties and weaknesses of human nature. Like all other postwar periods, it has been characterized by license in its most repellant forms. We do not attempt to gloss over the glaring and self-evident facts, but we do dare to maintain that, if we are to make progress in the future, we must take counsel of our hopes and not of our fears. The attitude of Jesus toward men and women who had made shipwreck of life is the only attitude that has ever succeeded in restoring men to normal habits of thought and practice. He did say to one who had tragically sinned, "Neither do I condemn thee," but let us not forget that he added: "Go, and sin no more." We must remember that it is the spirit and method of the Master that constitute the secret of our success and efficiency in dealing with other weak mortals like ourselves. The world does not want at this time the word of stern condemnation. It is consciously heartsick and sinsick, and we are hopeful enough to believe that penitence and repentance are becoming more evident. We do not wish to hear the voice of the pessimist, nor will we believe with him that the world is to continue to decline and grow worse. We look forward with high expectancy to a better world, to more constant Christian service, to more neighborly helpfulness, and to a life of greater service and unselfishness. Let us not carry over any unnecessary liabilities that have accrued during the past fateful months. Let us believe better things of men and women, and, believing them, let us call them forth. We like these words of Henry Van Dyke. They constitute a fine suggestion for thought and practice to every one of us:

Four things a man must learn to do,
If he would make his record true;
To think without confusion clearly,
To love his fellow men sincerely,
To act from honest motives purely,
To trust in God and heaven securely."

—J. E. Freeman, in St. Mark's Outlook.

I will govern my life and my thoughts as if the whole world were to see the one and to read the other; for what does it signify to make anything a secret to my neighbor, when to God (who is the searcher of our hearts) all our privacies are open?—Seneca.

At Home and Abroad

"A church must send or end."

"The mission of the church is missions."

"The o-missional church is dead or dying."

"The church must go to the lost or go to oblivion."

I hear a voice that's speaking in the wind.—Tennyson.

Anywhere, provided it be forward.—David Livingstone.

Dr. J. E. Thompson, now of Sparta, Tenn., paid this office a call one day last week.

C. H. Woodroof is laboring with the church at Albany, Ala. Correspondents will please to address him there.

R. R. Brooks located at Sparta, Tenn., on January 1, and is expected to preach for the church there during the year.

B. W. Davis, of Ashland City, Tenn., will preach for the New Shops congregation, this city, morning and night, January 29.

H. Leo Boles began a meeting last Sunday at Meaford, Ontario, Canada. He will perhaps be there in this meeting four or five weeks.

T. L. Pearsall, of Priest River, Idaho, wishes to buy a farm, improved and productive, in a locality where he and his family can help a new congregation.

Married, near Tullahoma, Tenn., at the home of the bride's uncle, on January 10, Mr. H. M. Davis and Miss Loula Jackson, W. E. Morgan officiating.

Those desiring the services of a song leader as a teacher for singing classes during the winter and spring months should address A. L. Dixon at Delrose, Tenn.

F. M. McGlasson, of Sulphur, Okla., is anxious to arrange work till April, either in protracted meetings, Lord's-day appointments, or Bible school of ten to thirty nights' duration. He is anxious to work.

From B. C. Goodpasture, Atlanta, Ga.: "The churches of Georgia are planning to do greater things for the Lord this year. Hugh E. Garrett, our busy field man, began a meeting at Lafayette, Ga., January 8."

We appreciate an encouraging message from T. J. Dozier, of Ashland City, Tenn. He says: "The Gospel Advocate is the best paper I have ever read. It has been a great help to me."

The committee in charge of the forthcoming tabernacle meeting in Nashville has arranged for N. B. Hardeman's sermons to appear in book form. Further announcement of this matter will be made later.

S. H. Hall preached to a very large and interested audience at Russell Street church of Christ, this city, on last Lord's day. There was one confession at the morning service and also one in the evening and one restoration.

John L. Davis, who is located at Camp Eustis, Va., would like to locate the nearest band of disciples. If any reader can furnish this information, he would appreciate it. Address Battery C, Fifty-first Artillery, C. A. C., Camp Eustis, Va.

From H. M. Phillips, 4410 St. Elmo Avenue, Chattanooga, Tenn., January 8: "Church here doing well. Two placed membership since last report. Crowds growing, interest increasing, and love abounding. Five services a week and others planned."

Don't forget the Sinking Fund. We are receiving many new and renewal subscribers every day, and are also receiving information from many who desire to read the paper, but are not able to pay for it. Have you made a contribution to the Sinking Fund?

W. E. Morgan, formerly of Fort Worth, Texas, is now located at Gallatin, Tenn., and is preaching monthly at Lafayette, Dickson Springs, Rome, and at Eighth Avenue, North, this city. He will only be here for the winter, after which he expects to resume evangelistic work in Texas.

If there is known to the brotherhood a printing press, not in use, large enough to print a paper about thirteen by seventeen inches, it can be used at the Belle Haven Orphans' Home, of Luling, Texas, in the form of a donation or on very reasonable terms. Address Jennie Clarke, Superintendent, Luling, Texas.

Horace W. Busby writes: "I am now (January 10) at Plainview, Texas, in a splendid meeting, with O. M. Reynolds assisting. Additions each service; four baptized last night. There were forty-three added to the church here during my September meeting. Brother Reynolds is laboring with the church now, and is a fine singer and preacher. He is a great helper."

From A. G. Freed, Henderson, Tenn., January 6: "The Lord willing, I shall soon leave for Florida, not for my health, nor especially to escape the winter, but to preach the gospel. The first meeting will be with the church at Avon Park, beginning the fourth Sunday in this month. The church is planning for a good meeting. I know some of the members. They are among those who do things in love of the truth."

E. E. Shoulders has taken up the work in New York City. He thinks there is a good prospect, as indicated by the following note: "Mrs. Shoulders and I arrived in New York on January 7. We had regular services on Sunday, at which time I preached. We find a vigilant, zealous, and congenial band of workers, small in number, but sound in the faith, hence strong. The general outlook for a great work is decidedly encouraging. My present address is Box 61, Station N, New York City, N. Y."

From C. D. Crouch, Port Arthur, Texas, January 11: "I have been reading the Gospel Advocate for about as many years as I have been a Christian, and more years than I have been preaching the gospel. Without saying anything derogatory to any of the splendid papers the brethren are publishing at other places (and I read several of them), I consider the Advocate the best paper published. I do not always agree with everything the editors write, nor with some other things that get into its columns at times; but, considering the limitations of all humans, perhaps the Advocate is as near perfection as it is humanly possible to make a paper."

From Horace W. Busby, Fort Worth, Texas, January 10: "During 1921 I held twenty-two meetings, preached four hundred and forty-two sermons (besides funerals and other talks), and had seven hundred and twenty additions to the congregations where laboring—more than four hundred baptisms. As a feature of this work I shall mention that as many young and middle-aged men obeyed the Lord during last year's work as any two years before. Better singing, better preparations, better advertising, better song books and more of them, better leaders, and a better standard of Christian living have characterized the work at every place visited, for which I praise God and give him the glory."

From C. H. Smithson, Texarkana, Texas, January 2: "Yesterday was a pleasant day for the saints in Texarkana. It was my happy privilege to preach for the Central church of Christ at the morning service. At night I was at Dudley Avenue, and I believe all enjoyed the service there. I have been preaching here nearly three years, but I have just traded my farm off and it is my intention to change locations soon. Any congregation that is interested in locating a small preacher may write me at once. There are some of the best of earthly pilgrims here, and I hope to find some wherever I go. I praise God for the noble work done by the faithful last year. Let all try to make this year the best yet."

A Commendation.—To whom it may concern: We, the undersigned, take this method of recommending Walter McMurry. He has been with us for about seven years, preaching for us once a month only when duty called him elsewhere. Under his preaching there have been about seventy-five members added to the church at Haywood and several at mission points. He is able and willing to defend Bible doctrine among any of the sects. While here he married a lady who is loved by all. He preaches so plain and reasonably that all like to hear him. While here he and his wife greatly endeared themselves to us. He leaves here to enter school at Berry, Ala. We pray God's blessing on them in their departure from us.—H. N. Shelant, R. R. Kirby, T. P. Bailey, elders at Haywood (Wedowee, Ala., Route 2).

W. M. Wilson, of Old Fort, Tenn., writes: "For the benefit of all who have written to me relative to the notice which appeared in the Gospel Advocate of December 8, I desire to state that it was sent to the Advocate by some one else. There are no opportunities along business lines, as was stated in the notice, that would justify any one disposing of his belongings to take chances on bettering his condition by coming to Old Fort. I take this occasion to answer all the brethren who have written to me relative to the matter and advise them to be cautious and not come on any wild-goose chase to Old Fort. Cleveland, Tenn., on the Louisville and Nashville railroad, only a short distance from here, is quite an industrial town and offers many inducements to those wanting a location in or close to town. There is a large congregation of disciples there, and the church, under the leadership of George W. Farmer, is in good working order. Brethren, you will make no mistake in locating in or close to Cleveland."

From Will J. Cullum, Rockwood, Tenn., January 14: "I have been a reader of the Gospel Advocate for a number of years (from my first recollections my father was a subscriber to this paper), and I believe that it was never better than at this time; in fact, it is better now than it was a few years ago. I am glad that there is not so much disputing among the brethren as in former years; and if there was none, it seems to me that it would have better effect upon the world. It is hard to explain to the less informed why the brethren contend that all should speak the same thing, and cite 1 Cor. 1: 19 to show that this is commanded, and also refer to the Savior's prayer in John 17 that we all be one, that the world might believe, and then find them disputing through the papers published by the brethren. Brethren, when there is a difference, why not adjust it by private correspondence, and not air these things before those who are weak in the faith or possibly babes in Christ? I am not writing this to provoke a discussion with any one; and should some brother desire so to reply, I have here made my first and closing speech."

From B. W. Davis, Ashland City, Tenn., January 12: "For the year 1922 the prospects look brighter than ever before in the personal experience of the writer. On January 1 I was with the church at Scottsville, Ky., and spoke morning and night to attentive and interested audiences. The brethren there are looking forward with great delight, earnestly endeavoring to advance the work of our blessed Redeemer. I expect to hold a meeting for them in the spring. On January 8 I filled my regular appointment at Sycamore, Tenn., with good attendance and interest prevailing. Arrangements are now under way for a mission meeting at Thompson, Ga., to begin on the second Lord's day in February and continue as long as the interest may demand. The congregations with whom I am laboring will support me in this work, with the help of a few individuals. I will need the assistance of a good singer and personal worker. Will some congregation or more cooperate in this work by sending some one to assist in this work? Brethren, the time is short; act quickly. Write me at once, so there may be no conflicting arrangements."

J. O. Golphenec, who is doing mission work in Montana, reports total contributions for November and December amounting to $184. He writes: "I have tried to write each donor personally, telling of the work being done in this field. If I have failed to write you, it is only one mistake of mine. I have been laboring among the Indians for the past few weeks, and as I saw no tables and but very little bedding in the homes of the Indians, I had to board at hotels. So my expenses were high; but I thank God that you have supplied my needs. I will meet the young Indian at Culbertson to-morrow and get him off to Abilene, Texas, to school. He will have to have some clothing before he starts, and his ticket alone will cost sixty-four dollars and sixty-two cents. This will have to be bought with borrowed money. However, I believe this is the Lord's work, and I have no fear of loss in the Master's cause. On January 15 I shall begin a meeting at Sumatra. This is a Methodist town. At this place the doors were locked on me last September, but now I am invited to return. I hope for much good to be done in this town. I thank all those who have helped to feed my family, thus making it possible for me to preach the gospel in this neglected field."

From F. P. Fonner, Buffalo, W. Va., Box 81, January 12: "During the fall months I received personal help to the amount of $124.50, for which I am very thankful indeed. May God bless and prosper all the donors. Some of this went into the meetinghouse sometime ago, and some of it was used to pay for coal, medicine, clothing, and other necessities of life. The expense of building the house of worship has very nearly ruined me, with no chance of any return, unless my friends will help me out of my present troubles. I have more in this house than any other person. I was forced to sacrifice in order to relieve others who could not pay without robbing their little ones. I feel that those having a heart of pity will help me when they understand this. My condition is such that I should have an emergency fund on hand all the time. I may yet reach a point where an immediate operation may become necessary in order to save my life. In that event, I could not, within myself, pay expenses. Please address me at Buffalo, W. Va., Box 81. As to mission work, I am doing all I can; but as I am not able to travel, it is mostly personal work. We are having some very good meetings here now. If my friends will help me and I get stronger, I hope for better things this year."

T. C. Fox preached at Chapel Hill, Tenn., last Lord's day. He is devoting all his time to preaching. He has two Sundays unemployed—the second and fourth in each month. He would be glad to hold protracted meetings. He is a good man and an earnest gospel preacher. Write him at 1603 Russell Street, Nashville, Tenn. He writes: "I gave up my work with the grocery company the first of June in order to hold meetings that I had arranged for. I held seven meetings during the summer and fall, closing the last one the first week in October. Since that time I have been unable to obtain work, as I had been doing for the past three years. I have promised to hold some meetings next summer. I would be glad to arrange for other meetings. I can arrange for meetings before the fourth Sunday in July or after the second Sunday in September. I would be glad to hear from any congregation that could use me for any of this time. I would be glad also to arrange to preach for two other congregations on Sunday, one on the fourth Sunday and one on the first Sunday. My meetings for the past summer and fall were much better attended and with much better interest than for the past two or three years. I baptized forty-two persons and seven were restored to fellowship."

From Thornton Crews, Rogersville, Ala., January 11: "Sunday was a busy day with us. I preached twice at this place and once at Oliver, a small congregation near here, and attended a business meeting here in the late afternoon. On the first Sunday in this month I preached twice at Mount Carmel, seven miles east of Rogersville. We had good crowds at all of these services in spite of the unfavorable weather. I am expecting to do more preaching this year than I have ever done in any one year. I will go to Athens each fourth Sunday during this year. Brother Brents was located there in 1921, but saw fit to go to other fields to labor this year. The brethren there do not feel able to assume the burden of supporting a man for full time; hence, I was requested to take up the work. Our crying need is for more workers. I am now the only preacher actively engaged in the work from Huntsville to Florence, a distance of seventy miles. In this territory we have about twenty-eight congregations. In checking up my work for 1921, I find that I preached two hundred and fifteen times, baptized fifty-six, and had thirty-eight restorations. I have been in this field two years, and have had about one hundred and fifty additions from all sources. May the Lord continue to bless us with success."

The sudden death of Dr. Elam F. Srygley at Newberry, Mich., occasioned great sorrow among numerous friends. The following is taken from the Nashville Banner of January 13: "Dr. Elam F. Srygley, son of Elder and Mrs. F. B. Srygley, of this city, died on Wednesday night at Newberry, Mich., where he had served for the past twelve months as assistant superintendent of the Michigan State Hospital. Dr. Srygley's body will be brought to Nashville for burial. Dr. Srygley graduated from the medical department of the Vanderbilt University in 1913, and served on the medical staff of the New Jersey Hospital until the outbreak of the World War. He immediately enlisted for service and made a splendid record in the Second Division. He was twice cited for bravery and was awarded the Distinguished Service Cross and the Croix du Guerre. One year ago he was married to Miss Geanne King, of New York City. Dr. Srygley is survived by his father and mother, his wife, and several brothers and sisters. He was a brother of Dr. Paul Srygley and Theodore Srygley, of this city; Roy Srygley, of Washington, D. C.; and H. F. Srygley, of Morganton, N. C. His sisters are Mrs. L. J. Belcher, of Tarpon Springs, Fla.; Mrs. Wilbur Funk, of Pittsburg, Pa.; and Miss Birdie Srygley, of Nashville." The funeral services were conducted last Monday by F. W. Smith and A. B. Lipscomb from the Lindsley Avenue Church, in Nashville, in the presence of a large concourse of sorrowing relatives and friends.

Editorial

The Lord's Day.

BY J. C. M'Q.

Man will observe days. Christmas Day and the Fourth of July are days almost universally observed by the people of this nation. Now we have Armistice Day, November 11, which day ended the World War. Each day stands for something, and the importance of each should not be belittled.

The Lord's day stands for much to the entire world. It is not for one nation to the exclusion of another, but for every nation and every responsible being under the sun. Christians to-day do not realize what an asset the Lord's day is to them. It challenges everybody to a fresh consecration to God every seventh day. It is a perpetual monument to the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the grave. On the Lord's day, or first day of the week, the apostles were "filled with the Spirit," baptized in the Spirit, and on the first day of the week, or the Lord's day, the church of Christ was established. It is thought that Christ ascended on the Lord's day. After Christ's resurrection we find the disciples meeting upon the Lord's day. Luke tells us in Acts 20: 7: "And upon the first day of the week, when we were gathered together to break bread, Paul discoursed with them, intending to depart on the morrow; and prolonged his speech until midnight." From history we learn that the Christians during the first century almost universally observed the Lord's day by gathering together to break bread and to devote the day to the study of the Scriptures. Again, we read: "I John, your brother and partaker with you in the tribulation and kingdom and patience which are in Jesus, was in the isle that is called Patmos, for the word of God and the testimony of Jesus. I was in the Spirit on the Lord's day." (Rev. 1: 9, 10.)

The Spirit does not inform us on what day Christ was born. Had it been important for us to know and observe the day of his birth, the Spirit would have revealed the day of his nativity. But we do know the day in which he triumphed over death and arose a victorious conqueror over death, hell, and the grave. In his victory he took from Satan the power of death and brought hope to Adam's race. "Now late on the Sabbath day, as it began to dawn toward the first day of the week, came Mary Magdalene and the other Mary to see the sepulcher." (Matt. 28: 1.) The Lord's day is so important to Christians that they should use the advantages the day gives them with greater zeal and earnestness and especially with more devotion to the worship. Well does the Spirit admonish Christians: "Let us hold fast the confession of our hope that it waver not; for he is faithful that promised: and let us consider one another to provoke unto love and good works; not forsaking our own assembling together, as the custom of some is, but exhorting one another; and so much the more, as ye see the day drawing nigh." (Heb. 10: 23-25.)

Both social and spiritual joys are experienced from the proper observance of the Lord's day. It is food to the "inner man" that develops and strengthens the soul. We may not be able to tell how it does it any more than we can tell how our daily food supports and sustains the physical man. We know that the worship on the Lord's day cheers, strengthens, and develops the spiritual man. It is reasonable to suppose that the child of God who sits at the table of the Lord upon the first day of the week has not wandered far from the path of duty during the week; at least, he has not wandered so far that he does not come back where he belongs on the Lord's day. This does not apply to the hypocrite, for he is wholly wrong and has no communion with God anywhere. Having no fellowship with God, he has none with Christians. I have the first person yet to observe who can and will not worship God on the Lord's day, "a day of joy and gladness," who is worth much as a Christian. The Christian who refuses to feed upon Heaven's food for spiritual sustenance is sure to die a spiritual death. "Be not deceived; God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap. For he that soweth unto his own flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth unto the Spirit shall of the Spirit reap eternal life." (Gal. 6: 7, 8.)

BY F. W. SMITH,

This, the last installment of Brother Mark Collis' paper before the Congress of Churches assembled in Louisville, Ky., the latter part of 1921, for the purpose of seeking a remedy for the distracted state of affairs, deals with Frank Garrett's testimony before the Winona Convention, and the recommendations of the United Society:

Frank Garrett came from China to the Winona Convention. He was before the Convention, where he made a statement and answered questions. A stenographic report of what he said was taken and published. No other conclusion can be reasonably drawn from that report than that Brother Garrett, and other missionaries in China, are in favor of receiving the unimmersed into our churches when conditions are propitious for it.

The United Society made two recommendations which were approved by the Convention. In substance, they were:

1. To comply with the request of our China missionaries to give further time for considering the questions of depriving our churches in their mission of the right of self-government and of receiving the unimmersed into our churches.

2. To appoint a commission of representative men and women to visit the fields of the Orient for the purpose of heartening the missionaries, and of bringing back to the Executive Committee and to the brotherhood the sense of a more intimate fellowship in our world-wide service of Christ.

The Winona resolution does not reiterate that of St. Louis. It rather implies that the commission is expected to encourage the missionaries in their views. The words, "bring back . . . the sense of a more intimate fellowship in our world-wide service for Christ," seem to imply that sanction shall be given our missionaries to enter a compromising movement in China of which they are evidently anxious to become a part. According to the resolution, the purpose of sending this commission is not to discover real conditions in China; not to see if there were any grounds for Mr. Baird's statements; not to ascertain if the reports concerning radical teaching in Nanking are true; not to learn how far our missionaries in China are committed to that rationalistic theology which has caused hundreds of godly men and women among the missionaries of other bodies in that land to protest most emphatically and to organize against its baneful influence; not to discover wrongs, if there be any, and to find a way to correct them; but, assuming that everything is just as it should be, this commission is to be sent "to hearten the missionaries, and to bring back the sense of a more intimate fellowship in our world-wide service for Christ." It is but reasonable to suppose that this commission will be composed of men and women selected to carry out the purposes for which the commission is created.

There is much that might be done by a commission of intelligent, competent, faithful men and women. Two things should be looked into and one thing should be accomplished.

1. China seems to be a fertile field for the new theology. These destructive views which are held by so many of our preachers and college professors at home have received a hospitable reception among missionaries in China. It is claimed that rationalism is taught in colleges there. It was recently stated that of the twenty-six graduates sent out from a Union Christian College, all but two returned to heathenism. Missionaries in China who love the Lord and his word are aroused. A league of such men has recently been formed with more than a thousand members to counteract these influences. We have not learned of a single one of our missionaries being associated with this movement, although a letter inquiring with regard to this was sent to one of our leading missionaries in China six months ago. This is a vital issue. On which side of this question do our missionaries stand? Are they believing and teaching the faith of our fathers, or is their teaching such as to undermine that faith? In view of this situation, it would be well to send as members of this commission some capable men who are not sympathetic with destructive criticism and the new theology.

2. Some business men should be sent; men who love the Lord; men fitted to look into matters of finance; men who can throw some light upon questions that have recently arisen as to statements made that, according to the audited report of the United Society, our work in China began thirty-five years ago; that in that time we have spent in China about one million dollars; that for this expenditure we have a membership of twelve hundred and fifty, and of these, three hundred and two, almost one in four, are paid workers; and that, after the expenditure of all this money and the efforts of so many workers, we have not a single organized church with elders and deacons, and not one, as far as information goes, that could be self-sustaining if American aid were withdrawn. Certainly it would not be amiss for the commission to inquire into the reason for our having so little to show for the expenditure of so much money and the employment of so many workers in a period covering more than the third of a century.

3. Something more should be accomplished, something of a different character. In some of our mission fields, perhaps in all of them, there are men and women who have no sympathy with the policy that Mr. Garrett and his associates seem to want to pursue. These are the people that need heartening. Is there a lone missionary in China? Are there little groups in India or Japan or the Philippines? Are there faithful workers in Africa? Are there missionaries anywhere who are troubled about conditions on the foreign field—about their associates holding lightly the authority of God's word, about the growth of rationalism among those whose real success in the foreign field depends upon unquestioning faith? If there be such—and there are such—let them be sought out; let them be encouraged; let them be urged to remain steadfast and immovable in their faith; let them be assured that a great brotherhood in America is behind them, ready to sustain them with their prayers and their money, and that they shall lack for nothing as long as they are true to God and to his word. A commission doing this at this time would be worth all the money spent upon it; but money, given by self-denying people, for the purpose of saving the world, but spent on a commission sent to hearten men and women with whom the will of the brethren has more authority than the will of Christ, will be worse than wasted.

In conclusion, certain questions might be asked:

1. How is it that after making charges that open membership was practiced in China, that elders who were not immersed had been appointed, and that evangelists receiving the pay of our society, who had not been immersed, were preaching for us—all of which was denied by our board and our missionaries—how was it that, after making all these assertions, Mr. Baird was retained in the employ of our board? If one employed by a business organization had brought equally damaging accusations against that organization, charges which, it was claimed, were not true, how long would he be retained in its employ?

2. Many of us thought that the statements of the China missionaries and the Medbury resolution adopted at St. Louis completely discredited C. C. Morrison and what he stands for. Certainly, if he had so grossly misrepresented the situation in China as the board and missionaries claimed that he had, C. C. Morrison, the undaunted advocate of open membership and of extreme radicalism among us, the man that has, perhaps, caused more trouble in our ranks than any other man, is not entitled to public recognition by the General Convention. But C. C. Morrison was given the place of honor on the Winona program, being selected to sound in an elaborate address the last note of the Convention.

3. The still closer alliance that was formed at Winona with the Association for the Promotion of Christian Unity, which seeks a basis for the union of Christians, not upon a "Thus saith the Lord," but upon expediency, indicates the spirit of our missionary leaders. Mr. Herbert Willett and Mr. C. C. Morrison were made directors of this association. They both stand for the kind of union that missionaries want in China. Our churches were asked to provide in their budgets material help for this association. Is not this enough to show what kind of union those that had control at Winona would like to see on the foreign field?

4. The United Society has become a mighty organization among us. Some say it is autocratic and dictatorial. Recently it has laid hold of our State organizations. In Kentucky, instead of our good, old-time county meetings, where we met for a day to enjoy fellowship and to consider the problems of our local congregations, we are now to have meetings lasting two days, given up chiefly to the discussion of the claims of the various departments of our United Society. So the great machine takes control of our State organization. Our State Board invites the Board of Education, the Board of Temperance and Social Welfare, the Association for the Promotion of Christian Unity, to cooperate with it in sending out the Budget of Askings. Have we not created a mighty machine which imperils the independence of our churches?

5. St. Louis sends word to our preachers what they are expected to do. It is a matter of common report that those who do not submit are marked men, and that the influence of the great society is employed to keep such men out of our influential pulpits, and to put into them men who will do the will of St. Louis. If this policy prevails, if our ministry should come to dread the power of our United Society and cravenly submit to its dictates, shall we not fill our pulpits in the next generation with a set of timeservers rather than with men of God, men of strong faith and of undaunted courage?

If we have not reached a crisis in the work of our missionary organizations, the writer of this paper does not know what a crisis is.

It is not for me to discuss what we shall do. Only this: our missionary organizations belong not to those in authority over them, but to our brotherhood. Let us not surrender them, but, by every proper means, seek to arouse our great brotherhood, that it may so reorganize and change the policy of our United Society that it may be known everywhere as the uncompromising advocate of New Testament Christianity.

The most remarkable thing connected with this whole situation is the seeming surprise manifested by the more conservative element of the society brethren over the power and influence centered in the United Society, which is a centralized ecclesiasticism with the churches firmly within its grasp.

It is strange indeed that they could not see from the very beginning the very thing in principle which they now have fully matured. The history of the religious world all around them was sufficient evidence to warn them against their first departure in organizing institutions unknown to the New Testament to do what God had left for his church to do, and their only remedy lies in a complete return to original and primitive ground.

Review of the Payne Book.

On account of numerous and various extra obligations wholly beyond my control and including a number of cases of illness in connection with my work with the Campbell Street Church, in this city, the next installment, Chapter V, of my review of the Payne book, which should have appeared in this week's issue, is unavoidably delayed one week. It will appear, the Lord willing, in our issue one week from to-day, January 26. M. C. KURFEES.

Our Workers.

We are glad to announce to our workers and friends that the receipts on the Gospel Advocate last week were more than they have been for any one week during a number of years. Many are waking up to the fact that by their hearty coöperation in pushing the circulation of the Gospel Advocate its usefulness will be greatly increased. No paper can succeed without friends and workers.

Last Thursday the Gospel Advocate received for subscriptions over one hundred dollars from Dr. S. T. Hardison, Lewisburg, Tenn. He is one who never fails us. Every year he sends a long list of subscribers to the paper. He does it because it is a good work and because he believes a Christian paper should be in every family. He knows that a good paper in the home stimulates those who read it to more zeal and earnestness in the service of Christ. Christian parents should exercise much carefulness in the selection of literature for their children. A Christian paper is an assistant of every faithful preacher of the gospel. Such a paper helps and strengthens the elders of the churches in their work of tending the flock. Every faithful elder is glad to have a good, religious journal in the hands of every member of the church. The wise and efficient elder uses his influence to circulate a religious paper among the members of the body.

We want an efficient worker for the Gospel Advocate at every post office. Such a worker would collect back dues and secure new subscribers and renewals to the paper. By the proper effort the number of subscribers at almost every post office may be greatly increased. If you will undertake the work, write us at once for samples, suggestions, and full information. We will do all within our power to make your efforts a success.

We would be pleased to hear from those who are working to get the Matthew Henry Commentary. This commentary is great and is of much service to all who use it. Any student of the Bible will profit by its use. All commentaries should be used with a grain of salt. If you have already secured a number of new subscribers, but not the required number to secure the commentary, write us and we will arrange to help you. Churches should present a copy of this commentary to their preacher. Make him happy by giving it to him.

You do not know what a valuable pen you are missing if you have failed to secure one of the fountain pens that we are giving for two new yearly subscribers to the Gospel Advocate. We have never offered before such a high-grade pen for a premium. In any store you will pay for the pen at least $2.50 and probably $3. The "Capitol" lever self-filling fountain pen is made of 14-K gold, spring tempered with special care, pointed with hard iridium. It is a first-class fountain pen. Better get busy and secure one before the offer is withdrawn. If you wish to send only one new subscriber at $2 a year, add one dollar, sending three dollars, then we will give you the pen.

If you are in arrears, pay your back dues to January 1, 1922, at the rate of $2.50 per year, and then renew from January 1, 1922, at $2 per year. It is important that you do this. It is a hardship on the publisher when many are in arrears. His bills must be met promptly. Doubtless those in arrears do not think of this, or they would pay up. We are now stating the fact to you, so that you will favor us with your prompt remittance. Let us make 1922 the best year of all for the Gospel Advocate.

PELOUBET'S NOTES FOR 1922 NOW READY.

"Peloubet's Notes" has been issued for forty-eight years with ever-increasing popularity and usefulness, which fact alone is a wonderful argument for its value and helpfulness. It is rich in material, comprehensive in its scope, and practical in its treatment. Every superintendent, teacher, and scholar will find in it his own personal requirements. The editor of The Outlook says: "We give first place to Peloubet's." Marion Lawrance, the noted Sunday-school worker, writes: "How this standard commentary has been able to maintain itself during all these years, growing annually stronger and richer, is a marvel to the Sunday-school world. Personally, I do not see how any Sunday-school teacher can hope to do his best without the rich, full helps found in these 'Notes.'"

This is the big Bible class in the church of Christ at Rome, Ga. It is one of the largest classes among the churches of Christ in this State. O. W. Whatley, the efficient and esteemed teacher of this class, is an energetic and untiring worker. Though he has been in the church only four years, and never went to school after he was eleven years of age, yet he is a man "mighty in the Scriptures." His class is still growing. It now numbers about seventy-five students.

God's Fools Forgive.

We must commit the folly of forgiveness of our enemies, Germany and the Central Powers against which we fought belong to our world, and must be won to our fellowship. There is one way, and only one, to do it. We must clothe ourselves in the disposition of good will toward them, putting off all feelings of revenge and fear. That is what God did to the human race. While we were yet sinners Christ died for us. Herein is love, not that we loved God, but that he loved us. Fire kindles fire. The forgiving disposition creates the penitent disposition. Then forgiveness becomes an active force, expressing itself in fellowship and mutual service.

A hard saying, you object. Perhaps. But the only persons toward whom you can exercise forgiveness are your enemies. Whom else can you forgive, other than your enemies? And do not think of forgiveness as an amiable disposition cultivated as a personal virtue to your own credit and for your own benefit. It is the mightiest engine for good ever put into the hands of man—God's own special prerogative passed on to us. By means of it he works redemption; by means of it we reach fellowship and change enemies into friends. The best of us need it from others as well as from God. Happy are those who have large opportunity to exercise it freely and widely!

We are living in a broken and disheveled world. In affairs domestic and foreign we are troubled and confused. Great industrial upheavals menace the commonwealth. There are wars and rumors of wars. In all these things we can hopefully look for victory if we but loyally accept the foolishness of God, which is wiser than men.—Brent.

If every year we would root out one vice, we should sooner become perfect men.—Thomas à Kempis.

MATTHEW HENRY'S COMMENTARY FOR OUR READERS

The greatest preachers of the past two centuries attribute much of their inspiration and usefulness to Matthew Henry's Commentary on the whole Bible. Born in the seventeenth century, his name and his work still live and are household words. Thousands of homes treasure this commentary second only to the Bible, and many a man traces his right start to the loving advice of Matthew Henry.

Charles H. Spurgeon said: "Every minister ought to read Matthew Henry entirely and carefully through once at least. He will acquire a vast store of sermons; and as for thoughts, they will swarm around him like twittering sparrows around an old gable toward the close of autumn." Dr. Philip Schaff, compiler of Schaff's Bible Dictionary, pronounces it "the best practical and devotional commentary for English readers."

The management of the Gospel Advocate is fortunate in securing twenty-five sets of this unrivaled commentary, which will be sent as a premium to every reader who will send twenty-five new subscribers at the regular subscription price of $2 per year. This is undoubtedly the most attractive commentary offer ever made. You will receive six portable volumes of twelve hundred pages each, large, clear, unbroken type, with substantial Roxborough binding. If you wish to pay cash, the price for the six volumes is $17.50, not prepaid. When sent as a premium, we pay all charges.

A Little Carpenter.

Close beside my bed at night
A little workman sleeps,
And, waiting for morn's early light,
His tools at hand he keeps.

So when the lids lift up each day,
And two brown eyes appear,
"Come, little carpenter," I say;
"O, see! The day is here!"

Then up my little workman springs,
And how the work does fly!
While merrily his gay voice rings—
"Who'll quicker build than I?"

Foundation posts he first puts down,
And fastens them with vim
In two small waiting shoes of brown;
He buttons sure and trim.

The sides he boards up in a rush,
With coat and trousers gray;
Nails down the roof with comb and brush—
The house is done, hooray!

A Concentrating Plant.

Martha Ralston came home from school one night with a determined look and more books than usual.

"We learned a new word at school to-day, mother," she explained. "It's a long, hard one—con-con-tra-tion. It means putting your whole mind on what you are doing till it is done. Miss Mason says if we would do that we could do our work in half the time it takes now, and have the rest of the time for other things. It is true; I know it is. I spend two hours on home study and waste half of it talking or playing. To-night I'm going to concentrate, and then maybe I'll have an hour more to work on Christmas presents."

The Ralstons were such a comfortable family to live with. When one had a new plan, the others all tried to help it along. So when Martha spread out her books and set to work, the rest let her quite alone.

"It's so easy, mother," whispered Martha, delightedly, when she changed books at the end of fifteen minutes; but almost at that same instant there was a clatter of feet outside, the front door flew open, and in rushed a gay party of young people who wanted to take big sister May to a concert.

One of the young men, who was fond of children, tilted Martha's chair until she rolled out of it, and in the romp that followed she forgot there was such a thing as concentration. When it was all over, she glanced at the clock in dismay.

"O, mother! Twenty minutes wasted!" she cried, and flew to her books again.

All went well for ten minutes more, then there was a shriek from the kitchen that struck terror to every heart. As one person, the Ralston family hurried out to see what had happened.

"I told them to send me sliced bacon, and they sent me a big, ugly chunk. I thought I'd slice it to-night in case I should oversleep, and look at that!" wailed Katie, flourishing her wounded forefinger. "It's a piece of my mind they'll get in the morning."

When Katie's finger was safely tied up, Martha ran back to the living room to find ten more minutes gone. She was working hard to make up the lost time when a tiny draft from somewhere struck the light globe over her head, and it flew, Fred said, "into a million pieces." Not near so many as that, of course, but it took a long time to find them all and to put on a new globe.

Martha gazed at the clock despairingly. A whole hour gone and very little done.

"Mother, I ask you, how could any one concentrate in a place like this?" she exclaimed.

"It isn't always so bad as this; but there will be many interruptions. Do the best you can to-night, and I will put my thinking cap on," said mother, soothingly.

Martha had great confidence in mother's thinking cap: so she was not at all surprised when she came home the next night to find the new concentrating plant all ready. The old piano nobody ever played on had been moved out of the alcove into the attic, where it was just as well off and not at all in the way. The old dining table had been moved into the vacant place and covered with felt; and the big student lamp had been brought down and polished and filled. It had a green shade; gave a soft, clear light; and was warranted not to explode without warning. The alcove curtains shut this cozy corner quite away from the rest of the living room.

"This is to be the children's study," said mother, smiling, "and there will be just one rule: Anybody that wants to talk must get up and get outside at once. Visitors won't disturb you if you keep still, for they won't know you are here; and if there is any unusual noise outside, you must not notice it. That is partly what concentration means—paying no attention to what doesn't concern you."

"That's what Miss Mason said," Martha agreed; "but when people roll you around and things explode on you, you can't help being disturbed. I sha'n't mind just noise. If it gets too bad, I'll put my fingers in my ears."

It was Father Ralston who first called the new study a concentrating plant. A concentrating plant, he explained, is a place where ores are crushed and worked over and valuable metals taken out of them. The young Ralstons, he said, were getting something more valuable than gold out of their "plant"—precious knowledge and precious time. Martha agreed with him. Her lessons were better prepared; and yet she easily saved an extra hour for other things.—Baptist Boys and Girls.

Nell's Economy.

"Let's go in here and get ice cream," suggested Grace.

"I can't afford it," returned Nell. "My allowance won't hold out till the end of the month, if I don't economize."

"O, economize!" snapped Grace. "I think it's little to be always thinking about every five cents before you spend it!"

Nell said nothing. Her father was poor, and Grace's allowance was twice as large as hers. Yet the next day as they walked home from school together Grace exclaimed: "O, dear! I forgot I needed new gloves and did not ask mother for the money. I've spent all my allowance, and she won't let me charge things. How provoking!"

"I can lend it to you if you like," said Nell, quietly, taking out her purse. Grace hesitated and then accepted.

"Thank you so much, Nell! I'll give it back to you next week."

A girl stopped them to ask for a contribution to the Red Cross. Nell had a quarter to spare.

"I'm so sorry! I spent my last penny on soda water," confessed Grace.

A little newsboy proffered a card, asking contributions for a case of destitution; and for this, too, Nell could spare a dime, while Grace had nothing.

"Your way is the best, Nell," Grace was obliged to own. "My allowance is larger than yours, and yet you have had money to lend and to give for charity, and I spent all mine on myself and have nothing to show for it. I'll try your way after this."

"It's only not to waste it," said Nell, simply.—J. L. Glover, in Junior Life.

Notes from the "Golden West."

BY W. HALLIDAY TRICE.

The year 1921 is past! Its pleasures and pains, blessings and blunders, fortunes and failures, are forever gone. We have passed another milestone on our journey to the tomb. We are one year nearer eternity than ever before. Solemn indeed is the tread of time! We have turned another leaf in the book of life. What shall we write upon its fair page? The future is shrouded in mysteries and uncertainties, and it is well that it is so. We should not seek to penetrate the veil. Let us play our parts well each day, and we will be prepared for whatever comes.

Five years ago yesterday I left Memphis, Tenn., for Fresno, Cal. The time has passed so swiftly and pleasantly that it seems but a few months since I left Tennessee for California. While I would enjoy a visit to the dear Southland and to the good friends of former times, I am still very much in love with the "Golden West" and would not think of leaving California. Since I have been in Fresno I have been laboring with the Nevada Avenue congregation, and I am glad to state that this has been our best year. In looking over the record, I find that seventeen persons were baptized during the year 1921. This is a small number, but it is the largest number that has obeyed the gospel in a single year since I have been with the congregation. We have also had several persons to place membership with us during the year. The financial record shows that the contributions in 1921 were just a few dollars less than in 1917, which was the best year since I have been here. There was a decided decrease both in interest and contributions in 1918 and 1919; but with the beginning of 1920 interest and contributions began to increase, and the year 1921 was decidedly the most fruitful of the five in visible results, and the contributions were practically as good as in 1917. The congregation is in good condition, and we are looking hopefully forward into the year 1922. This should be our best year, and I am sure it will be. As I have been giving a great deal of my time and energy to the insurance business for more than four years, I have repeatedly insisted that the brethren secure the services of some one else for this work; but they think I should not give up regular preaching, and they continue to urge me to remain with them. I have promised to continue with them until a suitable preacher can be decided upon and secured.

Beginning on Sunday, December 11, and continuing till Sunday night, December 18, Brother Larimore conducted a meeting for us. He preached some good gospel sermons, and we enjoyed them. One young man was baptized during the meeting. On December 22 Brother S. H. Hall stopped off, on his way from San Francisco to Los Angeles, and delivered one of his stirring and enthusiastic sermons. His short visit was greatly enjoyed, and we hope to have him with us again sometime. I regret that he has left our State, but I know he will do a good work in Nashville. However, we hope to have him with us again sometime, as very few people remain in California as long as he has without returning.

Glorify God in Your Body.

So inconsistent are mankind, they abuse their poor bodies most cruelly, most wickedly; they treat them as a boy does a plaything; sacrifice their well-being to every idle whim of the mind and every low caprice of the appetite. If they are remonstrated with, they will pay no heed; they say, "O, I am very well," or, "I am never accustomed to think of my health," or, "I don't believe this will hurt me." They will go yet further; they will shut their eyes to the plainest indications of suffering health; they will not notice little ailments; they will think they are nothing and persist in all their evil practices, and all their friends encourage them; until at last the mischief gets a little worse, they become what they call ill, and all is terror and distress. A fuss is made, as unreasonable as the former neglect. Everything is sacrificed to this once-despised health; and yet when it is regained, it is only to be again trifled with in like manner. . . . I do not advocate people trying to keep well out of a cowardly fear of being ill or suffering pain or losing life, but as a religious duty, in order that they may render to God the full service he demands of them.—James Hinton.

Among the Colored Folks

Report of Work Done.

BY M. KEEBLE.

On December 13 I went to Centerville, Tenn. On arrival, Brother Jones met me at the station and informed me that he was conducting a meeting there. I found that he had greatly interested the people and the attendance was excellent. Brother Jones is a strong preacher, and his humble spirit will impress any one. He asked me to assist in the meeting, and I gladly consented. I preached that night, and a young lady school-teacher made the confession and was baptized "the same hour of the night." Brother Jones preached the next night and left on the following morning for home. I remained there another week and had one more addition. The white church of Christ assisted in supporting me while there, and they also attended the meeting.

On December 19 I was over in Gray's Bend, about four miles from Centerville, preaching in a little schoolhouse. The attention was good, and I am expecting to hear of some good results in the future.

On December 22 and 23 I preached at Goodrich, Tenn., with nice crowds each night. This is a splendid field. The white Christians here did much to encourage me.

On Christmas Day I preached at Center Star, in Hickman County, morning and night, to very large crowds. I remained over three days with them, preaching and searching the Scriptures. The church was much edified.

On December 29 I preached at Air Rock, in Hickman County. One young man confessed Christ and was baptized.

On the next day I left for home, to be with my family a few days, and on the first Lord's day in the new year I preached at the Jackson Street Church. This is where my membership is, and a place that is dear to me. Although we have passed through some hard trials at this place, the future looks good to me. The attendance was good both day and night. Brother Dowell, a young man just beginning to preach, spoke at night. Brother S. W. Womack did some good work at Jackson Street; and though he is dead, it still lives. Brother A. C. Campbell, who was a collaborer with Brother Womack, was present, and the church enjoyed having him. Brother Henry Clay, who is growing old and feeble, is a great blessing to the church, and we are proud to have him.

On the first Tuesday night in 1922 I was with the Jackson Street Church,

This is our regular prayer-meeting night; but as there was to be baptizing, Brother Campbell was asked to preach, and he gave a splendid talk on baptism. Brother Alonzo Jones was also present. Sometime ago the church and Brother Jones had a little difference, and he came to see if we wouldn't adjust the matter scripturally. This was done, and we want all to know that the Jackson Street Church and Brother Jones are in full fellowship again. Brother Jones is opposed to division, strife, and envy among God's people. I am sure he will suffer in many respects, but all that will live godly must suffer. I pray that God will give him grace to overcome. I am now ready and willing to indorse Brother Jones as a sound gospel preacher. Brethren, let us all work hard to bring about perfect unity among brethren wherever we go.

I am now in Birmingham, Ala., where I labored so hard last year, and I am glad to find them all faithfully serving the Lord. May God's blessings rest upon Brother W. C. Graves and Brother J. H. Davis (white), who have met and trained these brethren and sisters how to worship God according to the New Testament teaching.

My work for the year 1921 resulted in one hundred and forty-three baptisms and fifty-nine restorations. This makes eleven hundred for the nine years that I have been preaching the gospel of Jesus Christ, and yet I feel like I could have done more. Brethren, pray that I may hold out faithful to the end. I am thankful to all who have fellowshipped me in this work.

For You.

For you He left His home on high;
For you to earth He came to die;
For you He slumbered in a manger;
For you to Egypt fled, a stranger;
For you He dwelt with fishermen;
For you He slept in cave of glen;
For you abuse He meekly bore;
For you a crown of thorns He wore;
For you He braved Gethsemane;
For you He hung upon the tree;
For you a final feast was made;
For you by Judas was betrayed;
For you by Peter was denied;
For you by Pilate crucified;
For you His precious blood was shed;
For you He slept among the dead;
For you He rose with might at last;
For you beyond the skies He passed;
For you He came at God's command;
For you He sits at His right hand.

Brother Ishiguro Visiting Churches.

BY NELLIE STRAITON.

Brother H. Ishiguro, of Tokyo, Japan, who came to this country a year ago last fall to study the Bible in Abilene Christian College, spent the holidays in central Texas in an effort to interest the churches of Christ in that section in missions.

Brother Ishiguro carries with him a display of Japanese curios, including Buddhist idols and images that the people of Japan worship instead of the true God. Besides these, Brother Ishiguro carries many other things that portray the customs of the people of the Orient.

Sunday morning, December 18, he made an interesting talk to the church of Christ at Irene, Texas. Sunday night was spent with the church at Hillsboro, Texas. Wednesday morning he addressed the Irene High School. His subject was "Customs of Japan."

During his stay in Irene he visited in the homes of Brethren J. F. Masen and J. M. Lewis.

Wednesday night he was with the church of Christ at Itasca.

Thursday, December 22, Brother Ishiguro was invited to speak to the High School in Hillsboro. After observing the class rooms and the building, he spoke to the students in the chapel on "Education and Religion in Japan."

Thursday evening Brother Ishiguro came to Cleburne and was entertained in the home of Brother W. E. Pittman. He came to Cleburne to meet the brethren of this congregation and get acquainted with the churches of the county. Sunday, Christmas Day, he went to Godley and spoke to the church there, and was gladly received. He also visited Grandview, Rio Vista, and the church here in Cleburne. All gave him a hearty welcome, and each place contributed to his necessities, and promised they would assist him in his work. Brother Ishiguro makes friends wherever he goes; he is so humble and consecrated, so anxious to learn the customs of the American people.

Parker Church contributed to him through the kindness of the county missionary, Brother C. A. Buchanan. He did not get to visit Parker, as his time was all taken. He enjoyed the trip very much, and often spoke of it being a happy Christmas; and the churches in Johnson County surely appreciated having him visit them, and they hope he may find time to come again. Cleburne Church is planning to help in the Japan work; and since getting acquainted with Brother Ishiguro, they will surely be more anxious than ever, seeing what the simple gospel will do for the people of Japan.

Brother Ishiguro continued his visit, going to Fort Worth. Here he visited the five churches of Christ, going, on December 30, to North Side Church. Sunday morning, January 1, he was at the Central Church. In the afternoon he proceeded to Arlington, and from there to South Side. He then returned to Abilene Christian College, where he is attending school.

Brother Ishiguro wishes to thank each and every person who has helped him in any way. To all the churches he sends his thanks for their hearty cooperation. He wishes especially to thank Brethren Bird Ray Lewis, Raymond Pittman and father, and Miss Nellie Straiton and father, for their help. Also he mentions as one of his helpers Brother C. A. Buchanan, of Cleburne, to whom he is very grateful.

A True Lady.

I was once walking behind a very handsomely dressed young girl, and thinking as I looked at her beautiful clothes, "I wonder if she takes half as much pains with her heart as she does with her body?"

A poor old man was walking up the walk with a loaded wheelbarrow, and just before he reached us he made two attempts to go into the yard of the house, but the gate was heavy and would swing back before he could get in.

"Wait," she said, "I'll hold the gate." And she held the gate until he had passed in, and received his thanks with a pleasant smile as she passed.

"She deserves to have beautiful clothes," I thought, "for a beautiful spirit dwells in her breast."—Exchange.

Field Reports

Kirbyville, Texas, January 2.—I was with the faithful at Cravens, La., the last night of the old year and the first day of the new. I am to preach for them on the first Sunday in each month. I was at Honey Island, Texas, yesterday, with a young lady baptized in the evening and a very large audience at night. I have July and September open for meetings. If you can use me, write.—J. S. Daugherty.

Covington, Ind., January 2.—Our meeting closed here last night. There were several baptisms. Our last audience was among the largest, if not the largest, although the meeting had lasted over five Sundays. There are some fine people in Covington. The Evergreen Club of the Baptist Church challenged us for a debate on the "societies." The challenge came from boys, and some of our boys will take up the matter. They wanted us to affirm a negative. I hope they will not back out altogether.—Earnest C. Love.

Alabama City, Ala., January 9.—Elder T. S. Williams preached for us on last Lord's day. The attendance has increased to nearly fifty. Brother Williams has been of great service to us in building up the congregation here, and has refused to accept anything for his work. Since our last notice of the work here I have received more letters than I have been able to answer, from our brethren who want to come and work in this field. We thank all of them for the interest they have taken in the Alabama City work, and we hope to have a large congregation within a few months.—Jake Hamilton.

Little Rock, Ark., Box 554, January 10.—The work at Little Rock is going forward. The Twelfth Street church of Christ is doing good work on Lord's day. Brother Barber preaches twice a month, and Brother Harden preaches once or twice a month. They have Bible study at Brother Harden's home every Tuesday night and prayer meeting every Thursday night. G. W. Toland is minister for the congregation that meets at Vogel Hall, in North Little Rock, and I preach for them when here on Lord's day. The sisters have a Bible study on Tuesday evenings, and we have singing every Wednesday night. Our work is situated so that both congregations can attend the services of each congregation during the week. I can accept a call or two for meetings in Tennessee or Mississippi in August and September.—W. F. Lemmons.

Fort Worth, Texas, January 9.—Yesterday was a good day with the Southside Church, this city. Among the many good things that marked the day was the appointment of three bishops to supplement the number we had already. They are good men, loyal to the Book, and men of ambition and enterprise, and the prospects of this congregation are now far brighter than ever since my acquaintance here. There have been several additions since last report, and the work continues bright. This is my third year here with Southside, and I rather expect it to be the last year of my labor with them; and I am prospecting a little into the future, but rather think I will devote all my time after my work closes here to protracted-meeting work. I do not know yet at what time I will cease to labor here, if at all, but I will be able to make announcement of the matter before summer time. Brother C. R. Nichol will assist us in a meeting in June, and we expect it to be our best one yet. May the new year be full of blessings for all God's faithful workers.—Tice Atkins.

Montgomery, Ala., January 4.—During December there were three baptisms at Catoma Street Church, and one put his membership with us in the same month, making the total increase in our enrollment for the year 1921 fifty-one. We were very much rejoiced on New Year's Day when five adults united with us. I am sending herewith the report of our year's work. I am sure many churches and ministers are failing to accomplish anything worth while because they fail to definitely plan any work; hence nothing is accomplished. It means very little for an evangelist to go out and preach the gospel and report so many "additions," and these left without competent leadership to drag along, and in many instances to disband, having spent some time quibbling over whether or not they would use "literature," or agitating "rebaptism," or discussing "individual" communion sets or half a dozen other untaught questions which will not in the least bother if the congregation has wise, scriptural leaders to keep the work planned and directed. We are getting along well at Catoma Street because we are busy. We do not have time to quibble over untaught things.—F. M. Little.

Mineral Wells, Texas, January 6.—The brethren in Mineral Wells have a mind to work. Some two years ago, when the congregation had about sixty members, the opportunity to do good was opened to them by the Presbyterians in offering to sell them their beautiful brick building, located on one of the best streets in the city. It was largely through the influence of Brother J. C. Reese, a man who knows how to build up the cause of Christ, that this deal was closed. The congregation now numbers about two hundred, and the building is too small to take care of the growing work. On the third Sunday in December Brother Reese made a strong appeal to the brethren not to retreat on account of depressing times, when money is so hard to get. "We need eighteen hundred dollars to meet one of the notes on our church building, and we are going to get it," he said. As a result, about two thousand dollars were contributed, and most of it that day. They have employed their minister for full time, beginning the first of the year. I wonder how many congregations have retreated on account of hard times? How many have stopped their religious papers? Brethren, let's not retreat, but face the issue like men, and never give up the fight.—Tom Walker.

England, Ark., January 4.—Mrs. Slater and I spent New Year's Day with the brethren at Little Rock. We enjoyed three splendid services. I preached in the afternoon at the Old Soldiers' Home. It was a pitiful sight to me, and yet a source of joy and pleasure to think that I was able, in a feeble way, to contribute something to their pleasure and enjoyment. I was glad to be with the brethren at Little Rock again after an absence of eight years. I sang in a meeting there for Brother Borden eight years ago. At that time there were only a few members, and they were meeting from house to house, and our meeting was largely a missionary effort, assisted some by the brethren at large. I thought at that time that our efforts were all in vain, but later the same year these brethren purchased a small house belonging to the Presbyterians, and from that time the church began to grow and prosper, and now have a six-thousand-dollar house, well located, and have secured the services of Z. D. Barber for half time. So we never can tell when we are doing good in our missionary efforts. May we do more and more as the years go by. It was an enjoyable trip to me. May God bless them in their every effort for good. I will begin work with the church at Beaumont, Texas, next Sunday, the Lord willing. Pray for me.—Will W. Slater.

BY M. E. SMELSER.

This debate began on December 27, at Rock Creek, Ala., between O. C. Dobbs (church of Christ) and J. T. Robinson (Primitive Baptist). It was well attended and everybody seemed to enjoy it. Some of our old men had never heard a debate before. The propositions discussed were the general church question and apostasy. The best of feeling seemed to exist between all parties. C. F. Parker moderated for Robinson; the writer, for Brother Dobbs. Mr. Robinson is a very good debater. He quoted Eph. 2: 19-22 in support of the establishment of the church, went back to the garden of Eden, and finally came back to the mount of Galilee; he also contended that Judas was saved and could not be lost. But he was hard pressed. Brother Dobbs is a good preacher and a good debater. He understands how to handle the word of God and to refute error. The church is well pleased with his work in defense of the truth. We think that good will result for the truth.

Japanese Coral.

About sixty-five thousand pounds of coral, worth seven hundred thousand dollars, is taken each year from the coral beds of Japan. The work is done by divers, the master diver receiving and grading the coral as it is brought out. Wholesale and exporting firms keep representatives there to inspect the coral and make bids for it. The coral has much to do with the value. The most expensive is "boke," a pale quince color; next in value is pink, then white, light red, and dark red.—Exchange.

Obituaries

Reasonover.

Merville K. Reasonover died at the Morningside Hospital, Tulsa, Okla., on December 22, 1921, at the age of thirty-seven years, seven months, and twenty-three days. He was the eldest son of Brother John E. and Sister Mary F. Reasonover. Born in Smith County, Tenn., on April 29, 1884. He obeyed the gospel in baptism at the age of seventeen years, and worshiped with the church of Christ at Carthage, Tenn., until the family moved to this country, about seventeen years ago. Funeral services were held in the Christians' meetinghouse at Bixby, Okla., in the presence of a large audience, the writer speaking words of comfort to the bereaved. He is survived by his father and mother, one brother and one sister. His father is an elder of the church at Bixby. His mother is a devoted mother and bears her grief with Christian fortitude. So they do not sorrow as do others who have no hope. The body rests in the Bixby cemetery.

PATTI E. GORRUT.

Farnsworth.

On November 27, 1921, Sister Peninah Farnsworth breathed her last and thus began to rest from her labors. She was born in Madison County, Tenn., on August 12, 1832; was reared in McNairy County, and there lived until 1869, when the family moved to Center Point, in Henderson County. She was married to Brother Hamilton Farnsworth in 1852 and became the mother of eleven children, only five of whom were reared beyond infancy. Sister Farnsworth became a member of the church at the age of seventeen and, beyond question, lived one of the purest, best, and most self-sacrificing of mankind. She was faithful, loyal, and true to her husband, family, friends, and to God. She practiced that religion that is pure and undefiled; and when she died, no one lost an enemy. She had had her coffin made, her burial robe prepared, and services planned for several years. In the presence of a host of friends, her funeral was conducted by N. B. Hardeman.

Zeebuyth.

My father, B. Zeebuyth, was born in the Netherlands on April 23, 1848. He came to the United States in 1867. In 1868, in Holland, Mich., he married Miss Hannah Owen, and shortly afterwards moved to Grand Haven, Mich., where they lived six years, and where he also united with a Dutch sect about the same in doctrine as the Scotch Presbyterian Church, of which his father was a minister in the old country, as also his oldest brother. From there he moved to Grand Rapids, Mich., where he came under the teaching of the church of Christ (called the "Christian Church"), and was immersed into Christ in 1880. Soon afterwards, under instructions of an old Brother Hibbard, he learned of the unscriptural practices (innovations), and commenced then and there to speak against them both publicly and privately. In 1887 they moved to Montesano, Wash. To them were born four sons and four daughters. Two sons and two daughters preceded him in death, as also our mother, who died on November 1, 1908. Father passed away on December 25, 1921, at the home of one of his sons at Portland, Oregon. Father's prayer for us was always: "May our merciful Heavenly Father grant that you all may so live that when your earthly career is ended, we at the resurrection of the dead may all be reunited around the throne of God, to sing praises with all the redeemed throughout a never-ending eternity." Mrs. E. A. ANDERSON.

Report for 1921.

BY CARL BARNETTE.

There are few of us who do not get our share of life's trials, temptations, sorrows, and joys. We all have to meet them, and some of us have more than others, especially when we undertake a public life for the cause of righteousness in all of its spheres; but when we have the strong arm of the Lord to lean upon, "whom shall I [we] fear?" (Ps. 27: 1.)

For twenty-six years I have been a reader of the Gospel Advocate. There is no publication that I appreciate more than I do the Advocate. Its critics are more or less upon the wrong side and cannot compete with its arguments for justice and truth. Its true purpose under my observation is to instruct people in the way of the Lord, not adding to or diminishing therefrom. I have found a few brethren (some preachers) who stood with its critics, yet occasionally I note them calling for aid through its columns. I have found many who were once subscribers to the Advocate, but who, when R. H. Boll ceased his relationship as first-page editor, let their subscriptions expire, not to renew them again, contending that the Advocate did not treat Boll right. The way I see these reasonings, they are too biased to investigate the matter. One brother expressed himself: "If you could show me, I would not believe it." But, in my opinion, the paper gets better as it weeds out the tares. Let its works live for time and eternity.

I will now give a brief report of my evangelistic work for 1921.

I began at Berea in January, with only six persons present; yet on December 11 there were one hundred and seventy-two. This church had suffered from both external and internal matters. It is very difficult to settle old troubles, and I find that the best way to succeed is to just place the plain facts of the gospel before them without invitation. In so doing, clamoring, backbitings, he-gossipers and she-gossipers will disappear and create a new folk by renewing their minds in the gospel of love. I think the work is growing rapidly.

At Rhodes the hindrances are by uninformed brethren, and also lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God—know-alls.

At Union the work has progressed, with four additions. Some preachers have come through this section contending that the use of the Gospel Advocate literature is sectarian from start to finish, and it is almost impossible to get them to keep up a Sunday school. There is only one hope, and that is to teach the young people whose minds are receptive the word of the Lord more accurately. In many localities in the South this is the only ray of hope.

For the existing conditions there is a reason. Those of us who have preached to them had to do so and charge the expense to our wives and children. We have to resort to some secular work to make a living, and therefore we cannot devote our entire time to preaching "the whole counsel of God." One or two meetings a year or every other year does not teach people their whole duty. The South will never get out of this chaotic state until established churches come to its rescue in this great mission field. Brother S. H. Hines' report in the Advocate is a beginning. What churches in Alabama and Tennessee will subscribe to such a work in Southwest Alabama?

My life's work principally has been in this mission field. I have done more preaching and received less of this world's goods than any one who has preached for a quarter of a century. I gave seventy-eight days, at an expense of $92.60, to preaching in 1921 (this does not include Sundays), and received only $169.31 for my work. I can name one preacher who preached at one place a week and whose railroad fare to and from was $3.44, yet he received $100 for his week's work. He remarked to me: "I just won't preach without they pay me." My motto is to do my duty if every one else fails. Brethren, who will subscribe to this work?

On May 27-30 I preached at Goodway, and the third week in August I preached at the same place. My audiences were made up mostly of young people. I never had more attentive hearers. I believe the seed sown there will bear fruit, much fruit, if cultivated in the future.

I then went to Berry, Miss., and then to Brewer, Miss. Beginning on October 1, I held a series of meetings at Prospect Church, near Curry, Ala. I find at all these places, where there is no regular preaching done, that there are isms and schisms of every phase creeping into their midst and destroying their love for the truth.

Socialism, Russellism, communism, sanctification (modern), and sectarianism creep into the ranks, because there are none able to defend the word. When I go to these places, those who propagate these things never attend the meetings, even upon a cordial invitation. And Mrs. G. H. Owen, who attended the discussion between J. A. Wayland and myself in Meridian, Miss., in 1912, said: "I do not know anything about Mr. Barnett, but one thing is sure—he knows how to handle Christianity against its invaders." Sister J. P. Huff, at Goodway, said: "Brother Barnette, those Mormons and Russellites and other 'ites' do not come to our meetings when you are here, because they know you can meet any of their arguments and refute them."

I have lost two mules this year, and my sickness cost me more than one hundred and fifty dollars, but I am planning my best year's work for 1922 at these destitute places. Who will help me to do it?

Unity in the Home.

BY H. M. PHILLIPS.

Some one has said that the home is God's first institution. This being true, it evidently has laws governing it, and these must be from Him who gave the home relation. Home without unity is but a foretaste of torment itself, and yet how often this is the case in homes! It is surprising how few are at unity, which really means happiness is not reigning there. Home should be the sweetest place on earth, but often it is a very bitter one. It should be as near perfect as possible, for the early training is largely responsible for the future state. Home is never forgotten. The relation of it is seen in all walks of life. The teacher, business man, officers, preachers, and all others can in a measure tell the kind of homes from which we come. Our characters betray our early training. The sad state in America is largely due to a lack of the right kind of homes. May the day hasten to come when there will be a revival of the old love for good scriptural homes instead of fashionable, worldly ones as to-day.

The parents should always be Christians. This will be for the best in every case. That means unity, the opposite means strife. Children reared by Christian parents are favored far beyond those who are not. The great trouble is, all parents who are called Christians are not, and the mere fact that a child is reared by such does not mean that good results will be had.

The husband should love the wife (Eph. 5: 25), and the wife should love the husband (Tit. 2: 4). Now, to my mind, that is the secret of the whole affair. Neither money, beauty, fame, education, smooth speech, nor anything else can take the place of love. They are two made one. (Matt. 19: 5, 6.) This will forever destroy divorces. Where real love reigns and they are one, no cause is sought for a divorce. But because a couple does not have a divorce is no special reason that they are one, only from an outward appearance. Sometimes we hear that home is the place we love most and fuss the most. It is too often true. Because an argument is had does not mean that unity is broken up. It may be the means of retaining it.

The best remedy to cure division and secure unity in the home is to daily read the word of God, pray often, sing religious songs, and teach and practice the word. Timothy hailed from a home like his mother did, one where the word was taught. (2 Tim. 1: 5.) Paul had more confidence in him because of such, and taught him to teach others. (2 Tim.

2: 2.) The Old Testament characters were to often teach the word to their children. (Deut. 6: 7.) What a change in the homes of to-day if the children were taught the word of God instead of "Mother Goose" and visiting shows!

Obedience is a necessity for unity. Children should obey their parents in the Lord. (Eph. 6: 1.) The parents should obey the Lord. (Heb. 5: 8, 9.) Where this is not done, no real happiness nor unity is present. Homes in general are void of this godly, solid advice. Obedience implies submission, and so stubborn are the inmates of many homes that they determine not to bow to authority. The wife needs to obey the husband oftentimes, not merely because he is her husband, but because what he says is right; and the same is true with the husband. Neither wife nor husband should obey one another unless it is fit in the Lord. (Col. 3: 18.) We are to obey no one if our Lord teaches different. (Acts 5: 29.) If all would just obey God's word, unity in the home would prevail.

There may be homes where none are Christians, and all live in peace, so far as the world calls peace; but in reality such is not of the deeper nature nor lasting, nor does it satisfy the full man.

Too many homes are trying to conform to the world, contrary to the word. (Rom. 12: 2.) And since the world is so divided, each one in the home has a part of the world idea different from the other, and it is not possible for all to see and feel

"Men's Ideas As to the Meaning of the Word 'Church.'"

BY L. G. WILKINSON.

In some articles recently in the Gospel Advocate, Brother Lee Jackson, among other things, says, under the above heading: "A certain class of men . . . look upon the congregations planted by the apostles as simply the beginning of a church as afterwards to be developed. . . . All of this is contrary to the facts of New Testament history. Each congregation planted by the apostles was in itself a unit as a complete institution, and did not exist as any part of an extended church. As the congregations are multiplied, the inspired writers mention them in the plural form, not singular." (See Gospel Advocate, December 29, 1921.)

I do not care to enter into any discussion with Brother Jackson on the question, but believing him to be wrong in his position, which I have frequently met in discussions with Missionary Baptists, I want to suggest some scripture passages which it is impossible to reconcile with his position that the word "church" in the singular cannot be applied to anything but the local congregation.

1. "The general assembly and church of the firstborn" (Heb. 12: 23.) To which of the local congregations can this be applied?

2. "The house of God, which is the church of the living God, the pillar and ground of the truth." (1 Tim. 3: 15.) Which one is the "house of God?" Or are they houses of God?

3. "Fellow citizens with the saints, and of the household of God; . . . built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone; in whom all the building, fitly framed together groweth unto a holy temple in the Lord: in whom ye are also builded together for a habitation of God through the Spirit." (Eph. 2: 19-22.) Which of the local congregations is the household of God, the holy temple? Surely it must be all of them together, everywhere, from the beginning to the end.

4. "Christ also loved the church, and gave himself for it, . . . that he might present it to himself a glorious

A Brand-New Book

"OLD LIMBER" or THE TALE of THE TAYLORS by DELONG RICE

"ALF and BOB TAYLOR, with their eloquence, their fiddles, and their fox hounds, have wrought for themselves a niche of eternal melody in the hearts of their country."

So states the author of this little book, which we present as the best product of the pen of DeLong Rice. Into one hour of reading he has gathered the strange and romantic story of the two most wonderful political campaigns of Tennessee—the thrilling tale of the happy comradeship and the lifelong rivalry of the two famous brothers—a disclosure of the remarkable and heretofore unpublished incidents that attended the political division of the Taylor family—the wonder of "The War of the Roses" that attracted the attention of the world—and the truth about "OLD LIMBER," the peerless and now immortal fox hound that played the leading role of sentiment in the political campaign of last fall, from the Mississippi River to the Unaka Mountains.

With a "Cast of Characters" extending from a President of the United States to a fox hound, the story touches a wide range of human sentiment; and through it all is the aroma of crackling camp fires and the music of the chase. THE BOOK is beautifully printed and bound, appropriately illustrated, and packed in a neat gift box, ready for mailing.

church," etc. (Eph. 5: 26-28.) Which of the local congregations did he die for, if he died for but one church? And which is this "glorious church," "prepared as a bride adorned for her husband?" (See Rev. 21: 22.)

5. Which one of the local congregations is "the true tabernacle, which the Lord pitched, and not man?" (Heb. 8: 1-4.) Which one is the "holiest," which we have boldness to enter into "with a true heart in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, and our bodies washed with pure water," "by a new and living way?" (Heb. 10: 20-22.)

6. "Which one of the local congregations is the "one body" into which we are all baptized by one Spirit, "whether we be Jews or Gentiles?" (See 1 Cor. 12: 13.)

I have always believed that we were baptized into the one body, the church of Christ or God, "which is his body" (Col. 1: 18), not into any local congregation, as the Baptists teach. There was no local congregation where the eunuch was baptized, the jailer and others, and we often now do the same thing. I think Brother Jackson is certainly wrong in this position and that the church which Christ built (Matt. 16: 18, 19) contains all the saved of earth of the gospel age, all whom God calls by the preaching of the gospel (Acts 2: 38, 39, 47): that all the members are mutually related as one family "in heaven and in earth" (Eph. 3: 55; Heb. 12: 22-24); that this relationship is in no way disturbed by their being members of different local congregations. They are all in the temple of God—one temple, one body, one church, etc.; and the only independence there is about the local congregation is such as is local in its nature, not general. I have believed this and practiced it, and I believe we all do to the extent that, wherever we may be, we meet and worship with our brethren as freely as at home, only, of course, not meddling with the local affairs and business of the congregations in which we have no local membership connections. "For ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus. For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ. There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female: for ye are all one in Christ Jesus." (Gal. 3: 26-29.) The unity could not be expressed with greater emphasis.

Confess Your Faults.

BY X.

"Confess your faults one to another, and pray one for another, that ye may be healed." (James 5: 16.) I believe this scripture is very often misapplied. I have seen it used many times to induce a brother to confess his sin to the church, when it says nothing about confessing a sin, neither does it promise forgiveness. The passage says, "Confess your faults," not sins, "that ye may be healed," not forgiven. A fault is something we have, not something we commit, and needs to be healed, rather than forgiven. A fault, according to Webster, is: "A moral failing; an offense less serious than a crime." We all have faults or moral failings; if we didn't, we wouldn't sin. We never commit a sin that is not caused by a fault, and we will continue to sin until we remove the cause. Lust is a fault common to all, and, "when lust hath conceived, it bringeth forth sin." (James 1: 14.) If we would be free from sin, we must remove the cause; and I think it far better to take advantage of the justice of God in giving us this chance than to allow our faults to germinate and bring forth their deadly fruit. So long as we have a moral weakness, Satan is going to attack us at that point, because that is where we offer the least resistance, and the chances are Satan will win the victory. "And sin, when it is finished, bringeth forth death." It is better to confess a fault and pray God to heal it than to allow it to cause us to sin and have to suffer its consequences, and finally have to confess the sin and pray God to forgive it. If you have a noxious plant in your garden, you do not wait till it goes to seed before you begin extermination; if you do, the chances are you will not have any garden. Neither should we allow our faults to "go to seed." It is useless to do that when we have the promise of "the great Physician" to heal them.

The Boy.

You can do anything with boys, but you can do nothing for them.

Unless a boy is given something to do to express his religion, it will mean very little to him.

Every virile boy will respond to a worth-while task.

If a boy is trained to serve his Master during the "teen" ages, he will probably desire to serve him for the rest of his life.

If he is not trained to serve, he will probably, and often does, become indifferent to religion.—Selected.

The Sight of the Soul.

BY G. C. BREWER.

The psalmist prayed: "Open thou mine eyes, that I may behold wondrous things out of thy law." Here is an inspired man, who was himself engaged in giving Jehovah's word to the world, yearning for power to see the marvelous beauty in the law of the Lord. The word of God is given for a light to the people, and it is the means that God uses to open the eyes of men; yet, strange as it may seem, this word cannot open the eyes of those who will not to see. It even seems to increase the blindness of such people, for to that class the gospel is a savor of death unto death. But even many of God's own children fail to see the wondrous power, truth, and beauty of their Father's word because they do not have their senses exercised to discern both good and evil, or because worldliness has blinded their eyes. They have no spiritual insight or soul vision. A worldly-minded Christian cannot appreciate the Bible, does not enjoy reading it, and, therefore, does not read it. God's word is spiritually discerned; and as the worldly Christian has no spirituality, of course he cannot see the glories of the word. Neither does he enjoy hearing others read or talk of the word of God, hence he rarely attends the services of the church; and when he does attend, the service to him is long and insipid and the sermon is tedious and tiresome. It is even possible for such a man to get into the condition that he will experience a feeling of revulsion at the thought of Bible study, of preacher and preaching. He is carnal-minded, and the carnal mind is at enmity against God. It hates God and his word. To be carnal-minded simply means to be fleshly-minded or to enjoy the things of the flesh: to yearn for that which excites the passions of the flesh and appeals to sinful desires. For this reason the carnal-minded Christian is seen more often at the picture show than at prayer meeting, and a Sunday picnic or Sunday baseball is much more attractive to him than the Lord's Supper and the communion with saints. Also a salacious sex story is much sweeter to him than the sweet old story of Jesus and his love told by a humble man of God. If such a Christian engages in the worship at all, he does it as a matter of habit and form and his part of it is simply mockery. He has no pleasure in God's service, and God has none in him. His prayer and his sacrifice is an abomination to Jehovah. (Isa. 1: 13.) In a certain town there is a man who has for years professed to be a member of the church, but he never goes out to worship except just in time, and stays just long enough, to partake of the Lord's Supper—which, of course, he would better not do. He says no preacher can interest him. Certainly not. But no doubt the newspaper with all its sordid stories engrosses him. Paul says to be carnal-minded is death, and no wonder. The carnal appetite indulged destroys all taste for things spiritual and incapacitates the man to feast upon the word of God, which is the food that keeps the spiritual man alive.

THE BLIND THAT HAVE EYES.

Isaiah speaks of blind people who have eyes. Some people are born without eyes—that is, physically blind. They cannot, therefore, enjoy the beauty of the landscape or the glories of the sunset. They cannot look with wonder upon the beautiful blending of colors in the peach and the apple and other fruits and flowers. The tiny iridescent shell of the seashore holds no interest for them. But there are other people who are endowed with sight, but who have no more appreciation of the wonders and beauties of nature than the totally blind. These have eyes, but still are blind. They stumble blindfolded through a riot of colors and a wilderness of wonders and see nothing. So it is in the spirit realm. There may be those who cannot see from lack of opportunity, but there are many others who have the opportunity, but will not see. When here on earth our Lord mercifully gave sight to those who were physically blind, but he severely rebuked and denounced those who were without spiritual vision—those who had eyes, but would not see, and ears, but would not hear. And we may well believe that those who lack opportunity for knowledge stand a far better chance to receive his mercy than those who are blessed with eyes and yet are blind—those who, because their "hearts are waxed gross," will not see. Jesus warned his disciples against this class in that picturesque and forceful figure of casting pearls before swine. Imagine a man going out into a muddy, filthy pigpen with a basket of precious pearls on his arm: see the fierce and hungry hogs rush at him squealing for food: see the man throw out handfuls of the pearls, and see the hogs run after the pearls only to trample them into the mud, and then see them turn and tear the man into pieces, and you will have the picture which Jesus gives of a faithful servant of God earnestly preaching the word to a band of self-satisfied, mocking, God-defying, would-be philosophers and infidels and moral reprobates. They have eyes, but they are blind. They know, and yet they do not know. They know as the hogs know. The hogs know that the pearls are not what they want, that they are not suited to their nature and needs, but they know nothing of the value of the pearls. This is exactly true with those who profess themselves too wise to believe the Bible and those whose souls are saturated with sectarianism. The divine message is not adapted to their wants and lusts, hence they turn away their ears. They trample the precious pearls into the muck of their mockery and ridicule.

BLESSED ARE THE EYES THAT SEE.

Jesus said to his disciples: "But blessed are your eyes, for they see: and your ears, for they hear." It seems evident however, that this referred to their willingness to see rather than to the clearness of their vision, for they did not always understand the sayings of their Teacher. And even at the time this language was used they were asking for an explanation of the parable. But the very fact that they were willing to ask for more light, to look again, to search deeper, instead of being ready to misconstrue and to reject the word, was reason enough to pronounce them blessed. And that was the very disposition which meant sight—meant understanding. The language that Christ used in reference to destroying the temple and building it again in three days was no clearer to the disciples than it was to the Jews; but whereas the Jews mocked him and made of this remark an accusation against him, the disciples trusted and waited. They did not know what he meant, but they believed that he was able to perform all his word. And their faith did not go unrewarded, for see how clear this all became after the resurrection! Such a disposition will always lead into the light, and a person who holds that attitude toward the word of God will always learn the truth. For one, therefore, to have soul sight or spiritual vision does not mean that one understands everything, but sees beauties where others do not see them, and he questions nothing that the Lord has spoken. Who does not believe that our Heavenly Father will guide such a person? For "the friendship of Jehovah is with them that fear him: and he will show them his covenant." (Ps. 25: 14.) And "if any man willeth to do his will, he shall know of the teaching, whether it is of God, or whether I speak from myself." (John 7: 17.) "For the word of the cross is to them that perish foolishness; but unto us who are saved it is the power of God." (1 Cor. 1: 18.) "We speak wisdom, however, among them that are full grown." (1 Cor. 2: 6.)

A lady once said to Turner, when he was painting: "Why do you put such extravagant colors into your pictures? I never see anything like them in nature." "Don't you wish you did, madam?" he said. The answer was sufficient. He saw them, if she did not. So believers, those with soul sight, like the prophet of old, see many divine wonders which worldlings cannot perceive. Lord, "open thou mine eyes, that I may behold wondrous things out of thy law."

It is safe to say that in this book you will find a bringing together of the most comforting messages ever written in artistic and convenient form. Besides the Bible, there are quotations from about seventy authors. It is attractively printed, with special decorations.

This unique volume is designed to serve as a fitting keepsake in memory of the dear departed. You will find a beautifully engraved memorial page on which the name may be filled in, together with dates of birth and death. Should you wish to present it to some other member of the family, there is a blank for this purpose.

Again, there will be many occasions when you will wish to write a note of sympathy. You will find it very convenient to include in your note a quotation from this volume. This is another distinct advantage. Flowers fade and lose their beauty, but "Consolation" may be kept always.

Nashville (Tenn.) Notes.

BY S. H. HALL.

The rush in closing out my work in California and in beginning in this city has thrown me behind with my correspondence; hence, I beg the patience of those to whom letters are due.

Let me say to the good people of Atlanta that their card shower missed us in Los Angeles, but was forwarded to us in one package to this place. Words cannot express our appreciation.

The work at Russell Street has started well. Two hundred and seventeen in the Bible study last Lord's day (January 15), about six hundred in the forenoon audience and three hundred at night, with two confessions, one from the Christian Church, and collections going above one hundred and forty-six dollars. In the afternoon we had a cottage service in the home of a man who will soon see his seventieth birthday, and, the Lord willing, he will be baptized to-night at the close of our prayer-meeting services.

These good people have spared nothing in giving us a warm welcome as a collaborer with them. As stated in a previous article, I came here with a feeling of fear. It seems that they must have learned about it and determined to remove it at the very beginning. I am so glad to say we are delighted. With a comfortable place to live in a block of the church house and a special bed for mother, all arranged for us by these splendid people, makes a man feel like working. May the Lord help us all to keep continually in mind that there is no work so great as that into which he has called us, and that we impress the world with the fact that we believe it is so by what they see us put into the work in time, whole-heartedness, and money.

I hope to say something soon about all the congregations in this city, but felt constrained to say this much about the congregation with which I am immediately connected.

REMEMBER MARCH 28, 1922.

As most of the readers of the Gospel Advocate know, and all the disciples in Nashville, March 28, is the time for the revival to begin at the Ryman Auditorium. This is Tuesday night, and there is one thing that must be done—viz., make standing room even a thing that cannot be found in that large building. And to do this does seem to me a very little for us to do. Will you please think on the following reasons for my saying this is a little for us to do?

1. Who is at the head of the cause to be magnified and promoted by this meeting? Is it not our Lord and Savior? Who is so great as he? My very soul swells within me when I contemplate the fact that I can have a place in actually promoting a work that the eternal God and his Son are both in with all their power and grace to save! I wonder, and then wonder still, at times, whether the disciples of our Lord have really seen the work that is before them; if they have come into possession of a living faith in the true greatness of the work. Please remember that no man is to be exalted, but that the name of Jesus is to be magnified and glorified in our hearts with the hope that lost and undone souls will come to see their need of Christ. To fill and overrun the Ryman Auditorium, I say again, is a very little for us to do when thought of in connection with the true greatness of the work.

2. Then will you think of the fact that we have nearly forty congregations, all told, that have pledged themselves to do their best? Sometimes we make such pledges, however, and do not stop long enough to learn what is our best. We will have done our best as congregations when at the close of the first service, Tuesday evening, March 28, it is a known fact that every child of God in this city, who is physically able at that time, was at that service, and each one of us had some unsaved soul with us. I say, when you think of the number of congregations and individuals concerned, will it not be a little for us to merely fill the Auditorium to overflowing? Of course, the congregations out from Nashville and in adjoining counties will help; and when you think of this, the correctness of my statement becomes more evident.

3. Then think of the two splendid men we have to lead us in song and sermon. N. B. Hardeman, of Henderson, Tenn., is a great and good man, and we can expect a message at every meeting that will lift us up and make us better able to serve. C. M. Pullias is a power in song, and that he will lead this part of the work to glorious success goes without argument. These two leaders will do their part, and do it well. The one sorely needed thing is for the rest of us to see to it that we, individually, put our best in that effort and see the cause of our Lord and Savior magnified in this city as never before. The apostles well knew that they inaugurated on Pentecost the greatest movement known to man, and they never had the slightest fear that they could have crowds too large and too many additions at one service. They never had the slightest fear that too much money could be given and too much labor expended for this glorious cause. There is such a thing—and it is too much the rule among us—as having crowds too small and additions too few in number for the cause we represent. And when such is the case because of our own sins of omission and commission, we are in a bad way.

But we see success. Let us all, to a man, work steadily and persistently, with March 28, 1922, on our hearts. Let us have a few hundred more souls saved and with us before this date to join us in saving others. Do not forget the timely words of Brother F. W. Smith on this subject a few weeks ago.

One Who Does Not Forget.

BY B. C. GOODPASTURE.

Men are prone to forget their benefactors. Joseph showed much kindness to the chief of Pharaoh's butlers (Gen. 40: 9-15), one of his fellow prisoners; but the butler did not remember it long. Paul, during one of his voyages at sea, calmed the troubled hearts of all on board in the hour of storm and trial (Acts 27: 23-31); but, when the ship struck the sands, the soldiers were ready to kill the prisoners (one of whom was Paul), "lest any of them should swim out, and escape." Jesus healed ten lepers one day; but only one returned to give him thanks. (Luke 10: 11-19.) Though men may forget the Lord and his blessings, yet he does not forget his people and their services.

"God is not unrighteous to forget your work and the love which ye showed toward his name, in that ye ministered unto the saints, and still do minister." (Heb. 6: 10.) God does not overlook the services rendered his saints; he takes notice of us when we "bear one another's burdens." If the saint whom we serve be ever so humble, the service is none the less remembered: for said Jesus: "Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of these my brethren, even these least, ye did it unto me." (Matt. 25: 40.) Solomon said: "He that hath pity upon the poor lendeth unto Jehovah, and his good deed will he pay him again." (Prov. 19: 17.) Be the service ever so small, it shall not go unrewarded; for, again it is written: "And whosoever shall give to drink unto one of these little ones a cup of cold water only, in the name of a disciple, verily I say unto you he shall in no wise lose his reward." (Matt. 10: 42.) Cornelius was "a devout man, and one that feared God with all his house, who gave much alms to the people, and prayed to God always," and the angel of God said unto him: "Thy prayers and thine alms are gone up for a memorial before God." (Acts 10: 2, 4.) A poor widow cast her two mites into the treasury, and the Lord made her liberality proverbial. (Mark 12: 41-44.) Another good woman did "what she could" for the Master, in that she anointed his body with very costly nard, and of her noble deed Jesus said: "Where-soever the gospel shall be preached throughout the whole world, that also which this woman hath done shall be spoken of for a memorial of her." (Mark 14: 3-9.) In his last imprisonment Paul recognized the fact that "God is not unrighteous to forget" the labors of his people; for he wrote: "I know him in whom I have believed, and I am persuaded that he is able to guard that which I have committed unto him against that day." (2 Tim. 1: 12.) Speaking of a few of his faithful servants in Sardis, the Lord said: "But thou hast a few names in Sardis that did not defile their garments: and they shall walk with me in white: for they are worthy." (Rev. 3: 4.) There is, there can be, no other master so mindful of his servants and their sacrifices as is the Lord. "Wherefore, my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labor is not vain in the Lord." (1 Cor. 15: 58.)

NEWS ITEMS.

There were two fine services at West End Avenue yesterday (January 15). Two were restored. Our Bible-class attendance was also at high-water mark. At the morning service the congregation responded, with its characteristic readiness, to the support of the field work for this year.

Two were baptized at South Pryor Street on Sunday, January 8. Brother Hockaday is doing a fine work at South Pryor.

Hugh E. Garrett is in the second week of a good meeting at Lafayette, Ga. One baptism to date.

A Gentleman.

BY JOHN A. KINGMAN.

Surely a Christian man must be a gentleman. I use the word "must" with caution. According to common usage of the term, one may be regarded as a "gentleman," but he may sadly lack that which the word plainly signifies. He may in a sense be gentle, yet it is impossible for him to manifest real gentleness unless he cultivates all of the beautiful traits of a Christlike character. Every Christian grace is so dovetailed with every other grace that it cannot stand alone. Gentleness that is not supported by other Christian qualities "is dead in itself."

My eyes recently fell upon the following definition, quoted in the Expositor's Bible from the pen of a Dr. Newman in the volume on James: "It is almost a definition of a gentleman to say that he is one who never inflicts pain. He is mainly occupied in merely removing the obstacles which hinder the free and unembarrassed action of those about him, and he concurs with their movements rather than takes the initiative himself. He carefully avoids whatever may cause a jar or a jolt in the minds of those with whom he is cast—all clashing of opinion, or collision of feelings; all restraint, or suspicion, or gloom, or resentment; his great concern being to make every one at their ease and at home. He is tender toward the bashful, gentle toward the distant, and merciful toward the absurd. He guards against unreasonable allusions or topics which may irritate. He has no ears for slander or gossip, is scrupulous in imputing motives to those who interfere with him, and interprets everything for the best."

Ladies and gentlemen, we need gentlemen in the church of Christ. Let the brethren more zealously strive to be so, and may the lads of our hearthstones be so trained.

For I the Lord thy God will hold thy right hand, saying unto thee, Fear not; I will help thee.—Isa. 41: 13.

The Eldership.

BY T. W. PHILLIPS.

Not being an old man, nor a young man, either, perhaps I might say a few words on the question of the eldership worthy of a place in the Gospel Advocate, as well as the hearts and minds of the readers. In Tit. 1: 5 Paul says: "For this cause left I thee in Crete, that thou shouldest set in order the things that are wanting, and ordain elders in every city, as I had appointed thee." Then in verses 6-9 he names the following qualifications these elders to be ordained were to have: The men must "be [1] blameless, [2] husband of one wife [not two or more wives], [3] having faithful children [4] not accused of riot or unruly. [5] For a bishop must be blameless, as the steward of God; [6] not self-willed, [7] not soon angry, [8] not given to wine, [9] no striker, [10] not given to filthy lucre; [11] but a lover of hospitality, [12] a lover of good men, [13] sober, [14] just, [15] holy, [16] temperate; [17] holding fast the faithful word as he hath been taught, [18] that he may be able by sound doctrine both to exhort and to convince the gainsayers."

Now, with these things (qualifications) before us, I beg to suggest that when I find elders possessing them, I must reverence them above all other brethren as God's overseers and bishops of the church, with more authority than any other set or class of men in the church. But even then God will not allow them to "lord it over his heritage." They can only rule by example and love, with earnest entreaties, exhortations, and gentle rebuke. They dare not appear to be arbitrary, lest they establish laws of their own on the ruins of liberty abused to licentiousness. But as God's stewards, ruling by the word of God, in the spirit of meekness, over true and faithful Christian men and women, they will have little trouble, if any at all, in executing or carrying forward any righteous cause they may espouse. Should a matter come up that creates the least dissension and strife among the members, these elders will inquire diligently to learn if there is any real reason for the division; and, in my humble judgment, in a question like employing a preacher for a protracted meeting, or serving as evangelist for the church, or how much money the congregation shall put in a church building, or what plot of ground the house shall be erected upon, or other matters of like nature, these faithful bishops should voice the sentiment of the whole congregation, and then advise that the majority's views be adopted. And if the matter has been handled in the right spirit, I haven't a doubt but that the few will submit to the wishes of the many without a murmur. I know they will if they be Christians. Of course, when a "Thus saith the Lord" is at stake, men of God will not surrender to any other rule or wish, regardless of majority or minority. If God said it, that settles the matter.

But I beg to suggest that we are living in an age now when no human being is infallible. And I do most sincerely contend that the congregation, or church, that selects the elders to rule over them, acting in good faith, may at their own discretion withdraw all the authority they may have given to the said elders when in their judgment they should do so, and thus refuse to be in subjection to them in any matter. When the church feels that the trust or faith has been broken, it most certainly has the same right to decide it, withdrawing the rulership that it once imposed with as good grace as when conferring it. One, three, or five men may be selected to take the oversight of the flock of God in a given community, the same being selected by the church. But the church might make a serious mistake in these selections, and surely it has the right to correct that mistake. If not, why not? I most certainly oppose the "majority rule" as practiced by the Baptists and other sectarian bodies; for this would ignore the law of the Lord and establish the doctrines and commandments of men, as has already been proven by the digressive brethren, who are the biggest sect of all the sects in sectdom!

But, in all solemnity, I must and do protest against popery in the great church of God. Our elders are just men. True, they should always be of the very best men in the church; but often there are just as good men in the church who have not been ordained to the eldership as those who have been so ordained. And I am persuaded that sometimes elders might receive good advice, as well as give it, since they are not infallible. I also am persuaded that every local congregation has the right to settle its own troubles when trouble arises; and if the trouble is over things "not written," then the majority of the whole membership should immediately have the co-operation of the minority. Again, I can conceive of no graver sin than for brethren to resort to the courts (unbelievers) to have them settle troubles they themselves should have settled. Usually when brethren go into the courts to settle their temporal affairs, the riffraff "slowbellies" will rally and assert much activity until the matter is settled; and, strange as it may appear, those brethren who appeal to the courts will at once count the noses of all these former disgruntled kickers as the very best men in the church, and drag them into court and indorse them as the "elect of God."

Now, I cast this epistle upon the waters in the fear and love of God, hoping that it may do good, and praying, too, that it shall do no one any harm. And in the event some scribe should see fit to offer any criticism, I hope he will make it in the spirit of the Christ. One other thought and I am through.

The qualifications and characteristics that make men eligible to the office of elder, or bishop, are required by growth as Christians; and when men have grown into them, the whole church will recognize this fact, and can then assert it! According to my humble observation and experience, we have many self-appointed elders, and some who have been appointed by preachers who evidently acted in haste in the appointment. But whether self-appointed or appointed by other authority, I am sure that when a bunch of elders avow that, "We, the Elders [spelling it with a capital E], have general charge, supervision, control, and oversight of all the spiritual and temporal affairs of the church," that they are a set of would-be lords over God's heritage. This authority and control would allow them to be our "midwives," with the authority to name our children, etc., and to take my home away from me at their leisure and pleasure, and to assess the membership, dictating to them how much they should pay into the church treasury, and whether or not I can live on with my wife or surrender her over to one or all of them to have to wife. Such audacious claims to the right to rule and control the spiritual and temporal affairs of the church exceed "Roman popery." As a free man in the kingdom of God and his Christ, I protest against any such mischief-making, audacious, pharisaical authority. But when the elders, like a loving father, lead and kindly direct in the spirit of meekness and fear, pointing out the right and guarding against the wrong as a good shepherd, I shall lovingly submit to hear them in glad joy, and, like a dutiful son, listen to this fatherly counsel.

The Better Thing.

It may be glorious to write
Thought that shall glad the two or three High souls like those far stars that come in sight
Once in a century;
But better far it is to speak
One simple word which now and then Shall weaken their free natures in the weak
And friendless sons of men. —Lowell.

Among the "Hoosiers."

BY EARNEST C. LOVE.

The Covington (Ind.) meeting closed on Sunday night, January 1, after continuing over five Sundays. There were no large crowds and no excitement of any kind, but there was a steady interest through the whole meeting. This was my first meeting of any length in this State, or in this part of the country. Before now I have commented upon the difference between the North and the South in regard to hospitality, but I have always insisted that this applied to the non-Christian element. I still say this is true. A Christian is a Christian, no matter where you find him. As I have said before, I can see no difference in the way they treat me, nor in the way they treat each other, in the church. The brethren are as hospitable among themselves as any I have ever seen.

Some things I have observed here are worth passing on. This is the home of Brother Alfred Ellmore, now president of the Gunter Bible College, Gunter, Texas. He has lived here for over thirty years, and still claims this as his home. He has two sons, who are preachers, Will and Frank, who also live here. This is also the home of Brother Frank Cline, and until a few years ago Brother T. S. Hutson lived here. This church has been blessed with good preachers right along.

In its worship it follows what is called the "order of worship," based on Acts 2: 42. That is, they have their teaching first, then their fellowship, then their communion, and then close with a prayer. They have no Bible classes of any kind on Sunday morning, but various members of the body exhort and admonish one another. Their children are well taught in their homes, and so know as much of God's word as at any place I have been. However, it seems to me that if they had Bible classes of some kind on Sunday, say between ten and eleven (they meet at half past ten), they could teach many children whose parents are not Christians, and thereby win, not only the children, but the parents, too. This is being done in other places, and that, too, without any organization but the church, and without violating a single principle laid down in the Bible. At least, it seems so to me. But this is not to be construed as a criticism of the Covington church, for they are getting along in peace and bringing up their children in the Lord, and are as zealous and pious as the average church and I, for one, would not care to disturb them.

There are few women or girls in the church, if any, who wear dresses with low necks or short skirts or short sleeves. I have seen only one or two finger rings, and no beads, earrings, bracelets, or lavallieres. Very few of the men use tobacco, and there are two brethren who each have grocery stores, and they will not sell tobacco. I hope none of our brethren will take offense at these remarks, but I cannot help but approve of this. Let us hope that soon our brethren will do something to protect our young men from the cigarette habit, for truly it is alarming to me.

The preachers who live here are seldom at home, and very seldom preach on Sunday morning even when at home. However, there is no objection to preaching occasionally on Sunday morning. I was asked to occupy all the time time each Sunday morning I was there. There are several who can edify the church. Brother Fred A. Waggoner is the only man recognized or ordained as elder or bishop. I think there should be at least one more, and it seems to me they have material for more elders than one.

Two of the members teach in the public schools, and one, Brother Austin Ellmore, son of Brother Will, is to graduate this year from De Pauw University, at Greencastle, Ind. Brother C. A. Morgan has a son, daughter, and son-in-law in Harvard. I gave my school lecture, and it met with universal approval, so far as I have been able to learn. In this I took the position that in the not distant future Christians will have to educate their own children. De Pauw is a Methodist university, yet Brother Austin told us that he is being stuffed with infidelity at almost every lesson on the Bible. His father, however, has thoroughly taught him, and there seems no danger of his being led astray. But boys and girls less fortunately situated are in great danger, as any one can plainly see. These brethren seem to appreciate this fact, and are considering what may be done to protect our children.

This church has some remarkably good singers. The Eilmores and Waggoners may be especially mentioned, although there are several who are very good. It is known over town that the church of Christ has the best singing in town. But as I said before, they do not change song books very often, and that, at least in part, accounts for such good congregational singing.

The weather has been cold, and would have been called "very cold" further south, but this has not hindered the attendance. Also, it is worthy of note that every one who made the confession desired to go immediately to the water, and so every baptism took place "the same hour of the night."

After a sermon on "Church Props," the "Evergreen Club" of the Baptist Church challenged us to a discussion of the instrumental music and society questions. But they would consider only a one-night discussion, with us affirming a negative. The debate may develop later between the boys of the two congregations. Let us hope it will. The brethren should press the matter.

The shattered grandeur of the hills,
The little leaping lovely ways
Of children, or what beauty spills
In summer greens or autumn greys—
These are not gained by any toil
Of groping hands that plead and plod,
But are the unimpovertised spoil
Poured from the bursting stores of God.
—Orrick Johns.

MATTHEW HENRY'S COMMENTARY FOR OUR READERS

The greatest preachers of the past two centuries attribute much of their inspiration and usefulness to Matthew Henry's Commentary on the whole Bible. Born in the seventeenth century, his name and his work still live and are household words. Thousands of homes treasure this commentary second only to the Bible, and many a man traces his right start to the loving advice of Matthew Henry.

Charles H. Spurgeon said: "Every minister ought to read Matthew Henry entirely and carefully through once at least. He will acquire a vast store of sermons; and as for thoughts, they will swarm around him like twittering sparrows around an old gable toward the close of autumn." Dr. Philip Schaff, compiler of Schaff's Bible Dictionary, pronounces it "the best practical and devotional commentary for English readers."

The management of the Gospel Advocate is fortunate in securing twenty-five sets of this unrivaled commentary, which will be sent as a premium to every reader who will send twenty-five new subscribers at the regular subscription price of $2 per year. This is undoubtedly the most attractive commentary offer ever made. You will receive six portable volumes of twelve hundred pages each, large, clear, unbroken type, with substantial Roxborough binding. If you wish to pay cash, the price for the six volumes is $17.50, not prepaid. When sent as a premium, we pay all charges.

Nichol-Bogard Debate.

Recently I had the pleasure to engage Ben M. Bogard, Missionary Baptist, in discussion near Denison, Texas. Mr. Bogard is a very pleasant man to engage in a discussion, and makes an effort to prove the doctrine he has espoused by the Bible, and possibly his arguments are as strong as can be made for his cause. It is refreshing to find a Baptist who will contend for the doctrine he has espoused. Most Baptists are far from pronounced in their doctrinal views, even though they are loyal to their church services. I think good always comes from a discussion when properly conducted. I have engaged in many debates, and think in every instance good came from them. In the great number I have engaged in, there was one regarding which I was doubtful that good resulted from it; but in a conversation a few days since I learned of a number of men who learned the truth from that discussion, and that the church of Christ immediately became much stronger in that place. Recently one of our preachers who has been making efforts to grow popular with the sects and people generally felt called on to say that I was opposed to debates, after having engaged in more debates possibly, than any man among us. He spoke unadvisedly. I am fully convinced that we need many more debates than we have had in the past few years. Even members of the church need to be indoctrinated; the fundamental principles need to be grounded in the members. I have never conducted a debate that did not result in good; and if at the time of the debate there was not a congregation, one was immediately established in that section.

Colley-Tyndall Debate.

In Clarendon, Texas, Brother A. O. Colley engaged John Tyndall in a debate of eight hours on the question of instrumental music in the worship. Tyndall affirmed that the New Testament authorizes the use of instrumental music mentioned in these passages, it is proof that it was above the average as a sermonizer, but he lacks many of the essential elements of what is termed a strong man in the field of polemics. His position in the debate was that the church on earth is the "heaven" referred to in Rev. 14 and other such references; and as there is instrumental music mentioned in these passages, it is proof that it was in the church—"heaven." His position is, as all Bible students know, untenable, though in the hands of Tyndall, before people who do not study the Bible, he makes it look plausible. Brother Colley has possibly given more study to the question of instrumental music in the worship than he has to any one question. He was well prepared for the work in this debate and showed himself master of the situation at all times. A very remarkable development as the debate progressed was that Tyndall grew weaker all the while, whereas Colley grew stronger, his last two speeches being by far his best work, and it seems to me it was apparent to the entire audience that he towered above Tyndall and with the truth swept the last vestige on which he was standing from beneath his feet. The church of Christ in Clarendon will continue to grow. Eight years ago the Christian Church in Clarendon called D. A. Leek to meet Brother Colley in that place in a debate. At that time we did not have a congregation there, but at the close of the debate Brother Colley preached a few sermons and a congregation was formed. There have been a number to come to the church from the Christian Church since then, and I predict there will be others now. The congregation in Clarendon is due directly to the truth of the gospel, and indirectly to A. O. Colley's debate there with D. A. Leek. Tom Milholland is laboring with the church there now, and there is to be found no better man than he. They own a splendid brick house which will easily seat four hundred. Debates, when properly conducted, always do good. Let us have more of them.

Making the Churches Grow and Prosper.

BY JOHN E. DUNN.

A great deal has been written lamenting the fact that division, discord, and strife are so prevalent among us. What is the cause, and what is the remedy? A good physician always diagnoses the disease. After ascertaining the disease, he applies the remedy.

The disciples of Christ in recent years have been largely obsessed with the idea that they must always be on their guard and watching for something that is going wrong—some departure from the faith. It is also true that new doctrines and new ways are constantly springing up among us. Our attention is constantly attracted by these innovations. This is one of Satan's tricks by which he impedes the growth of the kingdom. Being so much engaged in destructive work has developed in us a contentious and destructive spirit. The result of such a course, which seems to have been forced upon us, is that we are constantly at war among ourselves.

Destructive criticism and the destructive spirit never get anywhere. They always tear down. I believe the finest quality of the New Testament churches—and I mean by New Testament churches those churches we read about in the New Testament—was the missionary spirit of those churches. Starting with Jerusalem as the beginning point, in less than fifty years the first Christians preached the gospel all over the inhabited earth and dotted the whole known world with churches. During the lifetime of the apostle Paul the gospel was preached in every nation under heaven, and their sound went unto the ends of the earth.

It is not necessary to be spending very much time on how they did it. The discussion will consume our strength and we will have no energy left for the work. We know how churches in Paul's day sent out preachers. We know how these churches coöperated with each other. We further know they succeeded.

Why do we not likewise? Why do we not send an evangelist to New York and keep him there until the church in New York is put on a firm working basis just like the church was at Philippi in Macedonia in Paul's day? Why is it that the brethren in Washington, D. C., can't get their house promptly paid for and have their hands untied so that this church can sound out the word in her long-neglected field? We are sufficiently strong in numbers and wealth. We may say we do not have the spirit and that there is too much destructive work among us, but that gets us nowhere. When Nehemiah with a handful of feeble Jews was rebuilding the walls around Jerusalem, the people had a mind to work. Nothing could divert their minds from the work. They worked and they worked. They were everlastingly at work, and God prospered them. Recently I read an article from Arthur Balfour, an English financier and statesman, on how to get the world back to normalcy. His theory was economy, rigid economy, such economy as we have never before practiced, and work, work, work—everybody go to work and keep at it. I believe his theory is the only solution to this problem of reconstruction. The same theory will work in Christianity. It is our only hope.

There are enough churches and disciples right here in Ellis County, Texas, to send a preacher to New York, keep him there, and amply support him until that work can be placed on a solid and going basis. There are probably twenty-five counties in Texas and as many more in Tennessee that can do the same thing. What will we do? Look on the fields. They are already white unto harvest.

Fountain Pure, Stream Pure.

BY LEE P. MANSFIELD.

A stream cannot flow above its fountain. A corrupt fountain cannot send forth pure water. We judge a thing by the source from which it sprang. Christ is the fountain from which we get Christianity. We do not judge Christianity by the way men live, but by Christ and his teaching. He was pure and holy, and his teachings lead one to a pure and holy life. If we desire to determine whether a thing is good or bad, we need only to look at the fountain or source from which it sprang. Take as an illustration instrumental music. From whence did it spring? Did it come from a pure or corrupt fountain? In Gen. 4: 21 we have this statement: "And his brother's name was Jubal: he was the father of all such as handle the harp and organ." But who was Jubal? He was the second son of the first man to practice polygamy. He was one of the descendants of Cain, who killed his brother. He it was who invented instrumental music. Can such a fountain as this send forth that which is pure and good? Instrumental music came from the same fountain from which we have revelings, dancing drunkenness, idolatry, and polygamy. When it was introduced into God's worship, it was by a man who had more than one wife.

Personal Notes.

T. H. Etheridge recently visited Holdenville, Okla., and reports the work there doing nicely under the leadership of Brethren Hall, Yates, and Billingsley.

J. W. Ballard, who has for some weeks been in meetings in California, reports a pleasant work. Six were added in the meeting in Fresno; three baptized in the meeting in Hanford, three restored.

C. H. Smithson, 113 State Line, Texarkana, Texas, writes that he has sold his farm and wishes to change his location, and says he will be glad to hear from any place interested in having him locate with them.

Ben West reports two more additions to the congregation in North Fort Worth, Texas, where he labors. A men's Bible class with thirty-six members has recently been started, which meets at six o'clock each Sunday evening.

D. S. Ligon recently preached for his home congregation, Denton, Texas, with an appreciative audience at the morning and evening services. Brethren Record and Elkins have recently preached in Denton, with attentive audiences.

J. G. Allen reports the congregation on C Street, Muskogee, Okla., as growing, which is the result always of activity on the part of the membership. Contributions totaling eighty dollars have recently been received to assist in paying for the building.

W. P. Skaggs, who labors with the church in Itasca, Texas, reports that they have more in the Bible classes on Sunday than they have members of the church in that place. This speaks in terms which should be seriously studied by those who oppose what is sometimes styled "Sunday-school work."

O. M. Reynolds, who labors with the church in Plainview, Texas, but gives much of his time to the places in the county which need the gospel preached to them, has recently assisted the congregation in Happy, Texas, in a meeting. One baptism. He also reports four additions to the Plainview congregation.

John E. Dunn is teaching six Bible classes every week and preaches on Sundays two and sometimes three times. He labors in word and doctrine in the church at Waxahachie, where he lives. He also preaches each month at Bardwell and Maypearl, Texas. He reports the work prospering. They are having additions every week.

C. J. Robinson, who is being supported by the congregations in Hill County, Texas, to do evangelistic work in that county, is, as all who know him expect him to be, busy in the work. Recently he established a congregation in Aquila with twenty members, who are now meeting regularly. When last heard from he was in a most interesting meeting in Rienzi.

M. C. Cuthbertson, who labors with the church in Denison, Texas, reports the attendance in the Bible classes there on Sunday to have reached two hundred and ninety-six. Though they have a new house with nine classrooms, the building will soon have to be enlarged, and they are now making plans to that end. Recently I had the pleasure to speak to the saints in Denison twice. They are elect of the Lord, and fellowshipped me in a debate I conducted near that place.

Batsell Baxter, who is a member of the faculty of Abilene Christian College, meets his classes regularly through the week and preaches at some place in reach of the school each Sunday. Brother Baxter is a graduate of the Nashville Bible School; and one of these days, vacation time, he will visit the churches where he labored in Tennessee when a "boy preacher." Texas churches keep Brother Baxter busy when he is not in the schoolroom. We need more men like Batsell Baxter.

W. T. Hines is among the active workers. Six days each week he works in his store, and on Sundays he is out preaching. Twice each month he is with the congregation in Blackwell, Okla., which is a congregation less than a year old, with forty-three members; and once each month he is with the Stillwell and Wynn congregations. I trust that Brother Hines will soon have his business in such shape that he can devote all his time to preaching. I would not undervalue the work of consecrated brethren who give most of their time to the business side of life and preach as they can, but I am certain those who are able to teach the truth should be busy all the time, and may the day soon come when we can keep each one preaching the word by mouth as well as by life.

S. E. Templeton reports the work in Altus and the environs much brighter than a year ago. The congregation in the regions where Brother Templeton labors are full of enthusiasm. Sunday and Sunday night Brother Templeton preaches for the church in Altus, Sunday afternoons he preaches to some congregation in reach of Altus, and then through the week he is busy much of the time preaching to congregations in reach of the city or at schoolhouses where there is not a congregation of Christians assembling each Sunday. With Templeton in Altus, Bankhead at Duke, and Hollis to soon have a man, you will continue to hear good reports from that section of Oklahoma. Brother Templeton makes the following report: "On December 23 I closed a debate near here with G. F. Slape, Missionary Baptist. There were two propositions discussed, baptism and apostasy. Mr. Slape manifested great weakness (what else could he do?) on both propositions. He does not know, it appears, what 'the last commission under which the apostles and evangelists of New Testament times labored' is. He was asked the following questions in connection with the proposition of apostasy: 'If a child of God should steal a horse, and never repent, would he be saved?' 'If a child of God should commit fornication, and never repent, would he be saved?' In answer to which he said: 'I am glad I serve a God who will take care of my shortcomings when I meet him in the judgment.' I said then, and now say, if such doctrine is actually believed and put into practice, it is a very dangerous doctrine."

PELOUBET'S NOTES FOR 1922 NOW READY.

"Peloubet's Notes" has been issued for forty-eight years with ever-increasing popularity and usefulness, which fact alone is a wonderful argument for its value and helpfulness. It is rich in material, comprehensive in its scope, and practical in its treatment. Every superintendent, teacher, and scholar will find in it his own personal requirements. The editor of The Outlook says: "We give first place to Peloubet's." Marion Lawrance, the noted Sunday-school worker, writes: "How this standard commentary has been able to maintain itself during all these years, growing annually stronger and richer, is a marvel to the Sunday-school world. Personally, I do not see how any Sunday-school teacher can hope to do his best without the rich, full helps found in these 'Notes.'"

At Home and Abroad

"All truth is harmonious, but we may not yet have discovered the harmony."

One young lady made the good confession at the Fanning Orphan School last Sunday following a sermon by A. B. Lipscomb.

F. L. Paisley changes his address from Henderson to Martin, Tenn. He will begin work with the Martin church on February 1.

I. B. Bradley has changed his address from Dickson, Tenn., to 906 Princeton Avenue, West End, Birmingham, Ala. Correspondents will please take note.

T. M. Carney reports the work in San Angelo, where he labors with the congregation, as progressing, with additions often to the number. Four additions recently.

H. P. McGrady, Telephone, Texas, closes a note to the Gospel Advocate thus: "Wishing the Gospel Advocate its most successful year, and our special regards to F. W. Smith, who may remember us."

From A. L. Wilson, Mayfield, Ky.: "I could not do without the Gospel Advocate. Every Christian home in the land should have it on its library table and its splendid news and truths in the hearts and lives of its occupants."

W. E. Morgan preached at Eighth Avenue, North, this city, last Sunday and Sunday night, to large audiences. Two persons obeyed the gospel. This is right. It is unnecessary for sinners to wait till the protracted meeting to obey God.

H. M. Phillips writes: "We are to have a get-together meeting of the churches of Chattanooga next week at the meeting place of the St. Elmo congregation. We hope to get more unity among the congregations. The work is moving on well at St. Elmo."

From A. T. Hamiter, Avon Park, Fla., January 21: "Wife has just undergone a surgical operation in Frazier Hospital, Dothan, Ala., and was getting on nicely twenty-four hours later. Some churches and individuals have sent gifts totaling twenty-four dollars toward the expenses."

From Samuel E. Witty, Los Angeles, Cal., January 16: "Our largest crowds at Central church of Christ yesterday. Several additions. Over one hundred enrolled as members the first three Sundays. Outlook encouraging. Brother Riggs reports good meetings at Sichel Street yesterday."

From J. S. Newman, Clifton, Texas, January 19: "The church at Clifton has not gone into winter quarters by any means. We have had a good interest all the winter, and we have had good turn-outs since the holidays. Two confessions last Lord's day and a good service and baptizing Wednesday night, and one took membership with us."

J. Porter Sanders preached at Twelfth Avenue, North, this city, morning and evening, last Sunday, to large and attentive audiences. Interest in the Bible school there continues to increase. There were three hundred and fifty present on Sunday morning. James A. Allen will preach for this congregation next Sunday.

Gladys Hamilton, Alabama City, Ala., writes: "I think the Gospel Advocate is the grandest paper printed, and the good I have derived from reading its splendid pages cannot be estimated in dollars and cents. May God's blessings ever be upon the managers of this paper, that they may teach the wonderful truths of God as revealed in his word, and that many souls may learn 'the way of the Lord more perfectly.'"

From Hiram Higgins, Fayetteville, Tenn., January 20: "I would like to be put in touch with a good colored preacher to hold a week or ten-days' meeting here sometime during either the month of June or July. We will have to use the colored public school building, and of course could not get the use of it until after school closes. There has never been a meeting held in this place for our people, and I personally want to have this meeting and pay the expense of it myself, if I can arrange for it."

S. E. Templeton says in a letter to Brother McQuiddy from Altus, Okla.: "I notice the proposed changes in the work on the Gospel Advocate. I sincerely trust these changes will improve the paper as you hope, but it is hard to think of how the Advocate will be improved. All things considered, I do not hesitate to say that the Advocate is the best paper among us. I do, however, believe that the change you mean to make in the plan for carrying advertisements in the Advocate will be to an advantage in some ways. If there is any way that I can help in making the Advocate better, do not hesitate to call on me, as I shall be glad to be used that way."

From F. B. Srygley: "It was a long, sad trip we made to Newberry, Mich., but there was some comfort in the many expressions of sympathy which we received. There is no congregation of Christians there, and, so far as I could learn, no effort has ever been made to establish one. There is a desire in the hearts of some there for better things in religion than they have. Some effort has already been made for union, but it failed, as usual. The effort was to get union by compromise rather than an unconditional surrender to the word of God. While we all know that Christ prayed for union and that the apostles taught it, yet it is only desirable when we unite on the Bible, and it alone. All efforts at union which does not bring people to the word of God as their guide in religion ought to fail."

From R. A. Craig, Shelbyville, Ky., January 19: "Last Sunday I was at Bohon, Ky., and spoke to fine audiences at both morning and evening services. Thomas D. Rose was at Shelbyville. Brother Rose will work with the Parkland Church in Louisville, giving two Sundays of every month. The Parkland brethren are up and doing. Considering the hardships they have passed through, they certainly should be commended for their fidelity to the cause of Christ. Brother Rose will do a good work there. The Shelbyville work is looking up. The Sunday-school attendance is good. We need money for our building fund. Brethren, will you not come over and help us? I have tried to keep the pure message before the people in this community, and my task has been no bed of roses. Can we induce ten churches to send us twenty dollars each at once? We will watch and pray."

From N. L. Walker, of Montgomery, Ala.: "I am inclosing an article for publication at your convenience if you think it worth while. My idea is that you should stop these unchristian expressions on your desk. Let the brethren know such stuff cannot get by, and they will soon be sending them to you right."

I am always glad to have suggestions, and sincerely thank Brother Walker for what he says. I agree with him that "unchristian expressions" should be kept out of the Gospel Advocate; but when a brother misrepresents an editor of the Advocate in another journal, it is not right to say to the editor, "You cannot have space to correct the misrepresentation," when justice demands that the correction be made. Brethren should not be so eager to rush into the papers to make ugly accusations against others which the facts do not support. Because a brother is loyal is no reason why he should be exempt from criticism. None are perfect, but only such criticism should be made as will be helpful to the criticized and will serve the truth.

From David O. Griffith, Box 642, Kerrville, Texas, January 17: "I am now located at Kerrville for the year 1922. Kerrville is out in a mountainous district of Southwest Texas. This is my second week here. I did not come to a more needy field than the one I left, which was in Bolivar County, Miss. Unless Brother Jeffcoat is somewhere near Merigold, Miss., there is not a preacher in one hundred miles of that place. I lived with those people for three years, and hated to leave them, but could not remain there any longer from a financial point of view. Some preacher who is financially able should go there, or some church that is able should send a good preacher to that part of the State. There are some good preachers in Mississippi, but they cannot do the work by themselves that needs to be done. If I ever get out of debt and a little money to go on, I mean to go back to Mississippi to preach. I have made two trips over there, and did what I could. I have a family to support now. I must see to their needs. Financially, I was compelled to give up the work in Mississippi. I came out about like Charley Nichols, of Parrish, Ala., did—in debt. I made and sold a thousand dollars' worth of cotton. Just half of that was mine; and my half the other man got, because I owed him. I worked hard, lived on little, and preached less. I decided that if I had to live on little, I would do so and preach more. I would like to have some letters from brethren anywhere and everywhere—from Alabama, Mississippi, Tennessee, Missouri, Texas, Oklahoma, and old Arkansas, too. Arkansas is my native home, and also where I started out as a boy preacher. On the third Lord's day in August, 1907, I preached my first sermon. I was twenty-two. I have been preaching fifteen years. I shall continue till I am called home."

Review of O. E. Payne's Book on "Psallo."

BY M. C. K.

CHAPTER V.

THE FUNCTION AND AUTHORITY OF LEXICONS (Concluded.)

In addition to submitting some facts not hitherto considered in the present investigation, it is the purpose, in this concluding chapter on the argument from the lexicons, to focus all the main facts in the lexical line that the force of the argument from this source may be duly felt and appreciated. Instead of wasting time on all the authors in this line quoted in great number in the book here under review, I shall meet the entire lexical situation, in so far as it has not already been met, by showing, from the testimony of some of his own witnesses in the realm of lexicography and taken from the very list which he parades in his book, that they not only distinctly testify against his position and in favor of that of the opposition, but that they include the very highest authority in the world on New Testament Greek. Hence, if this can and shall be done—our readers themselves may be the judges after I submit the facts—then, no matter how confidently and strenuously the advocates of instrumental music in the worship may contend for the practice, nor how severely they may denounce the opposition, they will not only find themselves arrayed against the latter in the present controversy, but, as intimated in a previous chapter of this review, also in the very unenviable attitude of being arrayed against the very highest authority in the world on New Testament Greek. Surely such facts will be calculated to give all properly thoughtful persons serious pause and prevent their adoption of any such position.

There is no dispute about the meaning of psallo in classic Greek, and the lexicons now to be examined, although unanimous in the position that it there means to play an instrument of music, nevertheless, when they come to the New Testament, are equally unanimous in the position that it there means to sing. As we have already seen, there is one New Testament passage, Eph. 5: 19, which, in the phraseology of the original, distinctly alludes to its ancient classic meaning to touch or strike, and represents Christians as figuratively psalming in or with the heart—that is, touching or striking the chords of the heart. But we will now let these lexicons speak for themselves as they are quoted in this book:

1. Hesychius' Lexicon. He lived the latter part of the sixth and the first part of the seventh century A.D. He says: "Psallein—to sing songs; to pluck; to set in motion." Although he helps to swell the list of lexicons introduced in this book, yet not a word does he say in support of instrumental music, nor does he even mention the subject in any way at all.

2. Greek Lexicon A.D. 1816. Here, without naming its author or otherwise describing the work, this book quotes a Greek lexicon of the nineteenth century. Here, according to this book, is what it says: "Psallo, properly psallein, signifies to touch and cause to sound the strings with the tips of the fingers. By a change of use, it also refers to singing songs, singing psalms." Will the reader please note that this lexicon distinctly declares that it was "by a change of use" that psallo came to mean to sing? Hence, according to this authority, the word did not always have that meaning, but it came to have it "by a change of use"—the very thing for which the opposition in the present controversy contends and in which they are thus solidly sustained.

But here again on page 52, the author of this book, true to the method which he constantly employs wherever the testimony of an authority goes strongly against him, attempts to break the force of it by his use of a footnote comment. He knew how the reader would be impressed with that phrase, "by a change of use;" and hence, promptly applying his footnote device, he carefully connects it with the phrase "by a change of use," thus: "That is, 'psallo, to play; by a change of use, also to sing.'" But that is not what the lexicon says. It is what the man who tampers with the language of authors says. Here is what the lexicon says: "Psallo, properly psallein, signifies to touch and cause to sound the strings with the tips of the fingers. By a change of use, it also refers to singing songs, singing psalms." Thus the lexicon places a period, a full stop, at the end of the classic meaning, and introduces the new meaning with the phrase "by a change of use," but his footnote perversion uses a semicolon and thus jumbles together the classic meaning and the later meaning as if they were one and makes it difficult for his readers to see that any distinction is made between the two. The verbal change appears to be slight, but it is sufficiently vital to be misleading, and it is accomplished at the expense of omitting several words which appear in the lexicon, changing the punctuation, and placing the word "also" in a different grammatical position, all of which artful rearrangement of words is to break the force of the lexicon's testimony; but I respectfully refuse to accept such an emendation or to allow it to mislead the reader if I can prevent it. The fact is, this lexicon, in clear and unmistakable terms when they are not tampered with, confirms the position that psallo, in the course of its history, took on the new meaning to sing, and it is this new meaning that meets us in the New Testament.

3. Scapula's Lexicon. "Psallo, I touch, I strike, and touch with a certain light movement. Thus musicians are said to psallein their own strings, to strike the cithara, to play on the lyre or simply psallein. Likewise, metaphorically, psallo with songs and glorify the Lord with hymns. I sing praises to the Lord." There it is again as clear as the cloudless sunlight. Let the reader note that "metaphorically," that is, figuratively, psallo means to sing, and this meaning is called metaphorical—another word for figurative—because persons strike nothing literally when they sing, but they do strike the chords of the heart figuratively. Thus, this lexicon also confirms the later meaning of psallo, which meaning we find in the New Testament.

4. Jones' Greek and English Lexicon: "Psallo, I play on a musical instrument; sing; sing to a name; celebrate." "Psalmos, a sound made by a musical string; a sacred song, psalm." It is a noteworthy fact that, while all of these lexicons begin with the ancient classical meaning to "play on a musical instrument," they all end with the later meaning to sing, thus showing that the word came to signify vocal music, and the New Testament confirms this in specific terms when it points out the heart as the instrument on which or with which Christians are to psallo in the worship of God.

5. Bagster's Lexicon. "Psallo, to move by a touch, to twitch; to touch, strike the strings or chords of an instrument; absolutely to play on a stringed instrument; to sing to music; in New Testament, to sing praises. Rom. 15: 9; 1 Cor. 14: 15; Eph. 5: 19; James 5: 13." Let the reader again note how strictly Bagster follows the same beaten track, giving, in significant unison with Thayer and others, the classical meaning, "to play on a stringed instrument," but then proceeds to say, as do the others, that it means "in the New Testament, to sing praises." Like others, too, he is sufficiently specific to cite the passages in the New Testament where the changed meaning is exemplified.

6. New Greek-English and English-Greek Lexicon by Contopoulos. Like Sophocles, this author is himself a Greek, and here is the significant definition given in his lexicon: "Psallo, to sing, to celebrate." "Psalmoidos, a psalmist, a singer of psalms, a bard, a minstrel." But here again, the author of the book now under review, true to his characteristic method, promptly applies his footnote device in an attempt to break the force of its testimony, but he makes an inglorious failure. Referring to Contopoulos, he says: "In the preface, the author says: 'A modern Greek dictionary must comprise all the elements that constitute the modern language. . . . But why should an additional dialect be created?'" Then, without the slightest relevancy of the "statements" to the point he attempts to make, he says: "Such statements by a modern Greek, in a lexicon for modern Greeks, Orthodox Church adherents, will enable the reader to see why the definitions by Contopoulos and Sophocles, differing from the world of scholarship, give a vocal significance to psallo." But how do they "enable the reader to see" any such thing? There is absolutely no connection between the two things and not the slightest bearing of the one upon the other. He might as well have said the Biblical fact that Abraham came from Ur of the Chaldees "will enable the reader to see why the definitions by Contopoulos and Sophocles" are what they are! The jingle of such irrelevant comment may serve to divert attention from what these lexicons say, but it cannot hide their real testimony nor break its force with thoughtful readers.

But the author of this footnote device overdoes the matter in this instance when he adds: "The Greek church makes no more pretense of adhering to the teachings and practices of the New Testament than does Rome." This statement is not only untrue on its face and in every word, but, as even the casual student of such matters can know, it is in open and flagrant conflict with all the facts of history on the subject. A mere tyro in ecclesiastical history and the baptismal controversy knows that it is a fact that, in spite of the introduction of sprinkling as a substitute for immersion and its perpetration by the church of Rome, the orthodox Eastern church, which understands and speaks the Greek language, has always held on to immersion and does so to this good day even to the extent of immersing infants. This is certainly a most important and significant "pretense of adhering to the teachings and practices of the New Testament" to a far greater degree "than does Rome." In spite of this wordy and irrelevant footnote, it is a fact that, when discussing the baptismal question, all the advocates of instrumental music in common with those who oppose it, very properly use and magnify into the most vital and solemn importance the historic fact that the Greek church, which has always understood and spoken the Greek language, has tenaciously and significantly held on to immersion. And instead of being misled by such an inexcusable and perverted use of this fact, the reader is entitled not only to its full force as it stands on history's page to the credit of the Greek church against the practice of Rome on baptizo, but also to the force of the additional significant fact that stands on history's page to the credit of the same church against the practice of Rome on psallo. Hence, instead of its being true that "the Greek church makes no more pretense of adhering to the teachings and practices of the New Testament than does Rome," it is a most significant fact, gloried in and magnified by lovers of the New Testament for over one hundred years—shame that this book attempts to trample it underfoot!—that the Orthodox Greek Church, throughout its history, has stood like a stone wall against Rome in favor of "the teachings and practices of the New Testament" on both baptizo and psallo. And so far as the music controversy is concerned, even Thomas Aquinas of the thirteenth century, one of Rome's greatest scholars, fought instrumental music and at that time could say: "Our church does not use musical instruments, as harps and psalteries, to praise God withal, that she may not seem to Judaize." See Bingham's Antiquities, Volume II., page 483, London edition.

Thus, when we look at the facts without the footnote perversions of this book, they tell quite a different story; and hence, McClintock and Strong's Cyclopedia says: "The Greek word psallo is applied among the Greeks of modern times exclusively to sacred music, which in the Eastern Church has never been any other than vocal, instrumental music being unknown in that church as it was in the primitive church." (Volume VIII., page 739.)

7. Greenfield's Lexicon. "Psallo, to touch, strike the strings or chords of an instrument; hence absolutely to touch or strike the chords, play on a stringed instrument; namely, as an accompaniment to the voice; by implication, to sing, and with a dative of person, to sing in honor or praise of, sing praises to, celebrate in song or psalm (Rom. 15: 9; 1 Cor. 14: 15; Eph. 5: 19; James 5: 13)."

Here again, attempting to jumble together the classical and New Testament meanings as if there were no distinction between them—a distinction which our readers can see for themselves Greenfield clearly makes—this author, with his ever handy footnote device, says: "These four texts contain all the uses of psallo in the New Testament. Greenfield tells us how to psallo, and in one united voice the world's scholarship concurs." (See page 72.) Yes, "in one united voice the world's" very highest New Testament Greek "scholarship concurs" with Greenfield that "all the uses of psallo in the New Testament" mean: "To sing, and with a dative of person, to sing in honor or praise of, sing praises to, celebrate in song or psalm." Surely we are making progress since the investigation discloses the fact that some of the author's own witnesses, in spite of his footnote device confirm the identical doctrine for which the opposition contends.

8. Green's Lexicon. Now let the reader see how completely this witness, in harmony with the world's highest authority in New Testament Greek, chimes in with Greenfield in making the sharp distinction between the classic meaning and the New Testament meaning of psallo. Here are his words: "Psallo, to move by a touch, to twitch; to touch, strike the strings or chords of an instrument; absolutely to play on a stringed instrument; to sing to music; in New Testament, to sing praises (Rom. 15: 9; 1 Cor. 14: 15; Eph. 5: 19; James 5: 13): whence, Psalmos, impulse, touch, of the chords of a stringed instrument: in New Testament, a sacred song, psalm (1 Cor. 14: 26; Eph. 5: 19), etc."

Thus, in the case of the verb psallo and the noun psalmos he marks the change of meaning in the word, distinctly stating what it was one time in classic Greek and what it was at another time in the New Testament; but here again, on page 74, we are met again by the usual footnote attempt to break its force; but no matter how often thoughtful men read the footnote, they will still see that it does not and cannot change the fact that Green says the word means "in New Testament to sing praises." It would be difficult for language to be clearer or stronger.

9. Sophocles' Lexicon. I deeply regret the necessity here of making another exposure of tampering with an author, but the truth of God and justice to the reading public demand it. It is another case of suppressing the language of an author, and, no matter what the motive or cause of the suppression, nor whether it is an oversight or otherwise, it furnishes another incontestable proof of the utter unreliability of the book here under review. In a former chapter we saw, as was cheerfully conceded, that this man gave Sophocles' definition of the verb psallo without any misrepresentation, but here where the testimony of this eminent lexicon is strongly and conspicuously against him in the definition of a cognate term, he suppresses a part of Sophocles' language, precisely as we have seen he did with that of Thayer. Moreover, he suppresses the very part which would convey a different idea and teach a different doctrine from that which is conveyed and taught in his book. That English readers may see for themselves this strange perversion, I will first give word for word how this man quotes Sophocles, and then I will give word for word what Sophocles really says. On page 75 he thus quotes the illustrious Greek:

"Psallo, to chant, sing religious hymns."

"Psalmos, psalm."

"Psaltes, one who plays on a stringed instrument, harper."

"Psaltoideo, to sing to the harp."

"Psaltos, played upon the psalter, sung."

Now, turning to Sophocles' lexicon, this is the way we find it:

"Psallo, to chant, sing religious hymns."

"Psalmos, psalm."

"Psaltes, one who plays on a stringed instrument, harper. Classical.—2. Chanter, church-singer."

"Psaltos, played upon the psalter; sung."

"Psaltoideo, to sing to the harp."

First of all, his transposition of Sophocles' order in the case of the last two words is immaterial, effects no change in the meaning, and I make no point on it; but, as our readers can see for themselves, while on psallo, psalmos, psaltos and psaltoideo, he quotes Sophocles' lexicon correctly, yet on psaltes, the very word in defining which Sophocles draws the line between the ancient and modern meanings and gives the vital testimony that the meaning, "one who plays on a stringed instrument, harper," is "Classical," even spelling the latter word with a capital letter, and that its later meaning, which he numbers with the figure "2" in bold-faced type, is "chanter, church-singer," this man suppresses the word "Classical," and the words, "chanter," and "church-singer," and the readers of his book, if not informed otherwise, could never know that Sophocles had given any such valuable testimony!! And the very words which show that instrumental music was in the ancient meaning and vocal music in the modern meaning are suppressed!!

But he does not stop with this suppression of the vital part of Sophocles' language, but actually follows it by saying of Sophocles that "by defining psaltes by 'one who plays on a stringed instrument,' any one can see that there is no escape from these three deadly parallels: Player, one who plays on an instrument; fiddler, one who fiddles on a fiddle; psaltes, one who psallo (es) on a psalterion." Of course "there is no escape from" the conclusion he draws when the language of Sophocles is changed and suppressed so as to warrant such a conclusion; but, as our readers can now see and judge for themselves, when we have before us Sophocles' language in full and unperverted, "there is no escape from" the conclusion that psaltes in "classical" Greek means "one who plays on a stringed instrument, harper," but that later it came to mean "chanter" and "church-singer;" and, furthermore, with all properly thoughtful persons who have all these facts before them, "there is no escape from" the further conclusion that the writer of this book, for some reason, suppresses and perverts the language of authors, and that therefore his own book is utterly unreliable.

10. Thayer's Greek-English Lexicon of the New Testament. The definition of this eminent authority has already been given in this review. In common with the substance of the definitions of psallo by all other standard lexicons, he gives as one of its classical meanings, "to play on a stringed instrument;" but, as we have seen, when he comes to the New Testament, he says it means "to sing a hymn, to celebrate the praises of God in song."

Hence, finally, the investigation in the field of New Testament Greek lexicography, prosecuted in the third and fourth chapters and here concluded in the fifth chapter of this review, discloses the three following significant facts:

1. Among the lexicons summoned by this book as witnesses in support of instrumental music in Christian worship, ten of them, as we have now seen, distinctly testify against it and in favor of the opposition. This fact in and of itself is quite significant.

2. The attempt by the author of this book to break the force of their testimony by his copious use of footnote comments and in some instances by the actual suppression of vital parts of the lexicon's definition, is strong proof that he himself felt the force of their testimony and thus did what he could to counteract its influence.

3. The greatest, the most weighty, and at the same time the most far-reaching of all facts in the lexical line, is the fact that these ten lexicons include the very highest authority in the whole world to-day on New Testament Greek. Indeed, here is a fact, a most telling and insurmountable fact, before which even scholars, to be consistent, must bow. For, well may we ask: What if a few lexicons which are inferior, yea even a great number of them, do testify against this fact, how can it really affect the issue with right-thinking people? Would it be rational for such people to turn from the highest authority in the world to that which is inferior, or to advise anybody else to do so? With all due deference to the advocates of instrumental music, I respectfully ask and would sincerely press the question for their consideration, what does it amount to if a hundred or a thousand lexicons testify in favor of it when they are all against the very highest authority in the world on the subject? Even if some of the lexicons and other authorities quoted by this unreliable book actually testify in defining psallo in favor of instrumental music in Christian worship, which they do as it represents them, instead of accepting such testimony when it is against the very highest authority in the world, we would be more consistent to explain it on prejudicial grounds precisely as we explain on such grounds similar attempts to get "spinkle" and "pour" out of baptizo. And instead of attempting, in true sectarian style, to weaken the force of the position of the Orthodox Greek Church on the music question, as this untrustworthy book has vainly attempted to do, we should rather be glad to accept and to magnify the fact that, while the Roman Catholic Church has been the champion of "spinkling" and "pouring" in the baptizo controversy through all the ages and for instrumental music in the psallo controversy, the Orthodox Greek Church, which understands and speaks and writes the Greek language, has vehemently opposed "spinkling" and "pouring" as foreign to baptizo and instrumental music as foreign to psallo, and has consistently and tenaciously held on to immersion in the one case and to vocal music in the other.

[NOTE.—I regret that circumstances beyond my control have interrupted this review. Besides my work with the Campbell Street Church, which is heavy, numerous and various demands for extra work have been made upon my time, so that working, as a rule, from fifteen to eighteen hours a day for the past several months has not been sufficient to prevent interruption of this particular piece of extra work. As it now appears, there will be at least three more chapters, shorter, however, than this one, and they will be given to our readers at the regular time for my editorials without further interruption, if possible, and in any event at the earliest practicable date.—EDITOR.]

The Going Away of a Noble Man.

BY F. W. SMITH.

Monday, January 16, the church house on Lindsley Avenue, Nashville, Tenn., was filled with sympathetic friends who assembled to pay their respects and love for the memory of Dr. Elam Filo Srygley, whose funeral was conducted by A. B. Lipscomb and the writer. He was the son of Brother and Sister F. B. Srygley, the father a well-known evangelist of the church of Christ. The following is a brief sketch of the deceased:

Elam Filo Srygley was born in Lebanon, Tenn., on May 3, 1890, and died in Newberry, Mich., on January 11, 1922. He obeyed the gospel in 1904, being baptized by his father. He graduated in medicine at Vanderbilt University in June, 1913. He spent one year as interne in the Memphis City Hospital and one year as interne in a New York hospital. In 1915 he made two trips across the sea as Steamship Surgeon. In 1916 and part of 1917 he was physician in the New Jersey State Hospital at Greystone Park, N. J. He enlisted in the army in July, 1917, and in December of that year went overseas as First Lieutenant in Field Hospital No. 15. In August, 1918, he was placed in charge of first-aid hospital of a machine-gun battalion of the United States Marines. On two occasions he volunteered to leave shelter under heavy machine-gun fire to relieve some of his men who were gassed, and was gassed himself. He received the Distinguished Service Cross and the French War Cross. Honorable mention was made of his bravery on three occasions. He was eight months in the army of occupation in Germany. He did more and saw more in thirty-one years than most could in eighty. He lived in a hurry, worked in a hurry, and died the same way. The ten years of his active life were given entirely in service to others. At the time of his death he was assistant superintendent of the State Hospital at Newberry, Mich. He was very happily married to Mrs. Jeanne King, of New York City, on January 31, 1921.

The writer has known Elam Srygley since he was a child, and witnessed his growth and development physically, morally, mentally, and religiously. He was, in my conception, one of the noblest young men it has ever been my pleasure to know. In manner and general bearing he was a Chesterfield, gentle, refined, reserved, and modest as a woman. I was always glad to meet him, and each time I came in contact with him he impressed me more and more with the nobility of his character. Those who were close to him speak of him as one of the most generous-hearted young men they ever knew. The molding and development of this splendid character was due more to the love, care, and training of his Christian mother than to any other human agency. His father, being an evangelist, was necessarily away from home much of the time, and the responsibility of the household fell very largely upon Sister Srygley, who met it with Christian faith and a loyalty to her children truly sublime. When he reached the station in life where he could make money, it did not develop within him a spirit of greed, but the same generous spirit of his childhood and boyhood days remained with him, and he gave freely to those who needed. He was of an ambitious nature, desiring to succeed to the fullest in whatever he undertook, and, as expressed by his father, he "lived in a hurry." He was determined to reach the top in his profession, and in the early days of his preparation he made many sacrifices. In the cutting off of his young and useful life we are confronted with one of the deep mysteries connected with the history of man. In the great World War he, as a servant of his fellow man, risked his life on the battle field more than once. Amid shell and shot, when he saw his fellow countrymen lying upon the field of carnage, he went to their aid and did what he could to relieve their sufferings, and at the time of his death he was serving unfortunate humanity with the great skill and patience he had acquired. While his body lies sleeping in the dust, his memory will ever be fresh in the hearts and love of the host of friends who knew and loved him. He leaves a devoted wife, an aged grandmother, a father, mother, four brothers and three sisters, to mourn their loss. Many hearts will feel deeply for these dear ones, who weep as only those can weep who have passed through such deep waters of affliction. Were it not for the star of hope that shines upon our hearts in such times as these, life would indeed be as a dreary waste. May God's richest blessing attend all his loved ones.

Two Hundred Dollars Given Away.

Regular agents are barred from this offer. To any one who will send us the most new subscribers, accompanied by $2 each, from February 1 to July 1, 1922, we will give One Hundred Dollars. To the person who sends next the most we will give Fifty Dollars. The person who ranks third will receive Twenty-five Dollars, the individual who ranks fourth will receive Fifteen Dollars, and the one who ranks fifth will receive Ten Dollars. Those who enter this contest should send names and addresses to the Gospel Advocate immediately. A list of subscribers sent by those who enter the contest will be kept, and three brethren will be called upon to decide by the lists of subscribers who are the successful contestants. If you wish to work for a gift, do not fail to notify us immediately. This is a great opportunity for all.

We are receiving a number of letters from persons who wish to read the Advocate, but have not the money to pay for it. Contributions to the Sinking Fund will be applied in sending the paper to such persons.

We are endeavoring to make 1922 the best year in the history of the Gospel Advocate. We are receiving much encouragement from our readers and friends. Our friends are not only saying nice things about the paper, but many are renewing and sending new subscribers. The new year starts off encouragingly, indeed, with larger receipts for January up to date than we received in the same length of time during January of 1921. Last December ran ahead of December of 1920. We have reasons to believe that every month of the present year will show an improvement in receipts over the corresponding month of the preceding year. If our workers will continue to coöperate with us, the year will close with a large increase in the number of copies of the Gospel Advocate in circulation. It is easy to get people to subscribe to a good, religious journal. Often have I taken thirty new subscribers in one day. Others can do likewise with the proper effort.

A number have already secured the Fountain Pen which we are giving away for two new subscribers, accompanied by four dollars. Others are sending one new subscriber, accompanied by three dollars, for which the paper is sent for one year to the subscriber and the pen to the person sending the name. This is a most liberal offer, as the Pen is guaranteed first-class. Prompt action is essential to your securing this splendid self-filling fountain pen, as we expect to withdraw this offer in a short time. The offer will be withdrawn so soon as the present supply is exhausted.

Every student of the Bible should have a set of Matthew Henry's Commentary on the Bible. This is neatly and substantially bound in six volumes. Send us twenty-five new subscribers, accompanied by fifty dollars, and a set of the Commentary is yours. Write us if you have ten or fifteen of the subscribers. We will help you to complete the list or suggest how you may pay part of the price of the Commentary and pay the remainder by sending subscribers. We are ready to help you in any reasonable way. Earnest, consistent work will soon bring the desired result. Half-hearted work never accomplishes much. We will sell you the Commentary for $17.50 net to us.

Our subscribers should not be unmindful of the fact that we have reduced the price of the Gospel Advocate from $2.50 to $2 a year, and this reduction made while labor in the printing business is as high as during the war. We are strong in the conviction that our subscribers will enable us to maintain this low price by keeping their subscriptions paid in advance and by sending us a number of new subscribers. Those who are in arrears should pay up to January 1, 1922, at the rate of $2.50 a year and then renew for 1922 at $2 a year. Don't wait for a statement. It is expensive to send statements to so many. The date on the yellow label on your paper shows the time to which your subscription is paid. Promptness will help us.

Commending the Quarterlies.

"I have examined the new literature, and it is fine. To have such men as Brethren Smith and Srygley edit them assures us sound gospel teaching, as they have given their lives fighting for the truth. We are using it in our Bible school (two hundred and fifty-two present last Lord's day), and all are highly pleased. We hope that the influence of the Gospel Advocate may grow as the years go by." (B. F. Harding, Florence, Ala.)

"I have received sample copies of the Quarterlies edited by Brethren F. W. Smith and F. B. Srygley and published by the McQuiddy Printing Company. I am well pleased with the clear and concise manner in which the lessons are arranged and treated. I wish to commend them most heartily, for I feel that they will be of great help to all students of the Bible, and especially to the young." (G. W. Riggs, Los Angeles, Cal.)

"I received the sample copy of the Advanced Quarterly and later ordered our regular supply for the Largo congregation. It is just during the past week that I have had time to examine them sufficiently to justify me in offering any comment. First, I want to congratulate you on their mechanical make-up. It is a fine demonstration of the printer's skill. Secondly, I am highly pleased with the plain, pointed, and practical introductions to and comments on the lessons. It is 'boiled down' to just what the common student needs. Thirdly, in the review lesson I find two hundred and twenty questions, which, to my mind, is entirely too many. Allowing one minute to the asking and answering of each question, it would take three hours and forty minutes to cover the lesson. I hardly think that you will find many classes that will devote that much time to any lesson. To my mind, the better plan would be a brief review every Sunday of the preceding lesson, followed at the close of the quarter with a review lesson of about four questions on each lesson. Aside from this, I have no suggestions to offer." (W. A. Cameron, Largo, Fla.)

"I have at my first convenience examined briefly the sample Bible-study literature. So far as I am able to see, it seems to be well prepared in every way. The comments are given in a plain, clear-cut way that should be of much help to those who properly use them. The absence of the expression 'Sunday school' from this literature, to my mind, is the proper thing. I have never been able to see why we could not teach the Bible just as effectively and call it 'Bible study' or 'Bible school' as to call it 'Sunday school.' To drop the objectionable expression cannot harm the teaching and might do much good in pacifying those who oppose. I hope that those who use literature will insist on the lessons being so thoroughly prepared that the literature will not have to be opened during class work. This, I believe, would not only be far better for the student, but would make the literature more useful. It would also do much to destroy opposition to both the teaching and the literature. I hope to see these two suggestions become the general practice in churches of Christ where literature is used. My contention is that no lesson is well enough learned until the student can tell it in his own words with the books closed. I see no reason to vary from this rule in teaching the Bible on Sunday or any other day. The best helps are none too good and cannot be studied too carefully, but need to be closed in recitations. Best wishes for a better and more careful study of the Bible." (John T. Hinds, Rogers, Ark.)

Current Comment

A large per cent of the readers of the Gospel Advocate is made up of those who feel the weight of years of trials and responsibilities. Some of this number have been the loyal friends of the paper through the vicissitudes of panic and hard times and war. Some are invalid and infirm, unable to see clearly or to engage in the active duties of life. I have it in mind to write an article for their special comfort, and it comes from a heart that is full of love and appreciation.

The world pays little attention to old age as compared with youth. It believes that the days of youth are the days of glory and old age is to be feared. In business and in pleasure, the modern age seems to have small concern for any of the aged except the supremely successful. For this reason the church has all the more need to remember those whom the world is thrusting aside.

Certainly it should not be an irksome duty to reverence the hoary head, especially if it be the head of a Christian man or woman. The graces which are distinctively Christian are, as a rule, at their best only in the latter years of life. Early do we learn the elementary lessons in the school of Christ, but not until we begin to grow old do many of us display in fullness of beauty the grace which the Master exalts in the Beatitudes—poverty of spirit, purity of heart, peacemaking, resignation under wrong. It is then that we should bear in greater measure the fruit of the Spirit: love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance. It is then, if ever, that we enter into the inner meaning of love as delineated in the thirteenth chapter of First Corinthians. If one ask why the aged Christian should be better than the young Christian, we might recall about Jesus' being made perfect by the things which he suffered. The aged Christian more than any other shows the fellowship of Christ's sufferings.

We are too apt to believe that certain aged Christians have been laid on the shelf, so far as usefulness is concerned. The church, like some human organizations, may be tempted to "Oslerize" its "superannuated" members. But the New Testament does not speak of superannuated members; it does not make mention of a retired list of Christians. It often becomes necessary for Christians, on account of age or infirmities, to give up the active duties, but there is always God's compensation for this forced withdrawal. That compensation is found in growing power with God and with man. This is better than mere activity.

In this noisy age some may get the idea that influence is synonymous with spectacular methods. This is a favorite illusion. In the eyes of God and godly men, the venerable mother in Israel sitting in her armchair, unable to walk or read, unable to do anything save to love and be loved, exerts a greater influence for good than some suffragette whose political aspirations are put on the first page of the daily paper. Whatever estimate we may make of it, we know that a meek and quiet spirit is of great price in God's sight. Not until that mother falls asleep do we often realize that her gentle spirit has been the mightiest factor in our lives and that the memory of her virtues lingers on as a constant benediction. Christ has something even better than the joys of youth to offer: assurance of God's love, peace, patience, increase of grace, and perseverance to the end. Such joys are not unknown to any, but are at their best in the lives of the aged. That is what the Psalmist meant when he wrote: "They shall still bring forth fruit in old age." No wonder that we sometimes speak of the glow on the face of an aged Christian. Every age of the Christian is beautiful in its time. But the beauty of youth is largely in its promise, while the beauty of age is in fulfillment. The beauty of youth is like a tree bursting into bloom, while the beauty of age is like the same tree laden with luscious fruit.

A cultured Christian woman told of her changed feeling toward a certain old man whom she had seen in her childhood days. When she and the other children went skipping by the old man's house and would see him sitting on the porch and reading his well-thumbed Bible, she would exclaim: "There is old Alan Branson; he is getting ready to die." But when she herself grew older and had learned some lessons that are not revealed to babes, looking back on that familiar scene, she said: "Dear old Alan Branson! I was mistaken about it; he was not getting ready to die, but only getting ready to live." That is a comforting thought for the aged. They are not getting ready to die, but to live in the fullest sense. The fear of death dissolves before the thought of an endless life. It is a fair question as to whether we should speak of worthy saints as being old. This implies that there are less years before than there are behind. But this is not true of them. It would be better to say, "Thy youth is renewed like the eagle's;" or: "Though the outward man perish, the inward man is renewed day by day." Some of us can recall how dear old Brother J. W. Harding, who continued preaching after he had reached his ninetieth year, used to close nearly every sermon with his vision of the deathless life:

"When we've been there ten thousand years,
Bright shining as the sun,
We've no less days to sing his praise
Than when we first begun."

The most impressive picture that I have of Abraham does not belong to the days of his valor, to that period when he placed his heel on the necks of five wicked kings. It is the picture of an aged patriarch with eyes bedimmed, recounting the goodness of God and conferring his blessing upon his sons. The most impressive picture that I have of Moses does not belong to the miracle-working period, nor is it connected with the stirring scenes of the exodus and wilderness wanderings. It is the picture of Moses ascending to the mountain top to view the Promised Land and to be buried by the hand of God himself. The most impressive picture that I have of Paul is not connected with his missionary journeys. It is the picture of Paul "the aged" looking out between the bars of his prison cell as he writes: "The time of my departure is at hand." The most impressive picture that I have of John is not connected with that period when he and James were called the fiery-hearted "sons of thunder." The picture I cherish most of all is that of a lonely exile writing the Book of Revelation. The most impressive picture of Jesus Christ does not belong to the miracle-working period, nor is it connected with the transfiguration. The most impressive picture of all is that of Jesus, forsaken of man and apparently forsaken of God, hanging on the cross and exclaiming: "It is finished." It is when we think of these glorified scenes that we are moved to exclaim: "Let me die the death of the righteous; let my last end be like his."

With these thoughts before our minds, let me bring a message of hope and good cheer to the hundreds of Gospel Advocate readers who are growing old and to some who are about ready to embark toward a fairer land.

"Grow old along with me,
The best is yet to be;
The last of life for which the first was made.
Our times are in His hand
Who saith, 'A whole I planned.'
Youth shows but half; trust God,
See all, nor be afraid."

Query Department

A sister who does not want her name published sends the following to the "Query Department:" "We have been discussing 1 Cor. 14: 34, 35 in our prayer-meeting lessons. Please explain for our edification. Is it wrong for a woman to teach a Sunday-school class composed of men, provided she is better qualified to teach them than any of the men in the class? Is it wrong for a woman to ask or answer questions in the prayer-meeting lesson?"

1 Cor. 14: 34, 35 read: "Let the women keep silence in the churches: for it is not permitted unto them to speak; but let them be in subjection, as also saith the law. And if they would learn anything, let them ask their own husbands at home: for it is shameful for a woman to speak in the church." The speaking here referred to means the public proclamation of the gospel in the congregation or assembly of the saints. Christ never sent out any woman as an apostle or public proclaimer of the gospel. It is a misapplication of the passages quoted to apply them to a woman qualified to teach a class in a private way. It is the duty of a woman to teach a class in a modest way. Priscilla expounded unto Apollos "the way of God more accurately." Her name is mentioned before that of Aquila, her husband, probably because she was the better informed of the two. Philip, the evangelist, had four virgin daughters who prophesied. They taught the word of God in private, modestly and in a way that did not usurp the authority over man. A woman should not be prohibited from modestly asking a question for information in a prayer meeting. It is a shame that so few men are qualified to teach the Bible acceptably. Modest, Christian women may sometimes ask questions in the prayer meeting, because the men are so ignorant and unconcerned that they will not do so. Even in asking questions, a woman should always recognize man's headship just as the Bible teaches it.

J. E. Wainwright, Sinton, Texas, asks for "an explanation of the unrighteous steward, Luke 16: 1-12, especially verses 8, 9."

The faithless steward had wasted the goods of the rich man; and when he realized that he would soon lose the stewardship, he immediately decided to so treat his lord's debtors that when he was put out of the stewardship they (his lord's debtors whom he had favored) would receive him into their houses. "And calling to him each one of his lord's debtors, he said to the first, How much owest thou unto my lord?" To the debtor who owed a hundred measures of oil he said: "Take thy bond, and sit down quickly and write fifty." And so he favored the other debtors. "And his lord commended the unrighteous steward because he had done wisely: for the sons of this world are for their own generation wiser than the sons of the light. And I say unto you, Make to yourselves friends by means of the mammon of unrighteousness; that, when it shall fail, they may receive you into the eternal tabernacles." (Verses 8, 9.) His lord commended the wisdom and not the faithlessness of the steward. Mammon is the equivalent of money or wealth. As the steward had so used mammon as to make a home for himself when put out of the stewardship, so Christ charges Christians: "Make to yourselves friends by means of the mammon of unrighteousness [riches]; that when it shall fail [when you can use it no longer], they may receive you into the eternal tabernacles [heaven]." In other words, Christians should so use money or wealth that, when it fails them, the Father and the Son will receive them into heaven, for the Father and the Son are the only friends who can receive us into eternal tabernacles.

Christ in this parable states: "For the sons of this world are for their own generation wiser than the sons of the light." Christians have more involved and enjoy greater and sweeter promises, so should be wiser than the children of this world. With the joys of heaven set before us to win and the horrors of hell to be shunned, Christians cannot afford not to be wise.

Laura A. Parker desires an explanation of Gen. 1: 26, 27 in connection with Gen. 2: 7. She adds: "I have a friend who says that there were two creations."

Gen. 1: 26, 27 read: "And God said, Let us make man in our image, after our likeness: and let them have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the birds of the heavens, and over the cattle, and over all the earth, and over every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth. And God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him; male and female created he them." Gen. 2: 7 reads: "And Jehovah God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul." The passages alluded to are simply different accounts of the same thing. Gen. 1: 26, 27 simply states the fact that God created man in his own image, but does not give the component parts of which man is created. The language found in Gen. 1: 26, 27 does not show that man is a compound being, having both a soul and a body. Gen. 2: 7 shows that man is a compound being, having a body and soul distinctly and separately created—the body out of the dust of the earth, the soul actually breathed from God himself. This clearly shows that the soul and body are not the same thing. The body derives its origin from the earth, hence decays. It is earthly; it is decomposable and perishable. Of the soul it is said that God breathed into his nostrils the breath of life. Hence we see that this breath of God expanded the lungs and set them into play, while his inspiration gave both spirit and understanding.

A. H. J. sends a question difficult to answer, because the motive for staying away when the confession was read to the church is not known. Here is the question: "A member of the church sins—commits a public sin—and after a time writes a full confession of the sin, asking the brethren to forgive and receive back into full fellowship, and sends the letter to the church, but does not appear at church at the time of the reading of the letter; if the church, in this case, should take such a one back into fellowship, could such a course be justified by scripture?"

A man who has committed a public sin is not humble enough to be forgiven until he is humble enough to publicly take away the reproach that he has publicly brought upon the church. Whenever a man guilty of such a sin is ashamed to go before the whole church and make his confession there, either by his own mouth or by another while he is present to give his personal sanction to it, his repentance is not sincere, as I think, and there is not much hope of permanent reformation in such a case. A deep hatred of sin itself is necessary to a reformation of life.

The writing of the confession cuts no figure in this case. Why was the man not present when his confession was read to the church? If he could not be present, I would not say his confession was insincere. If he had good reasons for staying away, we should not question his sincerity. On the other hand, if he were absent simply because he did not want to be present to suffer the humiliation that the confession would necessarily bring upon him, it would seem that his repentance is not genuine. When a man has dragged the banner of Jesus Christ into the filth of the world, if he is truly penitent, he will humble himself and do all in his power to wipe out the reproach that he has brought on the church of Christ. Nothing short of this will restore a man to favor with God.

Bobwhite's Plea.

When sitting on the old rail fence
 'Neath sunny skies of blue,
 Don't shoot me, happy farmer lad,
 For I'm a friend to you.
 Or when down by the dusty road
 I sing my happy lay,
 Don't injure me, but let me spread
 My wings and fly away.

While sitting with the covey where
 The leaves are drifting down,
 Or calling in the woodlands green
 Or in the meadows brown,
 Don't take my life, O sportsman; and
 When in the wheat fields bright,
 Don't shoot me when you hear me
 Gently call: "Bobwhite! Bobwhite!"

When in the sunshine's morning rays
 I bask at break of day,
 Or in the noonday's mellow glow,
 Or in the twilight gray,
 And when I chant my carols blest
 And heavenward my psalm soars,
 Just let me live and love and sing
 In God's great out-of-doors.

Moustache.

Long ago, in the days of Napoleon's brilliant wars, there lived a dog who was a fit predecessor to the splendid dogs of the recent great war, of which we have learned so much.

Many of these fine dogs were killed in action, more were wounded, and a great number were decorated for doing their heroic dog duty.

Placed side by side with them, Moustache need not have hung his head and tail.

He came, as a homely, homeless poodle pup, to the Chasseurs a Pied of the Imperial Guard, and, receiving kind treatment, immediately adopted them as his protectors.

Spirited and intelligent, he soon became a great favorite with all the men, but especially was he chummy with the standard bearer of the First Battalion, who was most fond of him.

In the battle of Austerlitz the standard bearer was shot, and fell with the tricolor beneath his body.

Three enemy Austrians, seeing the colors down, advanced to capture them. A guard of two men always acted as a special escort to the standard bearer, and they engaged two of the enemy, but the other one meant to have the glory of carrying off the flag.

When he approached he found Moustache, who had followed his friend into battle, standing over his prostrate body. Snapping and snarling, he held the Austrian at bay. Dropping his musket, the enemy drew his sword and, slashing viciously at the dog, severed one of Moustache's small paws.

Suffering and bleeding, the gallant little dog held off his enemy until help arrived, when the three Austrians were killed and the flag saved.

Marshal Lannes, when the story became known, ordered that a silver collar with pendant medal be made for Moustache. One side of the medal bore these words: "Moustache, a French dog. Let him be everywhere respected and cherished as a hero." On the other side was: "He lost a leg at the battle of Austerlitz and saved the flag of his regiment."

Quite active on his remaining three legs, Moustache shared the campaigns of his regiment, and in the end died in action, as a soldier should—killed by a cannon ball at Badajoz.

Genuinely grieved over his death, his comrades buried him on the ramparts. On the stone which they set up above the curly little body, quiet at last, one of their number chiseled the words: "Here lies the brave Moustache."

The Sin of Thoughtlessness.

A professor in a Western college has been making tests in connection with his classes in psychology to find out what is the most general fault among his students—that is, a habit which could not be classed as a sin or a crime or a misdemeanor, but a failure in the sum total of characteristics that mark a successful man or woman.

What do you think he found? Thoughtlessness. His tests were simple, even childish.

He left a book lying on the floor where every student saw it as he came into the classroom. Seven students stepped over the book without trying to pick it up. The eighth kicked it a little farther along the aisle. Four students stepped on the book, evidently not seeing it. The twentieth student picked up the book and put it on the professor's table.

There were three pictures on the walls of the classroom. The professor hung these askew, and a week went by before any one appeared to notice it, and then no one straightened out the picture, but one of the students asked the teacher if they ought not to be hung even.

One of the commonest excuses that men make after some harm has been done to some one or something is: "I'm sorry; I didn't think." A man runs into another car with his, and causes a smash-up or perhaps a tragedy. He is sorry. He did not think he was in any danger. The man fails to be on time for his appointment, wasting valuable time for the man waiting. "So sorry! I did not think I was so late!"

And so it goes all along the line of thoughtlessness. Perhaps the professor was right in his final conclusions.

Thoughtlessness is not a fault of habit. It is a sin and a crime combined, for it leads almost always to both.—Dr. Charles M. Sheldon.

Time.

Time is given to each of us whether we want it or not. Each new day is ours. What shall we do with it? Our idea of the value of time is indicated by the use we make of it. Character is also indicated by the use we make of our time. We cheapen time or we give it a golden value. It was not given to any of us to waste. It brings little permanent happiness when it is wasted. There are people who are never actually idle, and yet their time is practically wasted. They are employed, but not usefully employed. We know of an extremely elaborate luncheon set on which a woman had spent several hours a day for weeks with her needle. Possibly her time was better employed in this way than in doing nothing, but could not she have made better use of this time?

"No time" is often the very poorest excuse one can give for not doing some of the things that should have been done. "No time" is the excuse sometimes given for not preparing one's Sunday-school lesson. Probably nearly all who offer this excuse could discover in the week back of each Sunday several hours spent in doing nothing or in doing things not nearly so well worth while as studying one's Sunday-school lesson. The important letter was not answered because the writer claimed that he had "no time," when that letter could easily have been written in ten minutes. And so this excuse, "No time," is worked overmuch on the part of those who could do better.

Let us all learn to value our time more highly and make it count for all that it is worth.—Selected.

Dean.

Sister Mary E. Dean, of Tahlequah, Okla., was born in Logan County, Ark., in 1859. She obeyed the gospel early in life, and lived faithful to the church unto the end, which came on December 23, 1921. She was married to Brother A. N. Dean in 1881, and moved to Tahlequah, Okla., in 1911. There was no church in Tahlequah when they arrived, but Brother and Sister Dean set to work immediately to plant the cause of our Master there, and she lived to see a nice congregation well established. She leaves behind her husband and three sons, with a host of friends, to mourn her departure. Funeral services were conducted by me on Christmas Day in the presence of a large concourse of friends.

J. G. ALLEN.

Shofner.

On Lord's-day morning, October 23, 1921, about seven o'clock, our dear, sweet mother left us for a better life. We had tried for three years to prepare ourselves to give her up, as our physician had warned us that it must come, for she had leakage of the heart. But giving up such a loving and sacrificing mother is so hard to do. She was a faithful Christian woman, so kind, so brave, so cheerful in her illness that we find our consolation in God's word. It now remains for us to follow her noble example and meet death bravely as she did. We children are so thankful that we had her with us until we reached womanhood and know her sweet life. Its influence will be felt for years to come. Her death leaves papa very, very lonely, but resigned to the Lord's will. Mamma was Leila Reeder, daughter of the late E. C. Reeder, of Nashville, Ark. She leaves my father, W. L. Shofner, of Nashville, Ark., and four daughters—Mrs. Charles M. Huddleston and Mrs. John C. Floyd, Center Point, Ark.; Mrs. Thomas McAdams and Miss Inez Shofner, Nashville, Ark. Our prayer is that we may live as she taught us.

LILY HUDDLESTON.

White.

Sister Mary Maxiline White was born on July 27, 1857, in Greene County, Mo., where she spent most of her life. She departed this life on December 28, 1921. She was a daughter of Ruben and Elizabeth Armstrong. She was married to Cornelius White in February, 1879. She was the mother of three children—Ernest White, who now resides in California; Mrs. James Kinser and Mrs. Lem Atteberry, both residing in Greene County, Mo. Sister White was buried with Christ in baptism when sixteen years of age. She was truly a devoted Christian, living, together with her Christian husband, such a devoted life that all her children and their companions are now members of the church which she so much loved. Sister White was one of the most faithful Christians I ever knew. She was faithful in attendance at the worship and in her home duties.

Her death was caused by tuberculosis. She was conscious to the last, and was willing and even anxious to go to be with her Savior. The writer, assisted by Brother S. P. Fields, conducted the funeral services, which were held in the church at the corner of Phillips and Evans Streets, Springfield, Mo. May the Lord bless and comfort the bereaved.

Mission Work.

BY C. C. MERRITT.

Brethren will be glad to learn that there are some encouraging things to report concerning the Honolulu work. The brethren in almost all places are giving a listening ear to this phase of our church work, and that should encourage us. It will bear fruit some day if the preachers will all do their duty in teaching them.

The Honolulu work should receive more of our attention. Brother Max Langpaap is doing a worthy work, and we should not fail him, but send a good-sized donation to that work. Remember, he is a consecrated worker and is sacrificing much more than we, even though we send him a good-sized contribution every month. Some who have just a little to use in missions, not being able to support some special definite work, would do well to respond to this work with what they have. Write Brother Max Langpaap, 3557 Kaimuki Avenue, Honolulu, T. H.

Very encouraging word comes from the St. Louis work. Besides what has been said in the papers by others concerning the increase in this work, I wish to add a word about our preacher. The quotation given is from a letter to me by one of the leading brethren there: "The attendance at all services is good and interest is increasing all the time, I believe. Brother Sevedge is doing fine work in every way, and preaches a better sermon every time, it seems. Apparently, there is no reason why we should not accomplish great things for the coming year, the Lord working with us and blessing our efforts." This is all good news to me while I am away from home. Getting such letters as this encourages us all. There is need of a few more churches responding to this work. Who will voluntarily do so without having to be called on? Write H. M. Biggs, 2907 Lafayette Avenue, St. Louis, Mo.

BY O. E. BILLINGSLEY.

An interesting debate has just been held at County Line, near Nashville, Ark., between T. W. Croom (Christian) and D. N. Jackson (Association Missionary Baptist). This debate was the best attended I have ever observed. Large crowds from the very first and larger toward the last. Brother Croom affirmed on the first and third days, and Brother Jackson on the second and fourth days. They discussed the apostasy question, the operation of the Holy Spirit, and the plan of salvation.

Brother Croom pressed Jackson on the apostasy question until he affirmed that sinful children of God go right on to heaven without repenting of

The Best Cough Syrup is Home-made.

Here's an easy way to save $2, and yet have the best cough remedy you ever tried.

You've probably heard of this well-known plan of making cough syrup at home. But have you ever used it? Thousands of families, the world over, feel that they could hardly keep house without it. It's simple and cheap, but the way it takes hold of a cough will soon earn it a permanent place in your home.

Into a pint bottle, pour 2½ ounces of Pinex; then add plain granulated sugar syrup to fill up the pint. Or, if desired, use clarified molasses, honey, or corn syrup, instead of sugar syrup. Either way, it tastes good, never spoils, and gives you a full pint of better cough remedy than you could buy ready-made for three times its cost.

It is really wonderful how quickly this home-made remedy conquers a cough—usually in 24 hours or less. It seems to penetrate through every air passage, loosens a dry, hoarse or tight cough, lifts the phlegm, heals the membranes, and gives almost immediate relief. Splendid for throat tickle, hoarseness, croup, bronchitis and bronchial asthma.

Pinex is a highly concentrated compound of genuine Norway pine extract, and has been used for generations for throat and chest ailments.

To avoid disappointment ask your druggist for "2½ ounces of Pinex" with directions, and don't accept anything else. Guaranteed to give absolute satisfaction or money refunded. The Pinex Co., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

FRECKLES

Now Is the Time to Get Rid of These Ugly Spots.

There's no longer the slightest need of feeling ashamed of your freckles, as Othine—double strength—is guaranteed to remove these homely spots.

Simply get an ounce of Othine—double strength—from your druggist, and apply a little of it night and morning and you should soon see that even the worst freckles have begun to disappear, while the lighter ones have vanished entirely. It is seldom that more than one ounce is needed to completely clear the skin and gain a beautiful clear complexion.

Be sure to ask for the double strength Othine as this is sold under guarantee of money back if it fails to remove freckles.

their sins. In other words, he declared that eternal salvation in heaven is absolutely unconditional to the citizens of God's kingdom. He made both statements.

Jackson shook hands with Croom on the operation of the Spirit, stated just in these words: "The Holy Spirit operates through the word in the conversion of the sinner, and in no other way." He further said that the Spirit does not enter the sinner at all to do his work, but does all by means of his words.

On the plan of salvation, Jackson, under pressure, affirmed that the only thing a sinner has to do to be saved is simply to trust Jesus. He taught plainly that "faith only" is the plan of salvation. According to the Holy Spirit in James, Jackson's plan is "dead faith."

Both men did well. Jackson is a strong man. He writes their Sunday-school literature. He possesses every quality of a debater, except fairness in stating a man's argument and position. He can learn to do that. It was Brother Croom's first debate, and he did a wonderful piece of work. It was a masterpiece. The brethren were highly pleased. The debate is doing good. It was a great victory for the truth.

HALF YOUR LIVING WITHOUT MONEY COST

Cash Crop Production Costs Can Be Cut in Half by Food and Grain Making and Saving at Home

Atlanta, Ga.—(Special.)—"No one is wise enough to know or foresee the outcome of the world-wide financial and political mix-up that has followed the world war and the inflated-price, joy-riding spree that we have all engaged in," said H. G. Hastings, President of the Georgia Association, Georgia's organization for State-wide development.

"The wise farmer in the South will forget that 30 or 40 cent cotton price that led him to disaster in 1920 and figure on a selling price of around 15 cents under conditions of normal yield and acreage which we are very liable to have in 1922. This necessitates reduced cost of cotton making or else being wiped out.

"The cost of cotton or other cash crop making in the South, or anywhere else, is largely food cost—food for the farmer and his family, food in the shape of grain and forage for his working live stock. With low prices for cotton or other cash crop, the farmer cannot afford to pay any outsider profit or expense on the food he, his family, and working live stock consume. This means to quit living off of supply merchants' shelves and to live off the products of home acres.

"The situation requires chickens, hogs, milch cows, and acres of corn, oats, wheat, forage, and miscellaneous crops from which to feed them. Last, but not least, in importance, is the home vegetable garden, which is the quickest and cheapest source of food in the world.

"Most folks here in the South don't take the home garden seriously, and thereby make a great mistake. There are too many of the 'lick and a promise' sort of gardens, and mighty few of the real, sure-enough kind.

"We have been told repeatedly by those who plan and prepare for a real garden, plant it, tend it, and keep it replanted through the season, that it furnishes half the family living at no money cost except the small amount spent for the seeds needed.

"The garden is, or rather should be, the earliest planted. It brings food the quickest. It starts cutting store bills for food the first week anything is ready for use. A little later, half or more needed for the table comes out of the garden.

"If rightly tended and replanted, it supplies food all summer and fall. The surplus above daily needs goes into cans or is dried for winter use. Yes, the right kind of garden is a life-saver, and we all need a life-saver of this kind in 1922."

NERVOUS AND HALF-SICK WOMEN

These Letters Recommending Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Will Interest You

For Your Own Good Please Read Them

Youngstown, Ohio.—"Last fall I began to feel mean and my back hurt me and I could hardly do my little bit of housework. I was played out when I would just sweep one room and would have to rest. I would have to put a cushion behind me when I would sit down and at night I could not sleep unless I had something under my back. I had awful cramps every month and was just nearly all in. Finally my husband said to me one day, 'Why don't you try Lydia E. Pinkham's medicine?' and I said, 'I am willing to take anything if I could get well again.' So I took one bottle and a second one and felt better and the neighbors asked me what I was doing and said, 'Surely it must be doing you good all right.' I have just finished my eighth bottle and I cannot express to you how I feel, the way I would like to. If you can use this letter you are welcome to it and if any woman does not believe what I have written to be true, she can write to me and I will describe my condition to her as I have to you."—Mrs. ELMER HEASLEY, 141 S. Jackson St., Youngstown, Ohio.

"I was very nervous and run-down," writes Mrs. L. E. Wiese of 706 Louisa St., New Orleans, La. "I would often sit down and cry, and was always blue and had no ambition. I was this way for over a year and had allowed myself to get into quite a serious condition. One day I saw your advertisement in the daily paper and began to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound at once. I have improved ever since taking the third bottle and find it is the best medicine I have ever taken."

Benefited by First Bottle

"I was completely run down and not able to do my housework. I just dragged myself around and did not have energy to get up when once I sat down. I read advertisements of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound in our paper 'The Indiana Daily Times,' and learned all about it. I received results from the very first bottle and now I am doing all my own work, even washing and ironing, and I never felt better in my life. I tell all my friends it is due to you."—Mrs. ELIZABETH REINBOLD, 403 N. Pine St., Indianapolis, Indiana.

You should pay heed to the experiences of these women. They know how they felt before taking the Vegetable Compound, and afterwards, too. Their words are true.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Private Text-Book upon "Ailments Peculiar to Women" will be sent you free upon request. Write to the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Massachusetts.

Field Reports

Birmingham, Ala., January 16.—I began work with the West End congregation here yesterday. We had two good services. Large crowd at the morning service, nice contribution, and good Bible school. We are expecting and planning for a good work this year.—I. B. Bradley.

Gallatin, Tenn., January 16.—The second and third Sundays in January have been the best days since I came to Gallatin in every line of church work. Brother W. L. Karnes, of Portland, Tenn., was among our visitors last Sunday night. Brother Karnes is one of Tennessee's best preachers.—T. B. Clark.

Tuscumbia, Ala., January 16.—We had fine services here yesterday. The church is indeed awake to the great possibilities for good in this town, and we mean to work. We expect to have at least six Bible lessons each week; besides, all of us expect to make these services more alive by personal work.—J. H. Horton.

Sheffield, Ala., January 16.—The prospects for the cause in Sheffield look bright for this year. There were one hundred and forty-five present at the Bible-study hour yesterday and a large audience at preaching and communion services. The brethren say the church is in the best condition in its history.—John C. Graham.

Mayflower, Ark., January 12.—I have returned to Mayflower. We had a fine meeting Sunday; could not seat our hearers. We had baptizing in the afternoon. The children here are wise in the Scriptures. I shall never forget the people in Illinois for their kindness to me. They are sending gifts to Mayflower to cheer me on my way.—J. C. Mosley.

Berry, Ala., January 15.—At present I am home preparing for another year's work in the Lord's kingdom wherever I can be used to the glory of his Name. On account of a failure in some proposed work, I have some time not taken from April 1 to July. This time I would be glad to give to the building up of the cause of Christ. We are expecting Brother J. D. Tant to be with us in Berry, March 5-12. Everybody has a hearty welcome and a strong invitation to come and be with us and enjoy the feast of good things.—Frank Baker.

Fort Worth, Texas, January 16.—Yesterday was fine here, with large crowds at Southside Church. Our new elders have taken hold with a vim, and the prospects for the cause is the very best it has ever been. I never saw such a bunch to want to work, and we are doing things. I suppose it is settled that I remain the rest of this year, but the elders have consented to allow me a vacation for the month of August, the first real vacation since I came here three years ago. The work of the Lord is good all over the city, and with hope and courage we move along.—Tice Elkins.

Denton, Texas, January 15.—Our services were well attended to-day at both hours, the Sunday school was also well attended, and interest was good in every way. Our people are working with enthusiasm, and it is felt that the work is growing better all the time. The membership contributes freely to the needs of the work and are ready for any and every good work. There was one to respond to the invitation at the evening hour, a lady who desired to be restored to fellowship in the congregation. We ask the prayers of God's people everywhere on behalf of the Lord's work in Denton.—R. D. Smith.

Maytown, Fla., January 18.—I began a meeting here on January 8 and closed it last night. The attendance and interest were good, but there were no additions. Many seemed "almost persuaded," but still cling to the world. The little band which I set in order here last February had discontinued the regular Lord's-day worship, but now they are going ahead with renewed zeal and a full determination to continue the work. Brethren N. J. Bailey and H. S. Clark, as men leaders, together with their faithful wives, will "keep the home fires burning." They have decided to support a man to preach for them once a month, and have asked me to send them a preacher for that purpose. We are looking for the right man for this work. I go to Mims to begin a meeting to-night.—J. O. Barnes.

Cordova, Ala., January 14.—Coming to Cordova the first of last September to teach in the Cordova school, I found a live, active congregation of Christians, numbering about one hundred and forty members. This is the result of the labors of Brethren G. C. Brewer, C. R. Nichol, John T. Hinds, John T. Lewis, Charley Nichols, A. D. Dies, J. H. Murrell, G. A. Dunn, O. C. Lambert, and others. These people have built and seated their house of worship, almost altogether of their own means, at a cost of about three thousand dollars, which teaches a good lesson to many congregations that rely too much on outside help. The contributions for 1921 was $1,173.11, which was somewhat less than in 1920. The church paid out last year $1,173.10, paying for building, seats, helping the poor, etc. This congregation is blessed with a large number of male members who take a public part in the Lord's-day worship and in the prayer meeting. The prayer meeting is not nearly so well attended as it should be; however, the interest seems to be growing.

Don't think because you have taken many remedies in vain that your case is incurable. Hood's Sarsaparilla has cured many seemingly hopeless cases of scrofula, catarrh, rheumatism, kidney complaint, dyspepsia, and general debility. Take Hood's.

Brother A. R. Hill, on his way back to David Lipscomb College, stopped over and preached two good sermons on New Year's Day.—J. L. Hunter.

Runge, Texas, January 16.—The church of Christ at Runge held a business meeting the first day of the year 1922 and made plans for active work. We intend to hold four meetings at Runge by exchanging time with preachers at other places. The first of these will begin next Sunday. Brother Foy E. Wallace, Sr., will do the preaching. This is not strictly an exchange of time, though I will fill Brother Wallace's appointment on the fifth Sunday. We would like to exchange meetings with other churches that care to do such work. One feature of this plan is that we get four meetings for the price of one. But we are going to utilize the economy by the church at Runge supporting me for four meetings at weak places. Brethren, we are now ready to hear from some missionary points that need assistance in the spread of the gospel. We will expect you to pay my railroad fare and help all you can in a financial way. If you are able to support a preacher for a meeting, do not write us as a missionary point. We would prefer this work somewhere in the southern part of Texas, but we are placing no limit on the field, since the Lord did not. Any preacher or church seeing this and wishing to assist us in this matter will please write me in the near future.—F. J. Berry.

Mayfield, Ky., January 14.—I am still on the firing line in the county where I was born. I have been teaching in high schools through the fall and winter months, preaching on Sundays, and holding meetings through the summer. During the past season I conducted meetings for the following congregations: Cottage Grove, Tenn., which was my seventh meeting at that place; Spring Creek, in this county; Rives and Dyer, Tenn.; Macedonia, three miles west of Mayfield; and Dongola, Ill. I enjoyed the work the past year more than ever in life. I met many noble souls. The Lord has blessed me. There were a few dark clouds, of course. Our darling baby was badly burned on November 16. He is nearly well now. Another one of my children recently had the diphtheria, but modern science and good doctors as instruments in God's hands saved him. All in all, more sunshine than rain. The County Board of Education appointed me superintendent of schools. We have eight thousand school children in the rural schools. Ten per cent of these are in high schools. I have a great work in my hands. The church in Mayfield is in fine shape. Brother W. C. Hall conducted a splendid meeting here the past summer. Peace and harmony prevail here. We have splendid elders who are watching for the safety of the flock of God. I shall preach the gospel of God's Son and deliver school lectures this year.—A. L. Wilson.

Gorgeous Insects.

To gain some idea of the splendor of some of the world's moth, and butterflies, one should glance over nearly complete collections of them from the tropics as they occur in South America, Asia, Africa, and the great Eastern and Western archipelagoes, with certain parts of Australia. Such collections are to be found in the United State National Museum in the reserve and duplicate series. There is a superb species that comes from Africa, wherein the "tails" to the hinder pair of wings are over eight inches in length. Then we have the gorgeous Atlas moth of the East Indies that measures a foot across from tip to tip of its upper wings.—Selected.

Looking Backward.

BY C. H. WOODROOF.

Sunday, November 27, 1921, marked the end of my labors with the church at Anniston, Ala. Many were my experiences, both pleasant and unpleasant, during my four-years' stay there. The church is not very old, having been set in order by Brother J. Pettet Ezell, now of Cookeville, Tenn., and Brother Russell King, of Nashville, Tenn., if I remember correctly, about six years ago. Hence, the congregation was about two years old when I began my labors there; and I was about the same age, so far as being a preacher is concerned.

All this, of course, was a new experience to me, and I went there with the intentions of staying about three months; for I knew, after counting the number of times I would have to preach, that my supply of sermons (?) would be gone by that time. But with a desire in my heart and a prayer on my lips to do God's will and extend his kingdom, I began a work which, as I now look back over it and tears fill my eyes, is very gratifying to me. To my surprise, I stayed four years instead of three months; and as to my sermons—well, I still have a few yet.

I went to Anniston during the most trying times, I suppose, that the world has ever known. The great war was raging furiously, millions were being killed, homes were broken up, hearts were sad. Mothers, sisters, and sweet hearts were too bereaved and sad to even think of going to church, worshipping God, and being comforted. But it seems to me that of all the times in the world when people should have sought God for help, comfort, and strength, and should have been in a worshipful mood, it was at this time. But as is too often the case, it had the opposite effect on them. Then those who did not feel the sting of sadness and heartache were money-mad and pleasure-crazy, and of course they had no time and inclination to worship and serve God. Consequently, the preacher talked to empty benches which were not very responsive and gave little encouragement. Then, on the wake of all this, the epidemic of influenza broke out and thousands were dying around us, some of whom were among our own small number. The places of worship were closed to the few who had a desire to worship, but the pool rooms and other places of vice were left open. Shame on our Christian (?) nation! Such conditions as these were not very conducive to spiritual growth nor encouraging to a "two-year-old" preacher.

But in the midst of all these discouragements, I worked like a Trojan and prayed earnestly for God's help and guidance; and, with the coopera-

A Brand-New Book

"OLD LIMBER" or THE TALE of THE TAYLORS by DELONG RICE

"ALF and BOB TAYLOR, with their eloquence, their fiddles, and their fox hounds, have wrought for themselves a niche of eternal melody in the hearts of their country."

So states the author of this little book, which we present as the best product of the pen of DeLong Rice. Into one hour of reading he has gathered the strange and romantic story of the two most wonderful political campaigns of Tennessee—the thrilling tale of the happy comradeship and the lifelong rivalry of the two famous brothers—a disclosure of the remarkable and heretofore unpublished incidents that attended the political division of the Taylor family—the wonder of "The War of the Roses" that attracted the attention of the world—and the truth about "OLD LIMBER," the peerless and now immortal fox hound that played the leading role of sentiment in the political campaign of last fall, from the Mississippi River to the Unaka Mountains.

With a "Cast of Characters" extending from a President of the United States to a fox hound, the story touches a wide range of human sentiment; and through it all is the aroma of crackling camp fires and the music of the chase.

THE BOOK is beautifully printed and bound, appropriately illustrated, and packed in a neat gift box, ready for mailing.

tion and help of the few brethren there then, we have now the most ideal New Testament church I have ever seen. In addition to a large congregation in Anniston, we have set in order two new congregations in adjacent communities and added about one hundred members to established churches in adjoining counties.

I thank God that, through his providence, I was led to Anniston. I shall never forget those wonderfully faithful brethren and sisters who stood by me in this great work. May God's choicest blessings rest upon each of them. I pray that they may always be true to the church and to God's word.

I am now the "new preacher" at Albany, Ala. I have never had a more cordial welcome given me than when I came here last week. The conditions are very auspicious, and I hope and pray that my labors here will be profitable and pleasant.

East Tennessee Conditions.

BY WILL J. CULLUM.

The first of this year I began laboring in this part of the State, realizing the need of the work and believing the opportunity was at hand to accomplish great good with the right man in the field. Whether or not I am the right man remains to be revealed.

On September 1, last year, there was only one loyal little band of fifteen in Roane County. At that time, by arrangement of Brother George W. Farmer, I began a tent meeting at Rockwood, which was the first time any effort had ever been made there to establish a congregation of those who are satisfied to worship "as it is written." We now have a splendid house of worship and a live congregation of ninety members, with an average attendance on the last four Lord's days of one hundred and seventeen in the Sunday school. The society and instrumental-music brethren are strong numerically, but spiritually (as it appears) very weak. They claim an average attendance of over five hundred in the Sunday-school. Many of their members who claim to be members of the church never stay for the Supper, which shows the kind of teaching they have had. However, this is not at all strange; for, with the great amount of work that their pastor, Dr. Leland Cook, has to do, naturally, he is pressed for time. Leagues, bazaars, and a baseball team of which he is president, with a union service now and then! It could not be expected of him to do much else, even to defend his use of the things mentioned, which I asked him to do.

I find in Dayton (Rhea County) a good congregation of forty or fifty who are willing to abide by a "Thus saith the Lord" in their work and worship. The need of more workers in this part of the country is apparent, with a number of counties with no congregations in them.

Notes from West Tennessee.

BY JOHN R. WILLIAMS.

WHY THE DEBATE DID NOT TAKE PLACE.

During the excitement, criticisms, and some little commendation of the preaching done by Brethren Sewell and Roulhac, a Methodist preacher by the name of Robert Tarrant was called for the sole purpose of digging up and otherwise obliterating the seed sown by these two men.

Tarrant came, as he said, "with my spurs on;" and such a crowd, and such a sermon! His abuse and gross misrepresentation of these men and and what they taught created in me a sympathy for them; at least, I thought it only fair and reasonable that they should have the opportunity to defend themselves before the same people that heard Tarrant.

I suggested to my uncle, who was a leading member of the Methodist Church, that we challenge Sewell and Roulhac for a debate, thinking, of course, that if we challenged them for a debate they would leave the neighborhood and that would be the last of the matter. His answer was: "Son, you don't know what you are talking about. It is the glory and delight of Campbellite preachers to debate, and that is just what they want." To my astonishment, I learned that I was the only member of the Methodist Church that wanted a debate. A debate I did not get.

This puzzled me. I could not understand why we should not meet these men face to face and publicly expose and overthrow their teaching.

My contention for the debate was so constant that finally my uncle said to me: "If you don't let those Campbellites alone and quit giving attention to what they teach, they will soon have you in the creek." Then I went up and exploded.

About this time Brother John Nash came into our neighborhood and preached two sermons on "The Identity of the Covenants." In contrasting the two covenants, he drew the contrast between a man and a monkey. He reasoned thus: "A man has one head, a monkey has one head; hence, we argue, a man is a monkey, and a monkey is a man." Thus he argued until he found that the monkey had something the man did not: "A monkey has one tail, a man has no tail; hence, we argue, a man is not a monkey, and a monkey is not a man." He then proceeded to show that the New Covenant contained some things the old one did not and that the Old Covenant contained some things the New one did not; therefore, they are not identical, but entirely different. I had never heard such preaching—so plain, so simple, and so true.

About this time I hired myself to

Wilson & Son to drive a log team for them, as they were engaged in the sawmill business. I boarded with Brother M. M. Wilson, who is now the senior elder of the congregation at Obien. He was such a good man, so kind and pleasant with me, that I was greatly surprised to know that such a good man could be a "Campbellite." I considered it my duty under God to convert him from the error of his way and save a soul from death. Soon after I began my mission work on him he made a proposition which I readily accepted; "and here is the straw that broke the camel's back." His proposition was for me to write out ten objections to the "Campbellite Church" and give them to him to answer, and that he would write out and give to me ten objections to the Methodist Church. I knew, or thought, I had him now. His first objection: "I object to the Methodist Church because no such church is once named in the Bible." To this good day I have not been able to answer his first objection. Will some good Methodist preacher furnish me with a scriptural answer?

These things all occurred before I was married.

More to follow.

Glow Worms.

Glowworms haunt the open, weed-covered water tables beside high roads. Here, after dusk, they scatter the grass with points of golden green and liquid light. It is a genial rather than a cold radiance—warmer than many stars. At short range its brilliance is extraordinary; but it does not penetrate, and only reveals a few grass blades and inches of earth round the source of light. Yet upon those grass blades and grains of sand and soil exist many invisible creatures who must see or feel the glowworm's little lamp, and to them her passing is far more tremendous than to us would be the blaze of a great comet.—Eden Phillpots.

The Microscope Habit.

"I suppose science is a great thing," said an old lady, with the doubtful tones of one venturing into unfamiliar regions, "and all these new fangled fashions of investigating are useful; but it seems as if we haven't much peace at our house since John's taken to looking at everything through a microscope. The water isn't pure, the vegetables are inhabited, and all the wholesome, comfortable things that we've enjoyed and been thankful for all these years are discovered to have specks and spots, till 'most everything is spoiled."

But the microscope habit is still worse when it invades the moral and spiritual realm. There are those so addicted to it that they are constantly turning the glass upon their fellows and all their doings, and exclaiming over the defects that keen scrutiny can bring to light. The home life that looks so beautiful has its flaws, after all; the kind deed that is so helpful holds its alloy of selfishness. The one whose example stirs to emulation is far from perfect. There are mixed motives to be discovered, if one looks closely enough, in the teacher whose words thrill and uplift those about him. Friendship, philanthropy, and faith, all are subjected to the ever-ready glass, and all pronounced imperfect. The trouble with many microscope people is that they only spoil what we have; they never substitute anything better.—The Quiver.

After all, it is better to have our paradise at the end of life than at the beginning of it.—Exchange.

Following On to Know Jehovah.

BY G. C. BREWER.

The children of Israel had been serving God for many hundred years before the time of the prophet Hosea, and yet they did not know God. They had been told of the mighty things he had done for their fathers, and they were even at this time offering sacrifices unto God according to the law given unto them at Horeb. Moreover, they went to Jerusalem year by year to celebrate the passover, which was intended to commemorate their deliverance from Egyptian bondage by the outstretched arm of Jehovah. Does it not seem strange that, with all their memorial services and ordinances, they forgot Jehovah? How could they preserve the memory of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and their vows and covenants with Jehovah, and of Jehovah's gracious promises to them and to their children forever, and still not know the God of their fathers? Was such a thing possible? That is was not only possible, but that such was actually the case, is clearly seen from the language of Hosea: "My people are destroyed for a lack of knowledge." (Hos. 4: 6.) "Let us know, let us follow on to know Jehovah." (Hos. 6: 3.) "For I desire goodness, and not sacrifice; and the knowledge of God more than burnt offerings." (Hos. 6: 6.) From this we see that these Israelites had not ceased to offer their sacrifices and burnt offerings, but these services had degenerated into cold, formal, perfunctory performances. They were done as a matter of habit and custom, with no thought of honoring God. There was no soul surrender or heartfelt sentiment of worship in their ceremonial rites. So heartless was their service that the spreading forth of their hands in prayer was an abomination to Jehovah. (Isa. 1: 12-15.) They drew near unto God with their mouths, but their hearts were far from him. They knew not God. They had no personal knowledge of his love and power. The story of the wonders performed in behalf of their nation was a mere matter of race history and national pride. Their hands were stained with blood and their tribes were defiled with whoredoms, all for the lack of knowledge, which lack also rendered their burnt offerings vain and brought destruction upon the people.

WORSHIPING AN UNKNOWN GOD.

The idols of the heathen are not the only people who have worshiped a God unknown. We have seen that the nation that claimed a monopoly upon Jehovah's mercies and whose founders had had great intimacy with him worshiped God in numerous ceremonies, and yet did not know him. And we can see in those Jews the prototype of many professed Christians of to-day. Have we not all seen people who make loud professions of loyalty to Christ and his word, but whose lives are sadly at variance with the principles of purity preached by Christ? Did we never know men who could preach eloquent sermons and write long, wordy articles on how brethren should dwell together in peace, "in honor preferring one another," and yet when the case concerns these men personally they will rule or ruin, "boss or bust," and put themselves into prominence or tear up the kingdom of heaven? Are there no people on earth to-day whose sense of loyalty comprehends nothing more than fidelity to a few doctrines or specific commands? It does not matter that these doctrines are true or that chapter and verse can be given for the commands. That was true of the burnt offerings of the Jews and of the solemn assemblies and feasts and fasts and prayers. But they honored their forms and not the God that authorized them. Likewise, have we not seen people who mistook ranting dogmatism for zeal for the Lord and entrenched stubbornness and unvarying conformity to custom for loyalty to the truth? Such persons can go through a set form of worship on Lord's-day forenoon and imagine they have done all that is required of a Christian until next Lord's day. They can spend the rest of the week, including Lord's-day afternoon, in either business or pleasure, with never a qualm of conscience or a thought of God. They can go through the form of putting a coin on the collection plate and persuade themselves that they have obeyed the divine command to give as they are prospered. They may worship (?) at regular intervals and in approved form, but they know not God. Since they are strangers to God and have no knowledge of his character, of course none of his attributes, such as love, goodness, justice, mercy, and faith, are reflected in their lives. Let us watch ourselves, lest we fall into this lamentable condition.

THIS IS LIFE.

"And this is life eternal, that they should know thee the only true God, and him whom thou didst send, even Jesus Christ." (John 17: 3.) To fail to know God means death, as seen above, but to know him means life eternal. To know him, therefore, means something more than simply to have knowledge of his existence or to know of the attributes ascribed to him or even to repeat pretty prayers to him. The word "know" is used in many different senses in the Bible. There are people who know God, but do not worship him, and there are people who worship God, but do not know him. In that sentence the word is used in two senses. In China and India and Africa there are people who never heard of God, but all the people of America know him in that sense. But the Israelites had long known Jehovah in that sense when they were exhorted by the prophet to "follow on to know" him. In the last day Christ will say to those upon whose left hand, "I never knew you," but this cannot mean that he had never known of their existence or of their wicked works or that they had professed to do their works in his name. It means that he never recognized them; that there was no established acquaintance, no communion between them. We may conclude, therefore, that to know God means that he must be enthroned in the heart to rule and order the life; that his will is a pleasure and not a duty or a task. It means that such a person has a communion, a friendship and fellowship with God; a correspondence fixed with heaven. He walks with God as did Enoch and Noah, and Abraham. This is why to know God means eternal life. And this explains Paul's language also: "Yea verily, and I count all things to be loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord." (Phil. 3: 8.) He does not say that he counted all things to be loss for Christ, nor yet for the knowledge of Christ, but for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ. Then in verse 10 he says: "That I may know him, and the power of his resurrection, and the fellowship of his sufferings, becoming conformed unto his death."

FOLLOWING ON TO KNOW.

Both in the language just quoted from Paul and in the passage in Hosea there is the idea of progression; of growth in knowledge, of learning by living. The world by its wisdom cannot know God, and even those who depend upon divine revelation for their acquaintance with the Almighty cannot know him in the fullest sense until they have known his companionship through many experiences of life. But when they have had fellowship with his sufferings; when they have tasted and found him gracious; when they have prayed and been answered; when they have trusted and had his promises fulfilled in their lives, they can sing:

'Tis so sweet to trust in Jesus,
Just to take him at his word;
Just to rest upon his promise,
Just to know "Thus saith the Lord."
Jesus, Jesus, how I trust him!
How I've proved him o'er and o'er!
Jesus, Jesus, precious Jesus,
O for grace to trust him more!

Those who have not proved the Lord many times should never sing this hymn, for upon their lips it would be a falsehood. Furthermore, they do not know the Lord. Neither do they know the sweetness of a life of trust. It was at the close of a long life of toil and sacrifice, yet of joy and faith and fellowship with Christ, that Paul could say: "I know him whom I have believed, and I am persuaded that he is able to guard that which I have committed unto him against that day." (2 Tim. 1: 12.) He had long believed, but now he knew. He had proved the Lord. Therefore, "let us know, let us follow on to know Jehovah."

PELOUBET'S NOTES FOR 1922 NOW READY.

"Peloubet's Notes" has been issued for forty-eight years with ever-increasing popularity and usefulness, which fact alone is a wonderful argument for its value and helpfulness. It is rich in material, comprehensive in its scope, and practical in its treatment. Every superintendent, teacher, and scholar will find in it his own personal requirements. The editor of The Outlook says: "We give first place to Peloubet's." Marion Lawrence, the noted Sunday-school worker, writes: "How this standard commentary has been able to maintain itself during all these years, growing annually stronger and richer, is a marvel to the Sunday-school world. Personally, I do not see how any Sunday-school teacher can hope to do his best without the rich, full helps found in these 'Notes.'"

How Long Must We Be Faithful?

BY R. C. GOODPASTURE.

Many professed Christians, like the Jews as a nation, live and rejoice mainly in the consideration of a great past. They were once active in the faith, and, perhaps, did things of which a sinful world was not worthy; but they have long since ceased from their labors. Some of them, feeling that they had borne their burdens long enough, have retired; while others, thinking that they had worked too hard, have allowed themselves to drift into the Dead Sea of religious indifference and inactivity. Beginning the Christian life and finishing it are two entirely different things. There are more beginners than finishers in the faith. This is unfortunate.

It is a sad day for the child of God when he does not forget the "things which are behind" and stretch forward to the "things which are before." Of course it is evident that the mistakes and encumbrances of the past should not be lived over again, but it is equally evident that the fine deeds and noble accomplishments of bygone days should not be so remembered and so magnified as to beguile one into the neglect of present and future obligations and duties. The labors of the years that are gone may have sufficed for them, but they will not suffice for the years to come. What has been done should help us, not hinder us. Our eyes must be directed toward the future. Perhaps, for us, the "things which are before" are greater than the "things which are behind." At least, they should be. It is a life to be pitied that does not develop with the processes of the years. The most fearful tragedy in the world is that of a soul which leaves the body less prepared to meet God than when it entered the body. The man who had ability to use only five talents at first so exercised himself that he was able to use eleven talents later. He was faithful over a "few things" and was worthy to be "set over many things." (Matt. 25: 21, 28.) David was faithful in caring for his father's sheep, and God made him shepherd of his people Israel. (1 Sam. 17: 34, 35.) Past labors prepare for, rather than dispense with, present and future responsibilities.

The great trouble with many people is that they strive to attain but one goal, and that one is very near them. For example, a good sister strives for the conversion of her husband—a commendable work; but when he obeys the gospel, she loses interest in the unsaved. She has reached the end for which she was laboring. Instead of seeking the salvation of sinners, even to the last one in the remote corners of the earth, she seems to consider her life's work done. Sometimes a brother is very zealous until a meetinghouse is built or a certain congregation is established; and then he, too, retreats, to rest the remnant of his days. His heart's desire has been realized. O that we might understand that the "field is the world" (Matt. 13: 38) and that the day of our labor is limited only by the span of our life!

He who would be crowned must be faithful unto the end. "He that endureth to the end, the same shall be saved." (Matt. 10: 22.) "The end"—that is, the end of life or its equivalent. It is not until the closing scenes of his last imprisonment that Paul said: "I have fought the good fight, I have finished the course, I have kept the faith." (2 Tim. 4: 7.) When writing to the Philippians, the great apostle said: "Brethren, I count not myself yet to have laid hold; but one thing I do, forgetting the things which are behind, and stretching forward to the things which are before, I press on toward the goal unto the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus." (Phil. 3: 13, 14.) The interval of time between the writing of Philipians and that of second Timothy was not long, yet Paul did not consider his course finished so long as he had life and opportunity to labor. "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee the crown of life." (Jesus.)

"When the Son of man cometh, shall he find faith on the earth?" (Luke 18: 8.)

Hugh E. Garrett is in the third week of a successful meeting at Lafayette, Ga. Five had made the good confession when Brother Garrett was last heard from. One of the five was a steward of the Methodist Church. The meeting has been greatly hindered by unfavorable weather, but Brother Garrett is an untiring worker.

Brother Smelser is doing a good work at Liberty Hill. The brethren there are remodeling and painting their meetinghouse.

Brother and Sister S. F. Morrow, of Nashville, Tenn., were with us at West End Avenue last Lord's day. Brother Morrow preached to a large and appreciative audience at the morning service. We hope they will come our way again soon.

The Enormity of Sin.

BY JAMES E. CHESSOR.

"And God saw that the wickedness of man was great in the earth, and that every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually." "And God looked upon the earth, and, behold, it was corrupt; for all flesh had corrupted his way upon the earth." These quotations from Genesis are given here to show to what low depths of filthiness and degradation human beings may be brought by the indulgence of sin. And sin is just as sinful, just as deadly and loathsome, in our day as it was before the flood. "Sin is exceedingly sinful."

And to-day, as in the days of Noah, the world seems to have lost much of its sensitiveness to the terrible enormity of sin. This is due largely, I think, to the long-continued prevalence and universality of iniquity in the earth. There has been a long reign of sin since Adam, and the hearts of sinners certainly are not less callous to-day than they were formerly. It is true in large measure, as Hawthorne avers, that the "evils of one generation survive in succeeding generations, become uncontrollable, and work nothing but mischief." That "evil men and impostors shall wax worse and worse" is but natural. I am not saying that the world is growing worse or that the people are worse now than formerly. On the surface there are some indications of a general decline in moral standards and of an unhealthy social life. On the other hand, there seems to be more altruism—more brotherly interest in others, more public spirit, and a more widely diffused sense of responsibility for the welfare of the world at large—than ever before. I think the armament conference in Washington is indicative of this. But with all its enlightenment and worthy aims, this is nevertheless a sinful generation. "The whole world lieth in wickedness." Sin still darkens the earth, and I repeat there is a loss of sensitiveness toward evil, a disposition to wink at wickedness. But let us not forget that sin is as detestable in the eyes of the righteous God as it ever was.

The enormity of sin is seen in God's manifest hatred of sin. He calls it "this abominable thing that I hate" (Jer. 44: 4), and he resolutely refuses to look upon it (Hab. 1: 13). Nor has he failed at any time to punish sinners; every transgression and every disobedience, according to inexorable law, receives its just recompense of reward. The judgments of Jehovah has pronounced exhibit his hatred for sin, and, at the same time, his interest in saving men from its baleful consequences. A few instances are in point here. When the first pair sinned, they were banished from Eden and the flaming sword of the Cherubim was set to guard the entrance. When the race became so steeped in iniquity and lost in depravity that the cry of it reached to heaven, a whole generation were swept away in the flood. When the inhabitants of Sodom and Gomorrah through wantonness had become lost to all sense of shame and decency, fire and brimstone were rained down upon them from heaven and they were utterly destroyed. When God's chosen nation, the Hebrews, had sinned repeatedly and grievously in defiance of solemn warnings, although God had exalted them above all other nations of earth in point of privilege and favor, they were, finally, when their cup of iniquity had become full, exiled and scattered over the earth. In his dealings with individuals, God has not been less severe in his punishment of sin. David, the king, commits an unspeakable crime against God, and suffers bereavement and bitter anguish of heart. The vicious Herod claims the honors due God, and loathsome disease smites him. Ananias and Sapphira lie to the Holy Spirit, and perish without mercy. Peter denies his Lord, and pays for his unfaithfulness in penitential tears. Judas Iscariot betrays the Christ, and satisfies the divine wrath in remorse and suicide. Hence, it will be seen that God's righteous hatred of sin suffers no evil to go unwhipped of justice or unpunished, and this without respect of persons. His judgments are trumpet-tongued warnings to all sinners.

The deadliness and enormity of sin are seen in man's impotence, when unaided of God, to extricate himself from its destructive power. Wonderful is the recent progress of medical and surgical science, but no science which man has originated can deliver him from the disease of sin. This leprous malady of the soul is incurable by human contrivance. "Can the Ethiopian change his skin, or the leopard his spots? then may ye also do good, that are accustomed to do evil." (Jer. 13: 23.) "The law of the flesh is enmity against God; for it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can it be." (Rom. 8: 7.) Man is in bondage to sin, and utterly helpless in and of himself to effect his deliverance. The incubus of sin lies like a blighting shadow upon earth, and man gropes in Stygian darkness, not a ray of light falling athwart his path save that from the Sun of righteousness that rose two thousand years ago with healing in his beams. "For the wages of sin is death; but the free gift of God is eternal life in Christ Jesus our Lord." (Rom. 6: 23.) "Wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me out of the body of this death? I thank God through Jesus Christ our Lord." (Rom. 7: 24, 25.) It is sin—nothing less, nothing more—that has wrought man's ruin. Yet men speak and write of sin as though it were a light thing, calling it an error, a misfortune, something humanity can grow out of by a process of natural evolution, by education, or by the imposition of a better environment. Singular that man, lost world without end, should have the impudence to devise his own plan of redemption, and singular indeed that he is not anxious to accept the salvation so graciously offered him. But he must die if he spurns the great and good Physician, for he is sick unto death. Only the cleansing blood of Jesus, the Lamb of God slain from the foundation of the world, can atone for his crimes. Salvation is by grace.

The enormity of sin is seen in the fact that it was sin that made necessary the death of Christ. "He was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities; the chastisement of our peace was upon him; and with his stripes we are healed. All we like sheep have gone astray; we have turned every one to his own way; and Jehovah hath laid on him the iniquity of us all." (Isa. 53: 5, 6.) "Apart from shedding of blood there is no remission." "Through his own blood [Christ] entered in once for all into the holy place, having obtained eternal redemption." The price of redemption is Christ's blood, the vicarious suffering on Calvary. The gospel message, then, embodies "Jesus Christ, and him crucified," and, equally, the awful fact that it was sin that made necessary his crucifixion.

I do not like to write of sin, it is so loathsome and has wrought such ruin in the world; but God has said much about sin, and he has warned sinners. Would that all men would heed his warnings! "Wash you, make you clean." "Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool."

BY FLOYD S. LEE.

The work at the Central church of Christ, of this city, grows weekly, with the enrollment having gone above one hundred and the regular collections averaging above fifty dollars for each Lord's day.

Brother Samuel E. Witty's work as minister is becoming more and more effective, and Brother James Morgan is doing a fine work as song leader. He understands music and takes great pleasure in striving to improve the singing.

The motto of those who have banded themselves together for this central drive in our city is: "Work, then more work!" There is hope for the people who try; there is no hope for those who do not try. "Be not deceived; God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap." (Gal. 6: 7.) Christ meant what he said when he declared: "Every branch in me that beareth not fruit, he taketh it away." (John 15: 2.)

The Christian's life must be one of continued watchfulness for opportunities to do good in leading the lost to Christ and bringing back to their "first love" those disciples who have grown cold and careless and gone into sin. "Brethren, even if a man be overtaken in any trespass, ye which are spiritual, restore such a one in the spirit of meekness; looking to thyself, lest thou also be tempted." (Gal. 6: 1.) James (5: 19, 20) says: "My brethren, if any among you do err from the truth, and one convert him; let him know, that he which converteth a sinner from the error of his way shall save a soul from death, and shall cover a multitude of sins." The Pharisees and scribes murmured against Jesus, saying: "This man receiveth sinners, and eateth with them. And he spake unto them this parable, saying, What man of you, having a hundred sheep, and having lost one of them, doth not leave the ninety and nine in the wilderness, and go after that which is lost, until he find it? And when he hath found it, he layeth it on his shoulders, rejoicing. And when he cometh home, he calleth together his friends and his neighbors, saying unto them, Rejoice with me, for I have found my sheep which was lost." (Luke 15: 2-6.) These scriptures certainly teach that the desire continually upon Christ's heart is the salvation of souls, and the same desire, in all the writings of the Holy Spirit, is impressed upon us who claim to be following Jesus.

It takes strength and a desire for salvation to acknowledge a sin. And when the erring one does fully and freely confess his sins, this should be punishment enough for him without cool treatment from the brethren. "Sufficient to such a one is this punishment which was inflicted by the many; so that contrariwise ye should rather forgive him and comfort him, lest by any means such a one should be swallowed up with his overmuch sorrow. Wherefore I beseech you to confirm your love toward him." (2 Cor. 2: 6-8.) But some of us cannot confirm our love toward any one, simply because we do not have it. But the true disciple who ever lets the Spirit of Christ abide in him gladly and quickly confirms his love, because love is spontaneous in its manifestations. You do not have to beg love to obey. When begging is necessary, it is proof that love is not what it should be.

Due to a lack of love, we often condemn where there is no ground for condemnation. The one that condemns another when there is no certain proof of guilt reveals the sad condition of his own heart—viz., a loveless and Christless heart. When Christ abides in us, we are careful to treat others as we desire that others treat us; hence, never condemn without evidence. "Wherefore thou art without excuse, O man, whosoever thou art that judgest; for wherein thou judgest another, thou condemnest thyself; for thou that judgest dost practice the same things." (Rom. 2: 1.) Either practice the same things, or you do things that are worse than that you condemn in others.

The true Christian hates sin and will not knowingly walk in it. Such can go to the fallen one with pity and love and lift him up. The more nearly perfect we keep our own souls from consciously sinning, the more pity and compassion we have on those who have sinned. It seems that some would have us think their detestation of sin is something great, from the way they, without mercy and compassion, land on those who have sinned. Such, when the truth is known as God knows it, will be shown to be great sinners. Who has ever condemned sin more strongly than our Lord? And with this question, consider another: Who has ever been so gentle, so tender, so compassionate in his efforts to save the lost, as Jesus? That disposition on our part to have no mercy, to give not the fallen a chance, instead of proving our own hatred for sin and freedom from it, convicts us of having sin of the worst kind in our own heart and lives.

To the members of the Central church of Christ, as well as to others, let me say: Let us all do our best to let the very life of Christ be relived in us. The admonition of Paul is timely here: "Finally, brethren, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honorable, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things." The mind in this condition will see evil only where evil exists.

"Howbeit the firm foundation of God standeth, having this seal, The Lord knoweth them that are his: and, Let every one that nameth the name of the Lord depart from unrighteousness." (2 Tim. 2: 19.) Taking the very words of our Lord and living them has harmed no soul; it will save us, and enable us to save others.

Then and Now.

BY EARNEST C. LOVE.

Twenty-three years ago to-day (January 4) I left my home in Franklin, Ky., and started eastward to find a place and hold a meeting. It was my first missionary trip. The events of that day and the days immediately following are indelibly stamped upon my memory. Well do I remember that I tried the fourth place before I found lodging for the night. A hospitable old Baptist gentleman took me in for the night, and next day told me where I could find some brethren.

At Gold City I found Brother and Sister Herrington, and they told me of a Brother Silas Patterson, seven miles away, and of a schoolhouse near him, where they thought I might hold a meeting. I found things as they said, and held the meeting.

During this meeting I became well acquainted with Brother Patterson. I was much impressed with his zeal and knowledge of the Scriptures, especially as he could neither read nor write. One could scarcely have less book learning than he had.

There is considerable contrast between that day and this one. To-day I have been wandering among the twenty-five or thirty large buildings of the University of Chicago. Their tall spires and domes in some ways resemble the tall oaks, poplars, and chestnuts that grew beside my path on that other January day so long ago. These dimly lighted halls and vaulted roofs are not altogether unlike the spreading beeches that well-nigh hid the sky above my head as I walked through those hollows leading toward Drake's Creek.

HARDEMAN'S TABERNACLE SERMONS

Beginning March 28, 1922, the churches of Christ in Nashville will engage in a meeting to be held in the Tabernacle of this city, the preaching to be done by N. B. Hardeman and the song service to be led by C. M. Pullias, of Murfreesboro, Tennessee. The meeting will continue for twenty days. The sermons will be printed and bound in a book of 320 pages. Hardeman's ability as a gospel preacher is a sufficient guarantee as to the character of the sermons. The book will appear about May 1, 1922. The price of the book is $1.50 a copy. You should send in your order at once, so the brethren will know how many to print. Mail your order to-day, so as to be sure to get a copy.

There is a great contrast in another way. That day I made the acquaintance of one of the most illiterate, and to-day I have interviewed some of the most highly educated men that this or any other age has produced. Dr. Breasted, professor of archeology, told me he had spent over thirty-five years studying this one subject. He reads fluently the Egyptian hieroglyphics and cuneiform script of the ancient Assyrians and Babylonians. He has followed the expeditions to the fields, and has with his own hands retrieved many specimens of very ancient workmanship. But the sad part of it is, this learned man has lost faith in the Bible as the infallible word of God. He said his mother taught him that the Scriptures were infallible, but the facts developed by scientific research were all against that idea.

Then my mind went back to the simple faith of Silas Patterson, away out among the black oaks of "Old Kentucky," and I said: "Verily not many wise men after the flesh are called. Let us then turn away from the gloomy halls of science, falsely so-called, and go back to the illiterate, and let them lead us." But just here I was checked—for where is Brother Patterson now? Is he still sound in the faith and a safe teacher of the gospel? I am sorry to say he is not. His very illiteracy has made him a prey to false teachers. He has been in three or four different organizations since I knew him, and is now affiliated with a sect which is far from right in many ways.

To whom, then, may we turn? If neither the wise nor unwise can be safely followed, what can we do? Then I remembered the words of Jeremiah, the prophet; "O Jehovah, I know that the way of man is not in himself; it is not in man that walketh to direct his steps." (Jer. 10: 23.) So the answer is, do not follow men at all. Let every man set this for his motto: "Let God be true, but every man a liar." That is the only safe way. Let us pin our faith to no man. Let us see "no man, save Jesus only."

Are You Discouraged? Get "Consolation."

The first copies of "Consolation," a new book edited by Brother A. B. Lipscomb, are off the press. It contains a carefully selected collection of the choicest gems of comfort from the greatest poets and prose writers of the ages. Each selection is a masterpiece. It is safe to say that in this book you will find a bringing together of the most comforting messages ever written in artistic and convenient form. Besides the Bible, there are quotations from about seventy authors. It is attractively printed, with special decorations.

This unique volume is designed to serve as a fitting keepsake in memory of the dear departed. You will find a beautifully engraved memorial page on which the name may be filled in, together with dates of birth and death. Should you wish to present it to some friend, there is a blank for this purpose.

Again, there will be many occasions when you will wish to write a note of sympathy. You will find it very convenient to include in your note a quotation from this volume. This is another distinct advantage. Flowers fade and lose their beauty, but "Consolation" may be kept always.

"That He Might Seek a Godly Seed."

BY A. A. RUNNER.

"And the rib, which the Lord God had taken from man, made he a woman, and brought her unto the man. And Adam said, This is now bone of my bones, and flesh of my flesh: she shall be called Woman, because she was taken out of Man. Therefore shall a man leave his father and his mother, and shall cleave unto his wife: and they shall be one flesh." (Gen. 2: 22-24.)

"So God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him; male and female created he them." (Gen. 1: 27.)

"But from the beginning of the creation God made them male and female [not females]. For this cause shall a man leave his father and mother, and cleave to his wife; and they twain shall be one flesh: so then they are no more twain, but one flesh." (Mark 10: 6-8.)

Why was it thus; and why be so particular in so stating these facts, and why have them put on record and handed down to future generations? God tells us why in his word in plain and unequivocal language. Hear him: "And did not he [God] make one? Yet had he the residue of the spirit. And wherefore one? That he might seek a godly seed. Therefore take heed to your spirit, and let none deal treacherously [or, unfaithfully—margin] against the wife of his youth. For the Lord, the God of Israel, saith that he hateth putting away: for one covereth violence with his garment, saith the Lord of hosts: therefore take heed to your spirit, that ye deal not treacherously." (Mal. 2: 15, 16.)

Why did God then make one? "That he might seek a godly seed." If this statement is true—and true it is, for it is the statement of the Lord God of hosts—then he cannot seek and obtain a godly seed through any other channel. If any man or woman has ever been begotten and born out of wedlock or through a polygamous marriage that has ever been noted as a great moral reformer, such has never come under my notice, either in ancient or modern times. If any one has ever known any exception to this rule of God, such a one has observed more than I have ever been able to observe. But if such a case has ever come under the observation of others, I would be glad to have it pointed out to me. But no one has more sympathy for this unfortunate class of humanity than I have. I say "unfortunate class" of our race, who have been made such through the wicked and ungodly lusts of an unlawful parentage, a parentage that is out of all harmony with heaven's law, a law established in the beginning and which has never been revoked by its divine Lawgiver. No man can have but one living wife at a time, no woman can have but one living husband at a time, without bringing spiritual and eternal ruin upon their own souls and physical degeneracy and moral weakness upon their innocent offspring, as long as God's word as revealed through Malachi (2: 14-16) stands, and it will stand as long as the righteous Lord seeks "a godly seed" among the sons and daughters of men, and this will be as long as time lasts, until the trump of God shall sound the doom of this world.

Read up on the history of men and nations, from the first departure of God's law to the present time. Take even the history of the descendants of Abraham through his two sons, Ishmael and Isaac. The descendants of these two sons have stood side by side through generations past and present as living witnesses to the truth of God's word along this line of thought. It is true that Abraham believed God's promise to him (see Gen. 15: 1-6); but both he and his wife were old, and they did not see how God could fulfill this promise, and Sarah at last fell upon a plan, as she thought, to help the Lord out of the difficulty (see Gen. 16: 1, 2). But as soon as Hagar conceived, then Sarah, her mistress, was despised in her eyes; and when Sarah saw that she was despised in the eyes of her hand-maid, then, womanlike, she tried to place the whole blame for the wrong she had done upon Abraham, her husband. (See Gen. 16: 5.) She was not willing that any blame for wrongdoing should rest upon her shoulders; it must all rest upon her husband. Did our Lord descend through the line of Ishmael? No. But "in Isaac shall thy seed be called." (Gen. 21: 12; Heb. 11: 18.) And why this? Because Jehovah is seeking "a godly seed," and no such seed ever came through the lineage of Ishmael. This can only come through the lawful marriage of one man to one woman; and this lawful marriage may be between a believing husband and an unbelieving wife, or vice versa. (1 Cor. 7: 13, 14.) Hence, when one quotes 2 Cor. 6: 14 and applies it to the marriage relation, he is making a wrong application of the inspired Paul's language and is doing violence to the word of the Lord. So we see that God did not accept the unlawful help of Abraham and Sarah in the fulfilling of his promise, but rejected it altogether. Hear him: "In Isaac shall thy seed be called." (See, also, Gen. 17: 19-21.) Is God a respecter of persons? No, but he respects moral worth, and, above all, he respects his law, which is "just and holy and good," and contains the only principles that will make good men and women—men and women who can be fitted for citizenship in the everlasting kingdom.

Now let us turn to Gen. 15: 1-4 and read what God said to Abraham, especially in verse 4. This was before the birth of Ishmael and Isaac. In verse 4 God said, in reply to Abraham's statement as recorded in verse 2: "This shall not be thine heir; but he that shall come forth out of thine own bowels shall be thine heir." But Ishmael was born some twelve years before Isaac, and, as Abram and Sarah supposed, was the one through whom the promise was to be fulfilled. Hence, one is ready to inquire: Did not Ishmael come forth out of Abram's bowels? My answer is, not according to my understanding of God's word. (Read Gen. 2: 23, 24; Mark 10: 3-12; Eph. 5: 28-33; 1 Cor. 12: 27.) Now I take it that Sarah herself was the "bowels" of Abraham from which the promised seed was to come forth.

On account of the adultery and fornication and the murder of the innocent unborn and the divorce evil that our beloved land is filled with, it is high time for the religious press to be aroused as it never was before and cry aloud in thunder tones, in tones that can be heard from the rivers to the ends of the earth. Archbishop Hayes, of the Roman Catholic Church, head of the New York archdiocese, and the Cleveland (Ohio) News, a secular newspaper, have spoken out against these great sins—or, at least, some of them—in no uncertain words. Hear them (I clip from the News of December 20, 1921):

Archbishop Hayes, head of the New York archdiocese, raises an interesting point in his vigorous denunciation of birth-control advocates. His Christmas pastoral address to the faithful says: "Children troop down from heaven because God wills it." He distinguishes between murder and birth control thus: "To take life after its inception is a horrible crime, but to prevent human life that the Creator is about to bring into being is Satanic. In the first instance, the body is killed, while the soul lives on. In the latter, not only a body, but an immortal soul, is denied existence in time and in eternity."

This puts a new complexion on the entire question. Beyond doubt, to destroy physical life in one body, permitting the soul to enter a better life, would be a crime less serious than saying to that soul: "You shall never exist at all."

It is a complicated question, made more complicated by the fact that outside of Archbishop Hayes' church, among the prosperous class, at least, birth control to a greater or less extent is practically universal.

God's word is the only safe rule and guide to man's mission and duties on this earth. (See Prov. 5: 1-23; Eccles. 12: 1-14.) Let the religious press all over the land arise in the strength of the Lord and cry aloud and spare not, and I am sure that the secular press will follow suit, and a great reformation will follow. The world needs to get back to "the old paths" along these lines. A virtuous woman is not safe any more in walking the streets of most of our cities alone. Even children of Christian parents are being raised up in disobedience, unthankfulness, and unholiness, and the congregations of the Lord that boast of their loyalty to him are sitting idly by, doing nothing to save the wicked, not only of the world, but among themselves, from the great wave of wreck and ruin that is sweeping humanity to destruction. Wake up! O, wake up!

Abraham Sojourns in Egypt.

BY H. LEO BOLES.

The path of the called-out of God is not an easy way. So often it leads to difficulties and adversities; frequently it enjoins burdens and sorrows. Sometimes we attempt to travel it alone, relying upon our own judgment, and blunder seriously. It seems strange that we should so far forget the strength, wisdom, and guidance of Jehovah and try to walk alone. Even the best and most faithful have seriously and fatally blundered at this point. We are slow to learn that "it is not in man that walketh to direct his steps." Abraham early in his sojourn in Canaan made a mistake.

We are told that "there was a famine in the land; and Abram went down into Egypt to sojourn there; for the famine was sore in the land." (Gen. 12: 10.) We do not know the exact time that Abraham made this departure from the promised land. It seems now that he had seen the land at its best and now sees it at its worst—"the famine was sore in the land." One has expressed it thus: "God had showed him the best to comfort his spirit, and then let him see the worst to try his faith." It seems strange from the human point of view that "Land of Promise" should be afflicted with famine; but the book of Genesis mentions three famines—one in Abraham's time, one in Isaac's time, and one in Jacob's time. God is teaching the patriarchs to depend upon him, to put their trust in him. The patriarchs, as well as all of God's people, are to learn that "man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God."

There have been times when Jehovah instructed his servants to go down into Egypt; he has used this country as a means of discipline for his people. Jacob was halting in indecision on the borders of Canaan when Joseph had sent for him; he was reluctant in accepting the invitation to go into Egypt. At this time Jehovah said: "Fear not to go down into Egypt. . . . I will go down with thee into Egypt." (Gen. 46: 3, 4.) Again, the angel of the Lord appeared unto Joseph and said: "Arise and take the young child and his mother, and flee into Egypt, and be thou there until I tell thee." (Matt. 2: 13.) Again, there are times when Jehovah warned against going into Egypt. When his people went there of their own accord, they always went down morally as well as geographically. They were to stay out of Egypt unless told to go there. "Woe to the rebellious children, saith Jehovah, that take counsel, but not of me; . . . that set out to go down into Egypt, and have not asked at my mouth; to strengthen themselves in the strength of Pharaoh, and to take refuge in the shadow of Egypt! Therefore shall the strength of Pharaoh be your shame, and the refuge in the shadow of Egypt your confusion." (Isa. 30: 1-3.)

There is no evidence that Jehovah directed Abraham to go into Egypt; he went without Jehovah's counsel, so far as the Bible reveals. What a mistake he thus makes! Of course, the famine was sore; there was no water for his herds; the clouds dropped no rain; the pastures, fields, and vineyards are dried up; the earth is as brass; the cattle perish; his servants complain and urge a change; Abraham decides to go into Egypt without asking counsel of Jehovah. What a severe test! How often to-day do we falter! Abraham could not expect relief from the citizens in Canaan. He was a stranger there; isolated from the inhabitants; they regarded him with suspicion and hostility instead of offering him friendly aid, even if they could in any way help him. He was weighted down with the responsibility of numerous flocks and vast herds. Wealth always brings its weight and responsibility. It was a severe trial for Abraham to view the devastation of famine and feel the disappointment of wealth. He goes into Egypt for relief.

Egypt was the granary of the world. It was even then a country with a marvelous history; its wonder and mystery were great; it was the land of the glorious Nile and mighty dynasties. In all ages the countries of the world had looked to Egypt as the storehouse of food and plenty. Joseph's brethren went there for relief. The apostle Paul was conveyed to Rome in a ship of Alexandria sailing for Italy loaded with wheat. Egypt was at this time, it seemed to Abraham, the best place in the world; so Abraham went down into Egypt and sojourned there. It seems strange that Abraham should err at his strongest point. Frequently it seems that we err at our strongest point rather than at our weakest. This is possibly because we do not guard our strongest points as we do our weakest. Abraham's strongest characteristic was faith; he was called the "father of the faithful;" faith was his highest achievement and the source of all his triumphs; yet by his unfaithfulness he blunders into Egypt. Some one has said that the sense of security is near akin to the haughty spirit that goeth before a fall.

Abraham enters into Egypt in fear. He became the victim of fear. He has taken a step independent of God, and begins to lose the courage that trust in God gives to one. One mistake leads to another. "We see now the hero is unheroic, and the saint unsaintly." Abraham handles very awkwardly the weapons of duplicity and deceit; he is unskilled in their use. He is in a land of corruption and treachery and thinks that he must use the tricks and schemings of its natives. He attempts to practice a modern adage: "When in Rome, do as Rome does." Of course, he will fail, because he is not trained in the art of deception. He persuades his wife to tell that she is his sister. One false step quickly involved him in another.

He spoke untruthfully. He used words which were in a sense true, but he used them with the intention of deceiving. One has tried to defend Abraham's course by saying that "he spoke of his sister, but did not deny his wife. However, no defense for his course is revealed in the Bible. A lie is anything said or done with the intention to deceive. God's people must always think, speak, act, and live the truth. "Behold, thou desirest truth in the inward parts." Abraham acted as though the end justified the means. He, with us, must learn that all tricks of policy, all compromise with error, and all silencing through fear of consequences hinder the ways of God and prove one untrue in life.

The Regiment of God.

Every mason in the quarry, every builder on the shore,
Every woodman in the forest, every boatman at the oar, Hewing wood and drawing water, splitting stones and clearing sod,
All the dusty roads of labor in the regiment of God,
March together toward his temple, do the task his hands prepare:
Honest toil is holy service, faithful work is praise and prayer.

At Home and Abroad

F. B. Srygley preached at Trinity Lane last Sunday and Sunday night. A large crowd was at each service.

From J. W. Atkisson, St. Louis, Mo.: "The cause here is doing well under the ministry of Brother Sevedge."

W. E. Morgan preached at Cherokee Park, this city, last Sunday morning and night following. One confession at night.

Tice Elkins requests us to announce that the preachers' meeting for the Southside Church, Fort Worth, Texas, has been called off.

W. M. Oakley preached at the Belmont Avenue Church, this city, last Sunday and Sunday night. He will preach at Reid Avenue, this city, next Lord's day.

S. H. Hall had two good services at Russell Street church of Christ, this city, last Sunday and Sunday night. Two took membership at the eleven-o'clock service.

James A. Allen preached for the Twelfth Avenue congregation, this city, last Lord's day, morning and evening. W. S. Moody will preach for this church next Lord's day.

E. S. Jelley, missionary to India, is much improved and is now in reasonable health. Brother Jelley has recently made three missionary trips and baptized fourteen persons.

H. D. Jeffcoat, Ackerman, Miss., writes: "I have been a reader of the Gospel Advocate since 1913, and it has been a great blessing to me. I look forward to its coming with much pleasure."

From Charles L. Talley, Hopkinsville, Ky., January 23: "Our work here moves on very well. The interest is picking up some. One was added yesterday, coming from the Baptist Church."

The receipts on the Gospel Advocate for January have indeed been encouraging. We are now planning to make the receipts for February even larger than January. Will you help us now?

Otis J. Haynes is still in Room 28, Baptist Hospital, Little Rock, Ark. He is recovering, but needs financial assistance. It would be well for the brethren in Little Rock to visit him in the hospital.

Readers of the Gospel Advocate who know of Christians living in Salt Lake City, Utah, are requested to send names and addresses of all such to Mrs. Earl Beebe, 1014 West Third Street, Tulsa, Okla.

From J. H. Horton, Tuscumbia, Ala., January 23: "The church at Tuscumbia is in fine condition. Two good services yesterday. One baptism in the afternoon. We are determined to win in His name."

F. A. McKnight, Readyville, Tenn., in renewing his subscription to the Gospel Advocate, says: "I have been a reader of the Advocate for over fifty years, and I have been well pleased with its teaching. I have learned many good lessons from it."

A sister from McMinnville, Tenn., sends two dollars for the Sinking Fund, but does not give her name; so we take this means of thanking her for the gift, and will send the Gospel Advocate to some deserving one who we believe will read it and be profited by so doing.

H. R. Daniel says: "The Gospel Advocate has been a welcome visitor in my home for thirty-five years. It has been a great help to me. After February 15 I will devote my time to preaching the gospel. Any congregation desiring my services should address me at Elkton Ky."

From L. A. Fowler, Fayette, Ala., Route 2: "I am located nine miles north of Fayette and fourteen miles south of Guin. I have been preaching for two years, mostly at home. I would be glad to preach for any church in reach of me any Sunday except the third Sunday in the month."

W. D. Allinder, Waverly, Ky., in renewing his subscription to the Gospel Advocate, says: "I could not get along without the Advocate. It has been a great help to my family. I have been a subscriber twenty-six years." Brother Allinder is an elder in the Liberty congregation at Waverly.

J. W. Richardson, in sending his renewal for the Gospel Advocate from January 1, 1922, to January 1, 1923, says:

"This makes my thirty-eighth year for the Gospel Advocate without missing a number. At the request of my first wife, in 1884, I subscribed for the Advocate. After reading carefully up to 1887, I obeyed the gospel before marrying my first wife."

From Will J. Cullum: "Two good audiences at Rockwood, Tenn., on January 22. Three confessions at the night services. One hundred and twenty-two in Sunday school. This congregation is only four months old, but it has a membership of ninety-three." Brother Cullum preaches half the time at Dayton, Tenn., and reports the cause in good condition at that place also.

E. C. Love is traveling among the churches in the interest of the Gospel Advocate. We are expecting him to send us many new and renewal subscribers to the paper. He will also sell our books. He is a splendid writer and will keep our readers informed as to the work and progress of the churches. He will be glad to preach for the churches on which he calls. We will appreciate any encouragement and help rendered him.

From J. R. Armstrong, Town Creek, Ala.: "We have never had any one to work with us that was more helpful to the church and the whole community than C. E. Holt. May he be spared many years to do the work he loves so well. Our congregation has had a healthy growth for the last two or three years. All enjoy the Lord's-day services. It is interesting to see the new members getting so much out of the services. . . . I made an effort sometime ago to get more of our people to take the Gospel Advocate, but my effort was a failure. To-day I made another effort and secured several subscribers."

From J. Pettey Ezell, Cookeville, Tenn.: "January 22 was a good day with us here. The interest along all lines is growing steadily and all seem to feel that we are entering the dawn of a better day for the church at Cookeville. We had two hundred in our Bible study yesterday, and the large auditorium was well filled at the eleven-o'clock hour, for all of which we thank God and take courage to press on to greater work for the church in this section. Having been called to Bethel, in Davidson County, on January 15, for the funeral service of Sister Climer, whom I baptized a few years ago, Prof. A. W. Smith filled my appointment here and W. A. Hensley filled my appointment at Holliday Schoolhouse in the afternoon. They are both good men and did their work creditably. We have several men who, with proper encouragement, will make efficient teachers and proclaimers of the word."

Sister J. S. Hendrix asks that some one write something on lodges, but, as a matter of fact, the Bible says nothing about lodges as such. The church of Christ is the only institution the New Testament says anything about. All the promises that are made to any institutions are made to it. It is sufficient for every work it was designed to do. Through the church one can easily put in all his time. He can afford to give to it all his prayers, and can consecrate to the church all his time and all his means. If the lodges can receive and use better any portion of our time or money than the church can, and there are lodges enough to take it all, then they should have it all. It is our duty to use our money and time for the best; and if the church can use a part of it for the best, why cannot the church use all for the best? There is every spiritual blessing in Christ; there are no spiritual blessings out of him. Let us give everything to Christ through his church. "Whatsoever you do in word or deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus." (Col. 3: 17.)

From H. R. Daniel, Elkton, Ky.: "The Srygley-Neal debate was held at Jordan Springs, Tenn., beginning on December 20. Four propositions were discussed, as follows: (1) "The kingdom or church was set up on the first Pentecost after Christ's resurrection." (2) "The Holy Spirit operates on the sinner's heart independent of the word, as well as through it." (3) "Baptism to a penitent believer is in order to, or for the remission of, past or alien sins." (4) "When a person is truly converted, it is impossible for him to fall away and be lost." Brother Srygley affirmed the first and third propositions. To say that Brother Srygley did the debating is to say it was well done. I have attended and read several debates in my life, but never heard a man that could pervert the Scriptures and misrepresent his opponent as badly as Neal did. Before they agreed for Brother Srygley to have the first and last speeches, they challenged him to debate the general church question. He told them no, he was going to debate these four propositions first, then would debate the others later. Brother Malphurs went to them and accepted their challenge, but does not think they want any more debates."

J. D. Tani, of Quitman, Ark., will begin a four-days' debate with A. N. Dugger, of Strasburg, Mo., at Russellville, Ala., on February 15. Dugger is an Adventist.

John T. Smithson, under date of January 28, 1922, says: "Our work here is moving along well. We have had three to confess their sins and come back to the church, and two to take membership this month."

From M. C. Cayce, 143 Wacaster Street, Jackson, Miss., January 27: "Our work here is doing nicely. One lady was baptized at our prayer meeting Wednesday night. That is as it should be. We need not wait for a protracted meeting."

Jesse S. Bills, Farmington, Tenn., is working to secure a set of Matthew Henry's "Commentary on the Bible." He expects to send twenty-five subscribers soon. He says: "The Gospel Advocate is the greatest paper in the world. I take much pleasure in helping to swell the circulation."

From Lee Warren, Wetumka, Okla., January 24: "Last Lord's day I was at Valley View. We had a fine day. The work of the Lord is growing some in that community. I have changed my address from Wills Point, Texas, to Wetumka, Okla. I wish the Gospel Advocate could go into every home."

From H. M. Phillips, Chattanooga, Tenn., January 22: "Two splendid services here to-day. Two restored and two confessions; one hundred and sixty-five in the Bible classes. A get-together meeting of the churches of Christ of Chattanooga each night this week. Enlarging of the church house is proposed for spring."

From T. M. Carney, San Angelo, Texas, January 23: "The church here is working better than at any time since I have been laboring at this place. We have had better attendance at the midweek services, Sunday school, ladies' Bible class, and regular services in this month than any previous month of my ministry at this place. Pray for us."

From W. T. Lynn, Indianapolis, Ind.: "I am preaching out in the suburbs of the city, and sometimes walk, and on my return home the first Sunday in November was struck by an automobile and my ankle badly wrenched and fractured, and have been unable to do very much of anything for several days. I like the Gospel Advocate and read it all I have time to, and hope it will have an increased number of readers. It is doing great good in keeping the minds of people stirred to a more careful reading of God's Book."

C. Delight Garrett, Cleveland, Ohio, writes: "I would like to say a word in regard to wrangling and contention in your columns by some who may imagine they have been wronged or criticized too harshly or have had their 'feelings hurt.' I am always heartsick and disgusted with such childishness. When a person is hungering and thirsting after righteousness, he does not relish such reading. Personal attacks should never appear upon the pages of a religious paper. It was for this reason that I discontinued the Apostolic Review, and I regret that I find reading of the same class in the Gospel Advocate."

B. C. Hammons, Covington, Ky., says: "I wish to commend the management of the Gospel Advocate for the wholesome Christian teaching which it is furnishing its readers and the effort to make it better. My wife and I are isolated here among digression, among Protestant people and the idolatry resulting from Roman Catholicism, with not many of God's true people to associate with, and for this reason we welcome the Advocate and take consolation and hope from each issue. There is a great mission field around here, but the faithful here are too weak in numbers and finance and too far away from any loyal gospel evangelists to have the gospel preached, except that which in my humble way I am able to do for them."

From O. M. Reynolds, Plainview, Texas, January 19: "Horace Busby, of Fort Worth, Texas, one of Texas' most successful evangelists, closed on Sunday night a nine-days' meeting for the Plainview church. Large audiences attended throughout; interest was the best; the sermons, both to church and sinners, were plain, pointed, practical, and full of love for God and man, and brought conviction to the alien and erring. The church is rejoicing and is evidently on 'higher ground.' Nineteen were added—thirteen baptisms (one a Baptist), two from the 'progressives' restored, and others by commendation. Brother Busby will be with us the first two weeks in February, when we expect another harvest. I begin a ten-days' meeting at Bledsoe Schoolhouse to-morrow."

From H. N. Mann, Riverside, Tenn., January 23: "During the year 1921 the Lord blessed me with health to go to services each of the fifty-two Lord's days, and to fill all regular appointments, and to visit and worship at the following places: Morrow's Valley, Mount Hope, Cave Spring, and Topsy, in Wayne County; Hohenwald, Riverside, Grindler's Creek, Seiber's Chapel, Salem, and Gorsburg, in Lewis County; Brush Creek, County Line, Goss and Center Schoolhouses, in Lawrence County; Centerville and Pine Branch, in Hickman County; Red Boiling Springs and Walnut Shade, in Macon County, Tenn. Baptisms, eight; restorations, two; funerals, five; marriages, five. Other preachers did good work in this field with more visible results. May we continue to work and pray for more and better work."

O. E. Billingsley, Conway, Ark., sends the following report for 1921: "During 1921 I held meetings at Swifton, Knobel, Tuckerman, Walnut Ridge, England, Palatka, Apin, Gay, Kenyon, Jonesboro, Charlotte, Pocahontas, Newark, Ark.; Star, Mo.; Wayne, Okla. I also preached at other points. I held more meetings and preached to more people than ever before during any year of my life. Near two hundred persons were baptized and many restorations were had during these meetings. Most of the meetings were short—too short. Some had only one Sunday. The first baptizing was in March and the last was on Christmas Day. I feel very thankful to God and to my friends and brethren for being allowed to have a part in the good work and for the great encouragement in many ways. The brethren and friends have been very kind and good to us. I enter the new year with much courage and many appointments. May God bless the Gospel Advocate and make it still more useful. God's eternal truth is having its way with many."

From Earnest C. Love, Nashville, Tenn., January 20: "I am just back in the Gospel Advocate office from a trip to Chicago. I had just about made up my mind to try to do some religious work in that great city, but my father grew worse and sent for me. I am on my way home now. It is always a pleasure to visit this office, as one is sure to meet many brethren whom he has learned to love for their work's sake. I find Brother McQuiddy ill, but not so poorly as when I went away. All things are moving smoothly in the Advocate office, but we all miss A. B. Lipscomb, who has put in many years in this office. On my way back I visited brethren in Covington, Greencastle, and West Union, Ind., and at Louisville, Ky. William Ellmore is now in a Bible reading with the West Union congregation, near Greencastle. He is an efficient teacher, and does the brethren good wherever he goes. If one has an idea the war is not over yet, and that there is a 'feeling' between the North and South, he has only to visit among the brethren in the 'Hoosier' State. To-day in the office I met for the first time S. H. Hall and C. C. Merritt and wife. Brother Hall labored a while in the Western field, but I never had the pleasure of meeting him before. I enjoyed making his acquaintance, and hope to get better acquainted with him. Brethren, let us try hard to get the Advocate into as many homes as possible."

From T. B. Thompson, Huntsville, Ala., January 24: "I am glad to note that Hardeman's sermons are to appear in permanent form. I thought I would add my suggestion to that of J. W. Brents' suggestion to that effect a couple of issues back, but neglected to do so. Hardeman is a great preacher, and I feel that putting his sermons into permanent form will be a worthy contribution to our religious literature. Things are moving along fairly well here in Huntsville, and we are hoping to be able to say they are moving along splendidly soon. I have never, in my career as a preacher of the gospel, labored among a people who, as a whole, appreciated my efforts so well as these people do. They are never forgetful of me or my family, but are constantly doing something to show their appreciation of our presence. We feel quite unworthy of so many acts of kindness, but are hoping that in the future we may, to some slight degree, make them feel that we would reciprocate if only we could. If the time for the Tabernacle meeting has been arranged, I have not noticed it, and would be glad for such time to be arranged as soon as possible, so that arrangements can be made, where possible, for preachers to so arrange their work as to be able to visit this meeting. I feel that it will be encouraging to Christian workers from different parts of the country to have opportunity to visit that meeting for at least a few times. You see, there are so many Elias who need to be impressed with the fact that there are many thousands who have not bowed the knee to the Baal of this world. To visit this meeting will encourage some of us, no doubt, to return to Israel and institute more effectual proceedings against the Ahab's and Jezebel's of the land. I believe this meeting will be a good thing, and now it is up to the Nashville brethren to spread themselves and show us how they can do things."

Current Comment

BY A. B. LIPSCOMB

Here follows in poetic form a burning question for all Christians to consider:

They are dying by tens! Do you know it?
Dying without the light!

They know not Christ as their Savior;
His cross is hid from their sight.

They are dying by hundreds! O, hear it!
In chains of ignorance bound!
They see not the need of a Savior,
The Savior whom you have found.

They are dying by thousands! Believe it!
O, what are you going to do?
Your Savior cares for these lost ones,
And longs to bless them through you.

They are dying by millions! O, see it!
All over the world's wide lands;
In India, Japan, and China.
Can you sit with idle hands?

Dying while you are all sleeping,
Dying while you are at play,
Dying while you laugh and chatter,
Dying by night and by day.

Every speaker appreciates a good audience, and, perhaps, the preacher with the old-fashioned gospel message, most of all. But we make a sad mistake if we persuade ourselves that the big crowd is a sure sign of success along the lines of spiritual growth. The strength or weakness of a church cannot be determined by counting noses. The presence or absence of the crowd is not necessarily indicative of the vitality of a cause. Vox populi is not always the voice of God, neither is an enthusiastic gathering always the sign of good intentions. It was a big crowd that cried out against Jesus, "Crucify him!"—the same big crowd that seven days before had cried "Hosanna" while spreading their garments along his pathway. We should not overlook the disposition to float hither and thither, moved by the passing mood or interest. Hence, the editor of the Homiletic Review observes:

It is the steady-going, serious folk who count. The crowds were in the temple while Jesus was training the twelve on the hills. The crowds were at the dedication of the Colosseum in the year 80 A.D., and the Christians of Rome—where were they? Gathered, perhaps—a little company—in some obscure place. But that great blood-stained structure has for centuries been a ruin, while the Christian church has permeated the life of the world.

The small company where there is no vital faith is indeed negligible; but the little company in which a living fire of conviction and devotion is burning has within it a force to be reckoned with. The real question is not: How many were at church this morning, or at the prayer meeting last week? Was the Spirit there?

Brethren, let us rejoice at every favorable indication that the truth is being received by the people, but speak and write modestly of ourselves and the size of our audiences. A spirit of braggadocio is bad enough in anybody, but in the Christian it is unexcusable.

Whatever men may think or say about the guilt or innocence of Eugene V. Debs, who had the unique distinction of being a Presidential candidate while serving a term in a Federal prison, one can but admire the spirit of cheerfulness he manifested while in prison and the way in which he came out, smiling and resolute upon doing a man's work. Surely every Christian should share with him the determination to blot out cruel war and use his influence to that end. In Ecclesiasticus 2: 5 (one of the noblest of psalms not included in the Bible) we are told that "gold is tried in the fire, and acceptable men in the furnace of adversity." Surely this is a great truth that all need to learn. Happiness is the graduating point in the school of life; but the most important teacher in the faculty is not joy nor freedom from responsibility, but the angel of suffering. If we would only remember that the trial of our faith is a precious thing, how it would help us in time of trouble and sorrow! No doubt that is one reason why the wicked seem to prosper far above the righteous. They are not worth the trial to which the righteous must be subjected in order to be purified, a trial more precious than gold. Said Newell Dwight Hillis in a recent sermon:

Nineteen days out of twenty will bring you health, success, victory; but after that comes the storm with the winds which seem contrary and the doors will close for the prisoner of hope! For "the fire" is made ready—ready for what? Mud is tried in the fire? No! Not mud! Wood and hay are tried in the fire? No! Rags are tried in the fire? No! It is "gold" that is tried in the fire. And what about "this furnace, adversity?" Bad men are tried in the furnace of adversity? No! Selfish men are tried in the furnace of adversity? No! Traitors and liars and thieves are tried in the furnace of adversity? No, no! A thousand times no! There is nothing in them to justify the patient care of the divine Goldsmith. Who, then? It is acceptable men, the true, the brave, the loyal, who are tried in the furnace of adversity. Who are these in bright array? "These are they who came out of great tribulation and have washed their robes in the blood of the Lamb."

Does it not help wonderfully to know that when God tries us in the furnace of adversity it is a vote of confidence in our ability to withstand the trials and to come forth better men and women? "Wherefore comfort one another with these words."

A few weeks ago I wrote a paragraph on this page under the caption, "Justice to the Negro." Somewhat to my surprise, this brief article has appeared in a number of negro publications with words of appreciation for its contents. We only stated what was fair to the negroes, making mention of the local population and some things which they had accomplished in the face of a handicap and urging the white brethren to seize the opportunity of helping them. It is my observation that the majority of the colored people in Nashville are honest, ambitious, and very deserving. They have not claimed any more rights and privileges than are due them as American citizens. Of course there are some profligates and ne'er-do-wells, but the same is true of our white population. Our duty in helping the negro to educate himself along the most useful lines is plain enough. Our efforts will not be in vain. See what education did for one little negro boy as shown by The Exhibitor:

A little negro slave boy on a Southern plantation had one single garment, a coarse flaxen shirt, his only covering; he had never slept in a bed—not he; who his father was he never knew, nor his own age. He once went as far as the schoolhouse door with his little mistress, to carry her books, and had the feeling that "to get into a schoolhouse and study would be the same as getting into Paradise."

After the emancipation proclamation he was a boy of ten or twelve years of age, working in the salt mines of West Virginia, but with an intense longing for an education; a little later attending night school. Again we see him on his way to Hampton Institute, a distance of five hundred miles, with scarcely any money to buy clothing or pay his fare; sometimes begging rides, sleeping under the sidewalk or in any shelter he might find, to save his money; reaching Hampton, at last, with just twenty-five cents in his pocket and looking like a tramp.

Later we see him a student, doing janitor's work to help pay his way. Here, for the first time, he ate from a tablecloth, learned the use of napkins, toothbrush, and the bath, also of sheets; the first night he slept under them both, and the next night on top of both. At length, graduating with honor, he becomes a teacher; is called back to deliver a postgraduate address, is tendered a reception in Richmond at which two thousand colored people were present, in a hall not far from the place where he slept under the sidewalk. Beloved and respected by both white and black was Booker T. Washington, president of Tuskegee.

If you wish us to stop your paper, write us to that effect; but do not ask it unless you have paid all arrears, if there are any. Do not ask your postmaster to attend to it for you, but do it yourself.

The date on your tab shows the time to which your subscription is paid. When money is received, the date will be changed, which will answer for a receipt. Two weeks' time must ordinarily occur from the time your remittance is sent before the tab on your paper is changed; if no changed by that time, notify us at once.

Subscribers, after paying for their papers, will favor us by noting whether the date on the address label is changed, and, if it is not changed within a month, by writing to us. Editorial

Church Government.

BY J. C. M'Q.

I have been requested to give some consideration to the present administration of the kingdom of heaven. It will not be denied that during the personal absence of the King he has committed the management of this kingdom to stewards. "This Jesus did God raise up, whereof we all are witnesses. Being therefore by the right hand of God exalted, and having received of the Father the promise of the Holy Spirit, he hath poured forth this, which ye see and hear. . . . Let all the house of Israel therefore know assuredly, that God hath made him both Lord and Christ, this Jesus whom ye crucified." (Acts 2: 32-36.) Thus we see that Christ, the head of the church, has been exalted to the right hand of God in heaven, from whence, as the head of the church, he directs and controls the church. (Col. 1: 18.) His under shepherds, or stewards, into whose hands he has committed the management of the body of Christ, are not permitted to direct the body only as guided by the written word of God. At first God gave the management of the kingdom of heaven into the hands of the apostles. Next to them were prophets; next, teachers; then, assistants or helpers. Besides these, many persons possessed of miraculous powers—gifts of healing and speaking in tongues—were employed in setting up and putting in order the communities composing the kingdom of heaven. Angels were also used and are now employed by the great King in ministering to them who are heirs of salvation. For Christ now, as Lord of all, has the Holy Spirit at his disposal, and all the angels of God, and these are employed by him in his kingdom. "And God hath set some in the church, first apostles, secondly prophets, thirdly teachers, then miracles, then gifts of healings, helps, governments, divers kinds of tongues." (1 Cor. 12: 28.) "And he gave some to be apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers." (Eph. 4: 11.) "Are they not all ministering spirits, sent forth to do service for the sake of them that shall inherit salvation?" (Heb. 1: 14.)

Christ delegated all authority to the apostles as his ambassadors. Hence, everything pertaining to the kingdom of God was first taught and enjoined by them. They were the first preachers, pastors, teachers, ministers, overseers, in the kingdom, and had the direction and control of all its affairs. "Who also made us sufficient as ministers of a new covenant; not of the letter, but of the spirit: for the letter killeth, but the spirit giveth life." (2 Cor. 3: 6.) "But all things are of God, who reconciled us to himself through Christ, and gave unto us the ministry of reconciliation; to wit, that God was in Christ reconciling the world unto himself, not reckoning unto them their trespasses, and having committed unto us the word of reconciliation. We are ambassadors therefore on behalf of Christ, as though God were entreating by us: we beseech you on behalf of Christ, be ye reconciled to God." (2 Cor. 5: 18-20.)

The communities collected and set in order by the apostles are called the congregation of Christ. All these congregations of Christ have the word of God, are under the law of God, and enjoy all the blessings of the present salvation. Christ, their head, is in heaven, but present with them by his Spirit in their hearts and in all the institutions of his kingdom.

Every obedient believer in Christ is a free and full citizen in the kingdom of God, and entitled to all the privileges and honors of that kingdom. All who meet together regularly in one place in obedience to Christ, for the observance of the Lord's Supper and all the institutions of Christ, compose a congregation of Christ.

Now, in forming and setting in order the congregations of Christ, the apostles during their lifetime had, and by their writings still have, the sole right of legislating, directing, and disposing of all things. It appears that the apostles directed and controlled all the affairs of the church in Jerusalem until it was not pleasing to Christ for them to forsake the word of God to serve tables. Hence, the twelve "called the multitude of the disciples unto them, and said, It is not fit that we should forsake the word of God, and serve tables. Look ye out therefore, brethren, from among you seven men of good report, full of the Spirit and of wisdom, whom we may appoint over this business. But we will continue steadfastly in prayer, and in the ministry of the word. And the saying pleased the whole multitude: and they chose Stephen, a man full of faith and of the Holy Spirit, and Philip, and Prochorus, and Nicanor, and Timon, and Parmenas, and Nicolaus a proselyte of Antioch: whom they set before the apostles: and when they had prayed, they laid their hands upon them." (Acts 6: 2-6.) Here is authority for appointing deacons or public ministers of the congregation, who, under the direction of the overseers, were to manage the temporal affairs of this congregation of Christ. The apostles also appointed elders, or bishops, in every city, town, and country where a congregation of Christ was collected. This they did for the usefulness, edification, and influence of the congregations. "And when they had appointed for them elders in every church, and had prayed with fastings, they commended them to the Lord, on whom they had believed." (Acts 14: 23.) "For this cause left I thee in Crete, that thou shouldest set in order the things that were wanting, and appoint elders in every city, as I gave thee charge." (Tit. 1: 5.)

But, as all Christians are free men under Christ, they all have a voice in the selection of the persons whom the apostles appoint to be elders. The apostles still appoint all persons so selected, possessing the qualifications which the Holy Spirit has prescribed. It is, indeed, the Holy Spirit, and not the congregations, which selects elders and deacons. The Spirit gives the qualifications, and, speaking to the congregations through the Bible, commands their appointment to the work. Alexander Campbell very truly says: "And if a congregation will not elect to these offices the persons possessing these qualifications; or if, by a waywardness and selfishness of their own, they should elect those unqualified, and thus disparage those marked out by the possession of those gifts; in either case, they despise the authority of the ambassadors of Christ and must suffer for it." ("Christian System," page 173.)

As the Holy Spirit appoints elders and gives the congregations the qualifications that an elder must possess in order that the congregation may not err in the selection, we are not warranted in concluding that elders have no work and place in the present administration of the kingdom of heaven. The Spirit is not so unwise as to give the qualifications of elders when there are none. For the qualification of bishops, or pastors, I will ask you to read 1 Tim. 3: 1-16; Tit. 1: 5-10; Acts 20: 28; and 1 Pet. 1: 1-4. I have not the space to devote attention to all the qualifications of an elder, but will notice some things pertaining to their fallibility and the character of their rule.

No one can read the qualifications of elders as given by the above passages and regard them as inspired men. They are frail, fallible men, subject to the weaknesses of the flesh as are other men. Those who come the nearest to the divine pattern for a perfect elder are the best men in any congregation. It is as difficult to find a Christian who measures up perfectly to the divine standard as it is to find an elder who fills perfectly the divine pattern for an elder.

An elder is not to take the oversight of the congregation because he is inspired or infallible, but because he lives a life of humility, is an ensample to the flock, and is the best qualified man in the congregation to govern the congregation, "not of constraint, but willingly, according to the will of God." His rule must not be as lording it over the charge allotted to him, but according to the will of God. In other words, the truth must rule through him. He should know and love the truth, should "be apt to teach," and he must be one who is "holding to the faithful word which is according to the teaching, that he may be able both to exhort in the sound doctrine, and to convict the gainsayers." He has an infallible rule only as he obeys perfectly the infallible word of God. When an elder departs from the truth, the congregation should not follow him in his error. The congregation is to obey the elder who leads its members by the truth. The Holy Spirit commands: "Remember them that had the rule over you, men that spake unto you the word of God; and considering the issue of their life, imitate their faith. . . . Obey them that have the rule over you, and submit to them: for they watch in behalf of your souls, as they that shall give account; that they may do this with joy, and not with grief: for this were unprofitable for you." (Heb. 13: 7, 17.) Just as the child is to obey the parent in the Lord, so the congregation is to obey the elder in the Lord. (Eph. 6: 1.) The elder should be a great and faithful servant in leading the church to do the will of God; but when he departs from the truth, he shows himself unworthy of his trust and an unfaithful servant, and should be so treated. The elder has absolutely no authority outside of the word of God; hence, the scripture that says, "Obey them that have the rule over you," simply means to obey the word of God as taught by the elders.

A Request for Publicity.

BY F. W. SMITH.

Brother W. H. Book, of Columbus, Ind., who ministers to what is known as the "Tabernacle Church of Christ," addresses the following note to this journal:

Columbus, Ind., January 18, 1922.—My Dear Brother: Will you not give us a little publicity? This is genuine New Testament missionary effort. No society manages this.

Fraternally, W. H. Book.

You are at liberty to publish any or all of this story.

This note is accompanied by two leaflets bearing the title, "The Publisher," and is, I presume, a weekly bulletin of the Tabernacle Church. In the body of the note it will be observed that the author refers to something he terms "genuine New Testament effort." He further says: "No society manages this." Then in his postscript he says: "You are at liberty to publish any or all of this story." As no other matter save that mentioned accompanies our brother's note, I presume the story to which he refers is contained in these bulletins. Now, if Brother Book and the church to which he ministers have abandoned the society and its methods and is really on New Testament ground, this journal will not only accord him and the church all the publicity desired, but here are our heart and hand in fellowship and work for the Master. W. H. Book is a tower of strength when it comes to what are termed the fundamentals, and he will fight to the last ditch over baptism—its subjects, action, and design. He has no compromise to make with that advanced element among the society brethren who are wanting and practicing what is called "open membership," evolution, rationalism, and "infant dedication." The senior editor of the Gospel Advocate, David Lipscomb, now gone to his reward, was always willing and made it a rule to extend his hand to and encourage any one who had his face turned toward the truth. The paper he edited so long still maintains this policy, and, in accordance with that spirit, will encourage Brother Book and the Tabernacle Church in every "genuine New Testament missionary effort" without any "society management."

The bulletin refers to Z. T. Sweeney's sermon on "Open Membership," as being unanswerable, and I heartily agree to that statement, for I heard Sweeney deliver that sermon in the Vine Street Church, Nashville, Tenn.

As a sample of "advanced thought," I give the following from the bulletin:

WHAT R. C. FOSTER SAYS.

While discussing the State convention (our congress was called to protest against just such) may I note in passing that while W. J. Bryan was offering his marvelous defense of the Bible at the Auditorium, the pitiful little group who still come to our State conventions to hear radical speakers who are insistently put forward by the little radical clique who have captured the machinery of so many of our conventions and missionary organizations were assembled in Dr. Powell's church and heard Joseph D. Armistead, of Cynthiana (just back from Yale and anxious to expose his wares), open up with a scathing attack on the Bible and on Jesus. He even asserted that the moral standards of Jesus are a back number. We have gone beyond them. We believe in prohibition. Christ made intoxicating (?) wine at the marriage feast. (He did not attempt to prove this charge against Jesus; neither can he prove it.) Dr. Powell says much about the simple creed that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God. But Mr. Armistead recently discarded this creed at Cynthiana and simply asked the boys and girls who came forward the question: "Do you love God, and do you want to grow to be like him?" There is nothing distinctly Christian—nothing about Christ at all in such a creed. God may even be nothing more than a philosophical concept.

This man Armistead is not the only one among the liberal (?) element that gives utterance to such blasphemy against Christ. As to the havoc such men have played in the society ranks, witness again what R. C. Foster says:

"Do the Disciples want a creed?" asks Dr. Powell. I do not belong to what he discusses—a denomination called

"the Disciples." I am simply a Christian. But I would say that every follower of Christ must have a creed. We want that creed to be "Jesus the Christ, the Son of God." We want that creed to be the Christ of the New Testament, and not the so-called Christ of Messrs. Darwin, Renan, Strauss, Wellhausen, Harnack, etc. We want men in our Bible colleges and in the employ of all our missionary agencies who are outspoken in their faith in Christ and his word. May the good Lord deliver us from the traitors who are disrupting our churches, destroying our educational and missionary institutions, and overturning the gospel of Jesus, and from the time-serving politicians who aid and abet them. May he give a little more conscience and courage to the timid preacher who is following the course of least resistance and keeping his people in darkness as to the corruption that sits in the high places. God give us men!

The congress at Louisville has been pronounced the most epoch-making gathering among us in the last twenty-five years. By the time we have a score such during the next few months, our brotherhood is going to be shaken from center to circumference. The rank and file are going to find out what has been going on under cover and to dislodge the politico-religious machine which threatens to overrun us with rationalism. Then there will be possible some peace and progress in our Zion.

What a pity these brainy men cannot discover the cause, the very taproot from which all their troubles have grown! To disrespect and set aside the word of God in the smallest matters will, if persisted in, educate and train people to do just what these advanced thinkers (?) are now doing. To take liberties with the Bible in seemingly small matters is a very dangerous thing and will in time bear just such fruit as is troubling the society people at this time. Each bulletin our brother sends begins as follows:

Now, if Brother Book and the Tabernacle Church had as genuine New Testament order of worship as he says his missionary efforts are, it would be still better. But since he and the church are out from under the society and are on New Testament ground in mission work, let us hope that they will soon be on the same ground in their order of worship. This journal will gladly make note of every step that Brother Book and the Tabernacle Church make toward the New Testament, and we trust that our brother will keep us posted regarding such progress.

The Banner Month.

January, 1922, is leading any preceding month in amount received for the Gospel Advocate in many years. By the time this paper reaches our readers we expect many to be at work to secure the one hundred dollars or one of the other amounts that we are giving to our workers. To those who enter the contest and mail us new subscribers from February 1 to July 1, 1922, in the order of most subscribers sent, we will give the following amounts:

First gift	$100.00
Second gift	50.00
Third gift	25.00
Fourth gift	15.00
Fifth gift	10.00

Subscribers must be taken at the price of $2 a year. Two six-months subscribers will be counted as one new subscriber. Write us at once for sample copy and subscription blanks. Write name and address plainly.

We are still continuing our Fountain Pen offer. Two new yearly subscribers, accompanied by four dollars, will entitle you to the pen. One new subscriber, accompanied by $3, will get the pen. We are receiving a number of letters, from persons who are making up clubs of twenty-five in order to secure Matthew Henry's Commentary on the Bible.

The following letter explains why we are now receiving so many renewals and new subscribers. Others would do well to follow the example of Brother Ezell. Read the letter he is sending to his friends:

Cookeville, Tenn., 611 Washington Avenue, January 20, 1922.—Dear Brother: The Gospel Advocate has been a very important factor in getting the truth as it is in Jesus Christ before the people, as is evinced by the fact that in the city of Nashville, where it was founded by David Lipscomb and E. G. Sewell more than fifty years ago, we have about forty congregations who worship God "as it is written."

These congregations have agreed to go into a meeting together in March, at the Ryman Auditorium, with Brother N. B. Hardeman doing the preaching and Brother C. M. Pullias leading the song services. This meeting will eclipse any effort of Christians since the days of the apostles. You will want to read the reports in the Advocate. It will be worth the price of the year to read the March issues.

The price for 1922 is reduced to $2 per year. Every Christian home ought to have good, wholesome literature. Boys and girls ought very early in life to become interested in the church, what it is doing, etc., lest their minds be concentrated upon the things of this life. The Gospel Advocate is not only a disseminator of the principles of the gospel of Christ, but also of the news of the churches and the preachers of your acquaintance. These things are worth while; and for the sake of these things and for the good that I can do, I am launching this effort among my friends to increase the circulation of the paper.

If you are not a subscriber, won't you send me your name and address and a check for $2, specifying on the check, "For one year to Gospel Advocate?" Or if you are behind one or two or more years, won't you to-day send me a check at $2.50 for each year that you are in arrears, with an added check of $2 for one year or $4 for two years in advance?

Have you some friends and neighbors in whom you are interested? Why not send the Gospel Advocate to them for one year, and watch and pray for results?

For several years I have given some time in the interest of the Advocate, and to the distribution of Bibles, Testaments, song books, religious books and tracts, and I find that such a work aptly coincides with my work as a preacher of the gospel.

If, therefore, you desire to subscribe or renew to the Advocate, or if you are in need of Bibles, religious books, etc., and will favor me with your order for same, I shall greatly appreciate it and shall look after the matter carefully and promptly.

The price you pay me is exactly what you pay the editors and publishers of books, Bibles, etc., and it would only be a matter of personal preference or friendly favor that you would secure same through me, and for this reason I appreciate it the more.

I am, gratefully and sincerely,

Yours in the faith,

J. PETTEY EZELL.

Adding Up the Baby.

One mouth, one nose, and two blue eyes
As blue as any summer skies;
Two ears so very pink and small,
One dimpled chin—and that's not all;

One head of curly golden hair,
Two cheeks so very pink and fair,
Eight teeth, and—well, almost a half
When'er she gives a hearty laugh;

Two arms, eight fingers, and a pair
Of thumbs that wander everywhere;
Two legs, and, last of all, ten toes,
That stand straight up when'er she crows.

That makes just "forty-two," you say,
If added in the usual way.

But not to us—it makes, we think,
Just one good baby, plump and pink!

The Princess and the Bird.

Once there was a princess who had as a pet the smallest bird in all the world. She tied one end of a golden cord round the bird's leg, and fastened the other end to her wrist. At night she put the bird into a jeweled cage, the bars of which were pure gold. But the little bird was not happy, for it wished to go free among the garden flowers. "O, let me go," it pleaded.

But the princess shook her head. "I love you," she said.

"If you did love me," replied the bird, "you would wish me to be happy. I can never be happy till I'm free."

Still the princess shook her head. "You are the smallest bird in all the wide world," she said. "If I were to let you go, you would have no golden cage. Where would you find shelter and food?"

"I should find the open sunlight better than a golden cage, and my food should be the sweetness of the flowers," the bird pleaded.

"O, little bird, you would never return to me!"

"No," said the little bird, "I should never come back, for I do not love you. You bound me with a golden cord."

Then the princess thought: "If the bird does not love me, I will not keep it against its will. I love it so much that I wish it to be happy. Perhaps, if I let it go, it will love me a little in return."

So she cut the cord and let the bird out into the wide world where the trees and flowers grow.

Then its happiness was as wide as the wind. It flittered hither and thither in the sunlight all day. Its little feathers that had been brown turned into emerald, and ruby, and amethyst, and sapphire, and topaz, for those were the colors of the flowers it visited. But one day, as it went from flower to flower, it came upon a rose. In the heart of the rose there lay a tear that was like crystal. "The princess passed this way," said the rose. "She mourns because she is lonely without you. I have kept her tear to give to you."

"Poor princess," said the little bird, "I do love her! She gave me the sunlight and the flowers. I will go back, and I will see if I can comfort her. I shall miss my freedom, but I shall have her love."

So the little bird flew back to the princess. "It was your love that brought me," said the bird. "I have been happy in the sunlight and the flowers. See! Where I have dipped into the flowers, all the feathers about my throat have become emerald, and ruby, and amethyst, and sapphire, and topaz; for the flowers are the jewels of the wide, wide world, and I have found their magic."

The princess did not bind the bird with golden cord. It was ever after as free to come and go as the wind, and both the princess and the bird were happy.

Some day when you go into the garden, you may see the little bird. It is the smallest that there is in the wide, wide world, and the feathers about its throat are like jewels. As the bird goes from flower to flower, it hums a song about the princess and her love, and that, perhaps, is why it is called the humming bird.—Youth's Companion.

Misplaced Things.

"Be careful, Aunt Nancy—O!"

The warning had been a second too late. Aunt Nancy carried her seventy years like a girl; you could hardly speak quickly enough to catch her, once she had started. She had started in this case to seat herself in young Nancy's big chair. She was up like a flash at the sound of something breaking; she and Nancy, the girl, looked ruefully at the fragments of the lovely shell comb.

"It's my fault; I had no business to put it there," Nancy acknowledged. "I tossed it there when I dropped down on the couch. I knew I ought to get up and put it on my dressing table."

Great-Aunt Nancy, with the pieces of shell in her careful, withered fingers, answered slowly. Her keen eyes had noticed Nancy's red lids.

"So much of the trouble of life comes from things' being out of place," she said.

"Clothes—yes'm; and dishes—I seem to remember frantic searches for missing pans and bowls. But still, I wouldn't call those troubles, would you?"

Nancy was "playing up" pluckily; her voice strove for its usual sauciness.

"Of course I realize that dishes and clothes incidents sometimes have unpleasant consequences.

For want of a shoe a minute was lost,

For want of a minute a car was lost,

For want of a car an appointment was lost,

For want of an appointment a position was lost.

Only, you know, it doesn't often really turn out so important as all that, except in fiction, where authors, poor things, are bound to make everything have consequences."

"No, I didn't mean that, precisely," Aunt Nancy's keen eyes smiled back at her namesake. "I was thinking of other things: the lost time put on things that aren't worth it; letting a real talent go to waste while you are busy with fads that last a month; letting a good mind get cluttered up with rubbish; putting a fine friendship in a place where fine friendships don't belong—those are the real misplacements of life. There child, I think I can get this mended, after all."—Selected.

His Heart in It.

A manufacturer in Philadelphia once told a friend the story of one of his superintendents.

"Twelve years ago a boy applied to me for work. He was employed at low wages. Two days later the awards of premiums were made to manufactories at the Centennial Exposition.

"Passing down Chestnut Street early in the morning, I saw Bob poring over the bulletin board in front of a newspaper office. Suddenly he jerked off his cap with a shout.

"What is the matter?" some one asked.

"We have taken the medal for sheetings!" he exclaimed.

"I said nothing, but kept my eye on Bob. The boy who could identify himself in two days with my interests would be of use to me hereafter.

"His work was to deliver packages. I found that he took a real pride in it. His wagon must be cleaned, his horse better fed, his orders filled more carefully and more promptly than those of the men belonging to any other firm. He was as zealous for the house as though he had been a partner in it. I have advanced him step by step. His fortune is made, and the firm has added to its capital so much energy and force."—Exchange.

Query Department

A brother whose name is withheld for prudential reasons inquires to know how a brother should treat his wife who is a Baptist or a Methodist. "Should he pay her preacher, who he believes is teaching error and not the truth on some subjects?"

A Christian will treat his wife right, will love her as Christ loved the church and gave himself for it, and will seek to teach her "the way of the Lord more accurately." By leading a life of godliness and holiness, he will influence his wife to do likewise. No, he should not give to support error, but he should remember that the wife is in a partnership with him and that she has a share in the funds of the partnership and should pay "her preacher" out of her own funds. By giving his wife her own, by dealing generously and justly with her, he will be in position to teach her the gospel as it is in Christ, and with better prospects of influencing her to see the truth as he sees it, than he will by giving her to understand that all both make is his and that he is graciously paying her preacher. The Christian will not withhold from his wife her just dues, neither will he assume her responsibility.

W. H. Riley, Caney Spring, Tenn., is interested in the judgment and inquires to know when it takes place. He says: "I have asked some preachers this question, and will now ask you: When is the judgment day? Is it the last day as we count time, or is it after time is no more with us? Is man judged just after death? If not, where does he go? He went to paradise before Christ shed his blood and prepared the place for the redeemed, but I do not know whether he goes there or not."

Paul tells us that the judgment is after death. "And inasmuch as it is appointed unto men once to die, and after this cometh judgment." Men generally die, but Enoch and Elijah did not die. Men die but once and will be judged but once. The general judgment will be when Christ comes the second time. "But when the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the angels with him, then shall he sit on the throne of his glory: and before him shall be gathered all the nations, and he shall separate them one from another, as the shepherd separateth the sheep from the goats; and he shall set the sheep on his right hand, but the goats on the left." (Matt. 25: 31-33.) This is what Paul calls the revelation of the righteous judgment of God. "But after thy hardness and impenitent heart treasurest up for thyself wrath in the day of wrath and revelation of the righteous judgment of God; who will render to every man according to his works." (Rom. 2: 5, 6.) In the general judgment God is vindicated by a revelation of his righteous judgment. It is true that man's destiny is fixed while he lives, and in this sense judgment is passed upon him. "And I say unto you, that every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof in the day of judgment. For by thy words thou shalt be justified, and by thy words thou shalt be condemned." (Matt. 12: 36, 37.) "He that rejecteth me, and receiveth not my sayings, hath one that judgeth him: the word that I spake, the same shall judge him in the last day." (John 12: 48.) The man who rejects the word of God while living is judged by it, and it will condemn him in the great judgment day and reveal God's righteousness in so doing. The righteous go to Jesus when they die, as is indicated by a number of scriptures. Lazarus went to Abraham's bosom. "We are of good courage, I say, and are willing rather to be absent from the body, and to be at home with the Lord." (2 Cor. 5: 8.) "For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also that are fallen asleep in Jesus will God bring with him." (1 Thess. 4: 14.) "For we know that if the earthly house of our tabernacle be dissolved, we have a building from God, a house not made with hands, eternal, in the heavens." (2 Cor. 5: 1.) "Let not your heart be troubled: believe in God, believe also in me. In my Father's house are many mansions; if it were not so, I would have told you; for I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I come again, and will receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also." (John 14: 1-3.) To be with Jesus will be heaven enough for all. Jesus comes to every Christian when he dies.

T. D. Plummer, Trion, Ga., requests an explanation of 2 Cor. 12: 1-5. "I must needs glory, though it is not expedient; but I will come to visions and revelations of the Lord. I know a man in Christ, fourteen years ago (whether in the body, I know not; or whether out of the body, I know not; God knoweth), such a one caught up even to the third heaven. And I know such a man (whether in the body, or apart from the body, I know not; God knoweth), how that he was caught up into Paradise, and heard unspeakable words, which it is not lawful for a man to utter. On behalf of such a one will I glory; but on mine own behalf I will not glory, save in my weaknesses."

Paul was caught up to "the third heaven," which is a Jewish expression for that heaven which was (1) beyond the air and (2) beyond the sun and stars; the secret place of Jehovah. "The third heaven" and "Paradise" evidently mean the same. As the second Corinthian letter was written in A.D. 57, Paul must have been caught up into Paradise in about A.D. 43. This is about the time Paul was at Antioch with Barnabas, or at Tarsus. (Acts 9: 29, 30.) He did not know while in Paradise whether he was in the body or out of the body. According to Paul's view, a person could be caught up into Paradise, see and hear, without his body. He would not glory of himself, but in his infirmities. It was distasteful to him to speak of himself; it was more pleasant to dwell upon the man caught up into Paradise.

J. J. Allen, Tharpe, Tenn., wishes an explanation of Rev. 11: 3, 8, 9. He says: "Who were these two witnesses? We have had much talking here on the subject."

The passages are: "And I will give unto my two witnesses, and they shall prophesy a thousand two hundred and threescore days, clothed in sackcloth. . . . And their dead bodies lie in the street of the great city, which spiritually is called Sodom and Egypt, where also their Lord was crucified. And from among the peoples and tribes and tongues and nations do men look upon their dead bodies three days and a half, and suffer not their dead bodies to be laid in a tomb." No one can know with certainty who the two witnesses are. There is a wide disagreement concerning the meaning of the two witnesses. B. W. Johnson thinks the two witnesses are the Old and New Testaments. They testify for the Lord; and since a day in prophecy is the symbol of a year, the twelve hundred and sixty days which they are said to prophesy represent twelve hundred and sixty years. War was made upon the Bible. France would worship no gods but reason and liberty. For twelve hundred and sixty years the Bible had been partly suppressed. After three years and a half the Bible regained its influence and the French nation began to recover from its madness. I do not know that this is correct; it is only the view of a man, and I give it as such. We may with profit devote our time to more practical things.

BY C. R. N.

Mr. Smith is a member of the Missionary Baptist Church and has an ambition to be a debater—to be able to defend the faith of which he is an exponent. Granting his claim to conscientiousness, his desire to be able to successfully present his doctrine and logically as well as scripturally meet all objections, as well as expose false doctrine, is laudable. From my viewpoint, Mr. Smith does not possess the necessary qualifications by nature or by acquisition to make what is termed a successful man in the field of polemics.

The debate was near Gainesville, Texas, January 3-6, 1922. There were a number of very interesting developments in the debate, but such is the case in most discussions.

I am certain there is great good derived from all discussions when they are properly conducted. I have never known a debate, where the preacher of the gospel conducted himself properly, that there has not been a congregation established following the debate, if there was not one at the time of the discussion.

To me, it is not encouraging when I find some of our ministers decrying discussions and striving to make their sermons such that they never oppose, actively or pointedly, the false doctrine of the denominations. When one of the denominations hears me through a series of sermons, if I do not make him feel uncomfortable in his human religious affiliation, I am ready to review my sermons or question my ability to successfully present the truth.

The Parable of the Vineyard.

BY W. P. SKAGGS.

The use of the parable was the Savior's select method of teaching. It is indeed a most excellent way of imparting instruction. But, in using or applying a parable, we should be careful to use it as intended. We should not compare where no comparison was intended, nor apply where the application was not intended. By failing to heed this lesson we may make any parable ridiculous and destroy the beauty and usefulness of the lesson taught.

In this parable (Matt. 20: 1-16) the Savior says: "The kingdom of heaven is like unto a man that was a householder." In this, as in all parables, we should note both the elements and the scenes through which these elements pass. Thus we may acquire the lesson intended. First, then, we note the elements, which are (1) the householder, or owner of the vineyard, (2) the vineyard, (3) the laborers, and (4) the market place. Next we would notice the scenes through which these elements pass—(1) the employment of laborers, (2) the agreement as to wages, (3) the different hours at which they enter the service, and (4) the close of the day, or the settlement.

In application, I am persuaded that the householder is Christ. He owns the church (a) by right of builder (Matt. 16: 18), (b) by right of purchase (Acts 20: 28), and (c) by right of being its head (Col. 1: 18). Christ, then, is the householder, and the church is his vineyard. It is the working place for all his people and for all their religious works. "Unto him be the glory in the church and in Christ Jesus unto all generations forever and ever." (Eph.

3: 21.) "To the end that ye should walk worthily of God, who calleth you into his own kingdom and glory." (1 Thess. 2: 12.) In the church and as humble Christians we may do all of our benevolent and charitable works, all of our missionary works, and all of our mutual developments may be accomplished in the church of the living God. The laborers surely are those who hear the call of the Son of God and, turning from the perishable things of this life, gladly enter into the service of the "King of kings." The market place is surely the world, where men are living lives of idleness; for any life that we may live out of the church of the living God is in his sight a life of idleness.

You will notice the generous spirit of the householder, how he goes to those needing employment and offers it to them. And it is made our duty to go to those on the downward way and plead with them and offer them the elevated life of an heir of heaven—offer them the salvation that is in the Christ. I am so rejoiced to note the awakened interest in doing more and more of this real missionary work. He goes very early in the day, then at the third hour, at the sixth, at the ninth, and even at the eleventh hour, and offers all employment for the remnant of the day. This evidently refers to the day of natural life. And in the early life the Lord calls for those ready to serve him to enter his kingdom and work; others hear the call as they are budding into manhood and womanhood and enter his service; others at middle life, and others in extreme old age. At whatever hour they come, Jesus is ready and willing to save.

But you will notice that not a second offer was made to any one. All accepted the first offer. To none was there an offer of employment after the day had closed. This would have been necessary in order for it to fit Dawnism. My friends, from the cradle to extreme old age each hour is marked by the graves of those who have passed on at that hour. The present hour is the time to enter the service of the King. God has declared: "To-day is the day of salvation." (2 Cor. 6: 2.) To-day if you will hear his voice, you may enter his service and win for yourself a crown of life. God has never promised the second opportunity of life nor a second day of service. If in this life a second opportunity comes our way, it is but another proof of the wonderful mercy of God. No one will ever have the opportunity of entering his service after the day of labor closes.

The blessings of Christianity are more than sufficient to make up the difference in the time spent in his service. Those who enter his service in early life and give a long life in faithful service are more than repaid by the great joy and comfort received in the knowledge of services faithfully performed. Christianity more than repays itself in this life and a home in heaven for all who labor faithfully here.

More About the Colley-Tyndall Debate.

In closing his report of the recent Colley-Tyndall debate on instrumental music, at Clarendon, Texas, a report of which has already been given on this page, Brother A. O. Colley says: "This debate was held in the same town where I held one seven years ago, on the same subject, with D. A. Leak. There was much difference, however, in the surroundings in the two debates. In the first one I could hear of but four or five members favoring the relation to the question that I occupied. In this one we were in a very fine house that was built as a result of the first debate and some good work of the members enlisted in the Lord's cause at that time, having as helpers our strongest preachers, among whom were Thomas E. Milholland, the preacher for the Clarendon church, and C. R. Nichol, one of the ablest debaters among us, and as fine a set of young preachers as it has ever been my pleasure to be with. In the other debate I had to lead every song that was sung during the debate. In this one some of the sweetest singers I ever heard lead a song were there, a number of them; and with the help of these, we were able to tell them how the Lord wanted us to do and then show them. In the first debate, or soon after it was over, they borrowed forty dollars from me to help hold an option on an old school building to worship in for a while. In this one they paid me nicely for my services. The church at Clarendon is one of the best churches I know of now, when we consider its trials and sacrifices for the truth."

Personal Notes.

From T. S. Bain, Muskogee, Okla., January 23: "Attendance and interest increasing with the church on East Okmulgee Avenue. A number of new members who have moved to this city are meeting with us. A. M. Foster preaches twice each Sunday for us. Joe H. Blue, of Morrilton, Ark., has been engaged to hold a meeting for us, beginning on February 19."

J. E. Wainwright, Sinton, Texas, writes: "The gospel is spreading over South Texas as the waters cover the sea. Five additions to local congregations this month—two by primary obedience. I spent a week at Papalote, baptized three, and expect to set in order a congregation at that point shortly. I am very busy preaching at neighboring schoolhouses through the week and to exceptionally large crowds at home each Lord's day."

From C. H. Smithson, Texarkana, Texas, January 20: "I spent last Lord's day with the faithful at De Queen, Ark.; but we were not permitted to meet, as the town was quarantined. Still we had some from the country to come in, and we had the communion at L. Poindexter's home. Cleveland Brooks and wife, for two years classmates of mine and for ten years collaborators with me in the work of the Lord at Heath, Texas, but now living at Locksburg, Ark., came twenty miles and spent the day with us. When Brother Poindexter moved to De Queen, nearly seven years ago, he found no church there, but found a few brethren and started the work in his home, and has continued it until now, and, with the assistance of others that have come to his rescue, the cause is now on an upward move. I go next Lord's day to Stephens, Ark., and then to Haynesville, La. I aim to do evangelistic work this year, and am able to answer calls anywhere."

Tice Elkins writes from Fort Worth, Texas, January 23: "There were two additions to Southside church of Christ yesterday. In the afternoon the singers from several congregations in Fort Worth met with us at Southside for a 'singing,' which was greatly enjoyed. These singings are held each Lord's day from place to place, and are building up that part of the work rapidly. I wish to announce that I cannot fill the calls for protracted meetings that I am receiving for the coming summer and fall, only during the month of August. All other promised work I will be compelled to cancel. The church here has decided to continue my labor with the work in Fort Worth, and offers me a vacation during the month of August. All other brethren except those to whom I have promised time for that month will please excuse me and arrange with other preachers for their work. I regret this, and will be glad to send a good man to any place where I should have gone, if the brethren will write me."

First and Last.

So long ago it was remarked, and so often it has been said that woman was the last at the cross of the crucified Savior and the first at the tomb of the risen Lord, that the saying has become common property. The proverb suggests more than it declares.

Can we imagine woman's failing in either of these marks of devotion? Not while we remember Simon's feast and the alabaster cruse, the Magnificat and the touching of His garment's hem! The whole history of the church follows the same order. The names of men have been blazoned large in official records and formal history, but woman's faith and love have all the while had the chief place in keeping the church of Christ alive in the world and effective for its mission. History in general is written after the same fashion; its pages are filled with the names of kings and generals, battles and other catastrophes; but the real current of the world's life has been kept moving in the right direction by its preachers, teachers and poets, and largely by its women. In each individual life it is the same way. The first potent influence in the building of character is the mother's; the last word as the soul departs for eternity is more often than otherwise spoken by wife or mother, sister or nurse.

As it has been in the past, we may expect it to continue in the future. More honor belongs to woman than she has ever yet received; more responsibility rests upon her than she has acknowledged. She is preëminently the teacher. It is in its formative years that life is intrusted to her. If from the cradle she glorifies war, destruction will continue to sweep the earth; if in the nursery she magnifies wealth, men will continue to barter their souls for gain; if before the infant she exalts the proud and mighty, the child grown to manhood will not take seriously the Sermon on the Mount. It is a terrible responsibility and a supreme privilege that is given to womanhood. We have been accustomed to feel that the greatest fool in the world is the woman who discourages her husband's generosity and devotion to the kingdom of God. We must recognize even more clearly that the greatest failure in the world is the mother who neglects to implant in the infant's mind the ideals and standards of the world's Redeemer, woman's Emancipator, childhood's Champion. Equally clear must be our discernment that motherhood is far more than a physical relationship, and so that the mother who allows the natural instinct of concern for the physical welfare of her offspring to limit her responsibility and privilege has practically failed, and that every woman by the very fact of her womanhood, whatever her relationship may be, bears an indispensable and inescapable part in the mothering of the race. When the physical mother has failed, the spiritual mother must achieve. Where the individual mother stops by the compulsion of circumstances, the composite mother, the race mother, must carry on.

If nothing more than the growing civilization of our own country were involved, this would mean a far larger task for the womanhood of North America than it has yet seriously undertaken. But upon America and a fraction of Europe rests the added responsibility of bringing redemption and education to all the rest of the world. And here, again, woman must be the first to see and the last to falter; first to dare and last to surrender; first to give and last to withhold.

If the highest motives are not sufficient, let us remember the terrible certainty of the alternative. In every failure in morality and religion, woman is the first to suffer, the last to find relief; in every lapse of civilization into savagery, woman must again be the first to pay the penalty, the last to recover the peace. Fifty-six million young men went gayly into the world war, but left their women broken-hearted at home. For the ten million who perished, the agony was quickly over, but their homes are still draped in mourning. The sixteen million who returned maimed and broken are more or less reconciled to their lot—they do not see themselves; but how can mother, wife, or sister look upon them daily without the iron sinking anew into her very soul?

It rests with the women of North America to say whether the whole earth shall be transformed into heaven by the gospel of Jesus, or into hell by the primal passions of humanity. The birthday of Mary's Son approaching while representatives of the nations deliberate over the problems of peace defines the issue again and sounds forth the challenge anew. God guide the diplomats; but God save the world through its women, whether the rulers will or no!—World Call.

In character, in manner, in style, in all things, the supreme excellence is simplicity.—Longfellow.

"Being Dead, Yet Speaketh."

When—as from time to time it does—the onward march of human knowledge ruthlessly wipes out a theory, an institution, a code of ethics, a system of philosophy, or a once popular book, it is not unusual to hear it spoken of as being "as dead as Queen Anne." And yet there exists to-day, in ordinary use, a monumental work, written when Anne sat upon the throne of England, which the intervening two and a half centuries have failed utterly to obliterate or relegate to the limbo of forgotten things. That work is old Matthew Henry's "Commentary on the Old and New Testaments."

The last representative of the Stuart monarchy—a breed of rulers which, with great profit to the people they so shamefully misgoverned, had well ended much earlier—died in 1714. The famous English commentator died in the same year. Yet who among us ever thinks of Queen Anne these days? And who, excepting, possibly, an historian, remembers a single thing she ever said or did? Yet among English-speaking peoples Matthew Henry is still a household word, and his "commentary" constantly used by hundreds and thousands of Christian workers. Here we have the work of a single man, extending to more than eight million words, retaining its freshness and stimulating quality for more than two hundred years! Of what other work of such magnitude can such a statement be truthfully made?

Even before the death of its author, the racy English style of Matthew Henry's "Exposition" had secured for it the foremost place among works of its kind. In a certain, yet very definite sense, that place it still retains. A vast amount of expository and exegetical water has flowed under theological bridges since 1700. Critics, commentators, expositors, exegetists, have come and gone; and, in the main, their work has gone with them. But, like the Tennysonian brook, Matthew Henry goes on forever. He has withstood both the assaults of critics and the winnowing of Time. And in this year of grace, 1922, he occupies a highly-valued, unique, unassailable place among expositors of Holy Scripture.

This statement is no far-fetched hyperbole or advertising "blurb." It is a statement of plain, literal fact. Preachers and teachers do still use Matthew Henry's "Commentary," and that continually; and using it, find in it a wealth of spiritual insight, of sound logical expository excellence, much clear thinking and stimulation for their own mental powers.

"No matter what may be asserted to the contrary," said Dr. J. D. Jones, of Bournemouth, England, one of the greatest of living Congregational preachers, in a New York pulpit, less than a year ago, "It is simply arrant nonsense to talk of dispensing with Matthew Henry. He is more stimulating, more suggestive, when, in the light of present-day Biblical criticism, one might be tempted to consider him wrong, than any modern commentator is when one may feel inclined to regard him as being right." This word of testimony, given spontaneously, sums up the whole case for Matthew Henry. Almost everywhere preachers wearied of the hairsplitting, commencing "anise and cummin" methods of the modern exegetical school, turn with relief and gratitude to the old English divine for suggestion, counsel, and guidance in the preparation of their work.

Through succeeding generations Matthew Henry's "Commentary" enjoyed a steady, continued sale. Edition after edition was placed upon the market by many publishing houses. Then came the establishment of the practice of printing books from plates; but as the years wore along plates were worn out or destroyed and the sets existent, either in England or America, became fewer and fewer.

During the last four or five years, however, "Matthew Henry," in common with other works of perennial importance, has suffered from the complications and difficulties which have beset and afflicted the publishing business. As a consequence, no new edition of the "Commentary" has been put to press since 1917. With the partial clearing of the commercial outlook, opportunity has served for the preparation of a large new edition (Revell). This edition furnishes a new and valuable opportunity for preachers, teachers, and Christian workers to come into possession of a work with which few, if any, can afford to dispense, and none, except in a spirit of simulated superiority, affect to ignore.

Missionary Funds Forwarded.

BY NELLIE STRAITON.

During the last quarter of 1921 I forwarded to Miss Lillie Cypert, Japan, for personal use, $300; for Girls' School, $6.25, for traveling fund, $41.25; and to others, $30.

I hate to have to report it, and have put it off as long as possible, but Sister Cypert's funds are short. No, she has not been handicapped by the shortage, for I have sent $100 regularly each month whether I received it or not. I believe that the least we can do for our noble missionaries is to give them a regular support; so, acting on this principle, I advanced the following amounts: In July, $20; August, $15; October, $14; December, $35. Total, $84.

If you were to change places with the missionary or the one forwarding the funds, would not a situation such as this worry you? While we are making rapid advances in missionary work, and churches all over the country are supporting one or more missionaries entirely or in part, there are still many who have not embraced the opportunity to coöperate with our missionaries in the work they are doing, and it is to such that I extend this opportunity to contribute regularly or "once and again" as you are able. If you wish this coöperation, it will give me great pleasure to receive and forward your gifts to Sister Lillie Cypert, in Japan. It is a debt of honor.

"A man puts money on a horse, and finds that it finishes among the 'also rans.' He pays up his losses, for he has incurred a 'debt of honor.'"

"A man spends half the night over cards, and loses money by the handful. It means impoverishment, but he pays up; for he, too, has contracted a 'debt of honor.'"

"We commend the world's code of honor—crude and indefensible as it is at some points—to the average church member. The churches have embarked on the work of missions, they have called men and women into their service, and the least they can do is to see that the workers are suitably provided for. We are a comfortable-off people, and can meet all our obligations to our work and workers if only we will recognize that we have a 'debt of honor' to our divine Master and to the work we have undertaken for him."

If you wish to coöperate with our missionaries, if you wish to pay this "debt of honor," please mail your gifts to Miss Nellie Straiton, 1030 South Lake Street, Fort Worth, Texas, and they will be forwarded promptly.

Convalescence after pneumonia, typhoid fever, and the grip is sometimes merely apparent, not real. To make it real and rapid, there is no other tonic so highly to be recommended as Hood's Sarsaparilla. Thousands so testify. Take Hood's.

Keeping Young.

At one of our colleges the writer saw some beautiful art work done by a student, and upon inquiry he was told that the student was over seventy years old. Some women give up when they cross the age of sixty, while others decide that the last of life ought to be its best because it builds upon the foundation of all the experiences of the past. The psychologist says that many folks never get a new idea outside of their own occupations after the age of thirty, yet here was a grandmother who had started to learn painting after she had passed seventy. God bless such a vigorous mind as that! And, good ladies, here is a secret! The writer saw that artist and does not think she looks fifty years old. If you want to keep young, keep growing, keep developing new interests. Have your children all left your home to build homes of their own? Why not take up the study of something brand-new?—Harry Clark.

Field Reports

Ashland City, Tenn., January 25.—I filled my regular appointments at Antioch and Mount Hebron, in Dickson County, last Sunday. Good attendance and interest. The mission work at Thomaston, Ga., has been postponed until May. This will give more time for arrangements. I would be glad to hear from some one to help in this work and conduct the song service.—B. W. Davis.

Meaford, Ontario, Canada, January 24.—My meeting continues here, with increasing interest. I am enjoying my sojourn here with these good people. I find a good working church here, with Brother C. G. McPhee, an old pupil of mine, as their preacher. There are many loyal hearts here who love to hear the gospel preached with earnest simplicity and genuine kindness.—H. Leo Boles.

Beamsville, Ontario, Canada, January 22.—The brethren at Selkirk held their business meeting recently to arrange their work for the year, upon which we have entered, after which an invitation from the sects was sent to both Brother Firth, of Toronto, and to me, to continue our labors with them indefinitely. During the past year Brother Firth and I have been speaking for these brethren on the first and third Sundays in each month, respectively. We are having good meetings. May God bless them.—W. F. Cox.

Denton, Texas, January 24.—I had quite an enjoyable little trip extending over last Saturday, Sunday, and Monday. Leaving Denton on Saturday morning and going by way of Fort Worth, I reached Hillsboro at about midday. The afternoon was spent in Hillsboro, and this time was most pleasantly passed in talking to some friends and in meeting with quite a number of brethren in the Lord. My destination being Bynum, Hill County, I left Hillsboro with several of the members of the church at Hillsboro in an automobile and reached Bynum in time for services Saturday night. I preached twice at Bynum while there, Saturday night and Sunday, and my efforts were apparently acceptable to the congregation. The visit was a very pleasant one to me, and I shall be glad to meet with these good people again. My return was by way of Hillsboro, where I spent the night with brethren. I returned home Monday afternoon.—R. D. Smith.

Ridgely, Tenn., January 24.—The congregation at Ridgely has gradually been decreasing for the past three years. Some have moved away and death has claimed some. Though few in number, our band is still faithful. We meet every Lord's day. Brother Wright held our meeting last September. We had no regular preaching during the year. Brother Hassell, of Trenton, Tenn., is to preach for us on the third Lord's day in each month this year. He was with us on January 15, and his sermons were enjoyed by all. Our house is not out of debt. Last fall we asked for help through letters, and received twenty-six dollars, for which we want to thank the congregations. We paid the interest on the note, leaving an indebtedness of twenty-two hundred dollars. Our members, twenty-four in number (only eight men), are not rich in this world's goods. But we shall continue in the faith. We ask the prayers of all the brethren.—Mrs. S. H. Gore.

Oklahoma City, Okla., January 23.—The special meeting of preachers and elders held at the Tenth and Francis Streets Church, January 17-20, was a fine one. We had during the time some thirty or more preachers from Oklahoma and Texas. Brother F. L. Young, of Paris, Texas, was chairman for the first three days. Brother Oscar Hays, of Ada, Okla., presided the last day. Brother Templeton, of Altus, Okla., made a twenty-minutes' talk on the last evening, and then Brother Jesse P. Sewell, president of Abilene Christian College, Abilene, Texas, concluded the program with a speech of about an hour's length. He spoke on the plea that we as a religious people make and its relation to religious institutions about us. The meeting was undoubtedly a success in more than one way. We had the house of worship practically full yesterday morning. Five identified themselves with us and two made the good confession. They were baptized at night.—J. A. Hudson.

St. Louis, Mo., January 16.—The church is now having excellent meetings, with good attendance. An outline of the work for the year was presented and unanimously agreed upon at a meeting on January 15, each one manifesting an unusual interest and desire to do the "work to be done that no one can do but you." Plans are well under way for the construction of our meetinghouse in the spring or early summer, and we hope to be able to make an announcement of complete details in a short time. The congregation meets at Hall No. 3, Eagles' Home, corner Lafayette and Jefferson Avenues, Sundays at 10 A.M. and 7:30 P.M. Midweek meetings at present are at the homes of various members, but we are making arrangements to have these meetings at one of the halls at the Eagles' Home within the next week or two. If there are any who know of brethren or friends living in St. Louis who are not attending these services, if they will send their names and addresses to Brother W. A. Sevedge, 6006a Virginia Avenue, we will be only too glad to visit them and make an effort to get them interested to attend. All who may pass this way are requested to make it a point to stop over and visit with us. The mutual interest of the brethren in the work, not only here, but everywhere, is to be much desired.—W. W. Moody.

Buffalo, W. Va., January 20.—We had a good day here last Lord's day. Although sick and hardly able to get up to the meetinghouse, I conducted the meetings both morning and evening. As a result, I am now almost prostrate. We have as yet no fully developed leaders, and this makes it so hard on me in my present state of health. I am not willing to give up until I am obliged to do so. We are poor here and not yet out on the house of worship. I wish the brethren would help us to pay off our last lumber note.

A little from each one would soon settle it, and then we could do something. As to myself and wife, we have been forced to put our scanty living into the house. We now have over three hundred dollars in it. No one but God knows fully of our sacrifices here. If I had the above amount in hand now, I could supply present needs and secure treatment for my present trouble. I could also arrange to do more evangelistic work this year than last—that is, if I get stronger. I am giving my friends an opportunity to help me back to health and usefulness; and if they do not do it now, I realize that my last hope is gone. I am not able to consult a specialist without help. Please address me at Buffalo, W. Va., Box 81. Kindly state what your offering is for.—F. P. Fenner.

Lecanto, Fla., January 19.—I have just returned from a very fine trip through a portion of Florida. I was at Bradentown on the second Lord's day in January. I preached twice on Lord's day to large audiences. The church at Bradentown and two other congregations came together for the purpose of employing an evangelist to evangelize the county. The preachers present, besides myself, were Brother Hoover, of Tampa, and Brother John Hayes, of Bradentown. Brother Hoover preached in the afternoon, and several good talks were made by the brethren. The sisters spread dinner on the ground. The congregations seem to be very much of the same mind, and want to do more for the Master's cause this year than in time past. Brother Hayes is a tireless worker, willing to devote all his time to evangelizing. Any one that will help support him will render a good service. I preached at Mango a few nights while on this trip. The congregation at Lecanto moves along very nicely. We are having two Bible drills a week. The attendance is very good. I will go to Oxford on the fifth Lord's day to be with the brethren in an all-day meeting. Several of the preaching brethren will be there. I will be back in Tennessee from the first to the middle of March, the Lord willing.—R. E. L. Taylor.

Imboden, Ark., January 23.—The meeting at Alicia, Ark., is in the past. On account of sickness, I failed to get there for the beginning; but on my arrival I found Brother Greer and my brother, J. N. Porterfield, hard at it. The people received us well. We visited the homes of the varied sects and had some heart-to-heart talks with them in regard to their salvation. We had large audiences throughout the meeting, splendid attention, and good interest. One lady made the good confession and was baptized. We found the people very susceptible. They said they had never seen such large crowds at any gathering there. Many told me that they never heard a gospel sermon prior to this meeting. They pleaded with us to stay longer. One Methodist lady said: "I wonder why it is that we can't have such good preaching as that." If the brethren had made it possible for us to have stayed two weeks more, no doubt we could have established a good congregation there. We found four families in town who claimed the Name, but were not meeting for worship. Some are willing to meet now, while others are not.

Some from out in the country will meet with them. We are not satisfied with the visible results, and will go back as soon as it is made possible. Dr. Gibson and his good wife showed no little kindness toward us while there. Sister Gibson was reared a Catholic and never knew anything else till a short time ago, when she heard Brother McDonald preach. Brethren, this is a fine mission point. Shall we succeed in planting the cause there in good condition? "Think on these things?"—A. H. Porterfield.

Report of Work for 1921.

BY J. D. DERRYBERRY.

Beginning on the third Sunday in February at Needmore, in Montgomery County, Tenn., I assisted in fifteen protracted meetings during the year.

Four of these meetings were in East Tennessee. At two of these places, Riceville and Calhoun, the brethren have houses of worship, and about fifteen or eighteen members meet regularly for "Bible study" and Lord's-day worship. At Lenoir City, in Loudon County, we found a few members, who were not meeting, but before we left there we had arranged for a place in which to meet, and about eighteen agreed to meet regularly for Bible study and communion service, and have been meeting regularly ever since. At Niota we found only about six members of the one body not meeting, as they had no one to take the lead. They have a nice lot (paid for) and have started a building fund, and they hope to build in the near future. Two young ladies made the "good confession" and were baptized during this meeting. East Tennessee is a mission field that should be worked. At Lenoir City and Niota, Brother R. C. White did the preaching. For this four-weeks' work we received little more than enough to pay our expenses. We have agreed to do some more work up there this year, and hope to get more visible results than we did last year, as the good seed has been sown, and we feel sure a bountiful harvest will be reaped in the future.

At Riceville and Calhoun, I was with Brother G. W. Farmer, of Cleveland. He is making a great sacrifice for the cause in East Tennessee, and should be encouraged by the churches of Middle Tennessee. In Meigs County and Monroe County—two good counties—there is not an established congregation. Brother Farmer is making an effort to locate a good man in one of these counties, and Brother T. C. Fox has agreed to go, but will necessarily have to depend on Middle Tennessee churches for support. Already two or three congregations in Nashville have agreed to help. If others would do the same, a great work could be done and no one be overburdened. Why go to India or Japan to do missionary work, and neglect the work at home, when there are so many of our near neighbors who have never heard the gospel of Christ preached?

I was with Brother W. M. Oakley in several meetings, some of these at places where there were only a few members. I was also with Brother S. P. Pittman, at Fountain Run, Ky., where we have a good congregation, although not a large one. At Shiloh, in Humphreys County, Brother H. M. Phillips did the preaching. At Calleoka, in Maury County, I was with Brother J. W. Brents, a nephew of Dr. T. W. Brents. At Water Valley, in Maury County, Brother F. C. Sowell did the preaching. I hope to be associated with all these again in the good work this year.

As visible results of the year's work, about fifty-two were added to the one body. For my work in these fifteen meetings I received freewill offerings to the amount of about $325. Several of the meetings continued two weeks; others, only eight days. The year's work was pleasant, and I trust that good was accomplished that eternity alone can tell.

I have time from now until my summer's work begins that I can devote to singing classes or leading the song service in meetings, and would be glad to hear from any congregations needing my services. Address 1803 Russell Street, Nashville, Tenn.

Serving and Trusting the Lord.

BY J. D. TANT.

For thirty-five years I have been doing the work of an evangelist, averaging about one month at home each year. I have gone into the highways and hedges, in storm and sunshine; have walked long distances many times to reach my appointments; have had to swim as many as seven times to reach a single appointment. But the last year, I think, has been the busiest year of my life.

After holding meetings in Texas, Arkansas, Oklahoma, Alabama, Tennessee, and North Carolina, I closed my last debate with J. N. Clark in West Tennessee, on December 10, and started for home. As we had located at Quitman without any church there, and wife had been writing me how lonely it was for her and the children to worship alone in our own home on Lord's day among strangers, I thought if it was the Lord's will I would get to spend one month at home with wife and children; but when I reached home, I learned that wife had been gone two days under a rush call to carry our youngest boy to a sanitarium in Cleburne, Texas, to be operated on for tuberculosis of the bone. The next day a telegram from wife stated that the Yater doctors and Dr. Self, of Cleburne, had taken six inches of leg bone out of my little boy's leg above the knee. While we hope he will get well, yet it is not certain that we can save his leg. So all our expected happiness was turned into sorrow. While wife is patiently watching our little darling, Austin, in the sanitarium many miles away, three other children and I are keeping house at home.

On the last Lord's day in December I preached the gospel to a large congregation in the Methodist church home at Quitman, cut wood all Christmas week, and started the new year by preaching the gospel to the church of Christ at Searcy, Ark.

So our fondest hopes and greatest desires are often blighted. But all will be well in the end. The day dawns after the darkest night, the longest lane will turn, and I have only a few more mountains to climb, only one more river to cross, and all will be light and happiness "over there." It is grand to be a Christian!

Wife will remain in Cleburne with the boy for some time yet, perhaps three months, as the doctors tell her they will have to do the second operation in March. To try to save the leg, two operations are necessary.

As soon as possible I shall get into the work again. If I can find some friend or brother who is blessed with money, who will lend me two hundred dollars to bridge over and meet present emergencies till I can get into the field again, I shall be glad. If I do not, I shall fight it out alone, and let those I owe wait till I get on my feet again. God only knows what is best, and I am willing to wait, fight, and pray, and leave results with him.

The Practice of Goodness.

The supreme work to which we need to address ourselves in this world is to learn Love. Is life not full of opportunities for learning Love? And the one eternal lesson for us all is how better we can love. What makes a man a good cricketer? Practice. What makes a man a good artist, a good sculptor, a good musician? Practice. What makes a man a good man? Practice. Nothing else. There is nothing capricious about religion. If a man does not exercise his soul, he acquires no muscle in his soul, no strength of character, no vigor of moral fiber, no beauty of spiritual growth. Love is not a thing of enthusiastic emotion. It is a rich, strong, manly, vigorous expression of the whole round Christian character—the Christlike nature in its fullest development; and the constituents of this great character are only to be built up by ceaseless practice.—Henry Drummond.

BY JOHN R. WILLIAMS.

The reader cannot know of my disappointment and great astonishment at not being able to find just one mention of the Methodist Church in the Bible. I had been reared in the teaching of Methodism; in fact, my grandfather was a Methodist preacher, and naturally I thought he knew all about the Bible.

Facts are stubborn things and will not bend or warp to our greatest desires. To say that I suffered in mind is but true. My hatred for "Campbellism" was only increased; for it was from that source I learned that I was wrong, had been mistaken all my life.

"Drowning men will catch at straws." So I sought advice and comfort from those older than I, in an effort to find some way out of my great difficulty. I found none; only bitter and scathing denunciations (sad, but true); willful misrepresentations of the people who claimed to be Christians only—"only this and nothing more." I was told that my trouble grew out of the fact that I was ignorant of the teaching of the Methodist "Discipline" and was advised to read it and thereby have my faith increased so as to remain a stanch Methodist.

Most gladly did I take up the "Discipline" and begin to read. The very first sentence in the "Discipline," like Brother Wilson's first objection, only increased my trouble. Here it is: "We esteem it our duty and privilege most earnestly to recommend to you, as members of our church, our Form of Discipline, which has been founded on the experience of a long series of years." Recommend the Bible? No, but recommend the "Discipline." Founded on the Bible? No, but founded on the "experience of a long series of years." All my life I thought that Methodism was founded on the Bible and not on the experience of al; I could find no solid ground on which to stand.

Man's extremity is God's opportunity." Then and there I fully decided in my mind if truth could be found, I would accept it.

Brother J. H. Roulhac, the man the Methodists would not debate with, came to our place to preach a series of sermons. I went to hear what he had to say. For many years Brother Roulhac was a leading lawyer at Hickman, Ky. His knowledge of law as well as the Bible and his method of handling a witness was superior to any one I have ever heard since.

Brother Roulhac took up the Methodist "Discipline" and compared it with the teaching of the Bible and showed beyond any doubt to an honest mind where there were plain contradictions. Not only this, but he made very plain the danger and sinfulness of unholy alliances with religion, politics, secret fraternalism, voting and holding office, marriage, etc., by which the people of God, in a large measure, have lost or surrendered their "distinctive peculiarities." Much of the preaching to-day has nothing in it to differentiate it from the preaching of sectarian preachers.

After hearing Brother Roulhac, I decided that I would read the Bible for myself and see if I could learn the way of salvation taught therein. Brother Isaac Sewell was the first to teach me how to properly divide the word of truth, or the proper divisions in which the Bible is naturally divided. This once learned, all was plain to me. I kept on reading. In July, 1876, Brother Roulhac began another series of meetings at our place, and on Saturday night, July 29, I made the "good confession," and on Sunday evening, July 30, was "buried with my Lord in baptism." My wife, who was still a member of the Methodist Church, said: "You need not think I will join the 'Campbellites' because you did." Wonder if she did?

The Creed of the Church.

BY G. C. BREWER.

Sometimes members of the church of Christ say: "We have no creed." But that statement is incorrect. It is impossible for a religious body to exist without a creed. It is just as impossible as it would be for a political party to exist without a platform, or without some well-defined and clearly announced principles upon which the party stands and for the advocacy of which the party is organized. The church of Christ is not a party in the sense of being only a part of God's children—a few Christians banded together by certain rules that distinguish them from other Christians and also wearing a distinguishing name; for the church, being the "household of God" (Eph. 2: 19), contains all of God's children. It contains all Christians, regardless of color or race or social position, because the same thing that makes a man a Christian makes him a member of the church. Therefore, in becoming Christians, men become members of the church, which is the body of Christ. (Acts 2: 38-41; Eph. 1: 23; Col. 1: 18, 24; Gal. 3: 26, 27; 1 Cor. 12: 13.) But because the church is not a "Christian denomination," or a denomination composed of Christians or those who profess to be Christians, is no reason that it is not a body or party with definite principles. The church is a party, established to oppose other parties, too. It is opposed to all evil, and is distinct from and opposed to all other religions or churches—non-Christian religions, such as Buddhism, Confucianism, and Zoroastrianism. Has this church, then, no principles that distinguish it from non-Christian parties? Do its members have no rules of life that differentiate them from worldly people—nonchurch members? Is there no difference between the Christian and the atheist? The answer to this question is ready in the mind of every reader. The atheist is an unbeliever and the Christian is a believer. But a belief is a creed. Whatever, therefore, a Christian believes is his creed. When a man says that the church of Christ has no creed, he means that it has no human creed; that its members do not submit to any ecclesiastical laws made by fallible men, such as pope, priests' or bishops' conferences, to govern their consciences or to stultify their faith

The New Church, however, has a creed. We are ready now to inquire.

What, then, is the creed of the church? In considering this question, let there be no misunderstanding as to what church we are talking about. We are not thinking of "our denomination" or of the "Campbellite Church" or of a denomination known as the "church of Christ." All denominations have their headquarters and their governing officials to whom we could easily appeal for information concerning their organization and rules of faith and practice. In fact, we could get their creed or a statement of their faith from their publishing houses. But we are not just now concerned about what any denomination believes. On the contrary, we are endeavoring to learn what was the creed of the New Testament church—what was the creed of the disciples of Christ in the days of Peter and Paul and Phillip and Stephen. Their creed should be our creed, and the creed of the church then should be the creed of the church now.

The word "creed" is from the Latin verb credo, from which we also derive our words "credit," "creditable," "credible," "credence," etc. The verb credo means I believe. What, then, did Christ and the apostles require people to believe? Is there any stated requirement? Is there no example of a man's saying, "I believe —," in the New Testament? We all remember that when Phillip had preached "Jesus" unto the eunuch and the eunuch demanded baptism, Phillip required him to believe first. He did not say what the eunuch must believe, but it was evident that Phillip meant he must believe what he had heard—what Phillip had preached unto him. Therefore, the eunuch responded (quoting from the Latin version): "Credo Filium Dei esse Jesum Christum." Or, from the English Bible: "I believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God." (Acts 8: 37.) Upon this statement of his creed, or his "I believe," Phillip baptized him. On the day of Pentecost, Peter required the people to believe confidently, or to "know assuredly, that God hath made that same Jesus, whom ye have crucified, both Lord and Christ." (Acts 2: 36.) Paul required the jailer at Philippi to "believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved." (Acts 16: 31.) And to the Romans Paul clearly stated what is to be believed: "That if thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thine heart that God hath raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved." (Rom. 10: 9.) And to put the matter beyond all question, John said: "And many other signs truly did Jesus in the presence of his disciples, which are not written in this book: but these are written, that ye might believe [Believe what, John?] that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God: [with what result, John?] and that believing ye might have life through his name." (John 20: 30, 31.) It is clearly settled by these passages that the creed of the New Testament church was: "I believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God." Upon this confession of faith, without any further vows or promises, persons were baptized into Christ, or into the church.

But it is sometimes said that this confession or creed is not sufficient; that those who desire to become Christians or to enter the church should be put under obligations and solemn vows to live righteous lives, to support the church, and to submit to the counsel of the brethren. But those who raise this objection fail to see what the confession means. Of course, when a man desires to become a member of any denomination, it is but natural that the denomination should want him to be loyal to it, to support all its departments of work and to submit to its ruling authorities; for how else could the denomination exist? No doubt, then, our denominational friends are ready to ask: Does a man agree to submit to no authorities, to be governed by no laws, when he enters the church of Christ? Most certainly he agrees to submit to the authorities of the church. Then the question arises, What is the governing authority of the church of Christ? Christ is the Head of the church. (Eph. 1: 23; 5: 23; Col. 1: 18.) Therefore, to acknowledge Christ means to submit to the Head of the church, and then the acts of obedience by which a man enters into Christ, or into the church, which is his body, declare the man's surrender and submission. When he is buried with Christ by baptism, he vows his allegiance to Christ; thereby is proclaimed his death to sin and his resurrection to righteousness. Such a person has died in the likeness of Christ's death, has been buried with him, and has been raised in the likeness of his resurrection. As death has no more dominion over Christ, sin should have no more dominion over the Christian. (Read Rom. 6.) Thus it is seen that the steps that put a man into Christ—into the church—constitute a very solemn and impressive dedication of the life to Christ. A person who is in this manner dedicated to Christ is, of course, under promise to follow in the footsteps of Christ, to obey all his commands. But in order to follow in the footsteps of Christ, he must be acquainted with Christ's life, and this can be learned only from the Bible—the New Testament. To obey Christ's commands, the Christian must know them. These, too, can be found only in the Bible. The conclusion, therefore, that the Bible becomes the Christian's Law Book and Guidebook is inevitable. And it is all-sufficient. The Bible was given for this very purpose, and is perfect for all the needs of the man of God. (2 Tim. 3: 16.) While Christ was here on earth he spoke many things that were intended to govern the lives of his followers. These things were after his death confirmed unto us by those who heard him. (Heb. 2: 1-4.) For Christ had strictly commanded them to teach us to observe "all things whatsoever I have commanded you." (Matt. 28: 19-20.) But Christ could not make known his complete will while he was on earth, for his disciples were not capable of receiving it until the Holy Spirit came upon them. Jesus said: "I have yet many things to say unto you, but ye cannot bear them now. Howbeit when he, the Spirit of truth, is come, he shall guide you into all the truth." (John 16: 12, 13.) Therefore, that portion of Christ's will that was not made known by him while here on earth was afterwards declared unto the apostles by the Holy Spirit and through the apostles made known unto us. And Jesus said to his apostles: "He that heareth you heareth me; and he that rejecteth you rejecteth me; and he that rejecteth me rejecteth him that sent me." (Luke 10: 16; Matt. 10: 40; John 13: 20.) Nothing is clearer than this: In order to please Christ—to obey Christ—we must be governed by all that is taught by Christ and the apostles, hence by the New Testament. And all that is included in the creed.

Sometimes young members of the church are heard to ask: "What does our church teach on this or that?" Or, "Does our church allow dancing?" Or, "What do we believe about divorce?" Such persons should know that the church of Christ has no laws that may be suspended, repealed, altered or amended according to popular demand or to satisfy the whims of its worldly-minded members. A young lady, on being asked to obey the gospel, replied: "No, I am going to join the Episcopal Church, because they permit their members to dance." Of course, when people are taught to "join the church of their choice," they are going to "choose" the one that has the things, and practices the things, they prefer. If some church would make "free love" or promiscuous sex cohabitation one of its tenets, thousands of people would "choose" it. But, according to the Bible, we have no choice, except to obey Christ and be saved or to disobey him and be eternally lost. Instead of asking, "What does our church teach?" or, "What do we believe?" young people must be taught to ask: "What is the will of Christ, my Lord, the Head of the church, and to whom I gave my life, in reference to these things?" That simple question without any answer at all is sufficient to knock all ideas of dancing and other sinful practices out of the minds of really conscientious young Christians.

But our denominational friend is ready to ask: "Why do you not include these things in your creed and catechize young people when you take them into the church?" But what he does not understand is that Christ and the apostles made the terms of admission into the church of the Lord and we have nothing to do with it. We cannot make any other requirements for membership in his body. But those things are included in the creed, and we should always make that plain to persons who desire to obey the Lord. "Do you mean to say," our objectors ask, "that the simple statement that 'I believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God' embraces all these things? Why, everybody believes that." We reply that the "good confession" (1 Tim. 6: 12) includes all that we have mentioned and very much more. In fact, it is impossible for the finite mind to comprehend all that is included in that creed or confession of faith. If everybody believes that Jesus Christ is the Son of God, then everybody is born of God; for John says: "Whosoever believeth that Jesus is the Christ is born of God." (1 John 5: 1.) Such a person is born of God because to believe that, as we have shown herein, means to surrender to Christ and to obey his will. John knew that every one who sincerely believes this fact has submitted to the terms of pardon as they were tabulated by Christ (Mark 16: 15, 16; Acts 2: 38) and has enthroned Christ in his heart as Lord of his life. That is what it means to believe in Christ, and that is why this simple creed is sufficient. But in order to see something of what this confession includes, let us hear John again: "He that confesseth the Son hath the Father also." (1 John 2: 23.) And again: "Whosoever shall confess that Jesus is the Son of God, God abideth in him, and he in God." (1 John 4: 15.) Let the objector ponder that and tell us its full meaning if he can! But John says further: "And who is he that overcometh the world, but he that believeth that Jesus is the Son of God?" (1 John 5: 5.)

In view of what the pen of inspiration has here said about this simple yet wonderful confession, the following quotation from Alexander Campbell seems appropriate. Commenting upon Peter's confession, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God," Campbell said: "Here, then, is the whole mystery of the Christian institution—the full confession of the Christian faith. All that is peculiar to Christianity is found in these words; not merely in embryo, but in clearly expressed outline. A cordial belief and clear conception of these two facts will make any man a Christian. He may carry them out in their vast dimensions and glorious developments to all eternity. He may ponder upon them until his spirit is transformed into the image of God—until he shines in more than angelical brightness in all the purity and beauty of heavenly love. Man glorified in heaven, gifted with immortality and wrapt in the ecstasies of eternal blessedness, is but a mere result of a proper appreciation of and conformity to this confession."

Heaven is not reached by a single bound;
But we build the ladder by which we rise
From the lowly earth to the vaulted skies,
And we mount to the summit round by round.

Why the Prejudice Against Doctrinal Sermons?

Some folks seem to have a prejudice against what they call "doctrinal sermons." Perhaps, if the truth were known, they do not desire to hear the whole counsel of God. They have their favorite doctrines, and would have us silent on all besides. Spurgeon told of a Scotchman who, after hearing a sermon, said: "It was very well if it hadna been for the trash of duties at the hinner end." When the preacher sets forth the duties and shortcomings of his hearers, there is likely to be some complaint against the sermon. The scriptural term "doctrine" includes a great deal more than the average person thinks. It includes knowledge or learning. The prophet Isaiah inquires: "Whom will he teach knowledge? and whom will he make to understand the message?" In the same sense the term is used in Proverbs: "For I give you good doctrine; forsake ye not my law." It includes tenets, opinions, and traditions. It is thus used in Matt. 16: 12: "Then understood they that he bade them not beware of the leaven of bread, but of the teaching of the Pharisees and Sadducees." The term may refer to the truths of the gospel in general. In the letter to Titus servants are exhorted to "adorn the doctrine of God our Savior in all things." On the other hand, "doctrine" may refer to some specific truths in connection with the gospel. It is thus used in Heb. 6: 1, 2: "Wherefore leaving the doctrine of the first principles of Christ, let us press on unto perfection; not laying again a foundation of repentance from dead works, and of faith toward God, of the teaching of baptisms, and of laying on of hands, and of resurrection of the dead, and of eternal judgment." The term may also designate instruction, teaching, and confirmation in the gospel. It is so used in the familiar passage: "Every scripture inspired of God is also profitable for teaching, for reproof, for correction, for instruction which is in righteousness." Paul says: "Let the elders that rule well be counted worthy of double honor, especially those who labor in the word and in teaching." Again, doctrine may refer to the manner of teaching, as well as to the matter. This is noted in Matthew's comment on the Sermon on the Mount: "And it came to pass, when Jesus had finished these words, the multitudes were astonished at his teaching; for he taught them as one having authority, and not as their scribes." Finally, the term may refer to God's institutions as opposed to the teachings of men. In this sense we find it in Matt. 15: 9: "But in vain do they worship me, teaching as their doctrines the precepts of men." We note from these passages that the term "doctrine" as scripturally employed enjoys a wide latitude. It not only includes the doctrine of God, of Christ and the apostles, but also the doctrine of Balaam, of the Nicolaitans, and devils; it includes good, evil, sound, strange, and contrary doctrines. Certainly no one can declare the whole counsel of God and fail to mention these themes.

The Substantial and Essential Part.

The doctrinal part of a sermon is usually the substantial part of it. Certainly that is not the part to leave out. Upon being asked if Doctor So and So had not preached a very spiritual sermon, a thoughtful woman said: "O, yes, it was all spirit; there was no body to it at all." There must, indeed, be some "body" in every discourse, some real sound doctrine, or else the time is wasted.

Positively speaking, it is our duty to accept and continue in the doctrine of the New Testament. The early disciples

"continued steadfastly in the apostles' teaching and fellowship, in the breaking of bread and the prayers." They received the teaching of the apostles as Christ's inspired representatives. We, too, should ground our faith upon their word as recorded in the New Testament and thus build "upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Christ Jesus himself being the chief corner stone." Not only should we accept, but we should propagate the apostles' doctrine. "They that were scattered abroad went everywhere preaching the word." While it is not specifically stated, we may depend upon it that they preached what they had heard from the lips of the apostles, the gospel which they themselves had obeyed. When we get away from the apostles' doctrine, we get away from the heart of the Christian religion. Newton said: "I can conceive a living man without an arm or a leg, but not without a head or a heart; so there are some truths essential to vital religion."

Furthermore, we should use good judgment in the presentation of the truths of the gospel. We may learn certain doctrines from the New Testament and then act as if we had learned enough and there were no further room for progress. Paul rebukes this disposition clearly. To the quarrelling Christians at Corinth he wrote: "I fed you with milk, not with meat; for ye were not yet able to bear it; nay, not even now are ye able." The injunction here in Heb. 6: 1, 2 is not against the preaching of baptism, but against carnality and lack of growth. The modern preacher is not as wise as Paul. He cannot size up his audience, and is apt to neglect some important teaching and to over-stress another. Here, again, we quote another observation from Spurgeon: "A man's nose is a prominent feature of his face, but it is possible to make it so large that eyes and mouth and everything else are thrown into insignificance, and the drawing is a caricature and not a portrait. So, certain important doctrines of the gospel can be so proclaimed in excess as to throw the rest of truth into the shade, and the preaching is no longer the gospel in its natural beauty, but a caricature of the truth; of which caricature, however, let me say, some people seem to be mightily fond."

Look to the Pattern.

Negatively speaking, it is our duty not to depart from the true doctrine. Moses, we are told, ascended into the holy mount, where God gave him the table of the commandments and minute instructions for the building and furnishing of the tabernacle. God said to Moses: "Look that thou make them after their pattern which was showed thee in the mount." Just so Christ, our divine Lawgiver, has built the greater edifice of the true tabernacle, the church of the living God. The gospel law has been proclaimed from Mount Zion and the pattern for the church has been divinely revealed. John writes: "Whosoever goeth onward and abideth not in the teaching of Christ, hath not God; he that abideth in the teaching, the same hath both the Father and the Son." And again: "Beloved, believe not every spirit, but prove the spirits, whether they are of God." Paul says: "Prove all things; hold fast that which is good." To guard against apostasy from the truth, there should be careful reading and study of the Scriptures, independent of human interpretation.

After all, the question is not whether a doctrine is beautiful, but whether it is true. When we want to go to a place, we do not ask whether it is a pretty road, but whether it is the right road. In the same spirit let us ask for and walk in the old paths.

We may forget God or ignore him, or keep our minds from dwelling on the thought of him; we cannot be entering into peace with him while sin is kept undealt with, cherished in our hearts.—Francis Paget.

The Church Treasury.

BY H. LEO BOLES.

The church has or should have a treasury—that is, a common fund which has been contributed by all the members of the local congregation. Each member should be interested in it, as each member is to contribute to it. Some have objected to the term "treasury," and say that there is no scriptural authority for it; others claim that Paul authorized a treasury when he gave instructions: "Upon the first day of the week let each one of you lay by him in store as he may prosper, that no collections be made when I come." (1 Cor. 16: 2.) Macknight translates this verse as follows: "On the first day of every week let each of you lay somewhat by itself, according as he may have prospered, putting it into the treasury, that when I come, there may be then no collections." The "Living Oracles," H. T. Anderson's translation of the New Testament, and others emphasize the church treasury. Other authorities could be given for this interpretation of Paul's language. Even those who claim that there is no authority for a church treasury virtually have one. Each local congregation has its treasury. It is frequently and too often empty.

I am not considering in this article how money is to be collected and put into the treasury. I have been asked to suggest some thoughts on how the money should be spent or used after it has been put into the church treasury. It is, indeed, interesting and profitable to study the resources of the church treasury, or the channel through which the money comes into the treasury. It is also profitable to study how the money is to be used, or the channel or outlet through which the money passes from the church treasury. Who has not been impressed with the careless use of the Lord's money? Of course, every dollar that a Christian uses should be "a righteous dollar," and a righteous use should be made of all material things. In a special sense all money and all material things belong to the Lord, and Christians are only stewards. They must give an account to the Master for their stewardship upon earth. Since all material things belong to the Lord, we must seek to know how the Lord would have us to use them. It seems that in a peculiar and restricted sense that money which has been put into the church treasury should be used as the Lord directs. It seems to be a greater crime to misuse that money which has specially and prayerfully been set apart to the Lord. All of the animals under the Jewish economy belonged to Jehovah, but in a special sense those which have been set apart or sanctified for sacrifices belong to him. So the money which has been put into the church treasury peculiarly and exclusively belongs to the Lord's work. What a crime to misappropriate it!

Who has control of the church treasury? Who has a right to spend or use it? Who should direct the spending of it? Who has a right to draw on the church treasury? For what purposes may the church treasury be drawn upon? Has the Lord directed in spending the money put into the treasury? These are questions that provoke serious thought and should be answered cautiously. Can the church treasury be drawn upon to support entertainments, Christmas trees, Sunday-school picnics, and young people's socials? I think that we are safe in saying that it is wrong to use the Lord's money from the church treasury for any selfish gratification of the flesh. Some of the things mentioned above may not be wrong within themselves when properly conducted, yet should they be supported by the church treasury?

The Scriptures teach clearly that the poor should be looked after and the needs of the poor provided for from the church treasury. Paul gave instruction to the church at Corinth, and also included the churches of Galatia, that the poor should be attended to—and this, too, from the church treasury. Of course, no one limits the care for the poor only from the church treasury; personal and individual efforts should be made. The only point here made is that the church treasury may be drawn upon to relieve the poor and distressed. Again, the gospel is to be preached, and those who labor in word and doctrine should be supported from the church treasury. The church at Philippi and other churches helped to support Paul in preaching the gospel. Paul says to the church at Philippi: "For even in Thessalonica ye sent once and again unto my need." (Phil. 4: 16.) Again, he said: "When I departed from Macedonia, no church had fellowship with me in the matter of giving and receiving but ye only." (Phil. 4: 15.) This clearly shows that the church treasury could be drawn upon for the support of the gospel. Paul gives instruction to Timothy in regard to caring for widows "that are widows indeed." He says that if they are not of this class of widows, "let not the church be burdened." (1 Tim. 5: 15.) This shows that the church treasury may be drawn upon to help support a certain class. James (1: 27) tells us: "Pure religion and undefiled before our God and Father is this, to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep oneself unspotted from the world." This shows that widows and orphans are to be looked after, and it may be inferred that the church treasury is to be drawn upon in visiting them "in their affliction."

God's people are to meet for worship; they are to assemble to praise the Lord, study the Scriptures, eat the Lord's Supper, and for mutual edification. This implies a meeting place. Every congregation should have a comfortable, convenient, and respectable place or house for meeting. This implies an expense. The necessary and legitimate expense for meeting places and carrying on the work of the Lord must be met by the church. This implies drawing upon the church treasury and is included in the work of the congregation. Christ and a little band of disciples that followed him during his personal ministry had their treasury. Judas carried the bag. This example gives authority for bearing the expenses of a congregation in doing just what that congregation is instructed to do.

Churches and brethren should be very careful in the way they use the Lord's money. A righteous use of the money put into the treasury encourages liberal giving. Many times the mistakes that are made with the Lord's money are used as an excuse for not giving. Surely, if there is a conscientious doubt or objection by members of the congregation to a proposed use of the Lord's money, the treasury should not be drawn upon. Let every dollar that goes out of the treasury be prayerfully and scripturally used in a way that will please the Lord.

A Letter from an Old Reader.

I have for many years been a constant reader and supporter of the Gospel Advocate, and I have innumerable praises for it and for the good men who make it what it is. But for the steadfastness to the principle of the early reformers, "Where the Bible speaks, we speak; where the Bible is silent, we are silent," and for the Advocate's able editorial staff, we, too, with our "progressive" brethren, might have long since been lost in the Babylon of sectarianism. I thank my God that I am a beneficiary of so priceless a heritage. In my humble judgment, just as able writers adorn its pages to-day as have ever been its contributors, and it gives me pleasure to thus testify.

But, along with the good things I am saying, I have a criticism to offer against the editorial policy of the Advocate. You are, in my judgment, allowing to creep into its pages too many personalities, too much of the vindictive between brethren, and in some cases it amounts to real venom. That is how it looks to some of us readers who are so very much interested in brethren dwelling together in harmony. We would not compromise the truth, but we want more love among the followers of the Prince of Peace and for the principles for which the Advocate so long has stood.

HARDEMAN'S TABERNACLE SERMONS

Beginning March 28, 1922, the churches of Christ in Nashville will engage in a meeting to be held in the Tabernacle of this city, the preaching to be done by N. B. Hardeman and the song service to be led by C. M. Pullias, of Murfreesboro, Tennessee. The meeting will continue for twenty days. The sermons will be printed and bound in a book of 320 pages. Hardeman's ability as a gospel preacher is a sufficient guarantee as to the character of the sermons. The book will appear about May 1, 1922. The price of the book is $1.50 a copy. You should send in your order at once, so the brethren will know how many to print. Mail your order to-day, so as to be sure to get a copy.

No article, no matter how meritorious some of its contents, should ever be allowed to appear if it contains personal thrusts or even uncharitable references to a brother. The secular press has learned that this is good business policy and will not allow its clientele to vent its personal spleen toward each other through its columns. Then, too, this opportunity is denied the patrons for fear of lowering the moral tone of the publication. If such care on the part of the management of an ordinary newspaper is commendable, why should it not be indispensable in our religious journals?

To illustrate (and I speak with the utmost charity to all concerned), Brother Flavil Hall's article, "Was It Lack of Courage?" aimed against Brother M. C. Kurfees, should have been censored, taking out every unkind insinuation toward the brother, or, perhaps better still, should have been returned to Brother Hall for revision along this line. The English language is sufficiently flexible to write what ought to be written without causing wrangles. Possibly Brother Kurfees' reply should have been rewritten. On afterthought, each of these brethren, and all, for there are many others airing their worst sides through your columns, would thank you for your course.

In this connection I wish to commend Brother F. W.

Smith's style of treating the recent review of Mark Collis' writing on the iniquities of the American Mission Co-operation; for he, too, is sometimes less cautious than is advisable.

I would suggest that the facile pen of these gigantic writers be turned loose in full force on apostasy, digression, rationalism, sectarianism, innovations, and all sorts of iniquity. Attack issues and institutions, rather than expose to public gaze the weaknesses of our own loyal brethren. When your readers have been fed a few columns each week in which one or more of our most exemplary brethren have had their integrity assailed, ere long a layman begins to wonder if the whole church is bad and your reader is the poorer for it. I think the noble aim of the splendid old Advocate is being defeated by these unnecessary expressions.

I sincerely trust that you will appreciate the spirit in which this is written, and not conclude that I also am a victim of that which I am opposing. Let us "prove all things" and "cleave to that which is good."

May the year nineteen hundred and twenty-two be the best year of the Gospel Advocate's history, and may the Father's richest blessings rest upon both readers and editors.
Montgomery, Ala. N. L. WALKER.

If there is evidence of a plentiful repentance outside the church, there is ample room for repentance within it. The kingdom of heaven awaits the onslaught and the onset of a determined, earnest, united church; but no church which does not gladly give of its heritage, and as gladly receive what others have to offer, is in a position either to lead or to follow.—Selected.

Nashville (Tenn.) Notes.

BY S. H. HALL.

The song drills being conducted weekly preparatory to the revival at the Ryman Auditorium, beginning on March 28, are growing so in interest that the larger auditoriums must be used. It was first thought that these drills would be conducted in every section of the city, but only those auditoriums that will seat above one thousand will suffice. It was estimated that we had above twelve hundred at Russell Street last Wednesday night (January 24), and there were at least thirteen hundred packed in the West Nashville auditorium last night (January 31).

The first month of the new year was a good one for the Russell Street workers. Eight were added to our number, and the regular collections went close to six hundred dollars, besides special collections of considerable amount.

A CALL TO THE THOUGHTFUL AND UNPREJUDICED.

With this issue, and for the consideration of those who are thoughtful and unprejudiced, I am beginning a series of articles on some questions of vital importance. You are asked to read carefully what is said, then mail to me at 920 Russell Street, Nashville, Tenn., whatever criticism you think should be made on any position that shall be taken, remembering that I am representing and defending no paper nor any set of men, but simply putting before you the course I would be compelled to take in some matters that have been discussed and some that have not been discussed.

I think there is such a thing as individual responsibility before God. "So then each one of us shall give account of himself to God." (Rom. 14: 12.) And in Gal. 6: 4, 5 it seems we have a stronger statement still that man must not lose sight of his own individual responsibility: "But let each man prove his own work, and then shall he have his glorying in regard of himself alone, and not of his neighbor. For each man shall bear his own burden."

Quite a bit has been said in the last few years about the scripturalness or unscripturalness of schools in which the Bible is taught. Let it be understood now that I am not defending any school known to me in which the Bible is taught except that school with which I am personally connected, and just now I am not personally connected with any school commonly known as "a Bible school or college." Those who establish schools must defend them, as they know better what they are doing than those not connected with them. I am granting the right to establish schools for the purpose of allowing the Bible its rightful place in the education of our sons and daughters. But I am defending only what I am doing as a Christian, and would do were I only making school-teaching my calling in life. I would defend no local church of Christ except the one with which I stand personally connected, hence for the scripturalness of which God will hold me to account, and even then I would not defend all the local church does, unless I could succeed in getting it to do as I understand the Scriptures to teach. Many local churches go wrong, do things that the Bible forbids, and fail to do what our Lord expects of them. This was true of the local churches even in the days of the apostles. Some went very far wrong. But this does not prove it wrong to establish local churches. I think it has been said that some of the schools in which the Bible is taught are doing things they cannot defend. This may be true. But pointing out the mistake some school has made falls the width of the heavens short of proving it wrong to have schools in which the Bible is taught.

The question that I am putting before you is this: Show me how I, as a Christian, could establish a school and leave the Bible out. As matters are with me now, I could not think it has been said that some of the schools in which it. I would lose my own self-respect as a Christian. I am continually teaching that there is no book so great and good as the Bible. I am continually teaching that there can be no such thing as true education without a knowledge of the Bible. If school-teaching were my calling in life, and were I to establish a school of my own, a school in which I would have the sole right to say what should and what should not be taught, will some one please tell me how I could leave the Bible out? Just drop that twaddle that I think I have heard—viz., that you can teach the Bible in the school, provided it is not one of the expressed purposes to teach it when you establish the school; for it would be one of my expressed purposes to teach the Bible. The Bible will never follow me into anything by accident or as an afterthought. It is one of the expressed purposes of my life to let it ever abide with me. And don't bother your heads in arguing that it would be wrong for me to let the Bible in my school. Be contented to show me how I can leave the Bible out of my school and not sin in so doing. Remember, there is but one question before you—viz.: Can Christians who have chosen school-teaching as their calling in life for a living, in establishing schools of their own, leave the Bible out? Can they afford not to let one of the expressed purposes of the school be to teach the Bible? Most certainly they could find a place in some of the State schools or private schools run by the sects or men of the world, in which case others would choose the course of study for that immediate school. And I will not say a Christian has no right to teach in such schools. I had rather not do so, but am not condemning those who do. But when our teachers are left free before God to choose their own course, tell me how they can leave the Bible out of the course of regular study. Is it not a fact that in things in which the child of God is left free there must be something to distinguish his work from those of the world? Must our brethren in the Lord, in establishing schools, follow the pattern laid down by the State and infidels, or shall they follow Him who is the head of every man—viz., the Lord Jesus Christ? (1 Cor. 11: 3.)

It will hardly be questioned that we have the right to choose school-teaching as an honorable calling in life; and we can do so in the name of Christ and as an act of obedience to him. Here is what I mean by this: The command is positive: "And let our people also learn to maintain good works [“profess honest occupations”—marginal reading] for necessary uses." (Tit. 2: 14.) This command is found also in verse 8: "Faithful is the saying, and concerning these things I desire that thou affirm confidently, to the end that they who have believed God may be careful to maintain good works"—or, "profess honest occupations." These words have direct reference to that calling in life upon which we depend for our own living and that we may have to give to others. And whatever honorable calling we take up should be done in the name of Christ and for the purpose of glorifying Christ. If not, why not?

We have brethren who are making teaching their life's work. Tell me how they can own and control a school or college and leave the Bible out as one of the books to be taught.

You say it is the church's business to teach the Bible? Exactly so. And for this very reason every member of the church must teach it whenever the opportunity presents itself, and we are duty bound to make opportunities when it is possible for us to do so. If not, why not? There is one command in the Bible the obedience to which is boundless as to season—viz., "Preach the word;" for the very next breath of the Holy Spirit declares for us to do this both "in season" and "out of season." Have you read it? "I charge thee in the sight of God, and of Christ Jesus, who shall judge the living and the dead, and by his appearing and his kingdom: preach the word; be urgent in season, out of season;" (2 Tim. 4: 1, 2.) Just what preaching the word "in season" means, and what preaching it "out of season" may mean, is not for me to settle now. But there is one thing I do know—viz., that the doctrine that it must not be the expressed purpose of each child of God to teach others whenever he can is of the devil. It is said that our brethren who are making teaching their life's work may establish schools of their own, just so they do not let one of the expressed purposes of the school be to teach the Bible. But the child of God can have but one purpose in life, whether expressed or unexpressed—viz., go to heaven, and get all you can to go with you. "No man can serve two masters," declares our Lord. "Ye cannot serve God and mammon." (Matt. 6: 24.) Will some one tell me what this means? I can follow no calling in life, let it be ever so honorable, simply for the money there is in it. If so, tell me how. My only scriptural reason for doing anything is to serve God. And listen, please: it does not become unscriptural just because you express it. If the Bible teaches anything, it teaches that I am not my own; that if I see myself as Christ would have me, I must consider myself sold out to Christ, absolutely so, and that he must control me. What does Paul mean when he says, "Ye are not your own?" (1 Cor. 19: 20.) Here he means our bodies, our all. What does he mean when he says: "Whether we live therefore, or die, we are the Lord's?" (Rom. 14: 8.) By virtue of this very fact, when I establish a school, the Bible must be one of the books the students under me will study, unless some one can show me that Christ says leave it out. He owns me and has the right to give orders. Who will say Christ orders his people to leave the Bible out of the course of study we give our children? But you say Christ does not say leave the Bible out absolutely; that he only says that we may establish schools and have as the expressed purpose to teach geography, arithmetic, etc., and may teach the Bible incidentally after the school is established, but we must not let it be one of the purposes of the school to teach the Bible. Well, as I establish and enter my school work, it must be understood that it is to serve God or mammon. Which must it be? Must I look at the school purely as a business calling for the money I get out of it? If so, I am serving mammon. If I consider it that course in life that enables me to make an honorable living and at the same time convert as many people to Christ as possible, I am serving God. But how can I have this latter motive without intentionally letting the Bible go with me in that school as the leading book to control us in seeking a true education and giving it to others? Tell me how. Christ says the eye must be "single." (Matt. 6: 22.) Tell me how to establish a school and keep my eye single and make not the one purpose of the school to save souls and glorify God. The Christian's life has but one purpose, if I understand the Bible correctly.

Of course, let it be understood that when I establish a school and this school interferes with local church government, that school is wrong. But I know of no school that does this. But dismiss this from your mind and show me how to establish a school over which I have control and leave the Bible out. Never could I meet an infidel and hold my head up in an effort to defend the grand old Book, should Satan succeed in getting me to do such a cowardly act. No, the Bible goes with me in every school I establish.

The Manuscripts.

For the information of our readers we republish the following from H. Leo Boles, which appeared in the Gospel Advocate of June 19, 1919:

There are many great manuscripts of the New Testament which have come down to us from the fourth century. The International Standard Bible Encyclopedia, published in 1915, states that there are about four thousand manuscripts, in whole or in part, of the Greek New Testament which are now known. These manuscripts furnish abundant evidence for determining the reading of practically the entire New Testament, while the evidence for the Gospels and most important Epistles is unprecedented for quantity and for clearness. They are usually divided into two classes—uncial, or large hand, and minuscule, or small hand. The uncials comprise about one hundred and forty copies extending from the fourth century to the tenth century; the minuscules include the remaining manuscripts and all between the ninth century and the invention of printing.

There are six great manuscripts of the Greek New Testament belonging to the uncial class.

Codex Sinaiticus, found by Tischendorf at Saint Catherine's monastery on Mount Sinai and now in the Imperial Library at St. Petersburg. It belongs to the fourth century, and is the only uncial which contains the whole New Testament.

Codex Alexandrinus, so named because it came from Alexandria, and was presented to Charles I. in 1627. In 1757 it was presented to the Royal Library and is now in the British Museum. It belongs to the fifth century, and contains the entire New Testament except portions of Matthew, John, and First Corinthians.

Codex Vaticanus belongs to the fourth century and is thought to be the oldest and the best of the New Testament. It is now the chief treasure of the Vatican Library, and has been in this Library since 1481. It contains all the New Testament except portions of Hebrew, Philemon, and Revelation.

Codex Ephraemi—in other words, Scriptus—was brought to Italy from the East in the sixteenth century and was later carried to France and is now in the National Library in Paris. It originally contained the whole New Testament, but now approximately about half of every book is lacking, and Second Thessalonians and Second John are entirely gone. It belongs to the fifth century.

Codex Bezae was obtained by Theodore Beza in 1552 from the monastery of St. Irenaeus at Lyons. In 1581 he gave it to the University of Cambridge, where it is now to be found. It is a very important manuscript, since it is written in Greek and Latin. It belongs to the fifth century, and contains only the Gospels and Acts with a fragment of Third John.

Codex Washingtoniensis is now in the National Library (Smithsonian) at Washington, D. C. It belongs to the fourth century, and was obtained by C. L. Freer, of Detroit, in 1906, from Egypt. It was edited by Prof. H. A. Sanders for the University of Michigan Press in 1911.

Immortality.

BY L. M. A.

Though sinks the sun behind the hills,
Where our eyes behold it not,
We know somewhere, beyond those hills,
The radiant sunbeams linger still.

When those dear o'erstep the sunset bars ahead,
To wander on a stranger, fairer strand,
Why, O why mournfully pronounce them dead?
They have only strayed beyond the hills of mortal sight.

Though unanswered is the anguished call;
Unheeded are the sighs, vain the tears;
Yet we know somewhere the souls immortal
Live, though past the scope of mortal view.

PELOUBET'S NOTES FOR 1922 NOW READY.

"Peloubet's Notes" has been issued for forty-eight years with ever-increasing popularity and usefulness, which fact alone is a wonderful argument for its value and helpfulness. It is rich in material, comprehensive in its scope, and practical in its treatment. Every superintendent, teacher, and scholar will find in it his own personal requirements. The editor of The Outlook says: "We give first place to Peloubet's." Marion Lawrance, the noted Sunday-school worker, writes: "How this standard commentary has been able to maintain itself during all these years, growing annually stronger and richer, is a marvel to the Sunday-school world. Personally, I do not see how any Sunday-school teacher can hope to do his best without the rich, full helps found in these 'Notes.'"

At Home and Abroad

A. B. Gunter is teaching a singing school at Totty's Bend.

W. R. Hassell, of Trenton, Tenn., began a meeting at Coble, Hickman County, Tenn., on the first Sunday.

W. S. Morton, of Columbia, Tenn., began a meeting at Kimmins, Lewis County, Tenn., on the first Sunday.

Frank L. Cox, Norman, Okla., says: "The Gospel Advocate has a fixed place in our home and heart. We always await its visit."

Born, to Mr. and Mrs. Eugene L. Pearson, of Cedar Hill, Tenn., on January 31, 1922, a fine boy—Buford Bryant Pearson. Congratulations.

L. L. Brigance, of Henderson, Tenn., will begin a meeting in Centerville on the second Sunday in July. Brother Brigance has held several very successful meetings there.

J. R. Armstrong writes: "C. E. Holt was with the church at Town Creek, Ala., on Sunday, January 29, and preached two fine sermons. Two middle-aged men took membership. We rejoice at the cause advancing here. 'Praise God, from whom all blessings flow!'"

B. W. Davis preached at Scottsville, Ky., last Sunday and Sunday night. Two large audiences. He reports the church at Scottsville as doing very well. Brother Davis expects to begin a meeting there, with J. D. Derryberry as song leader, on the first Sunday in April.

Our colored brother, Alonzo Jones, preached last Sunday for the colored people of the Pleasant Union congregation, in Maury County, Tenn. He will preach at Jackson Street Church next Sunday. Brother Jones expects to spend much of his time this year in evangelizing.

From T. B. Clark, Gallatin, Tenn., January 30: "January has been by far the best month for the congregation since I came here in October. We have had good interest in every line of work. The last Sunday of the month was a test for the work, there being very many sick with colds. All services were well attended."

From J. H. Horton, Tusculum, Ala., January 30: "The services at Tusculum were very good yesterday. One lady who had been a Baptist for fifty-five years decided to be simply a Christian; also one young lady made the good confession and was buried in baptism in the afternoon. We are beginning the new week with renewed strength in Him."

From W. R. Willcut: "On February 20, at 10 A.M., we will begin a joint discussion at the Christian Church in the town of Hackleburg, Ala., on points of Scripture upon which we do not agree. The same points shall be considered that were expected to be discussed in December. The Baptist man is C. C. Clark, and I will represent the church of Christ."

From H. M. Phillips, Chattanooga, Tenn., February 1: "The get-together week of the churches of Christ in St. Elmo and Chattanooga was a success. The work is on the increase here. One hundred and seventy-five in our Bible classes on Sunday. Two were baptized and two placed membership with the congregation. We now have seven services a week."

From P. G. Potter, Dibrell, Tenn., January 30: "Our attendance at our Sunday school and church meeting is improving. Some in attendance that have not heretofore attended the worship. We are always glad to have them. Elder L. G. Gribble, one of our well-informed elders, made a very impressive talk Sunday. We are liking the new Quarterlies for this year fine."

Earnest C. Love writes, under date of January 30: "Yesterday I preached twice for my old home congregation at Shady Grove, in Hickman County, Tenn. It was a pleasure to meet again former schoolmates and friends and brethren in the Lord. The church there seems to be doing well. It would have taken me over three weeks to have eaten all the dinners I was invited to."

Brother Freed writes from Avon Park, Fla., February 3: "The meeting is moving on with good interest. There are many faithful brethren here. There are dwelling in Avon Park tourists out of almost every State in the Union. When we noised this meeting abroad, many came together. We are delighted with this land of sunshine and flowers and with the earnestness of the church. We hope for great things for the cause of the Master here."

From M. S. Mason, Springfield, Mo., February 2: "Since writing I have visited Rogersville, Mo.; Turner and Ramsay Streets, this city; Center Point, near Rogersville; and Dale and Johnson Streets, this city. I will visit Rogersville again next Lord's day. I find the cause in fair condition at all these places. I will begin a Bible reading at Center Point next Tuesday, which will embrace twenty days' study and cover the entire New Testament. I will begin evangelistic work for 1922 on or about March 25. Christian love to all Gospel Advocate readers."

A. L. Wilson writes from Mayfield, Ky.: "I have just read the suggestion of my schoolmate and brother, J. W. Brents, that Brother Hardeman's sermons to be delivered in Nashville be published. I look on N. B. Hardeman as one of the most polished and powerful preachers in the church. Brethren, be sure to get his sermons in a book, that they may live after he is gone. Again, thousands have never heard him and will never hear him. Give them the benefit of his sermons. I obligate myself for twenty-five volumes of Hardeman's Tabernacle Sermons."

A special-delivery letter from J. B. Nelson, Dallas, Texas, brings the sad information that James S. Dunn died at his home in Dallas at 1 A.M. on February 3, 1922. His death resulted from pneumonia and was unexpected, as he had been confined to his room only a few days. He was cut down in the prime of life, being only forty-five years old. He was well known as a minister and active in the work. Though the worker dies, his influence will live after him. In his death the church suffers a distinct loss. We will expect some one to prepare a more extended notice for publication in the Gospel Advocate.

L. C. Taylor writes from Mineral Wells, Texas, January 29: "The church of Christ that meets at the Odd Fellows' Hall is doing fine. The members are at peace with each other. They meet every Lord's day for Bible study under the direction of the elders. They are continuing steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine and fellowship, in breaking of bread and in prayer, and all manifest love for each other. We would like to have a good young preacher to locate here and work in the town from house to house during the week and preach on Lord's day some here and out at destitute places in the country. We do not want a 'one-man pastor,' but want a man to work, and we will support him. Address the elders of the church of Christ, Odd Fellows' Hall, Mineral Wells, Texas."

Fred M. Little, of Montgomery, Ala., writes: "N. L. Walker, treasurer of Catoma Street church of Christ, Montgomery, made his annual report to the congregation on January 15, which showed that four thousand six hundred and sixty-seven dollars and sixty-eight cents had been taken up in collections according to the New Testament. Except a small balance on hand, it had been spent for repair of the church house, helping other churches, charity, preaching the gospel locally, sending a young brother to nearby destitute places, and sending to foreign mission work. Though financial conditions are not so good as in 1921, the church proposes to do even more in 1922. We have made a good start, the collection for January 15 being one hundred and twenty-eight dollars. The Lord's plan does work, if we will but work his plan. We do not submit this report to boast, but rather to encourage others. This church has not done any more than its duty, if, indeed, it has come up to its duty."

"Doing nothing through faction or through vainglory, but in lowliness of mind each counting others better than himself." Sometimes it looks like preachers cause about as many divisions as they can. It is about the easiest thing in the world to cause a faction or division in a congregation, and vainglory is one of the main causes which brings this about. If we look to our own secret faults—faults, perhaps, that our brethren do not have, and that we do not know that others have—it is easy to esteem others as better than ourselves. The best men among us are the ones the best qualified to see their own faults. The more of the light of the teaching of Christ that shines into the life, the better we are able to see our own faults. Just as the sunlight that streams into our rooms reveals to us each particle of dust that floats in the air, so the light that shines into our hearts through the word of God reveals to us more clearly the defects that are there. A knowledge of our own weakness will enable us to esteem others better than ourselves. In our efforts to condemn our brethren, let us not overlook our own faults. Any one can find faults in others, but it takes a good man to see his own.

My Mother's Death.

Let me express my thanks to the great host of friends who have sent me messages of sympathy and encouragement on the occasion of the death of my mother, which occurred on December 21, 1921.

I know no greater compliment to pay my mother than to say she was a Christian—and when her children learned that she was dangerously sick they rushed to her bedside.

I cannot recall ever seeing my mother when she was not full of hope and had some word of encouragement and cheer for those she met. I think she did not have an enemy in all the world.

It was mine to be with her through an operation in the Baptist Hospital, Memphis, Tenn., and the month which followed, in that institution, before she passed from this lapsed state. It was the first time I ever saw her confined to her bed.

I have often said to my parents: "I will never live long enough, I will never be able to do enough to repay you for the sacrifices, trials, and toils you have passed through for me." I never felt this more keenly than I do this day.

I think we are never quite ready for our loved ones to leave us, even when there is not a shadow across our faith.

When Death, with his keen sickle, enters the family circle, and with the icy finger kisses to sleep the eye of some loved one, and bears him or her from us, we bow our heads like the ripened grain; we array ourselves in mourning; the heart is sore and the voice is broken; smiles are banished from our faces and joy from our homes. I am no exception to my fellows. I never see one under the clouds that my heart does not go out in sympathy and the tear unbidden flow. But deep in my heart is that which masters my life and makes itself heard through the tears. To the Christian, death is not a calamity; it is but the gateway, the vestibule to the eternal home, where pain, sorrow, and disappointments incident to this life are wholly unknown. Death but breaks the little dark prison house in which the man dwells, and allows the spirit, the personality, to unfold its golden pinions and "fly away" to those celestial mansions that the Lord has prepared for those who love him. Let us not think of our departed ones as the infidel when he tells us that it is all of life to live and all of death to die, nor as the modern Sadducees, who teach that man ceases to exist at death, but rather let us remember that "to be absent from the body is to be present with the Lord."

As I stood by and saw the death of my mother, I could but say:

"My life is a brief, brief thing,
Full of sunshine, sorrow, and care.
Let me brighten some life,
In the hard world of strife;
Let me do it to-day;
To-morrow I pass away;
For my life is a brief, brief thing."

Nichol-Whittaker Debate.

Near Jacksboro, Texas, beginning on January 13, I met Mr. I. P. Whittaker in discussion. Mr. Whittaker has espoused the doctrine taught by Charles T. Russell. He is a very pleasant man to meet in discussion, in that he maintains a pleasant spirit.

I think he realizes his weakness, as well as the weakness of his position. He is not an educated man, nor is he possessed with the ability to be critical in the examination of a position advanced by the opposition.

Possibly Mr. Whittaker can do as well for his position as any man. The weakness of the position of such men will render the strongest man a weakling in the hands of a man with the truth.

The Adventists who have not revised their position that the kingdom has not been established are slow now to affirm that it has not been. The position when first advanced was new to many of our people and they were carried off their feet by it; but so soon as they began to become informed on this particular form of infidelity, they repudiated the doctrine, and the teachers among us who have espoused the doctrine began to "restate" their position.

Personal Notes.

C. R. Nichol is to begin a meeting in Louise, Texas, on February 10.

The church at Tipton, Okla., with which R. F. Whitaker has labored for the past ten years, has recently had Roy E. Wallace, Jr., in a series of meetings, with thirteen baptisms.

Two additions recently with the Armstrong Avenue Church, Denison, Texas, where M. C. Cuthbertson labors. The average attendance for the past quarter in the class work was two hundred and fifty-six.

From Frank L. Cox, Norman, Okla., February 1: "The work at Norman is getting along nicely. Several additions since I last reported through your paper. S. E. Templeton, of Altus, Okla., will be over to assist us in a meeting the latter part of February. Of course we are expecting lots of good to result from the meeting."

From Ira Wonnack, Sulphur, Okla., January 28: "I am preaching once a month at each of the following places: At Paul's Valley on the first Sunday; Byars, second Sunday; Ardmore, third Sunday; Stratford, fourth Sunday. My school will close in March. I would like to hold some meetings in Tennessee in June, as I expect to visit my old home there in May or June. Brethren at any place desiring my services should write to me as soon as they can."

From G. W. Cannon, Muskogee, Okla., February 1: "Two more who recently moved here placed membership with the Okmulgee Avenue congregation last Sunday. Things look very encouraging for a good and profitable year's work here. Almost every service sees new faces present. Brother Blue, from Morrilton, Ark., will begin a meeting with us on February 19. A. M. Foster is preaching a series of wonderful sermons from the book of Revelation each Sunday night. Pray for us in our labor for the cause of Christ at this place."

K. C. Moser, who labors with the church in Wewoka, Okla., writes: "The work with the Wewoka church for 1921 was satisfactory, but we are not contented with what has been done. We expect to do more in 1922. Our membership now numbers seventy-seven. Seventeen were baptized in 1921, and we spent four thousand one hundred and ninety-two dollars for the work. None of us are rich, but we are not afraid to give. When a man gives nearly fifty per cent of his income for the Lord's work, he has about done his duty, so far as giving is concerned. The work at Stuart, Okla., is growing also."

From J. H. Lawson, Houston, Texas, February 1: "The work with the First Church of Christ at Houston is progressing nicely, with additions at almost every service. I recently baptized two persons. The attendance is now better than it has been during the more than two years that I have been with this church, and we are expecting still greater things. I have a training class for the men of the church, and in this class I am developing some material that will make fine preachers. I am teaching them how to perform any kind of church work, giving special attention to speaking and arrangement of sermon matter. We now have about twelve men who can and will do any kind of work they are called on to do, and they know how to proceed. I feel that if all the churches would train the men in the work, that we would soon have a host of men who would be of great service and that there would not be a dearth of prepared men for the work of the churches. Warren E. Starnes, of Dallas, has accepted the work with the Central Church, and he is a true yokefellow; and with Brother Smith with the Heights, and all working together, we hope to accomplish much for the Lord. Correspondents will please note that my address is now 821 Yale Street."

BY M. O. K.

CHAPTER VI.

THE "PSALLO" AND "BAPTIZO" CONTROVERSIES FURTHER COMPARED—MR. MORRISON'S BOOK.

It has rarely, if ever, been my lot to examine a book which contained as much unfair handling and misrepresentation of authorities as is found in the one here under review. In fact, this defect is so prominent and of such frequent occurrence in its pages that the task of exposing it has become, so far, at least, as I myself am concerned, positively distasteful, and my only reason for continuing it any further, or for any further review of the book at all, is the expressed judgment of intelligent and serious persons as explained in the opening chapter. Its suppression of the language of Thayer in the attempt to show that the great New Testament lexicographer furnishes no more proof of a change in the meaning of psallo than he furnishes of a change in the meaning of baptizo, and that of Sophocles in which were suppressed the very words of the eminent lexicographer of the Roman and Byzantine periods which mark the distinction between the classical and modern meanings of psallo, were duly exposed in former chapters.

Now, exactly parallel to these, and again on the meaning of psallo and baptizo, I have discovered, by making proper investigation and comparison, another case of equally gross misrepresentation. It appears in the attempt to show that my treatment of psallo in my book, "Instrumental Music in the Worship," and Mr. C. C. Morrison's treatment of baptizo in his book, "The Meaning of Baptism," are the same and lead in principle to the same result. That is, the author of this book, as we shall see, attempts in effect to make the impression that, on the same principle on which my book makes out the case that psallo changed from meaning to play an instrument in classic Greek to meaning to sing in the New Testament, Mr. Morrison's book makes out the case that baptizo changed from meaning immerse in classic Greek to meaning pour and sprinkle in the New Testament; that my logic on psallo is his logic on baptizo; that if it sustains me on psallo, it sustains him on baptizo; and, vice versa, if it will not sustain him on baptizo, neither will it sustain me on psallo. He knows that practically all his readers on both sides of the music controversy will be ready to resent the thought and repudiate the position that baptizo, though meaning immerse in classic Greek, changed and came to mean pour and sprinkle in the New Testament, and that if he can make it appear to them that Mr. Morrison, by following my plan on psallo, makes out, in the same way, his case that baptizo once meant immerse, but changed and came to mean pour and sprinkle, then they will be equally ready to resent the thought and repudiate the position that psallo changed.

It must be confessed that this attempt to draw a parallel between the treatment of the two words is a rather clever and ingenious stratagem in the psallo controversy. Moreover, its author is so completely obsessed with it that, in one form or another, he strings it out through numerous pages over a large part of his book. In fact, although he says of me, "It is far from my purpose to review him" (page 246), yet, for some reason, he strangely finds it necessary to devote to me and to my book a very large part of the space between page 10 and page 260, with the specific mention of my name more than forty times! Perhaps I should take to myself the comfort offered by Lord Byron in "English Bards and Scotch Reviewers:"

"'Tis pleasant, sure, to see one's name in print;
A book's a book, although there's nothing in't."

However, in the language of one of John Ray's proverbs, "It is a long lane that has no turning;" and while the proper exposure of this misleading case will require several quotations from the Morrison book, I have, nevertheless fully determined that our readers shall have the facts.

First of all, I give, in his own words, this man's representation of the case: "The position of those who hold that the meaning of psallo changed is the same as that of C. C. Morrison regarding baptizo in his recent book, 'The Meaning of Baptism.'" (Page 21.) Again: "Mr. Morrison's book, 'The Meaning of Baptism,' but follows in the steps of Instrumental Music in the Worship, borrowing its plan, and building upon its deductions. Both escape the obvious meaning by having the hated word accommodat-ingly change its meaning—psallo in Mr. Kurfees' book; baptizo in Mr. Morrison's." (Pages 256, 257.) Now, while I do not know that baptizo is not "hated" by Mr. Morrison nor that it is, and do not see how this man can know such a thing; yet I do know that psallo is not "hated" by me, notwithstanding this generous charge! But please note that, in his adroit statement, he does not say, in so many words, that Mr. Morrison's book holds that, just as my book claims that psallo, though meaning to play an instrument in classic Greek, came to mean to sing in the New Testament, so Mr. Morrison's book claims that baptizo, though meaning immerse in classic Greek, came to mean sprinkle or pour in the New Testament; but, nevertheless, that is the exact impression which he attempts to make and does make upon his readers. For aught I know, he may think that he represents Mr. Morrison's book correctly. My only point here is to make perfectly clear to our readers what

It is that he represents it as teaching. Here is the proof in his own words: "If you prefer to trust the unsupported word of a man in his book, instead of the word of God in His book, that the meanings and actions of baptizo and psallo conveniently changed just before the New Testament was written, Mr. Morrison and Mr. Kurfees will accommodate you." (Page 260.) Please observe that he here says the "actions" of these words, psallo and baptizo, according to Mr. Morrison and myself, "conveniently changed." But what new "action" does he charge Mr. Morrison with attaching to baptizo in the New Testament? Again, his own words furnish the answer in clear and explicit terms when, on their treatment of baptizo, he specifically puts in the same class "Ditzler, Rice, Morrison and affusionists generally." (Page 86.) That settles it. "Affusion" means "pouring upon or sprinkling" for baptism. (See Webster.) Hence, he thus tells his readers that Mr. Morrison, applying to baptizo my treatment of psallo, shows, in the same way and with the same logic, that baptizo changed and came to denote the "action" to pour or to sprinkle in the New Testament. Furthermore, in expatiating on this alleged parallel between my treatment of psallo and Mr. Morrison's treatment of baptizo, he attempts to add odium to my book by making an invidious comparison of its author with this "affusionist" teacher and charging that I lutionized to accommodate Mr. Kurfees, we dare not con- am "making common cause with" him! "If psallo revolute that baptizo would do less to gratify Dr. Strong and Mr. Morrison." (Page 69.) "Think of Louisville linking up with Chicago! Of M. C. Kurfees making common cause with C. C. Morrison, and loaning him his psallo penknife (Jer. 36: 23) with which to cut baptizo out of the Scriptures! Yet, that is exactly what Mr. Kurfees has done." (Page 256.) Well, we shall presently see whether "that is exactly what Mr. Kurfees has done." In any event, one thing is now conclusively and definitely established—namely, this man represents Mr. Morrison's book as teaching that, just as my book teaches that psallo changed from meaning to play an instrument to meaning to sing, so, in the same way, Mr. Morrison's book teaches that baptizo changed from meaning to immerse to meaning to pour or sprinkle.

But does Mr. Morrison's book teach that baptizo meant immerse in classic Greek, but changed and came to mean pour and sprinkle in the New Testament? Does his book teach that pour and sprinkle are correct translations of baptizo in the New Testament just as my book teaches that sing is a correct translation of psallo in the New Testament? When I first read this representation, I had never even seen a copy of Mr. Morrison's book and knew absolutely nothing of what it contained. Hence, deciding to examine it for myself, I procured a copy and have carefully read every word of it. There is not a solitary statement in it that says baptizo meant immerse in classic Greek, but changed and came to mean pour and sprinkle in the New Testament. On the contrary, we shall see that the very reverse is true to the extent that it teaches that immersion was practiced in New Testament times as the "action" expressed by baptizo, and that it should be practiced now. With him, the institution—the thing—called baptism is something more than either immersion, pouring, or sprinkling—something more, indeed, than any "physical act" at all. Here are his own words:

"Before the writers of the New Testament appeared on the scene the word baptisma was commonly used to denote the ceremony of initiation of a non-Jew into the Jewish state and church. This initiation was practiced by the total submersion of the proselyte's body in the water. At the first the word baptisma no doubt applied only to the physical act by which the initiation was signalized. Gradually, however, the term gathered to itself the total psychical import of the ceremony or ordinance, and was used to denote not the physical part of the ceremony alone, but the whole significance of the ceremony itself. The name of the sign had become the name of the thing signified. Baptizo came thus to have a technical or specialized meaning. To baptize a convert to Judaism meant thus to confer upon him the religious and political status of a Jew. The significance of the word is not rendered at all in such a context by translating it 'immerse.' The proselyte's 'baptism' was administered by immersion in water, but the baptism was not the immersion. The whole meaning of the religious ceremony had grafted itself upon the word which primarily had meant only the physical act by which the ceremony was performed." (Pages 32, 33.)

Mark the words: "Baptizo came thus to have," not a different "action," but, in this particular use of it, "a technical or specialized meaning" of its action. With Mr. Morrison, "the term gathered to itself" in the New Testament use of it "the total psychical import of the ceremony or ordinance, and was used to denote not the physical part of the ceremony alone," the immersion, "but the whole significance of the ceremony itself."

We will now hear Mr. Morrison's book in further detail on the subject. On page 35 he says: "There is, we repeat, no English word that satisfies" as a translation of baptizo. On page 42 he says: "It connoted the rite of induction into the church, a rite whose essential meaning was found elsewhere than in the particular physical act by which it was solemnized." Again: "The word, however, in its New Testament usage, . . . refers primarily to the function of initiation and only incidentally to the particular physical act." (Page 48.) Still again: "Reference is here made to these illustrations of the Jews and other peoples . . . to suggest how natural it was that the particular physical act of immersion in water came to be employed as the formal sign of the baptismal act." (Page 50.)

Thus, instead of teaching that there was any such change in the word as that from immersion in classic Greek to sprinkling in the New Testament, he distinctly says "the particular physical act of immersion in water" was "employed" in that volume. Then, listen to this: "The attempt to make baptizo mean 'sprinkle' or 'pour' has even less ground to sustain it than had Mr. Campbell's attempt to make it mean 'immerse.'" (Page 23.) How does that statement sound in the face of the representation that Mr. Morrison's book teaches that baptizo changed and came to mean sprinkle or pour? Again: "Baptism is neither affusion nor immersion," and "any English word denoting only a physical action for the word 'baptize' involves a sacrifice of not only a part but the essential part of the meaning of the sacred text." (Page 24.) Still again, after saying on page 35, "The best reason, and the only true reason, for our English scholars not translating the word in their versions of the New Testament is that it could not be translated," he then, as if purposely to prevent the very misrepresentation in question, distinctly declares: "'Sprinkle' has not an iota of justification." Once more: "By baptism is not meant immersion, nor affusion, nor any physical act whatsoever, but the moral act of uniting oneself with those who are of like mind with oneself concerning Jesus Christ." (Page 89.) Again: "Baptism in the New Testament is not immersion at all, nor, of course, sprinkling, nor any physical act whatever, but the social and moral act of initiation into the church of Christ." (Page 206.) He calls it "the rite of initiation into the church of Christ." (Page 215.) On page 34 he says: "We have been using the word 'initiate' as the best English equivalent of this social or religious meaning of baptizo. This word, however, is not wholly satisfactory. It suggests to our mind somewhat more elaborate formalities than an accurate translation should convey. 'Induct' is in this respect a better word. We have no single English word that expresses with complete precision the meaning of the Jewish use of baptizo at the time of John. Our difficulty is all the more marked when we come to the term in its full Christian signification." But when we "come to the term in its full Christian signification," he distinctly teaches in so many words that immersion was the "action." "Under Paul's hand, immersion received a specific and distinctive symbolism. . . . 'We are buried with him in baptism into his death, that like as Christ was raised up by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life.' This imagery was suggested to Paul, without doubt, by the act of immersion in water by which the ceremony of baptism was administered. . . . 'This very immersion,' he would say, 'shows forth the Lord's death, burial and resurrection. That he died and was buried is pictured by your burial in the watery grave; that he arose again from the dead is symbolized by your being raised again from the water.' In this way Paul made of immersion a monument to the great facts of historic Christianity." (Pages 179-181.) Again: "Regularity in the administration of the rite of initiation into the church of Christ—historical regularity, dating back to apostolic practice—demands that the candidate be baptized by immersion in water." (Page 215.)

But does not Mr. Morrison teach in his book that baptism or "the rite of initiation into the church of Christ" may be performed, as among the Presbyterians, by pouring and sprinkling? Yes, he does; but on the same page, 215, he distinctly says of such a "baptism" that "it was irregularly performed," and not that baptizo had come to denote that "action," and the italics are his own. Again, so far is he from teaching that baptizo changed from immerse in classic Greek to sprinkle in the New Testament, that he not only says, as we have seen, that immersion was practiced in New Testament times and should be practiced now, but he distinctly counsels against substituting sprinkling or any other "action" for immersion, in these words: "Immersion is seen to possess a dignity and richness of content which should give pause to the church that would substitute anything else for it." (Page 195.)

To sum up the whole argument, instead of Mr. Morrison's book teaching that baptizo "revolutionized" from meaning immerse in classic Greek to meaning sprinkle in the New Testament, just as my book teaches that psallo "revolutionized" from meaning to play an instrument in classic Greek to meaning to sing in the New Testament, and instead of using my "psallo penknife" or any other instrument "with which to cut baptizo out of the Scriptures," he both leaves baptizo in "the Scriptures" and distinctly declares that the "action" therein expressed by the word is immersion: "The particular physical act of immersion came to be employed;" "under Paul's hand immersion received a specific and distinctive symbolism;" "that he died and was buried is pictured by your burial in the watery grave, that he arose from the dead is symbolized by your being raised again from the water;" "regularity in the administration of the rite . . . demands that the candidate be baptized by immersion in water;" and "sprinkle has not an iota of justification." Was there ever a more complete misrepresentation of a book than these facts disclose?

Now, I do not believe Mr. Morrison's doctrine about "the social and moral act" of baptism (page 206); that "it is not a physical act" at all (page 89); that it may be "validly solemnized by other forms than immersion" (page 88); and that those who received sprinkling were "baptized," only "it was irregularly performed" (page 215)—I do not believe, according to the New Testament, that they were baptized at all; and much else that he teaches on baptism I do not believe; but, nevertheless, my disagreement with him on all these points, or on any other points, has nothing whatever to do with the fact that he does not teach, as represented by the book here under review, that baptizo meant immerse in classic Greek, but changed and came to mean sprinkle in the New Testament. The purpose of representing the Morrison book as getting pour and sprinkle out of baptizo by following exactly the same plan that my book follows in getting sing out of psallo is to make the latter, like the former, odious to the readers. But the author of this representation should have taken time to consider the fact that, even if Mr. Morrison or any one else should attempt to draw such a parallel by claiming that the "action" of baptizo, like that of psallo, changed and came to mean sprinkle just as the former changed and came to mean sing, there is proof for the change in psallo, already presented in this review, that no living man can produce in favor of a change in the "action" of baptizo. But, as the case really stands, there is not only no attempt in the Morrison book to show any such change in the "action" of baptizo, but there is not even the claim that there is any such change. Hence, not only would the argument, even if founded on a real attempt to draw such a parallel, be worth nothing, but, in this particular case, it does not even have the merit of resting on a correct representation of the facts, and, therefore, both the representation and the argument built on it utterly fall to the ground.

Hence, finally, no matter how honest and sincere the author of the representation may be in making it, nor whether it be the result of misinformation or what not, that has nothing whatever to do with the fact that the representation, not being correct, is incontestable proof that any other representations in the book here under review, unless otherwise known to be correct, are untrustworthy, and that, therefore, the book itself is unreliable.

Mission Work.

BY J. C. M'Q.

When all authority in heaven and on earth had been given to Christ, he commanded his apostles, and through them the command comes to us: "Go ye therefore, and make disciples of all the nations, baptizing them into the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I commanded you: and lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world." (Matt. 28: 19, 20.) The religion of Christ is a taught religion; hence, disciples should go everywhere preaching the word. "No man can come to me, except the Father that sent me draw him: and I will raise him up in the last day. It is written in the prophets, And they shall all be taught of God. Every one that hath heard from the Father, and hath learned, cometh unto me." (John 6: 44, 45.) The man who has experienced the joy of the Christian religion is hungering to tell others about it. Every Christian is a missionary. The more one suffers for Christ, the more does he want to tell others about the rest that Christ brings to the weary soul. The soul that drinks at the fountain of divine love is not content until it leads others to satisfy their thirst at the same fountain. The soul is dead that proclaims not the gospel of Christ to those who know it not. It is wrong to call a Christian an antimissionary. No one who knows what is God's power unto salvation will oppose preaching the gospel anywhere and everywhere. There is no foreigner with God, but all human beings are precious to him—yea, so precious that he gave his Son to die for them. "And he made of one every nation of men to dwell on all the face of the earth, having determined their appointed seasons, and the bounds of their habitation; that they should seek God, if haply they might feel after him and find him, though he is not far from each one of us: for in him we live, and move, and have our being; as certain even of your own poets have said, For we are also his offspring." (Acts 17: 26-28.) The Christian realizes with Paul that the gospel is God's power unto salvation to every responsible creature, and with him he says: "For I am not ashamed of the gospel: for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth; to the Jew first, and also to the Greek." (Rom. 1: 16.) As Paul said to the Romans, "So, as much as in me is, I am ready to preach the gospel to you also that are in Rome," even so will the Christian be ready to preach the gospel to every creature. In Paul's day the gospel was preached in all creation under heaven. (Col. 1: 23.) Should the church do less to-day?

We have the command to preach the gospel to the whole creation, and from him who had the right and the authority to command. The message that we are commanded to preach is the greatest and most important that was ever sent down from heaven. The greatest issues depend on the reception or rejection of the message. Life eternal and eternal death are at stake. We have the command to go; we are told what to preach—the gospel; and we are told to whom to preach—every creature. With love and respect for our Commander, with confidence in him and the message, and with fidelity to the trust committed to us, we will make the necessary sacrifices to preach the gospel to the whole creation. Some people may not consider the support of the church as obligatory; but all Christians know that it is "the light of the world," "the salt of the earth," and, realizing its Heaven-born mission to the world, they are giving to the church their best service and the best of all they have. To them it is a delight to sing:

I love thy kingdom, Lord,
The house of thine abode.
The church our blest Redeemer saved
With his own precious blood
I love thy church, O God;
Her walls before thee stand.
Dear as the apple of thine eye,
And graven on thy hand.

For her my tears shall fall,
For her my pray'rs ascend;
To her my cares and toils be given,
Till toil and cares shall end,
Beyond my highest joy,
I prize her heav'nly ways;
Her sweet communion, solemn vows:
Her hymns of love and praise.

Jesus, thou Friend divine,
Our Savior and our King,
Thy hand from ev'ry snare and foe
Shall great deliverance bring,
Sure as thy truth shall last,
To Zion shall be giv'n
The brightest glories earth can yield,
And brighter bliss of heaven.

The early Christians loved the church. "And they continued steadfastly in the apostles' teaching and fellowship, in the breaking of bread and the prayers." (Acts 2: 42.) We also read: "And upon the first day of the week, when we were gathered together to break bread, Paul discoursed with them, intending to depart on the morrow; and prolonged his speech until midnight." (Acts 20: 7.) Paul admonishes the Corinthians: "Now concerning the collection for the saints, as I gave order to the churches of Galatia, so also do ye. Upon the first day of the week let each one of you lay by him in store, as he may prosper, that no collections be made when I come." (1 Cor. 16: 1, 2.) In the face of such teaching, it is hard to understand how any one who has any respect for the Bible can publish with approval what is here clipped from the Literary Digest:

The pew has come into power, and its attitude is the attitude of industry, of commerce, of business—that is, of civilization. It cannot be coerced by fear, or by any of the "Thou shalt not's," for the time when churchgoing was considered the dividing line between the sheep and the goats is dead. There is no social ostracism for the unchurched. The country people no longer take religion to be inevitable, nor the utterances of the clergy on trust, nor consider the support of the church as obligatory. They do a lot more questioning than they used to, and they believe only by conscious effort. The new emancipation of the race means a rejection of authority, religious as well as political, except that which comes through service.

There are two possible results of this emancipation as it affects the church. Either the church will be transformed into a democratically ruled club with a president instead of a pastor, or the pulpit, through a high type of service that the pew cannot refuse, will train itself for the leadership that is so much needed. The time has come when the pulpit must make good to the pew.

The Bible says nothing about "social ostracism for the unchurched," but it holds out no promise to the person who is not in the church or kingdom of God. We all as Christians should give "thanks unto the Father, who made us meet to be partakers of the inheritance of the saints in light; who delivered us out of the power of darkness, and translated us into the kingdom of the Son of his love." (Col. 1: 13.) Men who believe the Bible will not reject the authority of Christ, neither will they repudiate the church of which he is the head. (Col. 1: 18.) The pulpit will make good to the world by preaching the gospel, which is the power of God unto salvation. The church of Christ will survive when democratic clubs and presidents shall have been forgotten. The preacher is culpable if he fails to preach the gospel in simplicity and power. He shows a lack of faith in Christ and a lack of confidence in the efficiency of the gospel when he repudiates it and turns to the wisdom of the world for the conversion of sinners. Christ says: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to the whole creation." The word of God is the seed of the kingdom. The seed is to be sown broadcast and not all in one spot. When we fail to go in obedience to the command of Christ, it is because we lack faith. Faith will remove mountains of difficulty out of the way. If we have faith in Christ and believe in the efficiency of the gospel, we will leave nothing undone to make disciples of all the nations.

Relative to the Tabernacle Meeting.

BY E. W. SMITH.

Much interest is being manifested in the prospective meeting to be held in the Ryman Auditorium, beginning the latter part of March. Numbers of people who live in the country and smaller towns are making inquiries about the meeting and expressing their intention to be in attendance as much as possible. A brother who has not written for publication and who lives in a country town quite one hundred miles away has the following to say:

Brother Smith: In looking over the Gospel Advocate this evening, I noticed the contemplated meeting at the Ryman Auditorium. I am so glad to note this, and I trust the Nashville churches will not let anything prevent it. Do not let the meeting be too short, if interest keeps up. If Brother Hardeman cannot stay longer than the time mentioned, get Brother G. C. Brewer to go on for a week or two, or some other able preacher. Then advertise the meeting. Preach through the Nashville papers, daily or every other day. Tell the Bible story in display advertisement; and while preaching to Nashville audiences, preach through the press to vastly larger numbers. The people who are tired of modernisms, and the simple old-new story of the Bible will tell and touch the deeper, finer feelings of the heart. O, I hope there will be such a union of effort by our brethren then as will stir Nashville as nothing has ever done before. You will have the prayers of the churches wherever the fact of the meeting is known. I want to attend some myself.

There are a few suggestions in this letter which need to be emphasized, and the first to which attention is called is the length of the meeting. Such a meeting should not be cut short, "if," as the author of this letter says, "interest keeps up." One of the best meetings that prince of evangelists, James A. Harding, ever held in Nashville in point of additions to the church was in South Nashville, at the College Street Church. Brother Harding had preached for weeks without having an addition and had begun to feel somewhat discouraged (a rare thing for him to do), but he held on, and they began to come until about one hundred and twenty people were added to that congregation. Brother David Lipscomb attributed much of Brother Harding's success as an evangelist to what he called "the gift of continuance." So long as there was the slightest evidence of success, Brother Harding would stay by the meeting.

In the second place, as the letter suggests, if any emergency should arise demanding Brother Hardeman's presence elsewhere at the end of the three weeks, some other evangelist should be pressed into service and the meeting continued; but it is hoped that if the interest should demand a continuance beyond the time set, that Brother Hardeman will be free to continue his work in the meeting. The moving spirits in this meeting seem determined to make it a success in every particular, and I feel sure they will welcome any suggestion that may be helpful to that end.

In the third place, our brother's suggestion relative to the advertising feature is a fine one; and if it could be arranged to give daily a full synopsis of the sermons, it would be money well spent. I have no idea how much free advertisement the secular press will give the meeting, if any at all. This is strictly an age of advertising, and the space in the daily papers is so very valuable to the publishers that, from a financial point of view, they cannot afford to give much free advertisement. However, such a method would be productive of much good in the way of getting the position of those who wish to be known simply as Christians before such a vast number of people who have never heard it. People will read a sermon in a secular paper who would not read the same sermon in a religious paper with the name of the publication before their eyes. The religious people who make the plea for a return to the New Testament and the primitive order of things are woefully lacking in the distribution of tracts, pamphlets, and other forms of literature setting forth their plea. Mormons, Christian Scientists, Adventists, Russellites, etc., are flooding the world with free literature in the propagation of their teaching, and the racks in railway stations, hotels, and nearly all public places are filled with this free literature; but those who have the truth are practically making no effort at all to get it before the people, beyond a few religious journals and periodical evangelistic efforts.

Finally, our brother gives the assurance that this effort will "have the prayers of the churches wherever the fact of the meeting is known," and this is by no means the least factor in the work. The great Paul besought the church at Thessalonica to pray for him and his fellow laborers. He said: "Finally, brethren, pray for us, that the word of the Lord may run and be glorified, even as also it is with you." (2 Thess. 3: 1.) That there is some connection between the prayers of the saints and the success of the gospel ministry, no one can deny in the light of this passage. Never mind now about our understanding just how this is; but that it is, is a fact that cannot be denied, and our duty is to do the praying and let God take care of the other part. The very fact of thousands of saints praying for Brother Hardeman and the success of the meeting will be a great stimulus and inspiration to him.

The Outlook Is Encouraging.

BY J. C. M'Q.

February starts off well. Many of our readers are paying up back dues and renewing for another year. Others are sending us new subscribers. E. C. Love is in the field at work among the churches and reports a good interest with fine results. C. R. Nichol is busy and is arranging to make an active campaign in Texas and Oklahoma. A number are beginning to work in order to secure the one hundred dollars that we will give to the successful worker. Those who are at work should not fail to let us know that they are at work. Send in the names and addresses of subscribers with the cash as you receive them. We must have the name and address of every one who is working for a cash gift. We cannot consider those who fail to furnish us name and address. We must have the names of all who are working for a cash gift not later than March 15, 1922. Names not received on or before that date will be barred from the contest. The standing of no worker will be made public until after July 1, 1922. To those who enter the contest and mail us new subscribers from February 1 to July 1, 1922, in the order of most subscribers sent, we will give the following amounts:

First gift	$100.00
Second gift	50.00
Third gift	25.00
Fourth gift	15.00
Fifth gift	10.00

Subscribers must be taken at the price of $2 a year. Two six-months subscribers will be counted as one new subscriber. Write us at once for sample copies and subscription blanks. Write name and address plainly.

We are still giving away a first-class self-filling Fountain Pen to the person who will send us two new yearly subscribers, accompanied by $4. For one new yearly subscriber, accompanied by $3, we will give the pen. This pen is fine and will cost you from $2.50 to $3 in any store. This offer will be withdrawn when the present supply is exhausted. If you want a pen, you should be prompt.

Every student of the Bible should have a copy of Matthey Henry's Commentary. A number are making up clubs for it. This Commentary is very valuable to preachers. The churches would do well to give a copy to their preacher. The Commentary may be bought for $17.50.

There are many Christians who are not reading any religious paper who would be greatly benefited by reading the Gospel Advocate. All our people should be encouraged to read good papers instead of vicious journals. Parents should not be unmindful of the reading of their children. Bad reading nullifies much good training. Churches and preachers should cooperate with us in furnishing the people good reading. The paper stimulates the churches to greater zeal and spirituality and is helpful to the preacher in his work. Prompt action on the part of all will be very encouraging and helpful just now. I have found that, as a rule, people who read the Gospel Advocate read their Bibles more than those who do not read the paper. If you have not already begun work for the paper, begin to-day.

Are You Discouraged? Get "Consolation."

The first copies of "Consolation," a new book edited by Brother A. B. Lipsecomb, are off the press. It contains a carefully selected collection of the choicest gems of comfort from the greatest poets and prose writers of the ages. Each selection is a masterpiece. It is safe to say that in this book you will find a bringing together of the most comforting messages ever written in artistic and convenient form. Besides the Bible, there are quotations from about seventy authors. It is attractively printed, with special decorations.

This unique volume is designed to serve as a fitting keepsake in memory of the dear departed. You will find a beautifully engraved memorial page on which the name may be filled in, together with dates of birth and death. Should you wish to present it to some friend, there is a blank for this purpose.

Again, there will be many occasions when you will wish to write a note of sympathy. You will find it very convenient to include in your note a quotation from this volume. This is another distinct advantage. Flowers fade and lose their beauty, but "Consolation" may be kept always.

Query Department

The following questions were sent to this department for answer: "(1) What is the blasphemy against the Holy Ghost in Matt. 12: 31? Can one commit this sin to-day? (2) What is the 'sin unto death' in 1 John 5: 16? Is this sin one or many?"

Matt. 12: 31 reads: "Therefore I say unto you, Every sin and blasphemy shall be forgiven unto man; but the blasphemy against the Spirit shall not be forgiven." The language in 1 John 5: 16 is as follows: "If any man see his brother sinning a sin not unto death, he shall ask, and God will give him life for them that sin not unto death. There is a sin unto death: not concerning this do I say that he should make request."

In answer to the first question and passage given, I quote E. G. Sewell's answer to the question, "What is the sin of blasphemy against the Holy Spirit?" as given in "Queries and Answers," by Lipscomb and Sewell, pages 638, 639:

(1) To blaspheme is to speak impiously or reproachfully of God or of the Holy Spirit. To speak irreverently of the Spirit or his work would be blasphemy against him. To attribute the revelations of the Spirit to demoniacal power, or to place these revelations of the Spirit upon a level with the mutterings of departed spirits in spiritualism, or demons, would be to treat the Spirit of God with impiety—would be blasphemy. Hence, those who regard modern spiritualism and set the teaching of God aside for that, if not guilty of blasphemy, are next-door neighbor to it. I presume there is not a spiritualist on earth that believes in modern spirit revelations (so called) that places a particle of sacred regard upon the revelations of the Holy Spirit in the New Testament.

(2) The scribes and Pharisees who accused the Savior of casting out devils by the prince of the devils certainly did blaspheme, did sin against the Holy Spirit, as defined by the Savior in Mark 3.

(3) I have no doubt but that it may be committed now. Men may as easily blaspheme the Spirit in his revelations to-day through the word of truth as they did his developments in the days of the Savior. The Spirit of God in the New Testament brings the last message from God to sinful men, and the only message whereby sinners can be saved; and the man that attributes any other origin to the New Testament than to the Spirit of God is guilty of the blasphemy against the Spirit of God.

But there is something else more widely dangerous to Christians than this, and that is the fact that any sin willfully persisted in to the end of life becomes unpardonable. I do not suppose that any who believe the Bible and are humbly trying to serve God will ever commit the sin of blasphemy against the Spirit of God; but I fear that very many so-called "Christians" will be lost in eternity for not obeying the words of the Spirit in the New Testament. I think the danger here much greater than blasphemy. "If ye live after the flesh, ye shall die: but if ye through the Spirit do mortify the deeds of the body, ye shall live."

In answer to the second question, I quote David Lipscomb, who says ("Queries and Answers," by Lipscomb and Sewell, pages 606-607):

We have never been able to reach a conclusion as to the meaning of this scripture. Most commentators refer it to the spiritually gifted. They connect it with James' direction to the elders to anoint the sick with oil, pray over them, and they shall be healed, and refer both to the age of miracles. It has always seemed to us unnatural and strained to take two or three verses out of scriptures directed to all Christians and for all ages and apply it to a specific class in one age. This gives great license for many evils. Macknight thinks that mortal diseases were brought upon people in that age for sin. The spiritually gifted could discern it. "To encourage those to repent who by their sins had brought on themselves mortal diseases—these were in the first age persons who, being endowed with the gift of healing diseases miraculously (1 Cor. 12: 9), were moved by the Holy Ghost to heal the sick, who had repented of the sins which had brought on them the diseases under which they were laboring. We may, therefore, believe that when John directed any one who saw his brother sinning a sin not unto death to ask God to give him life, he did not mean any ordinary Christian, but any spiritual man endowed with the gift of healing diseases; and that the brother for whom the spiritual man was to ask life was not any brother who had sinned, but the brother one who had been punished for his sin by some mortal disease, but who, having repented of his sin, it was not a sin unto death; and that the life asked for such a brother was not eternal life, but a miraculous recovery from the mortal disease under which he was laboring." That explanation is not satisfactory to me, as I see no reason for confining this to the miraculously endowed and applying the remainder to all ages and people. To give men license to thus set aside scripture as inapplicable to us that does not seem clear and possible, goes a long way toward setting aside the authority of scripture.

But I have no clear and definite idea as to the meaning of the scripture, or how we can tell which sin is unto death and which not. Yet in that age there were clearer distinctions as to sins of this character than we have. Paul states Christ was of none effect to those who went back to Judaism. These were fallen from grace. (Gal. 5: 4.) Again, for him that sinned willfully there was no more sacrifice for sin. These sins for which there was no forgiveness were better defined in the apostolic days than now. Our failure to keep a clear distinction comes somewhat from our altered surroundings and somewhat from loose habits of thought into which we have fallen. I think the life and death referred to are spiritual and not bodily. When he gives life to the prayer, it is the spiritual life of those who sin. They are forgiven, and are said to be given him who prayed for them, as they were forgiven in answer to his prayer. Lying is certainly not classed among the minor sins in the Bible.

G. W. Craft, El Centro, Cal., sends the following: "I desire for the sake of information to ask some questions on Matt. 7: 13, 14. Here two ways are spoken of—the narrow way and the broad way. Is being in the narrow way equal to being in Christ? Is being in Christ equal to being in his body, the church? I understand to be in Christ is to be in Christ's church, or kingdom. I understand, too, that it takes a birth to take us into the kingdom of Christ. Now the question: Can we by transgression get out of Christ's kingdom in this life; or, in other words, do we cease to be a son in this life? Has any one the power or authority to put one out of the church of Christ? Will there be any lost who are in the narrow way?"

A man must be in Christ to walk in the narrow way. We get into Christ by obedience to the gospel. "Except one be born of water and the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." (John 3: 5.) The saved are in the kingdom of God. "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." (Mark 16: 16.) Hence, he that believeth and is baptized is born of water and the Spirit. We are nowhere commanded to cast a man out of the kingdom of Christ, but we are commanded to withdraw from the disorderly walking. "Now we command you, brethren, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye withdraw yourselves from every brother that walketh disorderly, and not after the tradition which they received of us." (2 Thess. 3: 6.) While a son may always be a son, he may also be a disinherited son. Because a man has entered the kingdom is no evidence that he is in favor with God. The son must be obedient till death and through many tribulations must enter into the kingdom of God. (Acts 14: 22.)

The Friend of Christ.

O that my tongue might so possess
The accent of His tenderness,
That every word I breathed should bless!
For those who mourn a word of cheer;
A word of hope for those who fear;
And love to all men, far or near!
O that it might be said of me,
"Surely thy speech betrayeth thee
As friend of Christ of Galilee!"

Field Reports

Albertville, Ala., February 1.—I preached at Berea, in Cherokee County, last Sunday. One was baptized. I preached at Piney Schoolhouse on Sunday night, and at Menlo, Ga., on Monday night, to good audiences.—R. N. Moody.

Berry, Ala., February 1.—I preached for the home congregation last Lord's-day night. Large and appreciated crowd. Our meeting, with Brother J. D. Tant to lead in the strong drive for the school and to strengthen the things that remain, will begin on February 26 instead of March 5 as previously stated. Be sure to come.—Frank Baker.

Jackson, Miss., February 2.—Last night at our midweek prayer meeting a noble young man made the good confession and was baptized "the same hour of the night." I believe as large a per cent of our membership here attend prayer meeting as any congregation I have been with. I have heard it said that a prayer meeting is a good place to judge the zeal and earnestness of a church.—M. C. Cayce.

Burkburnett, Texas, January 31.—The weather was very unfavorable last Sunday, but we had a very good meeting. One business man was out to hear me preach both morning and evening, and gave the church twenty dollars to help repair our house. We started the work this morning. The brethren here have a mind to do things for the Lord, and we hope this church here will be what the Master wants it to be.—D. S. Ligon.

Bradentown, Fla., January 31.—On the second Lord's day in this month we had an all-day service. Brother R. E. L. Taylor, of Tennessee, preached at 11 A.M. and 7:30 P.M. Brother George B. Hoover, of Tampa, preached at 3 P.M. I wish every one would read G. C. Brewer's article in the Gospel Advocate of January 26. It alone is more than worth the price of the paper for one year. I am to begin a mission meeting in Brooksville, in the courthouse, next Lord's day.—John Hayes.

Washington, D. C., January 30.—A heavy snow of about twenty-seven inches covers our beautiful city now, and all car service was at a standstill on Sunday morning, yet a number of our most faithful members were at their post of duty. One lady was baptized, and we held three services. We have not been able to put in a baptistery on account of heavy notes that are yet to be met, so we walked about five miles in the snow to do the baptizing. I like to see a person willing to go any distance and do anything to obey God's commands. Let those who desire to help some one to find the place of worship here remember that it is Fourteenth and Meridian Place, N. W., and all Fourteenth Street cars will bring you almost to the door. Get off at Fourteenth and Newton.—W. S. Long.

Lecanto, Fla., January 31.—The church here moves along very nicely.

One baptism, a young lady who had been a member of the Methodist Church. I was at Oxford on the fifth Lord's day. The brethren there had invited the congregations of the county to be present, that they might stir up the congregations to support an evangelist and keep him busy all the year evangelizing in this State. The spirit of the meeting was good. Every one seemed to lend a helping hand. The preaching brethren present were: Brother Claus, of Valdosta, Ga.; Brethren J. O. Barnes, S. W. Colson, David Martin, Brother Humphrey, and the writer. Several brethren from different parts of the county made good talks. Brother Barnes preached on Saturday night; I preached on Lord's-day morning and Brother Colson on Lord's-day night. Several of the Lecanto brethren were present. Brother John King, one of the elders of the Lecanto congregation, and Brother Austin Allen, one of the deacons, made excellent talks. I believe the meeting has done much good and that the brethren will take on new life and the work for the Master will grow.—R. E. L. Taylor.

East Lake, Tenn., January 30.—I have just returned from Florida, where I had a very pleasant short stay with the brethren in Lakeland, Plant City, and Jacksonville. I preached to two good audiences at Rossville, Tenn.-Ga., yesterday, and visited the brethren at Chickamauga in the afternoon. Very fine work is being done there. Brother Hugh Garrett recently baptized two at that point. We are planning greater work in this section. The Rossville congregation is moving on in about the same old way. Reports from the other congregations in this section are very encouraging. Brethren Phillips, Martin, Hoover, and Boyd are busy in their various territories, and we expect good work from them all.—Aruna Clark.

Clarendon, Texas, February 2.—I spent some very pleasant and profitable days in Lexington, Okla., the last half of January. I baptized four splendid young men. Three others placed their membership with the local church. The superintendent of the high school said: "I am almost persuaded." Some Methodist people said they were coming out to the mid-week Bible study conducted by Brother Mansur, the local preacher. I promised to return and assist them again as soon as I can find the time from my home work. Since the debate all is quiet around home. Brethren Nichol and Colley will be long remembered and appreciated for their good work with us—Brother Colley, for the splendid manner in which he conducted his part of the debate; Brother Nichol, for the splendid sermons he preached, as well as his association in the debate. If Brother Tyn-dall gets to hungering and thirsting for another discussion, I understand these two brethren are ready to accommodate him. My next places: Quanah, February 6; preachers' meetings last week in February; Abilene lectures; then on to Winfield, Texas, for a meeting.—Thomas E. Milholland.

Pasadena, Cal., January 23.—Our congregation is four weeks old and has an enrollment of one hundred and eight members. Last Lord's day we had one hundred and fifty-six present, the contribution amounted to fifty-six dollars and sixty-seven cents, and there were eight additions—six by letter and two confessions and baptisms. A finer lot of workers I have never seen, and all are interested in spreading the gospel in this great city of nearly seven hundred thousand people. Brother Witty is doing some able work with us, and we trust the time will soon come when we may have many churches of Christ in this city. We are glad to hear of the great work and success of the Russell Street Church, Nashville, Tenn., through the efforts of Brother S. H. Hall. Brother Hall labored with us here in Los Angeles for a year and a half with great results. He is a man who believes that the work of the church is the greatest work on earth, and that the church can succeed wherever the members will cooperate with their minister in doing personal work as well as attending the regular church services. We predict success for any church with whom Brother Hall is affiliated, with his untiring efforts.—Floyd S. Lee.

Denton, Texas, January 23.—Some one said to me the other day: "Brother Ligon, why don't you write more?" Well, I have been pressed financially, and, with sickness and other things to demand my time, I have not had time to say much in the papers. My son, who is now in the government sanitarium at San Angelo, is, I think, doing very well. The government is now helping him, which is a relief to us. His wife is also sick, which makes it doubly bad. Pray for them. On Christmas Day I preached at Burk-burnett, Texas, to a fair hearing. One brother confessed his wrongs and the church was made to rejoice. On the second Lord's day I preached there again, and the brethren asked me to assist them in building up the cause of the Master in and around the town. I accepted the invitation of the church to stay among them for a time and preach the gospel as best I know how. The third Sunday was a cold day, but we had a fair crowd out; and last Sunday we had more to hear us than at any time before both at the morning and the evening services. The church at Burkburnett has had a hard struggle, but is now taking on new life. We are arranging now to paper the house of worship and repair the building and make it more comfortable and inviting. Mail will reach me quicker by addressing me at Burk-burnett, Texas, Box 122.—D. S. Ligon.

The Work in Mississippi.

BY H. D. JEFFCOAT.

The old year, with its joys and sorrows, has passed silently into history and the new year is now before us. At such a time one becomes more thoughtful of the rapid flight of time, more mindful of the preciousness of friendship, and more appreciative of the value of kind words. The year 1921 was a good year with the work here in Mississippi, but we are trying to make 1922 a better one.

I assisted in eight meetings, which resulted in fifty-three additions, and had one debate with a Primitive Baptist, which I hope did some good. Some have said a gospel preacher would starve to death here in Mississippi, that the church here would not support him; but that has not been the case with me. The Lord through his church has supplied my needs. I believe our Lord will give us what we need and will use to his glory and our good. So when I get a call to hold a meeting, if I can go, I go without asking what the support will be, believing that God will see to that part of the work.

More faithful preachers are needed here, the kind that can sympathize with the unfortunate people that are blinded by the isms—"the doctrines and commandments of men"—that are taught here. I do not know of a single strong congregation south of the Southern Railroad—fifty-eight counties. A good preacher is needed at Cleveland, Miss., about one hundred miles southwest of Memphis. Brother David O. Griffith has been there three or four years, but has gone to Texas. They are now left as sheep without a shepherd. They do not need a "big preacher," but just a plain man that lives the truth and is able to teach others to do the same. I have promised to assist in fourteen meetings this year.

Brethren, let us all work like it all depended on us, and pray like it all depended on God. Don't forget the faithful workers in Mississippi when you pray.

Gladly Doing Service.

I wish to say to the readers of the Gospel Advocate that at the beginning of this new year I am glad that I am blessed, laboring in the Master's vineyard. I am as busy as I can be. Last year I preached for four churches regularly one Lord's day in each month. On every fifth Lord's day I visited some new field. My being poor in this world's goods has hindered me from visiting many places where I see the gospel needs to be preached. I have resigned the work at Henderson, Tenn., where I have preached on the second Lord's day in each month for the last four years. I now use the second Lord's day at Thyatira, Miss.; the third, at Hernando, Miss.; the fourth, at Tuscumbia, Ala.; and the first, at Tishomingo, Miss., at 11 A.M., and at Corinth (my home) at night. The work at Corinth is better now than it ever has been. We have in our church one member who was one hundred years old on December 25, 1921. She has been a member of the Christian Church about forty years. We are glad to have our white brethren to visit our church. They are a great help to our work.

The Day of the Doer.

There is growing up a feeling among men who are conscious of the dignity of life that no job is worth doing unless it accomplishes something good, or helps to steady life or wisely reorganize it. Perhaps that is why government or political positions are held in less esteem than formerly, and are sought more by the oratorical, the social set, the leisurely. The old idea of office being an "honor" instead of an opportunity possesses them. This idea is flaming up for the last time. Men who want to do things are not hankering for office, because office is a hindrance to achievement. The day of the Doer is here; he will soon be in charge everywhere.—Henry Ford.

Spiritual Life.

Burden sharers be ye all,
Great and small,
Where another shares the load,
Two draw nearer God.
Yet there are burdens we can share with none,
Save God;
And paths remote where we must walk alone,
With God.
For lonely burden and for path apart,
Thank God,
If these but serve to bring the burdened heart
To God.

—John Oxenham.

MONTHS OF SUFFERING

How a Baltimore Girl Recovered Her Health

Baltimore, Maryland.—“For several months I suffered with severe backache and general weakness. I could not sleep comfortably at night for pains in my back. I found your book at home one day and after reading it began at once to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I have had very good results and some of my girl friends are taking it now. You may use this letter to help other girls, as the letters in your book helped me.” — ROSE WAIDNER, 3018 Roseland Place, Baltimore, Md.

That is the thought so often expressed in letters recommending Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. These women know what they have suffered, they describe their symptoms and state how they were finally made well. Just plain statements, but they want other women to be helped.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is a medicine made from medicinal roots and herbs, and without drugs, to relieve the sickness women so often have, which is indicated by backache, weak feelings, nervousness, and no ambition to get anything done or to go anywhere. It has helped many women. Why not try it?

Report of Work for 1921.

BY R. V. CAWTHON.

During the year just closed I was extremely busy and worked harder than ever before. Some of the results were very gratifying and some very discouraging, which is naturally expected, and which is best, after all. If all our efforts were successful, in all probability we would soon forget the Lord and become independent, which would mean a downward course.

I conducted the services for eighteen protracted meetings. Some of these were mission fields, and some were very weak congregations and others very strong. At Grandview Heights, Nashville, I had the most visible results—one hundred and eighteen. Tracy City, Tenn., was a fine place, and the congregation is growing under the teaching of Brother W. Clarence Cooke, who is one of the most godly men I know of. Antioch, near Lewisburg, Tenn., is one of the best places I have labored for old-time Christianity. Big audiences and good singing. Cookeville, Tenn., is the best place I have ever been, so far as being supported is concerned, with Laguardo and Cedar Grove next. These would be at the head of the list financially, if we were to consider the size of the congregations, which are very small; but all of them are “true blue.”

Smithville is the most responsive congregation I have ever labored with. Their contribution five years ago ranged from two to seven dollars on Lord's day. The last quarter for 1921 was eleven hundred and seventy-eight dollars and sixty-five cents, which I consider a wonderful improvement, besides developing some splendid preachers of their own. Dr. Mason, Judge Drake, Brother Chambers, John High, Bernice Potter, Dr. E. A. Conger, Carolyn Moore, Trab Martin—all these can and do make instructive talks, which is commendable. Mount Juliet, my home congregation, is the dearest of all, as it is home. I have been preaching for them the last twelve years regularly, besides conducting many meetings for them. Had it not been for this congregation and Smithville, both sending me my regular support whether I was present or not, my family would have almost suffered.

During these eighteen meetings I baptized one hundred and sixty-three persons, forty-five were restored to the fellowship, and thirty-one were received by letter, making a total of two hundred and thirty-nine.

My support was nothing like so good as the previous year. In fact, it was a very hard year for me to meet my financial obligations. But I know others were hard pressed, and I will not be one to turn back; but if the Lord lets me live, I expect to put forth a greater effort this year than ever before.

My first meeting this year will be in March, at Cookeville, Tenn., and I am looking forward to that time with pleasure. My last meeting will be at Pleasant Hill, near Donelson, where I have been laboring for the last twelve years; and I always look forward to it for many reasons, but especially because of the dear old home I make mine. This is the home of Sister Margarette Worrell, J. H. Worrell (her son), and Brother Will Goodwin and wife, all of the old-time type, which I greatly admire.

Brethren, “laborers” are badly needed. Let us not slacken, but put forth a greater effort than ever.

Letter from Florida.

BY S. F. MORROW.

Leaving Nashville, Tenn., on January 28 for Tampa, Fla., Mrs. Morrow and I reached Atlanta, Ga., at 8 P.M. Through the kindness of Brother S. H. Hall, Brother B. C. Goodpasture met us in his nice car and soon placed us in the good home of Brother and Sister Harwell. To add to our joy, we found a lot of sweet children. Every one seemed to know his or her place. Brother Goodpasture, on leaving, wanted to know if I would not talk for the West End Avenue congregation at the morning service. After due consideration, I did, with great pleasure. I had been wanting to go to Atlanta from the time Brother Hall commenced his labors there. Some of the members wanted to know if I knew Brother Hall. I told them our labors commenced when he was a young preacher. Some of the best meetings of my life were when Brother Hall did the preaching. I was made to rejoice to learn how they appreciate his work with them, also to learn that Brother Goodpasture is held in high esteem. As it had been stated in recent issues of the Gospel Advocate we wanted to double the subscription list, I only thought it necessary to mention it in Atlanta, knowing that where S. H. Hall goes he always works for the paper, and that B. C. Goodpasture is very active in securing names for the Advocate. I have often wondered why all of our elders and preachers did not get the members to read some good religious paper. In this way we keep in touch with each other and many good lessons are learned. Correction in the spirit of Christ is good for all. Solomon says: "Correct a prudent man, and he will love you; but a foolish man will hate you." Our Heavenly Father chastises those he loves. "Though he was a Son, yet learned obedience by the things which he suffered; and having been made perfect, he became unto all them that obey him the author of eternal salvation." (Heb. 5: 8, 9.) Before leaving Atlanta on Sunday evening, with Brother Goodpasture and wife and son, B. C., Jr., and with Brother Harwell, we were carried to see our beloved J. H. Harding and family. He is a great man of faith in the word of God and the hope of eternal life in Jesus Christ our Lord.

One thing I must not fail to mention. The church in Atlanta is comparatively young to many of our congregations in Tennessee, but has a preacher in the field sowing the seed of the kingdom all the time, supporting him well. What would it have meant if all our congregations had begun as the Atlanta church has? But it is not too late so long as the goodness of a loving Heavenly Father permits us to live. Will not every congregation in the land commence this work at once? Secure a good, faithful, godly man, send him into some State where the truth is scarcely heard of, look after the work, and keep him there till others can carry on the good work and send it on to others. This is the way Paul did it. The Belmont Avenue church of Christ in Nashville is considering such a work. We hope and pray that it will do so soon. What is an automobile worth that will only carry a chauffeur? What is a congregation worth that will build a nice house, hire a big preacher (pastor) to preach every Sunday and tickle their ears, and all die together, and, I fear, be finally lost? Jesus did not do this way, neither did Paul. Where did we get this practice from? Not from God's word. Read your Bible and see if you can find it; if not, quit it and follow Jesus, Paul, Peter, and John.

Who Do Things.

There are men who say things,
And men who do;
The latter who make playthings
Of me and you,
If we idly musing,
Let them go on,
And we make no choosing
Till they are done,
For, then, all the "picking,"
They've made their own.
Too late, then, our "kicking,"
In vain we'll moan.
So, let us "a move on,
Get," while we can,
And each of us prove on The test, "a man!"

—Robert H. Harris.

We all seek happiness so eagerly that in the pursuit we often lose that joyous sense of existence and those quiet daily pleasures the value of which our pride alone prevents us from acknowledging.—Exchange.

Harden.

On December 26, 1921, our dear sister, Lora Mai Harden, crossed over the river of death. She was the daughter of Brother and Sister G. W. Harden and a granddaughter of Brother and Sister M. T. Harden, of Earl, Ark. Sister Lora Mai was born on October 5, 1910. She obeyed the gospel on November 21, 1921. Her stay on earth was short, and her smiles and kind words are missed so much by her friends and relatives. We weep not as those that have no hope, for the dead in Christ shall come forth. I would say to the family and friends: Let not our will, but the will of the Lord, be done in all things we do or say, and some day we will all meet where there shall be no separation. We extend our sympathy to the bereaved family.

L. W. HINSON.

Smith.

Sister Nevada Comer was born in Macon County, Tenn., on August 10, 1854. Her father moved to Tompkinsville, Ky., when she was small. At the age of seventeen she obeyed the gospel. She was married to J. N. Smith on November 4, 1879. Eight children resulted from this union; all are still living. With her husband and children, she moved to Fort Gibson, Okla., in 1902. Sister Smith remained faithful to the church unto the end, which came on January 28, 1922. Funeral services were conducted by me in the Methodist Church at Fort Gibson. The house was filled to overflowing with sorrowing friends to pay their respects to her memory. The church house was borrowed for this occasion because the brethren had no house large enough to accommodate the crowd.

J. G. ALLEN.

Womack.

Brack Womack, a highly respected citizen of Warren County, passed away at his home in McMinnville, Tenn., on January 4, 1922, aged sixty-two years. He was a member of the Christian Church. He leaves his wife, four daughters, and one son to mourn his departure; but he has gone from this world of sorrow to join the heavenly band where sorrow never comes. He died of typhoid fever, and bore his sickness with patience till death relieved him. He told them the end was near and that it was so sweet to be prepared when it should come. He leaves a host of friends and loved ones, and all who knew him loved him. May God bless his wife and dear children in their bereavement. Funeral services were held by Brother H. P. King, of McMinnville, and the body was laid to rest in the Bethlehem Cemetery at Yager.

MRS. DELL SIMRELL.

Balley.

Robert Balley was born in Cannon County, Tenn., on January 3, 1836, and died at Mount Calm, Texas, at the home of his grandson, in his eighty-seventh year, from severe burns, living only a few hours after being burned. His body was laid to rest in

Home-made Remedy Stops Coughs Quickly

The best cough medicine you ever used. A family supply easily and quickly made. Saves about $2.

You might be surprised to know that the best thing you can use for a severe cough, is a remedy which is easily prepared at home in just a few moments. It's cheap, but for prompt results it beats anything else you ever tried. Usually stops the ordinary cough or chest cold in 24 hours. Tastes pleasant, too—children like it—and it is pure and good.

Pour 2½ ounces of Pinex in a pint bottle; then fill it up with plain granulated sugar syrup. Or use clarified molasses, honey, or corn syrup, instead of sugar syrup, if desired. Thus you make a full pint—a family supply—but costing no more than a small bottle of ready-made cough syrup.

And as a cough medicine, there is really nothing better to be had at any price. It goes right to the spot and gives quick, lasting relief. It promptly heals the inflamed membranes that line the throat and air passages, stops the annoying throat tickle, loosens the phlegm, and soon your cough stops entirely. Splendid for bronchitis, croup, hoarseness and bronchial asthma.

Pinex is a highly concentrated compound of Norway pine extract, famous for healing the membranes.

To avoid disappointment ask your druggist for "2½ ounces of Pinex" with directions and don't accept anything else. Guaranteed to give absolute satisfaction or money refunded. The Pinex Co., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

Perie Hill Cemetery, at Mount Calm. Funeral services were conducted by Brother Miller. He was married to Miss Parizalle Cummings on December 9, 1855. He and his wife obeyed the gospel and were baptized by Brother Jesse Sewell in 1859. His wife passed to her reward on March 1, 1917. Brother Bailey went to Hubbard, Texas, a few years ago, to make his home with some of his children. He leaves behind three daughters, one son, and several grandchildren. Brother Bailey and wife were faithful and much beloved by all who knew them. We should not weep as those without hope.

P. G. POTTER.

Curtis.

On Monday, January 16, 1922, the sweet spirit of our dear Eva went to the eternal home above. It is sad to part, but how sweet it will be to meet in that home above, where there is neither pain nor sorrow! She was a good wife and mother and was always ready to help those in need. She was loved by all who knew her. She was born on November 3, 1887, near Fort Deposit, Ala., and moved to Montgomery, Ala., in 1888, with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. T. R. Hicks, where she was reared. She obeyed the gospel in 1902, being baptized by Brother J. M. Barnes, and lived a faithful, Christian life. She was married to H. S. Curtis on April 24, 1910, in Selma, Ala.; moved to Auburn, Ind., where she lived for two years; then went to Los Angeles, Cal., where she and her family made their home until a few months ago; then moved to Bradentown, Fla., and hoped to make it their future home in order to live near her mother. She is survived by her husband, two stepsons, mother, four brothers, and one sister. Her body was laid to rest in the Bradentown cemetery. Brother John Hayes conducted the funeral services.

MOTHER.

Harris.

On January 19, 1922, Mary Lou Harris was fatally burned, and, as a result, her spirit went to God who gave it. Little Mary Lou, the daughter of Glen and Gladice Harris, was only six years old at the time of her death. She left father, mother, three brothers, and many relatives to mourn her death. She is gone, but not forgotten; "not dead, but sleeping." May God bless the heartbroken father and mother and help to bring the little brothers up in the nurture of the Lord, that some sweet day they may all meet in that "home of the soul" where neither sorrow, pain, nor death can come. Little Mary Lou was standing near the fire, when her dress caught on fire and she was burned past recognition. When her Grandfather Harris reached the room where she was, she said: "I can hear my grandpa talking, but I cannot see him." In that glory world she will be able to see grandpa again, and the flames will never touch her any more. It is beautiful to think of the innocence of childhood and to know that sin had never touched little Mary Lou's heart. May all the loved ones who suffer from this separation be comforted by the words of the Master, who said: "Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not: for of such is the kingdom of God."

A RELATIVE.

"THEY SAID I HAD T. B. AND WOULD NOT LIVE THREE MONTHS"

Mr. Harold W. Schmidt, Box 98, Breese, Clinton Co., Ill., believes he has reason to praise Dr. Hartman's Remedy for Catarrhal conditions.

"I used Pe-ru-na eight months for Chronic Bronchial Catarrh. I do not get tired, feel like a giant, am six pounds over normal weight and able to work every day. In March, 1918, I contracted a severe cold with spitting and took to my bed. They said I had T. B. and would not live three months. After taking a couple bottles of Pe-ru-na and a box of Man-a-lin Tablets, could walk around and in seven months went back to work. My trouble was due to Chronic Catarrh of the nose and throat, which I had ten years, extending down into the bronchial tubes. 'Pe-ru-na was my life saver.'"

Field Reports

Lubbock, Texas, January 31.—Last Lord's day was a great day for the church in Lubbock. We have just completed the basement of our new meetinghouse at a cost of eight thousand dollars, and moved into it last week, enabling us to conduct all the services there on Lord's day. Verily, we were all delighted. An auditorium that will comfortably seat four hundred or four hundred and fifty people, easily heated, and with acoustics as fine as can be. The attendance in the Bible classes was the best we have ever had. At the hour for preaching and worship the house was well filled, and five members who have recently moved here came and formally identified themselves with the congregation. In the evening we were greeted by another large audience and much interest was manifested. The Lubbock church was never in such an excellent condition. Peace and love prevail among all the members. We are planning greater things for this year. Brother Early Arceneaux will hold our meeting, beginning the first Sunday in August. We are to support Brother Alexander Campbell (colored) in a meeting here for our colored people the latter part of July. We are trying to get to the point where we can support an evangelist in this Western mission field for all of his time, and we believe that, with the spirit of cooperation and liberality which characterize this church, we will soon reach that point. Pray for us, that we may "go on to perfection."—John T. Smith.

Dinuba, Cal., January 30.—During this month I have visited about fifteen hundred homes and distributed about five thousand tracts on different religious themes. Brother Faqua, of Fort Collins, Col., generously supplied the most of this literature. I make it convenient to visit each home in Dinuba and adjacent towns twice a month and leave tracts. When it comes to this kind of work, we have made the Russellites and Adventists ashamed of themselves, and they have ceased the distribution of their papers. Brethren, it would be superfluous for me to say we are getting results. We are stirring the town. A few Sundays ago when the congregation met in business session to raise the 1922 budget, it was suggested that a designated amount of money be expended each month for literature and for advertising. What the Dinuba congregation of only fifty-five members can do, other congregations can do. Brethren, we believe in giving. But some one may ask, "Do you ever preach on money?" Yes, I believe in declaring the whole counsel. Nothing affords me more genuine pleasure than to preach about a dozen money sermons to a stingy, close-fisted, nonmissionary congregation. "Do they ever accuse you of preaching for money?" Yes, but what do I care? I am like my brother-in-law's mule—I have a thick skin and a short memory. Brother, what is your congregation doing? Are you supporting the preacher and his sacrificing family while they preach the word from house to house? Are you scattering free literature in your town? Are you supporting the orphan homes? Are you doing any foreign missionary work? What are you doing? For God's sake, brethren, let us wake up. Precious souls are going down to eternal perdition every minute. Save one to-day.—William P. Walker.

Warm Your Blood.

A poet has said that "the owl for all his feathers was a-cold." Some people for all their wraps are a-cold whenever they are out of doors, even in normal winter weather.

It is plain that they need the warmth there is in pure, rich, red blood, which reaches through artery and vein, from head to foot, all over the body. They could be told by many people, from experience, that to have this good blood they should take Hood's Sarsaparilla. This great medicine has really made it possible for many men and women, boys and girls, to enjoy cold weather and resist the attacks of disease. It gives the right kind of warmth, stimulates and strengthens at the same time, and its benefits are as lasting as those of any tonic possibly can be.

If there is biliousness or constipation, which often occurs as a result of the torpidifying effect of cold, Hood's Pills may be taken. They are perfectly compatible with Hood's Sarsaparilla, and are gentle and thorough.

Methinks we do as fretful children do.

RECIPE FOR GRAY HAIR

To half pint of water add 1 ounce Bay Rum, a small box of Barbo Compound, and ¼ ounce of Glycerine. Any druggist can put this up, or you can mix it at home at very little cost. Apply to the hair twice a week until the desired shade is obtained. It will gradually darken streaked, faded, or gray hair and make it soft and glossy. It will not color the scalp, is not sticky or greasy, and does not rub off.

COVERING A SUNDIAL.

A missionary once gave a sundial to some savages. So desirous were they to honor and keep it sacred that they shut it away from the sun—closed it up in a dark room.

That is the way some people look upon Christianity. They hold it too sacred for daily and practical use. They carefully lay it aside for Sunday and special occasions. They think it is all right for women in the home or for preachers in the pulpit, but that it has no place in the office or shop or factory. No wonder they lose what little faith they have. Use your religion. Grow by exercise; that is the law of growth in anything. Let your faith inspire you to noble deeds.

HUMILITY.

There is a plant called "sensitive plant." You breathe on it and it instantly droops its head; you touch it and it withers away. Humility is of that character. It cannot safely be brought out on exhibition. A man who thinks he is humble is self-deceived. Moses knew not that his face shone. A snaky kind of Uriah-Heep effort to appear humble is disgusting. Sometimes a man's egotism is seen in his efforts to appear to be not egotistic. A studied endeavor to be indifferent to other men's ways of doing things, an apology for being odd, are evidences of egotism and are meant to call special attention to self. When humility speaks of itself, it vanishes. It consists not in thinking meanly of self, but in not thinking of self at all.

WHAT DO YOUR CHILDREN READ?

Would you like for your child to associate with people of low breeding, people that are coarse and vulgar? Then do not let him read the writings of such people. Would you like for your boy to get his knowledge of manhood and womanhood and the correlation from some depraved libertine who respects morality or decency? Then do not allow him to read literature that disregards such laws and associates men and women in "exciting situations" that places them in "exciting situations" a sensual nature. Would you like for your daughter to have the speech and manner and look of a prostitute? Then do not allow her to pattern after them in her dress and "make-up." Do not allow her to read literature that abounds in their phrases and expressions. Do not allow her to sing songs that originated in their dives and that, with vulgar dances, always characterize their places.

Low, obscene, and corrupt literature will poison the mental and moral system as quickly as arsenic will poison the physical system, and there is no antidote. Bad literature is worse than whisky, as a taste for whisky can sometimes be eradicated, but a taste of bad literature and the impressions made by it can never be removed. We need a law to prohibit the publication of such trash as now floods the market.

Parents, guard your children against this evil. Help them to cultivate a taste for high-class literature. Supply them with books of biography, poetry, and history. If they read the newspapers, teach them to read the editorials and other articles of worth and not to spend their time with the sporting, society, and theater news. Furnish them with good magazines and religious papers, and, above all, teach them to study the Bible.

DO NOT BECOME DISCOURAGED.

Are you inclined to become discouraged and give up when you see so much indifference, inertia, spiritual torpidity, and even hypocrisy among church members? Is your congregation burdened with sensitive, cranky, whimsical, disagreeable, or even disorderly members? Does that dampen your ardor, discourage you and make you less faithful? Does the conclusion intrude itself upon you as it did on Elijah that all of God's faithful are dead? Cheer up! There are thousands of true, loyal Christians yet remaining. True, there are tares among the wheat, but that is no more than our Savior said should be. There never was a congregation of perfect Christians—nay, there never was but one perfect Man. Jesus chose twelve apostles, and one of them betrayed him. The mother church at Jerusalem had its avaricious liars till the Holy Spirit freed it through the discipline of death. The church of God at Corinth had dissension and fornication among its members. Even the apostle Peter—Petros, the rock—dissembled. And jealous preachers? Why, Diotrephes would not let his church see the apostle John's letter; talked ugly about him; would not let other preachers come to his place; and if any of his members showed them courtesy, he even cast them out of the church. If all this happened in the apostolic age and among churches with inspired leaders, we need not be either surprised or discouraged if we have such things now. There would be no need to be "long-suffering" if there was nothing to bear. If there are unpleasant and disagreeable things in your congregation, do not become discontented and cause strife, but be long-suffering and forbearing, thus "endeavoring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace."

Are the Forces of Righteousness Holding Their Own?

BY R. C. ROOPASTURE.

Perhaps the times through which we are passing lend some superficial encouragement to the religious pessimist. War and death have held high carnival at the expense of the impoverished nations. They have reveled in the undoing of the world. In their desolate wake followed a wholesale disregard for the rights of property, life, and happiness. Some are wondering if the armies of righteousness and peace have been put to flight. Others are doubting that Christians are the "salt of the earth." They fear that the world is on the verge of moral putrefaction. But those who would doubt, disbelieve, and despond on account of the present state of affairs signally fail to compare conditions as they now are with what they would have been if the influence of Christianity had not been in the world. They do not allow Christianity a seeming reverse during the long conflict of the ages. Suppose it has sustained some losses during the recent period of war, does that mean its ultimate defeat? Did it not, in the apostolic age, sustain losses at the hands of pagan Rome? And did it not later crush the power of paganism throughout the Roman empire?

There is something wrong with the person who feels that Christianity is inadequate to cope with the problem of this or any other age. It must be that he, like Peter, has lost sight of the Master while looking at the wind and the waves. (Matt. 14: 30.) No one who rightly considers the Captain of our salvation can doubt the final issues of the conflict.

"THE CONQUERING CHRIST."

Under the foregoing heading, The Expositor quotes an interesting story from the Youth's Companion. The article follows:

Richard Morris was hesitating between the ministry and the life of a business man.

Richard's father was a minister, and one evening he frankly confessed his growing distrust of his personal faith, and especially of the real power of Jesus in a world that is full of tremendous evil.

The father was a wise man. He calmly said: "Will you honestly accept proof that Christianity is the greatest power in the world to-day if I can give it to you?"

"I certainly will, father; that is what I want."

"Well, then, do we have any terrible sins or vices here on earth now that were not here when Jesus was born?"

The young man hesitated.

"I don't know of any."

"When Jesus was born, there were drunkenness, slavery, impurity, greed, cruelty, child labor, trampling on womanhood, war, and every phase of human selfishness. Does not history show that?"

"Yes, beyond a doubt."

"Is it not also true that, although these wrongs still exist, there is a deep and earnest protest against every one of them?"

"Yes, that is so."

"From whom do those protests come?"

The son was silent. He had studied history carefully, and saw what his father's argument was.

"Does it not come almost entirely from Christians, from people who have known the name of Jesus? Can you think of a single group of suffering humanity anywhere to-day that some other group is not trying to help, to lift up, to heal?"

"No, father, I cannot."

"At the heart of the world's best life you will always find the spirit of Jesus Christ. Once there was no protest, or very little, against the wrongs that are done in the world. Now there is a mighty protest. Christianity has wrought this miracle. It is creating new standards of life among men. You cannot account for all the wonderful changes in the heart of man except through Jesus and the religion he taught."

And after a long silence the son answered quietly: "I see that, father."

"To this end was the Son of God manifested, that he might destroy the works of the devil." (1 John 3: 8.) Jesus, our Captain and King, will lead his legions unto complete victory. "For he must reign, till he hath put all his enemies under his feet." (1 Cor. 15: 25.) "Evil men and imposters" may "wax worse and worse," but still the forces of right will finally win.

THE TRIUMPHANT CHURCH.

The church of the Lord Jesus Christ is perfect. Inspired men have found faults with men and local congregations, but never have they voiced a word of criticism against the church as an institution—the church universal. To doubt that the church will emerge victorious from its conflict with sin is to disbelieve the wisdom and power of God. If Jesus as King "must reign, till he hath put all his enemies under his feet," then the church, his kingdom, must be triumphant in the end. At the great marriage supper of the Lamb, the bride, the church, will be arrayed in "fine linen, bright and pure: for the fine linen is the righteous acts of the saints." (Rev. 19: 8.) "The path of the righteous is as the dawning light, that shineth more and more unto the perfect day." (Prov. 4: 18.)

NEWS ITEMS.

Hugh E. Garrett preached at Rockmart, Ga., yesterday (February 5). He will be among the South Georgia churches for the next few days.

Brother McCampbell, of Rome, Ga., recently held a meeting at Jacksonville, Ala., in which there were four additions. He is now in a meeting at Alabama City. Until the first of the year Brother McCampbell worked in a barber shop; but now the Rome church is able to keep him preaching all the time. This is fortunate for the church in Rome and for the Georgia field.

Don Hockaday reports one baptism at South Pryor Street last Sunday.

Changing Missionary Fields.

After fifteen years in missionary work in Colorado—constant, patient, and persevering mission work—I find myself facing the necessity of making a change for health's sake. While my own health is weakening, due, I think, to "wearing the climate out" here, the move is principally due to Mrs. Fuqua's condition of health. She is compelled to go to a lower altitude as soon as possible. This is a regret to both of us, as we never intended leaving this field, hoping to be buried here where our greatest work has been done. We have incessantly labored here, bearing and suffering much, and at all times facing one of the greatest missionary problems on this continent, which required great faith and perseverance and fortitude. But we feel that "the ice" is sufficiently "broken" on this field now to admit of its rapid and permanent development by other brethren; in other words, if I may say it, we feel that we have done our part by this field, since, at least, it appears to be the Lord's will that we depart to other fields. We leave reluctantly, sadly, but of necessity in the providence of Him whose we are and whom we serve. Though health is this time, as when we came to this State, made the cause of the move, we believe it is His will that we move for this cause; for if this cause led us into the Colorado work fifteen years ago, this cause may lead us into a greater work in some other clime. We, therefore, bow to what seems the inevitable.

Missionary work in California loudly calls us now, offering us the climate and altitude we seek and need. Northern California, Oregon, and Washington represent a mission field even greater than Colorado now. I go to that "raw" field in full confidence that the Lord will use me there as here. There may I be buried—among the humble disciples it may be my privilege to make.

I am not tired of missionary work and seeking lighter work in any milder field, but I go from this to a harder field of stubborn new ground with all of its accompaniments. Brethren in California write me in such a vein that, were I not hardened to such work, it would scare me in the opposite direction from California. But Colorado has steeled me for any task, though I am weak and unworthy of the tasks that have been laid upon me. Through faithful performance of extra hard work I hope to yet win a crown, through the grace of God.

It is my purpose to get to California in early spring, or before, if possible. I shall continue the work here meanwhile, and that up to the very day I leave this field. Transferring my work to another part of the mission field is all I am doing, that I may have health to continue the work I so dearly love as long as possible. I am not divorcing myself from the Colorado work; but whenever occasion demands, I expect, the Lord willing, to return and do what I can to further aid the field upon which I have labored so long; but I will have to make my residence in another climate, or my throat will again give down entirely, I fear, as when I left the South for Colorado.

I cannot leave this field without expressing my grateful thanks to the brethren and congregations that have so loyally stood by me here, holding up my hands while I did this work, and who still appear to be unflagging in their loyalty to the work in my hands. With me they shall richly share in the rewards given in that day. If they follow me to the new fields, to which I go as I came to Colorado—without earthly promise—I shall exceedingly rejoice in the hope of doing a great work there through their co-operation, as I will be “a stranger in a strange land” there and dependent upon some means of providence for holding up my hands, as during the fifteen years in Colorado. My one ambition is to do better work there than I have done here, and more of it, the Lord giving me strength.

I have a little “home” here in Fort Collins, but I have never paid a dollar on it, and seriously fear that I cannot sell it for a dollar more than I owe on it. I have lived on this property by paying the interest on the mortgage. I, therefore, see no way to get to my new field without humbly asking for a little assistance from such brethren as would really like to assist in this move. After fifteen years’ work here, I have nothing that is really mine. I owe very little—about three hundred dollars—but will have to have help to pay this little, as I will not leave owing a dollar to any man here. My total assets after fifteen years’ work here will not amount to more than what I owe, which makes me “break even” with the field. I came here without a dollar, and thus will I leave, and thus will I be happily content. But there will be expenses that must be borne if I am to reach my new field out of debt, and for that I make known this condition to those brethren who may desire to assist in the work of moving and getting to work again on the new field—California. If any would assist in this, please do so within the next thirty days, so I can make arrangements as early as possible. Address me, Box 177, Fort Collins, Colorado. E. C. FUQUA.

It is with feelings of sincere regret that we have to give up, even temporarily, Brother E. C. Fuqua as a worker in the Colorado mission field. His long and faithful service as a pioneer in the field, his thorough acquaintance with its needs, and his willingness to make sacrifices for the cause of Christ make him a very valuable asset, and we give our consent to his removal to another field with great reluctance. His faith, zeal, and indomitable energy have made him indeed “a workman that needeth not to be ashamed.”

During all these years our associations have been very intimate. We have advised together, planned together for what we considered the best interests of the work, and I have ever regarded him as a “true yokefellow,” “ready to spend and be spent” in the service of his Master. His labors have been in the face of many difficulties, much persecution, severe trials and disappointments, but “none of these things” have moved him or caused him to swerve from his determination to “contend for the faith which was once for all delivered to the saints.” Few, if any, gospel preachers with whom I have been associated preach the old-fashioned gospel with more power than he does. He has won many victories in his discussions with the various sects with whom he has “measured swords.”

While it is a matter of profound regret with us all that it becomes necessary for him and his family to change fields, we congratulate the brethren in California who may be associated with him as a worker in that field, and we heartily commend him to their care and bid him Godspeed in his work with them.

In this connection I trust the brethren who have always manifested an interest in his work in Colorado will stand behind him in his new field and provide the funds necessary to cover the expenses of his trip, etc., at the earliest possible moment.

Reminiscence.

BY ATTIE M. FLINTOFF.

I was about ten years old when I first heard the name “Campbellite.” My father had been to Nashville that day, and, in conversation with my mother, said: “I heard two men on the street to-day discussing religion. Well, if the Campbellites don’t know the Bible, I don’t know who does. That one got the other man so trumped he couldn’t say a word.” I was silent, of course—children in those days were taught to be quiet when older people were talking; but the remark made a lasting impression on my mind. I thought: “If they know the Bible, that is right. That’s what I want to be—a Campbellite!” It was three or four years later when I heard the name again. I was sitting with my good Methodist grandmother when she received a letter from her good Methodist daughter, who wrote: “Our meeting closed Sunday. The Campbellites were holding a meeting at the same time and got the people all stirred up about their doctrine.” I asked grandma: “Who are the Campbellites?” “Well, they are a kind of religious sect who think they are right and nobody else is.” I thought: “They know the Bible, for pa said so!”

When I was about sixteen, I went to Louisville, Ky., to school. I went with my aunt and uncle to the Christian Church, of which they were members. At the first opportunity I asked aunt: “What does your church teach?” In her own sweet, gentle way she told me the gospel plan of salvation! “Why,” I said, “that is just what the Bible says!” “Certainly, that is what we claim to do—speak where the Bible speaks, be silent where the Bible is silent.” Well, I had been reared with Methodists, attended Sunday school since I could remember, but that was the first time I ever heard the plan of salvation told as given in the New Testament. In our conversation she said: “Some people try to ridicule us by calling us ‘Campbellites.’” “O,” I exclaimed, “are you Campbellites?” I well remember how she laughed at my amazement. Then I told her what I had heard about them. Before I left Louisville, Brother Knowles Shaw held a meeting in the church house at the corner of Fifteenth and Jefferson Streets, near us. I attended, made confession, and Brother Shaw baptized me in the name of—Campbell? No—into the name of Christ, and I became a child of God, a Christian only, and happy to wear the name of Christ instead of a human name with the fens and schisms attached.

To-day, as my mind is roaming in the long years of the past, I see the hand of God leading me to a people who tell a sinner what to do to be saved just as plainly as the apostles tell it in the New Testament. O, the wonderful love of God!

An Open Letter to the Congregations in Nashville

Dear Brethren: Many of you I know personally and love sincerely. Having labored with several congregations in Nashville, I have thought for years that just such a meeting of all the congregations as you contemplate conducting soon would prove a blessing to the cause, not only in Nashville, but the cause at large, if the move be prosecuted wholeheartedly. May every individual in every congregation in Nashville that worships God "as it is written" be at his post at every service in that which should be the greatest meeting in the history of the cause of primitive Christianity in the past hundred years. I believe such a meeting will bring many souls to Christ, cement the congregations closer together, foster the spirit of coöperation, and glorify our Father who is in heaven.

Humbly, lovingly, and hopefully yours,

T. Q. MARTIN.

Both the Interest and List Grow.

The list clerk is kept busy recording new names and renewals to the Gospel Advocate. More preachers are working to secure Matthew Henry's Commentary, and we are mailing out many sample copies to workers. Our "Field Editor," E. C. Love, is doing a great work and is mailing to us a large list of subscribers from almost every church he visits. The churches he visits will do well to have him preach to them. He is a preacher of ability and loves the truth. His sermons will do good. We bespeak for him a cordial reception by all the churches. All in all, the work never looked more encouraging. The receipts for the Gospel Advocate are showing an increase each month over the corresponding month of the preceding year.

Many of our readers are sending us new subscribers to the paper because they believe it is a good work to circulate it. The Lord will reward them for their work. It is a good work to coöperate with others in teaching sinners the way of salvation. The Gospel Advocate has been instrumental in leading many to Christ.

It is thought best to withdraw the gift offer. So don't overlook the fact that the offer to give away two hundred dollars in cash gifts is discontinued. It appears that most of our readers prefer not to charge anything for the time spent in securing subscribers. This is commendable. There are others who devote more time to the work who elect to work for the Matthew Henry Commentary or the Fountain Pen. In order to meet the demands of all our friends, we now make the following offers:

1. For twenty-five new yearly subscribers to the Gospel Advocate, accompanied by $2 each, we will give a complete set of Matthew Henry's Commentary, composed of six volumes, handsomely and substantially bound. This is a new and large-type edition.

2. For two new yearly subscribers, accompanied by $4, we will give a first-class, self-filling Fountain Pen; or for $2 sent with one new yearly subscriber we will give the pen. This is a guaranteed pen, and is much better than is usually used as a premium pen.

3. Four four new yearly subscribers, accompanied by $8, we will give a copy of "The Gospel Plan of Salvation," by Dr. T. W. Brents. This book has had a large sale and is one of the ablest and best books published.

4. For two new yearly subscribers, accompanied by $4, we will give a copy of "The Teacher's Testament with Notes," and also with an Introduction to each book by a ripe scholar. Many of our readers have received this Testament and are delighted with it. Any one or all of these offers are liable to be withdrawn soon. All who act promptly will be able to receive whatever premium in the above list is preferred.

We are now at work selling stock for the Gospel Advocate Company. While all the stock is not sold, yet the charter will probably be issued in a very short time. It is not my purpose to cease to work for the paper so long as I can be of real service to it, but my age and health both warn me that a younger man should be trained for the active management. So soon as some one is ready to manage the new company efficiently, I shall be glad to dispose of all my stock and write for the paper as thought best by the directors. I would be glad to hear at an early date from any conservative, loyal brother who will take stock in the company. The stock is being sold at one hundred dollars per share. You will be responsible only for the amount of your stock. Write me for prospectus and fuller particulars.

The Hardeman-Pullias Meeting.

BY JAMES A. ALLEN.

For many years it has been an earnest desire of the many thousands of disciples of Christ in Nashville and vicinity to see a preacher appear in some central auditorium before the general public and preach the primitive gospel of Christ as it was preached by the apostles and inspired men in those days when "the disciples were called Christians first in Antioch." Each of the many congregations in Nashville and the surrounding districts, who have no creed but the Bible and who preach and practice the identical things that were preached and practiced by the church of Christ in New Testament times, annually conducts a great protracted meeting with splendid gospel preaching for the benefit of their particular locality. And now the leading members of many of these congregations feel that the time has come to hold a great protracted meeting at the Ryman Auditorium for the benefit of the whole city.

Realizing that for such an undertaking all of the disciples must heartily coöperate together, and yet recognizing that the Scriptures require each congregation to maintain its own independence, messengers of these congregations have assembled from time to time to plan for the meeting.

As already known to readers of the Gospel Advocate, Brother N. B. Hardeman, of Henderson, Tenn., has been secured to do the preaching, and Brother C. M. Pullias, who is not only one of our very best preachers, but who is equally talented as a song leader, has been secured to conduct the song services. The Lord willing, therefore, what indications would seem to point to as certainly the largest, if not the greatest, meeting in which the gospel is preached as inspired men preached it, and in which Christians sing as the early Christians sung, will begin at the Ryman Auditorium, Nashville, Tenn., Tuesday night, March 28, and continue twenty days.

Not a single collection will be taken from the public during the entire meeting. The expenses of the meeting will be borne out of funds contributed by the disciples in their own congregations "upon the first day of the week."

It is the desire of many to have the sermons of Brother Hardeman reported by a competent stenographer and published in book form. Arrangements have been made for the McQuiddy Printing Company to bring out the book.

Headquarters for the various lines of work in connection with the meeting have been opened at Room No. 234, Maxwell House, Nashville, Tenn. All inquiries and communications should be addressed to Hardeman-Pullias Headquarters at this address. Brother Paul W. Miller is in charge of advertising the meeting.

"Do all things without murmurings and questionings." Many children will obey their parents and yet murmur and complain. They start to obey with a complaint and end with a growl. Such obedience is not much appreciated by the faithful parent. God demands that we obey him without complaint. "God loveth a cheerful giver." This is as true when we give time as it is when we give money. Brother, don't complain and grumble over your work as a Christian. Don't question what God has commanded, but do it without questioning.

HARDEMAN'S TABERNACLE SERMONS

Beginning March 28, 1922, the churches of Christ in Nashville will engage in a meeting to be held in the Tabernacle of this city, the preaching to be done by N. B. Hardeman and the song service to be led by C. M. Pullias, of Murfreesboro, Tennessee. The meeting will continue for twenty days. The sermons will be printed and bound in a book of 320 pages. Hardeman's ability as a gospel preacher is a sufficient guarantee as to the character of the sermons. The book will appear about May 1, 1922. The price of the book is $1.50 a copy. You should send in your order at once, so the brethren will know how many to print. Mail your order to-day, so as to be sure to get a copy.

Another View.

BY W. H. CARTER.

I have just read, under the head of "Miscellany," in the Gospel Advocate of January 13, 1921, what an unknown preacher says on the question of the churches doing more work, and of "indifferent churches," of preachers who "have to give six days to secular work and then on Sunday preach for some church that is able to support for full time," and of the importance of keeping the preachers busy, etc. Now, I am not writing to criticize or call in question what he says, but to express my own thoughts. This question has been under consideration for a long time, and few, it seems to me, have been digging after the real cause. One disposition in most of us is to place the blame on the other fellow. We preachers have been too much disposed to lay all the fault on the churches. I do not believe the churches are free from fault, but I have an idea that we are more to be blamed. We have followed the denominations in preaching for churches on Sunday and doing nothing through the week, and expect the churches to give us enough to support us during the six days of idleness. I am not sure but that it is right for us to have to engage in secular work for a support. If Paul gave God's law, it is, "that if any would not work, neither should he eat." (2 Thess. 3: 10.) It is the laborer that "is worthy of his hire" (Luke 10: 7), is worthy of his reward (1 Tim. 5: 18). In the country, the farmer only expects to pay a laborer for the days, or the time, he works. He does not feel himself under obligation to pay a man enough for one day's work to support him in idleness the other six days of the week, and many have the same idea about a preacher. I do not contend that the churches are altogether right, but I do believe that the preachers are mostly responsible for present conditions.

When I look back over more than forty years' experience, I find that when I did real evangelistic work, was engaged in preaching all the time, I was well supported; but when I preached only on Lord's days, my support was not so good. I made no public complaint. Now I have concluded that I got all I was worth, if not more. Let us begin the reformation at home, among ourselves, by setting the example of constant work before the churches, and many of them will fall in line. I cannot condemn the churches for not supporting preachers who are idling away six-sevenths of their time. If a preacher is not going to preach through the week, then he should not set the example of idleness and complain of nonsupport, but have some honest and useful employment. We need to crawl out and get to work.

Good Time for Reading.

Winter weather, especially in the country, affords an excellent opportunity for reading. What an admirable thing it would be if the father or mother should provide books suitable for the various members of the family and encourage the reading of them! If new books cannot be secured, no doubt there are books on the shelves that have been there so long that they are considered old and out of date. But it is also probable that they are good books that have not been read by some members of the family and have been read so long ago by others that they have been forgotten. They should have the dust brushed off and be read again. Neighbors can often accommodate one another by exchanging books that they have. In this way a book may be read many times. It will be a great help and a safeguard to children if parents will first read books intended for them, to see if they are of a kind that will not prove injurious. By such reading the long winter days and evenings will pass pleasantly and profitably.—Selected.

BY S. H. HALL.

The fourth song drill preparatory to the Hardeman-Pullias revival, due to begin at the Ryman Auditorium on March 28, convened in the Russell Street house of worship last night (February 7) and was a glorious success. Brother Pullias was at his best; and at the close of the service one soul confessed his faith in Christ and is to be baptized to-night. E. W. Smith favored the meeting with a brief and stirring address.

Orders were taken for one hundred and eighty-two copies of the book that is to contain Brother Hardeman's sermons in permanent form. Let each reader give this thought, and remember that though you—many of you—are too far away to hear the sermons as delivered from the rostrum, you may read them by ordering now a copy of this book. Read the advertisement in this paper and order accordingly.

A CALL TO THE THOUGHTFUL AND UNPREJUDICED.

In last week's issue of the Gospel Advocate you were asked the following question: Show me how a Christian who has chosen teaching as his calling in life can establish a school or college over which he has absolute control and leave the Bible out. Some are opposed to those schools among us known as "Bible colleges." About this opposition I am but little concerned just now. If I were making this line of work my calling in life and should establish a school of my own, the Bible would have to go in if I were to have a good conscience before God. I cannot see my way to leave it out. Kindly show me how to leave it out.

I know the argument is made that it is the work of the church to teach the Bible; and for this very reason the Bible would have to go in. I know well the statement: "Unto him be the glory in the church and in Christ Jesus." (Eph. 3: 21.) But for this very reason the Bible would have to go in with me, unless some one has brains and scripture-sufficient to show me that I am "in the church" and "in Christ Jesus" only on Sunday when the church assembles in one place, and the rest of the time I am "out of the church" and "out of Christ Jesus." But who would dare this undertaking? Undoubtedly, much that is said by some about all things having to be done in the church is not understood by the parties who say it.

God's law to the church has the congregational application, and it also has the individual application. That is, congregations, as such, are given certain rules by which to work and worship, and the individual disciple, because of his relation to the church, is given the rule of life. The individual disciple must take this rule in the consciousness that he is a member of the family of God and that he must "adorn the doctrine" of our Lord at all times, and that if his "eye be single" his "whole body shall be full of light;" that he must ever serve God, not mammon, and that the very moment he begins to serve mammon his service to God ceases. (Matt. 6: 21-24.) If some one will show me how I can enter the school work as a Christian and not make the controlling motive in that work to glorify God, then you can change my conscience on this subject. And the one reason for my making the controlling motive of my school work to glorify God would be my relationship to the church and my Lord and Savior—viz., I am in Christ and in the church, hence must be governed by the rule the Head of the church has given the members to live by. I could never let making money be the leading motive. If so, I would be serving mammon. If not, why not? And when serving mammon I am not serving Christ. Some one tell me some reason for my leaving the Bible out. Please tell me why I should not have the teaching of the Bible in mind when I establish it. Tell me why the teaching of the Bible has to be an afterthought. Tell me why I can purpose to teach other things in this school, but cannot purpose to teach the Bible. Tell me why I can tell people I will teach the branches taught in other schools, but must not tell them I will also teach the Bible. What is there about God's law to me as an individual Christian and about his blessed Book that compels me to make the teaching of this good Book a secondary matter in that school? No, the devil has terribly deceived me on some points in the past, but I am determined that he will never blind my eyes again and lead me to put obstructions in the way of God's own "going everywhere preaching the word." Those who in Acts 8: 4 went about preaching the word were people who labored with their hands for a living. Why does our Lord fail to tell us their trade? Instead thereof, he says: "They went about preaching the word." Is it not because "the preaching of the word" must be the first thought in the Christian's life, and food for our bodies matters of secondary importance? If not so, what does Christ mean when he says: "But seek ye first his kingdom, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you?" (Matt. 6: 33.)

"Glorify Christ in the church?" Exactly so. But do we not so glorify him in our individual conduct as well as in the local church assembled? What does Paul mean when he says: "Whether therefore ye eat, or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God?" (1 Cor. 10: 31.) Let the glory of God be ever before you. Let this be your controlling motive in all you do. Even the manual labor servants do for their masters must be work done "heartily, as unto the Lord, and not unto men; knowing that from the Lord ye shall receive the recompense of the inheritance: ye serve the Lord Christ." (Col. 3: 22-24.) As stated last week, we are not our own; we belong to Christ, and must keep this thought ever with us.

Yes, teach or preach the word, in season, out of season. This is what the Book says we must do with it. If you say in the schoolroom is in season, then I must teach it. If you say in the schoolroom is out of season, then I must still teach it. This is one duty that is boundless as to season. Show me how to establish a school and leave it out. Somebody has made a season God has not made.

Faith in the Word.

BY H. C. FLEMING.

"When the Son of man cometh, shall he find faith on the earth?" (Luke 18: 8.)

"Let not your heart be troubled: ye believe in God, believe also in me. In my Father's house are many mansions: if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also." (John 14: 1-3.)

My heart is often sad at the lack of faith in the word by many of our time. But God has said his word shall not return unto him void, but shall accomplish that which he pleases. (See Isa. 55: 11.)

Do we believe these statements? If not, our unbelief cannot effect his purposes; for he will not lie, nor, like some men, make statements that he does not intend to fulfill.

"For it is written, As I live, saith the Lord, every knee shall bow to me, and every tongue shall confess to God. So then every one of us shall give account of himself to God." (Rom. 14: 11, 12.)

There will be a vast difference between bowing and confessing to God in the day of judgment and in doing the same thing in this life. Doing it now will lead to eternal life; if delayed till then, it will avail nothing.

Dear friends, take warning. Look how faithful God was to every promise he made to the Israelites, and how every punishment was inflicted upon them for disobedience. We have no way of knowing what God will do, only by what he has done and what he says he will do. "The word of God is sharper than any two-edged sword."

There is nothing that has so much to do with us in this life as our habits and surrounding influences. When men gather together in little groups about any center, what is their conversation? "Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh." They speak of the neighborhood gossip, prospects for business, the coming elections, the world war, etc. But if some one speaks of God and his power, there is an uprising of almost indignation against the things spoken of in the Bible. Such influences affect the young, also some of the old, and sometimes even professed Christians, turning them away from the living words of the living God. Why do men thus act? Because they know the word condemns them, and they wish to persuade themselves that it is not true. Such should understand that truth is truth and facts are facts, no matter who does not believe them.

"And for this cause God shall send them strong delusion, that they should believe a lie: that they all might be damned who believed not the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness." (2 Thess. 2: 11, 12.)

The sinful pleasures of this life have a tendency to make men want to reject the restraints the word places upon them. If such would call to mind the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah, the old cities of Babylon, and Jerusalem, and many nations of people, for their wickedness and sinful pleasures, it would have a tendency to check their unbelief. But—alas!—when men become very corrupt, nothing but a visible demonstration of the power of God will turn them from evil ways. But when that time comes, it will be too late to turn.

Field Notes.

BY EARNEST C. LOVE.

On January 30, I started for Centerville, county seat of Hickman County, to begin putting the Gospel Advocate into more homes. I found many friends at Centerville, who helped me much. Brother Charles Tidwell, a good preacher and a good man, lives there. He spent much time in showing me around. Others helped also. I preached at night.

My next step was at Etna. This place is financially depressed, as the iron mines, upon which the people depend, have been shut down for several months. But this depression does not check their enthusiasm for spiritual things. I said it before and will say it again, they have as fine a bunch of young Christian boys and girls as I ever saw.

From Etna I went to Hohenwald and preached at night, and partially canvassed the town with the help of Brother A. H. Daniels. While there I was called on to conduct a funeral service over Brother John Marsh's aunt, who had come over from England. Also I had the pleasure of visiting Brother S. Houston Proffitt, who is not only a good preacher, but a very efficient high-school teacher. He is principal of the high school there, and he has a fine school. I gave a lecture at their chapel service, and a finer bunch of pupils one seldom sees.

At Riverside I was met by Brother Horace N. Mann and entertained in his home. He also assisted me in getting subscribers. I preached at night to a very attentive audience of good brethren, and left at 3 A.M. for Centerville to finish my work there. Brother Mann is a sure-enough "man," and one of God's noblemen. His influence is felt far and wide. He preaches every Sunday in some of the schoolhouses in Lewis and Wayne counties. He does not have many baptisms, but "preachers" that follow him have good results. We have four preachers at Hohenwald—L. W. Hinson, J. B. Campbell, C. A. Lancaster, and S. H. Proffitt. The first three are farmer or carpenter preachers, and the last a teacher preacher. The three first named were also well spoken of by the brethren, and should be encouraged in their good work of carrying the gospel to those out-of-way places. The work that they do would go undone if they did not do it. Evidently some souls would be lost were it not for their labors. May God bless them and their families.

At Dickson I was met by Brother E. P. Watson, the regular preacher there. I preached three times, as I had to spend over two days canvassing the town. Brother Watson showed me every kindness and assisted me in every way possible. He has a definite knowledge of the town, and the names and addresses of every one I cared to visit. Besides this, he dropped everything and went right with me till my work was done. Brother Watson is a careful and thorough worker, and is increasing the attendance and efficiency of the church, and seems to be much loved by all the brethren I met. Several I found promised to take the Advocate a little later, and I think perhaps Brother Watson will make an effort to get the twenty-five new names and get the Matthew Henry Commentary. If he does, I sincerely hope his brethren will help him get it.

Here I met Brother and Sister R. H. Benedict, formerly of Oakland, Cal. Brother Benedict is now a chiropractor, and seems to be doing good work in Dickson.

There can be no doubt that the Gospel Advocate is a great paper. I have found only three or four who had any serious criticism to make of it, although I found many who had been taking it for from twenty to forty years. I heard several say they thought it was better now than ever before.

Address: 317-319 Fifth Avenue, North, Nashville, Tenn.

* It is at the point of human despair that one is nearest to victory, even as the apostle Paul, as he exclaims: "O wretched man that I am; who shall deliver me?" receives the immediate response of faith: "I thank God through Jesus Christ."

MATTHEW HENRY'S COMMENTARY FOR OUR READERS

The greatest preachers of the past two centuries attribute much of their inspiration and usefulness to Matthew Henry's Commentary on the whole Bible. Born in the seventeenth century, his name and his work still live and are household words. Thousands of homes treasure this commentary second only to the Bible, and many a man traces his right start to the loving advice of Matthew Henry.

Charles H. Spurgeon said: "Every minister ought to read Matthew Henry entirely and carefully through once at least. He will acquire a vast store of sermons; and as for thoughts, they will swarm around him like twittering sparrows around an old gable toward the close of autumn." Dr. Philip Schaff, compiler of Schaff's Bible Dictionary, pronounces it "the best practical and devotional commentary for English readers."

The management of the Gospel Advocate is fortunate in securing twenty-five sets of this unrivaled commentary, which will be sent as a premium to every reader who will send twenty-five new subscribers at the regular subscription price of $2 per year. This is undoubtedly the most attractive commentary offer ever made. You will receive six portable volumes of twelve hundred pages each, large, clear, unbroken type, with substantial Roxborough binding. If you wish to pay cash, the price for the six volumes is $17.50, not prepaid. When sent as a premium, we pay all charges.

At Home and Abroad

A. J. Bachman will begin a meeting at Hundred, W. Va., on February 21.

C. E. Holt began a meeting last Sunday at Waterloo, Ala. He compliments the Gospel Advocate, and is very much pleased with G. C. Brewer's work on the paper.

Information Wanted.—Can any one tell me of members of the church of Christ in or near Omaha, Neb.? Please write me at once. Address W. S. Long, 1319 Harvard Street, N. W., Washington, D. C.

Harvey Scott writes from Floresville, Texas: "The church here is growing in grace and in the knowledge of the truth. We are planning to do more this year than we have done in any three years previous."

Two good services at Russell Street Church, this city, last Sunday. Six were added to the congregation by statement. S. H. Hall will preach next Sunday night on "Why We Do Not Use Instrumental Music in the Worship."

J. V. A. Traylor writes: "I preached to a very attentive audience last Sunday (February 5) at Shelbyville, Ky. The few members there are working hard to build a meeting-house. They already have the lot on which to build, but they need help. R. A. Craig is laboring with them. Send them a contribution."

S. M. Spears preached to large audiences at Twelfth Avenue, North, this city, last Sunday, morning and night. One restoration at the morning service. There were three additions the Sunday before. This congregation will build an addition to their house of worship soon. H. Leo Boles will preach there next Sunday.

F. B. Strygley preached at both services at Lawrence Avenue, in Waverly Place, last Sunday. He had a good audience, as usual, at the morning service, but better at night than common. Brethren and sisters go to meeting Sunday morning because they believe they have to, and they stay at home Sunday night because they know they want to.

Beginning in an early issue, there will appear in the Gospel Advocate a discussion between H. W. Jones, disciple, and a Mr. Marrs, Adventist. The proposition for discussion is: "Has the kingdom of God been established on earth by Jesus Christ, or will it be in the future?" This discussion is to appear also in the Bible Advocate, a weekly Adventist paper.

From O. M. Reynolds, Plainview, Texas: "I rejoice in the great good the plain, strong, wholesome articles in the 'old reliable' Gospel Advocate have done, also the good material used in publishing God's truth, and the high plane upon which it is being conducted. I am for the Advocate because it is for the 'old paths.' May the Lord lead you on to even greater victories for the cause of the truth."

M. G. Curtis, Brinkman, Okla., Route 1, in renewing his subscription to the Gospel Advocate, says: "I think the Gospel Advocate the best paper I have ever read. I read it from the first to the last page. I like Brother McQuiddy's articles on 'Handling Aright the Word of Truth.' They are edifying and instructive. I also like the articles by Brethren Smith and Lipscomb. Don't let me miss a copy of the paper."

C. H. Smithson writes: "Since last report I have been to Stephens, Ark., where we had two fine services. The church gave me a warm welcome, and I feel sure that it will do a good work this year. I am to begin a meeting at Bloomburg, Texas, on February 4, and hope to do much good while there. I am also looking meetings for the year, and can answer calls anywhere. I will spend part of my time in Tennessee, and can take care of some more work. If interested, write me at once."

From C. C. Nelson, Clemmons, N. C., February 3: "In the Gospel Advocate of December 15 and December 22 there were some appeals made for the Nelson Preparatory Industrial and Orphan School, at Clemmons, N. C., by Miss Clara Warner and W. L. Reeves. I shall now make a report of what has been contributed as a result of these appeals. First of all, I want to say to those who have so generously contributed to our needs that I am unable to express the gratitude I feel for that which has been given. The building which was burned was not a fine or expensive one, yet it represented about all that I had been able to save since I have been in the school work and ministry. These donations, coming as they do in this time of need, cause me to take new courage, realizing that, after all, there are a host of interested friends who are willing to help. All the contributions amounted to two hundred and ten dollars and thirteen cents."

"For our citizenship is in heaven; whence also we wait for a Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ." "So then ye are no more strangers and sojourners, but ye are fellow citizens with the saints, and of the household of God." This is a great household or family, and every child of God should consider it an honor to be a member of such a family. Let us not bring reproach on the family name. But we are fellow citizens of a kingdom. Our King is in heaven, but his laws are here for our government. And let us remember that this is an unlimited monarchy. The law of the King is supreme. The apostles are his ambassadors, and their teaching as expressed in the New Testament is his law. We have God in Christ, Christ in the apostles, the apostles in the New Testament, and the New Testament in the world. This is the only law the King has, and every subject of this heavenly kingdom should strive with all his might to be faithful to this King.

J. W. Grant reports the work as progressing nicely at Lakeland, Fla. At the end of six weeks of his work in that little city the enrollment, including tourists, winter visitors, and delinquents, is about eighty-five. About sixty members is the average number to meet each Lord's day. The attendance at the night services is not so many. The program, beginning the first Lord's day in February, is: Bible study, preaching, and communion every Lord's-day morning, and preaching at night; prayer meeting on Wednesday night—all at the rented hall (Woman's Club and Library, 210 South Massachusetts Avenue); and cottage meeting, with preaching, every Friday night at the home of some member. The interest is evidently growing slowly, but steadily. He has hope of good success in firmly establishing the church in Lakeland and securing a good and commodious house of worship. Brethren and sisters coming to Florida are urged to come and worship with the Lakeland congregation. It is suggested that Lakeland is a fine place to live and to make a home.

From John T. Smithson, 2060 Preston Street, Louisville, Ky., February 7: "I have just received a letter from H. Leo Boles, written from Meaford, Ontario, Canada, in which he gives the following bit of news: 'I learn that Jorgenson is to come to Toronto to work with the Bathurst Street congregation when Brother Harding leaves, which is the last of March.' Now you have it. The congregation for which Jorgenson is going to work should be notified about him. That congregation, as well as all others elsewhere, should know that he not only is completely lined up with R. H. Boll in his speculative teaching, which has done so much harm to the congregations where it has gone, but that he is one of the ringleaders in dividing the church here in the Highlands. It should come out in the Gospel Advocate strong and clear that Jorgenson is marked and turned away from by all true and faithful brethren in obedience to Rom. 16: 17. This is a matter which all churches should know." The Gospel Advocate very cheerfully gives space to Brother Smithson and commends his effort to warn the churches against those who are causing division.

From Will J. Cullum, Rockwood, Tenn., February 11: "The month of January was mixed with joys and sorrows for the church at Rockwood. We had three additions to the church and one death, this being the first death since the church was set in order last October. This congregation now numbers ninety-three and is not yet four months old. Congratulations to the Bible class at Rome, Ga.; they are doing fine. We would be glad to have them visit Rockwood and see our class of two months, which now numbers seventy-nine. Our Sunday school attendance is one hundred and twenty-five and our Sunday-night attendance not less than two hundred. This week we had the pleasure of the presence of George W. Farmer, who preached two most excellent sermons to a full house. We were delighted to have him with us, knowing that it was through his efforts that the congregation, with a splendid new house of worship, is now at Rockwood. I trust that the churches who have in the past been contributing to the East Tennessee work will do all they can to interest others in having fellowship in this needy field. I am sure that every dollar sent to Brother Farmer will be used in the way that will accomplish the greatest amount of good according to his judgment. We hope to have him with us in the near future for a meeting."

Looking Toward Better Things.

BY J. E. WAINWRIGHT.

The "get-together" meeting held in Sinton, Texas, is now history. "Overcome evil with good" was the slogan throughout, and the united efforts of those present were crowned with success. The cause in South Texas has been greatly abused in times past, and feelings existed among the brethren that were deplorable. The motive of this meeting was to wipe out this condition with a better understanding, and now we wish our brethren to hear and rejoice with us.

D. F. Draper, of Fort Worth, acted as moderator. Dave can't be beat.

F. G. Speck, of Abilene, after hearing our able young men through the day, would be at his best for evening work.

D. C. Williams, of Mission, our "bachelor boy," was right on the job with splendid thoughts concerning the "Home."

J. W. Hedge, of Bishop, assisted by his efficient new helpmeet, proved the importance of Christian homes.

Arthur Slater, of Corpus Christi, who has been preaching only nine months, proved to be one of our most profound young thinkers.

Harvey Scott, of Floresville, directed our excellent quartet, a strong argument to sing and not play.

H. B. Gist, of Argenta, made use of every opportunity at the "question box." He is anxious to do things right.

W. R. Swinney, of Oklahoma, is trying to locate in the valley. He is a singer, a preacher, and a Christian gentleman.

J. N. Cowan, of Corpus Christ, experienced in polemics, enabled the young preachers to use Bible and logic.

The great work down here is just blooming. It could not be in the hands of purer, nobler, or abler young men. Their zeal and devotion will attract the attention of all honest people, and their efforts will certainly be productive in the cause of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Proselytes.

BY C. R. N.

Possibly there has never been a time when a more tranquil feeling existed among the churches—all denominations—than at this very present. It is a boast of most preachers and other church members that they do not believe in proselyting. The idea prevails pretty generally that if one is satisfied with his church affiliation he should not be disturbed.

The hackneyed expression, "One church is as good as another," has been so oft repeated that it has come to be accepted by many folks. If by this expression reference is made to the churches founded by mere men, I would not feel sufficiently interested to even register a protest; but when the church of Christ, the bride of Christ, is put on a level with the man-made, human organizations, I make no effort to suppress my protest; rather, I seek an opportunity to teach the party better.

If I thought membership in the church of Christ—being a member of God's family, one of the number which constitutes the body of Christ (Acts 20: 28; 1 Tim. 3: 15; Eph. 1: 18-22)—was not necessary for the lost to be saved, I would give myself no concern about any of the churches.

Brother, if the church of which you are a member is only one of the many human organizations, being on a par with the others in origin and organization, with no necessary blessing for humanity, it should cease to exist. If the message that the church of which you are a member brings the people and accepting that message brings no greater blessing than the message of the other churches brings, the church of which you are a member fills no necessary place in the world.

When but a child I heard the lamented J. M. Kidwill preach a sermon in which he appealed to men to be Christians only—to cease to be votaries of human creeds and man-made churches with their unscriptural doctrine and unauthorized practices.

If one must be a member of the family of God, which is the church of God (1 Tim. 3: 15)—and he must, to be saved from sin—you should use your best endeavors to induce men to cease to be members of man-made churches.

When Jesus called his disciples, they were members of the old Jewish Church, and had been from their birth. Nicodemus was a teacher in the Jewish Church, and Jesus taught him that he would have to be born again to be saved—to enter the kingdom of God. (John 3: 1-5.) Paul was a very zealous member of the old Jewish Church. The scribes and Pharisees, priests and elders, were members of the old Jewish Church, but think of the great number of them who were proselyted to the Christian religion. (Acts 6: 7.) They were proselyted from the Jewish Church. Had it not been for proselyting, Jesus would never have had a disciple, the church he builded could not have existed.

In every meeting I hold, in every sermon I preach, I strive to get the people to be Christians only—I try to proselyte people from all errors they hold.

Are we thoroughly indoctrinating the members of the church of Christ with the very fundamentals of the gospel? Is there not a tendency toward courting favor with the sects at the sacrifice of the truth—that is, are we suppressing some truth for fear we will offend some sectarian friend or become unpopular with the sects?

It will be a sad day for the church of Christ, should that day ever come, when the members entertain the view that it makes no difference to what church one belongs.

Jesus and the apostles were proselyters.

Personal Notes.

C. R. Nichol will begin a meeting with the church in Gorman, Texas, on February 26.

Coleman D. Nichols reports the work in Rising Star and Gorman, Texas, in a splendid condition, with the outlook bright.

M. C. Cuthbertson reports three hundred and thirty-five in the Bible classes on January 22. The congregation is enlarging their space in the substory by the addition of some more classrooms, which, when completed, will give them fifteen classrooms.

C. A. Gardner, superintendent of the public schools in Ferris, Texas, writes: "The Lord's work at Ferris is gradually improving. Recently the congregation seems to have taken on new life. Dr. E. V. Wood, of Dallas, spoke three times here the fourth Lord's day. He brought some good messages. O. E. Phillips delivered an interesting discourse on the third Sunday. G. A. Klingman is to preach for the congregation on the second Lord's day in February. One of the best educational movements we have helped to put over is now in full swing in Ferris. Each Friday morning the school children are dismissed for a period to attend Bible classes conducted at all the churches. The public school will give full credit for this work. A. O. Colley, of Dallas, is teaching the senior class for our brethren, and the outlook is very encouraging. The young people seem anxious for a knowledge of the word of God. Never before was there such a pressing need as instructing the young in the wisdom of Jehovah. The writer spends some Sundays with brethren at near-by points, who appreciate the assistance given. One of the crying needs is strong and earnest teachers and ministers who are thorough students of the Book, keeping in the lead the constructive and practical needs of the church."

Mission Work—The Order of Going.

BY J. C. M'Q.

After Christ had commanded his apostles to make disciples of all the nations, he instructed them: "But tarry ye in the city, until ye be clothed with power from on high." Just before his ascension, and the last words spoken by him on the earth, he said unto them: "But ye shall receive power, when the Holy Spirit is come upon you; and ye shall be my witnesses both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea and Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth." (Acts 1: 8.) He had given them the promise to be with them always, even unto the end of the world (Matt. 28: 20); and, best of all, he tells them to witness for him in Jerusalem, all Judea and Samaria and the uttermost part of the earth. He first commands them to go, and next he instructs them as to the order of going. The implicit obedience of the apostles is encouraging. They wait in Jerusalem for the baptism of the Holy Spirit. Having received the baptism of the Spirit, they begin their witnessing for Christ in Jerusalem. The first seven chapters of Acts of Apostles are devoted to the work and preaching of some of the apostles in Jerusalem. At this time Peter was the principal speaker. He was the center of action. As the work of the apostles began in Jerusalem, even so the work of Christians to-day should begin at home. Father and mother should teach the story of the cross to their children. They should "nurture them in the chastening and admonition of the Lord." Their first duty is at home. With more Christian training in the home, we would have fewer jails and penitentiaries. If all mothers would obey Christ, by bearing witness for him first in their homes, there would be fewer vicious boys and girls. The apostles did not begin in the uttermost part of the earth, but they began in Jerusalem. Our first duty is to let our light shine at home and not in China. If our light is bright enough at home, it may eventually reach to China. The brightest light at home shines the farthest away. If our work is well done at home, it will not stop there.

Beginning with the eighth chapter of Acts, we learn that there arose "a great persecution against the church which was in Jerusalem; and they were all scattered abroad throughout the regions of Judea and Samaria, except the apostles. . . . They therefore that were scattered abroad went about preaching the word." Being scattered throughout the regions of Judea, they preached the gospel in that region. Christ's command was their authority, and persecution was the stimulant that led them to evangelize all Judea. Some persecution and not all fair sailing would be helpful in preaching the gospel to-day. The disciples having preached the gospel throughout the regions of Judea, we are informed: "And Philip went down to the city of Samaria, and proclaimed unto them the Christ." (Acts 8: 5.) The order prescribed by the Christ was: Jerusalem, all Judea and Samaria, and the uttermost part of the earth. Next we find Philip going to Gaza, or the regions beyond. Soon we find Paul going to the uttermost part of the earth. Start with him in the thirteenth chapter of Acts and go with him on his three missionary journeys and note the churches he established. There is the church at Corinth, Ephesus, Galatia, Thessalonica, Philippi, Colosse, and others. Paul's career ended in Rome. Matchlessly did he and other disciples obey Christ. Not only did they make disciples of the nations, but in their going they followed strictly the order prescribed by Christ.

No one can read Acts of Apostles, no one can go with Paul on his three missionary journeys, and conclude that a missionary society was sending and supporting Paul on these journeys. Without any missionary society the apostles preached "In all creation under heaven" (Col. 1: 23), and "their sound went out into all the earth, and their words unto the ends of the world" (Rom. 10: 18). They fulfilled the words of the psalmist David: "Their line is gone out through all the earth, and their words to the end of the world." (Ps. 19: 4.) If the apostles, without any human machinery or missionary societies, preached the gospel to the inhabited earth, Christians should be able to do the same thing now. Christians with the same zeal and love that animated the apostle Paul would do wonderful things for Christ. Some Christians are depending more on organization than they are on the word of God. God was not in the strong wind, the earthquake, nor the fire, but in the still small voice. With a consuming zeal for the salvation of souls and an abiding love for the truth, Christians will extend the kingdom of God with an astonishing rapidity. It must be done by adopting the wisdom of God and not the wisdom of man. "For seeing that in the wisdom of God the world through its wisdom knew not God, it was God's good pleasure through the foolishness of the preaching to save them that believe." (1 Cor. 1: 21.)

The Lord called Barnabas and Saul to a certain work. The Holy Spirit separated them for the work whereunto the Lord had called them. The church at Antioch sent them away, as did also the Holy Spirit. It would be interesting to follow them on their journeys, but space forbids. Suffice it to say that after enduring many trials, being sorely persecuted, and making many disciples, they returned "to Antioch, from whence they had been committed to the grace of God for the work which they had fulfilled. And when they were come, and had gathered the church together, they rehearsed all things that God had done with them, and that he had opened a door of faith unto the Gentiles. And they tarried no little time with the disciples." (Acts 14: 26-28.) If some missionary society had been sending and supporting them, they would have reported to it and not to the church at Antioch. They called together the church that had sent them forth and rehearsed to it all things that God had done with them, because they knew the Christians at Antioch were fellow laborers with them. They also understood that the church of the living God was the pillar and ground of the truth. It is also the light of the world. The church of God is complete and efficient and thoroughly equipped for the evangelization of the world.

After Paul had completed his second journey, he went down to Antioch and spent some time there. In the Epistles we learn how the apostle Paul was supported and by whom, especially on the second journey. In writing the Philippians, he says: "Howbeit ye did well that ye had fellowship with my affliction. And ye yourselves also know, ye Philippians, that in the beginning of the gospel, when I departed from Macedonia, no church had fellowship with me in the matter of giving and receiving but ye only; for even in Thessalonica ye sent once and again unto my need. Not that I seek for the gift; but I seek for the fruit that increaseth to your account." (Phil. 4: 14-17.) If a missionary society had been supporting him, he could not have seen the Philippian church through the general board. Those who are sent and supported by the missionary society do not know what churches are fellowshipping them in the work. But Paul knew the only church that had sent an offering to him in the beginning of the gospel. The Thessalonians also sowed the seed of the kingdom of God. He writes to them: "For from you hath sounded forth the word of the Lord, not only in Macedonia and Achaia, but in every place your faith to Godward is gone forth; so that we need not to speak anything." (1 Thess. 1: 8.) The Thessalonians, as well as the Philippians, supported the gospel just as every church should do now. But Paul was not so abundantly supported by the churches that he did not labor in order not to be a burden to others. "For ye remember, brethren, our labor and travail: working night and day, that we might not burden any of you, we preached unto you the gospel of God." (1 Thess. 2: 9.)

The only plan (if it be a plan) that I find revealed in the New Testament for doing mission work is this: Christ commands Christians to go and preach the gospel. It is the duty of the churches to support the missionaries in the field. A lack of faith in God and a failure to rely on his promises will lead to failure on the part of both the missionary and the church. More zeal and earnestness are needed in doing the work.

Brother Flavil Hall Insists on Further Explaining His Ugly Charge.

BY M. O. K.

In our issue of January 12, 1922, Brother Flavil Hall was cheerfully allowed, as we felt was due him, to make his own statement in his own way in explanation of the charge he had made in "The Christian Leader." When it appeared in print, he was not satisfied, and on January 14, 1922, he wrote asking permission to be heard again. In reply, the management wrote him:

"As suggested in the comments on your former article, we do not see our way to have any further discussion of the matter in the Advocate. No injustice has been done you in its columns and nothing more in them is called for on that score."

But this did not satisfy him, and on January 20, 1922, he wrote another urgent letter insisting on being heard further, to which the management again replied:

"You were allowed to state and explain your case fully before our readers, and if you do not agree with our judgment of and comments on the matter, that of course is your privilege, and we will not entertain the slightest unkind feelings toward you as a result of it, but we also have our judgment of the matter and trust you will also be generous enough to grant us the same privilege with the same result. . . . Neither Brother Kurfees nor I nor any one else connected with the Advocate entertains the slightest unkind feelings toward you over the matter, and since it has come to be a mere difference of judgment as to what was and what was not proper, surely we can all afford to drop the matter."

But even this did not satisfy him, and on January 28, 1922, with the same persistence, he wrote five pages more, still insisting that he be heard in another statement, and the management this time turned it over to me for decision. It is due our readers to have these facts as our apology or explanation to them for permitting anything further in our columns on the subject. While I do not think that the publication of such a statement as he has seen fit to prepare, a statement so radically different from the charge he made in the Leader, will help Brother Hall's cause, but will likely have an effect quite to the contrary, still, purely in deference to his persistent request repeatedly sent to our office, we publish the statement, which is as follows:

NO REFLECTION UPON BROTHER KURFEES.

BY FLAVIL HALL.

No matter how great and good a man an editor is, some of his individuality and ideas will be seen in whatever work he edits. Some things will be used and some things omitted according to his ideas of what is best for the public. I might seriously differ from him, but it could be no reflection upon his honor to say a certain subject should have been embodied that I thought was not embodied.

I told Brother Lipscomb that I should have been glad to have seen some things in Brother Shepherd's collation that were omitted. Yet I thought the latter had done a great work and did not think of reflecting upon his honor. And so I thought about a subject I thought was omitted from Brother Kurfees' collation.

I corrected my misstatement with gladness and with thorough clearness. I was sorry of the misstatement, and had I known that it required this to give satisfaction I would certainly have said it. But I thought this had to do with me and the Lord and that a correction of the mistake was what concerned Brother Kurfees. All that I have said additionally has been said kindly and was brought out by Brother Kurfees' strictures.

Now, beyond all question, that is a kind, brotherly, and perfectly respectful statement, to which, I gladly assure our brother, no one on the Gospel Advocate or anywhere else could properly have offered a word of objection; but that is not what he said in the Christian Leader. It is the width of the heavens from it. I am not in the habit of taking up a matter like this until I know the ground on which I stand and know what I am saying. He says: "It could be no reflection upon his honor to say a certain subject should have been embodied that I thought was not embodied." Of course not, and neither I nor any one else on the Advocate would have ever dreamed that such a statement was a "reflection" upon anybody's "honor," but again that is not what our brother said. "I told Brother David Lipscomb that I should have been glad to have seen some things in Brother Shepherd's collation that were omitted. Yet I thought the latter had done a great work and did not think of reflecting upon his honor." Exactly so, and neither "Brother Shepherd" nor "Brother Kurfees" nor anybody else could properly have said a word against such a statement, for it is perfectly respectful and has not the shadow of a "reflection" upon anybody's "honor," but that is not what Brother Hall said. Of course there could be nothing wrong in anybody's merely saying, as he puts it now, that certain things were "omitted" from my collation that ought to be "embodied." I myself may yet discover things that will lead me to think and say the same thing.

No, no, not one of the nice things he now says is the objectionable thing he said in the Leader; but here it is, exactly what he did say—namely, "It is strangely significant that" I had "suppressed" from my collation "David Lipscomb's invulnerable teaching" concerning "the Christian's relation to war and government." To "suppress" is "to conceal; prevent publication or revelation of; as, to suppress the truth." (See Webster.) Thus, he not only made the underhand insinuation that I do not want David Lipscomb's writings on this subject circulated, but directly and specifically made the ugly charge that I actually "suppressed" them! To say that doing such a thing is my "individuality and ideas" only makes the matter worse than ever. Were I guilty of the dishonorable thing, brethren everywhere ought to condemn me, and to claim, as in the heading of his statement, that such a charge is "no reflection upon Brother Kurfrees," is preposterous in the extreme. If I could not conscientiously collate David Lipscomb's writings in a way properly to represent them, it was my duty to decline to undertake the work when called to it; but to accept the position and then do as charged in the Leader would be unprincipled. I did not do the ugly thing charged, but, on the contrary, would be glad to see all of David Lipscomb's writings circulated around the globe.

Moreover, his attempt to cover it with euphemistic and smooth-sounding terms by merely calling it a "mistake" or "misstatement" does not in any wise change its character; and since it is his idea that being "sorry" for false and injurious charges against brethren is not a matter between them and him at all, but is exclusively between him "and the Lord," as he puts it, I am exceedingly glad to say and to publish it to the world that I do not agree with him. Furthermore, for some reason, according to his own admission in our issue of January 12, 1922, he strangely rushed before the public with the unbrotherly indictment when he had spent only a "little time" examining my book, and before he could possibly know whether his charge was true or not. I agree with him that it would be "strangely significant" for any Christian man to do such a dishonorable thing, and no man guilty of it would be fit to be entrusted with the collation of David Lipscomb's writings, or the writings of anybody else. And whether "it is strangely significant" or not, it is at least strange that Brother Hall attempts now to substitute an entirely proper statement for the one he made in the Leader.

Finally, since, instead of simply withdrawing the charge with proper apologies, our brother has seen fit in two efforts to try to defend his course, it would be improper to protract such a discussion, and our readers may understand that this ends the matter so far as any further discussion of it in the Gospel Advocate is concerned.

"A True Story."

BY F. W. SMITH.

Our readers will call to mind a request from Brother W. H. Book, of the Tabernacle Church, Columbus, Ind., for some publicity relative to what he termed "genuine New Testament mission work" in Africa. He failed to inclose the matter which he desired to be given the readers of this journal, but has sent the following note, accompanied by the leaflet:

Columbus, Ind., February 2, 1922.—My Dear Brother: Evidently I failed to inclose the tract in my letter with the church bulletin. When I asked that you give a little publicity, I meant it to be for the tract rather than the bulletin. I now inclose the tract. This is independent work, and it is proving a great success. I shall appreciate any assistance you may give in the way of publicity to the work that this man is doing in Africa.

Fraternally, W. H. Book.

This is the story in full:

A TRUE STORY.

A NATIVE HEATHEN AFRICAN FINDS THE LIGHT AND WALKS THEREIN.

A little more than twenty years ago three lads in Inham-bane, Africa, heard some travelers tell of the gold and diamond fields in South Africa. They were thrilled with the spirit of adventure and determined to visit them and make for themselves a fortune. They left their homes without the consent of their heathen parents. They had never heard of the living God. They worshiped gods made out of wood and stone. They did not know how to count and could not tell their ages. They walked across the continent. It was a long and tiresome journey. They went four days without water. At night they used flints and dried sticks to create fire to keep the wild beasts off of them. After months of travel they reached the long-desired spot. They could not speak a word of any of the dialects spoken by the people—everything was strange to them. The Boer War was in progress, and a decree had gone forth that all foreigners must be sent to their homes. Those in authority declared that these three lads were too young to be sent back to Inham-bane. One boy by the name of Thomas Bambesi Kalane was adopted by a Canadian. He was taken into his home and made to act as a nurse or errand boy. He was sent to school and soon learned to speak six dialects. He was six years in South Africa, and that long in the school. One day he picked up a newspaper in the Kaffir language, and his eyes fell upon a story telling of Booker T. Washington and his school. He had heard a street preacher tell of the true God. At first this new doctrine made little impression on him. He continued to go, and by and by was converted. When he saw the account of the school in America, he went to his boss and offered his resignation. His boss tried to persuade him not to go to America. He told him he could not speak the language of America. He said: "I couldn't speak language when I came here. God taught me to speak, and he will teach me to speak when I get to America. I go to America, and I resign." The Canadian gave him his money and a letter of introduction to one in New York.

One day the writer came home, and his wife said: "A negro was here to see you." I said: "He'll come back again if he wants to see me very badly." He came. He was to me a peculiar-looking chap. Black, straight as an arrow, keen black eye, and rather magnetie. I shall now tell you his story as he told it to me.

"I am a student in Wilberforce University in Ohio. I am learning to be a missionary to my people. I left them when a little boy and have not heard a word from them in sixteen years." He told me how he made his way to South Africa, his experience in the Canadian's home, how he learned of the true God, and of his trip across the ocean and what happened in New York. He said: "When I got to New York, I gave that letter to a man. He looked into a big book (directory) and then called for a man over the telephone. The man came. They talked. I could not understand what they said, but have learned that they decided it would not be best to send me to Booker Washington's school, but to Wilberforce. They put me on a train and I came to Wilberforce and have been there nine years. The first word in English I could speak was 'Wilberforce.' I have had two years in Greek, two years in Latin, four years in Hebrew, and four years in Theology. I have been in that school nine years. You can write and ask the president about me. I want to speak in your church and take an offering to help me in my school. I want to go back to my people and tell them about God."

The following conversation took place:

B. "To what church do you belong?"

K. "I don't belong to church; I'm just a Christian."

B. "How were you baptized?"

K. "Preacher took water and put it on my head."

B. "Did you say you could read Greek? If you can, tell me what the word 'baptizo' means in Greek."

I gave him the New Testament and asked him to read the account of the baptism of Christ and tell me what was done in his case.

K. "It means to go under." (He demonstrated how it was done.)

B. "Tell me, if that is true, why did the minister put water on your head?"

K. "He said, 'That will do.'"

B. "It is not a question of what the minister said; what does Christ say?"

K. "I see you again."

He was told that he might speak at the prayer meeting.

Usually I am slow in taking hold of a stranger, but something told me that this man was sincere and that I could trust him. He visited our prayer meeting and told his story. It made a good impression. He came to see me again, and this is what happened:

K. "What is the difference between you and the Baptists?"

I told him the best I could.

K. "How did all these denominations come?"

Now I had a real job on my hands when it came to answering this question. I simply preached a sermon on the origin of the church, how it apostatized, the efforts on the part of the reformers and the work of the Campbells to restore the church. His eyes fairly danced and his face was wreathed in smiles. When I reached my climax, he exclaimed: "I see it! I see it! I see you again."

One day the telephone rang. Kalane was calling over the telephone, saying that he was coming to my house to see me.

When he came, he said: "I go back to my people to be missionary. I want truth. If I preach error, somebody knock error down; but if I preach truth, nobody can knock truth down. I want truth. I be baptized."

B. "When?"

K. "Now."

In the presence of one of my elders I went down into the waters of baptism with this dark-skinned African and buried him with his Lord in baptism. I wish you might have seen the expression of joy on his face when he came up out of the water. I then took his hand and said: "Kalane, I covenant with you and with God to see you through college and back to Africa."

I took him to the College of Missions and in the presence of those in charge told the story, and they said: "It is wonderful!" I offered his services, but they could not take him. He wanted to go to East Africa, and they had federated, and it would never do to send a man into that field. I took him to the ministerial meeting in Indianapolis. He made a brief talk. They marveled, and T. W. Grafton said: "It is wonderful." I tried to persuade the Foreign Society to take him, but they could not send him to Inhambane. Federation prevented it.

I told him to go back to his college and that he could give his full time to his work and that his expenses would be provided for.

I met the president of the school, and this is what he said: "Ten thousand miles from home, and how he got here, God only knows!" He told of his powers of leadership and of how the student body believed in him and loved him.

Christmas came. I said to Mrs. Book: "I must send Kalane a little Christmas gift. It is not much, only five dollars." When I got to the post office, I saw a letter in my box. I opened it, and this is what I found: "Inclosed find fifty dollars for your negro." The money came—more than we needed—and he graduated from that institution with honors. An account of his graduation was told in the Indianapolis News. I then persuaded him to go to Edwards, Miss., and spend a year. He spent two years with me in my study, and would go out and fill appointments in churches. He got money for his work in Africa and brought it to me to place in the bank for him. He longed to go home. The World War was raging, and he could not get his passport. He was not idle. Many were converted under his preaching. When he got ready to sail, he created a board in the Tabernacle Church of Christ to handle his money. W. B. Treadway was made secretary and treasurer, or, as he says, "the chief."

On the way to England he preached on the ship. He was delayed a number of weeks in England. He preached many times while there, and good reports came from his work. He preached on the ship that took him from England to South Africa. He found that all of his family, with the exception of a sister, had died. He began work in Kimberley and soon taught a number of the members of sectarian churches the way of the Lord more perfectly. A minister was converted; we have had a letter from him. His name is Sibanya. A church has been established and house secured, we understand, in Kimberley. Kalane says: "People come to the diamond fields from all parts of the continent. If we can establish a school in this city and plant churches of Christ, we can reach the natives who come, and send them back to their people with the gospel." He has gone into the interior and is negotiating with a chief for twenty-five acres of land where he wants to establish a school.

His last reports show that this man in one year has had nearly seven hundred conversions and established seven or ten mission stations. He believes in the gospel. He has no use for denominationalism. He hates federation, which he terms religious clans. He is a hard worker, a man of great faith and deep consecration.

He leaves it with the board of Columbus to say how much he should spend on himself. He wants to build a school, and he says it will take eight thousand dollars. Brother Treadway is giving his time, and he does it gladly. All that is sent goes direct to the work; no overhead expense and no salaries. It goes to the support of New Testament Christianity. The people are sending in the money. Already one thousand dollars has been sent for the school and is in the bank in Kimberley. We have between three and four thousand dollars in Irwin's bank in Columbus. Brethren, remember that this is a work of faith. God must work through men and women. Will you not respond?

Kalane is trying to find some way to have all property in his charge deeded to the church of Christ at Columbus, Ind.

W. H. BOOK.

Columbus, Ind., January 10, 1922.

It will be observed that what is called "Federation of Churches" prevented this native African from being under the society. As I understand the matter, "church federation" means that if one denomination is at work in a certain territory, all the rest are pledged to keep out. And since the so-called "Christian Church" joined the federation movement, it is pledged not to send a missionary into the territory of any sister (?) denomination; hence, they could not send this native where he wanted to go, because the field was preoccupied by some other denomination. No doubt that the Columbus church is on the right track in standing behind this missionary, and so long as this mission remains independent of all human organizations and is conducted upon New Testament teaching it is worthy of the moral and financial support of all who are trying to stay by the divine record. I feel sure that if Brother Book and his congregation will pledge themselves to maintain this mission free from the control of any society or board other than the board of elders in the Columbus church, it will receive the support of those who contend for the New Testament order. I have thought for a long time that one converted missionary trained in this country and sent back to his people is worth more than a dozen sent from other lands and tongues.

Faith is an everyday commodity. It is not intended merely for great occasions and special works, nor is it the gift of those only who are called of God for some special service. It may be the daily possession of the humblest child of God and should be applied to the commonest and smallest things of life. Many persons look for the Lord in great dangers and trials and in the large affairs of life who never think of finding him in the small affairs which are their lot day by day. A life of trust recognizes the presence of God at all times, sees him in all things, and leans upon his arm for strength and succor every hour of the day. O, the sweetness of such a life as this!—Selected

On the Wrong Road.

A sentence taken from "The Guardian," a religious journal printed in Manchester, England, strikes me very forcibly. It reads: "It is becoming increasingly evident that the world has taken a wrong turn, which, if persisted in, may lead to the destruction of civilization." It occurs to me that here in America we are facing the same crisis. There are daily reminders that times are growing better, and much is said concerning "social uplift" of one kind and another. But we should not form our conclusions too hastily. We are accustomed to use the money market as the barometer of our progress. When it goes down, the times are hard; and when it goes up, the times are better. But no man can tell whether he is rich by turning to his ledger; it is the heart that makes a man rich. Paul says: "Charge them that are rich in this present world, that they be not high-minded, nor have their hope set on the uncertainty of riches, but on God, who giveth us richly all things to enjoy." A serious question confronts us when we ask how the men and women of this country are using the riches they have. When we find the answer to that question, we will get a good view of the heart of the nation and can tell whether it is rich or poor. Do you say this is pessimistic blatter and that at the bottom there is nothing wrong with our country? Then read carefully this extract from Zane Grey's story, "The Call of the Canon," now running in the Ladies' Home Journal:

Listen: Nothing wrong in you or life to-day, nothing for you women to make right? You are as blind as bats, as dead to living truth as if you were buried. Nothing wrong, when thousands of crippled soldiers have no homes, no money, no friends, no work, in many cases no food nor beds? Splendid young men who went away in their prime to fight for you and came back ruined, suffering! Nothing wrong when sane women with the vote might rid politics of partisanship, greed, crookedness? Nothing wrong when prohibition is mocked by women, when the greatest boon ever granted this country is derided and beaten down and cheated? Nothing wrong when there are half a million defective children in this city? Nothing wrong when there are not enough schools and teachers to educate our boys and girls? Nothing wrong when the mothers of this great country let their children go to the dark motion-picture halls and night after night in thousands of towns over all this broad land see pictures that the juvenile court and the educators and keepers of reform schools say make burglars, crooks, and murderers of our boys and vampires out of our girls? Nothing wrong when these young, adolescent girls ape you and wear stockings rolled under their knees below their skirts and use a lipstick and paint their faces and darken their eyes and pluck their eyebrows? Nothing wrong when great magazines print no page nor picture without its sex appeal? Nothing wrong when the automobile, so convenient for the innocent little run out of town, presents the greatest evil that ever menaced American girls? Nothing wrong when money is god, when luxury, pleasure, excitement, speed are the things striven for? Nothing wrong when some of your husbands spend more of their time with other women than with you? Nothing wrong with jazz, where the lights go out in the dance hall and the dancers jiggle and toddle and wiggle in a frenzy? Nothing wrong in a country where one of the greatest colleges cannot report the birth of one child to each graduate in ten years? Nothing wrong with race suicide and the incoming horde of foreigners? O, there's nothing wrong with America except that she staggers under a Titanic burden that only mothers of sons can remove! You doll women, you parasites, you toys of men, you silken-wrapped geisha girls, you painted, idle, purring cats, you parody of the females of your species, find brains enough, if you can, to see the doom hanging over you and revolt before it is too late.

Without giving sanction to the writer's suffragette views, the observant reader knows that there is more truth than fiction in this striking paragraph. It depicts conditions as they actually exist in most of our cities and towns. Perhaps we could not better describe the age in which we are living than to call it the "Jazz Age." The pity of it is that the young people are encouraged in their riotous living by their elders who should have exercised a restraining influence. We are not greatly surprised to read how the superintendent of the public schools in one of the large Southern cities is threatened with the loss of his position because he won't stand for dancing in the schools. One of the leading professors in Princeton University has stated publicly that unless the young men who attend his classes are deprived of their automobiles there can be no real scholarship among them. "Back to normalcy" should mean more than the restoration of prewar values and prices. The slogan should go further and beat us back to the Bible and to God's ideal of doing things. Undoubtedly this country of ours is on the wrong road, and, like Paul when he stood before Felix, Christians of to-day must stand up before a riotous and drunken and jazz-seeking world and reason concerning "righteousness and self-control and the judgment to come." Just here there is great comfort in the Master's assurance that a little leaven can leaven the whole lump.

The New Pope and the Roman Catholic Religion.

Artemus Ward once said: "It isn't so much people's ignorance that does the harm as it is their knowing so many things that ain't so." This quaint saying is capable of wide application. There are many things that men and women profess to "know" that are not the truth. For example, there are sectarians who are sure that their church is invulnerable because it is so respectable. They cling to certain creeds as if they were family heirlooms. The ability to endure through the ages, they think, presupposes a vitality that belongs to truth. But we should not overlook the important fact that error is just as aged as truth, and often survives the truth, as weeds and briars often flourish after the cultivated plants are dead. History shows that the Roman Catholic religion is noted for its endurance. It has lived through fifteen centuries of portentous change. The Popes have witnessed, and have survived, three mighty transformations of the face of Europe. They had hardly issued from their early obscurity and lodged themselves in the fabric of the old Roman civilization when this fell into ruins; but they held firmly, amidst the ruins, the scepter they had inherited. One by one the stately institutions of the older world—the schools, the law courts, the guilds of craftsmen, the military system, the municipal powers and commercial routes—disappeared in the flood of barbarism which poured over Europe; but this institution, which seemed the least firmly established, was hardly shaken and was quickly accepted by the strange new world. A new polity was created, partly under the direction of the Popes, and it was so entirely saturated by their influence that religion gave it its most characteristic name. Then Christendom, as it was called, passed in turn through a critical development, culminating in the Reformation; and the papacy begot a counter-Reformation and secured millions beyond the seas to replace the millions it had lost. The third and last convulsion began with the work of Voltaire and Rousseau and Mirabeau and has grievously shaken the political theory with which the papacy was allied and the older religious views which it had stereotyped. Yet to-day the Roman Catholic religion has some thirty-five million followers in the three greatest Protestant countries—the lands of Luther, of Henry VIII., and of the Puritan Fathers. Strenuous efforts are now being made to quicken the political power of the papacy. Pius XI., the new Pope, we are told, will devote his energies to the reconciliation of church and State. The way in which the American press featured all of the details of the Vatican proceedings, even to the kissing of the feet of the dead Pope and also of the live one, was disgusting in the extreme. References to "his Holiness" and "the mighty pontiff" do not set well with those who have been taught to call no man "Master." save Jesus. But thus it is that our civilization fawns upon a hoary religious system, utterly forgetting the error, treachery, and bribery that have made its endurance possible. We should not venerate the old merely because it is old, but we should accept and cling to the truth whether it be an old, old story or something that we have just ledger; it is the heart that makes a man rich. Paul says: will ruin and damn us in the end. Sooner or later every one of us must face and acknowledge God's truth. Borrowing a bit of wisdom from a flour sack: "Eventually, why not now?" Solomon said: "There is a way which seemeth right unto a man; but the end thereof are the ways of death."

James Sterling Dunn Is Dead.

BY T. W. PHILLIPS.

At 2:45 A.M., Friday, February 3, Brother G. A. Dunn called me by long-distance telephone from Dallas and said: "Brother Phillips, Brother Jim died this morning at one o'clock, and we want you for the funeral." This was so sad and so unexpected. It was unexpected by even the immediate family. He had been sick with a cold for several days, but no one thought him seriously ill. He died as he had lived—preaching the gospel; and his subject was, "The Faith of Abraham." He was delirious at times during the day Thursday before his death, and during each time he preached "the word" with as much clearness and power as he could have done when at his best. He dropped off to sleep, and was gone!

James Sterling Dunn was born on March 30, 1874, and was the middle child of nine children born to Thomas Franklin and Levisa Elizabeth Dunn. His father died when J. S. Dunn was only eight years old. A little sister passed away at the age of five. His mother, four brothers, and three sisters survive him. Besides, he leaves his wife and three children to mourn their sad loss. His wife and Louise, Sterling, and Claudia are left alone now. Two of the sisters were present at the funeral, and his four brothers, G. A., John E., J. W., and Dr. J. F. Dunn, were all there. All of the four brothers are gospel preachers, as well as the finest character of men. His sisters are all noble women, and his dear old mother is a princess among women. Her foreparents were from Penrith County, England, and they first settled with "The Virginia Colony" in coming to this country. Scotch Tom Nelson was one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence. Our own J. B. Nelson was raised by the mother of these Dunn boys, and of his aunt he says: "She seemed more like my mother to me than she did my aunt." No wonder J. B. is a great man and a great preacher.

The funeral services were held in the Pearl and Bryan Streets Church, in Dallas. After a number of select songs were sung, Brother Pullias, of the Oak Cliff Church, read the scripture lesson, and Brother A. O. Colley led us all in prayer. Then this writer preached from the text: "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace, whose mind is stayed on thee: because he trusteth in thee. Trust ye in the Lord forever: for in the Lord Jehovah is everlasting strength." (Isa. 26: 3, 4.) After such comments as were deemed proper to make, and speaking of the trustful and hopeful life of this great man of God and paying tribute to his aged mother and faithful wife, we joined with the poet and said to the bereaved ones, as well as to the sympathizing friends:

Trust your ever loving Savior, when the waves of doubt assail,
And your feeble bark is tossing in the world's tempestuous gale.
Trust him, trust him, fully trust him: he will guide you safely through,
Trust him when your soul is laden with a heavy load of care;
None but he, the Man of Sorrows, knows the grief you have to bear.
Trust him when your friends forsake you, those in whom you would confide,
And turn away so coldly from you, walking no more by your side.
Trust him when the dark mists gather, and your eyes with tears are dim;
Trust him when you cannot see the pathway, 'tis all well known to him!
Should a wondrous gleam of sunshine come to make your life more sweet,
He alone has been the giver; thank him, kneeling at his feet.
Trust him now, and trust him ever, till you lay life's burden down;
Then he'll give to you the new name, raiment white, and throne and crown!

I had known Brother Jim Dunn very intimately for many years. We had lived close neighbors for years, and grew to love each other like Jonathan and David, and so addressed each other in conversation. I shall miss my dear comrade so much; but—O, alas!—how much more will he be missed by that lonely wife and children! Yes, and by the dear old mother, and the sisters and the brothers, and a great host of fine Christians all over the land. But Brother Dunn has crossed the river and gone on to the paradise—rest—to await our coming. And we are coming, dear "David," to join the "ransomed host" after a while. "The sting of death is sin; and the strength of sin is the law. But thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ. Therefore, my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labor is not in vain in the Lord." "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord." They rest from their labors, but their works will follow on and on and on. "Wherefore comfort one another with these words." Brother J. S. Dunn cannot come back to us, but we can go to see him in the sweet after-while. The Lord bless and keep his dear family from harm, and unite them in heaven around the great white throne, in my prayer.

The unfolding of God's plans—that is all that the Christian need ever to be concerned to know and to follow. God is sovereign, and God is all-wise, and God is all-sufficient. His work never fails; and if we are ready to let our work be his work only, we have his personal pledge that he will glorify himself through the fruit bearing.—Sunday School Times.

PELOUBET'S NOTES FOR 1922 NOW READY.

"Peloubet's Notes" has been issued for forty-eight years with ever-increasing popularity and usefulness, which fact alone is a wonderful argument for its value and helpfulness. It is rich in material, comprehensive in its scope, and practical in its treatment. Every superintendent, teacher, and scholar will find in it his own personal requirements. The editor of The Outlook says: "We give first place to Peloubet's." Marion Lawrance, the noted Sunday-school worker, writes: "How this standard commentary has been able to maintain itself during all these years, growing annually stronger and richer, is a marvel to the Sunday-school world. Personally, I do not see how any Sunday-school teacher can hope to do his best without the rich, full helps found in these 'Notes.'"

Probably 75 per cent. of the ailments of the human race are due to an abnormal condition of the blood—thin, poor, anemic.

This fact and the further fact that Hood's Sarsaparilla purifies, enriches and revitalizes the blood, by creating a healthy appetite, aiding digestion, promoting assimilation and thereby securing in full all the benefits of complete nutrition, must impress the thoughtful with the wisdom of giving this great medicine a good fair trial.

Obituaries

Legg.

On January 20, 1922, Brother Clyde Legg, oldest son of J. M. and Lillie Legg, departed this life and thus began to rest from his labors. He was born in Delaware County, Okla., on December 13, 1900. Clyde obeyed the gospel in October, 1911, and lived an exemplary Christian life. He was loyal and true to his parents, to his friends, and to God. He practiced that religion that is pure and undefiled; and when he died, no one lost an enemy. In the presence of a host of friends his funeral was conducted at the church of Christ at Centraffa, Okla., by Brother Walter Teague. J. O. Nix.

Gibson.

Mrs. Ida Jackson Gibson, wife of Brother J. W. Gibson, of Henderson, Tenn., died at her home on Second Street on December 23, 1921, after an illness of several weeks. She was born on February 26, 1864, in Henry County; married on January 19, 1905; and became a member of the church of Christ in 1907. While not having any children of her own, she was a mother to a large number of boys and girls who have boarded in her home and attended the Freed-Hardeman College. Sister Gibson was a woman of genuine convictions, of the purest character, and of true devotion to her home, her friends, and the church. She was indeed a practical woman, a keeper of home, and a friend upon whom one could well rely. Her remains were shipped to Paris, Tenn., and tenderly laid to rest in the land of her youth. Funeral services were conducted, at her request, by the writer. N. B. HARDEMAN.

Wallace.

Mrs. Nancy Wallace, wife of Mr. Henry Wallace, deceased, died at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Carter Geer, Bridgeport, Ala., on Saturday, January 21, 1922. In her eighty-first year, I was intimately associated with Mrs. Wallace for several years, and she was always kind to me and seemed to love me, and I loved her. Her husband was a mountain preacher and teacher, a good man, and she had a happy home during his lifetime. Her oldest son, Mr. Webb Wallace, died some time after his father's death. Mrs. Wallace had lived with her daughter, Mrs. Carter Geer, since 1912. Why should we weep? Mrs. Wallace was a Christian, and I am sure she tried to do her duty to the best of her ability. The church, her neighbors and friends, and her nurse, Mrs. Lula Jones, did everything possible for her during her sickness. "Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of the least of these, ye did it unto me."

(Miss) MATTIE HOLDER.

Craig.

At 3:30 in the morning of February 1, 1922, Mrs. Eugenia Jameson Craig, wife of Mr. Woodford T. Craig, passed away at the home of her daughter, Mrs. J. T. Carpenter, Nashville, Tenn. Mrs. Craig, before her marriage, was Miss Eugenia Jameson, member of a prominent Sumner County family, where she was born near Gallatin, June 3, 1846. She was married to Mr. Woodford T. Craig, of Nashville, on December 15, 1869. The burial took place in Nashville. Beautiful and impressive services were held at the home by the minister of her church and the Daughters of the Confederacy, of whom she was an honored member. For many years Mrs. Craig lived in Dyer County; some years were spent in Hickman, Ky.; but the latter years of her life she made Nashville her home. She was the mother of eight children; one child died in infancy, and a daughter, Mrs. James P. Sandling, died in Dyersburg some years ago. She is survived by her husband; one brother, H. C. Jameson, of Texas; and the following children: James T. Craig, of St. Louis, Mo.; W. H., of Dyersburg; Woodford B., of Nashville; Mrs. H. Y. Coker, of Dyersburg; Mrs. J. T. Carpenter and Mrs. W. F. Blair, of Nashville. Mrs. Craig obeyed the gospel early in life and spent the years of her active life in the service of the Master. To those given the privilege of knowing her, her faith was an inspiration. A devoted mother and wife, generous and sympathetic to all who needed her, she gave herself freely, and ever held to the highest and noblest ideals of life. Her life was one of service to God and her fellow man. It can be said she possessed to an unusual degree "the Supreme Gift." She was tenderly loved in life and honored in death by the presence of the old friends who followed her to the grave. Death did not quell her spirit nor chill her soul, but calmly and sweetly she entered into life. WOODFORD T. CRAIG.

Field Reports

Union, S. C., February 8.—The work in this field is holding up well under adverse circumstances and conditions. The Sunday-morning services are well attended and the cottage meetings continue with some interest. We have been badly handicapped on account of some very serious illness, but I am glad to report that all are getting along nicely at this time and the prospects are good for great results this year. We have greatly enjoyed our comfortable building this year, but we lack about two thousand dollars having enough to pay us out of debt and complete the building and seat it. This done, we will have a good home for the family of God in this neighborhood.—Thomas H. Burton.

Shelbyville, Ky., February 8.—Last Sunday I was at Bohon, in Mercer County, and spoke to large and appreciative audiences. Brother Traylor was at Shelbyville. The work at Shelbyville is looking up, and we feel that the interest will continue to grow. There were forty in attendance there last Sunday. We feel that this speaks well for a mission point, especially when sectarian prejudice is so high. We are badly in need of funds to erect our building; and if the churches will come to our rescue, we will be able to begin next spring. We have the most desirable lot in the town, with the deed fixed so that speculative theories and innovations cannot creep in. Brethren, rally around this work and let us make it a glorious success. Send all donations to me, at Shelbyville, Ky.—R. A. Craig.

Lake City, Fla., February 4.—Continuing my work from Maytown, I began preaching with the church at Mims, with eight members and one other grown person present. The next night the attendance was greatly increased, and increased in numbers and interest until the end of the meeting. The church was awakened to greater zeal for God and a determination to do better work in the future than in the past. I went from Mims to Oxford to be with the churches in a fifth-Sunday meeting, and met many faithful brethren and preachers who came together in a cooperative movement to stir up a greater spirit of evangelizing the country. I then came on to Gainesville and listened to a good discourse delivered by Brother G. E. Claus, of Valdosta, Ga., and then on home to Lake City.—J. O. Barnes.

Lecanto, Fla., February 6.—There will be a meeting of two days' duration at Lecanto, to begin on Saturday before the fourth Lord's day in February at 10:30 A.M. The Saturday meeting will last two hours. Preaching on Saturday night by Brother Colson. Preaching on Lord's-day morning by one of the preaching brethren from Southern Florida; dinner on the ground; and preaching in the afternoon and at night. The church of Christ at Lecanto extends to every one in this county an invitation to attend these meetings; also, a special invitation is extended to each congregation in adjoining counties to attend and take an active part. There will be plenty to eat. The church invites all of the preaching brethren in the State to come. We are expecting Brother Humphrey to be with us to lead the song service. He is a promising young preacher that needs to be in the evangelistic work all the time. Brethren, will you cooperate with this worthy brother sufficiently to support his family?—R. E. L. Taylor.

Bible Lecture Week at Abilene Christian College.

BY JESSE P. SEWELL.

The fourth annual Bible lecture week of Abilene Christian College will be held this year, as formerly, during the last week in February—February 19-25. This is one of the educational and inspirational features of our college work. Each year some of the outstanding Christian men in public service are brought together here to speak on these wonderful themes. The addresses delivered this week are published later in permanent form.

While this feature of our work is intended primarily for our students, we make a special effort to have as many others here as possible. Every one has a hearty invitation to attend. The churches of Christ of Abilene rejoice to act as host to as many as come. We are glad for our friends to come; for this is their institution—it is your institution.

Will you write us when you will arrive? Those who notify us in advance will be met at the station and conducted to some good, Christian home in the city.

Sure Relief

Report for 1921.

BY J. R. BRADLEY.

During 1921, and beginning with the first Sunday in May, I visited the following congregations, preaching two sermons at nearly all the places, and with dinner on the ground at two or three of them: Greenwood, Odd Fellows' Hall, New Providence, Cool Springs, and New Zion, in Giles County, Tenn.; Robertson Fork, Wilson Hill, Bluff Spring, Cornersville, and Ostella, in Marshall County; State Line and Chestnut Ridge, in Lincoln County; Richmond, Culleoka, Columbia, and Smyrna, in Maury County; Lawrenceburg, Lawrence County; Decherd and Beulah, in Franklin County; and Woodville, in Jackson County, Ala. I visit Smyrna monthly. I also preached three sermons at Elora (my home) during the past year. For a start into the new year, I have this month (January) preached four sermons at the following times and places; Smyrna, third Sunday; Culleoka, fourth Sunday (two sermons); and at home, yesterday, fifth Sunday. During 1922 I hope to be able to visit all of these places again. They have remembered us right well in a substantial way, as well as otherwise. I have passed the seventy-fifth milestone toward the grave and the future state, but am holding up well and right active for that age. We have a new man, a Brother Borden, just moved into the Elora community, who is a fine song leader. He is a great help to our congregation. Pray for us.

BY R. H. JOHNSON.

The debate between Thomas H. Dixon and myself was conducted at Welcome Home Baptist meetinghouse, three miles northwest of Appleton, Ark., beginning on December 6 and closing on December 8. The general church question was discussed. We had two sessions during the day and also a night session, giving each speaker six thirty-minute speeches each day. I took the affirmative first and used part of the time. Mr. Dixon affirmed the last two days. We had a nice debate. Mr. Dixon is a Freewill Baptist and has quite a following in the country around Welcome Home. Many people who heard the debate said they learned much about the Bible. My brethren were pleased with my efforts. Some of the Baptists were not satisfied and talked about wanting a stronger man. I held two short meetings near where the debate was held; so preaching the gospel was the direct cause of the debate. Six noble souls obeyed the gospel before the debate. I hope to get back and preach some more for these people and

A FRIEND IN NEED A FRIEND INDEED

Writes Mrs. Hardee Regarding
Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Los Angeles, Calif.—"I must tell you that I am a true friend to Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I have taken it off and on for twenty years and it has helped me change from a delicate girl to a stout, healthy woman. When I was married I was sick all the time until I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I was in bed much of my time with pains and had to have the doctor every month. One day I found a little book in my yard in Guthrie, Oklahoma, and I read it through and got the medicine—Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound—and took eight bottles and used the Sanative Wash. I at once began to get stronger. I have got many women to take it just by telling them what it has done for me. I have a young sister whom it has helped in the same way it helped me. I want you to know that I am a 'friend indeed,' for you were a 'friend in need.'"

—Mrs. GEORGE HARDEE, 1043 Byram St., Los Angeles, California.

Let Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound be a "friend indeed" to you.

From Japan to the United States.

BY NELLIE STRAITON.

When I made an appeal a few weeks ago for funds to bring Sister Lillie Cyfert from Japan to her home over here for a much-needed furlough, I received a prompt response from a few. The first two gifts came from Alabama, the next from Tennessee, then one from Georgia, two from Texas, one from Florida, one from Missouri, another from Alabama, one from Indiana, and two more from Texas. These gifts amounted to $41.25.

Some of those who have contributed to the special traveling fund have also been given to Sister Lillie Cyfert's regular support; others saw the notice of this need in the paper, and, being interested in the work Sister Cyfert is doing, and realizing that she was looking forward eagerly to a visit to her home, gave as they were able.

If one hundred persons were to send five dollars each, or five hundred persons would send one dollar each, I would have more than enough to complete the fund. Send what you can, whether it be one or five or ten, so that I may forward the money promptly to Sister Cyfert. Address Miss Nellie Straiton, 1030 South Lake Street, Fort Worth, Texas.

Our Meeting at Berry, Ala.

BY J. D. TANT.

I am called for a two-weeks' meeting at Berry Christian College, at Berry, Ala., commencing on the fourth Lord's day in February.

It seems that the desire of this meeting is not only to arouse an interest in the church to teach the gospel in Berry, but it is to arouse a general interest among the people all over Alabama and see if we shall build up a first-class educational institution in Alabama where our boys and girls who go from home to a school can have religious influences and Bible training while preparing themselves for usefulness in life; or shall we spend our money to build barns for our horses, sheds for our cows, and pens for our hogs, and let our children drift on the infidel wave that now permeates many of our leading schools.

Brethren, there are enough of your boys and girls wanting to make life a success to put four hundred students in Berry College each year, and enough money spent by my brethren for moonshine whisky and tobacco to keep them there, and we hope to make some change for the good of all, and we plead with the brethren in reach of Berry to attend this meeting and let us see what can be done.

$700 $600 $495

Go into your dealer's store. Play a Gulbransen. Make the three tests shown below. You'll realize the pleasure a Gulbransen will bring you and—further than that—you'll understand why the Gulbransen encourages the interest of children in good music, and music study.

"They're still talking about the Gulbransen and me"

"Some friends came over the other night—all music critics. They were expectant—they had heard about our new Gulbransen."

"I played Grieg's 'To Spring'. It's rather difficult, you'll admit."

"Everyone listened attentively until I finished—and then what applause!"

"I—who, until a week before, had been denied the pleasure of playing—holding the interest of my musical friends! The same friends who were prejudiced against player-pianos, I was proud of my accomplishment—I was a real musician."

"And here's a little secret: I could never have done it without Gulbransen Instruction Rolls. Four simple rolls—and the right player-piano—that's all. Just like making a wish and having it come true!"

BY JOHN R. WILLIAMS.

THE HAPPY CHANGE IN MY HOME.

In November, 1876, after my obedience to the gospel in July, Brother J. H. Roulhac and W. T. Shelton came to our place to conduct another meeting.

Wife and I had been reading the New Testament together, but she said but little about what we read. This led me to believe that she was still holding on to her faith in the Methodist Church.

She had me to invite the preachers to take dinner with us on Monday, which I did, and they accepted. I told them she was still a Methodist; so they said they would say nothing to offend her.

They came. She had prepared such a dinner as a poor housewife could prepare, and they certainly enjoyed it; at least, they said they did. Everything passed off very pleasantly.

On Monday night we both went to preaching, but still she said nothing. Tuesday we went again; and when the invitation was given, to my great surprise and to the surprise of all, she went forward in answer to the invitation. That evening at three o'clock, while a blinding snow was falling, Brother Shelton buried her with her Lord in baptism. Ours was then a happy home.

We attended the worship on "the first day of the week" regularly. When a man and his wife obey the gospel, they should make it a practice to meet for worship regularly, or they will soon grow careless, indifferent, and in a short time will cease to go only during the protracted meeting, and then, perhaps, only about one Sunday during the meeting.

In April, 1883, I was licensed to practice law before the magistrates and county court of Obion County. As there was a great deal of litigation in those days, I was kept busy nearly all the time looking after the legal interests of some troubled soul. I was urged by the attorneys of the county to prepare for admission to the general legal bar of the State. Major J. G. Smith (long since dead), one of the foremost lawyers of our county, took quite an interest in me, and, under his instructions, I took up the study of law in regular form. He kept me studying Blackstone for quite a while, when finally I asked him why he kept me so long in old English law—why not give me something more modern? I shall never forget his answer. He asked me: "If you should go to a dentist to have an aching tooth extracted, would he pull the crown of the tooth off, or would he go deep—get hold of the roots of that tooth?" I saw the point. He said without a knowledge of Blackstone no one could possibly be a first-class lawyer. "Always go to the root of the subject," said he. So I pass this advice on down to every young preacher, and hope they may get the same benefit from it that I did.

During all this time I had thought that I would like to be a preacher of the gospel, and on one occasion I spoke to the elders of the congregation about it; but they gave me no encouragement, as I thought, so I let the matter rest. Later I learned that they had decided that I should preach, but wanted to see how I would act under discouragement—only a trial, you see. Another "probation." For a definite decision to be made on an important subject, it must be made against what others say about it.

In due course of time I was unanimously called by my home congregation for evangelistic work. I told them that I had suggested that two years before and they gave me no encouragement. They told me then why they did not encourage me at that time—just to try me. For two years they kept me on probation, like when I first tried to get into the Methodist Church; but, unlike the Methodist probation, this was ended favorably.

Next, "The Trial of Decision."

An Appeal for Seymour, Texas.

About one year ago, under the leadership of Brother Cypert, working missionary for the congregation here, the brethren began meeting for worship and work at Seymour. They are few in number and not rich. At first they rented a building. Later they could not get this. They were forced to buy or give up the work. A chance came to buy a Presbyterian house—a good brick house, well located—for two thousand dollars. This must be paid—one thousand dollars right away and the balance in one and two years. They are doing what they can, and we are helping them what we can, but more help is needed at once. Won't you please send a liberal contribution to A. J. Samsill or J. W. Beaver, Seymour, Texas, just as soon as possible? These are good people and deserve help.

Field Reports

Wellington, Texas, February 6.—Our work here is getting along fine. The interest in all lines seems to be growing. I preached at Afton, in Dickens County, on the fifth Sunday in January, and at Crowell on the first Sunday in this month. We have a good congregation at Afton, but only a few members at Crowell, and they are meeting at the home of Brother Smith each Lord's day. However, if they continue faithful, they will soon build up the cause there.—Lee Sanders.

Springfield, Mo., February 7.—After a year's pleasant stay in Athens, Ala., I began work with the Madison and Evans Streets church of Christ, this city, on January 1. One month has passed, and it has been a pleasant, busy month. There are three congregations here, all in very good condition. The lamented O. L. Hardin formerly lived here and did work which still lives. Brother Young, whom I knew in the Bible School, lives here, and is farming and preaching acceptably. There are a number of preachers living here who devote their time to the work of the ministry—Mason, Packer, Wilkerson, Hardin, Fields, Amos, and Moore. There is much to be done in this large and wicked city. There were a number of additions in January.—J. W. Brents.

Fairmont, W. Va., February 8.—Brother T. Q. Martin, of St. Marys, W. Va., has just closed a two-weeks' meeting here, which resulted in two baptisms. Good interest and attendance prevailed during the entire meeting. A good impression was created, which will do much toward strengthening the cause here. Brother Martin is a gentle, likable, Christian gentleman, and his sympathy and love for humanity are revealed in his preaching. This is the kind of preaching that wins souls for Christ. The church here seems to be making some progress. The cause is weak in this section of the country; hence, this is really a great mission field. We are planning to do some mission work this summer. The cause can be built up here by hard work and sacrifice.—H. C. Denson.

Avon Park, Fla., February 7.—I am with the church in Enterprise, Ala., for a few days. The weather has been very unfavorable—rains and then cold. The city was also visited Sunday morning about two o'clock by a cyclone which damaged a considerable portion of the residence section, killing one person and injuring six or eight more. I was with my wife Friday at the infirmary in Dothan, and many will rejoice with me to know that she is able to sit up some and anticipates the pleasure of soon being able to return with me to Southern Florida. She also hopes to have strength to put into words her gratitude to more than a hundred who sent sunshine and love to her while a "shut-in" and sufferer at the hospital.—A. T. Hamiter.

A Warning. To feel tired before exertion is not laziness—it's a sign that the system lacks vitality and needs the tonic effect of Hood's Sarsaparilla. Sufferers should not delay. Get rid of that tired feeling by beginning to take Hood's Sarsaparilla to-day.

MOTHER, QUICK! GIVE CALIFORNIA FIG SYRUP FOR CHILD'S BOWELS

Even a sick child loves the "fruity" taste of "California Fig Syrup." If the little tongue is coated or if your child is listless, cross, feverish, full of cold, or has colic, a teaspoonful will never fail to open the bowels. In a few hours you can see for yourself how thoroughly it works all the constipation poison, sour bile and waste from the tender little bowels, and gives you a well, playful child again.

Millions of mothers keep "California Fig Syrup" handy. They know a teaspoonful to-day saves a sick child to-morrow. Ask your druggist for genuine "California Fig Syrup" which has directions for babies and children of all ages printed on the bottle. Mother! You must say "California," or you may get an imitation fig syrup.

Denver (Col.) Notes.

BY JOHN D. EVANS.

The books for the new year are now open. The audit of the old has been made, the profit-and-loss column adjusted, the trial balance taken. No use now to worry over the footings. Take a new start. "Every day is a fresh beginning." The last year must be always the best. In the spirit of true Christian optimism let us set ourselves to the tasks of 1922. There remains "much land to be possessed"—some in Colorado. "The field is the world," of which the great State of Colorado is a part. The foundation has been laid. Let us go on with the building. The time is short. What we do must be done quickly.

Just here it may be in order to submit a brief summary of some work done during last year. At Denver the work was greatly strengthened by the visit of Brother N. B. Hardeman, of Tennessee, and the association of Brother J. C. Estes as one of our prominent workers. We had also frequent visits from Brethren E. C. Fuqua and James H. Bailey. Additions to the congregation from all sources, twenty-seven. Besides taking care of our general expenses, building debt, charities, etc., we contributed three hundred dollars to the building fund of Colorado Springs and Boulder. We hope to grow in this grace now that our own home is free of debt. During the early part of last year I visited the congregations at Boulder and Colorado Springs to confer with them in regard to building a home for each of them. I had learned both by experience and observation that when a small congregation waited until they had money enough in their treasury to complete a building, they rarely ever had a home. I submitted them a proposition by which the work could be financed without placing any heavy burden upon any one, and which would insure a home of their own while paying for it. The proposition was this: That I would advance five hundred dollars each toward a building fund, provided they would make up a fund sufficient to cover one-half the cost of the building, and that I would also make arrangements by which they could take care of the balance in monthly installments that would not be burdensome. They readily accepted the proposition, and within a few months both houses were ready for use. It was my privilege and pleasure to be present at the opening service at both places. They were very happy occasions. At my suggestion the following brethren joined me in taking care of the amount advanced: Churches in Marshall County, Tenn.; church at Denver, Col.; church at Sellersburg, Ind.; Norman Davidson, Tennessee;

Mrs. C. Tatum, Kentucky. The total contributions amounted to eight hundred and sixty dollars, leaving a balance of one hundred and forty dollars, not including interest. Thus by co-operation in a small way two congregations were able to have nice, new homes of their own in one year. In this connection let me suggest that if any brother or congregation feels disposed to do a helpful work, send a contribution to assist these brethren in freeing their homes of any debt. Address A. W. Von Boskirk, 1908 West Pike's Peak, Colorado Springs; James H. Bailey, Boulder, Col.; or the writer, Denver, Col.

During the year it was also my privilege to assist the little band of brethren at Pueblo, Col., to start house-keeping. Brother E. F. Rizer, formerly of Tennessee, is active in promoting the work there in that large and prosperous city. It is our desire and aim to help provide a home for them this year, and thus each year adding one, two, or three young congregations to the list, and thus give permanency to the work done in this field. I will make a more detailed report of the Pueblo work later, and also call attention to the importance of securing a regular Colorado mission fund to take care of the pressing needs of the field. We are looking forward to the completion of some plans to keep one or two evangelists busy in the field all the time.

We want to express our appreciation to all who have by word or deed manifested an interest in our humble efforts to advance the cause of Christ in such a needy yet promising field. Keep us in your thoughts and in your prayers.

Love.

Into our work for others we can take nothing greater than love, for love is a wonderful guide and teacher. Skill and experience are worth little without it, and toil and sacrifice never could make up for its lack. There is courage and healing, strength and inspiration in the mere fact that some one loves us and cares for what we are doing.—Selected.

We may fail a thousand times; but as long as we are ashamed of our failure, as long as we do not helplessly acquiesce, as long as we do not try to comfort ourselves for it by a careful parade of our other virtues, we are in the pilgrim's road.—Arthur Christopher Benson.

How I Earned Extra Money at Home

—When Jim's Salary Was Cut

By MARGARET GORMAN

All this talk of cutting wages had about as much effect on us as water on a duck's back. Jim was with a big company that would pull through hard times without cutting our income any. We felt sure of that. "And anyhow," I said one night, "how can they reduce you, when it's costing more to live than it ever did?"

The answer to that question came more unexpectedly than anything that ever happened in our lives. Jim came home the next Saturday with discouragement written all over his face. "Peggy, it's happened," he said, throwing his things down in a chair instead of hanging them up as he usually did. "What?" I cried, trying to make him think I hadn't guessed the truth.

"My turn has come for a reduction," he said. "Guess we'll have to get along with less money, or else dig into our little 'sack' at the bank."

Even though I guessed it when he came in, I just couldn't make it seem true—just when we had saved nearly enough to make the first payment on a home. Now it would gradually go for living expenses. All the evening and long into the night I kept trying to figure out what I could do to show poor old Jim that I could really help. "Certainly there must be some way," I thought, "to keep things going without using up our savings."

The next forenoon, while dinner was cooking, I picked up the Sunday paper to try to get my mind off our troubles. The newest thing in winter clothes; a wonderful electric washing machine; the plans and pictures of the sweetest little home—all of these staring me in the face only reminded me that our little home would soon go glimmering for groceries unless I could earn some money to help buy— "O, Jim," I cried suddenly. Look!

And then I find out how to make extra money at home

"Here it is—How I earn money at home"—That's what I'll do. Do you think I could?"

Then we both read every word of it over together. It was the advertisement of the Home Profit Hosiery Company, Inc., of Rochester, N. Y. "Let's send in that coupon and get the whole story," I said. And while I was talking up dinner, Jim addressed the envelope and ran up to the corner and dropped it in the mail box.

When the answer came, I found it even more interesting. Here, at last, was the way to earn money to keep that bank account where it was, and perhaps add more to it. So we sent for a machine.

To make a long story short, we never had to use a penny of the money we had saved. When the Home Profit Knitter came, I did just as they told me and read the instruction book over carefully several times before I ever tried to work the machine. And you'll never know how hard it was for me to keep from trying it before I had learned all about how to operate it, because there was a sock already started on it. But after I had all the instructions, which are illustrated by picture and so simply explained by text, down pat, I started to do a little practice work, and it wasn't long before I was knitting beautiful, warm, woolly socks.

You can't imagine what fun it is to be able to really knit a sock in a few minutes until you've tried it. And the joy of being able to do it just as easily as can be is nothing compared to your feelings when you get your first check from the Home Profit Hosiery Company for the socks you send them. A check for real money that you can use as you please.

You really work for them at a guaranteed piece-work wage. They furnish you with the yarn when they send the machine. When you send them the socks you have knitted, they return an equal amount of yarn and your check by return mail, so that you don't lose a particle of time. And the remarkable part of it is that they guarantee to buy the socks, as many as you can knit, all the year round. And in addition to that, they will also encourage you to make socks for your own home trade. And there's big money in that, too.

If you only knew all the little things I've been able to have that I never could have before I got my Home Profit Knitter, you would order one to-day. If you only knew the pleasure of at last finding a way to make money by your own hands, among the things you love best, nothing in the world would ever keep you from sending in the coupon to-day and finding out more about it.

Any woman in this country who wants to make money at home pleasantly should know more about the Home Profit Knitter. So many women who don't feel that they would be successful canvassing, going from door to door taking magazine subscriptions, find the Home Profit Knitter just the thing they have been looking for to make that extra money they need for their home or for the little ones they have.

More than once, I can tell you, I look back and wonder if I would be as happy and well as I am to-day if I hadn't had my Home Profit Knitter upon which to earn the money that kept worry away. More than once, I wish I could tell every woman in this country who needs more money the story of my experience just as I am telling it to you.

You too, may want extra money

You may have use for money to buy the things you've longed to have. Those new shoes, that hat or dress you saw in the store window the other day, can soon be yours if you own a Home Profit Knitter.

Thousands of women all over this country are earning money to buy comforts for themselves and those they love by knitting warm, woolly socks at home. You, too, can learn quickly to knit socks for which we pay you a guaranteed price all the year round. You don't have to worry about selling them. We bind ourselves to pay you well for all the standard socks you send us.

Remember this: we furnish the yarn for these socks free. Every time you send us socks we return an equal amount of yarn. At the same time we send you a check for your work. Prompt pay at a guaranteed rate—money that you can use as you please to buy the things you need or start a bank account of your own. If you can use extra money, now is the time to find out more about the Home Profit Knitter. If you want to shake off money worries, now is the time to start—knit your way to independence of such troubles. You learn quickly. We pay promptly.

Fill in the coupon now and mail it to-day.

Find out for yourself about this wonderful machine that will mean so much to you. Find out about this company that agrees to pay you a generous wage rate. In short, learn how you can make yourself independent of money troubles by earning extra money in your spare time at home.

Mail the coupon to-day to the Home Profit Hosiery Co., Inc., Dept. 263K, 265 State Street, Rochester, N. Y., and find out why others are so enthusiastic about this plan to make good money at home on the Home Profit Knitter.

"You can't imagine the fun of being able to knit a sock in a few minutes. And you get paid for it generously, too!" says Mrs. Gorman.

NEW YORK, N. Y., January 24, 1922.

Gentlemen: I want to thank you for your most courteous treatment accorded me on my recent visit to your plant, and let you know what a pleasure it is to investigate an organization which carries out to the letter its every promise.

Your Employment Contract is very clear on what you promise to do, and I feel very favorable to your workers. Your guarantee to refund money if machine is not as represented is a perfectly good one in my opinion, as your machine is the most substantial I have ever seen. Your ten-year guarantee against breakage, because of inferior material or poor workmanship, is very generous. In my opinion this gives your purchasers a better guarantee than usually goes with power knitting machines sold to knitting mills.

What surprised me most, however, was the simplicity with which your knitter is operated. Your instruction book must have been written by a practical expert, for you will remember I took your machine and in a surprisingly short time knit a sock without help of any sort other than the book.

Let me congratulate you upon producing a hand knitting machine of such high standard. Very cordially yours,

We are quite sure
That He will give them back—bright, pure, and beautiful;
We know He will but keep
Our own and His until we fall asleep;
We know He does not mean
To break the strands reaching between The Here and There.
He does not mean—though Heaven be fair—
To so change the spirits entering there that they forget
The eyes upraised and wet,
The lips too still for prayer,
The mute despair. He will not take
The spirits which He gave and make
The glorified so new
That they are lost to me and you.
I do believe
They will receive
Us—you and me—and be so glad
To meet us that when most I would grow sad
I just begin to think about the gladness,
When they shall tell us about the way
That they have learned to go—
Heaven's pathway show.
My lost, my own, and I
Shall have so much to see together by and by.
I do believe that just the same sweet face,
But glorified, is waiting in the place
Where we shall meet, if only I Am counted worthy in that by and by.
I do believe that God will give a sweet surprise
To tear-stained, saddened eyes,
And that this, His heaven, will be
Most glad, most tided through with joy for you and me,
As we have suffered most. God never made
Spirit for spirit, answering shade for shade,
And placed them side by side—
So wrought in one, though separate, mystified—
And meant to break
The quivering threads between. When we shall wake,
I am quite sure, we shall be very glad
That for a little while we were so sad.

Current Comment

BY A. B. LIPSCOMB

Wherein Lincoln Was Great.

The memory of Abraham Lincoln seems to be growing more precious to the public mind with each passing year. The anniversary of his birth this week has elicited literally thousands of columns of comment from the daily and weekly papers, and some of the magazines have devoted special numbers in commemoration of the event. If anything, Lincoln's posthumous fame bids fair to eclipse that of Washington, "The Father of Our Country." There are many lessons to be learned by the American youth from a résumé of the great Commoner's career. We often hear a man say what he would have done if he had been given a fair chance to do it. If those who make this complaint would only think of what a poor chance Lincoln had, comparatively speaking, and then think of how much he accomplished before he was cut down by the assassin's bullet, they would be ashamed, cease complaining, and go to work. There are many pictures of Lincoln, but the one dearest to the average American is that of a long, awkward boy spraddled before an open log fire reading a favorite book. He used the hearth fire because candles were too expensive. Compare that picture of a struggling youth with the wonderful opportunity afforded the youth of to-day to get an education, and we will begin to understand how much there is to be thankful for.

Another reason why Lincoln's memory is so much revered is because time has revealed that there have been very few men in public life who possessed the qualities of leadership that this man possessed. This is brought forcibly to mind when we note the large number of incompetents who are filling important public offices. For the most part, they are selfish and unthinking men. Lincoln was not only acquainted with and ready to do the work at hand, but he was big in soul, ever mindful of his trust, and unafraid. It was he who gave to posterity the immortal words: "With malice toward none, with charity for all, with firmness in the right as God gives us to see the right." Among the many things that he said about citizenship, perhaps the following is the most worthy conception:

As the patriots of seventy-six did to the support of the Declaration of Independence, so to the support of the Constitution and laws let every American pledge his life, his property, and his sacred honor. Let every man remember that to violate the law is to trample on the blood of his father, and to tear the charter of his own and his children's liberty. Let reverence for the laws be breathed by every American mother to the lisping babe that prattles on her lap; let it be taught in schools, in seminaries, and in colleges; let it be written in primers, spelling books, and almanacs; let it be preached from the pulpit, proclaimed in the legislative halls, and enforced in courts of justice. In short, let it become the political religion of the nation.

In the church, as in the affairs of civil government, there is need of the right kind of leadership. Here there is great danger that those who aspire to take the lead may not be worthy. They cannot truthfully say that they have malice toward none, but charity for all, because there have been too many evidences already of their selfishness and unforgiving spirit. Jesus refers to a class of men who are blind guides. "If the blind guide the blind," he says, "both shall fall into a pit." The ideal leader is not Lincoln, but Jesus Christ, the One whose memory the world is apt to disdain. They who follow him shall not walk in darkness, but in the light of God's eternal truth. Men who profess to lead other men without regard to his example will turn out to be miserable failures.

Jesus said that he who would become greatest must become "the servant of all." The reason why Lincoln became great in public life was because he applied this principle of service. Lincoln found himself, he found his place in the hearts of his countrymen, he found his secure niche in the Temple of Fame, because he lived and died to serve. The modern politician, if he be a candidate, has so much to say about what he has done and what he proposes to do that we are apt to forget the country's good in contemplation of the candidate. How different the spirit of Lincoln! Charles R. Brown, in "The Religion of a Layman," says:

The great main issues with Abraham Lincoln were not the fame of political success or personal aggrandizement of Lincoln. The main issues with him were the abolition of slavery, the preservation of the Union, the healing of the breach between the North and the South, the welfare of the entire American people. He desired, not that he might save the country, but that the country might be saved, let the credit for it go where it would. He lived in the spirit of that book which John Hay, his secretary, tells us lay always on his desk, a book in which he was accustomed to read every day. The Book says: "He that saveth his life shall lose it; but he that loseth his life for my sake shall find it."

But great as Lincoln was and great as his memory promises to be, the Christian will never cease to regret that he did not comply with all the simple conditions of the gospel plan of salvation as revealed in the New Testament. "If a man love me," Jesus said, "he will keep my commandments." This is not only the test of friendship with Christ, but of Sonship with God. Sometimes those who pin their hopes of salvation upon their good name and works apart from the church of the living God remind us of the fact that Abraham Lincoln and other famous men lived and died without ever being scripturally baptized. Then follows the question which they regard as clinching the argument in their favor: "Do you say that such a man will be lost?" To which I reply that when you and I stand in the judgment before God, the question will not be, "Did you follow Abraham Lincoln?" but, "Did you follow Jesus Christ?" When Simon Peter asked an inopportune question as to what would become of another disciple, the Savior said: "What is that to thee? . . . Follow thou me."

Who Is Responsible for the Isms?

W. J. Lhamon, writing in the Christian Century, thinks that the Bible is a dangerous instrument if it is to be interpreted by an "untrained mind," and rather suggests that the grand old Book is more of a science than a waybill to heaven. He says:

The interpretation of the Bible is a science quite as much as chemistry or botany or engineering. If the untrained man would read it as the ancient Christians did—that is, simply for its ethical and spiritual guidance, simply as one of the ways of leading to Christ—all might be well. But when the untrained man goes to the Bible for infallible dicta on which to build a creed or a sect, trouble begins. He invariably plays the rôle of the carpenter rather than the interpreter. He selects texts as the carpenter selects boards in a lumber yard. He cuts and splices without regard to context, historical setting, or literary form. In this way the most flagrant isms are built, conflicting dogmas are backed by infallible credentials, and the Bible is discredited in the eyes of intelligent people.

I am inclined to believe that the writer puts the blame for the most flagrant isms and conflicting dogmas at the wrong door. History will show that these things have been built up and are being fostered by the speculative mind that has been educated and trained in the schools of destructive higher criticism. The worst that may be said for the "untrained mind" of the average everyday reader is that it has been too greatly influenced by this show of worldly wisdom. Certainly the minds of the people should be trained in the right direction, but a great deal depends upon who does the training. If the master mind is that of a carpenter, he is more to blame than the dupes who accept his theory and build accordingly. Let us hew to the pattern that God gives us.

"They Say."

BY L. M. A.

The truth and the right are not the rule
Of Satan's subtle, keenest tool—
The slanderous liar, "They say."

"They say," "They say," the throng goes on Believing, chanting from morn till morn
The refrain of the liar, "They say."

'Tis the gossips' favored handmaid,
And the tattler's greatest aid—
The tongue of the liar, "They say."

How many fond, tender hopes have lain
In the dust or the mire, ruthlessly slain
By the merciless liar, "They say!"

How many hearts have been bruised and broken
By unjust words maliciously spoken,
And affirmed, by the liar, "They say."

Soon shall be brought to the judgment bar,
There to receive neither crown nor star,
But a just award, the liar, "They say."

You who stand for justice and right,
You who for Truth's standard fight,
Heed not nor aid the liar, "They say."

Field Notes.

BY EARNEST C. LOVE,

Since last report I have visited McEwen, Waverly, Martin, Gardner, and Union City.

We have no congregation in McEwen, but I heard some of the brethren at Dickson say they were thinking of helping to start a congregation there. The brethren in McEwen, some of them, at least, are anxious to have a church there.

We have an old congregation at Waverly, and a protracted meeting is to be held there soon.

At Martin I found a nice membership. Brother Eph. P. Smith, who is a splendid preacher and school-teacher, lives at Martin. He is principal of the public schools, both grammar school and high school. When I arrived in Martin, I did not know a soul. I asked a storekeeper if he knew E. P. Smith. He said: "Yes; he is the Campbellite preacher." I knew then where to place the storekeeper. I found Brother Smith and was entertained in his home, and spoke in his school to over six hundred boys and girls. Fortunately, I also got to hear Dr. Harry Clark, State Secretary of Education, in a short address. Dr. Clark is a bright man, full of enthusiasm, and made exactly the same kind of a talk that was made to us thirty years ago. He took the example of a poor girl who, in spite of various handicaps, overcame every obstacle, obtained an education, and secured a good position, and is now carving out a wonderful career for herself.

This is all very good for some, and we never know who can succeed till we see them try. Even while he was talking, though, my mind went back to one of my teachers when I was fourteen years old—the last teacher I had in the grammar school. Later we were schoolmates in an advanced school. But she had dropped out of my knowledge, but not out of my memory; for I can never forget the lessons of culture and kindness I learned from her. I was happily surprised to meet her at the close of a recent service. She is not so young-looking as she was twenty-five or thirty years ago. But where has she been for all these years? A few simple words explained all. When she was at the very height of her ambition to get more and more learning and to become a teacher, her father died. Her mother was left with several younger children to rear,

This noble girl gave up all hope of an education and a career, smothered the fervent fires of ambition, and went home to "help mother bring up the children" and to be a comfort and help to her in her sorrow and bereavement. Through all these years, while others were pursuing "their favorite phantoms" of joy and pleasure in the wide world, this princess (for she is nothing less) was serving in a humble way the wants of a bereaved mother and orphaned children. When angels write with golden pens on pages fair the glorious deeds of earth's greatest heroines, will they write the deeds of the Jane Addamses and the Frances Willards and leave to forgetfulness this brave act of this young Christian girl who poured out a life's longings upon the altar of obscure service? Every fiber of our being answers no. God will not forget. The angels will remember. Our Savior knows. After all, then, it matters little where and how we spend the few years allotted to us here, so we are adding each day to the sum of human happiness. This is not to be construed as discouraging ambition and a struggle for higher and better things. But in all things we should set love and duty first, and whatever follows in that line, we should say: "Thy will be done."

From Martin I went to Gardner, a small place four miles west. We have some fine brethren there, too. They have recently had a debate between Brother John C. Taylor, of Obion, and a Baptist preacher by the name of Jones. The brethren are certainly well pleased with Brother Taylor's efforts. He is to meet the same man at New Home, a Baptist church four miles south of Martin, beginning on February 27 and continuing six days. Let's try to be there. I want to be there.

Sunday, February 12, I spent at Union City. After services I went home with Brother S. F. Howard, and in the course of our conversation I found out he is a brother to Brother Buck Howard, of Maury County. I preached at Union City in the morning, heard Brother E. P. Smith at Gardner in the afternoon, and got back to Union City to hear Brother F. L. Paisley at night. Brother Paisley is to be located at Martin the coming year.

The interest of the Gospel Advocate is being looked after in Union City by Brother W. S. Long, Sr., father of W. S. Long, Jr., of Washington, D. C. Also, I found that Sister J. P. Thompson, of Centerville, is the daughter of our Brother Long here. I am always glad to see the grand old men who have borne the heat and burden of the day. Their conversation is always inspiring to me.

My work will be in Martin, Fulton, and vicinity till February 17. Then I want to go south on the Illinois Central to Memphis, and back over the Mobile and Ohio. I aim to stop at every congregation. But I may miss some. If there are those who desire a visit, they may address me at Martin any time before February 20.

Relationship.

BY H. C. FLEMING.

We who have the same ancestors are blood relatives. Our relatives otherwise are by the uniting of some of our blood relatives with others not of that line, in marriage. The nearest relationship is that of husband and wife. They twain are one flesh. (Gen. 2: 24.)

If any of our ancestors have been distinguished for their great deeds, we are proud to say that we are related to them. If they have been noted for evil deeds, we are ashamed of them and try to hide the relation as far as possible; we never let it be known, if we can hinder it.

Since the blood is the animal life (Gen. 9: 4), if we are adopted into the family of another of no blood relation, we become related to them by adoption. If this is done in childhood, we receive the care, love, and protection of that family; and by association this tie becomes stronger and stronger, so that we are as one of blood relationship.

Jesus Christ descended from Adam according to the flesh through a long line of ancestors back to Adam, who was the son of God. (Luke 3: 38.) This establishes the blood relation of Christ to all the descendants of Adam—all who have ever lived on the earth and all who are now living on it. Therefore, all have this tie of relationship through the flesh.

By sin the right to live in the flesh was forfeited; and to restore man to that purity that Adam had before he sinned, it became necessary that Christ should descend directly from God the Father. And we have the declaration: "Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee." (Acts 13: 33; Heb. 1: 5; 5: 5.)

"He that overcometh shall inherit all things; and I will be his God, and he shall be my son." (Rev. 21: 7.) Thus through the relationship of Christ to the Father we are permitted to be the adopted sons of God. (Gal. 4: 5.)

Christ, being made perfect through suffering, "became the author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey him." (Heb. 5: 9.) His obedience was "unto death, even the death of the cross." (Phil. 2: 8.) He "suffered for us, leaving us an example, that ye [we] should follow his steps." (1 Pet. 2: 21.) He shed his blood (the fleshly life) upon the cross, thereby making an atonement for man; for "without shedding of blood is no remission." (Heb. 9: 22.)

The giving up of the fleshly life is necessary to the eternal spiritual life. "Flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God." (1 Cor. 15: 50.) As Christ suffered the death of the flesh, so must we crucify the flesh with its lusts and die with him by being buried with him in baptism, to rise to walk in newness of life. (Rom. 6: 4.)

If we have been married to him, we should bring forth fruits unto God (Rom. 7: 4), and this will make us closely related unto Him who has all authority in heaven and on earth, and we will be called unto the marriage supper of the Lamb (Rev. 19: 9) and thus be saved from the second death (Rev. 20: 14).

Nashville (Tenn.) Notes.

BY S. H. HALL.

So far as I am able to judge, the preparation for the Hardeman-Pullias revival at the Ryman Auditorium, beginning March 28, moves gloriously onward. All the congregations are interested, and the song drills are one of the greatest treats Nashville has had. May God's presence be in every word and act we speak and engage in preparatory to this great drive. If God is in it and stays in it, success will crown it. But the meeting will be a miserable failure, even if crowds pack the building to overflowing, if God is driven out of our hearts and lives—that is, the hearts and lives of those who are encouraging this work. Let me make this plainer still. If God is to be in this revival, those of us who are talking it, boosting it, must let him into our own hearts and lives now. God will be in that revival only to the degree we let him be in us at the time it begins. There are some who should not need the revival so much—viz., those who are daily working and praying for the glorious success of the work that has been announced to begin on March 28. Not that we will not get great good out of it. Yes, indeed, we grow and grow as we work and serve for others. But real Christians need no revival. Revivals are for those who need reviving. Many such Christians, doubtless, have we in and near Nashville. Revivals are not for aliens. Revivals are for such as Paul addressed in Eph. 5: 14 when he said: "Awake thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall shine upon thee." You have heard of one's being "dead asleep." Some of those Ephesian brethren were dead asleep spiritually. They were asleep religiously and did not know it. Are any of us in such a condition? Well, listen: If there is one of us that hates a brother, and at the same time we think we are alive to God, we are in such a condition. "We know we have passed out of death into life, because we love the brethren. He that loveth not abideth in death. Whosoever hateth his brother is a murderer; and ye know that no murderer hath eternal life abiding in him." (1 John 3: 14, 15.) Let me suggest, then, that the Nashville Christians let a revival come on and be over before March 28. Let every one of us "get right with God." If we are conscious of a single thing in which we are out of harmony with him. Then, on March 28, let us start the biggest campaign that has ever been in this city to lead those to Christ who have never known him in the pardon of their sins.

A revival is on at Russell Street Church. Let every congregation start one. Six more souls took a stand with us last Lord's day for the work before us. Will we not put away, as we are commanded, "all wickedness, and all guile, and hypocrisies, and envies, and all evil speakings?" (See 1 Pet. 2: 1.) "Finally, be ye all like-minded, compassionate, loving as brethren, tender-hearted, humble-minded; not rendering evil for evil, or reviling for reviling; but contrariwise blessing." (1 Pet. 3: 8, 9.) Let us see to it that we are saved ourselves, so completely so that the joys of salvation the alien can see we have. Then a great work we can do in saving others. David put it right when he said: "Restore unto me the joy of thy salvation; and uphold me with thy willing spirit. Then will I teach transgressors thy ways; and sinners shall be converted unto thee." (Ps. 51: 12, 13.)

"He Is Faithful That Promised."

BY B. C. GOODPASTURE.

Nothing can give one greater incentive to fulfill the conditions of a promise than faithfulness on the part of him who has promised. Of course, the things promised furnish mighty incentives; but these amount to nothing if he who promised is untrustworthy and unreliable. On the other hand, nothing can contribute more to the disregard of the conditions of a promise than unfaithfulness on the part of him who has promised. It is also true that the things promised can be so inconsiderable and worthless as to lend encouragement to neglect and total disregard of all conditions.

The unfailing faithfulness of the Lord is made the grounds upon which the writer of Hebrews (10: 23) bases this stirring admonition: "Let us hold fast the confession of our hope that it waver not; for he is faithful that promised." He will not fail. Napoleon broke faith with his wife, the gifted Josephine, and Ahasuerus deposed his queen, the beautiful Vashti; but the Lord never disappointed one who trusted in him. Men may not be able always to perform their promises, but the Lord of hosts is. The fact gave strong conviction and steadfastness to Abraham. Paul, speaking of Abraham's faith in one of God's promises, said: "He wavered not through unbelief, but waxed strong through faith, giving glory to God, and being fully assured that what he had promised, he was able also to perform." (Rom. 4: 20, 21.) It is also true that some men, even when they are able, fail to keep their promises; but the Lord God does not. Paul, in his epistle to Titus, emphasizes the fact that the promise of eternal life is sure: for he writes "in hope of eternal life, which God, who cannot lie, promised before times eternal." (Tit. 1: 2.) If we comply with the conditions upon which eternal life is promised, we shall certainly receive it; because God will perform his promises—he "cannot lie" through failure to make them good. It is implied here that, if the Lord should fail to make his promise good, he would be guilty of lying. In other words, if he "cannot lie," he cannot fail to keep his promises.

It is impossible for one to be like God—godlikeness is godliness—who deliberately fails to keep his promises. It is true that men sometimes make promises in good faith, and later developments over which they have no control render them unable to make them good; but I am not speaking of that class. I have in mind those who can, but do not, keep their promises. Are they godly with reference to their promises? Indeed, are they truthful? I heard of an old colored preacher who had an enviable reputation for his ability to raise funds. A young, fellow minister once asked him if he withdrew from his members for stinginess, if they failed to contribute. The old man replied that he first got them to promise to give so much; and then, if they failed to keep their promises, he withdrew from them for lying. Was he right? Did he have sufficient grounds for excommunication? Is it not strange that men will keep promises in matters of purely secular business, when they seem to regard lightly promises pertaining directly to the service of the Lord? Why? Is it because they love their business more than the church; or do they fear the arm of the law as exercised in the business world, while they feel that the brethren in the church will not force collection through legal procedure? There is something wrong at this point. God has instructed us to the "intent that, denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live soberly and righteously and godly in this present world." (Tit. 1: 2.) To live "godly," one must keep his promises when it is humanly possible.

Finally, if we would make sure the blessings in God's promises, we must comply with the conditions upon which these blessings are promised. God certainly will do his part. If we fail, the trouble is with us.

NEWS NOTES.

There was one baptism at West End Avenue yesterday (February 12). One came from the Christian Church at the evening service.

Hugh E. Garrett is in the midst of a mission meeting at Moultrie, Ga. The interest was growing at the time of the last report. Let every one who is interested in the field work as being done by Brother Garrett express his interest by sending a contribution for this work to R. L. Harwell, treasurer of West End Avenue Church, 153 Oglethorpe Avenue, Atlanta, Ga.

The big auditorium meeting in Nashville will be a season of refreshing. Will the Nashville brethren secure excursion rates for us fellows who live so far from Nashville? We may not be able to attend if they do not.

Brother C. C. Merritt recently gave the Atlanta churches some good lessons on missions.

The Passing of a Useful Man.

BY F. W. SMITH.

It was with profound regret and sorrow that we learned of the death of J. S. Dunn, who was in the prime of life and great usefulness. The writer knew him when quite a young man attending the Nashville Bible School, and has been associated with him in meetings in his Western homes. To know J. S. Dunn was to love him, because he was a lovable man, and, in my judgment, wholly unselfish. I never labored with a more congenial preacher nor with one more thoughtful and considerate of another's comfort. He was not only a preacher loyal to God's word, but he knew how to present it to the people, and his labors were abundantly blessed with additions to the church and the building up of churches. He was one of the most energetic and tireless workers I have ever known, and a man that could win his way to the hearts of all classes. It was not his custom when he invited a preacher to assist him and the church for which he labored in a meeting to let the preacher do all the work. He was busy here and there, always helping in some way the meeting, and at times it seemed that he was everywhere. The church has lost a valuable servant in Brother Dunn, but his work will follow him. Our deepest sympathy is extended to his wife and children, brothers, sisters, and to his aged mother, on whom the blow has fallen so heavily.

Field Editor.

BY J. C. McQ.

E. C. Love is in the field securing subscribers to the Gospel Advocate and preaching to the churches he visits. He is furnishing "Field Notes" to the Advocate. He is an able preacher, a plain, earnest Christian, and is well equipped for the work he is doing. We bespeak for him a hearty reception by the churches. Any courtesies shown him will be very greatly appreciated by the publisher and editors of the Gospel Advocate. He is authorized to represent all our publications.

February Receipts Are Ahead.

The receipts for February, 1922, are ahead of the receipts for the same month of 1921. The prospects are bright for making 1922 the best year the Gospel Advocate has had in many years. It should be done.

Many are at work making up a club to get the Matthew Henry Commentary on the Bible. Some have completed their clubs and are ordering the Commentary. Still others are ordering the Fountain Pen, which is a most excellent pen. The gift offer has been discontinued.

We appreciate the effort of our friends and readers. With the hearty cooperation of our workers, we are expecting a very decided increase in the circulation of the Gospel Advocate. Don't wait to secure subscribers, but go to work to-day.

The following offers are still standing:

1. For twenty-five new yearly subscribers to the Gospel Advocate, accompanied by $2 each, we will give a complete set of Matthew Henry's Commentary, composed of six volumes, handsomely and substantially bound. This is a new and large-type edition.
2. For two new yearly subscribers, accompanied by $4, we will give a first-class, self-filling Fountain Pen; or for $2 sent with one new yearly subscriber we will give the pen. This is a guaranteed pen, and is much better than is usually used as a premium pen.
3. For four new yearly subscribers, accompanied by $8, we will give a copy of "The Gospel Plan of Salvation," by Dr. T. W. Brents. This book has had a large sale and is one of the ablest and best books published.
4. For two new yearly subscribers, accompanied by $4, we will give a copy of "The Teacher's Testament with Notes," and also with an introduction to each book by a ripe scholar. Many of our readers have received this Testament and are delighted with it. Any one or all of these offers are liable to be withdrawn soon. All who act promptly will be able to receive whatever premium in the above list is preferred.

Those who are in arrears for their paper should pay up at the rate of $2.50 a year to January 1, 1922, and then renew at the rate of $2 a year. We have reduced the price of the paper while labor still remains high and has not been reduced since the war. We will not carry subscribers indefinitely. The prompt remittance of all who owe us will be very helpful and greatly appreciated.

GOSPEL ADVOCATE (By J. C. McQuiddy).

The Folly of the Rich Fool.

BY JAMES E. CHESSOR.

The parable of the rich fool was spoken primarily to supply an immediate need. (Read Luke 12: 13-21.) It seems that two brothers had disagreed about an inheritance, and one of them, being displeased with the portion of goods that had fallen to him, had appealed to Jesus to intervene in his behalf. "Teacher," said he, "bid my brother divide the inheritance with me." Whether he had been defrauded or not is not stated, but there is nothing to indicate that his quarrel was just. I think it probable that he himself was inclined to be covetous, for Jesus immediately warned against that sin.

This quarrel of the brothers about the inheritance is not unusual or surprising, but such has been a very common occurrence in every age. There are many petty fraternal strifes over property nowadays, and not a few of them ultimately are carried to law. As a matter of fact, our chancery courts often are clogged with litigation over contested wills and property disputes, brother being arrayed against brother and sister against sister. Blood is thinner than water in these legal maneuvers to get the lion's share of the estate, the "last will and testament" of father or mother being "broken" without qualm of conscience. Indeed, I have not observed brothers and sisters to be very clannish when it comes to a division of the inheritance; but I have seen them exhibit a cold, independent, selfish attitude toward one another, with set determination to have their "rights." The disgruntled brother who came to Jesus has his counterpart in the querulous man that comes into court with some such plea or plaint as this: "Judge, I've been wronged in the way my father's estate was portioned out; I didn't get my due; therefore, decree a just share to me." Those are not the words, perhaps, for the plea must be couched in legal phraseology, and hence it becomes necessary to employ some exact lawyer to "file the bill" and plead the case in court. And so the legal mill grinds away, the litigants—poor fools!—paying the excessive "toll."

But Jesus let it be known that he was not a divider of property. Indeed, we would do well to remember that the way of godliness is not a way of gain, nor yet a way of strife and litigation. That this murmuring heir to the inheritance should endeavor to enlist the Savior's moral power to his pecuniary advantage shows how low and unworthy was his conception of the mission of the world's Redeemer. He would make Jesus an arbiter of petty quarrels over real estate, a judge of property rights, a divider of inheritances. He would busy the divine Teacher with mere temporal matters, to the neglect of higher responsibilities, diverting his time and energies from the saving of men's souls to the gaining of earthly possessions for them. Jesus rebuked him sharply, "Man, who made me a judge or a divider over you?" Jesus came to seek and save the lost, and lands and goods are trivial and sordid in comparison with souls. It would help us all to remember our prime duty in this life—namely: "Seek ye first his kingdom, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you."

Jesus followed up this rebuke with grave teaching on covetousness. "Take heed," said he, addressing the multitude, "and keep yourselves from all covetousness." This solemn warning, if heeded, would save many a soul from hell; but the world, for the most part, has turned a deaf ear to it. Witness the mad chase after the dollar. Though addressing a Jewish audience in Jerusalem, Jesus was speaking to men of all ages; he was striking at an inherent propensity of perverse human nature toward greed and avarice. "Keep yourselves from all covetousness"—guard against every form of greed. He would have men root this evil passion out of their hearts and free themselves from its tyranny. Jesus, the Seer, was warning us of the twentieth century to beware of our besetting sin. For is it not materialism (the tendency to make material interests paramount) that has become the greatest barrier to Christian progress in America? I think so. Certainly the warning of Jesus is timely. Our very prosperity has become a stumblingblock in our path, absorbing, as it does, our interest, engrossing our energies, and monopolizing our time. When materialism gains the ascendancy, spirituality wanes. Christianity, which should be the absorbent of life, cannot have free course in the heart that thinks continually in terms of acres and barns, of stocks and bonds. "Ye cannot serve God and mammon." Paul wrote Timothy to "charge them that are rich in this present world, that they be not high-minded, nor have their hope set on the uncertainty of riches, but on God."

Jesus next denies that life, in the true contemplation of the term, is dependent upon an abundance of goods. "For a man's life," avers the Teacher of Galilee, "consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth." Since a man's life—his happiness and best interests in time and eternity—is not contingent upon great possessions, why should he covet goods and give place to greed? This is the inference. The word "life" is perhaps the most abused word in our language. It is used in many senses, even in the Bible; but Jesus here employs the term to mean the real in contradistinction to the false. Jesus is speaking of the life that is life indeed. Not life as the worldling or spendthrift sees it; not life as the miser sees it; but life as Jesus, the Teacher sent from God, sees it. There is a life, falsely so-called, that depends upon luxury—the gaudy, artificial, sensual life; but "the end thereof are the ways of death." Indeed, the life of the pampered rich is best described as gilded misery and wretched anxiety, so far removed is it from the happy life. On the other hand, the life that is life indeed does not depend upon a surfeit of goods and luxuries; it does not feed upon husks, and it rises above the sordid things of earth.

What does life consist of, then, if it can dispense with luxury and does not depend for its happiness and success upon riches? What is this life, positively considered, that alone is worthy the term? In brief, it is simply the life that is "hid with Christ in God"—the Christ life, the God life—the hidden life that feasts upon God's hidden manna. It is the life that is "more than the food," whose meat and drink, like that blessed life of Jesus himself, is to do the will of the Father. It is the life of abiding faith that asks no such miserable questions as, "What shall we eat?" or, "What shall we drink?" or, "Wherewithal shall we be clothed?" Rather, it is the life that "trusts and obeys" and "beareth fruit with patience." It is the steady undercurrent that lies too deep to be agitated by tide or buffeted by wind; the life of peace that passeth understanding, of joy unspeakable, of love unfeigned. It is nothing more or less than the humble, consecrated life of the Christian, the life that the poorest of earth can live and claim its recompense.

Abruptly turning from the literal method of teaching, Jesus spoke a parable to illustrate and impress his lesson. A certain wealthy man was the owner of broad acres which were unusually fertile and productive, and his harvests were so rich and abundant that he knew not what to do with his surplus grain. He had big barns here and there on his vast estate, but they had not sufficient capacity to garner all his fruits. Hence, the rich farmer was greatly perplexed. "What shall I do," he asked himself in his anxiety, "because I have not where to bestow my fruits?" But he was resourceful and self-reliant, and, after a little thinking, he hit upon what occurred to him to be a happy solution of the problem. The plan was simplicity itself, but the essence of folly. He would raze his old barns and build new ones with greater capacity and hoard his surplus harvest yield. "This will I do," said he in soliloquy;

"I will pull down my barns, and build greater; and there will I bestow all my grain and my goods." Pleased with the idea of hoarding a great surplus, he looks to the future confidently. "And I will say to my soul, Soul, thou hast much goods laid up for many years: take thine ease, eat, drink, be merry." The complacency with which he planned for future years only deepens the tragedy of his life. His soul was required of him that night. He had builded foolishly. It is important to note some of the elements of his folly.

An outstanding mistake lies in his purpose to hoard his goods. The rich fool was condemned for purposing to hoard a surplus, whereas Dives was condemned for consuming a surplus upon his lusts. In both cases it was misuse, and not mere possession, of a surplus, that brought condemnation. If each had used his surplus for the relief of suffering, his beneficence would have called down the divine approbation. But no man, blessed with abundance, as was the rich fool and Dives, shall live unto himself with impunity; he shall not "nourish his heart in a day of slaughter" and go unpunished. "Whoso stoppeth his ears at the cry of the poor, he also shall cry, but shall not be heard." Thus it was with Dives when he lifted up his eyes in Hades. Rich men, as stewards in trust, must be rich toward God; they must not lay up treasure for themselves, oblivious to the call of charity. But the rich farmer did the thing Jesus, in the Sermon on the Mount, warned men not to do—"Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon the earth;" he failed to do the thing Jesus admonished men to do—"Lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven." He, therefore, had no good foundation against the time to come, and was called hence utterly unprepared. His mistake of hoarding is typical of thousands of rich men to-day. It seems to me that the world is guilty of a misuse of its surplus: a great portion is being hoarded; a still greater portion is being wasted in riotous living. The right use of the world's bounty would eliminate in large measure the sufferings of mankind. I believe, with Milton, that—

"If every just man that now pines with want
Had but a moderate and beseeching share
Of that which lewdly-pampered Luxury
Now heaps upon some few with vast excess,
Nature's full blessings would be well dispensed
In unsuperfluous even proportion.
And she no whit encumbered with her store."

Another element of his folly was his failure to make preparation for the eventuality of death. He planned to live a long life in mirth and luxury and ease. Death was a contingency he entirely overlooked. There can be no greater mistake on the part of mortal than to reckon without death, to forget that life is uncertain and that death approaches apace. The opulent farmer counted on long life and prepared for it, but he made no provision for its close. "Soul, thou hast much goods laid up for many years." He had the goods, but not the years, and goods without years in which to consume them could avail him nothing. No man plans wisely or builds securely who does not take into consideration the brevity and uncertainty of human life, the imminence of death; who does not realize that he is mortal. It is certainly the height of folly to live as though this life shall never end and as though eternity shall never begin. The rich fool made this mistake, and millions are repeating it. Thoreau, America's poet-naturalist, made this remarkable statement as he lay on his deathbed: "When I was a very little boy, I learned that I must die, and I set that down; so, of course, I am not disappointed now." The rich fool had never "set down" this serious fact; he had staved off the disturbing thought until it haunted him not. With what startling surprise, then, came the declaration, "This night is thy soul required of thee!"

Fundamentally, the rich fool's prime error lay in the fact that he set his judgment over against God's judgment; or, rather, he left God out of his planning. This, indeed, is the very peak of his folly. He did not say, "If the Lord wills;" but he said, "This will I do." He made lavish use of the personal pronoun of the first person. He deliberately sought out the counsel of his own heart. The rich fool spoke first and boastfully; God spoke last and with a solemn finality. "But God said to him, Thou foolish one, this night is thy soul required of thee." God calls him a fool, and such, indeed, he was, the verdict of the world to the contrary notwithstanding. No man can get along without God. To discount his wisdom means calamity.

Exit soul; but who shall fall heir to his vast estate and his hoarded goods? "And the things which thou hast prepared, whose shall they be?" Indeed, whose shall they be? Solomon said a man of means could not know whether a wise man or a fool should succeed to his possessions. Perhaps it mattered little with the rich fool—he was done with earth. All his plans had miscarried. His greater barns, mere figments of his dream, faded into nothingness. Tragedy—death, unbidden and unexpected—had written "finis" to his life. Only behind remain, momentarily, his hoarded harvest as a monumental witness to his supreme folly. He had trusted in the uncertainty of riches. We cannot mistake the lesson.

And, lest you forget, reader, let me remind you that your soul, too, one day or one night, shall be required of you. Remember, it is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God. Beware of the mistake of the rich fool. Put not your trust in riches, but anchor your hope in Jesus, who died for you. Be faithful unto death. Then shall you die in expectation of a blessed immortality and be received into the eternal tabernacles.

Commending the Literature.

"Samples of Sunday-school literature received. Must say that I am well pleased with the work, and will do all I can to encourage the use of the same. I think I can start one class this quarter." (B. W. Davis, Ashland City, Tenn.)

"For some time I have fully expected to write a word of indorsement of the Bible lessons. For many years I have been reading, studying, and teaching the Bible lesson as printed by the McQuiddy Printing Company, and have always enjoyed them very much; but I must say, with justice and brotherly love to all, in my judgment, the Bible lessons prepared by Brethren Smith and Srygley are the very best. I will do what I can to give them prestige in my year's work wherever I go." (Frank Baker, Berry, Ala.)

"I received your literature, compiled by Brethren F. W. Smith and F. B. Srygley, and will say in regard to it, I think it sound and reliable. We use it in my home congregation (Dunlap) and think it fine. I shall take what you sent me to other congregations where they use none at all, and try to influence them to use this. Thank you." (W. C. Baker, Duck River, Tenn.)

"I have just received samples of Sunday-school supplies from the McQuiddy Printing Company, edited by Brethren F. W. Smith and F. B. Srygley. I have looked over the Advanced Quarterly for the first quarter. I like the arrangement and comments very much. Indeed, I cannot see a single thing that I think could be improved." (J. R. Bradley, Elora, Tenn.)

"I have examined with some degree of care the Sunday-school literature for current quarter issued by the McQuiddy Printing Company. I find many commendable features both in arrangement and treatment. I like the topical headings with verse reference in parenthesis, comments on the Golden Text placed at end of lesson, and the clear, pointed questions. The table of contents is a convenience. No doubt all Sunday-school literature will be improved in future in respect to arrangement, etc.; but, for my part, I find very little to criticize adversely in the present Quarterlies. I passed my sample copies on to a destitute congregation in my home county with recommendation that they use them in their classes. We use this literature in our Sunday-school classes in Burritt College." (James E. Chessor, Spencer, Tenn.)

At Home and Abroad

Change of address: Willis H. Allen, from 1651 Rosselle Street, Jacksonville, Fla., to Box 44, Franklin, Ky.

Harry Hayes, of Kenton, Tenn., requests us to announce that he will be in the "song field" again this spring and summer.

H. Leo Boles preached for the Twelfth Avenue congregation, this city, morning and evening, last Lord's day. There was one confession at each service.

From R. W. Stagers, Columbus, Ga.: "I would be glad to have the name and address of any member of the church of Christ in or near Columbus."

Mrs. E. M. Shearer, Monticello, Ky., in renewing her subscription to the Gospel Advocate, says: "I have been taking the Advocate for eight years, and enjoy it so much. I would feel lost without it."

R. L. Ludlam, Jr., of Fort Smith, Ark., will be with the church at Lone Star Schoolhouse on the first Lord's day in March. From that date he plans to give some time to securing subscribers to the Gospel Advocate.

A four-days' discussion between A. G. Freed and J. E. Skinner (Baptist) is arranged to begin at Benton, Ky., on March 21. The design of baptism, apostasy, and the work of the Holy Spirit are the subjects to be discussed.

In the Gospel Advocate of February 2, under "Field Reports," in a note from W. F. Cox, Beamsville, Ontario, Canada, the word "sects" in the sixth line of his report should have been "secretary." We are glad to correct this for him.

Propositions have been signed for a debate between Jesse F. Love (Christian) and Isalah Watson (Missionary Baptist), at Womack, La., beginning on the morning of April 10 and continuing for several days. Apostasy, operation of the Holy Spirit in conversion, the design of baptism, and the church question are the subjects to be discussed.

From J. C. Mosley, Whitwell, Tenn., February 15: "I am now at home, teaching a Bible class at Daus. There were thirty-six in the class the first day. I went to Dunlap and talked at the college yesterday to over four hundred students. I made a talk at the college in Charleston, Ark., to over four hundred students. We had baptizing the last day I stayed in Arkansas, and had a meeting in Bridgeport, Ala., as I came home."

From H. A. Rogers, Estawan, Saskatchewan, Canada, February 16: "Meeting still going on here, with increased interest. When we began here, we planned on only a few meetings, and this is the third week. Since my report of February 7 [see "Field Reports"] five more have been added to the body—four by baptism and one from the Baptists. There is new interest, and we continue a little longer. There are seventeen members here now, brimful of zeal."

From R. E. L. Taylor, Plant City, Fla., February 18: "The meeting here moves along very well. One baptism to date; others expected. C. D. Moore is with me, and he is making many friends here. I will be at Lecanto on the fourth Lord's day in this month, after which I will return to Tennessee. Let any congregation desiring me to preach for them on Lord's days in March write me. I will be glad to visit them. The Lord willing, I will begin a meeting at Spencer, Tenn., the first part of April."

W. L. Neal writes from Frederick, Okla.: "C. C. Fuqua, of this city, desires to preach for the brotherhood in Tennessee or in any other State where his services may be needed. He has preached in seventeen States, held fifty debates, has a good personality, and reports himself well in the pulpit. He would accept a good location in a Southern climate. He is an able preacher and worthy of due consideration. Anything that may be done for him will be duly appreciated." Brother Neal is a member of the church of Christ at Holladay, Tenn.

From M. C. Cayce, 143 Wacaster Street, Jackson, Miss., February 13: "Yesterday was very much like a spring day here. In the morning and at night I preached in Jackson, and in the afternoon at Ridgeland. Three cars from here went to Ridgeland. We had a good audience and fine attention. Several of our members here are now sick with 'flu' or the grip. Calls for meetings continue to come in. This field needs more New Testament preachers. I want to remind our readers that Vicksburg needs and deserves help, that they may quickly build their much-needed house. Mail checks or other remittances to W. F. Hanes, 1201 First North Street, Vicksburg, Miss."

In our issue of February 9, in Brother Kurfess' article, in the first column on page 131, the twenty-sixth and twenty-seventh lines from the top were transposed in handling the type matter after it had been put in page form, by which the sense of the article at this point was utterly destroyed. We regret this very much. The proper placing of these two lines will make the full sentence read as follows: "Furthermore, in expatiating on this alleged parallel between my treatment of psallo and Mr. Morrison's treatment of baptizo, he attempts to add odium to my book by making an invidious comparison of its author with this 'affusionist' teacher and charging that I am 'making common cause with him!' If psallo revolutionized to accommodate Mr. Kurfess, we dare not conclude that baptizo would do less to gratify Dr. Strong and Mr. Morrison." (Page 69.)

From U. G. Wilkinson, Comanche, Okla.: "As a result of my letters making known my condition and needs to the brotherhood, I received through the holidays one hundred and twelve dollars, which has been of great assistance to me. May God bless all who have assisted in my time of need. But expenses are high at this season of the year, and I still am sure I will not be able to do anything until warm weather; but I hope and pray to yet recover, that I may again be with my brethren in the noble work of the Lord. O, if I could respond to the calls to come and help that I receive, what a pleasure it would be! But I cannot yet do so, and I cheerfully submit to the will of the Lord. He knows what is best for all his faithful servants, and just how to reward us all according to our works. I still ask the prayers and assistance of the brethren, and will try to let them hear from me occasionally. May God bless all his faithful children."

From William P. Walker, Dinuba, Cal., February 13: "Yesterday was another great day for the Dinuba church. The largest audiences that we have had since I have been here. There were about twenty-five young people in my Callopan class—a class for young people. This class is working for fifty present by March 1. I am using Brother Smith's Advanced Quarterly—that is, we study the Quarterlies at home. The song service was soul-stirring and soul-winning. There were four additions at the morning service—three baptisms and one restoration. Some preachers say California is a hard field to work. Well, it may be for the indolent preacher; but I find folk here just about like folk back in Tennessee, Texas, and Kentucky. If we go after them, we usually get them. Dinuba believes in everybody working, everybody praying, everybody giving, and everybody a soul winner for Jesus. Brethren, souls are dying to-day, dying without the precious blood of Christ. Did you stop to talk to some poor lost soul to-day? Did you invite some one to the great marriage feast? Please do not wait till Sunday to say your little speech at the Lord's table; tell it to-day—yes, tell it wherever you go. Somebody needs to be prayed for to-day. Somebody needs to be encouraged. Win somebody to-day."

J. W. Grant, Lakeland, Fla., writes: "About the first of last December A. B. Lipscomb published in the Gospel Advocate an appeal in behalf of Alexander Kh. B. Yohannan, who, with his wife and two children, is in desperate straits in far-away Asia, terribly poverty-stricken, as a result of the awful war. Brother Lipscomb suggested that those wishing to help Brother Yohannan should send their donations to me to forward to him. As a result of this appeal, a number of brethren and sisters sent money to me, amounting, in all, to twenty-nine dollars. I sent a postal-card receipt to each giver separately. This morning (February 7) I started to Brother Yohannan a remittance of forty dollars, including in it the twenty-nine dollars above referred to. I pray that he may get it and be able to use it for the needs of his family. I used the best means I know of to get it safe to him in a usable form; but since the war came on there has been some trouble to him in using the funds I sent him after he got them. I sent him twenty dollars last fall, but have not yet heard if he got it and could use it. I sent it, and also this to-day, in accordance with his latest instructions to me as to how to send it. It seems that he has had to leave Persia and is near Bagdad, in Mesopotamia; but his instruction to me since he went there is still to address mail to him at Hamadan, Persia, care of the Imperial Bank. I so directed both remittances, and sent them by registered mail in United States notes. I shall not attempt to send again till I hear from one or both of these, and that he can use them. In his behalf, I thank all who have manifested an interest in his welfare."

Disciples.

By OSCAR SMITH.

Christians are called "saints" with reference to their purity and consecration to God. They are called "Christians" because they are followers of Christ. They are called "believers" because of their belief in Christ. They are called "brethren" because they are members of the same family, and are, therefore, related to each other. They are called "disciples" because they accept Christ as their Teacher and follow him in all things.

Christ, after his resurrection, met his disciples in a mountain in Galilee and said; "Go ye therefore, and make disciples of all the nations, baptizing them into the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I commanded you; and lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world." (Matt. 28: 19, 20.) The command to "go" indicates an aggressive warfare. They were not told to make great philosophers, but humble babes in Christ. The expression "make disciples" shows that men are made disciples by the simple teaching of the gospel. After they have been taught, they are to be baptized "into the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit."

We are told that during the first century of Christianity heathen nations would say, "See how these Christians love one another." They were held together by strong bands of brotherly love. Disciples of Christ to-day love one another. Jesus says: "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another." (John 13: 35.) Without the love of God in our hearts we cannot serve God acceptably. (See 1 Cor. 13: 1-5.)

Disciples are fruit bearers. "Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit; and so shall ye be my disciples." (John 15: 8.) The desire of the husbandman is to produce strong, vigorous vines, laden with fruit. The aim of the disciple is to let his light shine that others may see his good works, and glorify our Father in heaven.

Disciples abide in Christ's word. "If ye abide in my word, then are ye truly my disciples." (John 8: 31.) To "abide in" the word is to be obedient to the word. James (1: 25) says: "But he that looketh into the perfect law, the law of liberty, and so continueth, being not a hearer that forgetteth but a doer that worketh, this man shall be blessed in his doing." (James 1: 25.) Only those who study the word of God and obey it have the promise of the blessings of the gospel.

Anciently, Christ's disciples met on the first day of the week to break bread. (See Acts 20: 7.) In the sphere of church activities to-day I find brethren who seem to be satisfied to remain away from the assembly on the Lord's day. If the Bible teaches that true disciples meet on the first day of the week to break bread—and it does (1 Cor. 16: 1, 2)—is it safe to stay away? Brethren, let us measure ourselves by the "divine standard of measurement."

Personal Notes.

C. D. Crouch reports the congregation in Port Arthur, Texas, in better condition than a year ago, and that he is to remain with them a while longer. He will be glad to hear from congregations desiring to arrange with him for summer meetings.

The church in Denison, Texas, with the assistance of M. C. Cuthbertson, is doing work for the Master which is being felt in that city. In the Bible-school work last Sunday there were three hundred and eight, and at the hour of worship the house was crowded with those who came to worship and others who came to hear the sermon.

Ben West, who labors with the Southside Church in Fort Worth, Texas, reports one more addition last Sunday and the work progressing nicely, with seven young men in the congregation who preach at some mission point on Sunday afternoons. Among other things, he says: "I heartily agree with you on the need for plain preaching of the simple gospel. Too many want debates to cease, fearing adverse criticism from the sects, as if our work is to please them rather than God."

L. S. White, the popular minister with the church in Sherman, Texas, is to assist the church in Itasca in a series of meetings, beginning on the fifth Sunday in July. Announcement is made thus early that the congregations in reach of Itasca may arrange their meetings for such date as will permit them to attend this meeting in Itasca. The Itasca congregation has the distinction of having in the Bible classes each Sunday morning more students than there are members of the congregation there. W. P. Skaggs, the efficient minister with this congregation, has a date open for a protracted meeting the last of April.

W. P. Skaggs, the much-loved minister with the church in Itasca, Texas, recently visited the saints in Teague. He reports a pleasant stay with them, and that the congregation is devoted, spiritual, and full of good works. J. W. Chism now lives in Teague, being there to see after some business interests he has near that place. Though a busy man in his secular work, Brother Chism has time to do some work in preaching, and is known as one of the strongest men among us. It is our hope that soon he will be in the work again for full time. Such men are needed.

Our hearts go out in sympathy to G. H. P. Showalter, who a few days ago buried his mother. Some years ago when I was called to my Tennessee home by the death of my father, at the same time Brother Showalter was called to Virginia by the death of his father; and now his mother and my mother have both passed to the great overworld, and the summons for each of them came near the same time. Both were Christians, as were our fathers.

Sister E. W. McMillian, the devoted wife of E. W. McMillian, the minister with the church of Christ in Waco, Texas, has been subjected to the necessity of having both of her lower limbs amputated at the hip. Brother McMillian writes me: "With both lower limbs amputated at the hip, my dear companion still prays to live. For two weeks I have prayed that she may be spared to remain as the light and sunshine of my life and the mother of our little girl. But beyond this desire we have agreed together to be happy and satisfied with the outworkings of the Father's good will. So far as science knows, she has little chance to recover, but she and I still believe she will survive it all. My cross is not more than I am willing to bear, but I do crave the touch of the good Father's hand." Wonderful faith and commendable resignation is this on the part of our brother, a young man, one of our brightest and most promising men for usefulness in the work of the Master. For him and his our prayers ascend.

SERMON OUTLINES

A Book of One Hundred and Fifty New Sermon Outlines

Just the book for preachers, elders, deacons, Bible-class teachers, and others that take public part in church services.

The book has one hundred and fifty sermon outlines and a helpful supplement containing funeral texts, marriage ceremonies, forms for church letters, and Hedge's "Rules" for debate.

A good book to use in your Lord's-day services, prayer meetings, and young people's meetings. Let the leader announce the subject, hand slips of paper containing different sections of the outline to the members who are to take part in the next meeting, requesting them to make a talk or read the scriptural references on that section of the outline. Or, let the leader put the outline on the blackboard, omitting the scriptural references, then ask the congregation to supply the correct scriptural references at the next meeting, and give reasons why they selected these references.

Review of O. E. Payne's Book on "Psallo."

CHAPTER VII.

THE PASSAGE FROM LUCIAN.

In accordance with my promise in the early part of this review, I now propose a careful examination of the famous passage from Lucian. It is proper to say, however, at the very beginning, that this examination is by no means called for because the passage itself, in its essential meaning and from the Christian point of view, has any decisive bearing whatever upon the psallo controversy, for, as we shall see from the facts in the case, it has absolutely no such bearing at all; but it is deemed proper to give the attention to it that is here proposed because of the great ado made over it and the misleading application made of it in the book here under review. This ado is not only begun by a conspicuous display of the passage on the title-page, but it is continued by numerous and repeated displays of it in the body of the book on pages 66, 135, 129, 140, 142, 167, 178, 253, 278, 286, 287, 305, 316, and 318, and thus it is paraded through fourteen pages besides the title-page. In fact, the author of the book seems to think that the little squib from the Grecian satirist contains a veritable mine of logical wealth, a regular bonanza for the instrumental-music cause; but, like many other things in the book, all that its incorrect and misleading application needs in order to change the situation radically is to appeal to the facts and turn on the light.

Hence, over against this conspicuous ado made about the passage, I unhesitatingly affirm that, so far as the matter of support for instrumental music in Christian worship is concerned, there is absolutely not a solitary thing in it, and I now propose to go to the bottom of it and to demonstrate this fact to any fair-minded person who is capable of sound reasoning and who will properly weigh all testimony in the case. As a matter of fact, when we come to see the real teaching of the passage, this ado over it will not only be seen in its true light, but every vestige of what even appeared, by misapplication, to be an argument for the instrumental-music cause will vanish into nothing.

That our readers may appreciate the criticism here to be made, they should know something about who Lucian is, and particularly his thorough knowledge of the Greek language and his unquestioned ability to write that language correctly. I shall, therefore, first of all, introduce him to them both in his capacity as a Greek scholar and in his attitude toward Christianity. As one of the keenest wits and probably the greatest satirist in all Greek literature, if he could see the novel interpretation put upon his little Greek sentence containing psallo and the changes rung on it as a weapon in support of a theological tenet in the numerous pages just cited, he would probably furnish the world with another rare specimen of ridicule, if not, indeed, of biting sarcasm.

The time of Lucian is usually placed between A.D. 120 and A.D. 180. He was born at Samosata, modern name Samsat, a city on the Euphrates in Northern Syria. By mistake he is sometimes confused with another Lucian, the eminent Christian martyr of the same name and born in the same city, but who lived in the fourth century A.D. The latter also is said to have possessed great learning; and, rather than surrender his faith and convictions, he courageously suffered martyrdom by hunger and torture under the Emperor Maximin Daza.

Concerning the Lucian of our passage, I now submit the testimony of leading authorities. The New International Encyclopedia says:

"Of Lucian as a literary artist, there can be but one opinion. He is one of the world's greatest writers of prose. His Greek syntax will not bear the microscope of the professional grammarian, but for literary purposes, he writes correct enough Attic. His command of the resources of what was to him a dead language is amazing. He has every word and phrase of Plato, Aristophanes, and Demosthenes at his pen's end, and for purposes of literary allusion, is master of all Greek literature and history." (Volume XIV, page 445.)

The Encyclopedia Britannica says:

"As a satirist and a wit, Lucian occupies in prose literature the unique position which Aristophanes holds in Greek poetry; but whether he is a mere satirist, who laughs while he lashes, or a misanthrope, who hates while he derides, is not very clear. In favor of the former view, it may be said that the two main objects of his ridicule are mythology and the sects of philosophy; in favor of the latter, his bitter exposure of imposture and chicanery in the Alexander and the very severe attacks he makes on the "humbag" of philosophy, which he everywhere assails with acrimonious and contemptuous epithets.

"As a writer, Lucian is fluent, easy and unaffected, and a close follower of the best Attic models, such as Plato and the orators. His style is simpler than Plutarch's, and some of his compositions, especially the Dialogues of the Gods (pages 204-287) and of the Marine Deities (288-327), and, above all, the Dialogues of the Dead (329-454), are models of witty, polished and accurate Greek composition. Lucian evinces a perfect mastery over a language as wonderful in its inflections as in its immense and varied vocabulary; and it is a well-merited praise of the author to say that to a good Greek scholar, the pages of Lucian are almost as easy and as entertaining as an English or French novel. It is true that he employs some forms and compounds which were not in use in the time of Plato or Demosthenes, and, as one who lived under Roman rule, has a tendency toward Latinisms." (Volume XVII, page 101.)

Thus, the reader can see that, in the estimation of scholars, Lucian occupies a high place in the sphere of Greek learning. It is true that his "Greek syntax" is sometimes discounted, and he employs "forms and compounds" which were not in use in the time of Plato or Demosthenes, but this is certainly no argument against his learning. It is only about three hundred years from Shakespeare's time to ours, and yet within that time many radical changes in "forms and compounds" have taken place in the English language; but there were five hundred years between Plato and Lucian, and of course there would be many changes in the language within that time. Hence, such variations in Lucian from the Attic models have no weight against the claim that he was master of the Greek language.

That our conception of him may be complete, I present also his attitude toward Christianity. He was not only not a Christian, but he was decidedly anti-Christian. In fact, he was a skeptic and not even a believer in a future state of existence. The Encyclopedia Britannica says:

"Lucian was not only a skeptic; he was a scoffer and a downright unbeliever. He felt that men's actions and conduct always fall far short of their professions, and therefore he concluded that the professions themselves were worthless, and a mere guise to secure popularity and respect. Of Christianity, he shows some knowledge, and it must have been somewhat largely professed in Syria at the close of the second century." (Volume XVII., page 100.)

The Americana says:

"The Christian religion, of which, however, he knew little, and that only through the medium of mysticism, was an object of his ridicule. His writings were once largely studied as textbooks, but his diction is not the best." (Volume XVII., page 717.)

The Encyclopedia Britannica further says:

"The sarcasms on the popular mythology, the conversations of Plato, Hermes, Charon and others of the powers in Hades, show a positive disbelief in any future state of existence." (Volume XVII., page 101.)

Thus, while Lucian had no sympathy with Christianity and we may not expect anything from him in direct elucidation of any of its tenets, he was, nevertheless, an accurate writer of the Greek language, and we may be sure that he would never use such a sentence as that in the passage in question, with the remotest thought of the anomalous construction placed upon it by the book here under review. For the benefit of those who read the original, but have not access to Lucian's works, I here transliterate the passage, word for word, as it is in the Greek of Lucian's Parasite 17:

"Kai hai men allai technai chooris organoon oudamoos tooi kektemenoi hyperetein dynantai; oute gar autein eni chooris autoon, oute psallein aneu lyras, oute hippeuein chooris hippou."

It may be rendered as follows: "And the other arts are by no means able, apart from instruments, to be of service to their possessor; for neither is it possible to play a flute apart from flutes, nor to make music without a musical instrument, nor to ride horseback apart from a horse."

The reader will please note that I render psallo in this passage "to make music" and lyra "a musical instrument." There is, as we shall see, the best of reasons for this rendering in this particular context. In fact, to render the former "to play the lyre" in this passage, as is done in the book here under review (page 139), does not correctly represent psallo unless, as we shall see further on, we attach to "lyre" the general meaning of "stringed or musical instrument." It cannot possibly be otherwise, for the simple reason, as we absolutely know, it is possible to psallein without a lyre. It is possible to psallein with any other stringed or musical instrument; and therefore, so far as the meaning and translation of psallo are concerned, instead of translating it here "to play the lyre," we may well ask, why not translate it "to play the cithara," "to play the phorminx," "to play the magadis," etc.? It meant all of these and more, too. Moreover, if Lucian had in his mind playing the lyre, and meant that, the verb lurizo was at hand and is the very verb to use to convey that idea. If that is what he meant, why did he not use that term? There is simply no escape here. Lucian either meant more than playing the lyre, or he did not know what word to use, one or the other. But, being the master of the Greek language that he was, his failure to use lurizo is positive proof that he meant more than playing the lyre; and this fact, in turn, becomes indirect proof that lyra, in this particular passage, means more than the one instrument so called. Hence, instead of limiting psallo to the lyre in translating it here, to which we know it was never limited in any period of its history, it should be rendered in terms which include everything and exclude nothing that is essential to its meaning, and the rendering, "make music," does this in this particular context. When, therefore, we construe lyra, in this passage, to represent, not merely the instrument so called, but stringed or musical instruments in general, then the passage makes sense and states what is absolutely a fact—namely, "it is impossible to make music without a musical instrument." In order that the passage may state the truth in English, we are simply forced to the alternative of either limiting psallo to playing the lyre or to some other single instrument, to which we know it was not limited among the Greeks, or of extending lyra, in this particular context, to represent stringed or musical instruments in general; and I know of no authority for the former, but for the principle at least that is involved in the latter, Liddell and Scott, under the term kitharizo, distinctly say: "There can have been no great difference between the kithara, lyra, and phorminx." Hence, beyond any reasonable doubt, the rendering here given is a correct English statement of the idea in the Lucian passage.

We are now ready for a careful consideration of two questions which, I think, will put the teaching of the passage beyond all doubt. These questions are: (1) What does the Lucian passage literally say? (2) What does it mean or teach? In answering these questions, the purpose is to be guided by what the laws of language demand, and not by the theological or religious opinions of anybody; and hence, to such a line of investigation the reader's attention is now invited.

1. What does the Lucian passage literally say? The answer to this question is ready at hand. Leaving the two principal words of the passage untranslated, here is what it literally says: "It is impossible to psallein without a lyra." Never mind just now about the meaning of either psallein or lyra. What the passage literally says is that it is impossible to do what the one signifies without what the other signifies. Hence, no matter what psallein means, and no matter what lyra means, Lucian literally says it is impossible to do the former without the latter. Mark you, he does not say that whatever psallein denotes, it cannot well or easily be done without what lyra denotes, but he says it is impossible to do it—it simply cannot be done. This, with absolutely no room for doubt or dispute at all, is exactly what the passage literally says.

2. What does it mean or teach? If some one asks, "Does it not mean and teach what it says?" I reply, yes, it means and teaches exactly what it says when we construe its terms according to the laws of language; but, according to these laws, the meaning of no statement can be restricted to its literal import if there are other facts either in the context or elsewhere which indicate and necessitate a broader import. For example, John calls Jesus a "lamb" (John 1: 29), and Jesus calls Herod a "fox" (Luke 13: 32); but what is a lamb, and what is a fox? Literally each is a member of the quadruped species of animal; but was either Jesus or Herod that? All who are competent to judge of such matters know they were not; and yet Jesus was a lamb and Herod was a fox—that is, each was figuratively what is stated. Of course Jesus was not literally a lamb, and Herod was not literally a fox.

Now, on the same principle, as we have seen, Lucian literally says: "It is impossible to psallein without a lyra;" but is that literally so? Whoever answers "Yes" has Lucian teaching that "it is impossible to psallein with any other stringed instrument except a lyra!" Is any thoughtful person prepared for this? There were numerous other stringed instruments of music among the Greeks, all mentioned and defined by Liddell and Scott. There were the kithara and phorminx with seven strings each, the kinura and nabla with ten strings each, the magadis with twenty strings, the sambukee, a triangular musical instrument with four strings, besides the barbitos, the phoinix, and the psalterion, all stringed instruments of music; and yet Lucian, according to this hard and fast construction of his words, tells us "it is impossible to psallein" with any of them except the lyra!! I repeat, is any thoughtful person prepared for this—prepared to accept such an absurd construction of his language? The fact that it makes him diametrically contradict what we know to be facts is positive proof that he meant no such thing. Hence, as the case stands, he no more meant "lyre," except in the fact that it was a stringed or musical instrument, than John and Jesus meant "lamb" and "fox," except in the fact that they represent certain qualities. The context not only justifies but demands this construction and forbids any other. He is writing about what it is impossible to do with aulein, hippeuein, and psallein. In substance, he tells us, "It is impossible to aulein without an aulos, it is impossible to hippeuein without a hippos, and it is impossible to psallein without a lyra;" but, according to the facts now before us and the linguistic principle here involved, "lyra" or lyre, in this passage, does not merely suggest or stand for itself alone, but for any instrument at all with which psalting can be done. This is either true, or, as we have seen, Lucian is made to say that it is impossible to psallein with any instrument except a lyre; and I respectfully add that I do not think any one who understands the Lucian passage and its context, either in the original or in an English translation, will call this statement in question. In fact, any intelligent person, without any knowledge of the original at all, knows that if Lucian knew what he was writing about and had respect for the truth, he would not be guilty of making the absurd statement that it is impossible to psallein except with one particular stringed instrument.

Hence, by every principle involved in the construction of language, we are forced to the conclusion that what is taught and all that is taught by Lucian's language is that "it is impossible to psallein without an instrument or object with which or on which to psallein;" but the moment we take this position, to which, as we have seen, all the laws of language here involved force us, then the additional conclusion is also inevitable—namely, that the instrument with which or on which the psalting is done may be one thing, or it may be any other thing among all the things with which or on which it is possible to psallein. But, according to the history of psallo, covering a period of five hundred years, as we saw in Chapter III, of this review, it was possible, during that period, to psallein with "the hair," with "a bowstring," with "a carpenter's line," with any sort of "musical instrument" made with human hands, and finally with "the heart" in song. Now, let the reader note the significant and telling fact that, as Lucian, according to the principles of language now before us, does not restrict the matter of psalting either to the lyre, which he mentions, or to any other one instrument or object to the exclusion of others, but merely says, in principle, that "it is impossible to psallein without some instrument or object with which or on which it may be done," it follows, as clearly as a mathematical demonstration, that his little sentence, after all the ado made about it, does not determine nor even touch the question whether the object or instrument used in psalting shall be one thing or another—whether it shall be the hair, a bowstring, a carpenter's line, a musical instrument made with human hands, or the human heart. (I assume in my translation, and think the context demands it, that he meant music of one kind or the other). His passage does not directly say a solitary word on this point. He merely affirms that "it is impossible to psallein without something with which to psallein;" and this is just as true of psallo in the New Testament as it was at any time during the Classical Period. And as to psallo in the New Testament, it is an unanswerable fact that it definitely specifies "the heart" as the instrument with which psalting is to be done. See Eph. 5: 19, especially in the original.

Hence, by the cumulative force of indisputable facts we are led to the inevitable conclusion that the famous passage in question not only does not determine, but it does not even touch the question as to whether instrumental or vocal music is signified by the term psallo in its general usage at that time. However, it is the purpose to consider, in another place in this review, the bearing which it may be thought the passage has on this particular point. But be this as it may, it is still a fact that even if it can be shown, beyond all question, on which point I here neither affirm nor deny, that instrumental music is what he had in mind and meant in this passage, which is wholly immaterial to the one issue here before us, yet, it determines nothing about the particular instrument with which psalting is done in the New Testament, whether with the human heart, as in song, or with an instrument made by human hands, as in instrumental music, it being a demonstrated fact, as we have seen, that all the passage says is that it is impossible to psallein without some instrument with which or on which to psallein, just as in "the other arts" it is impossible for them "apart from instruments to be of service." Thus, of the correctness of this construction, Lucian himself furnishes incontestable proof in the immediate context of the passage, saying, "The other arts are by no means able, apart from instruments, to be of service to their possessor," and he illustrates with playing a flute and riding horseback, saying: "Neither is it possible to play a flute apart from flutes, . . . nor to ride horseback apart from a horse."

But this brings us to another significant fact which must not be overlooked—namely, he did not say, "Neither is it possible to play apart from flutes, . . . nor to ride apart from a horse," for neither of these statements would be true. Furthermore, it is significant that he did not say, although verbal parallelism would have required him to say, "It is impossible to psallein without a psalterion." And why did he not say this? Why not use psalterion the noun cognate to psallo, just as, in the other two illustrations, he used aulos (flute) and hippos (horse), the nouns cognate to auleo and hippeugo? Because he not only understood the Greek language, but also the principles of rhetoric in writing it; and since he was using, in the same context, two other sentences each with a noun cognate to its verb and calling for a literal construction, to use, in a third sentence, the noun cognate to its verb would appear to call for the same construction; but psallo being the verb he wished to use and did use, if he should use its cognate noun psalterion and say, "It is impossible to psallein without a psalterion," he knew he would be saying what is not true, unless a figurative construction were placed upon psalterion, making it mean, in that particular passage, not merely the instrument so called, but any instrument with which it is possible to psallein; but being compelled, in using with psallo any term denoting a single instrument, to use the said term figuratively so that it would stand, in that particular place, not for itself alone, but for any instrument with which psalting might be done, he wisely avoided the cognate noun in this case and chose lyra, which, in such a verbal environment, would be less liable to be construed as meant by the author to stand for itself alone.

Finally, the poet Ovid said he would "sing of facts" even though some might say he "invented them;" and whether we sing of them or not, the facts which are now before us show, beyond the shadow of a doubt, that Lucian's language merely means, in principle, that it is impossible to psallein without some instrument with which to psallein, and therefore his little sentence does not determine whether that instrument shall necessarily be one thing or another, and this fact completely takes the passage away from those who attempt to use it to bolster the instrumental-music cause. He was merely contending for a practical truth which he saw everywhere exemplified in the different arts, and says nothing directly for or against either side of the music controversy.

More About Church Government.

BY J. C. M'Q.

Before answering in detail the questions by Brother Clark, printed below, I will state some truths that will be helpful in arriving at correct answers to them.

An elder is to be chosen for the office because he has shown his fitness for it by doing the work beforehand, which shows that it is not an office in the sense of an office of a civil government, but it is a duty imposed because the recipient has developed a fitness for the work needed to be done. Any one who does this work of an elder is, in fact, an elder, whether he receives the appointment to it or not. The appointment gives him assurance and confidence in the work and leads him to feel more keenly that it is his duty to do the work.

Men are sometimes chosen that have no fitness for the work, and others do it who have the qualifications, but are not appointed. A church in this condition has two sets of elders—a God-made set and a man-made set. The man-made set is always a curse to a church, and will hinder and eventually destroy it if not removed. The God-made elders will feed, tend, and lead the church wisely. It is wise to their own discretion and to the facilities and exigencies are not chosen.

In determining the articles of faith, principles of morality, and acts of worship, the law of expediency has no place. All these are to be decided by a "Thus saith the Lord" in express statements, and the Bible has clearly defined and decided them. When God legislates, it is the duty of man to obey the law enacted without modification or substitution; but in circumstantial or expediences of the gospel and of the church of Christ, Christians are left to their own discretion and to the facilities and exigencies of society.

Many things that are of vital importance to the usefulness and prosperity of the church of Christ are left to the law of expediency. A few examples will suffice. Meeting-houses, baptisteries, emblematic loaf and cup, Lord's tables, and times of convocation are all important items. There is neither precept nor precedent in the New Testament for building, buying, hiring, or owning a meetinghouse, for building a baptistery, and many other things of equal value. There is no law prescribed for the manner of eating the Lord's Supper, no suggestion as to the quantity of bread and wine to be used by each participant, nothing said about who shall partake first and how it is to be conveyed from one to the other. These are all matters of discretion and are left to the common sense and prudence of the assembly. Concerning these and many other vital matters, nothing is enacted or prescribed by the Holy Spirit. With this brief statement of fundamentals and incidentals, I give below Brother Clark's questions:

Gallatin, Tenn., February 1, 1922.—My Dear Brother McQuiddy: I have just read your article on "Church Government," in this week's issue of the Gospel Advocate. It is very fine. I am very glad that you emphasize in that article the fact that elders are functionaries and not officials. It seems that many of us have the idea that elders are bosses. I am glad you show that their work is rather functional. Will you please answer through the Advocate the following list of questions that suggest themselves to me?

1. Since elders are not legislators, but executors, and as executors they should enforce the word of God, should they not, in matters of expediency, enforce decisions of the church?

2. If elders refuse to execute decisions of the church in matters of expediency and insist on having their own way because they are elders, when no question of doctrine is involved, would the elders not act autocratically in turning the wishes of the church down?

3. Should elders be put in on trial? See 1 Tim. 3: 10: "Let these also first be proved." If so, who shall finally bring the matter to an issue? Should the church decide the matter, or should the elders select their associates and successors?

4. If a church finds that it has made a mistake, or if an elder becomes disqualified, how correct the matter?

5. What does "lording it over God's heritage" mean? What should a church do with such an elder? Who should say when an elder becomes autocratic?

6. Is an elder autocratic who claims, as elder or because he is an elder, that he has the absolute control of all the functions and deliberations of the church, and that if he is not obeyed the authority of Christ is rejected; who claims that no one has any right to have any kind of service unless he, as elder, makes the engagement? T. B. CLARK.

1. This raises the question of expedients and who shall interpret this law of expediency. We all agree that expedients change with changing conditions. The automobile, the airplane, telephones, wireless telegraphy, etc., have changed the order of society and all human expedients. The law of adopting the best present means of attaining any given end is the law of expediency. Individuals and communities must decide this matter. This is not and cannot be a matter of standing revelation. In matters of opinion there cannot be unity as in faith. No class of men—apostles, teachers, privates—ever did fully agree on opinions. Paul and Barnabas differed in a matter of expediency without any breach of communion. Hence the necessity for a spirit of concession, forbearance, and subordination. In such cases it is a Christian duty for brethren to in honor prefer one another instead of trying to enforce their opinions upon others. Where there are two conflicting opinions on any subject of expediency entertained by two parties, one or the other must yield, or ultimately there will be two distinct parties. If possible, unanimity should be attained even in matters of expediency; but this is not always possible. If it be not possible to always have unanimity of opinion, it should not be impossible to have unanimity in action. It is Christian to yield one's preferences, as conscience is not involved. If all Christians loved as brethren and were controlled by the law of love, which is supreme in religion, morality, and expediency, no breach of communion with saints would ever arise. When churches are torn asunder over expediences, one or both parties are carnal, selfish, worldly, and self-willed. Christians should not strive with each other over expediences, but should work and walk together in love. But when there are differences over the law of expediency, it is very selfish in one or two to ask for the liberty of controlling the whole community. On this subject A. Campbell wrote: "The law of expediency enacts that a majority of the seniors shall decide in all cases what is most expedient to be done in attaining any of the ends commanded in the Christian institution, the means to which are not divinely ordained in the written laws of the institution, and that the minority shall cheerfully and conscientiously acquiesce in such decisions." ("The Christian System," page 94.)

2. The elders who do not act in accord with what the church decides is best in matters of expediency, but insist on following their own opinions simply because they are elders, are self-willed and autocratic. Such conduct would indicate that they are man-made elders.

3. No, elders should not be put in on trial. "And let these also first be proved; then let them serve as deacons, if they be blameless." (1 Tim. 3: 10.) They are proved by doing the work for a while, then let them serve. It is said that the names of prospects for the work of elders were published. If they were found blameless and without reproach, then they might serve as elders. The church should select the elders and deacons: "Look ye out therefore, brethren, from among you seven men of good report, full of the Spirit and of wisdom, whom we may appoint over this business." (Acts 6: 3.)

4. If a church has selected men for elders without the scriptural qualifications, it should nullify the selection and select men who have the qualifications.

5. Elders are admonished not to serve for filthy lucre, "neither as lording it over the charge allotted to you, but making yourselves ensamples to the flock." This means to rule by example and not by force. God's rulers do not rule by force, but by love. Elders should not rule imperiously, but should set an example that others may follow. The church should in love point out to the elder his mistake and teach him that such an arbitrary and despotic rule is condemned by the word of God. If he ceases from his arbitrary rule, he has been converted from the error of his way and has been saved from death. If he persists in his autocratic rule and the church is thereby hindered in its work, then, as a last resort, the church should withdraw fellowship from him. "Now we command you, brethren, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye withdraw yourselves from every brother that walketh disorderly, and not after the tradition which they received of us." (2 Thess. 3: 6.)

6. Certainly no man who has been made an elder by the Holy Spirit would claim that he has absolute control of all the functions and deliberations of the church. Surely no man who is well-informed in the Scriptures would make any such claim. If there be really such a man-made elder, he is not only autocratic, but is also laying claims to infallibility. Such an elder would be a curse to any church.

Compromising God's Word.

BY F. W. SMITH.

Under the head, "Revival Spirit Is Manifest at Union Preparatory Meeting," there appeared in the Nashville Tennessean of January 30, in part, the following report:

In the opinion of the several hundred Christians from various churches who attended the preparatory service at the First Presbyterian Church, Sunday afternoon, the revival spirit which it is hoped will stir Nashville during the Gipsy Smith revival has already reached the city. Certainly Sunday afternoon's service assumed more of the revival aspect than any of the Sunday-afternoon meetings that have preceded, and the workers are greatly encouraged over the prospect of a great spiritual awakening in the city during the next few weeks.

Dr. Carey Morgan, pastor of the Vine Street Christian Church, brought a message on "Getting the Church Ready," and Dr. E. C. Dargan, of the Baptist Sunday School Board, spoke on "The Joy of a City."

The message of the Bible on the necessity of hearing the gospel, believing it, and confessing faith in Christ is directed to the churches as well as to the individual. Dr. Morgan said, and he declared for the churches to get ready for a great revival they must first hear the message which God has for them in his word, must believe that message and have faith in God, must confess or declare that faith in the homes, social groups and business relations of their members, must repent of their worldliness, and must obey the command of Christ to go and teach and preach the gospel everywhere. Finally, the members of the churches must love one another, and this cannot be done as it ought as long as there is flagrant sin in the lives of the people belonging to the churches, the speaker concluded. Sin can never seriously hinder the work of the churches until it gets on the inside.

Assuming that the above report is correct and that it gives substantially what Brother Morgan said on that occasion, I must say that it is a clear-cut compromise of the word of God, provided our brother has well-defined convictions that are in harmony with what the New Testament teaches on the subject of the gospel and the church. In the first place, how he can get his consent to enter into and give his support and influence to this so-called "union meeting" in which he will not be permitted to tell sinners what to do to be saved according to the great commission (Mark 16: 15, 16) and the preaching of the apostles (Acts 2: 36-38), provided he believes these scriptures, is beyond my comprehension. He will be compelled to sit and listen to Gipsy Smith preach day and night the popular doctrine of a direct, immediate, and miraculous theory of conversion, with one of the conditions ignored which the Lord Jesus put in the plan of salvation, and which was preached and insisted upon by the apostles, without the privilege of opening his mouth in correction of such false doctrine.

Again, Brother Morgan speaks of the "church" in rather a broad way when he says "getting the church ready." What does our brother mean by such language? Has he come to the point where he regards the church or body of Christ as being composed of all the sects and religious parties in Christendom? Is that our brother's conception of the church revealed in the New Testament? Most assuredly it was not the conception of Philip S. Fall, who came out of the Baptist denomination and brought with him the Church Street congregation, which afterwards became the Church Street church of Christ, and finally the Vine Street Church, to which Brother Morgan ministers. There has, most assuredly, been an exceedingly radical departure from the original ground of the church out of which Vine Street Church has grown.

In the speech of our brother at this union (?) meeting I fail to find the slightest reference to the holy and sacred ordinance of baptism which has enstamped upon it the three greatest names in the universe—viz., Father, Son, and Holy Spirit—although he talked of the necessity of "hearing the gospel, believing it, and confessing faith in Christ." He further said the churches "must repent of their worldliness, and must obey the command of Christ to go and teach and preach the gospel everywhere." Really, does Brother Morgan believe that a single one of the preachers present would preach to inquiring sinners seeking the way of life what the apostle Peter did on the day of Pentecost? Again, does he believe that Gipsy Smith will do anything of the kind? What a fine opportunity Brother Morgan had to simply quote the words of Christ: "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved!" Was our brother too timid to face that throng of clergymen with such a declaration, or was he afraid to "throw a firebrand?" What all such meetings need is the firebrand (if it be a firebrand) of a full gospel. I cannot refrain from reference to what the lamented David Lipscomb said on the subject of union meetings: "A man cannot compromise his own convictions and adopt things that he believes to be wrong without loss of moral power and without dishonoring his own true spiritual manhood. A man cannot compromise and set aside what he believes to be a command of God without dishonoring God before the world, without destroying his own reverence for God and usefulness for his service. To set aside a law of God for the sake of union with others is to prefer union with them to union with God. If we sacrifice God's word to please others, it is because we wish to please them rather than to please God. When we agree to set aside a command of God, we agree to separate from God."

Personally, I have a very high regard for Brother Morgan, but I cannot indorse his course religiously, and I must not permit personal friendship to prevent my speaking against what I sincerely believe to be his spirit and actions of compromising the truth of the Lord Jesus Christ. The only preacher and the only church in this so-called "union meeting" that will have to surrender and compromise their teaching and convictions is Carey E. Morgan and his congregation, because all the rest of the preachers and churches are agreed on a system of conversion which ignores baptism as one of the conditions of salvation.

The House by the Side of the Road.

There are hermit souls that live withdrawn
In the place on their self-consent;

There are souls like stars, that dwell apart
In a fellowless firmament;

There are pioneer souls that blaze their paths
Where highways never ran—

But let me live by the side of the road
And be a friend to man.

Let me live in a house by the side of the road
Where the race of men go by—

The men who are good and the men who are bad,
As good and as bad as I.

I would not sit in the scorner's seat,
Or hurl the cynic's ban;

Let me live in a house by the side of the road
And be a friend to man.

I see from my house by the side of the road,
By the side of the highway of life,

The men who press with ardor of hope,
The men who are faint with the strife.

But I turn not away from their smiles nor their tears—
Both parts of an infinite plan—

Let me live in my house by the side of the road
And be a friend to man.

I know there are brook-gladdened meadows ahead,
And mountains of wearisome height;

That the road passes on through the long afternoon
And stretches away to the night.

But still I rejoice when travelers rejoice,
And weep with the strangers that moan.

Nor live in my house by the side of the road
Like a man who dwells alone.

Let me live in my house by the side of the road
Where the race of men go by—

They are good, they are bad, they are weak, they are strong,
Wise, foolish—so am I.

Then why should I sit in the scorner's seat,
Or hurl the cynic's ban?

Let me live in my house by the side of the road
And be a friend to man.

—Sam Walter Foss.

A Substitute for Worry.

It is easy to worry. It is easy to worry when there seems to be something to worry over, and it is just about as easy when there is nothing to worry over. It is so easy that most of us "get the habit" while we are young and keep it up until we reach the haven of rest; and if there is any possible way of doing it, some of us will proceed to worry the very first day we are in our longed-for heaven. It is true that worry carves many deep lines upon our foreheads, makes us spend many hours of greatest uneasiness, drains our vitality, destroys our cheerfulness, puts an extinguisher upon our joys, makes us less fit for life and an enemy to social good cheer, and, so far as it can, it robs heaven of the sun and earth of its song; and yet we cling to it as one of our most cherished possessions.

Why do we do it? Probably the principal reason is that we look upon worry as a safeguard against trouble. If we don't worry over things, we are sure something dreadful will happen to us. It is worry that protects us from evil, and it is worry that acts as an angel of the Lord encamping round about us. If we didn't worry, we couldn't expect to live in peace, and things would surely go wrong. Of course all this sounds very foolish, and it is even more foolish than it sounds, but it is nevertheless true.

One of the most striking characteristics of our soldiers during the war was the cheerful spirit which they exhibited. They had difficulties enough, and hardships without number, but they steadfastly refused to worry about them.

Even in the darkest hours they sang, "Pack up your troubles in your old kit bag," and faced the future hopefully. One of the doctors who had charge of a hospital train says that scarcely ever did he hear a groan or a complaint from the men who were suffering the most excruciating agony. When compared with what these brave men endured, how trivial do our little troubles seem!

Why not try a substitute for worry? Why not trust? Trust does not remove the possibilities of trouble; but reading and believing that God cares for us, it decides to let God do the worrying. But some one says that is irrelevant, as God never worries. Well, then, if God never worries, why should we? He is looking after things, and we certainly are not; and if he never worries, it does seem foolish for us to do so. Long ago a man of God wrote: "I will trust, and not be afraid." We say, "I will trust," but we seem strangely loath to say, "I will not be afraid." To learn this lesson well is to enter a new life, a life of marvelous peace and rest. And the gateway is open always.—The Christian Guardian.

Determined to Succeed.

The following is one of the traditions of a manufacturing firm in Glasgow, Scotland. Thirty years ago a barefooted, ragged urchin presented himself before the desk of the principal partner and asked for work as an errand boy.

"There's a deal o' running to be done," said Mr. Blank, jestingly, affecting a broad Scotch accent. "Your qualifications 'd be a pair o' shoon."

The boy, with a grave nod, disappeared. He lived by doing odd jobs in the market and slept under one of the stalls. Two months passed before he had saved enough money to buy the shoes. Then he presented himself before Mr. Blank one morning and held out a package. "I have the shoon, sir," he said, quietly.

"O!" Mr. Blank with difficulty recalled the circumstances. "You want a place? Not in those rags, my lad. You would disgrace this house."

The boy hesitated a moment and then went out without a word. Six months passed before he returned, decently clothed in coarse but new garments. Mr. Blank's interest was aroused. For the first time he looked at the boy attentively. His thin, bloodless face showed that he had stinted himself of food for months in order to buy those clothes. The manufacturer now questioned the boy carefully and found to his regret that he could neither read nor write.

"It is necessary that you should do both before we could employ you in carrying home packages," he said. "We have no place for you."

The lad's face grew paler, but without a word of complaint he disappeared. He now went fifteen miles into the country and found work in stables near to a night school. At the end of the year he again presented himself before Mr. Blank.

"I can read and write," he said, briefly.

"I gave him the place," the employer said years afterwards, "with the conviction that in process of time he would take mine if he made up his mind to do it. Men rise slowly in Scotch business houses, but he is our chief foreman."—Selected.

Communion With God.

Mighty changes are taking place before our eyes, but amid them, and in spite of them, there may be among the great masses of the people a deadlier moral apathy and a consequent lessening of our communion with God. If moral and spiritual institutions become dull, the great lamp of the world will go out. The world is aching for a gospel, and it must be the labor of the church to present a gospel that will reach the world's most awful need.—J. H. Jowett.

Aches and Pains Of Rheumatism

Sometimes They Are Unbearable.

There are weather conditions that make rheumatism worse. They are not the same in the cases of all persons. Some rheumatics suffer more in dry, warm weather than in moist, cold weather, but all suffer more or less all the time.

The cause of rheumatism is an excess of uric acid in the blood, affecting the muscles and joints, causing aches and pains. Hence the blood must have attention for permanent results in the treatment of this disease.

Field Reports

Brewton, Ala., February 6.—I am again in Alabama. Any congregation wanting a meeting may write me at Brewton. I want to preach to save sinners eternally, not just to have a name to preach. Brethren, who will assist me to save a poor sinner in eternity?—G. W. Jarrett.

Ackerman, Miss., February 11.—I am at Kosciusko. Will preach at Nile on Lord's-day afternoon and at night. The work is getting along nicely in this part of the State. Brother Cayce is doing a grand work. God give us more Cayces! I felt like removing my hat when I read Brother N. L. Walker's letter in the Gospel Advocate of February 9. I shall be glad to work to help our papers if they will take the advice.—H. D. Jeffcoat.

Cleveland, Ohio, February 15.—My son, A. A. Bunner, Jr., closed a meeting with the church at Day Brook, W. Va., last Lord's-day night, with five added by primary obedience, one by letter, fifteen restored to the fellowship of the congregation, and the church greatly strengthened and built up in the faith. He also married two couples. He has promised to assist the church there in another meeting, beginning on May 20. He goes to Barrackville, W. Va., to begin a protracted meeting next Lord's day.—A. A. Bunner.

New York, N. Y., February 13.—Yesterday was a splendid day for us, regardless of the snowy, sloppy streets and some sickness among our members. Let us have the prayers of every Christian who is interested in this work, who wants to see the cause of Christ established in this great city. As Paul said: "Forgetting the things which are behind, and stretching forward to the things which are before, I press on toward the goal unto the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus." (Phil. 3: 13, 14.)—E. E. Shoulders.

Alabama City, Ala., February 12.—Our meeting is progressing nicely. Brother C. C. McCampbell, of Rome, Ga., is doing the preaching. One has made the confession and several others are "almost persuaded." The attendance is increasing at every service and the interest is good. We are just a few weeks old, and the collection this morning amounted to twenty-four dollars and thirty-six cents. Brother J. M. Dennis is to work for us this year, and, with several meetings this summer, we hope much good will be done.—Jake Hamilton.

Albany, Ala., February 13.—Yesterday was one of the most interesting days I have spent since coming to Albany. All previous records of the morning Bible study were broken, there being one hundred and eighty-nine in attendance. At the eleven-o'clock service the house was taxed to its capacity, some having difficulty finding comfortable seats. Our Wednesday-evening Bible study has an average attendance of fifty. We also have a Thursday-afternoon class studying "Outlines of Bible Study" (by G. Dallas Smith), a class on Friday night in the book of Hebrews, and a class of boys and girls on Saturday afternoon. The congregation at Hartselle meets on Thursday evening for Bible study, and at Tanner on Tuesday evening.—C. H. Woodroof.

Hatfield, Ark., February 15.—Since the announcement that I aimed to change locations I have had work offered me in five States. I am now at our new home in Hatfield, Ark. When the facts were known that we were to leave Texarkana, many expressed themselves as sorry to give us up; but the best of friends have to part. We are not among strangers here. I have known this church more than two years, and it is more than an average, and I hope that we will do much good this year for the cause of Christ. I wish to thank all of the churches that offered to share their bounty with us in the work of the Lord, and hope to meet some of them, if not all, in the future. We had a fine service last Lord's day, and it was encouraging to me. I hope that this will be a prosperous year for the cause everywhere.—C. H. Smithson.

Coal City, Ind., February 13.—I left home on February 4 and went to Coxville, Ind., where I expected to preach a few nights; but, with the sickness I found there, we gave up all meetings except the morning meeting for worship on Lord's day. Sickness in the community made the audience very small. On Monday I went to Brazil, and on Tuesday I went to West Union congregation, where Brother William Ellmore was in a Bible reading. I was with him in this reading three afternoons and nights. The number in attendance was not as large as it ought to have been, but the readings were very fine. I then came back to Coal City on Saturday, but on account of the weather and sickness, I did not stay and preach, but went out to Bethesda and met with a few in Bible reading and worship yesterday and preached last night. I will preach again to-night.—Andrew Perry.

Estancia, New Mexico, February 8.—I have located here at Estancia, and am preaching the "unsearchable riches of Christ" for the people here and at Albuquerque and Liberty, and will preach at Mount Air as soon as a place can be arranged for me to preach, and at as many mission points as I can reach. Truly, "the harvest is great, but the laborers are few." Why cannot more preachers come to this field? Souls are dying, starving for the bread of life. There are so many places in New Mexico where the gospel has never been preached; grown-up children that never heard the sweet story; gray heads bowed low, waiting death's summons, with no hope of heaven. We need missions and missionaries in this country. Men who are willing to make a great sacrifice for the cause of Christ; men who can stand up for Christ in the face of persecutions; men who are not afraid of cold and hunger—such men are badly needed in this land of scattered Christians and hopeless people. Pray for my labors for Christ to be blessed.—S. P. Tipton.

Encouraging Words from Alabama.

BY TIM WALKER.

On January 1, 1921, I was called to old Cleveland church, five miles from Berry, Ala., to conduct funeral services, when the remains of Sister Garrison were lowered into the grave to await the judgment. From Berry I moved to Haleyville, Ala. During the year I conducted two mission meetings, preaching to audiences that never before heard the true story of the cross; operated a sawmill to the extent of cutting fourteen million feet of lumber; traveled over fifteen hundred miles to preach the gospel; paid more than fifty dollars in cash for the cause of Christ; received one hundred and ten dollars and seventy-five cents, a balance of sixty dollars and seventy-five cents to support my family (wife and four children); made a crop—one hundred and fifty bushels of corn and one bale of cotton; and almost completed a six-room bungalow house. I hope to go farther and preach more in 1922 than ever before. Brethren, do not be discouraged at this and other reports coming from Alabama. We have some very godly men and women in Alabama. Alabama has about three and one-half million people, only seventy-four white preachers, five colored ones, that stand for apostolic worship. Alabama stands as the third cotton State in the Union; some of the greatest railroads in the United States are in Alabama; the greatest coal fields in the South are in Southern Alabama. There are scores of cotton mills, and the greatest iron works in the South are found in Alabama. A number of other good things could be said, but this is sufficient at present. Alabama is a fertile field for the gospel. Preacher, will you please pitch your tent this way and help evangelize this great State and build up the church of God?

Abundant Health is assured when there is good blood in the veins. Hood's Sarsaparilla is the medicine to make good blood. Begin taking it now. It is just what the system needs at this time, and will do you great good. Sharpens the appetite, steadies the nerves.

Famous Old Recipe for Cough Syrup

Easily and cheaply made at home, but it beats them all for quick results.

Thousands of housewives have found that they can save two-thirds of the money usually spent for cough preparations, by using this well-known old recipe for making cough syrup. It is simple and cheap but it has no equal for prompt results. It takes right hold of a cough and gives immediate relief, usually stopping an ordinary cough in 24 hours or less.

Get 2½ ounces of Pinex from any druggist, pour it into a pint bottle, and add plain granulated sugar syrup to make a full pint. If you prefer, use clarified molasses, honey, or corn syrup, instead of sugar syrup. Either way, it tastes good, keeps perfectly, and lasts a family a long time.

It's truly astonishing how quickly it acts, penetrating through every air passage of the throat and lungs—loosens and raises the phlegm, soothes and heals the membranes, and gradually but surely the annoying throat tickle and dreaded cough disappear entirely. Nothing better for bronchitis, spasmodic croup, hoarseness or bronchial asthma.

Pinex is a special and highly concentrated compound of genuine Norway pine extract known the world over for its healing effect on membranes.

Avoid disappointment by asking your druggist for "2½ ounces of Pinex" with full directions and don't accept anything else. Guaranteed to give absolute satisfaction or money promptly refunded. The Pinex Co., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

Letter from Florida.

BY S. F. MORROW.

After spending a very pleasant Lord's day with the brethren and sisters in Atlanta, we left on the evening train for Tampa, Fla., after prayer in the home of Brother Harwell. It is certainly a blessing to find homes where praying is always in order. May the good Lord increase such homes.

We reached Tampa at 5 P.M., Monday, and were met by Brother A. J. Davis and son, Burgess, and conveyed in their nice Buick roadster to their home, where my wife met her beloved sister, Mrs. Davis, whom she had not seen for years, and all was joy and gladness. We found our daughter, Mrs. North, and her little daughter, who had preceded us a few days, well.

After a short rest, I was ready to go to work for subscribers to the Gospel Advocate. The first one to find was Brother Hoover, the preacher, a dear lover of the good old paper. I find him to be an active teacher of the word. He doesn't simply preach about the word, but teaches it as revealed. I hope to get several names here.

While we have only one congregation here in this city of eighty thousand, I tell them we can take the town for Christ if we will be as active and zealous as the grand old apostle Paul. I have never met, it seems, a more zealous little band. They have prayer meeting five nights a week—four cottage meetings and one at the meetinghouse. Brother A. G. Freed, of the Freed-Hardeman College at Henderson, Tenn., will begin a meeting here on the third Lord's day in February. All are hoping and praying for a glorious meeting and that great good may be done. All feel assured that Brother Freed will preach the word in its simplicity, beauty, and power.

We have several congregations near Tampa—some, weak; some, stronger. Brother J. W. Grant and wife are at Lakeland. We want to see them as soon as possible, and we want to go to Tarpon Springs to see Brother F. B. Srygley's daughter and family. Also, we want to see all the other congregations and secure every name we can for the Gospel Advocate. I am glad to note in the last issue of the Advocate that January, 1922, had more new subscribers than January, 1921. Certainly we can double the circulation of the paper if all will work. How easy it would be if each one would only secure one name! Please try it. I feel certain if the brethren and sisters knew the hardships the publishers are undergoing to give a good paper to the brotherhood, all would do more, and do it cheerfully.

I am delighted at the interest that is being manifested in and around Nashville in getting ready for the Hardeman-Pullias meeting, which will begin on March 28. I hope every brother coming to Nashville soon will spend a few days at the meeting. It is hoped that at the close of this meeting each congregation will send some good preacher to a destitute field and keep him there till the cause is established. It is better for every congregation to send its preacher, support him well, and let him report his work to his supporters. Nothing should give more life to a congregation than to hear of the salvation of precious souls they are helping to save. Small congregations can assist each other. Think of the good work Brother M. C. Cayce is doing in Mississippi, then think of what Jesus says: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that disbelieveth shall be condemned." May we not ask every elder and preacher in every State where the cause is established to commence this good work at once? We have the money and the preachers. What excuse can we give in the final judgment for a further delay? Jesus says: "Give, and it shall be given unto you." Again: "God loveth a cheerful giver." We can never wear the crown until we first bear the cross.

THE SAFEST WAY TO DESTROY UNSIGHTLY HAIR

It is difficult to find anything more repulsive than an unnecessary display of unsightly hair on the person of an otherwise highly refined and beautiful lady.

The failure and danger connected with many so-called hair removers has discouraged many ladies and caused the needless and very unsatisfactory use of the razor, an instrument intended for the coarse skins of men only.

Unsightly hair on the exposed portions of the body can be destroyed with the roots safely and without injury to the skin, but the remedy must go deeper than the surface.

Nu-Art, a highly successful preparation, scientifically prepared, goes into the hair follicles and destroys the hair roots without injury to the skin or complexion. Thousands have found it highly successful and gratifying.

Mail a dollar bill with your name to 225 P. O. Building, Nu-Art Laboratories, South Orange, N. J., and you will be mailed a package, in plain wrapper, containing a bountiful supply of Nu-Art, by return mail. It will please you immediately, or your money will be cheerfully refunded.

Field Reports

Ackerman, Miss., February 16.—The work here is moving along nicely. I was with the church at Nlle last Lord's day. Good crowds. They still need help to build their house of worship. Brother J. M. Sanders, of Dossville, Miss., will use all that is sent him for that purpose. I received a call from a man seventy-five years old, who is a member of the Baptist Church, to go to Lake Como, Miss., and hold a meeting the first of March. I am planning to go. There is not a member of the church in fifty miles of that place that I know of to help pay my expenses. If any want to help in this work, they may do so. Doors are opening on every side. Pray for the work and the workers.—H. D. Jeffcoat.

Fort Smith, Ark., February 17.—Brother J. Floyd Hoover, of Booneville, Ark., spent the first Lord's day, in February, with the church at Bloomer. Brother Hoover has two Lord's days in each month for some church wishing an able minister. Brother William V. Pickel preaches each month at Union Valley and Burnsville. He had one baptism at his last service at Burnsville. The church at Charleston has now come to its day of opportunity. The old union meetinghouse that has sheltered the denominations for about sixty years is theirs to use unmolested. They have it in good repair and are sounding forth the word. The church at Booneville has a large number of young members being trained by Elder D. W. Walker. The church at Magazine, since losing their house of worship to the dividing element, has purchased and paid for two lots. The deed contains the restrictive clause.—R. L. Ludlam, Jr.

Pineapple, Ala., February 16.—The Avin congregation seems to be improving. They are well pleased with the Quarterlies printed by the McQuiddy Printing Company, and report an interesting lesson Sunday, with good attendance. I was at Fatama, Ala., Sunday, with good attendance and attention. The cause was planted there many years ago by the lamented Dr. Adams, but so many moved away that the work ceased for a long time; but the Partin families are trying to keep the work going, and I will be with them some and try to hold their meeting for them. At Geiger, Ala., in Sumter County, the writer held two meetings last year and started a little band to work, and they want a tent meeting this year, and will pay my railroad fare to hold their meeting in July or August, if some congregation will furnish them the tent. Let some congregation please write Brother Mat Golden, Geiger, Ala., and tell him you will lend him your tent for the meeting, and help us plant the cause there. The Antioch congregation, in Monroe County, wants some one to preach for them once a month.—C. Petty.

Estawan, Saskatchewan, Canada, February 7.—I arrived here on January 28, and have been conducting meetings each night since, except Saturday. The interest is fine. Last Friday night as we finished singing the invitation song one man of mature age came forward, and, turning to the audience, said: "I am not ashamed of the gospel. I want to be right with God." Last Sunday night another man addressed us, saying: "My wife and I have been listening to the preaching and studying and have concluded that this way is the only one to go; therefore, we wish to become members. We rejoice in giving God the glory." There are others manifesting much interest, and we expect more additions ere the meetings close. The brother previously mentioned (who spoke for himself and wife) has preached a good deal, but had not seen all of the light. We taught him the way more perfectly. Estawan work is encouraging. I go from here to Regina and Macrorie. There are several places waiting for meetings. Carman Bible Training School is doing good work. We will have some preachers soon.—H. A. Rogers.

MOTHER! CLEAN CHILD'S BOWELS WITH CALIFORNIA FIG SYRUP

Even a sick child loves the "fruity" taste of "California Fig Syrup." If the little tongue is coated, or if your child is listless, cross, feverish, full of cold, or has colic, give a teaspoonful to cleanse the liver and bowels. In a few hours you can see for yourself how thoroughly it works all the constipation poison, sour bile and waste out of the bowels, and you have a well, playful child again.

Millions of mothers keep "California Fig Syrup" handy. They know a teaspoonful to-day saves a sick child to-morrow. Ask your druggist for genuine "California Fig Syrup," which has directions for babies and children of all ages printed on bottle. Mother! You must say "California," or you may get an imitation fig syrup.

Coble, Tenn., February 17.—Under much suffering and fatigue, I conducted the following meetings during 1921: At Skelton Schoolhouse, Cane Creek, beginning on the third Lord's day in July; Flat Rock, Cane Creek, fourth Lord's day in July; Pegram Station, second Lord's day in August; at a union meetinghouse near New Market, Ala., third Lord's day in August; Little Swan, second Sunday in September. Six were added. My main point is to get before the brethren the fact that this place in Alabama is a mission field. Four denominations have planted themselves there and sectarian seed is bearing fruit. The pure, unadulterated gospel is as badly needed there as any place I ever saw. We have started the ball rolling. I left some almost persuaded, but strength failed and I had to close. In this meeting I went to war "at my own charges." Railroad fare amounted to about eleven dollars, and I gave five dollars for the use of the house. We have two brethren at this place, but both have large families and are living on credit. Now, brethren, I am wholly unable to continue this work, and it will be too sad to let it go down. I want to find a man who is willing and able, both physically and spiritually, to go there with a tent some time this year and preach to those people, publicly and from house to house. A work from house to house will accomplish much at this place, and we do not want a man who will not do that. We also want a good singer to lead the song service and congregations to support the work. Brethren, this is an appeal for a preacher, singer, tent, and support for this work. Who will respond? Brother Will Jackson, of Flintville, Tenn., will gladly take up this work with any one, but I would like for some one to inform me whether this is going to be done.—W. A. Sisco.

PE-RU-NA

For Coughs, Colds and Catarrh

Mr. E. W. Marshall, Brampton, Michigan, suffering from Systemic Catarrh involving Head, Nose, Throat and Stomach, claims a complete cure. His letter is convincing:

"For the past two years I have been troubled with systemic catarrh. I used several boxes of Pe-ru-na tablets and they have effected a complete cure. I do not hesitate to recommend Pe-ru-na for all catarrhal conditions."

Mr. Marshall is just one of many thousands who have been benefited by Dr. Hartman's famous medicine in the past fifty years.

It is by stimulating the digestion, enriching the blood and toning up the nerves that Pe-ru-na is able to exert such a soothing, healing influence upon the mucous membranes which line the body. It is a wonderfully effective remedy to restore strength after a protracted sickness, the grip or Spanish Influenza.

BY JOHN R. WILLIAMS.

THE TRIAL OF DECISION.

On July 29, 1885, I was called and set apart for the work of an evangelist by the congregation at Hornbeak. Yes, called, ordained, set apart by fasting, prayers, and the imposition of the hands of the elders and Brethren I. C. Sewell and J. A. Carter. The charge that Paul gave to Timothy was given to me by Brother Carter.

On November 13, 1885, about four months later, I was granted a license to practice law before all the courts of the State. My law license bears the signatures of Clinton Aden, Judge of the Twelfth Circuit, Tennessee, and John Sommers, Chancellor of the Eleventh Chancery Division of Tennessee.

Conditions made it necessary for me to decide between the gospel of Christ and the law of a human government. A wife and six children, all depending on me for food, raiment, education, and such other necessities of life as enter into the care of a family. Wife and I thought, prayed, and talked over the matter. We felt assured of the fact that, if I should continue the practice of law, more money would come into our hands—that we could give our children better opportunities (worldly), better education, better clothes, better food, and fit and prepare them better for the battles of life. The picture looked bright indeed to us. Then we took up the other side of the proposition, and after investigating it from every angle, all we could see was poverty and but little opportunities for our children. Some of our best friends (in a way) volunteered their advice, and all, with few exceptions, said: "Never give up the practice of law. You are a poor man with a large family, and you owe it to them to give them the very best opportunities possible, and this you can do if you will only continue the practice of law; while, on the other hand, you cannot feed and clothe your family decently if you turn preacher." Poor comforters indeed! Thus tossed to and fro, rocked upon the billows of public opinion, we were sore troubled in heart and mind.

I was at that time, and have been ever since, a reader of the Gospel Advocate. A short article from the pen of Brother Lipscomb appeared on the preacher and his work. Brother Lipscomb said if a man would preach the gospel from pure, sincere motives, desiring only to do good and benefit his fellow man, doing good as his object, that man would be fed and clothed; but if money-making was his object, so much preach for so much money, that man would be a failure as a preacher and bring reproach upon the cause of Christ. After studying over what Brother Lipscomb said, there was but just one thing for me to decide—why do I want to preach?

The time for decision had come. If money-making is to be my aim and purpose in life and I continue to preach, what am I but a hypocrite? If doing good in the world is my aim and purpose and I continue to practice law, what am I but a hypocrite? A hypocrite I could not be; so, like Moses of old, "choosing rather to share ill treatment with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season; accounting the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures of Egypt: for he looked unto the recompense of reward," I launched my bark upon the tempestuous sea of life, hoping and praying to land it safely in the harbor of eternal rest.

After making this decision and entering upon the work of an evangelist, I was met one day by a very prominent lawyer who had great interest in my legal success. He asked me why I had given up the practice of law. I told him I had some conscientious scruples regarding the practice of law. He then asked me if I thought it impossible for a man to be a lawyer and a Christian at the same time. I told him that I would not say that it was impossible to be both, but would say that it was hardly probable. To this good day I have not changed my mind on this subject.

Next, "My First Baptism."

RECIPE FOR GRAY HAIR

To half pint of water add 1 ounce Bay Rum, a small box of Barbo Compound, and 4 ounce of Glycerine. Any druggist can put this up, or you can mix it at home at very little cost. Apply to the hair twice a week until the desired shade is obtained. It will gradually darken streaked, faded, or gray hair and make it soft and glossy. It will not color the scalp, is not sticky or greasy, and does not rub off.

GIRLS! LEMONS

WHITEN HANDS

Press the juice of two lemons into a bottle containing three ounces of Orchard White, which any drug store will supply for a few cents, shake well, and you have a quarter-pint of harmless and delightful lemon-bleach lotion to soften and whiten red, rough, or chapped hands. This home made lemon lotion is far superior to glycerin and rose water to smoothen the skin. Famous stage beauties use it to bleach and bring that soft, clear, rosy-white complexion, because it does not irritate.

A Fateful Stream.

A mighty river, rolling on,
To-day, as through vast ages gone,
Coeval with creation's dream,
An e'er resistless, 'whelming stream;
Through nature's wilds, its early course
Met naught that could defy its force;
Still ever onward, fast or slow,
That river ne'er has ceased its flow,
Sweeping along its way, sublime—
That ever wondrous river, Time!

The Work in Denison, Texas.

BY W. D. CAMERON.

No general report having been made in the papers for quite a while concerning the work in Denison, I thought a brief report of our work might be of interest to many of the readers. The Armstrong Avenue Church has just closed the most successful year's work in its history, and we are looking forward to still greater things this year. Brother M. C. Cuthbertson took up the local work with us the first of last August and is doing a splendid work for the cause at this place. We were so well pleased with his labors among us that we recently engaged his services for another year.

We have now been in our new building just two years, and our growth has been wonderful. Especially is this true of our Sunday Bible-class work. The last three months we were in our old church building our average Sunday-school attendance was seventy-two, and our average offering was one dollar and ninety-six cents. During the three months just closed our average attendance was two hundred and fifty-six, and our average offering was sixteen dollars and fifty-six cents. Last Sunday our Bible school broke all previous records both in attendance and offering, with an attendance of three hundred and thirty-five and an offering of twenty-eight dollars and thirty-one cents. Thus in two short years the building that we thought would take care of our needs in the work for all time has already become too small, and we are now preparing more classrooms by finishing the balance of our basement. When this work is completed, we will have about fifteen separate classrooms.

The ladies of the church meet each Monday afternoon for Bible study and to plan and assist in the charity work of the church. We have an interesting prayer-meeting service each Wednesday night, teachers' training class each Friday night, also Bible training and development work for the young folks each Sunday evening, in three departments—Primary, Intermediate, and Senior. This training work for young folks is an important part of the work of the church, and one that I am afraid many congregations are neglecting. It is to them that we must look for our future leadership; so how very important must be their training and development in preparation for their future duties!

We have two meetings arranged for this year. One is to be held by Brother Claud McClung, of Fort Worth; the other, by Brother Horace W. Busby. We are expecting this to be the greatest year with us that we have yet had.

I do the very best I know how, the very best I can; and I mean to keep doing so until the end. If the end brings me out all right, what is said against me won't amount to anything. If the end brings me out wrong, ten angels swearing I was right would make no difference.—Abraham Lincoln.

How I Earned Extra Money at Home

—When Jim's Salary Was Cut

By MARGARET GORMAN

All this talk of cutting wages had about as much effect on us as water on a duck's back. Jim was with a big company that would pull through hard times without cutting our income any. We felt sure of that. "And anyhow," I said one night, "how can they reduce you, when it's costing more to live than it ever did?"

The answer to that question came more unexpectedly than anything that ever happened in our lives. Jim came home the next Saturday with discouragement written all over his face. "Peggy, it's happened," he said, throwing his things down in a chair instead of hanging them up as he usually did.

"What?" I cried, trying to make him think I hadn't guessed the truth.

"My turn has come for a reduction," he said. "Guess we'll have to get along with less money, or else dig into our little 'socks' at the bank."

Even though I guessed it when he came in, I just couldn't make it seem true—just when we had saved nearly enough to make the first payment on a home. Now it would gradually go for living expenses. All the evening and long into the night I kept trying to figure out what I could do to show poor old Jim that I could really help. "Certainly there must be some way," I thought, "to keep things going without using up our savings."

The next morning, while dinner was cooking, I picked up the Sunday paper to try to get my mind off our troubles. The newest thing in winter clothes, a wonderful electric washing machine, the plans and pictures of the sweetest little home—all of these staring me in the face only reminded me that our little home would soon go glimmering for groceries unless I could earn some money to help buy— "O, Jim," I cried suddenly. Look!

And then I find out how to make extra money at home

"Here it is—How I earn money at home!—That's what I'll do. Do you think I could?"

Then we both read every word of it over together. It was the advertisement of the Home Profit Hosiery Company, Inc., of Rochester, N. Y. "Let's send in that coupon and get the whole story," I said. And while I was taking up dinner Jim addressed the envelope and ran up to the corner and dropped it in the mail box.

When the answer came, I found it even more interesting. Here, at last, was the way to earn money to keep that bank account where it was, and perhaps add more to it. So we sent for a machine.

To make a long story short, we never had to use a penny of the money we had saved. When the Home Profit Knitter came, I did just as they told me and read the instruction book over carefully several times before I ever tried to work the machine. And you'll never know how hard it was for me to keep from trying it before I had learned all about how to operate it, because there was a sock already started on it. But after I had all the instructions, which are illustrated by picture and so simply explained by text, down pat, I started to do a little practice work, and it wasn't long before I was knitting beautiful, warm, woolly socks.

You can't imagine what fun it is to be able to really knit a sock in a few minutes until you've tried it. And the joy of being able to do it just as easily as can be is nothing compared to your feelings when you get your first check from the Home Profit Hosiery Company for the socks you send them. A check for real money that you can use as you please.

You really work for them at a guaranteed piece-work wage. They furnish you with the yarn when they send the machine. When you send them the socks you have knitted, they return an equal amount of yarn and your check by return mail, so that you don't lose a particle of time. And the remarkable part of it is that they guarantee to buy the socks, as many as you can knit, all the year round. And in addition to that, they will also encourage you to make socks for your own home trade. And there's big money in that, too.

If you only knew all the little things I've been able to have that I never could have before I got my Home Profit Knitter, you would order one to-day. If you only knew the pleasure of at last finding a way to make money by your own fireside, among the things you love best, nothing in the world would ever keep you from sending in the coupon to-day and finding out more about it.

many women who don't feel that they would be successful canvassing, going from door to door taking magazine subscriptions, find the Home Profit Knitter just the thing they have been looking for to make that extra money they need for their home or for the little ones they have.

More than once, I can tell you, I look back and wonder if I would be as happy and well as I am to-day if I hadn't had my Home Profit Knitter upon which to earn the money that kept worry away. More than once, I wish I could tell every woman in this country who needs more money the story of my experience just as I am telling it to you.

NEW YORK, N. Y., January 23, 1922.

Gentlemen: I want to thank you for your most courteous treatment accorded me on my recent visit to your plant, and let you know what a pleasure it is to investigate an organization which carries out to the letter its every promise.

Your Employment Contract is very clear on what you promise to do, and, I feel, very favorable to your workers. Your guarantee to refund money if machine is not as represented is a perfectly good one in my opinion, as your machine is the most substantial I have ever seen. Your ten-year guarantee against breakage, because of inferior material or poor workmanship, is very generous. In my opinion this gives your purchasers a better guarantee than usually goes with power knitting machines sold to knitting mills.

What surprised me most, however, was the simplicity with which your knitter is operated. Your instruction book must have been written by a practical expert, for you will remember I took your machine and in a surprisingly short time knit a sock without help of any sort other than the book.

Let me congratulate you upon producing a hand-knitting machine of such high standard. Very cordially yours,

(Signed) OSCAR MOFFITT,
Industrial Investigator.

"Disappointment—His appointment."

*Change one letter, then I see
That the thwarting of my purpose
Is God's better choice for me.
His appointment must be blessing,
Though it may come in disguise;
For the end from the beginning
Open to His wisdom lies.*

"Disappointment—His appointment."

*Whose? The Lord's, who loves me best,
Understands and knows me fully,
Who my faith and love would test;
For, like loving earthly parent,
He rejoices when He knows
That His child accepts unquestioned
All that from his wisdom flows.*

"Disappointment—His appointment."

*"No good thing will He withhold."
From denials oft we gather
Treasure of His love untold.
Well He knows each broken purpose
Leads to fuller, deeper trust,
And the end of all His dealings Proves our God is wise and just.*

"Disappointment—His appointment."

*Lord, I take it, then, as such;
Like the clay in hands of potter,
Yielding wholly to Thy touch,
All my life's plan is Thy molding;
Not one single choice is mine.
Let me answer, unrepining:
"Father, not my will, but Thine."*

WAS IT ARMAMENT OR DISARMAMENT?

The Disarmament Conference at Washington is a thing of the past. "The lights are out and gone are all the guests." A number of the distinguished foreigners who had attended the conference called at the White House to say good-by. Their reception was very cordial, and the exchanges of compliments between them and the President was felicitous. All testified to the pleasure they had in their visit to America and to their belief in the enduring character of the work accomplished at the conference.

In the nature of things, that work is differently appraised. By some its value is placed at a high figure. They see it exercising an influence on world affairs for years to come. Some see little accomplished and contend that it was an "armament" rather than a "disarmament" gathering. Others are more conservative and will be satisfied if the principal result shall prove to be the easing of the grave situation the conference was called to deal with. The peace-promoting influence of limitation of naval armaments, the saving of money at this time of general pinch, and the dissipating of the mists that overhung the Pacific problems are things to be thankful for and will justify the meeting.

About one thing, however, there could be, and was, but one opinion, because the fact stood established. It has been demonstrated that men of widely differing views and representing many conflicting interests could be assembled at a conference table and, under a leadership confessedly friendly and unselfish, induced to adjust their differences and agree upon a friendly plan of action removing all uneasiness about the immediate future. God has not only made "of one blood all nations to dwell upon the face of the earth," but he has made it possible for them to dwell together in peace and unity. He is not the author of discord nor the patron of wars and factions. It is perhaps a far cry from a big international conference to a local congregation of disciples, but I cannot refrain from making the observation that in the latter group there is too little disposition to meet together under friendly leadership to frankly discuss and adjust differences. In too many cases the brother who professes to apply the teaching of Matt. 18 goes at it with the determination to best the other fellow, and not to set himself right with God and man.

WHEN THE LETHAL GAS IS TURNED ON.

The daily papers inform us that two tongmen are to be the first to suffer the death penalty by application of lethal gas, under a new law passed a year ago by the Legislature of Nevada. Scientists contend that the execution by lethal gas, under the Nevada law, is the nearest approach to humane killing by the State. It is used on stray dogs, and Nevada has decided to apply it to condemned criminals.

The death chamber, in which the condemned are confined while awaiting death, is air-tight. Pipes connect it with a tank containing the gas supply. A week is set aside by the court, at any time during which the execution may take place. The sorry inmates have no foreknowledge as to when the sentence of death will be carried out. On any night the sheriff may select, the lethal gas is turned into the death chamber and all is over.

As I see the matter, the new law simply shortens a man's stay in this world without subjecting him to a violent death. Should he be capable of serious thought and conscience-stricken, the mental anguish and foreboding would be the only real suffering. When we consider the matter seriously, all of us are in the same condition as the two prisoners, with the exception that we think we have a much longer time to live. While we do not know the day nor the hour, we are assured that "it is appointed unto every man once to die, and after that the judgment." We may not be here one week, or it may be that we shall be here for many years. The Christian view of death does not encourage indifference to the certainty of it nor anxiety concerning its outcome. We are not confined in an air-tight cell, but even while we bask in God's sunshine we are walking "through the valley of the shadow" as we pass from the cradle to the grave. How dark and dismal the thought would be were it not for the teaching of Jesus Christ concerning the resurrection and the faith which overcomes the world!

CHINA'S ANCESTORS AND OURS.

Thomas W. Lamont is one of the biggest financiers in Wall Street, and a man also of ideals that have been respected. He has paid more than one visit to China, and was the organizer of the fight against famine there, fairly winning the gratitude of the Chinese people. He has had much to say about "hustling the East," and contends that "the practice of ancestor worship, as it is carried on to-day, must change if China is to come into her own." When you come to think of it, nearly all nations are ancestor worshipers. Jews are Jews, Mohammedans are Mohammedans, Christians are Christians, out of loyalty to their respective ancestors. The suggestion has been made that I cannot ask another man to brand his ancestors as errorists in order to honor my own ancestors. We blame the unenlightened Chinaman for worshiping his ancestors, when in a large measure we Americans are worshiping our ancestors. We keep up the war game because we think respect to our forefathers demands it. The worship of our ancestors is so universal and so intense and clouds our eyes to such an extent that we cannot see the more excellent way of settling differences that was taught by Jesus and his apostles.

How far China can progress on peace-loving lines depends in vast measure on Christendom's determination to follow the same lines. If Christendom forces her to become militaristic, to build navies and support armies and turn her scientists to the manufacture of death bombs and poison gas, by emphasizing her helplessness as a peace lover, then, and only then, can the yellow peril become more than a figment of the imagination.

OUR GREATEST TASK.

The longer I live, the more I am impressed with the old, old truth that the greatest achievement in life is the mastery of one's self. The building of a railroad, the amassing of a fortune, the writing of a book, the election to a place in this institution or that—none of these things are to be compared to the mastery of one's self. In this field one is dealing with his will, and here all character is finally determined. Peter Ainslee gives us the following:

Influences come from without, but decision comes from within. "You must" may or may not make a character, depending upon how one receives the order; but "I will" coming from within is the authority that determines things. The will is not for self-assertion; it is for self-mastery. The former is its abuse; the latter, its service. The sacredness of this self-mastery must be laid upon the heart in prayer so tactfully that he who arises from his knees in prayer will be able to say "I can" and "I will." It is the desire of all, but it is attained by few. Perhaps the reason for this is that the training of the will is neglected or abused or improperly trained; but wherever lies the defect, it is reflected throughout life. In spite of the defect, it is a common hunger of the soul to stand in the place of self-mastery.

Nothing so embitters life as a constant brooding upon one's failures. On the other hand, nothing so enriches life as to look back over the places where self-mastery won the day. For such an experience there can never be a regret. It makes faith stronger, the vision wider, and hope radiant with expectancy. To conquer self—this is our task.

ROBERT S. KING, Treasurer.

REPORT OF M. C. CAYCE.

A report of our work in Mississippi for 1921, I hope, will prove a means of encouraging other congregations to send more men into such places. I have baptized one hundred and fifty persons, twenty-nine of whom were Baptists, and eight were Methodists. Also, five from the Baptists, one from the Holiness, and four from the "digressives," and two from the Methodists, believing they were scripturally baptized, took a stand with us on the Bible, and the Bible only, agreeing to lay aside all the teaching and practice of men and be simply Christians. Thirty-nine were restored by complying with the second law of pardon to erring Christians, confessing their sins and praying one for another, reasonable service of our Master.

Three congregations were planted in new places, and in one place, where former efforts had been made, but no meeting of the church for worship for the past four years, they were reestablished in the faith, and with renewed courage and determination returned to work, I believe, to be faithful until death. You might say this was more important, if possible, than to start a congregation in a new place. (See 2 Pet. 2: 20-22.) These were good but discouraged people. They are now looking for a suitable lot upon which to build a meetinghouse.

A congregation was started in Jackson upon my coming here last year that has never failed to meet for Lord's-day worship, but until April of this year had no permanent place to meet, but used the Odd Fellows' Hall, Woodmen of the World Hall, and a part of the time met in the courthouse. Last April we bought a nice, comfortable meetinghouse from the Presbyterians, which was paid for in full without one line being published in any paper. A few personal letters to congregations, and a ready, willing, generous response on the part of some Nashville congregations, together with the amount given by the faithful few here, made this possible. If more congregations would do as a few in Nashville are doing, sending men and helping in other ways, the time would soon come when churches of Christ would be thickly scattered all over this and other States, where now New Testament Christianity is almost, and in many places entirely, a stranger.

We also bought a well-located, substantial brick meetinghouse from the Cumberland Presbyterians in Columbus, Miss., upon which a cash payment of five hundred and thirty-seven dollars and fifty cents was made; the balance payable at the rate of three hundred dollars annually, with interest. A request through our papers, and some letters that were responded to, made this possible.

We have no societies through which to work, and yet the church of Christ is doing a great work, and are missionary in spirit and indeed, and do what they do in and through the church, without show or blow. (See Matt. 6: 1-4; 2 Cor. 8: 11-15; 2 Cor. 9: 6, 7.)

In Vicksburg a lot has been bought and paid for. Help them build a house, and do it now.

I am making my home in Jackson; but while building a congregation here, I am trying to help as many other places as possible, confining my work to the State of Mississippi.

Last year Brother Will J. Cullum, backed by some Nashville churches, spent one month very profitably here, holding a meeting in Carroll County and also one at Ridgeland, doing some sound, gospel preaching that we appreciated and that will do good a long time. Send him again to us. Keep him busy. He is needed.

Brother Andrew Perry, from Illinois, also spent considerable time in mission work in the northern part of the State.

H. D. Jeffcoat is doing a grand work in and near his home county. We need more Jeffcoats.

There are whole counties here in which primitive, New Testament teaching is a stranger; so why not more churches send more men? It is truly missionary, and God will reward you.

We desire and will work and pray that the coming year we may do greater work. I am doing my best to teach these people that the church needs no drones, that an idler is worthless. We must all become soul winners for Jesus. Pray for the work and for me, that utterance may be given unto me, that I may open my mouth boldly to make known the gospel. Please send names of persons I might interest by personal visit. My address is 143 Wacaster Street, Jackson, Miss.

M. C. CAYCE.

REPORT OF THOMAS H. BURTON.

This has been a reasonably good year with this work, I think.

Sometime in the early part of the year we began meeting in our shell of a house. In May, I believe it was, Brother H. M. Phillips, supported by the Tuscumbia (Ala.) congregation, assisted by Brother Tommie Nicks, of your city, supported to the extent of twenty-five dollars by the Dickson (Tenn.) congregation, balance, if I remember correctly, by the church here, held us a fine meeting. I believe this resulted in seven baptized and much good done otherwise. These men certainly did hard and good work. We certainly appreciated having them with us.

About the first of June I began tent work in this town, and sometime in July I was joined by Brother G. F. Gibbs, and we together worked for several weeks, and I left for protracted-meeting work in Tennessee, and Brother Gibbs continued the good work here.

I held one meeting in Whitwell, Tenn., in May, with seven baptized, and the church claimed that they were in better shape to do things than they had ever been. I also received reports that they were doing better. On the first Sunday in August I began a meeting near Lebanon, Tenn., with one of the oldest congregations in the State (Bethlehem). This resulted in twenty-two baptized. On the fifth Sunday in July I began a week's meeting at Grissim's Corner, near Lebanon. This resulted in ten baptized. After the Bethlehem meeting, I went to Green Hill, near Mount Juliet. Here we had another good meeting, resulting in eleven baptisms. I have received many good reports from them since. From here I went to Grant, in Smith County, for a week's meeting. Brethren have been preaching there for twenty-five years without accomplishing much. This was my second meeting there. I baptized three and set in order a band of ten to keep house for the Lord. They began immediately to prepare to build, and I hear that they are getting along nicely. I do not know of a better prospect in Tennessee for a good congregation to be built. They are so determined. From here I went to Aldridge Grove, Ala., and this was one of the greatest meetings I have ever been in, in regard to additions. Fifty-six baptisms and about thirty restorations. I have also had some good reports from them. I came home and went to work immediately. Total baptized on this trip, one hundred and two. Twenty-eight were baptized in this town during the year.

We began anew the work on our house early in the fall, and we have now almost completed the building. Brother Gibbs and I have put in many days at anything our hands found to do and thereby saved the building fund many dollars. We lack the painting and a few other minor things having the house finished (not including the pews). We have from sixty-five to seventy-five at the Lord's-day services. Many seem almost persuaded to obey. The prospects are better for this year, but we cannot tell how things will turn in this work.

I hope this will be well pleasing to your people. We appreciate the interest you take in this work.

THOMAS H. BURTON.

REPORT OF E. C. FUQUA.

Your letter and check for fifteen dollars came duly to hand, and I offer my sincere thanks for this, another offering toward my work.

I note your request of a report of work done during the year now drawing to a close, which I gladly give, as follows:

I do not keep account of meetings, additions, etc., but I can give close to, if not exactly, the proper figures, though they are drawn from memory. They are as follows: I have held ten meetings in mission communities this year, resulting in about forty or forty-five additions—all baptisms, I believe. This does not sound great, but, as compared with former years, it is very good. I believe I have averaged about one addition per week through the year, or nearly so. The meetings were held among people who knew little and cared less about Christianity than you could imagine. But what is also true of this work is that the "material" brought this year into Christ through my efforts is of an unusually high grade.

I also assisted one week in the meeting of Brother Harde-man at Denver, in July.

The rest of my time I have given to instructing the new members in "all things whatsoever" Christ commanded of them, thus developing them into fine workers and earnest worshipers of God. Indeed, most of my work has been in the church here, teaching the new members as far as I could. I am delighted with the results.

In the free-tract department I have put in full time, between meetings, preaching the word through the press. This year I have printed more than one hundred thousand free tracts (including one now in process of printing), and almost all of them were the large newspaper tract called "The Whole Counsel." These have gone into nearly twenty-five States, and from many I have received encouraging news of the good accomplished. However, this phase of my mission work is new—in the second year only. It is growing and increasing in its power for good. I have carried on, in this connection, two written discussions on important themes, from which I know good has come already. Through the free-tract work I have placed the pure gospel in a hundred thousand homes this year, or nearly that, reaching close to five hundred thousand individual souls with a knowledge of what to do to be saved. Last week two letters came to me from two young ladies at the Tennessee School for the Blind, Nashville, telling me of the great benefit derived from reading my tracts there; and these young ladies were not Christians, but I believe they are on the way. These letters are samples of scores I receive from many States, leading me to know that this work is sowing the seed in a profitable way. I sincerely believe that if I had done no more this year than put the printed gospel into a hundred thousand homes, I would have done more than I could have done in one hundred "protracted meetings."

I am now arranging a class of the younger members—the new converts—in the book of Hebrews, to be conducted in my own home, about two or three nights in the week until we go through the book. It is a struggle with me because of my defective hearing, but I "keep kicking" as best I can. I have faults and make mistakes, but with each one I profit withal, until my weakness really becomes my defense.

I have at least one more meeting this year, provided I can get a certain hall down town in which to preach. I learned to-day that it is probable I can get this. My last meeting, three weeks ago, was a failure, largely, on account of my throat giving down.

Now, Brother King, I have nothing to boast of as to work done. I believe, all things considered, I did my duty faithfully, though I do not mean that I was perfect in the work done. I daily see mistakes, and daily I try to correct them and to live free from them. Nor would I dare have my humble work compared with that of other men who have also preached Christ. I expect mine is the least of all; at least, it so seems to me. I read of meetings where in two weeks' time nearly one hundred people are baptized; but in the meanwhile I am preaching hard, amid sacrifices and sufferings often, and in the entire two weeks of hard work maybe I will baptize two or three persons. It looks most discouraging to me; but so appears every mission field, I suppose. Truly, it requires grit to hold down a mission work and remain faithful and loyal to God and his word. But I am too old in missionary work to now "look back" or give up. Encouraged or discouraged, I will now "stick to my bush" till the end. I have proved that God is with me to this work, though I have always been, and ever shall be, unworthy of his blessings; and if he remains with me to bless, I have no fears as to the final outcome.

Let me again thank you Bible-School brethren for your appreciated fellowship through another year. The Lord will not forget your work of faith and labor of love and patience of hope.

E. C. FUQUA.

"He Fell Among Robbers."

BY JAMES E. CHESOR.

"A certain man was going down from Jerusalem to Jericho; and he fell among robbers—" But the parable of the good Samaritan is well known to you. I merely want to remind you, by this reference to the story, that this fellow who fell among thieves in the ravine is typical of many and diverse cases of misfortune, and that, therefore, you have opportunity to play the part of the good Samaritan in sincerity every day of your life. This traveler was simply unfortunate in that he was the first to go down that way on that particular day. Had another traveler preceded him, the ill-used man would in all probability have escaped and the other traveler would have been beaten and robbed instead. He fell into trouble, not because of any fault of his own, and it is upon this ground particularly that he merited sympathy and succor.

Many are the victims of disease. No man ever knowingly invites disease and suffering, for no man "hates his own flesh," but fain would save it from affliction and decay. But the ills to which the flesh is heir are so multitudinous and insidious that the most exact precaution cannot stave off all malady for any great length of time. Disease germs, abounding in the water we drink and carried about in the air we breathe, are thieves seeking to prey upon the resources of our health, to rob us of our vitality. We fall among these robbers, often when the germicidal power of the body is low, and we cannot hope to escape unscathed every time an attack is made upon us. Sooner or later we must fall victim to disease, or, at least, to the infirmity of old age; at last we must decay, we must sicken and die. And when our hour of affliction does come, we shall be in sore need of the ministrations of some good Samaritan. You recall the awful suffering and mortality wrought by the epidemic of influenza in the fall of 1918. Those thirty million American sufferers would gladly have escaped the ordeal, but they were simply unfortunate; they "fell among thieves," so to speak, and those who ministered to their wants were good Samaritans every one. Of course there were a few Levites and priests that passed by on the other side, but this is to their shame. What part, let me ask in passing, did you play during that pestilence—that of the Samaritan, or that of the priest and the Levite? How are you accustomed to treat the sick, anyway?

Again, there are victims of heredity. Much crime, no doubt, can be traced to hereditary bias and promptings. Not a few of the felons in our penal institutions are mental defectives, and perhaps the majority are lacking by nature in moral and ethical sense. Large numbers of these anomalous individuals are confined under supervision in our asylums for the insane, while others are convicted of crime in the courts and sent to the electric chair. Whether or not the latter is "murder," whether or not it serves no better purpose than to rid society of these unfortunates, I leave it for others to decide. But the attitude of the Christian toward all such is that of the good Samaritan toward the bruised and bleeding traveler. In other words, he must manifest genuine sympathy for every human being that is constitutionally or morally defective. We are, I think, too prone to condemn summarily the delinquent without looking to the cause of his delinquency. It is well known that inclinations are inherited—inclinations to lie, steal, covet, lust. The vices of one generation outcrop at irregular intervals in succeeding generations. A thrifty-looking wine-sap, in outward appearance the paragon of the orchard, may hark back to some wild ancestor and bear inferior apples. A human being may inherit the peculiar weakness of an ancestor generations back and come into the world thus handicapped—predisposed, as it were, to bear evil fruit. All such are simply unfortunate and their lot is hard. They should be dealt with gently whether they be in or out of the church. Did you ever act the good Samaritan toward such?

Then there are those overtaken in faults, those who stumble through weakness of the flesh. The strong man who endures temptation and triumphs is made stronger by his experience; but the weaker one who yields and sins is to be pitied, dealt with kindly, restored. He should not be passed by and cast off because he fell among overmastering thieves of temptation. He needs help because he is "down and out." A man quits drinking, accepts Christ, and does well for a while. But in some evil hour he goes down a certain way, a road that leads toward his Jericho, and he falls among his former associates who tempt him with "moonshine." He yields. What has happened? He has fallen among thieves; and there he lies beaten and bruised, his spirit broken, his soul bleeding. Why should not some good Samaritan, some Christian brother, bind up his wounds? This is one case out of a thousand. Not one of us is so strong but that when he thinketh he standeth he should take heed lest he fall. The woman taken in adultery and brought to Jesus by his intriguing enemies was simply an unfortunate victim of temptation. There are thousands of such victims as she. They fall among worse robbers than those that infested the Jericho road—lecherous thieves that rob them of their virtue and "leave them poor indeed." But Jesus showed mercy and pardon. "Neither do I condemn thee," said he: "go thy way; from henceforth sin no more." Many women, even Christian women, I regret to say, are not so merciful and forgiving as was Jesus toward their less fortunate sisters. They seem inclined to pass them by.

One other illustration. A man's home is burned to the ground, or his stock of goods is swept away in a flood, or his business is ruined by a panic. He is not so unfortunate as the man that has lost his health, or the woman that has lost her virtue; but, nevertheless, he deserves sympathy and assistance. It was once the custom in the hill country of Middle Tennessee to take immediate steps to help any "neighbor" who had suffered a "burn-out." Usually a wagon was sent through the "neighborhood," and each neighbor contributed something—not money, but some article of furniture, clothing, or foodstuff. To a man they were good Samaritans. To refuse to help was to incur the contempt of the neighborhood. Anybody that wouldn't help Tom Harris, who had lost his house and barn by fire, "simply weren't no neighbor." But slackers were few. Conditions and customs have changed in the hill neighborhoods and there are not nearly so many good Samaritans nowadays. But this virtue of showing mercy on the unfortunate that shone in pioneer character is worthy of emulation. We can be good Samaritans in these modern times. We should help those whose fortunes have been swept away in sudden disaster. Financial ruin causes many suicides. We can cheer the distressed with words, if not with dollars.

It certainly is our duty to "prove neighbor" unto those that "fall among thieves," of whatever sort those thieves may be, and we do this by showing mercy on them. We may not have opportunity to bind up wounds, but we can do something quite as needful. If our religion is genuine, we will not pass by on the other side.

If thou hast Yesterday thy duty done,
And thereby cleared firm footing for To-day;
Whatever clouds make dark To-morrow's sun,
Thou shalt not miss thy solitary way. —Gæthe.

SERMON OUTLINES

A Book of One Hundred and Fifty New Sermon Outlines

Just the book for preachers, elders, deacons, Bible-class teachers, and others that take public part in church services.

The book has one hundred and fifty sermon outlines and a helpful supplement containing funeral texts, marriage ceremonies, forms for church letters, and Hedge's "Rules" for debate.

A good book to use in your Lord's-day services, prayer meetings, and young people's meetings. Let the leader announce the subject, hand slips of paper containing different sections of the outline to the members who are to take part in the next meeting, requesting them to make a talk or read the scriptural references on that section of the outline. Or, let the leader put the outline on the blackboard, omitting the scriptural references, then ask the congregation to supply the correct scriptural references at the next meeting, and give reasons why they selected these references.

A Call to the Thoughtful and Unprejudiced.

BY S. H. HALL.

Our readers, I hope, remember what has already been said under this heading. I have insisted that some one show me how I could establish a school over which I have absolute control and leave the Bible out. I would be afraid to do a thing of this kind were I following this line of work for a living.

But I am now asking another question—viz.: I want some one to show me how we can ever, as a church, carry out the great commission without some thought given to school work. All that I have heretofore said has had reference solely to our work as individual Christians. I believe the individual Christian who is making school-teaching his calling in life would take a very embarrassing position were he to establish a school and allow not the Bible its rightful place in the education he proposes to give to his boys and girls. I could let the Bible go with me in the school and defend myself. Were I to leave it out, I confess my inability to defend myself. If some one wants this job I claim I am not equal to, he is welcome to it; but excuse me.

But now I am taking a position that is a bit new, so far as the agitation of the school question among us is concerned. The position is this: That body of people who call themselves "the church of Christ" cannot defend their past record on the school question. Instead of our being great sinners for establishing schools, we are to be blamed for not doing more school work as a church. Some one will ask: "Do you believe the local church has the right to do school work?" I answer: The local church, in many instances, can never carry out her God-ordained work without doing some school work.

Of course, you call for "book, chapter, and verse," and I am on the ground with it. Turn to Matt. 28: 19 and Mark 16: 15. The first says: "Go ye therefore, and make disciples of all the nations." The latter says: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to the whole creation." Now, don't you go to dodging by saying, "We are not under the great commission." For certainly Christ foreknew that some would try to dodge it; hence, he said: "Teaching them [the ones you teach and baptize] to observe all things whatsoever I commanded you." This commission was not only bound upon the apostles, but they were instructed to bind it upon all whom they taught and baptized.

Now for a few questions: (1) Can we teach the nations without talking to them? (2) Can we talk to them without language? (3) Does not this necessitate our learning their languages, else teaching them our own language, so that we may communicate with them? (4) In fact, does not the great commission make it the duty of the church of our Lord to give to every nation the pure word of God in their own language? The apostles could do this without study, but we can never do it without study. And preparing men to give the Bible to all the nations on earth in their own language, both by word of mouth and on the printed page, demands quite a bit of the school and college work, does it not?

I never felt this so keenly in all my life as I did while in Los Angeles. I had preached it in Atlanta; but one language sufficed there, because the few foreigners we had knew our language, hence I was not handicapped. But imagine how I felt when I got to Los Angeles and began to study the field! There was nearly every nation, and I could speak but one language successfully. I could not reach the Japanese, the Mexicans, and others too numerous to mention. Nor was the church there able to furnish me men and women that knew the languages of these other nations. Don't you tell me that we are loyal to the great commission when we teach the Bible merely in the language in which we happen to be born.

Every local church is duty bound to give the nations, to say the least, in its own section, the pure word of God unmixed with sectarian error. Who will deny this? Simply stay with the location in which the congregation exists; while most certainly I believe each local church must think of the whole world, for the commission says "all the nations," "the whole creation." But if we restrict it simply to the city in which the local church exists, we have many congregations who can never be, indeed, the church of Christ without establishing schools, or, as a church, doing quite a bit of school work.

I shall let this question rest for a while. You think about it. Give me light if I am in the dark. But I must contend, as matters now appear to me, that the church, as such, must give some thought to producing translators of the Holy Scriptures. Is it not a burning shame that we have not one translation even in our own language that scholars we have made produced? What if I had started a mission among the Japanese while in Los Angeles and had stood sorely in need of the New Testament in their language? Where would I have been forced to go for it? Would it not have been to the sects, who we know corrupt the plan of salvation? Is it right for us to depend on them for a pure translation? Must we take what they give us and guess it is right, or be men and produce scholars who can tell us they know it is right?

You may be pleased with our record here, but I am not. Instead of listening to all this twaddle against Bible colleges, every local church with which I labor must give some thought to the idea of having enough sense to meet the demands of the great commission. The Adventists give their doctrine to all the nations in their native tongue. So do the Russellites. What have we done? My face almost burns with shame. Give the nations God's word in its purity. This demands much of us. And even if we can find God's word correctly translated by others, still we must have enough language sense obtained by schooling to know it. We do not want doctors to guess when they give medicine to us and our children. Let us not guess a translation is right. Let us be men enough to see that it is.

BY EARNEST C. LOVE.

During the past week (February 12-18) I have visited Martin, Tenn., and Fulton and Hickman, Ky.

At Martin I spoke at the prayer meeting on Wednesday evening, and to the school children at the chapel exercise next morning. Brother Smith and his assistant teachers are certainly doing a fine work with the children of Martin.

At Fulton I spoke twice. There I met for the first time our esteemed and aged brother, E. C. L. Denton. He is eighty-six years old. He said he heard Brother E. G. Sewell preach his first sermon, as their boyhood homes were not far apart. The Holdermans and Dentons around Quebec and Spencer are relatives of Brother Denton. His home is now in Memphis with his son. He said he was at one time "able to borrow meal anywhere along the road from the Mississippi to the Cumberland Mountains."

Around Martin and Fulton I have met several brothers and nieces and nephews of Brother A. O. Colley, of Dallas, Texas. While passing through Martin, February 18, I met Brethren Paisley, Heflin, Sweatt, and Hassell. This seems to be a clearing house for preachers.

Brethren W. C. Hall, of the David Lipscomb College; C. S. Austin, of Mount Pleasant; and F. O. Howell, of Jackson, formerly preached and taught school in Fulton. It is the stronghold of the Missionary Baptists, their paper, the Baptist Flag, being published there. The Flag people have bought out a daily and weekly secular paper, and they are all run under one management.

Much interest is being manifested in the debate between Brother John T. Taylor and a Baptist preacher by the name of Jones, to begin on February 27 in a country Baptist church six or eight miles from Martin. It was reported that they would go to McConnell first, but it was a mistake. Some say that Clark and Neely, both Baptist debaters of some note, will be at this next debate.

There is no church of Christ in Hickman. The "digressives" have one there. Not caring to worship with them, I caught an early train, February 19, for Dresden Crossing, where I worshiped with the Mount Hermon congregation.

During the present week (February 19-26) I want to visit the following places in the order named: Tiptonville, Ridgely, Dyersburg, Newbern, and Obion. After the debate, I wish to go south on the Illinois Central to Memphis.

I am meeting with much encouragement in my work of circulating the Gospel Advocate. It truly is a great paper and has many friends. Its influence is felt everywhere I go. Many old readers who had allowed their names to be dropped are coming back. Young men are subscribing for the paper to keep in touch with the work with a view to better equipping themselves for service.

When I put the matter before a negro brother, recently come into the church, he said: "Yes, suh, yo' can put me down. If I do anything in dis wuk, I got to read up on some of dese things." Don't you think he was right?

Our writers have a vast audience through this paper. Besides the regular subscribers and their families, I think it is safe to say that twenty-five per cent of our subscribers pass their papers on to others. This is as it should be. However, these should be passed out to the unconverted or to the brethren who are unable to have a paper of their own. I have found several who are willing to pay for a year's subscription for the poor. This is fine. Children should see that their parents have the Gospel Advocate. It is a real punishment to the old to do without the paper, after having read it all their lives.

"Lord, Is It I?"

BY JOHN A. KLINGMAN.

In the upper room during the last meeting of Jesus with his twelve disciples, just before he was to taste of the bitter cup of suffering, he declared: "Verily I say unto you, that one of you shall betray me." This startling declaration caused astonishment and alarm to all except Judas. Each one in turn, with quivering voice and fast-beating heart, asked: "Lord, is it I?" After the others had spoken, Judas boldly asked: "Rabbi, is it I?" The Lord answered: "Thou sayest." There was no affectation in the repeated question of these eleven noble men. A real fear came over them at the prophecy of Jesus. It was a good sign that the first thought of each one was the possibility of his own sin. It would be well for us to profit by their example.

There are times when we are reminded of our possibilities. In these serious moments we realize how low we might fall into the valley of sin and shame, or how high we might climb the mountain of holiness. Such seasons, by their very sense of danger, can be made the safest and strongest of our lives.

Some great crime is committed. Through the community there runs the story of some frightful cruelty or dreadful fraud. At such a time most of us are conscious of a strange mixture of two emotions—one of horror and the other of terrible familiarity. The act itself we may feel sure that we never shall be guilty of, but the powers by which it was done and the motives that persuaded its doing are powers and motives which we all have felt.

Another occasion which gives us a glimpse of how wicked we might be is when we commit some comparatively small sin and recognize the deep power of sinfulness by which we perform it. A boy who has always been honest makes a trade in which he cheats, and thus realizes the possibility of becoming a swindler. The clerk slips small change from the cash drawer, and is shocked at the thought of becoming a thief or a defaulter. A good man, under certain circumstances, is tempted to strike his fellow, and sees a vision of himself as a condemned murderer. And so we may go on with our illustrations. In such cases one may well ask: "Is it possible that I am beginning to travel the road of the swindler, defaulter, thief, or murderer?" Yes, it is possible. Every temptation should remind us of our capacity to sin. After having resisted the evil one, we should be thankful for the victory. When we think how near the precipice we were walking, we ought not to trust ourselves to walk there again, as the earth was loosened by our steps and is likely to give way the next time.

Again, we may become aware of our possibility of great sin when some one expresses a suspicion of evil concerning us. We may know the charge to be perfectly false; but the mere fastening of the sin and our name together, the fact that any one can think of such a thing, is enough to cause us to turn our eyes to ourselves and ask, "Is it possible?" "I did not do this thing. My conscience is clear. But can I really afford to be indignant toward those who dare to suspect me without remembering the evil of which I am capable?" Such experiences should make us humble.

But let us behold the opposite. Men commend us for good deeds when we do not fully, if at all, deserve the credit. We may have done something which seemed to others to have been prompted by the purest motives, when, in reality, it was not true. We were simply carried upon the bosom of healing waters which sprang forth from the heart of another and were compelled, as children sometimes are, to be good and do right. We should then ask: "Lord, is it I?" "Do I merit this praise?" Some one has said: "No true man is ever so humble and so afraid of himself as when men praise him most loudly." At such a time we should feel unworthy and check the praise, if possible, giving honor to whom honor is due, instead of taking advantage of the occasion and feeding the flames of pride which eventually destroy the soul.

These thoughts should remind us of our possibilities for good or evil. We should continually ask: "Lord, is it I?" It is possible for each one who professes to follow Christ to become a Judas or a John. It is possible for each of us to betray the Master or walk with him in garments of white.

A Trip to Canada.

BY H. TEO BOLES.

On January 11 I left Nashville, Tenn., for a meeting at Meaford, Ontario, Canada. My schedule was so arranged that I could spend four hours with Brother F. L. Rowe in Cincinnati. I spent a very pleasant time with him, talking over things that pertained to the Master's work. I found him busy and interested in the work of the Lord and doing a great work with the Christian Leader.

My next stop was with Brother and Sister J. W. Shepherd in Detroit. They greeted me at the Union Station with genuine Southern hospitality. I stayed overnight with them and had a very pleasant time in their home. Brother Shepherd is now in his eighth year's work with the Vinewood Church and has done a great work there. He is burdened with the Master's work, but enjoys it. No man is more loyal to the church of God than J. W. Shepherd.

My next stop was with D. H. Jackson in Toronto. Brother Jackson is working with the Fern Avenue Church in Toronto. He is enthusiastic, competent, and faithful in the work of the Lord there. My stay overnight with him and his good family was pleasant indeed.

I found at Meaford a good, strong, working congregation. This church was organized in 1848 and has remained true to the New Testament pattern all these years. My sojourn and labor with the church there was very pleasant. Although the weather was cold—very cold for me, but not so cold for them—the attendance at all the meetings was splendid. I was impressed with the earnestness, reverence, and interest which they manifest in all of their meetings. I think that their way of conducting the worship on Lord's day is worthy of commendation, and many of our congregations in the South would be profited very much if they followed the manner of these Canadian churches.

At the eleven-o'clock service on Lord's day the emphasis is put on the Lord's Supper and not on the preaching and speaker. Their custom is to have a song, and this song is not of the modern "jazz" church music. After the song, some brother reads a chapter from the Old Testament Scriptures; then another brother reads a chapter from the New Testament. Two chapters from the Bible is read each Lord's day at the eleven-o'clock service. Then some brother makes an appropriate short talk on the Lord's Supper. The Supper is eaten with piety and deep reverence. After the Supper and contribution, which is liberal, if there is any time left, the preacher may occupy that.

Another thing that impressed me was the interest which all take in the public reading of the Bible. Usually each family occupies the same pew throughout the year and have their Bibles with them. Many leave their Bibles at the church house, but they have Bibles in their homes also. When the chapter is announced for public reading, all turn to that chapter and follow the public reader. This is done at all services. I commend this to our churches. I think that there should be more Bibles in our church houses and that old and young should take greater interest in the reading of the Bible. There are many things that I would like to say about the Meaford church, but space forbids.

Many Southern preachers have labored with the Meaford church and are held in high esteem by the church there. Among these may be mentioned J. A. Harding, E. A. Elam, H. H. Adamson, John E. Dunn, J. L. Hines, J. T. Lewis, and R. V. Cawthon. Brother C. G. McPhee is now laboring with the church there and is held in very high esteem by all. I shall ever remember my sojourn and labors with the good people there. May the Lord bless them all.

On my return, I am indebted to Brother L. K. Harding for his kindness to me in Toronto.

Church House Secured for Colored People.

BY MRS. EMMA P. LARIMORE.

About a year ago Mr. Larimore wrote the following notice of Brother D. C. Allen's work: "I think I have known our colored brother, D. C. Allen, about forty years, he being about twenty years old when I first met him, and I have never known anything but good of him. He is honorable, truthful, and upright—a man of extraordinary intelligence and literary acquirements for his race. Indeed, in the light of all the information I have on the subject, I believe him to be far above the average preacher of any race. He has fought heroically for the cause a long time in a hard field. He now preaches to a faithful few of his people in his own home every first day of the week, always giving proper attention to the ordinances of the Lord's house. Situated as he now is, it is absolutely impossible for him to accomplish very much. If, however, brethren would furnish him sufficient means to purchase a good lot and build a good house on it, I believe he could accomplish wonders. I would not be afraid to risk what little reputation I have on the assertion that he will never betray the trust of any mortal by the intentional misappropriation of a penny. I know no man who, I think, is less likely to compromise the truth than D. C. Allen; but he manifests, in the pulpit and out of it, a spirit that readily gains and permanently retains the respect and esteem of those who know him and hear him."

Their first meeting in the church house recently purchased by our colored brethren in Oakland, Cal., was very interesting. It was postponed from January 29 to February 5, fortunately, for the Bay Cities were in the grip of a blizzard the last Sunday in January—the worst snowstorm seen here in thirty-five years, the snow falling nearly all day. The Berkeley Hills were white with snow nearly all the following week—a very unusual sight.

February 5 was a bright, beautiful day. The meeting was at three o'clock P.M., and was attended by about twenty of our San Francisco members and by members of the various colored churches in the community, as well as the faithful band rejoicing to be at last in its own church home.

Brother Allen presided, and was in his proper element. He gave a brief outline of the work and told how the house had been secured, giving due credit to the preachers present who had aided him in securing the house. Mr. Larimore preached briefly, setting forth the gospel as it should and would be preached there by Brother Allen. Short, interesting, appropriate addresses were made by Dr. G. C. Coleman, pastor of the Baptist congregation that had recently moved out of that house to larger quarters, and by Dr. J. M. Brown, pastor of a near-by Methodist church, congratulating Brother Allen on having reached the goal of his ambition and expressing good will for his future success. The exercises were interspersed by songs by the congregation, led by an excellent leader of song from Dr. Brown's congregation.

A collection was taken from the audience, amounting to about twenty-six dollars. In accordance with Brother Allen's request, Mr. Larimore had reserved the checks we had received till after the collection from the audience. Those checks aggregated two hundred and fifty dollars. We have since received fifty dollars.

I cannot tell you how much these contributions were appreciated. They were a delightful surprise to Brother Allen. We had given him no intimation of the amount we had received, simply telling him, after we reached the house, we had some checks that had been sent to aid the work. It gave a great uplift to the congregation to receive such a liberal donation from the audience there and then have that supplemented by such a liberal, unexpected contribution from friends far and near. It encouraged them to believe they can pay for their house and to determine to do their whole duty to the limit of their ability.

We sincerely thank all who contributed to this work, are hopefully looking for checks from other friends who have been asked to help, and shall be delighted also to receive contributions from any others who may be inclined to take part and lot in this important work in the West, which is truly a mission field for the presentation of our plea. Contributions may be sent to us—Box 111, Berkeley, Cal.

The deed to the property we have bought is well protected by the usual restrictive clauses "and then some."

The photograph here shows the congregation at Rockwood, Tenn., and their new house of worship. In August, 1921, there were only twenty disciples in the county who were satisfied to work and worship "as it is written." At that time Will J. Cullum began his labors in that part of the State, and, as a result, a congregation of ninety-three members, with a new house and a midweek Bible class of seventy-five, is now doing good work for the Lord.

A Preacher's Advice After Separation.

BY H. C. FLEMING.

Dear brethren, sisters, and friends,
I am with you once again.
Some time has passed, and what has been
To mark the road to light and Him?

Have we all done our duty well,
Obeyed the words that save from hell?
The word of God, the seed of life—
Has it dwelt in us in the strife?

Who has fallen since last we met?
Were they ready to pay the debt?
Or did they sink into ruin's track,
From which they never can come back?

Words of life are plain to be seen,
Shining clear in the living green:
We may read as we run along,
In their power be always strong.

Why, then, should any ever fail
To keep the road, follow the trail?
No need to fall into the pit.
Lord, help us Satan to outwit.

In our duty we must be true,
Keep the upper world in view:
If not, we will soon forget
And fall into Satan's net.

If the signboard we will heed,
We'll never find ourselves in need
Of light to help us on the road
That leads to a pure abode.

Concerning Personalities.

Brother Will E. Walker, of Winchester, Tenn., sends us the following note:

In looking over the Gospel Advocate this week, I note, on pages 124-125, an article from N. L. Walker. I want to give a hearty amen to what he has suggested. The Advocate has lost many friends here because of the caustic personal attacks upon brethren. We preach peace; let us practice it. If there are personal encounters, let them be settled privately, not through the pages of the Advocate. I want to see the Advocate of such high order that all its articles will have an influence for good. Some of them have not had such an influence. I trust that all unpleasant personalities among brethren may be absolutely eliminated for the future.

The Advocate thanks Brother Walker for his kind criticism and is anxious that all the editors and contributors of the Advocate may profit by his suggestions. But it is easy to go from one extreme to another. Sometimes brethren attack some editor of the Advocate in another paper and then refuse to allow him to correct the matter in the paper where the attack was made. If the apostle Paul could afford to take the space of the New Testament to defend himself, why is it wrong for the editors of the Advocate to defend themselves? Sometimes one's influence for good may be ruined for life if he does not make denial and give the proof to the contrary. Paul not only used space in the New Testament to defend himself against false charges, but he states in that same book: "When Peter was come to Antioch, I withstood him to the face, because he was to be blamed." (Gal. 2: 11.) Sometimes I fear that this is an age of compromise, and I would like to caution my brethren not to get so badly scared at what they call "caustic personal attacks" that their influence may be turned in favor of that large body of professed Christians who want peace even if it comes by compromising the truth. Our conduct and our teaching are so closely related to ourselves that sometimes it is difficult to condemn the conduct and teaching of another without being criticized for engaging in personal attacks. Brethren, in our zeal for peace and harmony, let us not lend our influence to that great element who are afraid of the plain truth.

J. S. Dunn.

BY C. R. N.

In the War between the States, Frank Dunn, the father of J. S. Dunn, was in my father's company, and on one occasion when he fell wounded between the battle fronts my father went for him and carried him from the field. When the unholy conflict ended and father returned to his Tennessee home, he learned that his comrade—that one of his men, Frank Dunn—had been left sick in North Carolina, and he went to North Carolina and brought him in a wagon to his Tennessee home, which was but a few miles from the home of my father. The father of J. S. Dunn was buried in the same cemetery where my father and mother are buried—Murfreesboro, Tenn.

In speaking to me of the Dunn boys, and learning of their faithfulness to the gospel, father said: "I would be sorely disappointed in them if they were otherwise; for no truer, braver soldier wore the uniform than their father."

If for no other reason, I would love the Dunn boys for the high regard in which they held my father and the honor they have ever been ready to show him and his memory.

I loved Brother J. S. Dunn for his personal worth as a faithful gospel preacher and his unfailing friendship for those who came into his life; for his effort to ever discharge his duty as a Christian, son, husband, father, brother, friend, and citizen.

The second week in December of this year he was with me while I was engaged in a debate with a Baptist. He was anxious to see the truth prevail, and rejoiced in its triumph. To me he said: "Brother Nichol, the people here are anxious to know the truth; their souls are in jeopardy; the congregation here is weak; this may be your last debate—it may be the last opportunity to teach the people the truth. The Lord bless you in this work." At the close of the first day of the debate he said: "You have allowed nothing to prevent the presentation of the truth. You made the people know that you were not striving to whip the man you are debating with, but to teach the truth, and you have pleased the Lord, I am certain. Such debates are good for the truth." Such expressions were characteristic of Brother Dunn. He was ever ready with a word of exhortation or commendation. He did not seek to be great as a man, but his every ambition as a preacher was to feature the truth, to advance the cause of Christ, to save souls.

During this our last visit with each other he often spoke of his faithful wife, her loving care for their children and devotion to the church. He talked to me about his children and their love for the church, and how he was striving to be a factor in their lives. He recited to me how Sterling, his son, a young man in college, at times would say: "Father, come sleep with me to-night." Such a request from a young man to his father speaks much to every parent and is a compliment to both parent and son, and, too, it gives an insight to the character of each. Of his daughter, Louise, he said: "I think there is nothing in the world she would do should I ask her not to."

At the age of sixteen Brother J. S. Dunn was baptized by Brother Granville Lipscomb, and the Sunday following his baptism he began to do public work in the church. He was educated in the high school at Readyville, Tenn., the Winchester Normal, and the Nashville Bible School.

As a minister, he spent one year with the church in Rockwall, Texas; two years with Pearl and Bryan Streets Church, Dallas, Texas; two years with the church in Colorado Springs, Col.; two years with the church in Denton, Texas; two years with the church in Weatherford, Texas; four years with the Central Church, Fort Worth, Texas, four years with the Oak Cliff Church; one year with the church in Waxahachie, Texas; and then moved to Dallas, Texas, where he lived till his death. In addition to the work with the congregations mentioned, he spent much of the summer in evangelistic work, in which field he was remarkably successful, not only in bringing sinners to Christ, but in stimulating congregations to greater activity and deeper devotion. His program in protracted meetings, as well as when laboring with congregations, was a constructive one. He sought to develop the material in the congregations where he labored.

In the death of J. S. Dunn the church has lost one of her most useful ministers, which will be keenly felt where he has labored; Sister Dunn, a faithful husband; the children, a devoted father; the State, one of her best citizens; and I have lost one of my best friends.

I know no higher compliment to pay my brother, J. S. Dunn, than to say: He was a Christian.

As I Knew Brother J. S. Dunn.

BY J. B. NELSON.

Excepting his own immediate family, I doubt if any man knew Brother J. S. Dunn as intimately as I knew him. Though four years my senior, we were closely associated in our lives.

On March 30, 1874, among the beautiful hills and verdant valleys of Middle Tennessee, near the little village of Readyville, ten miles east of the beautiful and historic city of Murfreesboro and a short distance from the picturesque Stone River that rises in the Cumberland Mountains, the subject of this sketch was born into this world. Brother James S. Dunn's father died as a result of a wound received in the Civil War, when the boy, James, was about ten years old. Being blessed with a God-loving, energetic mother who possessed an indomitable will, young James was destined (and was trained) to noble and useful manhood. Brother J. S. Dunn's mother was my father's sister, and on account of the relationship and the proximity of our homes we were associated very closely in our early lives—almost daily.

I knew James Sterling Dunn intimately. I have played with him, and gone swimming, hunting, courting, and to school with him. Since we became men we have held meetings together and had varied business dealings, and I can freely say that I always found him honorable in all his dealings and trying to keep himself on the Lord's side on all occasions. I loved him, not merely for the relationship in the flesh, but his love and devotion to our God. J. S. Dunn had no compromise to make with sin and evil men. He was not afraid to speak his convictions on all occasions. I have been with him in his personal work with the church here in Dallas, and I have heard him say to the derelict members on the streets and in their homes and places of business: "Brother, you were not at the Lord's house last Sunday. You can't live this way and go to heaven when you die. I am expecting you and am going to look for you next Sunday, and I hope I will not be disappointed in you. God is not pleased with the way you are doing, and you are not treating him right." Not long ago I heard him say to a leading attorney in Dallas, who had at one time been in church work, but had wandered off: "Judge, what do you think is going to become of you when you die, and what do you want me to say at your funeral?" The Judge replied: "Brother Dunn, I know I will be lost if I do not do better, but I expect to do better." Brother Dunn was one man that carried his religion in his business dealings, in his travels, and never let an opportunity pass to speak a word for the church. He would not listen to those that malign, berate, or vituperate the churches of Christ. He would say: "You must not speak evil of the wife of Christ. What if I should slander your wife? You would not like it. Neither will Christ." His idea was to condemn sin in the church, but never condemn the church.

Brother Dunn was a man that went in "high gear" all his life. Though not physically strong, he was a bundle of energy and industry. His neighbors will testify that he kept one of the cleanest premises in all the neighborhood. He advocated a clean pulpit and pew. He often said to me that the evil among preachers did more harm than all the evils of the church. He has been the means of establishing a number of new congregations in Texas and other States. He has done more to arouse lethargical and sleepy churches than almost any other preacher in Texas. Even in his Sunday appointments he would preach as though he were in a revival. J. S. Dunn will be missed for his life, his teaching, and his defense of truth and the church.

Brother Dunn leaves three most excellent children. Louise, the oldest, is a student in the S. M. U. and will take her degree this spring. She is above the average in character and devotion to the church of Christ. She will not permit the truth to be trampled under unhallowed feet, regardless of where she may be or the social standing of the trampler. Sterling, the next, a bright, intellectual young man, is also taking a degree in the S. M. U. He is filled with industry, and has worked after school hours and on Saturdays for several years and practically made his way in the way of clothing himself and meeting incidental expenses. Claudia, yet too young to realize what the loss of a father means, is a promising little girl. The last to mention, but not the least by any means in character and devotion, is the wife of J. S. Dunn and the mother of his children. She is a very modest, reserved woman. All who know her love her, and have the utmost confidence in her as a true neighbor, friend, wife, mother, and Christian woman. She is an exceptionally strong character. Modest, sweet, kind, gentle, yet brave, energetic, and untiring in her efforts to please her family, make her home happy, and properly train her children. Brother Dunn found a jewel for a wife when he married Claudia Holland. To this humble, consecrated woman much credit should go in the garnishing and tempering of the character and work of our deceased brother. They were in my home for a few months, and I know this godly woman. She has such an even make-up in all her faculties. She loved her husband, and he loved her, and that is what made home sweet and the burden of death so hard to bear. This faithful preacher's widow is left behind with her children to mourn their loss. May God gently lead you, Sister Dunn, and help you and your children to bear your cross heroically. Brother Dunn is now a beacon light to you and all those who knew him, to look higher and upward to heaven, where we will meet in yonder world to bask in the sunshine of God's eternal love.

A loving husband, a faithful father, a strong and devoted gospel preacher, a good neighbor, a noble citizen, a lover of the Lord Jesus Christ and his church, and an honest man, is gone from this stage of action. A great loss to us all and the cause of Christ has taken place, but heaven has gained a well-developed sheaf. One of Brother Dunn's favorite texts in preaching was Rev. 14: 13. Now I come to apply his text for others to him: "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord." I might add one other: "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints." (Ps. 116: 15.) Our loss is heaven's precious gain. It is certainly better to go and be with the Lord. (Phil. 1: 23.)

The Funeral of J. S. Dunn.

BY RUBY REGISTER.

All Saturday morning, February 4, it had rained, and the clouds hung dark and heavy; but about two o'clock in the afternoon, as we wended our way, sadly, to the big church house that has stood for so many years on the corner of Pearl and Bryan Streets, in Dallas, the sky began to brighten and the sun came peeping out. By the time we reached the church the sun was streaming through the big windows, and we took our seats quietly and watched the crowd gather and fill up the long benches. It was not long until the house was full—our friends from the Oak Cliff congregation that we see so often and those from the other congregations across town, and many from out of town that we did not know. The church house was filled, except for the first four rows, which were soon to hold the sorrowing family of Brother Jim Dunn. We had gathered there with heavy hearts in honor of Brother Jim, and to share with his family this great burden of sorrow that had suddenly come upon them; to hear the beautiful words of tribute and praise and love so worthily bestowed upon him. And it was hard to realize that Brother Jim was gone.

As we sat there waiting, looking upon the four empty rows of seats and upon the platform covered with ferns and potted plants, we thought of this old mother church of Texas that has stood for so long upon the corner of Pearl and Bryan Streets, and we thought how its old walls must be steeped in the gospel; for how many, many of God's servants must have preached from that rostrum in the years gone by! How many times our Brother Jim must have passed up and down those aisles, and how many times he must have stood upon that platform and, like Paul, expounded and preached to those of the household of faith gathered together with one accord! How many had been led gently down the steps of the little baptistery there behind where the ferns and plants stood, and had gone down into the water and come up out of the water to walk in the newness of life!

And we of the Oak Cliff congregation felt some way that Brother Jim belonged to us. While others loved him and sorrowed for him (for his friends could not be numbered), we felt that somehow we must have been closer to him than others. Had not his home been there near us in Oak Cliff for years? Did not his little wife and his splendid children worship with us every Lord's day, and did we not really owe to Brother J. S. Dunn the great success of the Oak Cliff congregation? Not far from the Oak Cliff church house little Claudia first saw the light of day, and there, too, Louise and Sterling had grown from childhood to young womanhood and manhood.

All of this passed through our minds as we saw our own Brother Stovall gather his singers together at one side of the platform. And presently they came—and we shall never forget the little procession coming slowly and sadly up the aisle of the church. Our dear old Brother Phillips (D. E.) walked in front, his graying head bowed in sorrow. We could not keep from thinking how very fitting it was that Brother Phillips should lead the little procession, for how many times must he and Brother Jim have consulted together back there in the early days of the Oak Cliff congregation! And behind Brother Phillips, bearing the beautiful, gray, flower-laden casket, came my own brothers, J. F. and Sam Peeler, and Brethren Fisher, Wise, Weaver, Moran, and Neece. To think of the Oak Cliff congregation is to think of those eight men—tireless, faithful workers in the vineyard of the Lord. And the tears flowed from our eyes as we recalled how short a time before Brother Jim had been there in that very church shaking hands and talking with those very men who were now doing this last sad service for him.

And the saddest picture of all was the sorrowing ones behind. The brave little widow on the arm of Brother G. A. Dunn; behind them the dear old mother, supported by the strong arm of Brother John Dunn; and there was little Brother Jasper and Dr. Dunn and the sisters from far-away States. How our hearts ached for them! And we wondered if there had ever been such a family as this one. Could any of us really appreciate the greatness of that little mother who had given to the world such wonderful preachers of the gospel?

Finally, after all of the flowers had been brought in—such beautiful tributes of love from the many, many friends—we saw Brother Pullias mounting the platform, and we recall his sad face and his sad voice as he opened the Book and began to read Paul's words, "I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep;" and after that we remember that Brother Colley prayed such a beautiful prayer, and somehow our hearts seemed heaviest when he mentioned in his kind, gentle voice in that prayer, "this little one who does not understand." We thought of dear little Claudia and how the mother's heart would ache when in the future this little one would ask about the father who would come not again.

And then Brother T. W. Phillips, of Fort Worth, stepped upon the rostrum, and we wish that it was within our power to repeat that wonderful service. We wish that everybody might know the beautiful and fitting words that fell from his lips that day as, with trembling voice and tears rolling down his cheeks, he recalled the profitable life of this great servant of the Lord. The love of Brother Phillips and Brother Jim for each other was a wonderful thing—referred to in life as "David and Jonathan"—saluting each other for so many years as "David" and "Jonathan"—it was sad for us here to witness this last farewell between the two. They had made a promise to each other that whichever should pass over the river first, the one that was left should do this last sad service for him; and Brother Phillips recalled his own recent illness when he lay for so long in a hospital bed, and he told us how the gentle hand of Brother Jim had smoothed his brow, and of the words of comfort given to him in that kind voice. And Brother Phillips pictured to us the home back there in Tennessee when our Brother Jim was a boy, and when the sorrowing men gathered there to mourn this brother who was the first one to go of that wonderful family were boys also, and the little mother as she taught them the words of light and truth, thereby planting the seeds in the hearts of those boys that should grow and ripen, and as they became men and preachers, the great harvest, the great hundredfold that had been reaped. Such an impressive service, never to be forgotten by those gathered there—the beautiful flowers, the soft strains of the songs from the singers!

Finally, as we listened to the dear old song we have heard so many times, "Shall We Gather at the River?" the congregation was allowed to pass in sections around by the casket and to look for the last time upon the cold, still face of the man we loved.

After a while we found that we had reached the cemetery, and that picture will remain with us as long as we live: the flowers, so many wreaths and sprays, and the big white cross and anchor and the emblems of love from the congregations all over the State who attributed to Brother Jim the success of their work; the little family sitting with bowed heads, and around them standing the friends and relatives; and we can hear again the last sweet prayer offered by "Jonathan" for the departed "David;" and did the words of "God Be with You Till We Meet Again" ever sound half so tender and sweet, as sung that day around the last resting place of Brother Jim? And we will always remember how the little black-clad figure of Mother Dunn, still resting upon the strong arm of Brother John, looked, as she walked near to the grave and stood there looking in; and then Brother Jasper, the youngest of the boys, as he, too, walked near and with bowed head said as if to himself: "It is hard to give him up—hard to give him up." And somehow we have all been thinking since, over and over, of Brother Jasper's words, and we, too, say with him: "It was hard to give him up—hard to give him up."

A Word of Appreciation.

BY G. MITCHELL PULLIAS.

In the death of Brother J. S. Dunn, which occurred at his home in this city on February 3, the church of Christ suffers the loss of one of her greatest standard bearers. I had known him personally but a few months, though long enough to appreciate his greatness as a man, a Christian, and a preacher of the gospel. He loved the church and spent his life building it up—in teaching others to "live so you can go to heaven when you die." I have never known a more beautiful character or a more consecrated Christian than Sister Dunn. The many virtues of these noble parents are reflected in the children—Louise, Sterling, and Claudia. The Oak Cliff Church, with which Brother Dunn labored several years and where the family now worships, shares in the sorrow occasioned by his death. Our prayers and tenderest sympathy are expressed for Sister Dunn and the children. We know they are sad, but their sorrow is not "as the rest who have no hope."

"The goal of history is the redemption of the world."

MATTHEW HENRY'S COMMENTARY FOR OUR READERS

The greatest preachers of the past two centuries attribute much of their inspiration and usefulness to Matthew Henry's Commentary on the whole Bible. Born in the seventeenth century, his name and his work still live and are household words. Thousands of homes treasure this commentary second only to the Bible, and many a man traces his right start to the loving advice of Matthew Henry.

Charles H. Spurgeon said: "Every minister ought to read Matthew Henry entirely and carefully through once at least. He will acquire a vast store of sermons; and as for thoughts, they will swarm around him like twittering sparrows around an old gable toward the close of autumn." Dr. Philip Schaff, compiler of Schaff's Bible Dictionary, pronounces it "the best practical and devotional commentary for English readers."

The management of the Gospel Advocate is fortunate in securing twenty-five sets of this unrivaled commentary, which will be sent as a premium to every reader who will send twenty-five new subscribers at the regular subscription price of $2 per year. This is undoubtedly the most attractive commentary offer ever made. You will receive six portable volumes of twelve hundred pages each, large, clear, unbroken type, with substantial Roxborough binding. If you wish to pay cash, the price for the six volumes is $17.50, not prepaid. When sent as a premium, we pay all charges.

E. S. Jelley reports one hundred baptisms in India during 1921. In a recent communication he says: "At 11:45 P.M., December 31, 1921, wife and I arose, went to the Mang settlement a few rods off and awoke the preachers, and we spent the remaining moments of the old year in prayer." We should all spend more time in prayer.

From T. B. Clark, Gallatin, Tenn.: "February has been a very good month for the cause of Christ in Gallatin. Fine interest in every line of work. Large and enthusiastic crowds for Tennessee people. Our prayer meetings are given over to the study of church government. We are anxious to learn what the Bible teaches on this question."

From H. M. Phillips, 4410 St. Elmo Avenue, Chattanooga, Tenn., February 5: "In spite of a gloomy day, we had good attendance. Two were baptized last Thursday night. All of the seven meetings a week are being well attended. It is a church with a mind to work. The Gospel Advocate will likely be in more homes here soon. It ought to be in all."

From Lucas North, Ethridge, Tenn.: "The meeting the brethren are arranging to begin in Nashville on March 28 is bound to be a great forward movement in bringing to the attention of so many the effort to return to New Testament teaching in all things. It is certain to disabuse the minds of hundreds of people who have been misinformed concerning what we teach. Let every Christian pray for its success."

The death of A. S. Warren in Nashville last week occasioned great sorrow in a wide circle of friends. He was a man of many sterling qualities and firm convictions and was an earnest seeker for the truth of God. Brother Warren was intimately associated with the editors of the Gospel Advocate and showed his friendship for the paper in many ways. He will be greatly missed as a citizen and a brother in Christ.

We are in receipt of a communication from Burlison, Tenn., Route 1, signed by W. T. Smith, Lute Davis, and James Lovell, which reads: "We are trying to build a house at Giltedge, Tenn., for the church of Christ to worship the Lord in. We have the framing up and have the weatherboarding and laths ready for the top, but are not able to do any more. May the Lord bless us. The deed contains the restrictive clause, which makes it perfectly safe for all future time."

J. C. McQuiddy left for the West on February 22, expecting to get a needed rest and miss some of the changes in the weather which Nashville is liable to experience between now and the first of May. Brother McQuiddy's work on the Gospel Advocate will be done by others; and while we shall miss him—and no doubt the Advocate readers will—we hope to have him back in the early spring, capable of doing more and better work for the Advocate and for the cause of truth than he has ever done before.

William P. Walker, Dinuba, Cal., writes: "Some of my Eastern friends have complained because I have failed to make reports of our work in the 'Golden State' through the Gospel Advocate. Since my arrival here last fall I have had but little time to make reports of our work through the press. I know reports from working congregations and soul-winning ministers are encouraging—at least, they are to me. There is nothing in the Advocate that I enjoy and appreciate more than the reports from the brethren. When I hear of new houses of worship being erected and precious souls being brought to the Christ for soul-cleansing power, I take courage, rejoice with the angels, and thank God. Brethren, if we would devote more time at our desks studying our Bibles, just a little more time on our knees, and spend more hours out in the byways of sin looking for lost souls, we would have less time, perhaps, to write unbrotherly, ugly things about each other. Let us fill our papers with love for the lost and erring, the plan of salvation, the Spirit-filled life, heaven and hell. When I get a paper filled with debates, divisions, strife, sarcasm, and preacher jealousy, I walk to the stove and burn it; but when I get one filled with brotherly love and the gospel, I read it and pass it to some unsaved person."

"For I have learned, in whatsoever state I am, therein to be content. I know how to be abased, and I know also how to abound: in everything and in all things have I learned the secret both to be filled and to be hungry, both to abound and to be in want." (Phil. 4: 11, 12.) Paul, no doubt, knew some things he had not learned—that is, in the ordinary meaning of the word "learn"—as he was an inspired apostle. Certain truths concerning human redemption were given to the apostles by miracle, but this fact did not prevent the apostle Paul from learning by experience as others learn. Paul learned to be content in whatever state he was in by his experience in the past. He, no doubt, had seen God overrule his greatest sorrow or disappointment for his good. I would not say that this is not the teaching of the Holy Spirit, for it is; but the experience of the apostle agrees with the teaching of the Spirit on these questions. At times Paul had plenty, and was blessed by it; at other times he had been hungry, and had also been blessed on account of hunger. Paul gives it as a secret when he says: "I have learned the secret both to be filled and to be hungry." It is indeed a secret to the world and to most Christians, because they have not made proper effort to learn it from the Bible, neither have they been good enough to learn it from their own experience. If all Christians could say with the apostle, "We also rejoice in our tribulations," we could then go further and say with him: "Rejoice in the Lord always: again I will say, Rejoice." To know this secret will bring perpetual happiness to the Christian.

Query Department

J. O. Barnes, Lake City, Fla., sends the following for consideration: "If a member of the church of Christ whose name is on the church book in Texas comes to Florida and locates where there is a church of Christ for an indefinite time (not expecting to be a permanent citizen), and worships with the congregation in Florida while there, but does not publicly identify himself with the church either by letter or otherwise, but simply works with the church, is he to be considered a member of the body where he worships? If so, and he commits an offense against the church of such nature that he should be withdrawn from, does the church in Florida have jurisdiction over him sufficient to take up the case and withdraw fellowship from him?"

Wherever a Christian is, he is a member of the body of Christ. If a Christian dwells in Florida for six or twelve months, during that time he is a Christian and a member of the church of Christ in Florida. He should identify himself with some near-by local congregation in Florida. If he is with strangers in Florida or is unknown to the local congregation with which he worships, on the first Lord's day after his arrival he should deposit with the congregation a letter of commendation. It is a mistake to fail to do this. In the event he fails to furnish the church with which he worships such a letter and does something wrong, the church in Florida should notify the church in Texas where the offender has membership of his offense and request scriptural action in his case. The church in Texas should report its action to the church in Florida, and this church should make the action public.

A sister inquires to know who is the "porter" and what is the meaning of "go in and out," found in the tenth chapter of John. She says: "Our Sunday-school lesson last Lord's day was the tenth chapter of John. Please explain verse 9. What is meant by 'go in and out?' Some thought it meant go in and out of the church. In verse 3, who is the 'porter?'"

Verse 9 reads: "I am the door; by me if any man enter in, he shall be saved, and shall go in and go out, and shall find pasture." Christ is the door, the shepherd, and the pasture. The sheep were Christ's followers. As the sheep went in and out of the sheepfold, so Christ's disciples should find him the bread of life and the water of life. Like the true shepherd that leads his sheep out to graze in green pastures and to streams of water, so the Lord's people will go out of the life that now is and into the life that is to come. The "porter" is the gatekeeper, whose business it is to guard the entrance. He was furnished with arms to fight off intruders, but he would let in the shepherd. The whole chapter is a beautiful figure to show the truthfulness of Jesus' claim to be the Son of God, and to show that all true servants of God will receive and hear him as such, and that those who reject him as an impostor and will not hear his voice are not his people; and such were those Jews to whom he was then speaking.

James O'Neil, Mount Pleasant, Tenn., inquires to know "if it is right for women to teach in the Sunday school." He understands that 1 Cor. 14: 34, 35 means the public proclamation of the gospel. He then asks if a "Sunday-school class" is public. No, the classes are in rooms to themselves at the Russell Street church of Christ in Nashville. I teach a large Bible class, but I do not see nor hear the other classes and teachers. This is as it should be. If all the brethren were either studying or teaching the Bible in a class or classes, they would hear only their own class just as I do.

He also wants to know the meaning of the "house of God" in 1 Tim. 3: 15. "House of God" means the same as the church of God.

He thinks I made a mistake in giving a quotation from Acts 18: 26; but if he will read this passage in the American Revised Version, he will find that I was correct. Here is the passage: "And he began to speak boldly in the synagogue. But when Priscilla and Aquila heard him, they took him unto them, and expounded unto him the way of God more accurately." If this means anything, it mentions Priscilla first, and shows that she and Aquila spoke unto Apollos the way of God more accurately.

But for the benefit of all who are interested, I quote in full the answer David Lipscomb gave to the question, "Is it right for women to teach in the Sunday school?" as given in "Queries and Answers," by Lipscomb and Sevell, page 736. He says:

"As in all the churches of the saints, let the women keep silence in the churches: for it is not permitted unto them to speak; but let them be in subjection, as also saith the law. And if they would learn anything, let them ask their own husbands at home: for it is shameful for a woman to speak in the church." (1 Cor. 14: 34, 35.) I could not write that in plainer, simpler language. I would be foolish to attempt it. Read also 1 Tim. 2: 8-15. Yet women have the right to teach those who know less than themselves. Priscilla and Aquila taught Apollos. (Acts 18: 24-26.) So I am sure that a woman may teach the Bible to old or young, male or female, at the meetinghouse, at home, at a neighbor's house, on Sunday or Monday or any other day of the week, if they know less than she does, if she will do it in a quiet, modest, womanly way. I have seen wrongs done by women in a Sunday school; I have seen wrongs done by them at home, in the parlor, the dining room, the kitchen. This does not mean she cannot do right in all of these places. She can do right in the Sunday school.

At another time, in answer to the same question, Brother Lipscomb said:

Yes, we think so, if they teach the truth. They are often especially fitted for that work. We know of nothing that would forbid it. Aged women are commanded to be teachers of good things, and we think younger women may do likewise. Women worked in the churches anciently, and we can see nothing forbidding it now.

Mrs. Brant Phillips, Covington, Tenn., inquires as follows: "When Paul, in 2 Tim. 4: 13, wanted the books and especially the parchments, what does he mean by the parchments? Were they old sacred writings or prophecies? Or were they his own writings or letters to the different churches or to Christians? What were the things called which they were commanded to wear and put on the doorposts, in Deut. 6: 6-10?"

2 Tim. 4: 13 reads: "The cloak that I left at Troas with Carpus, bring when thou comest, and the books, especially the parchments." Deut. 6: 6-9 reads: "And these words, which I command thee this day, shall be upon thy heart; and thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children, and shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thy house, and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down, and when thou risest up. And thou shalt bind them for a sign upon thy hand, and they shall be for frontlets between thine eyes. And thou shalt write them upon the doorposts of thy house, and upon thy gates." The "parchments" were probably the Jewish Scriptures and a copy of the Septuagint. He must have had these at hand all the time. The "books" were most likely his own writings. The books and parchments now sent for could not be for his own use, as he was very soon to suffer martyrdom. Probably he intended to give them to the faithful, that they might be preserved for the use of the church. The commandments of God they were to teach to their children and to write upon the doorposts and bind them for a sign upon their hands.

The Tabernacle Meeting, Again.

BY F. W. SMITH.

I have received a number of letters relative to this meeting, and will here submit the following:

Grand Junction, Tenn., R. F. D. 2, Box 22, February 11, 1922.—F. W. Smith, Nashville, Tenn.—Dear Brother: I note in the Gospel Advocate of the Tabernacle meeting of Nashville. I am greatly interested in such a meeting, and agree with the brother who made the suggestion that the daily papers would be one of the best ways of the mass of people reading the great sermons. The world at large will never read a book of that kind, but many, many will read it through the daily papers, and I believe much and lasting good can be done in this way. I suggest the Memphis Commercial-Appeal as one of the papers, it being widely read by the public. We pray that much good may be accomplished.

J. E. DAWKINS.

This letter speaks encouragingly and emphasizes the point of getting the secular papers to publish the sermons. This, as heretofore stated in these columns, would, in our judgment, be a splendid thing to do, if such publicity could be given free or at a nominal figure. The Nashville papers are giving the greatest publicity to the Gipsy Smith meetings, giving Gipsy's sermons in full to their readers. I do not know whether or not this is in part or in whole free publicity, but I do know there will be a vast difference between the character of preaching done by Gipsy Smith and that done by N. B. Hardeman. Gipsy Smith's sermons are of the popular type, and by this I mean he teaches the popular theory of an instantaneous and miraculous conversion, salvation before and without obedience in baptism and outside of the church. He rarely, if ever, mentions baptism, and most certainly ignores its place in the scheme of redemption altogether. I doubt whether the Commercial-Appeal or any of the daily papers would publish sermons in which the full gospel is preached, unless as paid matter. It cost something like two hundred dollars to get one of the Louisville (Ky.) papers to publish a Presbyterian minister's sermon exposing so-called "Christian Science." Of course, we shall be thankful for any publicity that may be given by the daily press, and it may be that we can have at least a few of these sermons published in full through this medium. I give another letter which does not speak so encouragingly:

Dear Brother Smith: I want to have my say about the Tabernacle meeting. Are you not making too much ado about that meeting, anyway? I once heard a story about a man that was going to jump a very high fence. To do his best, he went away back; but he ran himself down before he got to the fence. The reader can make the application. "The kingdom cometh not with observation." Again, the kingdom is like a little leaven hid in three measures of meal. Again, you say that while Russellites and others are doing so much, we are doing scarcely nothing. Wrong again. I told you last year about a brother reporting that there were but three congregations in one county when there were thirteen. So we do not always know what is going on. In the meantime, while this Tabernacle meeting is in progress, let the little meetings go on. Little things make big ones after a while.

B. F. HART.

Brother Hart seems to think we are "making too much ado" about this meeting, but I do not think his point is well taken. I cannot see that too much interest, earnestness, and zeal can be expended in the matter of talking about and advertising the work of preaching the gospel and saving souls. It was better for Brother Hart's man to wear himself out in an effort to "jump" than it would have been to have made no effort at all. What our brother says about the nature of the kingdom is true; but unless the subjects of the kingdom busy themselves, there will be precious little leaving done. I am sure that he entirely misinterprets the motives of those engaged in this enterprise. It is true that Christ said the kingdom cometh not with observation—that is, with worldly wisdom, power, and show; but this does not mean that we are not to let our light shine before men. When people meet, sing, pray, and preach the gospel in the spirit of the Master, or use all legitimate means to bring his cause to the attention of the world, they are violating no principle of divine teaching. Brother Hart most certainly misread my statement about free literature. I did not say unqualifiedly that "we are doing scarcely anything," but that in the matter of distributing "free literature" we were not doing scarcely anything. If Brother Hart can show me that this statement is incorrect, I will modify it.

Book Reviews.

BY F. W. SMITH.

"Special Sermons for Special Occasions," is a volume of 338 pages, edited by E. W. Thornton, and issued by the Standard Publishing Company, Eighth, Ninth, and Cutter Streets, Cincinnati, Ohio. The book is neatly bound in cloth and sells for $2 per copy. It can be had by writing to the McQuiddy Printing Company, Nashville, Tenn. The topics discussed are all practical and the subject-matter is well arranged. Each writer handles his subject in an interesting and profitable way, and the book is calculated to stimulate thought and prove helpful to all who may read it. The subject treated by the editor—viz., "Home Dynamics"—is worth many times the price of the book. But this is not saying the book is without faults; for it, like all else human, has its imperfections.

"Twelve Live-Wire Questions in Religious Dynamics," by Christian H. Shirk, issued by the Fleming H. Revell Company, New York, contains 112 pages of interesting matter. The mechanical work is in line with the good reputation of this well-established house, and while the price is not given, I judge the book would sell for $1. It is written in a very plain and simple style, and, with the exception of a few topics, I find little to criticize adversely. The author's positions on the church, the Sabbath, and prayer are not altogether in harmony with the Bible. In fact, on these things he is clearly against Bible teaching. But the book contains much valuable and helpful information. A few of the subjects will indicate the drift and trend of this book—viz.: "Does It Make Any Difference Whether or Not We Believe in God?" "Is the Bible also a Mere Scrap of Paper?" "Is the Church a Worth-while Institution?" "Does It Make Any Difference if We Pray?"

If Your Trouble Is Scrofula

As Often Acquired as Inherited,

You have eruptions and sores, and perhaps enlarged glands of the neck. This blood disease affects the internal organs, especially the lungs, and if neglected may develop into consumption.

It causes many troubles, and is aggravated by impure air, unwholesome food, bad water, too much heat or cold, and want of proper exercise.

Hood's Sarsaparilla, the blood-purifying medicine that has been used with so much satisfaction by three generations, is wonderfully successful in the treatment of scrofula. Give it a trial.

If a cathartic or laxative is needed, take Hood's Pills.

SEX PROBLEMS

Every married couple and all who contemplate marriage should own a complete Book of Life, of 1,000 pages, handsomely bound, such as the "Medical Adviser." It unfolds the secrets of married happiness, often revealed too late. Sold formerly for $1.50. We can mention only a few of the chapters here: Mechanism of Life, History of Marriage, Sex Problems, Advice for Mother and Babe, Nervous Troubles, Anatomy, Physiology, Medicine, First Aid to the Injured.

Special Offer.—For a limited time we will send one copy for $1.00 (or stamps) to readers of this paper. Guaranteed, money back if not satisfied. Address Medical Press, 640 1/2 Washington Street, Buffalo, N. Y.

Field Reports

Lascassas, Tenn., February 22.—I visited the church at Rockwood, Tenn., on last Lord's day, and found an active congregation there, under the leadership of Brother Will J. Cullum. They have recently built a new and commodious house of worship.—Jarratt L. Smith.

Jackson, Tenn., February 20.—The Highland Avenue church of Christ is in fine working condition. Brother F. O. Howell serves the church half of his time, many others occasionally. Brother A. G. Freed has agreed to resume his work with us, giving one-fourth of his time.—John T. Hall.

Hatfield, Ark., February 23.—Last Lord's day I was at Stephens, and we had three fine services. I go next Sunday to De Queen. We like our new home just fine, and after the first of July I will be able to hold some meetings, and can go anywhere. I have only time for two more summer meetings. If you are interested, write me at Hatfield, Ark.—C. H. Smithson.

Muskogee, Okla., February 20.—Brother Joe H. Blue commenced a meeting for us last Sunday. At night we had the largest attendance we have ever had at the beginning of a meeting. Brother F. L. Rowe, of Cincinnati, Ohio, was with us at both services, and spoke words of encouragement to the congregation. The meeting will continue indefinitely.—T. S. Bain.

Clarksville, Tenn., February 23.—The church of Christ here bought a splendid church lot to-day, on which they are to build, at once, a neat, modern, yet inexpensive, meetinghouse. This faithful little band has been worshipping in the courthouse for some time. We have some faithful members here, and great things can be expected when we get into our home.—J. G. Malphurs.

Wellington, Texas, February 22.—The work here is moving along nicely, and we are hoping to grow stronger in the work. We were blessed on the second Lord's day in February by the addition of a Christian family from Quanah, Texas, who recently moved into our midst. On the third Lord's day I preached at Esteline. I had a good hearing, and I think some good was done.—Lee Sanders.

Valdosta, Ga., February 21.—Brother C. C. Merritt, of St. Louis, Mo., visited the congregation at Dasher, Ga., last week. He delivered splendid sermons on Thursday and Friday nights, Sunday morning and Sunday night, with one addition Sunday morning. The church here is planning to use two men in mission work this summer at points in Southern Georgia and Florida. There is a great work to be done in the Southern field. Let us pray God to send more laborers into this field.—C. B. Laws.

Union, S. C., February 20.—We had two fine services yesterday. Some were out who had never heard us before. I had twenty-five in my adult class in our Bible study at ten o'clock. Other classes were very encouraging. This week I am beginning several Bible drills in different homes, which will continue until our protracted-meeting work begins. We have also organized a singing class which will meet in the church house on Saturday nights. Our regular Wednesday-evening prayer services have held up well.—Thomas H. Burton.

Holtland, Tenn., February 20.—I am now teaching here and preaching on Lord's days. School will be out in April. I have been asked to teach again next year, but I have decided to devote my time to preaching, as the gospel needs to be preached so much. I intend to devote part of my time to mission work in my own county (Canon) and adjoining counties. My time will be open after July. Any congregation desiring my services in protracted meetings may address me at Holtland, Tenn., until April 10; after that, at Woodbury, Tenn.—Charles T. Powell.

Fort Worth, Texas, February 21.—The Southside Church continues to do good work. Last Lord's day was especially good with us. The sisters continue their works of benevolence—feeding and clothing the poor. The organized charities of the cities are beginning to take notice and insist on knowing how we do so much when we never take up a public collection or ask people to assist. If given concrete examples, the world would learn that the law of God would provide all equipment for God's work, if allowed to do so. I have been sick for several weeks, but have been working all the time.—Tice Elkins.

Tampa, Fla., February 21.—The meeting at Avon Park, Fla., closed on February 12, going over three Lord's days. The interest was good throughout. In many respects it was a great meeting. The church there has many faithful members. To know them is to love them. Some of them I knew in the long ago in Mississippi. It was a happy reunion. While there I made my home with Brother and Sister L. A. Wolff. If any of the brethren would like to know more of this sunny climate and the land of flowers and golden fruit, write L. A. Wolff, John B. Peden, Charles Ott, George Wolff, or C. H. Hinton. They will not misrepresent, as they know Florida.—A. G. Freed.

Beaumont, Texas, February 20.—Yesterday was a good day with us at South Park Church. We had large crowds at all services. I am teaching a singing school, and more than one hundred have been attending the school. The brethren seem to be encouraged and reasonably well satisfied with my feeble efforts in all lines of work. I have arranged to exchange meetings with Brother C. D. Crouch, of Port Arthur. I will hold their meeting in March, the Lord willing, and he will be with us sometime in April. I want to hold some two or three meetings in Texas before leaving the State. Brethren may write me at 393 Essex Street.—Will W. Slater.

Fresno, Cal., February 19.—The work with the Nevada Avenue congregation moves along nicely. Brother Jimmie D. Smith, of Kentucky, who is visiting his brother in Tulare, gave us a fine sermon last Sunday. At the suggestion of Brother W. P. Walker, of Dinuba, representatives of several congregations in the San Joaquin Valley met with us in the afternoon to discuss doing some mission work. Much interest was manifested, and we expect to see some one in the field in the near future. Three noble souls made the confession and were baptized at the morning service to-day. Recently a good sister was received by letter. Indications are that 1922 will be our best year. We are working and praying to that end.—W. Halliday Trice.

Athens, Ala., February 22.—During the year 1921 I held fifteen protracted meetings—nine in Arkansas, one in Oklahoma, and six in Alabama—besides some meetings of three or four days' duration. Brother J. C. Mosley and I held two mission meetings together, and baptized nearly one hundred persons. We also set in order four congregations to meet and break bread on Lord's day. I restored two here in Alabama; got ten brethren at Harris, Ala., to promise to meet and break bread and have a Bible lesson; and held two meetings in destitute places. Total receipts last year, sixty dollars. I am hoping I can do more in the Lord's vineyard this year than last. Brethren, if you need my services for a meeting in July, write me at Athens, Ala., Route 8.—William W. Still.

Shelbyville, Ky., February 23.—Last Sunday I was at Van Buren and Shelbyville. The work at both places is doing fairly well, considering sickness and other things that hinder. I will be on the road in a few days in the interest of the church at Shelbyville. We are in need of a new building, and I trust that brethren will help us out. Very little help has come in so far, and I fear that brethren are treating our appeal too lightly. I have labored hard to establish the cause here, and we have gotten together a faithful band of Christians, and this, too, in the face of the strongest kind of opposition. If brethren who profess to be on the Lord's side will not come to our rescue and help us stand, we just won't be able to stand. We want twenty churches to send us twenty dollars each for twelve months. Will you come over and help us? We will watch and pray.—R. A. Craig.

Clifton, Texas, February 16.—The Florence church is doing a great work for the Lord's cause. This church is making a great effort to help Sister Clarke and the Belle Haven Orphans' Home at Luling, Texas. They are helping the poor at home as well as elsewhere. Three of the leading brethren and I went to Luling one day recently and spent the evening at Belle Haven. It was a source of much joy to find the Home in fine condition and everything in perfect order. I do not think the management and the discipline could be excelled. For twenty-two years Sister Clarke has given her untiring energy to this great work. Every Christian who has given his or her co-operation has a reason to be proud of Belle Haven. It will be a sad day for those who have neglected their duty when they shall meet the Lord at the last day and hear him say: "I was ahungered, and ye gave me no meat: I was thirsty, and ye gave me no drink: I was a stranger, and ye took me not in: naked, and ye clothed me not: sick, and in prison, and ye visited me not."—J. S. Newman.

Graysville, Tenn., February 19.—The general attendance at this place is increasing. This congregation has been passing through depressed conditions for some time. At one time the membership was over two hundred. Many moved away, and some lost interest on account of lack of unity in preaching between two preachers. We hope to redeem all these before it is too late. I preached for them to-day. One was restored. I will give them the third Lord's day for this year, as they are not able to employ a preacher. Brother Will J. Cullum will give them an afternoon service on each fourth Lord's day. He is to coöperate with the churches at Dayton and Rockwood this year, giving them two Sundays a month each. The rest of his time will be given to destitute fields. He will receive eighteen hundred dollars for this year's work. He recently held a five-weeks' meeting at Rockwood, resulting in the accession of over seventy members to the little band, and this was followed by the erection of a new building. He will probably hold a tent meeting for us here next summer.—A. B. Blazer.

Montgomery, Ala., February 23.—I experienced the novelty of preaching by wireless last Sunday night. The Montgomery Light and Water Power Company has a radiophone station in this city. Each Sunday night they invite some minister to preach a short sermon. I was glad to have an invitation to talk concerning things divine by wireless to an unseen audience, numbering hundreds, if not thousands, in perhaps all the cities for a radius of a thousand miles. In all probability there were believers and nonbelievers of every type known "listening in" at the hundreds of wireless stations throughout the United States. I did my very best to make every sentence mean something. If we had wireless stations at the church houses and in the homes of the derelict Christians, maybe we could get to preach to some absentees without wearing out so much sole leather. Whether we have wireless stations or not, the Bible says: "Not forsaking our own assembling together." If we expect the Lord to bless us as the faithful, we would do well to assemble with Christians to worship.—Fred M. Little.

THE SAFEST WAY TO DESTROY UNSIGHTLY HAIR

It is difficult to find anything more repulsive than an unnecessary display of unsightly hair on the person of an otherwise highly refined and beautiful lady.

The failure and danger connected with many so-called hair removers has discouraged many ladies and caused the needless and very unsatisfactory use of the razor, an instrument intended for the coarse skins of men only.

Unsightly hair on the exposed portions of the body can be destroyed with the roots safely and without injury to the skin, but the remedy must go deeper than the surface.

Nu-Art, a highly successful preparation, scientifically prepared, goes into the hair follicles and destroys the hair roots without injury to the skin or complexion. Thousands have found it highly successful and gratifying.

Mail a dollar bill with your name to 225 P. O. Building, Nu-Art Laboratories, South Orange, N. J., and you will be mailed a package, in plain wrapper, containing a bountiful supply of Nu-Art, by return mail. It will please you immediately, or your money will be cheerfully refunded.

Mission Work in Cleveland, Ohio.

BY A. A. BUNNER.

People from every nation under heaven are here, and they need the gospel of Christ, which is God's power unto salvation, to save them from sin here and hereafter. Hence, through the help of the Lord and a noble constituency found among a generous-hearted brotherhood in Christ, a strong effort will be put forth in this city, and professors of Christianity who have their unscriptural whims, fads, fancies, and hobbies, if such there are here, can get into line with the Lord's true work or stand to one side, for the work is going to move right on. While our brethren here are few in numbers, and many of them are not blessed with an abundance of this world's goods, and some are out of employment and have been for quite a while, they are pretty much a unit on the great necessity of New Testament mission work in this great city and are anxious to see the cause advanced along all New Testament lines of church work and worship. It is a struggling band, and they need a house of worship they can call their own. In this work, good, reliable tracts and papers will be freely used. We expect, also, to utilize the parks and other places, such as the Public Square, etc., through the good weather during the spring and summer months. Readers of this paper who have friends who have moved to this city or who know of any others who can be interested in the work of the Lord are requested to give me their names and addresses, and we will go after them. As we shall have to pay much street-car fare and buy tracts and suitable literature for this work, we ask the fellowship of all who are interested in advancing the cause of Christ in the conversion of sinners and the edifying of saints. We need and ask your fellowship in this great work. We have willing souls at our back here who have a mind to work. Come with us, then, to the help of the Lord. Send your offerings to A. A. Bunner, 1800 West Fifty-fourth Street, Cleveland, O.

Taylor-Jones Debate.

BY F. L. PAISLEY.

Beginning on January 30 and continuing six days, at Gardner, Tenn., Brother John C. Taylor and Elder A. A. Jones, a Missionary Baptist, engaged in debate on the establishment of the church, the design of baptism, and the possibility of apostasy.

This was Taylor's second debate, but he is very much at home when discussing and defending the teaching of the Bible. He is pointed in argument, excellent in delivery, has much scripture by memory, and is powerful in persuasion. He is very considerate and free from personalities, treating his opponent with the utmost kindness when he deals in misrepresentations, but he shows no quarters when dealing with a false doctrine. A number of Baptist preachers, including his opponent, expressed their regard and appreciation for Taylor, notwithstanding he had pressed their error with telling effect.

Elder Jones is a much older man than Taylor, has a splendid knowledge of the position he holds, is able in argument, and is above many in his personal deportment in debate. I never heard a debate with better general personal treatment on the part of the opponents.

This debate is to be repeated at New Home Baptist Church, near Gardner, beginning on February 27, then at McConnell sometime later. I think the kind of debating these men do will do much good. Brethren need not fear the safety of the truth in Brother Taylor's hands. A number of Christian preachers attended. B. L. Douthitt moderated for Taylor the first day, but was called home on account of sickness. It was my pleasure to serve in his stead.

Assist Nature. There are times when you should assist nature. It is now undertaking to cleanse the system. If you will take Hood's Sarsaparilla, the undertaking will be successful. This great medicine purifies and builds up as nothing else does.

Colorado Notes.

BY E. C. FUQUA.

I am now (February 13) holding my last meeting with the church in Fort Collins, and my last in Colorado before moving to California, where I go on account of Mrs. Fuqua's health. We hope to make this one of our best meetings in Fort Collins.

I visited Boulder last Sunday, where I was called on account of recent activities of the Seventh-Day Adventists there, who came out in the daily papers with a fling at those who meet for worship on the first day of the week. I replied to the Adventists through the same medium, offering propositions for debate with them, but they would not consider an investigation after opening it up in the public prints themselves. They suggested that we preach on the subject of the Sabbath on Sunday night and they would hear us. That was my purpose in going to Boulder. But a severe snowstorm set in about three hours before meeting time and everything was spoiled. But we learned that the Adventists had announced preaching in their house on the same subject and at the same hour! So they would not have heard us, anyway. What a religion some people have!

In Dinuba, Cal., we have the Adventists "up a tree" in the same manner. I sent propositions for a discussion with them, which the brethren published in the daily paper by means of a display advertisement nearly a foot square! But not one word from the California Adventists yet, and it has been two months or more. Our challenge was to the Adventists of California.

The high altitude here is forcing me to take Mrs. Fuqua to a lower altitude as early as possible. California seems to offer both the altitude and the climate we need—and the missionary work without which I could not exist. It offers a greater field, if any, than Colorado, reaching clear up into Oregon and Washington, where I will find abundant work among the lost. I will carry on there the double work I have engaged in here—the work of preaching both from the pulpit and through the press. What I cannot sell here I will move to California and open up there the free-tract work as here. I hope to sell the heaviest machinery here (to save freight) and buy again when I get located in California. I will publish no paper—just do the free-tract work I do here as a part of my missionary work. We hope to get off about March 1. We will drive through in a car.

From East Tennessee.

BY GEORGE W. FARMER.

While on a visit to my son's at Hartsville, Tenn., on the fifth Lord's day in January, I preached at 11 A.M. and at 7 P.M., for the church there. I was very favorably impressed with the Hartsville church. They have a congregation made up of good, well-to-do, and intelligent people. They are capable of doing a great work at home and abroad in "holding forth the word of life" to the people.

On my way back, I stopped over at Greenwood, Wilson County, and spent Tuesday night with the family of Brother W. B. Clark, and preached that night at Bethel church to a fair audience of brethren and sisters. This congregation is made up of as good, true, and loyal people as can be found anywhere. They have been interested, and are still interested, in the East Tennessee mission work. They have contributed regularly to this work, now on the third year, and express themselves as being gratified at the results.

The next day I switched back to Lebanon and was there to meet with them in their midweek prayer meeting; but, owing to sickness, death, and inclement weather, there were only a few out. It was a real pleasure to again meet with those that were there. Such a transformation in a church house, I never saw before. It is a real credit to the cause of Christ in the town of Lebanon. It is said to be one of the prettiest in the town now. Brother Morgan H. Carter is doing a great work in Lebanon.

Coming over the Tennessee Central Railroad, I stopped off to see my aged father at Hebbertsburg. He is now in his eighty-seventh year. While there, I preached at the New Home Church on the first Lord's day in February. This church is not doing what it should. The old people have very nearly all passed "over the river," and the majority of the younger ones take little or no interest in the cause. I wonder if they will let the church die? Brother R. R. Smith lives here. He has done lots of work in this country, at his own expense principally, and now he is getting old and is in very poor health. He will certainly be missed when he has to give up the fight.

From Hebbertsburg I came to Rockwood and preached two discourses to large and interested audiences in their new house. They all seem to be buoyant and happy. Brother Will J. Culum is doing a wonderful work there.

On the second Lord's day I preached here at Cleveland, on regular hours, to good audiences, and at Valley Head Schoolhouse at 2:30 P.M. Brother E. C. Coffman was at Riceville and Brother W. C. Phillips was at Athens. I have not received a report from Brother Coffman, but Brother Phillips reported two fine services at Athens, with increased attendance in the Bible school. Yesterday I was here and preached to large audiences at the regular hours. Brother Coffman was at Lenoir City and Brother Phillips was at Athens again. Brother Phillips preaches for the church at Dalton, Ga., the first Lord's day in each month, and at Athens the second, third, and fourth Lord's days. The church house at Athens will soon be completed, and the work is growing in interest all the while now. Brother Charles Holder preaches at Ooltewah at 11 A.M., on the first Lord's day, and at night at Athens.

We are planning great things for the East Tennessee work this year, and, with the help of the Lord and the increased number of laborers, we confidently look forward to great results. The preachers and the brethren generally are all in good spirits. In fact, there is so much to do that we have no time to quarrel and dispute.

Brother Phillips is very desirous of going into the field for regular work. Owing to poor health, hospital expenses, and the family support, he has been compelled to give almost his entire time to secular pursuits, working at the barber's trade. This has hampered him greatly in that he has no time for study and preparation, besides making it hard for him to reach places to preach. Now he is in good health and is getting out from under his financial burden, and he wants to take the field, if he can only be able to get a support. He is a good man and is capable of doing a great work for the cause. He is well acquainted with this country, knows the people and the needs of the people in the field. It is a shame and a disgrace to the cause, when the work is so badly needed as it is up in this country, not to support him. Who will help us furnish a support for him while he preaches the gospel to the people in this country?

While we have so many mission fields at home and abroad, all congregations that are able should be doing some mission work. To fail to do so when we can is to show an inexcusable lack of the knowledge of our duty or a want of the spirit of the religion of Christ. Have we any congregations or even any brethren in the following counties? Hawkins, Hamblen, Cocke, Jefferson, Sevier, Grain-ger, Claiborne, Anderson, Unicoi, Hancock, Johnson, Carter, Sullivan, Wash-ington, Greene. If there are any con-gregations or scattered brethren in these counties, they will please to write me, giving information. This is important.

Making Progress in St. Louis.

BY W. W. MOODY.

On a recent Sunday afternoon the members of the church of Christ in St. Louis held a well-attended meet-ing, for the church only, to consider the work that is being done and to be done.

These get-together meetings of the church are indispensable to the best success of the work in any congrega-tion. To do the most good, it is neces-sary to counsel together and make definite plans according to the appar-ent needs of a given situation, and then to lend all our energy to the execution of the work. Every mem-ber should have a lively interest in such meetings just as much as in any other part of the work. To have the best interest in them depends, of course, upon the manner in which they are conducted. First, sufficient time should be set apart for the meet-ing to have a full discussion of the subjects for consideration. Fixed topics should be designated in the be-ginning and taken up in their order. Every one should have an opportunity and should be urged to say something; but what is said should be brief and to the point, without dealing in gen-eralities and prolonging the session until it becomes tiresome and results in the failure to attain the end de-sired.

Brother Sevedge, though what we might call a "young preacher," is en-tering well into the work and aptly adapts himself to it in every way. Both he and his wife are devoted to the cause.

We now have eighty-four members, and there is a good development among the young men in the mid-week and other services in taking part publicly. There is hardly a man in the congregation who will not respond promptly when called upon.

Some have written us very encour-agingly of their interest in St. Louis. These good letters are appreciated, and we feel that many would like to know just what is being done. We are ourselves gratified with the results thus far, but are not contented and ready to stop until much more is ac-complished. We give the Lord the praise for whatever may be done through us, taking no credit to our-selves.

A Paradise.

Hawaii is in many ways literally an island paradise. Scarcely anywhere else in the world may one roam through tropical jungles with never a thought of poisonous insects or snakes. Such creatures do not exist in these fair islands. Even poison ivy and similar plants are unknown; and though in the edge of the tropics, Hawaii has a cooler temperature by ten degrees than any other land in the same latitude. Moreover, one may change his climate at will by a journey of a few miles; for the north-eastern half of each island, swept by the trade winds, is rainy and heavily wooded, while just over the mountain ridge is a drier, warmer region.—National Geographic Society Bulletin.

Park Rapids, Minnesota.—"I have taken your medicine—Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound—when I was a girl for pains and before and after my marriage. I now have a sweet little baby boy and will send you his picture if you wish to publish it. My sisters also take your medicine and find it a great help, and I recommend it to those who suffer before their babies are born." — Mrs. WM. JOHNSON, Box 155, Park Rapids, Minn.

To marry and arrive at middle age without children is a great disappointment to many women. Think of the joy and comfort other women have in their children as they grow older.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has helped to bring great happiness to many families by restoring women to health. Often the childless home is due to a run down condition of the wife, which may be helped by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. It brought health and happiness into the home of Mrs. Johnson. BY JOHN R. WILLIAMS.

MY FIRST BAPTISM.

The first performance of many things in life is never forgotten. So it is with my first baptism, and especially so since I was not a preacher at that time.

Brother I. C. Sewell had filled a regular monthly appointment for my home congregation, and at the close of the sermon one Sunday night a young man made the "good confession." Brother Sewell announced the baptism for a certain hour the following day, and told me that, as he had a felon on the forefinger of his right hand, I would have to do the baptizing. Sure I was then that Solomon was mistaken, as here was something new—a man not a preacher called upon to perform an act that I thought could be done only by a preacher. Brother Sewell said: "If you are a Christian, you have the same right—the same authority—to baptize that any other Christian has." He finally convinced me; so I agreed to undertake it, provided the candidate did not object.

When we met at the water, Brother Sewell gave me some instructions as to how to proceed, but not full enough, as you will soon see. I led the young man to a proper depth of water, and instead of standing a few feet behind him, I stood by his side—a great mistake at my first baptism. The ceremony said, I proceeded to lay him under the water; and just as he was about under the water, all but his nose, I found that I was about to pitch forward on top of him, so I raised him as quickly as possible to prevent a double immersion. He went under all but his nose. In three or four weeks after that he stole five dollars and left the country, and not one word have I ever heard from him since. I do not know whether he is in heaven or not. It was hard for me to think that dry nose had anything to do with the theft. From that day to this no nose is left out—a complete burial in all cases.

Two others were baptized by me before I began to preach. The second was Brother W. S. Robinson, the senior elder of the Burris Chapel congregation, in Lake County. He still lives, and is one of God's noblest servants. Later on I will have something to say of his work and faithfulness in establishing a congregation near his home.

Now that I had learned to baptize, the next thing was to learn to preach, and especially how to extend a feeling, winning invitation. Of all preachers that I have ever heard, Brother Isaac C. Sewell could deliver the prettiest invitation of any of them. I concluded that the thing for me to do was to memorize a pretty, touching exhortation. So I made selections from different writers and had what I thought was something grand. When to myself, I would deliver that exhortation and see great multitudes rushing forward. At last the time came for me to use this touching, feeling, and irresistible invitation. The sermon ended, I reached for my bouquet, but, to my great surprise and extreme humiliation, the thing was gone—nowhere to be found. I could not so much as find a withered leaf or bud of my once beautiful bouquet. From this humiliation I learned a very important and a very lasting lesson. Christ said "preach," "teach," not cry them in.

As I now look back over the thirty-six years of evangelistic work, I can see many instances where I shook the bush too hard. Many green and half-ripe fell off, which never matured. When the fruit is fully ripe, not much shaking is necessary—it is ready to fall. Congregations have been hurt by a large number of unconverted additions. The gospel "is God's power unto salvation;" and unless converted by this power, trouble always follows. The Lord adds to the church, but he adds no green or half-ripe fruit. Were you added to the church by the Lord or by some big preacher?

Commendation and Comment.

BY S. F. MORROW.

I certainly appreciate Brother J. C. McQuiddy's article on "Church Government." It teaches some valuable lessons on essential points. I feel certain that every Bible reader will indorse it. What a blessing it would be if we all would read our Bibles and speak and write only that which is written! "Wherefore, my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labor is not vain in the Lord." (1 Cor. 15: 58.) Nothing is as sure of reward as faithful service done in the church of God. How careful should all be in doing this service as it is written!

I am very glad to note what Brother McQuiddy has said on the duty of elders and how they should be appointed or selected. Take 1 Tim. 1: 16; Tit. 1: 5-10; Acts 20: 28; and 1 Pet. 1: 1-4; these scriptures are so plain that I do not see where any one could err. We do not need any Greek or Latin, just simple faith in God and his word.

I want to notice some few qualifications that have given some trouble to one or more congregations in appointing elders. One among the best brethren who was brought forward had 1 Tim. 3: 1-4: "Faithful is the saying, If a man seeketh the office of a bishop, he desireth a good work. The bishop therefore must be without reproach, the husband of one wife, temperate, sober-minded, orderly, given to hospitality, apt to teach; no brawler, no striker; but gentle, not contentious, no lover of money; one that ruleth well his own house, having his children in subjection with all gravity." Titus says "believing children." The good brother saw at once he was not eligible for an elder; he had a wife, but no children. These scriptures certainly settle the question of a bachelor elder—no wife, no believing children. We might offer many suggestions why these brethren could not fill the office of an elder, but it sufficeth to say: "Let God be found true, but every man a liar."

A great deal has been written about the "one wife." Some say it means not two, but not necessarily one. Let us try that reasoning on some other scriptures. "There is one body, and one Spirit, even as also ye were called in one hope of your calling; one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all, who is over all, and through all, and in all." If "one wife" is equivalent to none, what will such reasoning do with "one Lord, one faith, one baptism?" No Lord, no faith, no baptism. "Every scripture inspired of God is also profitable for teaching, for reproof, for correction, for instruction which is in righteousness: that the man of God may be complete, furnished completely unto every good work." Go to a church where they have scriptural elders, and you will find them doing reasonably well; but the reverse is sad and destructive. Then how careful we should be in appointing elders, since the elder fills the highest place in the church and has the greatest responsibility!

I have written the above, I trust, in the fear of God and love to all his children. If scriptural, accept it; if not, reject, and correct in the spirit of our blessed Master. It is a great blessing to have good brethren to correct us and help us to live the Christian life. What a privilege it is to read a good religious paper weekly, to get the benefit of so many good writers! We are glad to see the liberal offers that are being made to secure subscribers for the Gospel Advocate. I can't see any reason why we can't double the list by July 1. Let all work to this end.

BY MAX LANGPAAP.

The eleven hundred and twenty-five dollars which we had to have to meet a payment on the missionary home the first of February did not come from the churches of Christ in America. Will this part of the firm establishment of the church of Christ in the Hawaiian Islands now fail? Will we now have to give up what we have begun in the isles of the sea? By no means, thanks be to God. The work will go on just the same, with his continued loving watch care. The Lord's work must go on. It must not—it cannot—it will not fail as his work. Had our work been the mere work of man, it might have failed already. It might never have been begun. But we are fully persuaded that God will not allow such a field as this one forever to dwell in the darkness and shadow of death. While we are weak and erring and the way may sometimes seem impossible to pass over, still God is not weak, and he makes no mistakes, and the way is always clear to him.

We were able to make the payment on schedule time. Perhaps you wonder where the money came from. "Blood is thicker than water." I have some relatives who kindly loaned me the money—at least, the greater part of it. We had managed to retain two hundred and fifty dollars of the amount we have received since coming here, and by borrowing the balance we made up the eleven hundred and twenty-five. We thank God that we were able to borrow, for it is not very easy to do this now. We now have three notes, in all amounting to twenty-one hundred dollars, due in three years. Three years is a comparatively long time. It will mean seven hundred dollars a year. Brethren, I know that the churches of Christ in America can and will reach this goal, even if we are living in a time of great financial stress. Compared to what we can do if we try, it is but a drop in the bucket. Unceasing will be our prayers to God for favor and good will in this important work. We are trying to lay the work on a solid and substantial foundation. We offer prayers to God to move those who love to see the cause of Christ increase and prosper to begin right now to help us raise the twenty-one hundred dollars in three years' time. We will take care of the interest. Only give us the principal, and we will thank God and thank you. While three years is a comparatively short time, as well as a long time, we can easily reach our desired goal. But we must start right now and plug right along, and we will witness a successful finish of our efforts.

The Hawaiian Islands are truly a strategic field from a missionary viewpoint. Here we find many thousands of well-educated, young, American-born Chinese and Japanese, and there are also many young Koreans and Filipinos. These four represent the leading races of the Orient, excepting India. I do not know of any Hindoos here, and am sure that there are but few, if any. But of the other four there are multitudes. My judgment may be at fault, but I firmly believe that these young American-born Orientals really hold the key to the unlocking of the doors of many a teeming community in China, Japan, Korea, the Philippines, and other places, for the reception of the gospel of Christ. I believe they would make splendid missionaries for the church of Christ, if properly directed in the acquiring of an education and properly taught and directed in the purest Christianity. The work we are engaged in is not a matter of days, weeks, months, but of many years of effort. What has been begun must be carried on faithfully and zealously and prayerfully, and God will surely bless our efforts. Greater things for God is our aim and end. We face the future with hope and prayer. May the Lord bless the work everywhere, and especially in the Hawaiian Islands.

God send his angels, cloud and fire,
To lead us o'er the desert sand!
God give our hearts their long desire,
His shadow in a weary land!
John Greenleaf Whittier.

Be thou a pillared flame to show
The midnight snare, the silent foe;
And when the battle thunders loud,
Still guide us in its moving cloud.

"These Things Command and Teach."

BY G. C. BREWER.

There is not a more neglected duty than that of teaching. It cannot be, however, because it is not clearly taught by the Bible. God has enjoined this duty in every age or dispensation. The Israelites were to teach "every man his neighbor," saying, "Know the Lord." They were to set up pillars of stone in memory of the power of Jehovah, and they were to relate these things to their children and their children's children. They were to talk of the laws of God at all times and under all circumstances, or the Bible better expresses it in this language: "And these words, which I command thee this day, shall be upon thy heart; and thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children, and shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thy house, and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down, and when thou risest up. And thou shalt bind them for a sign upon thy hand, and they shall be for frontlets between thine eyes. And thou shalt write them upon the doorposts of thy house, and upon thy gates." (Deut. 6: 6-9.)

Men have to be constantly reminded of their duty, even after they have learned it or they forget. We sometimes feel backward about teaching a certain thing because we think it is "preached to death;" but none of God's laws will ever grow old or cease to be enforced as long as God has subjects on the earth. They cannot be talked of too much. Men may advance theories about God's laws that will wear out, and that need revising, restating, and amending; but the word of God lives forever. It matters not how much it has been studied and taught, it is still God's word, and there are thousands yet who know it not, and other thousands who heed it not. Peter speaks of putting people in remembrance of things that they had once known; and John wrote no new commandment, but repeated one that had been taught by Moses, the prophets, and Christ. Paul found it necessary to declare the gospel to people who had once heard it and had been saved by it.

It is by teaching that the kingdom of Christ is perpetuated in the earth. Jesus says that the word of God, which is the thing to teach at all times, is the seed of the kingdom. This seed, if sown in good soil, will always produce fruit. Every Christian is a sower. If the word of God in his heart is bearing a godly life, his daily influence is planting seed in the hearts of his associates; other Christians are produced. But we are to teach by silent boundaries of the kingdom are extended. But we are to teach by silent Christian influence only. A Christian should never lose an opportunity of speaking a word for Jesus, his Master. The last command Jesus gave to his apostles before he ascended to his Father was to go and teach all the people, and those who have heard and obeyed should receive the same command—"Teach." Paul wrote to Timothy: "And the things which thou hast heard from me among many witnesses, the same commit thou to faithful men, who shall be able to teach others also." (2 Tim. 2: 2.) Every elder of the church must be "apt to teach." "Those who were scattered abroad went everywhere preaching the word" in the early ages; but to-day professing Christians sometimes move into new communities and live there for years before their neighbors find out what church they are members of.

It is the duty of every congregation to teach the children and young people that are in its reach, and all proper means should be used to reach them. While they are young and their minds not filled with evil nor disturbed by doctrines of men is the time to sow the good seed. In many communities of the rural districts and every town there are children who do not attend Sunday school anywhere, but who could, with little inducement, be brought to the house of the Lord and taught. This is a work that any member of the church, man or woman, can do. O, the magnitude of such work! What might be the outcome?

Many parents claiming to be Christians, instead of trying to teach their neighbors' children, do not teach their own. It is a deplorable fact that many of our children grow up in ignorance of God's laws; they do not know the difference between the church of God and sectarianism, and some even join the denominations, especially if they should happen to marry a member of one of them, which they are sure to do if they have a chance. They know nothing about the Bible. They may stand well in society, be informed in history, science, art, music, etc.; but the Bible, with them, belongs to the relics of a forgotten age. It is "ancient," "antiquated," etc. The only use they ever saw for the Bible was as a book for the family record. It contains their names, the date of their birth, and leaves a place for a record of the marriage, death, etc.

Believing the Bible to be the word of the living God, people let it lie in their homes unnoticed; but when it becomes "stylish" to study it in our schools, which is now the tendency, as a book of antiquity or for its literary excellence, and people begin to call it an "interesting book," to speak of its many "fables," its "peculiar style of expression," its " quaint sayings," etc., then young gentlemen and young ladies will be "just crazy to study the Bible, because it is all the rage;" and then parents will send them where infidels will teach in the manner above mentioned.

O, when will a civilized nation learn to drink at the fountain of all civilization? O, when will moralists learn of the source of all ethics? When will Christians quit catering to public opinion and cease to be held captives by pride and vain pretensions? Ho, ye people, now swinishly wallowing in Pride's filthy slime, come, wash in the cleansing and healing "pool of Siloam," quaff the delicious nectar, and luxuriate upon the life-reviving dainties of the pure word of God.

The Bitter Fruits of Jealousy.

It is frequently observed that jealousy is the underlying cause of much mischief and sin. When you hear one person speak evil of another or make an unjust charge, you need not be surprised to learn that jealousy is the motive. In fact, the only explanation for the relentless persecution of good men and women by those whom they have befriended is jealousy. Jesus, I believe, had the jealous-hearted largely in mind when he said: "Love your enemies, and pray for them that persecute you."

Our literature, past and present, gives jealousy a bad name. Shakespeare speaks of "the venom clamors of a jealous woman, poison more deadly than a mad dog's tooth." Hannah More calls jealousy "the ugliest fiend of hell." Solomon describes it by saying, "Cruel as the grave." Manley makes a comparison to "Indian arrows, so envenomed that if they prick the skin it is very dangerous; but if they draw blood, it is irrevocably deadly." In the face of this kind of treachery it is often declared that it is wrong for any human being to be jealous at any time or under any circumstances. Let us not be too sure of this. As Paul distinguishes between two kinds of sorrow, so we may distinguish between two kinds of jealousy. The one is worldly in origin and bitter in its fruits; the other is from a pure heart and has a righteous purpose. While it is possible for a husband to be insanely jealous of his wife, we should pity the wife whose husband could not be made jealous even as we pity the husband who has occasion to be jealous of his wife. In either case, the one who provokes the jealousy deserves censure. The laws of our land recognize a just cause for jealousy.

WHY, THEN, HAVE WE A JEALOUS GOD?

Can it be true that our righteous God is jealous? Here there can be but one answer if we search the Scriptures. On this point God speaks for himself, and that, too, in no uncertain language. Not only once, as if thoughtlessly or by accident, but many times does he declare his jealousy. Moreover, he declares that his very name is Jealous. He does not think it unbecoming for the Infinite One to be jealous and to wish for his name to be set above every name. Hear the language of the Decalogue wherein reference is made to idol service: "Thou shalt not bow down thyself unto them, nor serve them: for I Jehovah thy God am a jealous God." To show us that his jealousy is not a subtle quality of purely individual cognizance, but one that he wished to be recognized and appreciated by his people, we read in Deut. 6: 15: "Jehovah thy God in the midst of thee is a jealous God." All such declarations were made by Moses, who learned them directly from the lips of Jehovah, and by Joshua, his successor. They both declare with emphasis and fervor: "He is a holy God; he is a jealous God."

But there is a just cause for the jealousy which our Father confesses and declares. Our jealousies may be inspired by bitterness or deceit; they may be right or they may be wrong; but the jealousy of Jehovah is always a holy jealousy, and therefore always compatible with his infinite righteousness.

GOD MADE US, AND THAT IS WHY.

God's jealousy toward mankind is best explained by referring to the creation. David looked above him to the star-lit skies and wrote: "The heavens declare the glory of God; the firmament sheweth his handiwork." He beheld the sun rising in the east and said it was like unto a bridegroom. Longfellow gazed upon a winding, moonlit river, and while under the spell of its beauty wrote the words:

Silver-white the river gleams,
As if Diana in her dreams.
Had dropped her silver bow
Upon the meadows low.

But there is a handiwork of God more glorious than the sun or stars or moon-lit river. Everything that God had created in nature he called good. Yet he was to make something better; he was to put forth his crowning effort. "And God said, Let us make man in our image, after our likeness." Paul says: "We are the offspring of God." The writer of Hebrews quotes from David: "Thou hast made him a little lower than the angels, and hast crowned him with glory and power." In Mrs. Alexander's poem, "The Burial of Moses," you recall the line:

"The angel of God upturned the sod."

But she has taken poetic license to write "the angel of God." The Bible says: "He [God] buried him in a vale in the land of Moab." The pronoun is personal. Why rob ourselves of the precious truth that it was our personal God who laid the beloved Moses down to sleep? But whence had Moses this high honor? Whence the characteristics that won it? Whence his wisdom, his courage, his meekness? The answer is: Moses was made in the image of God, even as you and I. Here is where God's righteous jealousy asserts itself. He who formed man and endowed him with these wonderful faculties has an inherent right to the homage, service, and loyal obedience of his creatures.

Between equals possessed of equal rights, jealousy may be an unseemly and wicked emotion; but between Jehovah and the covenant keeper, or between Jehovah and any other power, there is room for a jealousy which only a fool cannot discover.

WHEN WE PROVOKE THE LORD TO JEALOUSY.

We find that the prophets Ezekiel and Joel and Nahum use the admitted jealousy of God as an argument for a restricted service. It is well for us to remember that a thousand years do not change the character of Jehovah nor make him ashamed of his divine attribute of jealousy. He was in the same mind in speaking through the later prophets as when he spoke through Moses and Ezekiel. Paul, one of the best interpreters of prophetic messages, takes up the same thought that it is possible to "provoke the Lord to jealousy." Old Testament history reveals the fact that God has been provoked by some things that men would call "trivial causes." It is significant, too, that nearly all these provocations were connected with his holy worship. Saul refuses to utterly destroy the Amalekites; he preserves Agag and saves the best of the cattle for a sacrifice, but God is provoked. Uzzah puts forth an unconsecrated hand to save the ark from destruction, but God is provoked. Nadab and Abihu offer strange fire upon the altar, but God is provoked. On each occasion the divine anger is stirred to the depth because man presumes to know better than God how to worship him. All of these examples should serve as solemn warnings against changing God's plan of worship in favor of our own. It is not a spirit of wrangling or rancor or division which pleads for a plain "Thus saith the Lord." Christians have a right to be jealous of God's appointments, in the spirit of Paul, who said: "For I am jealous over you with a godly jealousy: for I espoused you to one husband, that I might present you as a pure virgin to Christ."

Let us understand once for all that our God is a jealous God, and that he has a right to be jealous of his own creation. Let us know assuredly that when men defile their bodies or set up idols in their hearts, homes, churches, or communities, they provoke the jealousy of Him whose right it is to be recognized as "over all, God blessed for evermore."

BY H. LEO BOLES.

We do not like to think of the patriarchs being imperfect. We have always associated piety, faithfulness, reverence, truthfulness, goodness, and perfection with the patriarchs. In fact, we have always regarded the characters depicted in the Bible, who loved God, as being without any defect of character. From our earliest impressions of them we have regarded them as sacred, crowned them with a halo. So our minds naturally rebel against dwelling upon any defect or sin of the patriarchs. However, the Bible is true to fact and principle; it records the mistakes and imperfections as well as the admirable traits. The Bible is true to life as lived then. It is an accurate history and a correct biography. So we may notice further the mistake of Abraham as it was committed in Egypt.

"And it came to pass, when he was come near to enter into Egypt, that he said unto Sarai his wife, Behold now, I know that thou art a fair woman to look upon; and it will come to pass, when the Egyptians shall see thee, that they will say, This is his wife: and they will kill me, but they will save thee alive. Say, I pray thee, thou art my sister; that it may be well with me for thy sake, and that my soul may live because of thee. . . . And the woman was taken into Pharaoh's house. And he dealt well with Abram for her sake." (Gen. 12: 11-16.) As has been observed, one mistake uncorrected leads to another. Sins grow in clusters. When Abraham's faith wavered and he went to Egypt for nourishment, he also lost courage. He persuades his wife to tell the natives that she is his sister, and Abraham also tells that she is his sister. He fears that they will take his life for his wife. It seems that he had lost faith in Jehovah's promise to make of him a great nation. If this promise is kept by Jehovah, he need not fear what the natives will do unto him; but he loses sight of the promise, his faith falters, and he fears. His deceit is born of his fear. Deception is often the offspring of fear and cowardice. When we become the victim of fear and lose faith, we are thrown into a panic and act desperately with ourselves and disregard all the ties which are sacred to us. We often sacrifice the dearest thing that we have in a moment in order to escape. This Abraham did.

Our respect and veneration for Abraham as a father of the faithful should not blind us to this serious mistake that he made. Jehovah has recorded it for our admonition, and we would be in error should we fail to be instructed by it. No excuse is offered in the Bible in defense of it; we should make none to-day. It is very common even to-day for one to fear and falsify when one's life is at stake. However, we are disappointed, for the moment at least, that Abraham should do this. The standard of that age does not excuse him. Nothing can be given in justification of the falsehood; nothing can palliate the shame. Abraham sinned against the standard of manhood that prevailed in Egypt at that time and was rebuked severely for it. It is said that there is an element of daring which modifies our censure of it when one frankly falsifies in immediate danger; but when one deliberately falsifies by saying one thing when another thing is meant, the baseness of it cannot be excused. Abraham purposed upon the borders of Egypt, long before he had reached the interior, to deceive. It seems that he plans to compromise with the truth by telling only part of it, and telling this part to deceive. How often do we find people to-day who will tell only half of the truth, and keeping back that part which will be injurious to them! Almost daily do we find people who in money matters, in social intercourse, in political affairs, in business engagements, in journalism, and in church relations, tell only part of the truth, and telling that part only to deceive. Truly this "is double falsehood."

Another feature of Abraham's deception helps to darken the deed and emphasize the baseness of it. He is willing to give his wife to the licentious Egyptians that he might save his own life. He plans to sacrifice his wife's honor. We can excuse with some degree the lie that is told to save another's life; again, we may admire the friend who will assume the guilt of another for the sake of saving the other's life; the mother who takes upon herself the blame for the wickedness of her son to save him is easily excused; but the falsehood that is told to save one's self, but at the time involves the honor and life of another, cannot be excused from any angle. The baseness of such a crime meets with the heartiest condemnation from all people. This crime is very short of robbery and murder; it robs one of honor and may cause the loss of life of another. I know that the standard of honor and morality of that age was not what it is now. Woman was looked upon as very inferior to man. Lot was willing to sacrifice his two daughters that he might protect the guests who were enjoying his hospitality. (See Gen. 19: 8.) Again, another case in point. A Benjamite came to lodge with an old man who dwelt in Gibeah, and while they were "making their hearts merry" base fellows came to the old man's house and demanded his company. He refused to give them entrance and offered them his virgin daughter if they would let his company alone. He was willing to sacrifice the honor of his daughter for the preservation of his guest. (See Judg. 19: 22-26.) This was a strange code of honor. Abraham seems to be willing to sacrifice his wife and endanger the fulfillment of the promise through her. When we understand the code of honor and standard of morality of that time, the crime of Abraham is lessened, but cannot be excused.

Abraham put himself in the attitude of receiving gifts from Pharaoh, and Pharaoh treated him well for Sarah's sake. These gifts are accepted under the false pretense that Sarah is his sister. Abraham, perhaps, thinks that his scheme is working fine; that he is very successful in his deception. But, as is always the case, double-dealing and deception is shortsighted. It is the forerunner of shame and righteous rebuke. Abraham must learn that fair and just dealing has the rewards of honor and confidence. He must learn that truthfulness is included in faithfulness. As in geometry, so in morality, a straight course is the shortest distance between two points. Pharaoh rebukes him severely for his sin. With dignity and authority he sends Abraham away from him. Abraham, dishonored before the royal court for his duplicity, is driven away, counted unworthy to be trusted. With this ringing rebuke in his ears, Abraham sets his face toward Canaan and to the altar of Jehovah.

Nashville's Great Meeting.

BY C. E. HOLT.

I refer to the meeting which is to be held in the Ryman Auditorium, in which Brethren N. B. Hardeman and C. M. Pullas are to preach and sing to saints and sinners for twenty days—or longer, if, in the judgment of those who have matters in charge, it should be deemed advisable to do so. This is to be a cooperative meeting, in which all the churches of Christ in the city are expected to participate. This will be a get-together meeting of the churches, which doubtless will be very helpful to all concerned.

I can think of but one better method of reaching the people of Nashville, and I trust that in the next great campaign launched in Tennessee's capital this plan which I now submit may be given due consideration. We have, I am told, about thirty congregations in Nashville and its suburbs. My plan would be to have thirty preachers engaged for the work, all beginning on the same day and continuing the same length of time. Let the thirty meetings be held at the same time, thus giving the unsaved in all the communities in which the several churches are located an opportunity of hearing the gospel. I feel quite sure that more people could be reached by this method. At the conclusion of these meetings simultaneously held, let all the churches have a "rally" day, or a get-together meeting—a meeting in which the thirty preachers could participate. This suggestion is not meant to interfere with the Hardeman-Pullias meeting, for which plans are already perfected.

BY EARNEST C. LOVE.

During the week just past I have visited Tiptonville, Ridgely, Dyersburg, Newbern, and Obion, in West Tennessee. The recent rains have interfered somewhat with my work, but I find the brethren very good to assist me. It is a pleasure to work for a paper that has so many friends. Almost literally every reader is a booster.

At Tiptonville, we have no meetinghouse in town, and only two families living there. The church meets at Cronsville, five miles north. I was entertained in the home of Brother W. W. Crofton. I met a Brother Craig who is a first cousin to Brethren Charlie Craig, of Franklin, Tenn., and J. A. Craig, of Madera, Cal. Brother S. A. Alexander sent his team and hauled me over the country. There is some talk of buying the Methodist Episcopal meetinghouse in town and establishing the worship there. Lake County lies between Reelfoot Lake and the Mississippi River. The soil is very fertile and the people are fine, but we have only five or six congregations and no preacher living in the county.

At Ridgely I found a fine little congregation. They have not been meeting long, and so are full of enthusiasm. They have a nice house, worth about five thousand dollars; but they owe two thousand dollars on it, and it is pressing them. I suppose it is no use to hope that brethren more fortunately situated will help them. But if some one with plenty of money would lend them the two thousand dollars without interest, or at a lower rate, it would help wonderfully. I am preaching week nights where I happen to be, and can say that I had the largest audience at Ridgely I have had since I left Hickman and Lewis counties.

My next stop was at Dyersburg, county seat of Dyer County. This is the home of Brother J. W. Dunn. His Brother Tom, from Mississippi, was visiting him; and if I did not get much work done there, I have a good excuse. We just had to talk some, that's all. Brother Dunn and Brother O. C. Moore assisted me in every way. Brother C. A. Rambo, who raises the finest sweet potatoes in the country, walked six miles to meet me and pay up his subscription. Brother W. D. Roberts telephoned the Circuit Court Clerk, and I collected from him. Everybody helped. I preached two nights to very appreciative audiences.

Brother Dunn is doing a fine work in Dyersburg and surrounding country. They have bought the Methodist Episcopal meetinghouse, and are in debt six thousand seven hundred dollars; but they have the use of the house, and they are increasing in numbers and growing in enthusiasm. Brother Dunn and his wife are an inspiration to any congregation. They have a hard task to raise that money; but with such faith in such a Savior, they cannot fail. Brother Dunn is not looking for an easy place, but has purposely taken up work in West Tennessee because he is needed.

I did not solicit much "new business" in Dyersburg, for Sister Dunn is going to try for the Matthew Henry Commentary for Brother Dunn. Now, I sincerely hope that every one will assist her, and it will not be hard. This certainly is a valuable set of books for a preacher.

There I also met Brother S. O. Drake, who formerly lived in Totty's Bend, Hickman County. He knew the Totty's, Cummins, Hineses, etc.

From Dyersburg I went to Newbern. That place has a history. It will be remembered that we had a lawsuit there with the "digressives" over the meetinghouse. That was over twenty years ago. R. P. Meeks, Attorney Meeks, Attorney McMillin (afterwards governor), Brother David Lipscomb, and various other prominent people attended the trial. That is as I remember it now. But the "digressives" won the house. There was no restrictive clause in the deed. However, that house has not seemed to benefit them very much. After twenty years of undisputed possession of one of the nicest brick houses in the town, we now have a larger congregation than they have. But the cause of our Lord has been hurt, and only eternity can tell how much harm has been done. There is more digressivism here than in Middle Tennessee, but it is not thriving here. My prediction is that it never will. Tennessee people have heard too much truth. Some of them prefer some sort of error to truth after they have heard it, to be sure, but they can find that in the Baptist or Methodist churches. There is absolutely no place for digressivism. There is no practical difference between a "digressive" and a Baptist, except that a Tennessee Baptist will stick closer to the Bible on many points.

The brethren at Newbern meet in the old opera house. We had two nice meetings. The night meeting was held in the home of Brother R. E. Howell, as there were no lights to be had in the opera house. Brother Howell runs a fine garage there, Brother McClanahan runs the Hotel Newbern, Brother Dawson runs the jewelry store, Brother Jehrs runs one of the grocery stores, and Brother Arnett runs the lumber yard. Brother Dunn comes from Dyersburg and preaches for them on Sunday afternoon. They are planning to build soon, and here's hoping they succeed.

After leaving Newbern, I went to Obion. There I was met by Brother John C. Taylor and entertained in his home. This was Saturday, and I went back to Newbern to be with the brethren Sunday. At Obion I met my former friend and schoolmate, Gilbert L. Nichols, of Shady Grove. He is in the dry-goods business, and a member of the Methodist Church. At Newbern I met Brother A. H. Nicks, who used to live at Shady Grove and also at Columbia, and who is a descendant of "Grandma" Pugh. Brother Nicks' grandfather gave the land on which stands the old Dunlap meetinghouse and cemetery. He can remember before the dam was built in Duck River at Kettle Mills. He said he and some others, not more pious than he was then, thought seriously of dynamiting that dam, because it stopped the large fish from going up the river.

This morning (February 27) finds me at Martin, Tenn., ready to attend the debate between Brother John C. Taylor and A. A. Jones (Missionary Baptist) in a Baptist meetinghouse, six miles south of Martin.

The Darger of an Unconfessed, Unforgiven Sin.

BY E. C. GOODPASTURE.

The Lord has ever done his part to safeguard the well-being of the race. He made clear to Adam and Eve the conditions upon which they were to live, labor, and love in Eden; and, after the fall, he indicated the consequences of sin and gave promise of ultimate victory through the "seed" of the woman. (Gen. 3: 15.) Then came the defection of Cain, the sad death of Abel, and the long-drawn train of Cain's iniquities. The case of Cain was minutely described for the learning of generations to come. (Rom. 15: 4.)

CAIN'S SIN.

It is quite remarkable that the first man born into the world made the first change in the worship of the true God. It is recorded: "And in process of time it came to pass, that Cain brought of the fruit of the ground an offering unto Jehovah. And Abel, he also brought of the firstlings of his flock and of the fat thereof. And Jehovah had respect unto Abel and to his offering; but unto Cain and to his offering he had not respect. And Cain was very wroth, and his countenance fell." (Gen. 4: 3-5.) Cain's trouble was not that he failed to regard Jehovah as the object of his worship, but that he failed to worship him in his appointed way. The writer of Hebrews turns the light on this point. "By faith Abel offered unto God a more excellent sacrifice than Cain, through which he had witness borne to him that he was righteous, God bearing witness in respect of his gifts." (Heb. 11: 4.) If Abel offered his sacrifice "by faith," God must have given specific instructions to him concerning the sacrificial service; for "faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God." (Rom. 10: 17.) Abel followed the only way of approach to God (Heb. 11: 6; 2 Cor. 5: 7); but Cain substituted his own way and offered something the Lord did not command, though he may not have forbidden it by direct and particular legislation. The dictates of reason may have approved of Cain's sacrifice as being equal in value and dignity to that of Abel; but, be that as it may, the revelation of God, and not the reason of man, is the supreme standard of authority in the worship of the Lord. Cain worshiped without faith, and his service was sin. (Rom. 14: 23.) His sacrifice fell short of the mark in other respects.

He may have been perfectly willing to come before God as a tenant, bringing a portion of the "fruit of the ground" as an expression of his gratitude; but there is not that in his offering which clearly acknowledges the guilt of sin and the need of pardon. Abel "brought of the firstlings of his flock and of the fat thereof." These were evidently slain; for their fat was offered. Blood was shed and life was taken away. It seems that, from the very first, God would have his people understand that "apart from shedding of blood there is no remission." (Heb. 9: 22.) Be it so or not, the fact remains that God "had respect unto Abel and to his offering; but unto Cain and to his offering he had not respect."

JEHOVAH REASONS WITH CAIN.

Cain rejected the Lord in disobeying his will concerning the sacrifice, yet the Lord did not then give him up. He who taught his people, "If thy brother sin against thee, go, show him his fault between thee and him alone," was first to practice his precept. The Lord endeavors to show Cain his sin and the unreasonableness of his anger. If his sacrifice was unaccepted, who was to blame? The Lord had not promised to respect such an offering. In great mercy Jehovah expostulates with Cain: "Why art thou wroth? and why is thy countenance fallen? If thou doest well, shall it not be lifted up? and if thou doest not well, sin coucheth at the door." Cain is first shown the blessings of doing well. If he will make amends for his past mistakes and serve the Lord faithfully, his countenance will be "lifted up"—the Lord will have respect unto him; but if he fails to do right, he does so aware of the consequences—"sin coucheth at the door." Yes; sin past, in its unrequited and unacknowledged guilt; sin present, in its dark and stubborn passion and despair; but, above all, sin future, as the growing habit of a soul that persists in an evil temper, and therefore will add iniquity unto iniquity, is awaiting thee at the door, as a crouching slave, the bidding of his master, or as a wild beast, the approach of his prey. But Cain resents instruction and despises correction. So far as he is concerned, the Lord has pleaded in vain. How fearful! If the Lord failed to bring a sinner to penitence, we need not be surprised and disappointed if we frequently fail.

"THE WAY OF THE WICKED."

How dark the doom of sin unforsaken and unremitted! How terrible the choice of old sin stains and new iniquities, when forgiveness and the path of righteousness and peace could have been selected! It is easy to sin once, but very difficult to sin only once. Cain's unrenounced presumption, selfishness, wounded pride, jealousy, and deliberate disregard of God's appeal nerve him for further sins and crimes. He imbrues his hands in the lifeblood of righteous Abel, and then tells a cowardly lie in dire hope of concealing his atrocious crime. He even disputes the right of the Lord to inquire, "Where is Abel thy brother?" He taunts his Maker with, "Am I my brother's keeper?" But the cup of his wickedness is overflowing. A reckoning must be made.

Jehovah sits on the tribunal when the first murder is tried. The ground which drank the blood of the murdered Abel testifies against the murderer Cain. Jehovah rendered the verdict, and the verdict is this: "And now cursed art thou from the ground, which hath opened its mouth to receive thy brother's blood from thy hand; when thou tillest the ground, it shall not henceforth yield unto thee its strength; a fugitive and a wanderer shalt thou be in the earth. . . . And Cain went out from the presence of Jehovah, and dwelt in the land of Nod." (Gen. 4: 11-16.)

Finally, "He that covereth his transgressions shall not prosper; but whose confesseth and forsaketh them shall obtain mercy." (Prov. 28: 13.)

To Our Readers.

March starts off well. Many of our readers are paying up back dues and renewing for another year. Others are sending us new subscribers. A Christian paper is an assistant of every faithful preacher of the gospel. Such a paper helps and strengthens the elders of the churches in their work of tending the flock. Every faithful elder is glad to have a good, religious journal in the hands of every member of the church. The wise and efficient elder uses his influence to circulate a religious paper among the members of the body.

We want an efficient worker for the Gospel Advocate at every post office. Such a worker would collect back dues and secure new subscribers and renewals to the paper. By the proper effort the number of subscribers at almost every post office may be greatly increased. If you will undertake the work, write us at once for samples, suggestions, and full information. We will do all within our power to make your efforts a success.

We are still giving away a first-class self-filling Fountain Pen to the person who will send us two new yearly subscribers, accompanied by $4. For one new yearly subscriber, accompanied by $3, we will give the pen. This pen is fine and will cost you from $2.50 to $3 in any store. This offer will be withdrawn when the present supply is exhausted. If you want a pen, you should be prompt.

Every student of the Bible should have a copy of Matthew Henry's Commentary. This Commentary is very valuable to preachers. The churches would do well to give a copy to their preacher. The Commentary may be bought for $17.50.

There are many Christians who are not reading any religious paper who would be greatly benefited by reading the Gospel Advocate. All our people should be encouraged to read good papers instead of vicious journals. Parents should not be unmindful of the reading of their children. Bad reading nullifies much good training. Churches and preachers should coöperate with us in furnishing the people good reading. The paper stimulates the churches to greater zeal and spirituality and is helpful to the preacher in his work. Prompt action on the part of all will be very encouraging and helpful.

As soon as we lay ourselves entirely at His feet, we have enough light given us to guide our own steps; as the foot soldier, who hears nothing of the councils that determine the course of the great battle he is in, hears plainly enough the word of command which he must himself obey.—George Elliot.

Our Own Business.

If you were busy being kind,
Before you knew it, you would find
You'd soon forget to think 'twas true
That some one was unkind to you.

If I were busy being glad,
And cheering people who are sad,
Although my heart might ache a bit,
I'd soon forget to notice it.

If you were busy being good,
And doing just the best you could,
You'd not have time to blame some man
Who's doing just the best he can.

If I were busy being true
To what I know I ought to do,
I'd be so busy I'd forget
The blunders of the folk I've met.

If we were busy being right,
We'd find ourselves too busy quite
To criticize our neighbors long
Because they're busy being wrong!

Woman's Work as a Missionary.

BY SARAH ANDREWS.

There seems to be a question in the minds of some as to what work women missionaries engage in on the field. Are there any crooked or narrow ways where only her feet can travel? Any rough spots that only her touch can smooth? Any low levels which only her hands can raise? Any recesses of sin and sorrow where only her voice can be heard? Then she has a work to do. Though she does no public preaching, she has a place to fill in the work of spreading the gospel that man cannot fill, especially in the house-to-house work and work among the children. Until the citadel—the home, where character is formed and destiny shaped—is approached, heathenism cannot be put down. Is it not true that manhood and womanhood must each serve faithfully in its distinctive places ere the whole earth can hear the gospel? In the great work that God has given the church to do, must there not be the effectual working in its measure of every part, the exercise of every force? Of course woman's work is of the quiet, unassuming type, done in a private way, and the true Christian woman seeks none other. She has much to do if faithful in her own sphere.

It has been estimated that more Japanese are at least made favorable toward Christianity through private teaching and personal contact than by mere public preaching. Coming in touch with a Christian who has in one or more ways shown an interest in them usually precedes the inclination and willingness on the part of the idolater to attend public services. Simply to have a meeting place and put up a sign and thereby expect a crowd in a heathen land would doubtless be met with disappointment. Personal responsibility and individual effort count for much. Mr. Drummond has truly said: "You can take nothing greater to the heathen world than the impress and reflection of the love of God upon your own character. This, indeed, is a universal language. A kind word, a helping hand, a pleasant smile, a ministration of love, a tract, a visit, helping the needy and the sick, comforting the distressed, and any of the many acts of kindness springing from a heart of love, may be the means of influencing one from darkness to light."

Other opportunities for doing good that women may take hold of are so varied that it would be difficult to form a very vivid outline. But here is a sample of a day's work as clipped from the diary of memory of one of God's hand-maidens in Japan. She is a lone American in a heathen town, living in a tiny Japanese house with an elderly Japanese woman and her daughter as companions. She is awakened at 5 A.M. by the clanging of bells and chanting of prayers by the priests at the temples, the opening of wooden shutters in all the houses for a block away, and the weird cries of the street venders which altogether should arouse the soundest sleeper. She performs a few household duties; eats breakfast; prepares for morning work at kindergarten; off to kindergarten four blocks away; helps there until ten o'clock; returns home to hear a class in church history; back to kindergarten at eleven; converses with several mothers of kindergarten children; home to dinner at 12:30; reads mail; makes two calls for the purpose of teaching; receives callers, two of whom are inquirers; Bible class from four to five; a hike on bicycle to seek retirement for purpose of preparing for evening Bible class; talks to an old woman gathering mulberry leaves for silk worms and helps her a bit; finds stripping mulberry bushes no easy task; off to a quiet place by the seashore for study and meditation; back home to find another caller waiting; ten students come for Bible class at 7:30; after lesson have fifteen minutes' social time together; straightens room after their departure and closes the wooden shutters, which gives the little house the appearance of a huge goods box when viewed from the outside; family Bible reading and prayer; she remains up fifteen minutes past her regular bedtime to write Brother Fujimori a letter bearing the glad news that another member of the Bible class has privately expressed to her a desire to be baptized and asks him to come as soon as possible; off to bed, thankful that she, even she, is privileged to be a servant in the Master's vineyard, and content, therefore, to just dream of home and mother.

BY S. H. HALL.

It will be less than twenty days, after this reaches our readers, before the twenty-day meeting at Ryman Auditorium is due to begin—viz., March 28. Hence, a few more words to the end that we be ready.

The song drill at Russell and Ninth last night (February 28) was a great success in spite of the rain. The main auditorium was packed full and the singing was soul-stirring. Brother E. A. Elam, a prince among public speakers, was due to be with us for a short address to encourage the work, but his health forbade this. However, he sent his regrets, and assured us that, the Lord willing, he would be back from his trip to Texas in time to do his best when the meeting does begin. Some of our readers do not know the struggle that both Brother and Sister Elam have had to keep up since the first of the year. Under the advice of their doctor, they leave to-day for two or three weeks' rest at El Paso, Texas. We are praying that the trip will do them both good and that they will soon return to us greatly benefited.

It is astonishing how thoughtless we sometimes are. A brother said to me a few days ago: "Is it not to be quite an expensive meeting?" I answered: "No; I would have to commend it from the standpoint of economy." It is simply some thirty-odd congregations conducting a series of meetings in the heart of the city. This one meeting will serve the purpose of close to forty, if each local congregation should start a revival at the same time. Consider what you would pay out for the support of forty preachers for forty "twenty-day meetings" and the additional cost of lights for forty buildings. And even the advertising will be no greater, if as great, if each of the forty meetings should be advertised as they should.

But some one may ask: "Where did the apostles ever ask the congregations in any one city to combine their efforts in one series of meetings?" Well, before I answer this, you tell me where it is intimated that the apostles ever established more than one congregation in any one city. They may have done it, for aught I know; but if they did, there was such unity and concert of action that you cannot possibly tell that there were more than one in any one city.

HARDEMAN'S TABERNACLE SERMONS

Beginning March 28, 1922, the churches of Christ in Nashville will engage in a meeting to be held in the Tabernacle of this city, the preaching to be done by N. B. Hardeman and the song service to be led by C. M. Pullias, of Murfreesboro, Tennessee. The meeting will continue for twenty days. The sermons will be printed and bound in a book of 320 pages. Hardeman's ability as a gospel preacher is a sufficient guarantee as to the character of the sermons. The book will appear about May 1, 1922. The price of the book is $1.50 a copy. You should send in your order at once, so the brethren will know how many to print. Mail your order to-day, so as to be sure to get a copy.

McQUIDDY PRINTING CO.

NASHVILLE

TENNESSEE

You had as well try—and there would be much more scripture to sustain you—to condemn the Nashville brethren for having these thirty-odd or forty congregations in one city as to try to condemn a concert of action in a drive on the heart of the town.

I am so glad to say of the Nashville brethren what Luke said of the more than five thousand souls that constituted the Jerusalem church—viz.: "And the multitude of them that believed were of one heart and soul." The prayer of every local congregation in this city now ascends for the success of this united effort. And as stated before, this combined effort will serve the purpose of a revival at each local congregation.

No, the Nashville brethren may be wrong in having forty congregations in this city, but the man who would try to condemn a united effort or concert of action on the part of the Nashville Christians has failed to think scripturally. Let us have a multiplicity of congregations in our larger towns and cities, but let unity of the Spirit and concert of action never be destroyed by there being a number of congregations.

We were pleased to have with us last night at the song drill Brother A. R. Holton, of Thorp Spring, Texas. He favored David Lipscomb College with a helpful address at chapel services on February 28.

The Peerless Person.

Jesus Christ is the peerless personage of history. No one is so indispensable just now to this war-torn and war-smitten world as he. And no one person can give victory to the right, can bring comfort to the distressed, can drive the clouds of hate away and shine into the hearts of men and nations with light and love, as can the Man of Nazareth, who is also the Christ on the cross, the Prince of the kings of the earth, the great High Priest of the world, who ever liveth to make intercession for us. He still lives and still loves and is able to save to the uttermost all who come to him in penitence and faith.

The following story is true: A ship at sea was tossed by the storm and driven by wind and wave. The hatches were battened down, every passenger being below and filled with fear and foreboding, when one less timid than the rest ventured on the deck and carefully made his way where he could look on the bridge. He saw the captain fastened to the bridge, and as he looked the captain turned and smiled upon him. Not a word was said. Back went the passenger and told his fellow passengers that the captain was on the bridge and smiled. He had seen his face.

Our Captain is on the bridge, and he is undaunted even by the wickedness, the cruelties, and the inhumanities of man. The same divine Captain is now on the ship of state and aboard the ship of the church. Therefore,

"Begone, unbelief, my Savior is near,
And for my relief will surely appear.
By prayer let me wrestle, and he will perform;
With Christ in the vessel, I smile at the storm."

—Presbyterian Advance.

The mighty things of the kingdom are wrought through faith that is nurtured and grown in passionate communion with God. The Lord told those perplexed disciples of his that if they had faith even as small as a tiny grain of mustard seed they could remove mountains. He did not speak, of course, of literal mountains, but of difficulties as hard to remove as mountains. When in later years they received the gift of the Spirit and went forth in conquering faith, they did remove mighty mountains of difficulty which beset their way, and nothing was impossible to them.—Exchange.

Importance of Public Worship

BY LEE P. MANSFIELD.

"Not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is." (Heb. 10: 25.)

We hear men talking about this thing and that being important. Some will preach on the importance of being baptized, while others will talk and preach about the importance of "Christian education." There are thousands who have already obeyed the Lord in baptism, and also thousands whose schooldays are over, who seem to care very little about the public assembly.

The Hebrew Christians had fallen into many errors, and Paul admonishes them to "take heed," "watch," "be careful;" but in the above quotation he admonishes us to "not forsake the assembling of ourselves together."

It is a duty to assemble. God has so required it of us. God has always required his people to gather together for public worship. In the first age of the world's history God's people built altars and publicly worshiped him. It was done under the command and by the direction of the Lord. In the Jewish age God ordained that at certain times the whole nation should come together for public worship, and the one who failed was punished. No private act they could do would take the place of the public assembly. God has ordained that we come together for public worship. For one to carelessly fail is to act cowardly toward the Lord. Any excuse is an act of cowardice.

There are a number of reasons why it is important for us to assemble for public worship, but I only wish to call your attention to three.

1. God requires it of us. He is our Ruler and our Judge. Anything that he demands of us should be very, very important in our eyes. He will judge us by our deeds, as well as our thoughts. How can a man assemble with the saints in glory unless he has assembled with them here?

2. The church needs your presence. You can be of such a wonderful help to others. If you are not prepared to take any part in the service, your presence will be a help. Sometimes the crowd is small, and your being there will make it a little larger.

3. You need to go. The blessings you get yourself are worth many times more than the effort it takes to go. He who does not eat will starve. He who does not take any exercise will grow weak. You need the spiritual food and exercise that you can obtain only in and through the public worship. There is a great assembly coming some day. Will you be ready and prepared to stand with the people of God then? "Prepare to meet thy God."

Making Known the Truth.

BY C. R. N.

The churches of Christ in Wilson County, Texas, are awake to the work, teaching the truth in more ways than one. Each week there appears in the county paper, published in Floresville, Texas, a most excellent article teaching the truth. Brother Harvey Scott, who labors with the church in Floresville, furnishes the articles, and the churches pay for the space in the paper. I wish there was a good article in every paper in every county each week teaching the truth. Brethren, if you will agree to furnish the space in your county paper, I will agree to furnish the article, or put you in touch with the preacher who will be glad to furnish you an article each week for your county paper. Remember, you will have to pay the publisher of the paper; but make arrangements with him at once and begin to teach the people the truth through your county paper. Harvey Scott is doing a great work in his county.

In the great daily papers of the country may be made announcements of religious services for each week, and most of our congregations in the cities take advantage of this free notice. The papers are glad to make these announcements for the benefit of their readers, as well as to assist the churches. You may find in many of the papers to-day additional advertisements being made by the churches—many of the denominational churches—in display advertisements, for which they pay. They find that it pays. In time my brethren will learn the lesson.

Some weeks ago I had a letter from a friend who was spending Sunday in a city east of the Mississippi. In the letter it was stated: "In the lobby of this hotel, the best hotel in the city, I find placard announcement of the churches in this city, save only I find no announcement of where I am to worship this day. In some way I will find the place. I do not know the name of the minister or any of the members, but I can learn through the minister of the Christian Church."

In a city a few months ago I saw on one of the great billboards cigarettes advertised. The next day, passing the same place, I noticed the advertisement had changed, and there appeared on the billboard an advertisement of one of the denominational churches which was closing a seven-months' evangelistic effort in that city. That church was investing time as well as money in the work they had espoused.

In our leading cities you will find bookstores filled with books, and in the principal cities you will find a bookstore owned by the Baptist people, another owned by the Methodists, another by the Presbyterians, and so on. These stores are crammed with books which teach their peculiar doctrines. What is the trouble that you are unable to find bookstores filled with books written by our people? It is not that we do not have men capable of writing books—no, no, not that. The trouble is that our people do not buy books as the denominations do. Let one of our brethren write a much-needed book, a book with real merit, and he fears to bring it from the press; for he is advised by those who have made the effort to assist in the dissemination of the truth by means of books that he will be years getting back what he invests in the book, if he ever gets out with the money he spends to have it published. Go to some of our publishers and ask them if they will publish a book you have written on the royalty basis. Brother preacher, what are you doing to place good books in the hands of the people? If you would see the church prosper, invest your time and money in her.

Personal Notes.

W. D. Bills reports four additions to the congregation in San Antonio, Texas, with which he labors.

C. W. Ing is laboring with the congregation in Menlow, Texas, and reports that they are doing good work in the Bible classes, as well as in the other work Christians should engage in.

M. M. Young reports the work in Girard, Aspermont, Peacock, and Spur, Texas, to be increasing in interest and enthusiasm on the part of the congregations. These congregations are to be congratulated in that they have one of our best men to labor with them.

J. L. Reagan is certain the Lord is pleased with the work the church in De Soto, Texas, is doing. There are about one hundred and fifty young people in the church at that place, and they are alive to the importance of learning the Bible and living as they should. Brother Reagan is half time with the church in Midlothian, another good congregation. Brother Reagan has time for a meeting in April or May. He should be addressed at 108 East Ninth Street, Dallas, Texas.

At Home and Abroad

W. S. Long's new address is 1219 Kenyon Street, N. W., Washington, D. C.

Change of address: E. E. Shoulders, from Box 61, Station N, to 145 West One Hundred and Eighteenth Street, New York City, N. Y.

J. L. Hines paid us a visit on Monday. He reported a good meeting with the Columbia Avenue congregation, Cincinnati, Ohio.

A physician desires a location in which there is a Christian church in either Mississippi, Arkansas, or Tennessee. Address "Physician," care of the Gospel Advocate.

J. H. Horton, Tuscumbia, Ala., sends in a report of the Dugger-Tant debate at Russellville, Ala., and appends the following: "The church at Tuscumbia is doing well."

From R. N. Moody, Albertville, Ala., March 1: "I preached for the church in Gadsden last Sunday, morning and night. There was one addition from the Baptists."

From J. E. Karnes, Milan, Tenn.: "I have been a constant reader of the Gospel Advocate for thirty years, and it seems to grow better. I am eager to get it each week."

Ira Wommack, of Sulphur, Okla., would like to visit his old home in Tennessee in May or June, and would be glad to hold meetings for any place that needs him during those months.

J. C. Mosley is in a hospital at Whitwell, Tenn., where he has undergone a serious operation for appendicitis. We trust he will soon be able to carry on his work of preaching the gospel.

W. S. Moody preached at Twelfth Avenue, North, this city, last Sunday, morning and evening, with two confessions. There were three hundred and thirty-seven present at the Sunday school.

C. G. Vincent has moved from Knoxville, Tenn., to Corsicana, Texas. His address is 1417 West Seventh Avenue. Brother Vincent says: "Fine reports are coming from the Japan field. We have recently forwarded one thousand dollars to be applied on the Kamitomizaka lot."

J. Pettey Ezell reports the work at Cookeville, Tenn., as progressing nicely, despite the rainy weather and epidemic of measles, influenza, and pneumonia. R. V. Cawthon will begin a series of meetings with this congregation the second Lord's day in March. They hope for better things in the future.

H. F. Pendergrass, of David Lipscomb College, filled his regular appointment at Rock Springs, in Rutherford County, on the last Sunday in February. He says: "Quite a few of the boys in school are idle almost every Sunday. We have some worthy young men in school, and they can preach, too. Brethren, why not keep these young men busy preaching the word?"

From William H. Beasley, Waldo, Ark.: "A recent letter from J. D. Tant advises that he has a boy in a hospital in Texas, which, with other reverses, has put Brother Tant in bad shape financially. I am sure that many churches where Brother Tant has labored for many years will be glad to help him in his distress. Please send him a contribution immediately. Address J. D. Tant, Quitman, Ark."

W. G. White, for many years the tentmaker of this city, now of Route 3, Shelbyville, Tenn., writes: "Located in my new shop equipped with electric light and power, and in position to buy material wholesale and at first-hand, I am prepared to serve the brethren in making gospel tents better than ever before. Brethren expecting to get tents when wanted should let me know their wants at an early date."

From M. C. Cayce, 143 Wacaster Street, Jackson, Miss.: "Last Sunday (February 26) I preached here, morning and night, and at Ridgeland in the afternoon. It was a rainy day. Twenty-five per cent of our membership are sick with the 'flu.' I hope to be in Nashville on the last Sunday in March. I expect to begin a meeting in Columbus, Miss., on the last Sunday in April. Good prayer meeting on Wednesday night."

W. T. Hines, Braman, Okla., who has been for some time in business at that place and preaching on Sunday there and at other places in reach of there, is ready to dispose of his business and enter the field for the evangelistic work for all his time, or to locate in some county and do evangelistic work in the county. I know Brother Hines personally, and trust that within a few weeks he will be untrammelled by business affairs and giving his entire time to preaching the work. Get in touch with Brother Hines if you need a man.

From J. T. Clouse, Elk City, Okla., Route 5: "Our house burned on January 28, and nearly everything we had burned. We are members of the church of Christ. We are from Tennessee. We had lots of bad luck and sickness in Tennessee. We moved to Oklahoma in March, 1920. We moved here for our health. We are broken up now and need help. We would appreciate anything the brethren and sisters will send us. There are seven in the family, including my son and his wife and two small children. There are three in my family—my wife and daughter and myself."

Lee P. Mansfield, who labors with the church in Desdemona, Texas, reports the work doing as well as could be expected. Desdemona is one of the Texas "oil towns." People who have never visited a new town built in the "boom" of the discovery of oil have no adequate conception of what such towns look like. The houses are mere shacks, and the people who rush to such places are, as a rule, those who are after money, money, and the fear of God is not in the souls of many of them. Church work in such places is hard. We own a reasonably good building, well located, on the main street of the town, in the heart of the business section. There was a small congregation which owned the house before the oil was discovered.

J. D. Tant, after closing the debate with A. N. Dugger, the Adventist, at Russellville, Ala., sends the following: "The church at Russellville has a beautiful twelve-thousand-dollar brick house, some excellent members and working elders, yet they need a strong man located there to help them sound out the gospel in regions beyond. They said they were well pleased with my debate and supported me well for the debate; but as I went there to please the Lord by preaching his word and to please J. D. Tant by doing the Lord's will, I am sure the Lord and I were pleased with the work, and I care but little about pleasing my brethren or the world. I am at Berry, Ala., trying to put the school on a solid basis, and as soon as this is done, I shall be off for home and the farm so wife can go to our little boy in Texas until he gets over his next operation."

From W. S. Long, Washington, D. C., March 1: "During the last month I have received ten letters telling me of friends and relatives of members in different States who were in Washington, and whom we hope to reach for Christ. Some are members who have wandered from the path of duty, while others are out of Christ. I thank those who have written. Some of those of whom they wrote have been attending worship, and others appreciated my visit to see them. Letters came from Texas, Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia, Arkansas, Tennessee, and Nebraska. Now let us have some more letters like these, and give us the name of any one in whom you are interested. Remember, the church is located at Fourteenth Street and Meridian Place, N. W., and the Fourteenth Street car stops almost in front of the door. Address letters to W. S. Long, 1219 Kenyon Street, N. W. You will find the church notice in the Washington Evening Star, also the location of the church in the city directory. Telephone, Adams 2426."

From R. E. L. Taylor, Decherd, Tenn., March 2: "I have just returned to Tennessee. I closed out my meeting at Plant City, Fla., after preaching ten days, at night only, with two baptized. One lady made the good confession, but her husband prohibited her from being baptized. The interest was good throughout the meeting; but as I had arranged for a two-days' get-together meeting at Lecanto, I had to close out and go there for that meeting. I left C. D. Moore with the congregation. He will carry the meeting on indefinitely. I found some good, loyal brethren there. The get-together meeting at Lecanto was a success in every way. The attendance was excellent. People were there from several counties in the State, and several of the congregations were represented. One Christian mother, with her two sons and another young man, motored about one hundred and fifty miles to be at this meeting. A number of good talks were made by the brethren. The preaching brethren present were: Colson, Humphreys, Martin, and Rucker. I learned to love the brethren at Lecanto and all of the brethren that I met while in Florida. The church at Lecanto is alive spiritually. I pray God's richest blessings to rest upon them. I will be at College, in Bledsoe County, on the second Sunday in March."

Query Department

Mrs. E. V. Cowan, Ravenden Springs, Ark., requests help in an important matter. She says: "I have searched diligently for an answer to the question I shall ask you, and can answer it satisfactorily to my own mind; but for fear I might be guilty of accusing one whom I love and have great respect for, I turn to you for help. Should an elder take the leading part of the song service in the sectarian churches every Lord's day, teach a class in their Sunday school, and practice with them for every entertainment to raise money for their various purposes, claiming that he does this merely for amusement and considers it a good way to get to teach them, when it is against the wishes of the church and when the whole church begs him to quit it, and, instead of using that time in that way, use it to teach our own members and help us to learn new songs and have prayer meeting? He stubbornly refuses, saying he believes he is doing good, when the crowd is steadily diminishing at our own meetings and the work is very dull, having a few songs, a chapter read, prayer, communion, etc., in the regular order; no teaching, no preaching. Just to meet and spend about thirty minutes at serving the Lord on his day is all we do each week. We have only this one elder."

As Christ said to the woman of Samaria, "Thou hast had five husbands; and he whom thou now hast is not thy husband," so it appears to me that this man is no elder. A Christian will not do anything as service to God simply as an amusement. To take part in any service to God as an amusement is to profane the worship. "Whatsoever is not of faith is sin." This man is sinning against both the brethren and Christ. It is not scriptural for a church to have but one elder. Better have none. The church should not depend on this man, but should worship God without him and develop others for the work. The church should not depend on one man. Taking it for granted that the facts are correctly stated, this man-made elder loves amusement more than the truth. Such a man is not qualified to be an elder, and it is a shame to select and appoint him to be an elder. Such a man cannot be respected for his work's sake. The condition that our sister describes as existing is sad, because it is unscriptural. No church can develop and grow while doing comparatively so little in the service of God. Other members in that church should exercise their talents. Each has a talent and should use it for God. Different members have different functions in the church of God. "And he gave some to be apostles; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers," (Eph. 4: 11.)

The following was sent to the "Query Department" for answer: "If you were preaching for a congregation and the subject of individual communion cups should arise, some for and some against, and even one good, conscientious brother should so oppose them that he would tell you and the others that his conscience just would not allow him to partake with said cups should they be used, would you advise them to be used, this brother to the contrary notwithstanding? Or if you should find a congregation which had obtained individual cups against the wishes of even one good brother, and he should fail to partake of the 'fruit of the vine' and thus be deprived of that part of the worship because of said cups, what would you advise to be done?"

I have never thought very much of the individual communion service, yet I am satisfied there is no authority in the Bible fixing the number of cups to be used in the communion service. It is not clear to me whether the apostles used the same cup or each had his own cup when Christ instituted the Supper. As an expediency, it is inexpedient,

It is more expensive and requires more time and labor to keep clean than the ordinary flagon, plates, and goblets. Instead of being more sanitary, it is less sanitary than the communion service in ordinary use. A jeweler here in Nashville, who does the largest business of any jeweler in the city, told me that he considered it unsanitary. He used it and ought to know. He said the individual cups were not usually kept clean. The individual cup is used by one person on one Lord's day and by another on the next Lord's day. They are individual only for one time. I have never known any one to contract some loathsome disease by the use of a cup that is used also by others. This exists only in the imagination. But when differences arise over matters of expediency, a spirit of concession and forbearance should be exercised by the entire church. "Brotherly love" should "continue." A soul is of more value than a cup. I worship God without an individual cup; so can you. Grant that the brother is misguided who makes the individual cup a matter of conscience, yet he cannot use it without sin. "To him who accounteth anything to be unclean, to him it is unclean." (Rom. 14: 14.) Convince the brother that the Bible does not say to use one or a hundred cups. Show him that the number of the cups to be used is left to the discretion of the church. If you cannot convince him that the question is one which belongs to the law of expediency, then I would not get the individual cup and thus force him to do what he believes to be a sin. The other members can yield, because they know the individual cup belongs to the law of expediency. Paul would not lead a weak brother to stumble. "Wherefore, if meat causeth my brother to stumble, I will eat no flesh for evermore, that I cause not my brother to stumble." (1 Cor. 8: 13.) The brethren should be patient, and, if possible, should teach the brother the exact truth on the subject. The brother should be slow to put his conviction against the conviction of the entire church. It is asking a good deal to ask the whole church to yield its preference to one man. The very fact that all his brethren are against him should lead the brother to reexamine and restudy the subject carefully and prayerfully. If I were not sure the law of God required the use of a specific number of cups, I would yield my view, if I were in the place of the brother.

Willie De Bow, Lebanon, Tenn., writes to ask: "(1) Was Moses' law in full force till the death of Christ, or was it abolished when John the Baptist came? (Luke 16: 16.) (2) What law are we saved and governed by now? When and where did it begin?"

1. The law of Moses was abolished at the death of Christ. "Having blotted out the bond written in ordinances that was against us, which was contrary to us: and he hath taken it out of the way, nailing it to the cross." (Col. 2: 14.) Luke 16: 16 says: "The law and the prophets were until John: from that time the gospel of the kingdom of God is preached, and every man entereth violently into it." This was the first announcement that the old dispensation was about to close and that John had come to set up the preparatory kingdom, to prepare a people made ready for Christ. Men of violence were trying to force their way into the kingdom. They tried a little later to crown Jesus as king by force.

2. We are now saved and governed by the law of Christ. This law began in Jerusalem on the day of Pentecost, when the apostles were baptized in the Holy Spirit and "spoke as the Spirit gave them utterance."

Thank God every morning when you get up that you have something to do that day which must be done whether you like it or not. Being forced to work and forced to do your best will breed in you temperance, self-control, diligence, strength of will, content, and a hundred virtues which the idle never know.—Charles Kingsley.

Review of O. E. Payne's Book on "Psallo."

BY M. C. K.

CHAPTER VIII.

THE CASE OF CLEMENT OF ALEXANDRIA, WITH MORE MISREPRESENTATION OF AUTHORITIES.

In Chapter VI of this review I gave free expression to the decided distaste which I had formed for the unpleasant work of exposing the misrepresentation of authorities so frequently found in the book here under examination; and if our readers do not already share with me the same feeling, they will doubtless have it in full measure when the things to be exposed in the present chapter are laid bare. I regret the unpleasant duty, but a widespread and pressing call from intelligent men and women has placed it upon me, and I am striving to discharge it faithfully and in the fear of God.

On pages 124-134 of my book, "Instrumental Music in the Worship," I presented the case of Clement of Alexandria, the purpose of which was to meet and refute the claim sometimes made by the advocates of instrumental music in divine worship, that "even as early as the close of the second century"—the time of Clement—it was thus used, and was used under the sanction of Clement himself. Of course, even if such position were established beyond doubt, the case would still fall short of sanction by divine inspiration; but the inconclusiveness of the claim, with its utter lack of support in the records of either Clement or of others of that period, is fully set forth in the pages of my book just cited, and not a solitary thing to the contrary is adduced in the attempted reply in the book here under review, except, as we shall see, at the expense of changing the record. The author of this strange book seems to have been wholly oblivious to the thought that his tampering with records could ever be exposed and rendered ridiculous as well as otherwise improper in the estimation of all right-thinking people who might see it. Moreover, candor compels me to concede that persons who have not read my book nor the works of Clement, and who have any reason to believe that this man is stating facts in his book as they really are in Clement and elsewhere, will, of course, most likely conclude that my statement of the case is not sustained by the facts. I do not see how they could properly draw any other conclusion from the premises which he constructs.

But, not only justice demands, but our readers are otherwise entitled to know, that the premises, in this attempt at refutation, are formed, not only by attributing to me what I never did either in my book or anywhere else, but by putting into the record statements which Clement did not make and leaving out statements which he did make. As to the correctness of this statement, our readers can examine the facts for themselves and draw their own conclusion. As it sheds a ray of light on the situation, I will first lay before them his significant comment upon the case. Referring to the chapter from Clement, he says:

"I was not prepared to believe that one so sensible as Mr. Kurfees would set for himself and his followers such a cruel trap as this chapter proved to be when the Greek text was consulted. . . . Mr. Kurfees translates psallein by 'play.' As there is no gainsaying the fact that he is the acknowledged authority of those who oppose the instrument, and notably of those who say psallo ceased to indicate an instrument, and as I have now completely proven by Mr. Kurfees, the Greek scholar, that Mr. Kurfees, the theologian, is in error, the latter's admiring lesser lights should abandon the theologian, swear allegiance to the scholar and promptly yield the pretension that in the New Testament times psallo meant 'to sing unaccompanied.' In the short chapter of four pages published by Mr. Kurfees, Clement eighteen times employs psallein in the varying forms, to refer to the instrument, and in ten of the eighteen instances, Mr. Kurfees translates the word as indicating an instrument!! or its function, while in one of the examples, he renders it 'praise,' and in but three of the eighteen times does he render psallein by 'voice' or 'sing.' Talk about Homer sometimes nodding! If the general staff, with headquarters at Nashville, which stationed this soldier of the cross on sentry duty to guard this critical portion of the fighting line, should enforce military law, he would be court-martialed for snoring at noon-tide within hearing distance of the enemy listening posts. . . . There are several other instances wherein our Homer nodded, while writing Instrumental Music in the Worship, as I would show were I writing a refutation. . . . What must be said of a writer whose book contains dozens of examples where he renders psallein 'to play,' and then fills that book with the most positive assertions that there are no such examples?" (Pages 250-254.)

Well, it was Horace, the famous Roman poet, who said,

"Even the worthy Homer sometimes nods;"

but it was Alexander Pope, the brilliant English poet, who said,

"Those oft are stratagems which errors seem,
Nor is it Homer nods, but we that dream;"

and, in view of the several statements in the foregoing extract which our readers will be able to see for themselves are distinctly incorrect, I merely add, in this connection, that, when all the facts are in, I shall be perfectly willing for intelligent and impartial readers to decide whether, in the present instance, "our Homer nodded" and was found "snoring at noon-tide," or his critic was found resorting to "stratagems" or to something else. I have every needed facility for stating the case accurately; for, in addition to having at hand a copy of the book here under review and a copy of the English translation of the "Ante-Nicene Fathers," I have also the works of Clement in the original Greek. Moreover, although I carefully read the works of Clement before writing my book, yet, before writing the present criticism, I carefully went over every word of the famous chapter of Clement in the original, and the reader can rely upon my statement both as to the occurrences of psallo in that chapter and as to quotations and comparisons now to be made. I shall give, word for word, what the author of this book says, and then place beside it, word for word, how the same matters are given in Clement. He heads his chapter, "Put to Rout by his Own Testimony;" but I will let our readers see the method by which and the extent to which I have been "put to rout."

1. Turning to page 250 of the book here under review, after referring his readers to "Clement of Alexandria, Paed. IV., II (Inst. Mus. in Wor. p. 127f.)," thus specifying the pages in my book which contain the "Ante-Nicene Fathers" translation of Clement from which he professes to quote, the following is the way he quotes it:

"The Spirit distinguishing from such revelry the divine service sings to the harp strings [psallein]. 'Praise Him with the sound of trumpet;' for with sound of trumpet, He shall raise the dead."

Now, if our readers will turn to my book, pages 127-131, they will find verbatim, and in full, Chapter IV. of Book II. of Clement's work entitled "The Instructor," and they will find on page 129 that the foregoing passage is as follows:

"The Spirit, distinguishing from such revelry the divine service, sings, 'Praise Him with the sound of trumpet;' for with sound of trumpet he shall raise the dead."

Thus, the phrase, "to the harp strings," is not in the Clement passage at all, but was added by this man! Not only so, but he also changed the punctuation. The passage says: "The Spirit . . . sings, 'Praise Him with the sound of trumpet,'" thus putting a comma after "sings" and showing that what they were to sing is "praise Him with the sound of trumpet;" whereas this man adds the phrase, "to the harp strings," and follows it with a period or full stop, as if the sentence next following did not express what they were to sing, but something different and entirely independent! In other words, he puts into the testimony of my witness what my witness did not say, and this is the way I am "put to rout by" my "own testimony"! If it be said that he was merely giving what he conceived to be the meaning of psallo in that passage, that will not help his case in the least; for he was not translating Clement, but quoting Clement as given in the "Ante-Nicene Fathers" translation, and to which he himself gave specific reference. The significant fact here is, which our readers can verify for themselves by turning to the Clement chapter in my book, to which he refers and from which he quotes, he simply added a phrase of his own invention which is not in the passage at all.

2. Again, on page 251, here is the way he quotes another passage from Clement:

"And as it is befitting before partaking of food that we should bless the Creator of all, so also in drinking it is suitable to praise Him with the harp [psallein] on partaking of his creatures."

But here is the way the passage reads in Clement:

"And as it is befitting, before partaking of food, that we should bless the Creator of all; so also in drinking it is suitable to praise Him on partaking of his creatures."

Thus, in this case also, he changes the record by adding the phrase, "with the harp," which is not in the text! He seems to have no hesitancy in adding to the text that which will make it teach what he wants it to teach.

3. On page 253, referring to "examples of psallo involving or implying the use of an instrument," he says:

"We frequently find examples in pairs, sometimes by the dozen, while in the case of Athenaeus, Plutarch, and Clement, they occur by the score. In the four pages from the latter, Mr. Kurfees gives eighteen."

Now, that statement is absolutely incorrect, and I respectfully reply that "Mr. Kurfees" not only "gives" no such number, but psallo does not even occur that often in the entire chapter from Clement. On the contrary, in the whole chapter, including all the different grammatical forms of the term, psallo occurs only six times. Its cognate terms, psalterion and psalmos, occur, the former seven times and the latter four times, while the latter occurs one time in combination with another word (psalmodia). Hence, to me, too, there really seemed to be "a cruel trap" here "when the Greek text was consulted;" but I leave it to our readers to decide who is in the trap. In view of the fact that this man either did not know our illustrious friend psallo well enough to distinguish him from his "verbal kinfolks," or he contradicted the facts in the case for some other reason, one or the other. In either case, this circumstance is another complete and convincing demonstration of the utter unreliability of this book even when it undertakes to tell whether psallo is in a Greek passage or not.

4. He not only says, "Mr. Kurfees translates psallein by 'play,'" but that "in the short chapter of four pages published by Mr. Kurfees, Clement eighteen times employs psallein, in the varying forms, to refer to the instrument, and in ten of the eighteen instances, Mr. Kurfees translates the word as indicating an instrument!!" (Pages 252, 253.) Thus, two exclamation points are used to intensify astonishment that I would be guilty of such an inconsistent thing, and I agree that there is ground for astonishment in this connection. First of all, his figment about the "eighteen" instances of psallo in the chapter has already been exposed; and as to the rest of the statement, it is not only not true that "Mr. Kurfees translates psallein by 'play,'" and that "in ten of the eighteen instances, Mr. Kurfees translates the word as indicating an instrument," but, as a matter of fact, throughout the entire chapter from Clement, I do not translate the word at all, except one time, and there I translate it "make melody," just as it is translated in the Authorized and Revised Versions of the New Testament in Eph. 5: 19. Our readers can verify this by consulting pages 124-131 of my book, where the plain English statement of the case will show that I did not translate the word in that whole chapter except the one time; and even in the one exception I did not translate it in the way he attributes to me. On the contrary, on page 127 I distinctly and specifically say: "We submit the English translation given in Volume II. of the 'Ante-Nicene Fathers' under the editorship of Alexander Roberts and James Donaldson and styled the 'American Reprint of the Edinburgh Edition.'" Hence, in the case of every occurrence of the word in the entire chapter, with the one exception named, it is the "Ante-Nicene Fathers" translation and not mine. And yet he asks: "What must be said of a writer whose book contains dozens of examples where he renders psallein 'to play' and then fills that book with the most positive assertions that there are no such examples?" I respectfully reply: "What must be said of a writer" who says "Clement eighteen times employs psallein," when Clement employs it only six times, and who says "in ten of the eighteen instances, Mr. Kurfees translates the word as indicating an instrument," whereas "Mr. Kurfees" translates it only one time, and then not as that writer represents him?

5. By careful investigation and comparison, another significant fact, which was intimated in a preceding paragraph, is here brought to light. Not only did the author of this book, as we have seen, add things in favor of instrumental music which Clement did not say, but he omitted the very things which Clement did say and which distinctly show that he was against the use of instrumental music in the worship. Here they are: "If people occupy their time with pipes, and psalteries, and choirs, and dances, and Egyptian clapping of hands, and such disorderly frivolities, they become quite immodest and intractable, beat on cymbals and drums, and make a noise on instruments of delusion." Mark you, he calls them "instruments of delusion."

Again: "Let the pipe be resigned to the shepherds, and the flute to the superstitious who are engrossed in idolatry. For, in truth, such instruments are to be banished from the temperate banquet, being more suitable to beasts than to men, and the more irrational portion of mankind." Of course, if they "are to be banished from temperate banquets," they would have to be "banished" from the assembly for divine worship. Again, where Clement says things which he knew might be construed as favoring instrumental music in the worship, he is careful to explain that he did not mean that, thus: "'Praise him on the chords and organ.' Our body he calls an organ, and its nerves are the strings by which it has received harmonious tension, and when struck by the Spirit, it gives forth human voices." Again: "'Praise Him on the clashing cymbals.' He calls the tongue the cymbal of the mouth, which resounds with the pulsation of the lips." Again: "For man is truly a pacific instrument; while other instruments, if you investigate, you will find to be warlike, inflaming to lust, or kindling up amours or rousing wrath." And he adds: "The one instrument of peace, the word alone by which we honor God, is what we employ." Then, finally, as if to put the matter beyond all dispute, he adds: "We no longer employ the ancient psalter and trumpet, and timbrel, and flute, which those expert in war and contenders of the fear of God were wont to make use of also in choruses at their festive assemblies; that by such strains they might raise their dejected minds." ("Ante-Nicene Fathers," Volume II., pages 248, 249; or "Instrumental Music in the Worship," pages 127-131.)

Now, I respectfully ask, are not such disclosures sad to contemplate, and are they not sufficient to impress serious and thoughtful persons? The readers of his book, if not otherwise informed, could never know that Clement said any such things. And yet, in spite of such omissions and misrepresentations, the author of this book talks of "Homer sometimes nodding"! But, so far as I am concerned, while I am decidedly against both, yet I am frank to say that, were I forced to choose between such "stratagems" in dealing with authors, and both "nodding" and "snoring at noontide within hearing distance of the enemy listening posts," I would promptly choose the latter.

6. As to the use of psallo in Clement or elsewhere "to refer to the instrument" or "as indicating an instrument," as the author of this book expresses it, page 253, in all such cases, the idea of instrumental music is conveyed by other terms and not by psallo. Moreover, there is nothing in the position defended in this review in the chapters on "the function and authority of lexicons" that is inconsistent with such use of the term psallo; but be it remembered, that when it is so used, the idea of instrumental music is indicated, as just stated, and does not inhere in psallo itself. To illustrate this point, citing the original of the Clement chapter, it is so used in 37 in the form psallein, but it has both kithara and lyra with which the psalting is done, and it is by them and not by psallo that the idea of instrumental music is indicated. Again, it is so used in 38 in the form psalate, but it has psalterion to indicate instrumental music; and still again it is so used in 44 in the form psallatoosan, but it has both tympanon and psalterion to indicate instrumental music. The tympanon was a kind of drum, and psallo, as we have seen, means to strike, and this is a most natural application of its original and literal import. But in 26, where it occurs in the form psallein, but where there is no such object or instrument used in connection with it, the eminent authors of the "Ante-Nicene Fathers" translation properly render it sing, saying, "the Spirit . . . sings." The same work, commenting in a footnote on 37, where psallein is used with kithara and lyra, says: "Here instrumental music is allowed, though he turns everything into a type." The thought conveyed by this sentence, apparently favoring instrumental music, is what has led scholars, as shown in my book, to regard the passage as spurious, because Clement, as we have seen from his own positive statements in other parts of the chapter, strongly opposed instrumental music in the worship; and if he favored it in this passage or elsewhere, he contradicted himself.

7. Finally, I close this chapter with an additional word concerning the inherent meaning of the word psallo. The radical and primary meaning of the term has been fully set forth in previous chapters, and it has been abundantly established, according to the highest lexical authorities, that neither in Clement nor elsewhere does the idea of instrumental music inhere in the word. On page 64 of my book is this statement: "Those who claim that a given passage authorizes instrumental music because it contains the word psallo are guilty of the petitio principii, or the fallacy of begging the question. They assume the very point in dispute by assuming that the use of a musical instrument inheres in the word. No lexicographer known to the author has ever so claimed." Hence, it has not been and is not now my intention to deny that psallo could, at any time, even now in the twentieth century, be properly used in a connection where the idea of instrumental music is conveyed, but, as just shown in examples from Clement, when it is so used, that idea is conveyed by other words and not by psallo. The idea of instrumental music does not inhere in the word. During the New Testament period it meant, and means now, to sing, and in harmony with this thought it was distinctly demonstrated in the chapter on the passage from Lucian that all he meant when he said, "It is impossible to psallein without a lyre," was that it is impossible to psallein without some object or instrument with which to psallein. And while in the New Testament, as in other modern Greek literature, the word simply means to sing, yet with a direct allusion to its ancient application to striking the chords of a musical instrument, the New Testament specifies "the heart" as the instrument with which Christians are to psallein. Hence, when Paul said in Greek, "I will psalo with the spirit, and I will psalo with the understanding also." (1 Cor. 14: 15), he meant in English: "I will sing with the spirit, and I will sing with the understanding also."

"When Will You Learn That?"

BY F. W. SMITH.

This was an expression from Gipsy Smith during one of his sermons at the Ryman Auditorium as to how one can find Jesus. A woman had told him she had been seeking Jesus for ten years, but had failed to find him, and after his instructions to this woman as to how to find Jesus, he put this query to his audience: "When will you learn that?" After reading it, I said to myself: "Learn what?" My observations on the situation led me to the following conclusions: (1) Why should any soul with the New Testament Scriptures in his or her hands seek Jesus for ten years, one year, or even one day, and not find him? Did any one ever read of any person under the teaching of the apostles and evangelists of the New Testament seeking Jesus and failing to find him? Did any one ever attend their preaching and not learn how to find Christ? (2) I fully agree with what Gipsy Smith said to this woman—viz.: "There is something wrong." Of course there was something wrong; and not only wrong, but radically wrong. But whose fault was it? Was it the woman's? In a sense, yes; but the greater wrong was upon the part of all those preachers whom she followed and to whom she had listened preach. One of two things is evidently true; either not one of those preachers preached like the apostles and evangelists of the New Testament, or else the woman was incapable of understanding the simple facts and commands of the gospel; for no one followed those New Testament preachers who wanted to find Jesus that ever failed. (3) From what Gipsy Smith told this woman to do in order to "find Jesus"—viz., "Go in straight to your room and lock the door and throw the key through the window and get on your face before God and spend one hour with Jesus"—I am forced to the conclusion that he himself did not know how to tell the woman to find Jesus. Can Gipsy Smith, if his very life depended on it, find one single instance where any apostle or evangelist of the New Testament ever gave such instructions to a sinner seeking Jesus as he gave to that woman?

What did Jesus say that sinners must do to find him in the pardon or forgiveness of their sins? He said: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to the whole creation. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that disbelieveth shall be condemned." (Mark 16: 15, 16.) I will say to Gipsy Smith, in the language of his own query: "When will you learn that?" Or, if you have learned it, in the name of heaven and the salvation of souls, why do you not preach it?" Again, under the preaching of the apostles, where people believed and were convinced or convicted of their sins, they were told in answer to the question, "What shall we do?" "Repent ye, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ unto the remission of your sins; and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit." (Acts 2: 37, 38.) Has Gipsy Smith learned that? If so, in the interest of the souls of men, why does he not preach it? When the penitent Saul of Tarsus was approached by an evangelist of the New Testament, instead of being told to "go to his room and lock the door and throw the key away and spend one hour with Jesus," he was told: "And now why tarriest thou? arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on his name." (Acts 22: 16.) Has this modern evangelist learned that? If so, why does he not preach it to the people? The apostle Paul said: "Or are ye ignorant that all we who were baptized into Christ Jesus were baptized into his death? We were buried therefore with him through baptism into death: that like as Christ was raised from the dead through the glory of the Father, so we also might walk in newness of life." (Rom. 6: 3, 4.) Again, the same apostle says: "For ye are all sons of God, through faith, in Christ Jesus. For as many of you as were baptized into Christ did put on Christ." (Gal. 3: 26, 27.) Has Gipsy Smith learned these fundamental things of the gospel? If so, why does he not tell the people in the language of the Bible about them?

Again, he tells us that "it is not the church that saves; it is not communion or baptism that saves; it is the blood of the Lamb." Let us look at this statement in the light of the New Testament. In so far as known to me, no Protestant ever claimed that the church saved anybody; but the New Testament teaches that Jesus Christ saves people in and through the church. The church is his spiritual body (Col. 1: 18), and he is said to be the Savior of the body (Eph. 5: 23). Neither Gipsy Smith nor any other mortal can find one person said to be saved after the day of Pentecost who was not a member of the church, or body of Christ. This is true from the fact that the very moment one was saved he or she was then and there a member of the church, because the same process that made one a Christian made him or her a member of the church. The church is the family of God (Eph. 3: 14-21), and we are born into his family "of water and the Spirit" (John 3: 5), and to be born of water means to be baptized; hence, we are baptized into the church, or family of God. We must make our choice between what Gipsy Smith says about baptism and what the apostle Peter said. He said that "eight souls" "were saved through water: which also after a true likeness doth now save you, even baptism, not the putting away of the filth of the flesh, but the interrogation of a good conscience toward God, through the resurrection of Jesus Christ." (1 Pet. 3: 20, 21.) To deny that baptism in some sense saves men is to deny the word of God. The sense in which it saves is precisely the same sense in which faith and repentance save. These are conditions or acts of obedience leading the soul to the blood of the Lamb, which cleanses from all sin. (1 John 1: 7.) Christ shed his blood in his death (John 19: 33, 34), and we are baptized into his death (Rom. 6: 3)—that is, into the benefits of Christ's blood.

Has Gipsy Smith learned these things? If so, why does he not preach them to the people? The only charitable conclusion is that he has not learned God's method or way of saving people, or, if he has, he does not lay the stress and importance on all that method that Christ and the inspired apostles did, and which is so clearly revealed in the New Testament. No man before the public to-day has a greater opportunity to preach the full gospel of Jesus Christ, which is "the power of God unto salvation" (Rom. 1: 16), than has Gipsy Smith. No one without prejudice can read the record of the New Testament preachers and note the converts under their ministry without discerning a radical difference between the preaching of Gipsy Smith and the converts under his ministry. While he says many good and helpful things, he does not preach the plan of salvation sealed with the blood of God's Son.

An Improvement Among the Baptists.

BY F. B. S.

The following clipping from the Western Recorder, a Baptist paper, is such an improvement over the practice of the Baptists in many sections of the country that I am willing to give it to our readers, with the corrections which the New Testament demands:

"Is it right to receive members into Baptist churches without first praying for them?"

I suppose what the writer wants is to put in a word for "the altar of prayer" or "the mourners' bench" as used in many sections of our country. If a man comes forward saying that he has repented of his sin and trusted Jesus Christ, he ought to be received whether a prayer has ever been offered for him or not.

I believe in praying for the lost, but our prayers do not save. It is the blood of Jesus Christ that saves. We ought to pray for the Holy Spirit to convict of sin and reveal the Savior to lost souls, but let us never lead people to trust in our prayers for salvation. Salvation is not a process, but a definite act of faith in which a helpless soul is committed to the Savior. God's word does not teach that if a sinner will beg and cry that God will forgive him. If he did, he would be unjust and God's law would be dishonored. "As Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of man be lifted up: that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have eternal life." There was no "mourners' bench" in New Testament times. The gospel was preached, the Holy Spirit convicted of sin, men and women repented and believed and were added to the church daily.

The brother says: "If a man comes forward saying that he has repented of his sin and trusted Jesus Christ, he ought to be received whether a prayer has ever been offered for him or not." The brother surely does not believe that he ought to be received without baptism. It would not be according to Baptist usage, nor the New Testament, either, to receive him without baptism. Into what could the Baptists receive such a one without baptism? Not into the Baptist Church, I am sure, because no one can get into that church without baptism. There is nothing else but a Baptist Church that Baptists could receive him into, for there is nothing over which the Baptists have control except the Baptist church. The brother could not mean that Christ would receive such a man into his church without baptism, for Peter said to those being added to the church: "Repent ye, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ unto the remission of your sins; and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit." (Acts 2: 38.)

The brother further says: "I believe in praying for the lost, but our prayers do not save." Some of us have known for a long time that the prayers of Baptist preachers do not save; but when we told our Baptist neighbors this, they accused us of not believing in prayer. Now, since the editor of the Western Recorder has come out on the same subject and says he believes in praying for the lost, and his prayer does not save them, I suppose his brethren will let up on us for not believing that their prayers save. The brother is right again when he says that the blood of Christ saves, and not prayer. Certainly so. The only trouble with the brother on this point is that he does not seem to know where, when, or how one comes in contact with the blood of Christ. Here I can do no better than to refer the brother to the words of the apostle again: "Or are ye ignorant that all we who were baptized into Christ Jesus were baptized into his death?" (Rom. 6: 3.) "Baptized into his death" here evidently means into the benefits of his death. But Christ shed his blood in his death; therefore, we are baptized into the benefits of the blood of Christ. This is, perhaps, not according to Baptist usage even yet, with all the improvement here indicated, but it is according to the New Testament teaching.

Of course, Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, and he commanded the bitten Israelites to look and live. Now, instead of the physical act of looking, Christ said: "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." (Mark 16: 16.) The brother says: "There was no 'mourners' bench' in New Testament times. The gospel was preached, the Holy Spirit convicted of sin, men and women repented and believed and were added to the church daily." Certainly they were added to the church daily, but they were not added without baptism, for the record says: "They then that received his word were baptized; and there were added unto them in that day about three thousand souls." (Acts 2: 41.) The Western Recorder has done fine, considering everything, but there is room yet for improvement.

Commending the Quarterlies.

"I have examined your new Quarterlies, and like them. I like the arrangement much better than the old, and I also feel certain the average student will take more interest in the book on account of its improved feature." (W. D. Bills, San Antonio, Texas.)

"I received the sample copies of the Sunday-school supplies in due time. I waited to express my opinion of them till I could give them a careful examination. I am pleased to say that I have found them first-class in every respect. They are clear, pointed, and scriptural. I like them very much." (Hall L. Calhoun, Professor of Old Testament Literature in Bethany College, Bethany, W. Va.)

"I have received sample copies of Bible helps from the Gospel Advocate office. These include Little Jewels, Lesson Leaves, Primary and Advanced Quarterlies. I have examined them very carefully, and I think that they are really the best set of Quarterlies that I have seen. Those using Quarterlies can find no better. But helps should be used properly in preparing lessons. In preparing lessons, I use all kinds of helps, and I think I have a right to do so. I prefer, however, to use the Bible only during recitations. I am sure that the lesson should be well studied by both teacher and pupils before coming together. In such cases the pupil recites what he really knows, and the teacher's knowledge is also tested. I believe in teaching the Bible at every opportunity." (F. P. Fonner, Buffalo, W. Va.)

To compare our frail humanity with all the hosts of the starry heavens is to emphasize our weakness. "What is man?" That is the material view. The Bible view is that man is made in the image of God. For a limited time he is lower than the angels, ultimately to be crowned with glory and honor. The fact of his affinity for and his fellowship with God raises him to a place apart. The image is moral; the power, a free will; the destiny, the beatific vision in the paradise of God.—Selected.

The Best Is Yet to Be.

For all men, small as well as great, even for those who have succeeded and conquered apparently all honors, it is true that the best is yet to be. Heroic Paul, earth's most intrepid and earth's sublimest spirit, standing forth in old age, with a thousand victories behind him, knew that he had not yet attained. No matter what your success, I appeal from the seed to the coming sheaf, from the acorn to the coming oak, from this little spring to the future river, from your ignorance to wisdom, from your fragmentary tool or law or custom to perfect virtue, from the broken arc to the full circle, from the white cloud to the stars that are above the clouds. Because life is a series of ascending climaxes, and because it waxes ever richer and richer, for every man, whether young or old, it is better farther on, and the best is yet to be.—Newell Dwight.

MATTHEW HENRY'S COMMENTARY FOR OUR READERS

The greatest preachers of the past two centuries attribute much of their inspiration and usefulness to Matthew Henry's Commentary on the whole Bible. Born in the seventeenth century, his name and his work still live and are household words. Thousands of homes treasure this commentary second only to the Bible, and many a man traces his right start to the loving advice of Matthew Henry.

Charles H. Spurgeon said: "Every minister ought to read Matthew Henry entirely and carefully through once at least. He will acquire a vast store of sermons; and as for thoughts, they will swarm around him like twittering sparrows around an old gable toward the close of autumn." Dr. Philip Schaff, compiler of Schaff's Bible Dictionary, pronounces it "the best practical and devotional commentary for English readers."

The management of the Gospel Advocate is fortunate in securing twenty-five sets of this unrivaled commentary, which will be sent as a premium to every reader who will send twenty-five new subscribers at the regular subscription price of $2 per year. This is undoubtedly the most attractive commentary offer ever made. You will receive six portable volumes of twelve hundred pages each, large, clear, unbroken type, with substantial Roxborough binding. If you wish to pay cash, the price for the six volumes is $17.50, not prepaid. When sent as a premium, we pay all charges.

Among the Colored Folks

On the second Lord's day in January I met with the brethren and sisters in Birmingham, Ala., and found them faithfully keeping house for the Master. It is wonderful to see how strong this church is, when we remember that about ten months ago they were all Methodists, Baptists, and so-called "Holiness" people. Brethren W. C. Graves and J. H. Davis, white brethren, have met with these people every Lord's day since I was there in June and have given them tender and careful training. They have also set a good, Christian example for them. Our weak mission points will have to be looked after if we expect them to stand firm for the truth. The meeting in January continued nearly a month, with preaching every night except two. The "Sanctified" people let us use their meetinghouse, and over half of them say they will obey the gospel when I go back there in May to hold a thirty-days' meeting. While here a "Sanctified" preacher challenged me for a debate on water baptism, foot washing, and operation of the Holy Ghost. This debate continued four nights, and he had enough. The white brethren came in large numbers each night, and they were highly pleased with my humble effort to present the truth. There were seven confessions, and two came from the "digressives." Dr. J. A. White and wife, members of the West End Church (white), gave me a nice Bible, and I am so thankful to them. I believe the West End Church is as full of the Spirit of Christ as any church that I have had the pleasure to meet with. Brother Bradley is now preaching for them, and he did much to encourage and strengthen me.

On the first Lord's day in February I met with the Spring Valley (Ala.) Church, called "Christian Home." Brethren Fort and East, who are the leaders in this church, were very kind to me. I was glad to find them yet faithful in the work. Brother J. Hannon, who has labored for them for years, is doing a great work there. He is a strong preacher.

I hope this year will be a great year in bringing people out of darkness to Christ. Brethren, pray for me. M. KEMLE.

Let me express my thanks to the ones that have been so mindful of me in the beginning of a new year's work. On the fourth and fifth Lord's days in January I was in Hickman County, near Centerville. The little band in Gray's Bend has been wrecked by so-called "sanctification," but I believe with proper instruction they will see their mistake and come back to the one body. The white brethren of Centerville have become deeply interested in the work among my people in that section. They gave me an offering for the month of January, and purpose to do so each month, that I may continue to preach the gospel to a perishing people. Brother A. M. Burton gave me an offering of ten dollars a few days ago and expressed his sympathy for me while laboring under such hardships. Brother J. C. Shepherd (white), of Berry, Ala., has been very mindful of me for the past two years. The Mount Layana, Duck River, Center Star, Centerville, and Pleasant Union congregations remembered me with a nice box each. All that have ministered to my necessity have my hearty thanks. I shall spend most of my time this year in destitute fields and with broken-down congregations. ALONZO JONES.

The Debate at Russellville, Ala.

BY J. H. HORTON.

J. D. Tant (Christian) met A. N. Dugger (Adventist) in a discussion at Russellville, Ala., on February 15 and continued till February 21. The propositions were as follows: (1) "The kingdom of God and of Christ was established on the earth at Jerusalem on the first Pentecost this side of the resurrection of Christ;" (2) "The kingdom of God and of Christ is future and will be established upon the earth at the second coming of Christ;" (3) "Saturday, the seventh day of the week, is the Christian Sabbath and should be observed by Christians in this age;" (4) "The first day of the week is the Lord's day and the day for Christian worship in this age." Tant affirmed the first and fourth propositions; Dugger affirmed the second and third.

Brother Tant did his work well from the beginning. He was taken quite sick one night, and it was thought he would not be able to sit up when he was to defend the truth; but he was strong when he was weak. Dugger would resort to anything to make a point. When Brother Tant showed from Col. 1: 12, 13 that the Colossians were in the kingdom, Dugger said: "I will show you the opposite of this passage in 2 Pet. 1: 11: 'For thus shall be richly supplied unto you the entrance into the eternal kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.'" He thus tried to make it appear that Brother Tant's position made a contradiction between the two passages. He said Brother Tant is the strongest man in debate he has ever met.

This debate will surely do good. People were reading the Bible and talking about it before the debate was over.

Tribute of Love.

BY MRS. FANNIE SOWELL SCOREY.

Sarah Josephine (Darnell) Sowell was born on November 19, 1853; died on November 14, 1921. William I. Sowell was born on April 30, 1851; died on November 26, 1921. They were married on November 19, 1873. Ten children—five boys and five girls—were born to them, nine of whom survive them. They were a comfort and a blessing to them in their last years. Rarely ever a mother had more love and tender care bestowed upon her by her faithful daughters than this dear mother through her long illness. William and Josie Sowell were good Christians, yet they made many mistakes. They loved to meet with the saints on the first day of the week to worship God. Their faith grew stronger in the religion of Christ as they began to go down on the shady side of life, when the silver cord would soon be broken. They loved the cause of Christ, and were not only anxious for their children to come into the church, but were also interested in the salvation of other souls. Josie was a great woman in many respects. She was a chaste keeper at home, and wanted to remain in the sphere where God had placed woman, and where her greatest power for good is felt. Josie was retiring and modest in dress and deportment. She tried to bring up her children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. To-day they rise up and call her blessed. The poor love her memory, for she was their friend. Her magnetic power in the home bound the family together with a strong cord of love. Her industrious, economic, honest life, coupled with her faith in her God, was the bulwark of her husband and children. "The heart of her husband safely trusted in her." She had been his stay for forty-eight years, and in a pathetic tone he was heard to say: "If anybody has gone to heaven, she has." And when she was gone, it was hard for him to find a resting place. Only twelve sad, lonely days he remained here without her, when he was suddenly called to join her in the spirit land with our youngest brother, whose young and useful life but a short time before had been cut off by death. As William and Josie traveled the pathway of life together, many times the shadows were deep, as they are with all who try to live right in this sin-cursed world; but she, like a guiding star, tried to lead her dear ones into the marvelous light of our blessed Savior. Their labors in the Lord were not in vain; and they rest from them, and their works do follow them.

Rainbow in Summer and Winter.

Why is the rainbow so frequently seen during the summer and so seldom during winter? Its formation, we are told by Prof. W. J. Humphreys, the eminent meteorological physicist, requires the coexistence of rain and sunshine, a condition that often occurs during local convectional showers, but rarely during a general cyclonic storm; and as the former are characteristic of summer and the latter of winter, it follows that the occurrence of the rainbow correspondingly varies with the seasons.—Exchange.

Color Blindness.

No fewer than fifty-five persons in every thousand are more or less color-blind. The commonest form is not, as many suppose, inability to distinguish red and green—that affects one person in fifty-five. The most usual symptom is uncertainty between blue and green.—Selected.

RECIPE FOR GRAY HAIR

To half pint of water add 1 ounce Bay Rum, a small box of Barbo Compound, and $\frac{1}{4}$ ounce of Glycerine. Any druggist can put this up, or you can mix it at home at very little cost. Apply to the hair twice a week until the desired shade is obtained. It will gradually darken streaked, faded, or gray hair and make it soft and glossy. It will not color the scalp, is not sticky or greasy, and does not rub off.

DOES LAUNDRY WORK AND HOUSEWORK TOO

Surprised to Find Herself Feeling So Well

Taunton, Mass. — "I used to have pains in my back and legs so badly, with other troubles that women sometimes have, that my doctor ordered me to stay in bed a week in every month. It didn't do me much good, so one day after talking with a friend who took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for about the same troubles I had, I thought I would try it also.

I find that I can work in the laundry all through the time and do my housework, too. Last month I was so surprised at myself to be up and around and feeling so good while before I used to feel completely lifeless. I have told some of the girls who work with me and have such troubles to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and I tell them how it has helped me. You can use my testimonial for the good of others."—Mrs. BLANCHE SILVIA, 59 Grant St., Taunton, Mass.

It's the same story—one friend telling another of the value of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

An Earnest Appeal.

BY T. W. PHILLIPS.

To all the personal friends of our late Brother J. S. Dunn: Please allow me to say that it was agreed by a number of the preachers in attendance at Brother Dunn's funeral that I should ask us all for an immediate contribution for Sister Dunn. The funeral expenses were heavy, and their home is not clear of debt. We want twenty-five hundred dollars in the next sixty days. We desire to pay the indebtedness on the home and to place a monument over his grave. Please send a donation immediately to Mrs. J. S. Dunn, 204 South Clinton Street, Dallas (Oak Cliff), Texas. If twenty-five hundred friends will send a dollar each, this will supply the present needs. Won't we do this? I believe we will. Some can send much more than a dollar. And all who can, please do so immediately. I hope the churches at Gainesville and Tyler, where he was preaching, will continue to send his monthly fellowship to Sister Dunn until this emergency is met. Brother Dunn gave his whole life to the cause, and he carried no life insurance. He believed in his brethren in the Lord, and we must not neglect his family. I fully believe this call will be responded to with cheerfulness. In the fullness of confidence I send this appeal on to you, my dearly beloved.

New Meetinghouse for Westmoreland.

BY S. P. JENT.

The few disciples at Westmoreland, Tenn., are making a supreme effort to build a house of worship there, and now have a very good house nearing completion. We are ready for the painting and seating and the inside decoration. But we find that we will fall short of means to complete the work about five or six hundred dollars. Therefore, we appeal to the brethren in every home in which the Gospel Advocate is a visitor to lay this matter before the local congregations and send us at least one Sunday's contribution. I feel that by this means and by the help of God we will be able to raise means sufficient to complete the work on our house and thereby have a more convenient place to meet for worship than from house to house, as has been our custom. We have a centrally located lot, with the restrictive clause in the deed.

Send all donations to S. P. Jent, treasurer, Westmoreland, Tenn.

THE SAFEST WAY TO DESTROY UNSIGHTLY HAIR

It is difficult to find anything more repulsive than an unnecessary display of unsightly hair on the person of an otherwise highly refined and beautiful lady.

The failure and danger connected with many so-called hair removers has discouraged many ladies and caused the needless and very unsatisfactory use of the razor, an instrument intended for the coarse skins of men only.

Unsightly hair on the exposed portions of the body can be destroyed with the roots safely and without injury to the skin, but the remedy must go deeper than the surface.

Nu-Art, a highly successful preparation, scientifically prepared, goes into the hair follicles and destroys the hair roots without injury to the skin or complexion. Thousands have found it highly successful and gratifying.

Mail a dollar bill with your name to 225 P. O. Building, Nu-Art Laboratories, South Orange, N. J., and you will be mailed a package, in plain wrapper, containing a bountiful supply of Nu-Art, by return mail. It will please you immediately, or your money will be cheerfully refunded.

An Interesting Letter.

Brother T. B. Larimore sends us a copy of a letter addressed to him "from far-away New Zealand, believing the readers of the Gospel Advocate would appreciate the privilege of reading it." The letter follows:

Motueka, New Zealand, October 25, 1921.—Dear Brother Larimore: On February 1, 1916, I sent you a letter, and received a reply dated March 30. You were also good enough to publish my letter in the Gospel Advocate. Looking through my old papers recently, I came across your letter, and now have it before me. So I have decided to write you again, as you requested me to do.

First of all, just a little about the cause we love. When I wrote you before, the church of Christ in Motueka had a very scattered membership, numbering about eighteen. Occasionally, when twelve or fourteen gathered around the Lord's table to remember him, we thought we had a crowd. Sometimes, when we had five or six at our Bible school, we felt elated. When we had three or four unsaved persons to attend the gospel service, we "thanked God and took courage." The brethren held the fort and the seed was faithfully sown. Sometimes one or two of our members would remove to other parts of the country, and at other times we were reinforced by those who came from other parts to live in our midst. Thus the gaps were fairly well filled. Now, with glad hearts, we can say: "God giveth the increase."

A few weeks ago a brother in Christ came to our district and formed singing classes in the various centers. One Lord's-day evening he conducted the gospel service. An audience of about forty attended, and at the close of the meeting six persons came forward to confess their faith in the Savior of sinners. And the reaping is still going on. Since the beginning of this month there have been ten additions by faith and obedience and two restorations. Thirty-six present at the "breaking of bread" last Lord's day, of whom thirty remembered their Lord in the way he appointed. Nearly forty at the gospel service, and we know there are some not far from the kingdom. Between forty and fifty on the Bible-school roll. I know you will rejoice with us when you hear the good news.

Now, a little home news. What a charm dwells in that magic word "home!" In our earthly homes, joys and sorrows are strangely intermingled. In the heavenly home, there will be no sorrow and no partings. About four years ago our oldest girl, aged twenty-five, bade us a fond farewell and took her flight to that heavenly home, to be forever with the Savior she loved and served so well. Around the throne, in the Eternal City, we shall meet her again, in the sweet by and by. Our oldest lad, John Thomas, with his wife, are devoted Christians. They live near Wellington, the "Empire City," and capital of New Zealand. They have two children—Nola, aged six, and Larimore Wilfred, just two years old. John thought so highly of the three volumes of T. B. Larimore's "Letters and Sermons" that he decided to name the wee laddie after Brother Larimore. I inclose a photo of Larimore, taken when he was six months old. Our next in order—another boy—is Edward Lewis, a grocer by trade. He fought in France, in the great war, and was wounded. He works near his brother John, and lives with him. Then we have Vera Mildred, at present staying with her brothers, but coming home for Christmas; Harold Norman and Sarah Ellen ("Nellie")—all decided Christians. Stanley George, sixteen, working with father at the store, and Flossie, still going to school, complete the list. We have very much to be thankful for, and we believe it is "better on before." I must close now, before this letter gets too long.

If convenient for you to write again, we shall be delighted to hear from you, and a message of love and good cheer to the brethren and sisters with whom we meet would be greatly appreciated.

With sincere love and good wishes from our boys and girls and from my dear wife and me, to you and yours, I remain,

Your affectionate brother in Christian bonds,
W. R. GLOVER.

Field Reports

Memphis, Tenn., February 25.—The congregation at McKellar Avenue is in fine shape. Everybody at peace and at work. Brother N. B. Hardeman will preach for us on the first Lord's day in March, morning and night. To reach our place of worship, take a Florida Street South Memphis car, get off at Mallory Branch post office, and go one block east.—E. L. Whitaker.

Braman, Okla., February 22.—I have started on my evangelistic work. I preached at Brown Union Schoolhouse last night. I will continue here two weeks. Then I go to another schoolhouse farther west, then back east seven miles to another schoolhouse. The congregation here at Braman is supporting this work. After this work, I will be ready to book work for the year. I hope to be kept busy.—W. T. Hines.

Beaumont, Texas, February 27.—Yesterday was a good day with us at South Park Church. We had splendid attendance and good interest at all services. I have been teaching a singing school for the church. Will close this week. I am to begin a meeting at Port Arthur, Texas, next Monday night, the Lord willing, in exchange with Brother C. D. Crouch. He will hold a meeting for us in the spring.—Will W. Slater.

Estevan, Saskatchewan, Canada, February 25.—The meetings continue here still. Prejudice is strong, but we fight faithfully with the only weapon. In spite of bitter opposition, people want to hear. The house is crowded night after night. Seven more were baptized last night, and many others are deeply concerned. I have been leaving here for the past two weeks, but I am not gone yet. It looks as if I must stay another week. Heaven rejoices.—H. A. Rogers.

Sedalia, Mo., February 28.—It was again my privilege to visit the great State of Texas on February 20. I attended the lecture week at Abilene Christian College. I understood that the following States were represented by visitors: Tennessee, Ohio, Missouri, Kansas, Oklahoma, New Mexico, Alabama, and Arkansas. Besides, there were many cities and towns within the State of Texas represented. I did not learn how many preachers were present, but there must have been from fifty to seventy-five. The people of Abilene are justly proud of the college and its work. For my life I cannot see how any unbiased person can attend a school of this sort and go away an unbeliever. I pray that more godly men and women will rally to their support.—S. W. Bell.

Pulaski, Tenn., March 1.—The church at this place starts into this year's work with favorable prospects of accomplishing much good for the Master's cause. This is my ninth year with this congregation. I rejoice to see that the Lord has blessed our efforts. Our growth has at no time been rapid or sensational, but steady all the while. We are more at peace among ourselves and in love with each other and the Lord's work in general than ever before. Brother N. B. Hardeman held our meeting last year and has promised to be with us again next August. Those who have not heard him do not realize what a treat is in store for all who may attend the Nashville meeting, which we pray may be the greatest ever held in that city. With such men as N. B. Hardeman and C. M. Pullias to take the lead, and the coöperation that they are sure to receive, untold good should be accomplished.—J. T. Clark.

Greatest Foes.

Every household should have its life guards. The need of them is especially great when diseases, the greatest foes of life, find allies in the very elements, as colds, influenza, catarrh, the grip, and pneumonia do in this stormy month.

The best way to guard against these diseases is to strengthen the system with Hood's Sarsaparilla—one of the greatest of all life guards. It removes the conditions in which these diseases make their most successful attack, gives vigor and tone to the vital organs and functions, and imparts a genial warmth to the blood.

Remember, the weaker the system, the greater the exposure to disease. Hood's Sarsaparilla makes the system strong.

If the liver is torpid or the bowels are sluggish, causing biliousness or constipation, Hood's Pills will be found of great service. They are especially made to be taken with Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Los Angeles (Cal.) Notes.

BY W. EDGAR MILLER.

The work at the Central church of Christ, 1720 South Flower Street, Los Angeles, goes forward with a steady growth. Seven new names were added on the second Lord's day in February, all being true, loyal members of the body of Christ, who expressed their desire to work with us in our efforts to build up the cause of the Master in this great city of nearly seven hundred thousand people. This brings our membership to one hundred and nineteen, if I mistake not, and the congregation is only six weeks old. When it is remembered that there are now two congregations, with possibly a membership of two hundred and twenty-five or two hundred and fifty, in this place, one is almost constrained to say: "And what are they among so many?" Can they not—may they not—be the leaven that will leaven the whole lump? If Christians would only get it into their heads that it is work that God wants of them, the cause of Christ would make more rapid progress. Look around to-day and see the zeal and energy that is being manifested by the teachers of error. They are working like beavers, talking, preaching, teaching, lecturing, distributing literature, etc., while the church of Christ, which is the pillar and ground of the truth, sits around and watches them do it, and wonders how they manage to get up so much energy and enthusiasm for such an erroneous cause. Moses said to the children of Israel: "Stand still, and see the salvation of the Lord." But God said to Moses: "Wherefore criest thou unto me? speak unto the children of Israel, that they go forward." And that is the command that the church of Christ to-day needs to hear and obey.

In connection with this and as an example of what we all need to be doing, just turn to the last page of the Gospel Advocate of February 9 and read William P. Walker's report from Dinuba, Cal. In one month he has visited about fifteen hundred homes and distributed about five thousand tracts. And he says they are getting results. Of course they are! That kind of work will get results anywhere. And the kind of work Brother Walker is doing, every child of God can do if he will.

Brother Samuel E. Witty has been laboring with us since the inception of this work, and in this short time we have learned to love him. He has labored with the church at Ontario, Cal., for the past seven years, and has accomplished much good there. As a personal worker, Brother Witty has few equals. In the short time he has been here he has, aided by Brother Lee, located a number of Christians who have been here for from a few months to several years, and for one reason or another have never identified themselves with the church, and has persuaded them to come out and take their stand with us. This kind of work is a strong factor in the building up of a church.

Much good is being done in our Wednesday-evening services. Subjects are chosen, outlines and Scripture references prepared, and speakers chosen from among the young men and given a week in which to arrange their readings and prepare their comments. It is good to see the interest that all take in this work, for every one who is asked to take part does so gladly. Much credit is due to Brethren Lee and Phillips for the efficient way they are handling this work.

Cast Thy Burden Upon the Lord.

The little sharp vexations
And the briers that catch and fret,
Why not take all to the Helper
Who has never failed us yet?
Tell Him about the heartache,
And tell him the longings, too;
Tell Him the baffled purpose,
When we scarce know what to do.
Then, leaving all our weakness
With One divinely strong,
Forget that we bore the burden,
And carry away the song.
—Phillips Brooks.

One little thing well done is better than many great things but begun.—

Obituaries

Hoffman.

Brother Jesse E. Hoffman has passed to his last, long sleep. Asleep in Jesus. O how sweet! This sweet assurance will comfort his lonely wife and the host of friends he has left to mourn. We mourn his death, but not as those who have no hope; for Christ has said: "I go to prepare a place for you; that where I am, there ye may be also," and we are trusting the promise; and if we are faithful, we shall meet Brother Hoffman on Heaven's bright shore, where tears and good-byes are forever o'er. Funeral services were conducted by Brother S. P. Tipton, of Estancia, N. M., and Brother J. W. Pine, of Albuquerque, N. M. Brother Hoffman was buried on January 14, in Fairview Cemetery at Albuquerque. X.

Brooks.

Thomas B. Brooks was born on Snow Creek, Maury County, Tenn., on July 3, 1835. He remembered his Creator in the days of early manhood and clung to the faith until death. He was three times married and the father of ten children, of whom nine are living and wearing the name of Christ. Intemperance and shiftlessness were not a part of his long, useful, and happy life, but with his jovial and alert disposition he met life's duties as they came. As life's day was waning for him, he wished to die as he had lived. God listened kindly to his yearning, and at 12:30 A.M., December 11, 1921, with seeming ease, his undying soul shook off its clothing of clay and winged its way into the changeless realm of eternity. Brother Will Morton spoke words of comfort and exhortation to the bereaved ones and an immense throng of sympathetic listeners, and his body was laid to rest near Isom. Josie K. Kirk.

Brady.

On Tuesday, February 7, 1922, Brother Theodore Eugene Brady was taken from his Christian home, having suffered several weeks from the loss of his right hand, which was torn off while operating a corn crusher. This injury caused other afflictions which resulted in his death. He was born on August 26, 1864. He was baptized by Brother E. C. L. Denton in August, 1879. On December 27, 1893, he was married to Miss Ella Jane Gates, to whom was born seven children—three boys and four girls. These and their mother are left to mourn his departure. Brother Brady was a prominent farmer, and lived three miles north of Fulton, Ky. He was a useful citizen and a leading member of the church of Christ at Enon. I have known him in his home, on the farm, and at church; and he was noble in life, true in heart, and loyal to duty. We sorrow with this family in such a loss. Brother E. C. L. Denton and I conducted the funeral services, after which the body was buried in the Enon Cemetery. ALONZO WILLIAMS.

Wright.

On February 7, 1922, the death angel visited the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Wright and took from them their beloved son, Raymond. He was born on April 11, 1905. He obeyed the gospel on September 14, 1921, being baptized by Brother A. D. Dies. Since that time he had regularly attended the church of Christ at Center Chapel, and seemed to take great interest in the cause of his Savior. Raymond endured nine days of intense suffering with pneumonia, then peacefully fell asleep in Jesus. He is gone, but not forgotten. His stay on earth was short, and his smiles and kind words are missed so much by his friends and relatives. He was an obedient boy, and was loved by all who knew him. Funeral services were conducted by Brother S. P. Pittman at the residence on Central Pike, in the presence of a large number of sorrowing friends who had gathered to pay their last respects to his memory. His body was laid to rest in the Wright Cemetery, near the home. ONE WHO LOVED HIM.

Dotson.

On Monday, January 9, 1922, at 7:40 P.M., my brother, Hubert Newton Dotson, passed away at the Protestant Hospital, Nashville, Tenn., after he had been operated upon for gallstones on Friday before. Brother Hubert suffered unspeakable agony from this affliction of the body, but he bore the pain bravely, emulating the example of his Savior on the cross. While Hubert had been a member of the one body of which Christ is the Head only eight days, having been buried with his Lord by baptism by Brother Olmstead on the first Lord's day in January, just four days before he was stricken so violently, yet we are taught by one of the Savior's parables that he who comes into the vineyard to labor at a late hour has all the promises of eternal life. Hubert's life of thirty-two years was blameless, spotless, and above reproach. A more dutiful son, a more devoted brother, never lived. He is survived by his father, mother, one sister, and six brothers. T. JEFFERSON DOTSON.

Farris.

Near Alma, Ark., on January 23, 1922, the spirit of Brother James A. Farris took its departure from earth and returned to God who gave it. Brother Farris had lived a long and useful life, worthy of imitation by all those that knew him. He was born, in Missouri, April 4, 1839. He married Miss Hahala Couch, who died in 1882, leaving him with six children to mourn her death. In 1885 he was married to Miss Minnie Warfield, and to them were born four children. He leaves a wife and ten children to sorrow over the loss of a kind and loving husband and father. Brother Farris had been a member of the church of Christ for nearly forty years. He was an honest man, a faithful Christian, a ripe wheat ready to be gathered into the garner of God. The esteem in which he was held was evidenced by the large concourse of neighbors and friends that gathered to attend his funeral. He was laid away by tender hands in a near-by cemetery, where his first wife and other relatives rest with him till the Master comes to call his own. J. T. JONES.

Smith.

George Fred Smith was born on March 17, 1920, and died on January 14, 1922. His stay here was too short for him to endure much of earth's sorrows and woes. As the writer sees it, his mission on earth was to cause the hearts of loved ones to be drawn nearer to God. Jesus says: "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth, where moth and rust doth corrupt, and where thieves break through and steal: but lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through nor steal." Clarence and Ary Smith now have two little treasures laid up in heaven—Mattie Louise, a little more than one month old, and Fred. On Saturday afternoon little Fred left his mamma's room to play with his brother and sisters. After a while they came in without him. Inquiries were made and a search was begun, and his lifeless body was found in the milk house, face down, in the water. The pastor of the Methodist Church at Edwards' Grove, after the regular appointment, spoke words of comfort to the bereaved family and a large number of sympathizing neighbors and friends, after which the remains were placed in the Morton Cemetery, near Reed's Store, in Williamson County. S. G. WALKER.

The Denton (Texas) Trouble Settled.

Some of our readers know that there has been trouble for months in the church in Denton, Texas, and all these will rejoice to know that all troubles there have been settled. This settlement was made possible because all parties to the trouble were willing to do right. Brother G. C. Brewer, two congregations in Fort Worth, and the church in Cleburne, perhaps, should be complimented for what they did in bringing about this settlement. The following letter given to Brother Smith will show the conditions of the agreement as fully as they need to be set forth:

Denton, Texas, February 13, 1922.—To Any Church of Christ.—Greeting: The bearer hereof, Brother R. D. Smith, has been preaching in Denton for thirty-two months. During this time we have differed, and perhaps all have done wrong. But we have confessed our faults to each other and to God, and we agree with the elders of the other churches that have assisted us in bringing ourselves to see our errors that the good of the cause that we love so dearly demands that we not work together any longer, and we are all giving up our places because of the mistakes that have been made. Brother R. D. Smith leaves with our commendation and prayers. There are no charges pending against him, all our troubles having been settled.

Four Things to Learn.

Four things a man must learn to do.
If he would make his record true:
To think, without confusion, blearily;
To love his fellow men sincerely;
To act from honest motives purely;
To trust in God and heaven securely.

Tribute to Mrs. Emily E. Young.

BY S. P. FITTMAN.

"A worthy woman who can find?
for her price is far above rubles."
(Prov. 31: 10.) "Grace is deceitful, and beauty is vain; but a woman that feareth Jehovah, she shall be praised."
(Verse 30.)

These texts were used in the funeral services held at the meetinghouse of the church of Christ, Hendersonville, Tenn., on January 6, 1922, over the remains of Sister Young, who died the morning before in Nashville, Tenn., in the seventy-ninth year of her age. Before her marriage to W. S. Young, who passed on before her many years ago, she was Miss Emily Elizabeth Bettis. Of the children born to this union, several preceded her to the grave. The following, however, survive her: Dr. C. C. and M. N. Young, both of Nashville; W. D. and Ira K. Young, both of Pueblo, Col.; Mrs. Mollie Webb and Mrs. L. F. McFarland, both of Lebanon, Tenn.; and Mrs. L. C. Hunter, of Hendersonville, Tenn.

In the early days of their married life, Brother and Sister Young, in their struggle for the acquirement of truth, learned the way of righteousness and began to walk therein. Practically the whole family have followed their example.

In the passing of Sister Young, the world loses one more woman of the old type, when it seems there are none to spare. The writer of Proverbs describes the ideal worthy woman. She has the full confidence of all. "The heart of her husband trusteth in her." "Her children rise up and call her blessed," for "she looketh well to the ways of her household, and eateth not the bread of idleness." She is recognized as a benefactress, for "she stretcheth out her hand to the poor." She has learned the lesson of sympathy and forbearance, for "the law of kindness is on her tongue." "She openeth her mouth with wisdom." She is not officious and boastful, for "her works praise her in the gates." How well this description portrayed the life of Sister Young, her family and intimate associates could testify.

Although Sister Young had as many good homes on earth as she had children, yet she was ready to exchange these earthly homes for a heavenly home, whose glory fades not and whose beauties cease not to attract, and where, as Paul says, she can "be at home with the Lord." (2 Cor. 5: 8.)

The sting of death is mitigated by the thought that such a woman as Sister Young leaves an impress upon her children, upon the community in which she has lived, and upon her many friends and admirers, that may help in combating the undesirable standards of modern womanhood. Truly Sister Young still lives in our memories, in our hearts, and in our lives.

Quiet Talks on Timely Topics

Faith in Affliction.

When we are weakest, then our faith is strongest; for, seeing the frailty of all our powers, we depend entirely and rest the more securely upon the Power that never fails. When we are made to realize that all our earthly hopes are vain and transient, how strong is our faith in Him who abides forever, and how sweet is the hope "which entereth into that within the veil!" As the little child carelessly holds its father's hand and leisurely looks at things along the way till they meet some object it fears, and then huddles close to him and tightly grasps him with both little hands, so the Christian, though he is led by the Savior every hour, clings closer to him when crossing a dark valley; and how sweet it is to feel him tighten his grasp and to hear the assuring words: "I Jehovah thy God will hold thy right hand, saying unto thee, Fear not; I will help thee." (Isa. 41: 13.) "I will in no wise fail thee, neither will I in any wise forsake thee!" (Heb. 13: 5.) For, to extend the figure, as the earthly father grows tenderer toward and more mindful of his child when tremulous and fearful, so our Heavenly Father bends near his little ones in their trials and distresses to comfort and strengthen them. The God of Israel is just as near and as tender to his children to-day as he was to his people long ago, and we know that "in all their affliction he was afflicted, and the angel of his presence saved them: in his love and in his pity he redeemed them; and he bare them, and carried them all the days of old." (Isa. 63: 9.)

Reverence.

What a beautiful thing in any character is reverence! No other one element in the make-up of the character can add poise and dignity like reverence. And nothing so betokens a lack of culture or of the finer feelings or gives such evidence of inability for sincere and deep thinking as irreverence. There can be no such thing as worship without reverence. Webster defines the word thus: "Profound respect and esteem mingled with fear and affection, as for a holy being or place; the disposition to revere; veneration." The same authority defines "worship" in these words: "To adore; to pay divine honors to; to reverence with supreme respect and veneration." Persons who do not experience feelings or emotions of respect, reverence, adoration, and veneration stirring and surging in their souls during the singing, the praying, and the partaking of the Lord's Supper, do not worship. Worship itself is a soul sense; a feeling, a function of the spirit: an inner joy that finds expression in song, in prayer, and in other acts of obedience to the Being that is worshiped. But the real worship takes place in the heart and is not dependent upon externals nor limited to any hour or any place. Neither is it confined to any specific act or acts. It may be expressed by kneeling, or by falling upon the face, or by bowing the head and smiting the bosom. While we may thus express our reverence and adoration for God, there are other acts of worship that are commanded and must be performed; but these acts were commanded because they both beget and express feelings of reverence and worship, and without the feelings the acts would become mere mockery. "But a time is coming—nay, has already come—when the true worshipers will worship the Father with true spiritual worship; for indeed the Father desires such worshipers. God is Spirit; and those who worship him must bring him true spiritual worship." (John 4: 23, 24, Weymouth's Translation.)

The Sin of Irreverence.

The lack of reverence among the religious people of to-day is appalling. No doubt every pious reader of this paragraph has often been grieved by the irreverence of our worshipping assemblies. Many times he has seen the song leader announce the hymn number two or three times, trying to get the attention of the worshipers (?) whose acts of worship (?) then consisted in noisy conversation and foolish talking, and then begin and sing half the first stanza before quiet would prevail. Even then some good but garrulous sister would face about and begin to ask right and left for the number. This is shameful! If we are not naturally reverential, we should cultivate such a disposition. Indeed, we should pray for grace to serve God "with reverence and awe." (Heb. 12: 28.)

The lack of reverence is especially noticeable at baptismal services when these services are held out of doors. No doubt every preacher who has done much work in the rural districts has been annoyed and chagrined by the conduct on such occasions. Men crowding and pushing to get near the water's edge; boys throwing sticks into the water, causing dogs to swim in and get them; women talking, dogs barking, boys shouting to each other and to the dogs—this is what he has seen many times. Such behavior is not very becoming when people have gathered to obey God, whether the actual service has begun or not. The assembling is in God's name and his presence is there. Who would dare come into the presence of the Ruler of the universe with gayety and frivolity? Such conduct is not only irreverent, but it is disrespectful and blasphemous. All religious services should be solemn, serious, and reverential. They should be impressive for their solemnity. All who witness should be made to feel like praying, not like laughing.

Preachers, warn the people against the sin of irreverence. Parents, teach your children reverence. Let us all "have grace whereby we may serve God with reverence and awe; for our God is a consuming fire."

A Cause of Backsliding.

One very fruitful cause of the indifference, worldliness, and backsliding among church members to-day is irreverence—a failure to worship God in sincerity. It is impossible to live physically without food, and it is no less impossible to live spiritually without spiritual food. God knew this, and for the good of his children appointed a regular time and appropriate acts of worship for them. No Christian can neglect to worship God in this appointed way and remain a Christian. This worship should not be looked upon as a duty, but as a sweet and sacred privilege. It was intended as a means of grace to help the child of God in his fight against the flesh and the world. In true worship the Christian's soul is, in the singing, stirred and borne away to God by the melody and meaning of the

Shall We Rise Above the Low-Level Class?

The scholarly author of Young's Bible Concordance suggests that John 10: 10 be translated as follows: "I came that they may have life, and may have it above the common." There are some who make such a poor effort at living the Christian life that the best that can be said of them is that they are not above the average or common run of professing Christians. Others there are who live the Christian life on such a high plane and get so much pleasure out of it that we might appropriately call them "uncommon Christians" to distinguish them from the low-level class. Paul, we remember, distinguished between those who were able to eat meat and those who still required milk.

The influence of a church is equal to the influence of its average membership. A low-level church will never produce anything but a low-level influence. If, indeed, it is our heart's desire that our congregation shall be, as we often pray, like "a city set on a hill," we must work to make every member in it an uncommon Christian.

Who, then, is an uncommon Christian? I cannot in one brief article paint for you a full-length, life-size portrait, but I shall try and outline some of the main features.

1. The uncommon Christian is one who makes God's word his only and constant rule of faith and practice. There are many who say they do this and who would be shocked to think they do not, but who are far from living their lives out on any such plan. They may read the word occasionally, but they do it perfunctorily or for argumentative purposes. They do not study the Bible from a personal standpoint in order to correct their lives wherein they are wrong or to develop them wherein they are right. I am sorry to write that some of the most un-Christlike men I know are men who take pride in their Bible scholarship and vaunt their keen logical powers. Logic-clipping is not love. The ability to rout a religious opponent does not necessarily imply sincerity and piety. I would rather be in the company of a man who knows little, if his heart is warm and forgiving, than to sit with a reputed scholar whose very manner breathes arrogance and egotism. We should study the word of God, not to make a show of knowledge, but that we may keep our souls under the power of its principles and teachings.

In such a case it is not theory but practice which counts. We may hold the theory that all of God's words are spiritual life and preach it from the housetops; but if we do not, by prayer, faith, and practice, make them spirit and life, they will never become such to us, and we will inevitably fall below the scriptural standard.

David lived under the Old Covenant, but he had the spirit of a model New Testament Christian. In the One Hundred and Nineteenth Psalm there are no less than twenty-four references to the importance of keeping God's word inviolable, and the keynote of this keeping is found in these words: "That I might not sin against thee."

2. The uncommon Christian is one who gives Jesus Christ the rightful place in his heart. The apostle Peter in his teaching and preaching indicates that Jesus Christ may occupy two possible relationships to a Christian mind. Speaking before the Sanhedrin, he said to the Jews: "The God of our fathers raised up Jesus, whom ye slew, hanging him to a tree. Him did God exalt with his right hand to be a Prince and a Savior, to give repentance to Israel, and remission of sins." In his letters we find such expressions as "the eternal kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ," and "through the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ," and "the commandment of the Lord and Savior through your apostles." The two relationships are suggested by the words "Lord" and "Savior." A man may know Christ as his Savior and yet not know him as his Lord. It is this fact that gives point and emphasis to the same apostle's exhortation: "Sanctify in your hearts Christ as Lord." If we do not make him our Lord, then we need not expect him to be our Savior. It will never suffice to say: "Jesus Christ is my Savior, but I am my own manager."

Now, there are many who have not thus exalted Christ. Hence, instead of their lives being Christ-managed, they are self-managed. The result is disastrous. For any such life must, in the nature of the case, sink lower and lower until there is no difference between the so-called Christian's life and that of the worldling who makes no pretension. "Make Christ King" or quit claiming him as your Savior.

3. The uncommon Christian is one who gives his life irrevocably to God for the salvation of souls. A friend of Wilberforce once said to him: "I fear you are so interested in the liberation of slaves that you are neglecting the interests of your own soul." To which Wilberforce replied: "I had quite forgotten that I had one." This was noble self-forgetfulness, reminding us of the Master's words: "He that findeth his life shall lose it; and he that loseth his life for my sake shall find it." John taught that "we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren." Paul was an uncommon Christian in this respect, for he said: "I will most gladly spend and be spent for your souls."

I would not leave the inference that the uncommon Christian necessarily becomes a pulpiteer. The early disciples were uncommon Christians; for, when scattered abroad, they "went everywhere preaching the word." The church at Thessalonica was an uncommon church, for Paul said of them: "From you hath sounded forth the word of the Lord, not only in Macedonia and Achaia, but in every place your faith to God-ward is gone forth." In short and in fine, they are uncommon Christians who realize that they are kings and priests unto God and who fulfill their service in God's appointed way in sacred devotedness of mind and heart.

Earthly station makes no difference in God's estimate of service. I know a man who has made a preëminent success in the business world, but he devotes much of his time and money to having the gospel preached in destitute fields. He is not only an uncommon business man, but, best of all, he is an uncommon Christian. On the other hand, I know a poor washerwoman who at last report was taking care of a half dozen orphan children out of her hard-earned savings. She may be, indeed, a common laborer, but she is a most uncommon Christian. Her crown will be as bright as that of the most successful Christian who ever lived.

4. The uncommon Christian is the one who never overlooks nor forgets his heavenly heritage. It is the one who says with Paul: "Our citizenship is in heaven; whence also we wait for a Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ." It is the one who puts into practice the teaching of Col. 3: 1: "If then ye were raised together with Christ, seek the things that are above, where Christ is, seated on the right hand of God." It is the one upon whom the things of earth do not get such a hold as to shut out the Savior's promise: "In my Father's house are many mansions; if it were not so, I would have told you; for I go to prepare a place for you." It is the one who walks humbly with his God, yet with eyes lifted and gaze fixed upon the inheritance "that fadeth not away." Busy as he may be, occupied intensely as he must be as a faithful steward of God, he yet waits and longs for that hour to come when he may hear the voice that is like many waters and see the face that is like the sun shining in his strength. And so, looking and longing and working all the time, he is made increasingly like the One whom he loves and serves.

With this brief picture of the uncommon Christian before us, let me ask: "Shall we rise above the low-level class?"

How Are Sinners Saved?

BY S. E. TEMPLETON.

Sinners are not saved from alien sins by any of the following ways:

1. The New Testament does not teach that people are saved from alien sins by prayer, or at "the altar of prayer," separate and apart from obedience to the commands of the gospel. Proof: "Now we know that God heareth not sinners; but if any man be a worshiper of God, and doeth his will, him he heareth." (John 9: 31.) The man who made this statement had just been healed of blindness by Jesus, who was then living in the flesh. The New Testament had not been written then. How did this man know that God did not hear sinners? Answer: "The face of the Lord is against them that do evil, to cut off the remembrance of them from the earth." (Ps. 34: 16.) Again: "The Lord is far from the wicked; but he heareth the prayer of the righteous." (Prov. 15: 29.) Saul "was three days without sight, and neither did eat nor drink," and the Lord said: "Behold, he prayeth." (Acts 9: 9, 11.) But Saul's prayer apart from obedience did not save him, for we read in the same connection (Acts 9: 6-18) that Saul obeyed as Ananias taught him to. (See, also, Acts 22: 10-16.)

2. There is not one example of an apostle or evangelist of New Testament times praying for an alien sinner in order that his sins might be forgiven. They did not teach sinners to pray for the forgiveness of their sins before they obeyed the commands of the gospel. They never told one unsaved soul, "Let us pray for you;" or, "Come to the altar of prayer, that we may pray for you." Such an example cannot be found. Therefore, sinners are not saved by the prayers of other people, separate and apart from obedience on the part of the sinners. Dear sinner, no one's prayer will save you. You must obey the teachings of the apostles and evangelists of New Testament times, as people did when these men lived on the earth.

3. Sinners are not saved from alien sins by "faith only"—that is, no one is ever saved by just simply believing, without obeying the commands of the gospel. Proof: "Thou believest that there is one God; thou doest well; the devils also believe, and tremble." (James 2: 19.) "Ye see then how that by works a man is justified, and not by faith only." (Verse 24.) Some people think that the following words teach that sinners are saved by "faith only": "For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." (John 3: 16.) "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life." (Verse 36.) Let us see how one New Testament evangelist applied these words of Jesus. "But when they believed Philip preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized, both men and women." (Acts 8: 12.) One more example in this connection, showing how Paul, the apostle, understood that the words of Jesus as noted should be applied. "And Crispus, the chief ruler of the synagogue, believed on the Lord with all his house; and many of the Corinthians hearing believed, and were baptized." (Acts 18: 8.) These two examples are enough to show that the apostles and evangelists of New Testament times knew that the words of Jesus just noted did not mean that people are saved by "faith only" from their alien sins.

Sinners are saved from their alien sins according to the following:

1. Jesus Christ gave to his apostles the law by which they should be governed in their work after he went to his Father, after his death and resurrection. This law they could not change. You will find this law in Matt. 28: 19, 20; Mark 16: 15, 16; Luke 24: 46, 47. Read it. Now let us see how the apostles and evangelists of those days taught the people that they might be saved. There are several examples we should notice to be sure that we see how sinners were saved then and how they can now be saved. If we will just take the simple way they did then, we will by no means make a mistake. Then note the following examples:

(a) "Therefore let all the house of Israel know assuredly, that God hath made that same Jesus, whom ye have crucified, both Lord and Christ. Now when they heard this, they were pricked in their heart, and said unto Peter and to the rest of the apostles, Men and brethren, what shall we do? Then Peter said unto them, Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." (Acts 2: 36-38.) Now, how did the people act under such instruction? Answer: "Then they that gladly received his word were baptized: and the same day there were added unto them about three thousand souls." (Verse 41.) What did the Lord do after these people had been "baptized . . . for the remission of sins?" Answer: "And the Lord added to the church daily such as should be saved." (Verse 47.)

(b) "Then Philip opened his mouth, and began at the same scripture, and preached unto him Jesus." (Acts 8: 35.) What happened after this man had heard Jesus preached? What did Philip preach in preaching Jesus? Answer: "And as they went on their way, they came unto a certain water: and the eunuch said, See, here is water; what doth hinder me to be baptized? And Philip said, If thou believest with all thine heart, thou mayest. And he answered and said, I believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God. And he commanded the chariot to stand still: and they went down both into the water, both Philip and the eunuch; and he baptized him. And when they were come up out of the water, the Spirit of the Lord caught away Philip, that the eunuch saw him no more: and he went on his way rejoicing." (Acts 8: 36-39.)

(c) "Sirs, what must I do to be saved?" (Acts 16: 30.) Here we have a man wanting to know what to do to be saved. What follows his question? Answer: "And they said, Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved, and thy house." (Verse 31.) What did these men do that this man might believe on the Lord? What did he do after he believed on the Lord? Answer: "And they spake unto him the word of the Lord, and to all that were in his house. And he took them the same hour of the night, and washed their stripes; and was baptized, he and all his, straightway." (Verses 32, 33.)

2. From these three examples we notice that people should be "baptized . . . for the remission of sins;" that a preacher cannot "preach Jesus" without preaching baptism; and that when people have the word of the Lord spoken unto them, and they believe, they are "baptized."

3. Note the following: "In whom we have redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of sins, according to the riches of his grace." (Eph. 1: 7.) How do people get into Christ, where his blood is, that redemption and the forgiveness of sins may be obtained? Answer: "For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ." (Gal. 3: 27.)

Now, in conclusion, let us note the two following truths:

1. The people who were saved in New Testament times were "baptized" as was the apostle Paul; and, according to his instruction and the example in Acts 8, that "baptism" is "immersion." Read it: "Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death." (Rom. 6: 4.) Again: "Buried with him in baptism, wherein also ye are risen with him through the faith of the operation of God, who hath raised him from the dead." (Col. 2: 12.) In Acts 8 we see that Philip and the eunuch "went down both into the water, both Philip and the eunuch; and he baptized him." Therefore, people who are saved to-day are not only "baptized . . . for the remission of sins" (Acts 2: 38), but they "are buried with him by baptism" (Rom. 6: 4).

2. The man who preaches "any other gospel" besides the gospel we have just been reading has the curse of God resting upon him. Please read it: "But though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed. As we said before, so say I now again. If any man preach any other gospel unto you than that ye have received, let him be accursed." (Gal. 1: 8, 9.) God's word here says that "any man" will have the curse of God upon him who preaches a false doctrine. That being true, what else can people who obey a false doctrine expect, except the curse of God upon them? May God, through the Christ, by means of this truth we have just studied, open the eyes of you, my fellow traveler to the great judgment of God.

BY FLOYD S. LEE.

The work at the Central church of Christ, of this city, located in the Flower Auditorium, 1720 South Flower Street, continues to grow, and everything moves along nicely. Brother Homer Bartlett, of Huntington Beach, preached two most excellent sermons for us on February 26, and left a desire with us that he visit us again.

Brother Samuel E. Witty, our evangelist, was called to Illinois about three weeks ago on account of the serious illness of his mother, but we are hoping to have him back with us next Sunday (March 5). He is a great help to the work, and we need more such men.

I am delighted with the reports of the work being done by Brother Walker at Dinuba. I agree with him that if preachers will go to work with the zeal and determination that the greatness of the cause of Christ demands, and with the hearty cooperation of all the members, results can be obtained in California just as well as in the Eastern States. God speed the day when more Walkers and Wittys shall be in this State doing their best for the cause of Christ.

We are delighted to report that Brother R. E. Wright, of Wartrace, Tenn., has agreed to come and join our forces. He wired us that he was leaving Nashville for Los Angeles on February 28. With a city of above seven hundred thousand souls in it, you can easily see we need him. He and Brother Witty will work together at the Central Church and at Ontario.

It is the duty of those of us now living in Los Angeles to give every unsaved soul in this city an opportunity to hear the gospel of Christ. This must be done now or never, so far as the souls now living are concerned. So we have no time to waste. We want to spend and be spent in accomplishing this one end. It means a sacrifice in money and time. But why should we not make it gladly? Christ gave all. Should we not be ashamed of the little we do?

One of the strangest things in the world to me is that men who claim to be Christians would try to hinder the spread of the gospel. But there are many who, if you do not consult them about every movement that is made, will do unreasonable and very unchristian things to hinder a good work. Should we not stand as did the Jerusalem church—"of one heart and soul?" The work is so great that it will take the best effort of all. Most certainly none of us can afford to hinder. We should weigh well the words of Paul: "Give diligence to present thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed." (2 Tim. 2: 15.) We make our mistakes, and all of us, at best, are more or less imperfect; but let us not be found hindering any effort to give the dying the gospel of salvation. We need so much to be filled with the spirit that ever governed

Paul. He had his enemies, but he rejoiced even when a soul learned the gospel through them. Said he: "Some indeed preach Christ even of envy and strife; and some also of good will: the one do it of love, knowing I am set for the defense of the gospel; but the other proclaim Christ of faction, not sincerely, thinking to raise up affliction for me in my bonds. What then? only that in every way, whether in pretense or in truth, Christ is proclaimed; and therein I rejoice, yea, and will rejoice." (Phil. 1: 15-18.) We should let his last words to the church at Corinth ever go with us: "Wherefore, my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labor is not vain in the Lord." Christ teaches us to let our light shine before men, that they may see our good works and be constrained to glorify our Father in heaven. James tells us that the man who is to be blessed in his deeds is the man who "looketh into the perfect law, the law of liberty, and so continueth, being not a hearer that forgetteth, but a doer that worketh." And it is said that when Christ comes, he is to give to each man according as his work shall be. We have it in our power now to make his coming, not a thing to be dreaded, but a blessed hope that looks for a happy ending of our journey.

And before closing, it will help us to remember that James said: "If any man thinketh himself to be religious, while he bridleth not his tongue but deceiveth his heart, this man's religion is vain." (James 1: 26.) James also says of the tongue: "It is a restless evil, it is full of deadly poison. Therewith bless we the Lord and Father; and therewith curse we men; . . . out of the same mouth cometh forth blessing and cursing. My brethren, these things ought not so to be." (James 3: 8-10.) David wrote of some in the following words: "They have sharpened their tongue like a serpent; adders' poison is under their lips." And by noticing the context, you see James clearly had in mind some who claimed to be Christians who allowed their tongues to carry poison and cursing along with their claims to be God's children.

"Let every one that nameth the name of the Lord depart from unrighteousness." (2 Tim. 2: 19.) "Blessed are ye when men shall reproach you, and say all manner of evil against you falsely, for my sake. Rejoice, and be exceeding glad: for great is your reward in heaven; for so persecuted they the prophets that were before you."

A Call to the Thoughtful and Unprejudiced.

BY S. H. HALL.

With this, I am closing what I have to say for the present on some questions that have been asked under this heading. Thus far, I have received no word of serious criticism, but some very strong commendations.

Just a few more words about the local congregation and school work, that there be no misunderstanding and that what was said last week may be made perfectly clear, so far as I am able to see it.

If we, as a church, are not duty bound to accept the great commission and do our utmost to carry it out, I have been wrong all these years that I have been preaching, for I have so taught. I hardly think the churches of Christ in America will say the commission is not theirs to embrace and carry out. And if it be not true that whatsoever is essential to the obedience of a command is contained in the command whether expressed or not, I am wrong again, for this is exactly the way I have been taught and have also taught others. The great commission says: "Go teach all the nations," "Go preach to the whole creation." If we can do this without language, then show me how. If we can use the language without knowing it or using an interpreter, I want to know how. It is my understanding that this teaching can be done by word of mouth or on the printed page. If this is not so, then why? We are not restricted to any certain way of teaching; but whether in print or by word of mouth, the languages of all the nations on earth are comprehended in the commission and must be used, else the commission be only partially obeyed.

In a clipping sent to me by Sister Callie Davis, of Los Angeles, Cal., I note the following report: "To-day the Salvation Army tells the wondrous story in forty-nine languages." Now that sounds fine. It speaks volumes for the Salvation Army. Can that body of people who call themselves "the church of Christ" do this? You answer the question. I do not wish to try. To hear us talk, you would get the impression that the commission is ours and we must ever consider ourselves as its guardians, or better, as Paul expressed it, must stand in its "defense," "striving for the faith of the gospel" (Phil. 1: 7, 27.) I am quite confident that we have the gospel in our own native tongue. I think we have scholars enough to assure us of this, though the translations we have are not ours; they are translations given to us by those we think are radically wrong when it comes to giving the plan of salvation to the people as it is. But what about the other nations? How many translations have we produced? How many translations are we capable of passing upon that others have produced and assure ourselves that those nations are getting the pure word of God unadulterated?

Would it not be better for some to give these questions more thought instead of running an organization, seemingly, to fight to the death, if they only could, what little effort some of our teachers are making to teach the Bible in their schools and colleges? Our school-teachers have the right to let the Bible go with them in their school work. And while this is true, I can gladly and joyfully encourage the local church in doing all the school work necessary in her efforts to carry out the great commission. The apostles most certainly could speak in any language, hence needed not the help of schools. But we cannot meet the demands of the great commission without giving some of the work done in the schools and colleges some thought. The only question left to be settled is: Must this school and college work be recognized and embraced by the individual Christian, but the congregation as such dare not consider it? Must the individual Christian give thought to making translations of the Holy Scriptures, hence developing translators, but the local church as such dare not consider it? Must the church, I ask, be dependent on what individuals see fit to furnish her, or must she equip herself with translations to give to the individual? Which is the bigger, anyway—the church as an organization, or the individual that counts one in that organization?

May God help us to think on these things. I have presented matters as I see them. And seeing them as I do, I would be compelled to stir the local church in such places as Los Angeles, San Francisco, New York, to take the great commission and give it to each nation in their city, and to see to it that no doctrines and commandments of men are found in the translations they use. And since whatever is essential to the doing of a command is contained in it, they have the right to do anything necessary to equip themselves with correct translations and develop teachers to send to the different nations. If I am wrong, why so? Give me the scripture violated and not merely the statement, "None of our congregations are doing what you suggest." I presume there was a time, not a million years ago, when there was not one local church teaching baptism for the remission of sins; but it was in the Bible, nevertheless, and Campbell, Smith, Stone, and others saw it and began to teach it. It is not a question of what we are doing; it is a question of what we must do if we carry out the great commission.

Many men live their Christian lives as though they would need letters of credit when they get to heaven.—Exchange.

Nashville (Tenn.) Notes.

BY S. H. HALL.

Last night (March 7) we had another song drill at the Russell Street house of worship, and it was the best yet. It was estimated that we had above two thousand present. Brother R. V. Cawthon favored the meeting with a short talk. Brother W. E. Morgan, from Texas, was with us and led the meeting in prayer before the song practice began.

It is well for all who can attend to remember that the first service of this revival will be held on the night of March 28. Let us be there on time the first service, and, as far as possible, not miss one of the services. It is our aim at Russell Street to make this one of the best revivals this local congregation has ever had. Our personal workers will keep busy, and the friends we have out of Christ we shall strive to have at every service; hence, we hope when the Auditorium meeting ends to have more new names on our roll than has ever been placed there from any one revival in our own building. Let the other congregations do their best.

In a recent census of the city it was learned that above fifty thousand souls in this city have no church affiliation whatever. This gives us much to work on, to say nothing of those who may be in religious error due to the doctrines of men.

It seems that some have been praying as Paul directed in Col. 4: 2, 3—continuing "steadfastly in prayer, watching therein with thanksgiving; withal praying for us also, that God may open unto us a door for the word, to speak the mystery of Christ." One of the local papers agrees to give each sermon in full, and I presume the other will do likewise. Will not every child of God, even though you cannot attend, stay with us in your prayers to God, that his name may be glorified and souls saved? And another statement of Paul's we should all remember as we mix and mingle with the people and endeavor to lead them to Christ: "Walk in wisdom toward them that are without, redeeming the time. Let your speech be always with grace, seasoned with salt, that ye may know how ye ought to answer each one." (Col. 4: 5, 6.) Let us pray more, and we will talk better, and our talking will really help instead of offending the people and driving them from Christ. There is nothing greater than leading a soul to Christ.

If Christ is for this effort, you cannot afford not to be. It seems that every heart in Nashville has become one heart. We want the gospel in its power to be felt by every soul in this city. The Christians here are making one united effort to this end. Does Christ want it also? About his interest in the work there can be no doubt. Do not forget his words: "He that is not with me is against me; and he that gathereth not with me scattereth." (Matt. 12: 30.) If we put our hands in his and allow him to lead us, we will stir things. Listen to what was said of our Lord: "But they were the more urgent, saying, He stirreth up the people, teaching throughout all Judea, and beginning from Galilee even unto this place." (Luke 23: 5.)

Sarcasm is not the highest nor even the best form of argument. Laughing at a man generally makes him more obstinate and set in his way. Yet to expose the absurdity of a thing is perfectly legitimate; and ridicule is often a most effective weapon with which to puncture a wind-filled bladder. Did not Elijah use it to a good effect on the priests of Baal? From morning to noon, and from noon till evening, they yelled themselves hoarse, and savagely gashed themselves with knives and lancets; but all to no purpose. They uttered vain prayers to a deaf god. Long and loud their raucous cries; unmoved and uncaring the pitiless Baal. It was then that the bitter irony and the sarcastic mockery of Elijah must have cut deeper than knife or lancet. Yes, sarcasm has its place; but every modern wielder of it is not an Elijah.—Selected.

The Same Error.

BY EARNEST J. LOVE.

Over a hundred years ago in the United States the church of Christ began a strong fight against the very prevalent doctrine that one could tell by his feelings when he was saved. At that time the popular denominations all believed one's feelings to be positive evidence of his standing with God. If one was condemned, he was supposed to "feel" it right down inside of him some place, generally supposed to be in the region of the heart; also, if one became saved, he "felt" the change.

The Catholics had taught the people that they could only be saved through the rites and ceremonies of that institution. The Protestants claimed they could be saved by faith in Christ and obedience to his laws without the penance of the Catholic Church. The Catholics said: "You may go through with your ceremonies, but you are still not saved." The Protestants answered: "But we know we are saved, because God makes it known to us that we are accepted with him, and we can 'feel' that all is well." Afterwards some of them decided that it was the Holy Spirit entering into their hearts and they could just "feel" their burden of sins roll away.

The "mourners' bench" system of "getting religion," "shouting," "the jerks," "trances," and later this "sanctification" or "second blessing," as well as the "tongue movement," all grew out of the theory that God by the Holy Spirit, or in some other miraculous way, conveyed to each individual positive evidence that he was saved.

The church of Christ boldly challenged this position, and fought it persistently, until it has well-nigh disappeared. That is, the "mourners' bench" and "shouting" and such like are scarcely ever seen or heard in the big denominations of to-day. It was an error, and we are glad to see it pass; but it is not an unmixed joy, for this error has merely given way to a worse one. At one time a penitent was required to have an "experience" before being admitted to membership in these churches. If he could not tell an "experience," he was required to pray at the "bench" till he "felt" something.

Our position that penitents should be admitted to baptism upon a profession of their faith in Christ was assailed and many times held up for their ridicule. It was claimed that we made things too easy for the sinner. But we successfully maintained our position by referring to the "three thousand" (Acts 2), the Ethiopian eunuch (Acts 8), the Philippian jailer (Acts 16), etc. We were right, and we won the fight. But Satan is too resourceful to surrender even after he is defeated. He simply went to the other extreme, and now says we make it too hard for the sinner—that we require too much of him.

We have required nothing of the sinner but what is clearly taught in God's word—nothing more—nothing less. We can never change our position, because it is based upon the plain word of God. To change our teaching would be to abandon what God has plainly taught. But those who once ridiculed the idea of baptizing a sinner because he merely believed, repented, and confessed his Savior, but insisted upon what they called a "deep spiritual work of grace in the heart," are now reporting as saved every one who will merely hold up a hand, or come forward and shake hands with the preacher, or say "amen" to a prayer that the preacher will pray over him, or sign a card on a dotted line. There is no "mourners' bench," probably because there is no mourning; there is no "shouting," for they evidently have nothing to shout about. They no longer speak of "getting religion," but now they call it "hitting the trail" or "settling it."

However, they have never got away from the idea of getting their evidence of pardon direct from God. Recently the writer had opportunity to make some interesting observations. "On the banks of the Wabash far away" in the good old Hoosier State, I spent a day with a real, old-time, "dyed-in-the-wool" Hardshell Baptist—a relic of a former age. He kindly but firmly advocated the doctrine of that once powerful but now vanishing people. With him, however, the Bible had little weight. He depended almost altogether upon his "inner light," coming direct from God, to guide him. But he was uneducated. Certainly, by going to great educational centers, we would find that improvements have been made.

If we have thought so, we are doomed to disappointment. Right from this old gentleman I went to the Pacific Garden Mission in Chicago. Here they had a different order of procedure, but they proved to themselves that they were saved exactly as the Primitive Baptists do—by the "inner light," which no one sees but themselves. After visiting this place, I went to the great "Moody Bible Institute." Well, I had not been there long till I found that they had no other evidence of pardon, nor did they claim any other, but that same "inner light." God is supposed to speak to each one individually and tell him he is saved.

After this I went to the famous "University of Chicago," which represents the very highest learning of the day. For several days I attended their chapel services in the Haskell Assembly Hall, and heard their great teachers and visiting preachers. This is a Baptist institution, but it has long since got too big for the Baptists. It is thoroughly committed to the doctrine of higher criticism. They don't even pretend to believe the Bible. The three above referred to all claim to believe the Bible to be the word of God. This higher criticism would naturally be supposed to have some high source of information, something strong and convincing, from the conclusions of which there is no escape. But imagine my surprise when I heard those higher-critic teachers trying to clinch their arguments by referring to their "experience" and their "inner consciousness that God approved" of them.

So, in the final analysis, all false teaching, from that of the untutored Hardshell preacher to the professors in the highest institutions of learning, is based, not on the Bible, but upon a personal revelation (?) from God. Satan has presented many fronts without changing his position materially.

Finally, let me say this: There are only the two ways: believe the Bible and follow it, or hear from God directly in each case. Every soul wants assurance that he is accepted with God. If he is taught to distrust the Bible, he will seek direct revelation. This has been the fruitful source from which has sprung several hundred sects, some of them very far from the truth of the Scriptures. But if a man is to be believed when he gets up and says he is saved, because God has told him so, then every false religion, even higher criticism, can justify itself, and the Bible is made void and God is mocked and slandered.

In conclusion, there is nothing safe and reliable but the Bible on conversion or anything else in regard to religion; and if the church of Christ does not preach this great truth, it will never be preached. We are the only people that seem to see this basic principle, and the duty of persistently preaching it to others must rest entirely upon us. The world is dying for this truth. Let us be up and doing.

Is not God who made the sun to shine also willing and able to let his light and his presence so shine through me that I can walk all day with God nearer to me than anything in nature? Praise God, he can do it. Why, then, does he do it so seldom and in such feeble measure? There is but one answer: you do not permit it. You are so occupied and filled with other things—religious things, perhaps—that you do not give God time to make himself known, and to enter and take possession.—Murray.

Looking Back.

BY JAMES E. CHESSOR.

"No man, having put his hand to the plow, and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God." (Luke 9: 62.)

Readers that were bred on the farm will not mistake the Master's figure and meaning. The plowman must look straight ahead. I recall how an elder brother was accustomed to mark off for planting a certain twenty-acre rectangular field that lay north-south alongside the creek. Charley would first divide the ground into two equal parts by running a base furrow lengthwise through the field, and proceed to mark off successive parallel furrows until he had covered the field. Running this prime furrow through the field interested me. Charley would take a position at the south end. At the north end stood several tall walnut trees, and one of these was selected as his objective. Gripping his plow handles, his eye riveted on the walnut, with an occasional gentle word of direction to his horse, Charley would plow straight to his tree, neither deviating to the right nor to the left, never stopping for a moment to look back. He seemed to have the instinct of the bee in going unerringly to his objective. The farmer lad that stops mid-field to see how straight he has run his furrow, or how well he has done, can never become proficient as a plowman. Neither can a farmer do well at his job unless he plows diligently right on through the growing season. When the corn is growing, and likewise the weeds, there is no time for looking back—no time for pause. The man that looks back is not fit for the farm, much less for the kingdom of God.

This observation of Jesus about looking back was called out by the request of a would-be follower to be permitted to bid farewell to his family. "I will follow thee, Lord," he assures the Master; "but first suffer me to bid farewell to them that are at my house." I take this man to be a weak sentimentalist with whom the fleshly tie counted for more than the spiritual. With such the formality of leave-taking must not be denied, however imperative the call. It was a matter of loving kinspeople more than Christ, and consequent procrastination. But the teaching of Jesus is positive and unmistakable on this point: there can be no lingering to bid farewell; no remaining behind to bury the dead; no delay for any cause. The King's business requireth haste; it is urgent; it permits of no dillydallying. To the disciple who would first bury his father, then follow Jesus, the answer was: "Follow me; and let the dead bury their dead." According to Luke, Jesus also added: "But go thou and publish abroad the kingdom of God." How often Jesus said, "Follow me!" It is a tremendous responsibility; a duty that rises above every other claim, and permits of no subordination. Following Christ is first, and saying good-byes and burying the dead, and such like, are of less importance. The Christian must go forward, ever onward; he must not deviate a hairbreadth from the straight course. He must "look unto Jesus," and he must "press on toward the goal." The way of salvation permits of no vacillations. Once having set your face toward God and his promises, there is but one thing to do: without regrets or waverings, to go ahead, push ahead, plod ahead. You have everything to gain if you look ahead, everything to lose if you look back. Behind you only is darkness, despair, perdition; before you, only light, hope, salvation. No chance of losing if you press ahead; no chance of winning if you stand still or turn back. "Remember Lot's wife." And do not forget the call of Jesus: "Follow me."

But God, when he called you out of the world, did not burn the bridges behind you. Like the patriarchs, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, whose fame is of faith, if you are minded to go back to that country from whence you came out, you shall have opportunity to return. "And if indeed they had been mindful of that country from which they went out, they would have had opportunity to return."

They could have gone back to their old home in Ur of the Chaldees on the Persian Gulf, returned to their kindred and the gods of their ancestors; but, though strangers in a strange land, their unshaken trust in Jehovah kept them from looking back. It is said to their credit that they desired a "better country, that is, a heavenly"—a country better than Chaldea, even better than Canaan—the home "eternal in the heavens." Such unwavering faith, such hope, such perseverance! But if, like discouraged and disobedient Israel in the wilderness, you choose to turn back in your heart to the fleshpots of Egypt, no one shall prevent you. If you, as did they, despise the Lord's manna rained down from heaven, you may return to the garlic, onions, and leeks of Egypt; and if you chafe under the Lord's freedom, you may reënter the galling slavery of Pharaoh. God will not prevent you. Again, you may desert, go back, and walk no more with the Lord. If you are following him merely for the loaves and fishes, or if you find his sayings too hard for you. It happened, once, during the ministry of Jesus, that for the latter reason "many of his disciples went back, and walked no more with him." Indeed, they all left him, save the twelve only, and a feeling of pronounced discouragement seems to have crept over his spirit because of these wholesale desertions. Turning to the twelve, he asked in tenderest solicitude: "Will ye also go away?" Peter answered, and his words ring true: "Lord, to whom shall we go? thou hast the words of eternal life." Turn back you may, but to whom shall you go? What will be the consequence? What will become of you?

Certainly you may go back; but in that case you are not fit for the kingdom of God. If you waver, if you look back, the Lord has said you lack fitness for his service. In other words, you do not possess the stamina of a good soldier; you are not brave enough to fight unflinchingly in the ranks of the Lord's army. But what do you hope to gain by looking back, by quitting the fight? When shall you be braver, stronger, more resolute? Can you add aught of fighting virtue to your character by irresolution and inaction? Why not stand in the ranks? Stand or die in the Lord's fray! Muster what courage you have, and pray for more, and the grace and help of the God of battles will not fail you. But you say you will drop out now and try it all over when conditions, both external and internal, are more favorable, when the odds are not so great. Do you really think you can get a better start later? Be not deceived. You will not be as fit for the kingdom of God next year as you are now. Your last state will have become worse than the first, for it is indeed better "not to have known the way of righteousness, than, after knowing it, to turn back from the holy commandment." No, you imperil your soul when you look back. There is such a thing as falling from grace.

If you look back, Jesus says you are not fit for the kingdom. Neither shall you enter therein—that is, into the heavenly. Only those who have finally persevered shall be saved. Those who bear palms are represented as having won victories; and those who wear the white robes are represented as having come out of great tribulation. You cannot wash your robes and make them white in the blood of the Lamb unless you come to the fountain filled with blood. You must fight if you would win the prize.

A colored man was asked, if he had a thousand sheep, would he give the Lord the tenth. He said of course he would. Then "If you had three hundred sheep, would you give the Lord one-tenth?" "Of course I would." "If you had two sheep, would you give the Lord one?" He said: "You get out of here; I have only two." We can give if we do not have money. People are dying for want of encouragement, love, sympathy, and many things we may give them.—Selected.

Tennessee Orphan Home.

BY JOHN W. FRY.

Thinking the readers of the Gospel Advocate would be interested in knowing how brothers and sisters keep in touch with each other when placed in family homes, I am inclosing copies of correspondence between them.

Frances Cato, a twin sister of Charles Cato, is in a good, Christian home in Huntsville, Ala., and Charlie is still in the Tennessee Orphan Home. They are five years old, but keep in touch with each other, as you will see from Frances' letter to Charlie.

The three Deckard boys. The youngest is still in the Orphan Home, the other two in family homes—one at Hollow Rock, Tenn., and the other in Giles County. Milton sent the letter he received from Richard to be read to Howard. These three little boys have experienced three tragedies in their young lives. An older brother was accidentally killed in their presence, which unbalanced the mind of the mother, who suicided in their presence, and their father dropped dead.

Most of the children in the Orphan Home have pathetic histories.

LETTER FROM FRANCES CATO TO HER BROTHER, CHARLES CATO.

Huntsville, Ala., Wednesday, P.M.—Master Charles Cato, Columbia, Tenn.—Dear Little Brother Charles: So glad to hear from you yesterday, and I think it is so sweet in dear Sister Cathey to write such a sweet letter to me from you. Mother doesn't aim to ever let me forget my little brother. She talks of you often to me, and Daddy says he is going to surprise you soon with a nice little package of something that you will enjoy. I have been a real good little girl to-day. Mother hasn't had to scold me once, but I am a little naughty sometimes. But mother tells me better, and then I ask God to forgive me, and I believe he does; and, little brother, I ask God to bless you in my prayers every night. I go to Sunday school with mother every Sunday. I have missed only once since I have been here, and then mother was sick and could not go. She is my Sunday-school teacher, and learns me a verse from the Bible to memorize every Sunday. All the little children do this at our church. I had to say a speech at the Christmas tree on Christmas Eve night. Everybody was talking about me looking so sweet and saying my verse so well. Mother and I are going to visit her mother, who lives in Texas, in April; but any time you are going to be in Decatur, she will bring me down there; so just let me know, because I would be so glad to see you. I have never had any pictures made yet.

Mother and Daddy both send love to you, and all the others at the Home. Give my love to all of them.

Little Sister, FRANCES.

LETTER FROM MILTON DECKARD TO HIS BROTHER, HOWARD DECKARD.

Master Howard Deckard, Tennessee Orphan Home, Columbia, Tenn.—Dear Howard and Mrs. Cathey: How are you all? I certainly did enjoy your little letter. I had a letter from Richard also, and I will send it to you. I am glad Richard has such a good home. Mrs. Cathey certainly is nice to write your letter for you. Spring will soon be here. I hope Mrs. Cathey will soon let you come to see me. Mr. E. C. Fowler will bring you 'most any time when he is coming. No, I haven't a big dog. Have been trying to get me one. Yes, I can ride a big horse and a pony, too. Two little boys came this evening, and their names are "Billy" and "Ralph." How is Mrs. Lipscomb and all the other matrons? I would like to see them all. I wrote a letter to Richard and am expecting a letter from him this week. Well, we are having a cat fight out in the yard, and I want to see it; so I will stop.

With lots of love,

MILTON.

FROM RICHARD DECKARD TO HIS BROTHER MILTON.

Hollow Rock, Tenn.—Master Milton Deckard, Pulaski, Tenn., Route 3.—Dear Milton: I was glad to get a letter from you and to hear that you are well. I am well, and I am doing fine, going to school every day. I live close to the schoolhouse. I have been going to school ever since I have been in my new home. My school is out to-day, and my teacher treated us to apples. I am going to start to school Monday to town, to a high school. I am in the second grade. I have got a good home. I am living with a man that owns three hundred acres of land. They have got no children at home of their own. They have another little boy from the same Home I came from (the Tennessee Orphan Home, at Columbia). His name is Louis Gambling. I live close to Hollow Rock Junction. They are planning for a big city.

This is the first letter I ever tried to write to you. I hope the next letter I write you I can do better. I will quit for this time. From your brother, RICHARD DECKARD.

Field Notes.

BY EARNEST C. LOVE.

March 6 finds me back in Martin, Tenn. I did not do much last week in the line of my work, as I attended the debate between Brother John C. Taylor, of Obion, Tenn., and A. A. Jones, Missionary Baptist, of Fulton, Ky. The questions discussed were the establishment of the church, the design of baptism, and the possibility of apostasy. Brother F. L. Paisley, of Martin, was moderator for Brother Taylor. These are both bright, zealous, and consecrated young men. It did me good to see these young men so ably defending God's truth. The debate was held in the Baptist meetinghouse, where they outnumbered us ten to one, but this did not hinder Brother Taylor from boldly declaring the whole counsel of God.

On the whole, the debate passed off nicely. I feel sure friends for the truth were made. This was the second of three debates Brother Taylor signed for with the same man. Brother Paisley is to meet the same man at some future time and place yet to be agreed upon. Even while this debate was going on, another was in progress, not far away, between Brother R. L. Colley and a young Baptist preacher whose name I did not learn. Brother L. R. Wilson was moderator for Brother Colley. All these boys are from the Freed-Hardeman College, and I predict that great things will be done by them. This is a Baptist stronghold. The Baptist Flag is published at Fulton, Ky., and the Hall-Moody Institute, a Baptist Bible school, is located at Martin, Tenn., only twelve miles away. So that is why there are so many debates in this section. I venture this prophecy: that if this debating is kept up and the brethren back up our boys properly, there will come a time when there will be fewer Baptists in these parts than at present. The truth gains something in every encounter. Somebody hears it that never heard it before. This always weakens the other side.

No one could help but notice a great difference between the speakers in this last debate. Brother Taylor quoted hundreds of verses of scripture, and explained everything his opponent quoted and showed it to be in harmony with his (Taylor's) position. The other man showed a very superficial knowledge of the Bible, if it can be called "knowledge" at all. He was also ignorant of the common branches of education; but he knows Baptist doctrine perfectly.

Brother Taylor has been challenged to meet Jesse Neal, another Baptist debater. That is to come off later, at the same place, as I understand it. Taylor and Jones will have their third debate at McConnell, between Martin and Fulton, beginning on March 28, without some providential hindrance.

I hope all who can will attend these debates and encourage these young men. May God bless them in their battles for the "one faith."

Sunday morning, March 5, I was at Dresden, Tenn. This is the county seat of Weakley County. We have some faithful brethren there, who meet regularly, but they have no house of their own. Brother A. B. Lipscomb is to begin a meeting there on the first Sunday in June.

Leaving Dresden on Sunday evening, I arrived in Martin in time to hear a part of Brother Paisley's sermon. On March 7 and 8 I want to attend a debate between R. H. Pigue, Methodist, and J. R. Clark, Baptist, which is to take place three miles from Martin. This is one debate where I think I can be absolutely impartial.

Getting Things Mixed. No. 1.

BY W. H. CARTER.

There has fallen into my hands a copy of the Baptist Flag of February 5, 1920, in which is a report of a debate between D. H. Knight, Christian, and — Sloan, Baptist. The debate was held at Williams Cross Roads, three miles north of Lafayette, Tenn. My health was such that I could not attend, so could not undertake to report what was said by either party. I am only aiming to notice some things Massey says in his report.

"The general church question was discussed," he says, and that "Brother Sloan represented the Baptists and D. H. Knight the Campbellites." He asserts that Sloan was "master of the situation" and "led out with some of the most logical arguments we ever heard, and Knight utterly failed to answer even one of them." Well, while I did not hear the debate, I think I know Dave Knight, and I am persuaded that Massey is well acquainted with his ability as a debater; for, since the Rocky Mound debate, he has absolutely refused to meet him any more in debate. But those who have heard Massey in debate and read this report will remember of hearing those things before. But Massey may say he never heard his own argument. But we notice some of them.

"Brother Sloan showed that the God of heaven was to set up a kingdom, and it was to stand forever, and that it was to be set up in the mountains, . . . that it was a Missionary Baptist church when it was completed, that it was set up during the personal ministry of Christ, that the commission was given to it and that the Lord's Supper was given to it, and that it was baptized with the Holy Ghost on the day of Pentecost."

What is there in the above that is so new and strong to Massey? Not the "mountain" part, for Sloan and I sat as moderators and heard him on that in the debate with Beasley at Pleasant Shade. Note that he said it was "a Missionary Baptist church," for Massey claimed that at Pleasant Shade. Note that "it was set up during the personal ministry of Christ," for Massey heard Malone affirm that in debate with me at Rocky Mound years before the Sloan-Knight debate.

But one thing that, possibly, makes this appear so strong to Massey is, Baptist preachers have taken three separate and distinct positions as to the setting up of the kingdom in public debate here in this county. First, W. H. Smith affirmed both at Antioch (now Galen) and at Willette, in debate with me, that the kingdom, or church of Jesus Christ, was established in the days of John the Baptist. Second, A. Malone affirmed in the Rocky Mound debate with me that the kingdom was set up during the personal ministry of Christ, and located the time and place when Jesus instituted the Supper. Now Massey and Sloan put it during the personal ministry of Christ, "in a mountain," but did not tell what mountain. So we note that they are jumping from place to place, and, it may be, they will hit it right some day, if they keep on jumping.

But speaking of its being "baptized with the Holy Ghost on the day of Pentecost," he left out part of the record, for it says they "began to speak with tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance." Now, if that was a Baptist church, it was not like the Baptist church that Massey and Sloan are trying to defend. He says of that one, "that it was baptized with the Holy Ghost on the day of Pentecost," but they claim that the sinner is baptized with the Holy Ghost now before they are in the church.

Then he says: "It was necessarily a Missionary Baptist church, as John was a Baptist, Christ was a Baptist, the apostles being the first set in the church were baptized by John, therefore, Baptists, taught as Baptists, baptized as Baptists, rejoiced and practiced in every way like Baptists do to-day."

Well, well, "it was necessarily a Missionary Baptist church, as John was a Baptist." That is "strong logic," isn't it? If it should happen that John was not "a Baptist," then it would not be "a Baptist church," would it? Who says "John was a Baptist?" Why, Massey and Sloan. Well, does that make it true? What does God say about it? Does he say he was "a Baptist?" He does not. What does God say? He says: "In those days came John the Baptist, preaching in the wilderness of Judea." God says he was the Baptist, not a Baptist. Do you see the difference between "the" and "a?" "The" is definite; "a" is indefinite. John was the only one called "Baptist." Christ was never called "a Baptist," neither was any one of the apostles nor any one else called "a Baptist." This is only an assertion by these men, and shows the weak and unscriptural foundation upon which many good people are resting their hope.

He says they practiced "in every way like Baptists do to-day." Where do we read of their calling sinners to a mourners' bench? Where do we read of their encouraging old women to go from place to place and shout and pray and talk publicly in the church? Where do we read of their asking applicants for baptism if they "believed that God, for Christ's sake, had pardoned their sins?" Where do we read of their meeting once a year, once in six months, or once in three months, to eat the Lord's Supper? We get these "logical arguments" from such men as Massey and Sloan, and not from the New Testament.

He says: "He also showed that Baptists in that day baptized for the remission of sins, and not in order to, as the Campbellites teach; that they baptized believers and not sinners, as Campbellites do," etc.

Now, Mr. Massey and Mr. Sloan both know that the people whom they wickedly and blasphemously call "Campbellites" teach that no one is a fit subject for baptism but those who believe with all the heart that Jesus the Christ is the Son of God and have truly repented of their sins. Such misrepresentation as that is not logic, not argument, but shows a weak effort at hiding facts and truths. They teach baptism for the remission of sins, as they did in that day. Let's see. The Pentecostians asked: "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" Peter's answer was: "Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." Were those people sinners? If Massey says they were believers, then we have the first example under the commission showing that they became believers before they were told to repent. Will he say they were not believers? Then he has what he calls "a Baptist church," baptized with the Holy Ghost, teaching sinners to be baptized for the remission of sins, as he charges those whom he falsely calls "Campbellites" with doing, without faith.

But that is not all. He claims John as "a Baptist" preacher. Of him the divine record says: "John did baptize in the wilderness, and preach the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins." (Mark 1: 4.) "And he came into all the country about Jordan, preaching the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins." (Luke 3: 3.) Were these people sinners? He called the Pharisees and Sadducees who came to his baptism a "generation of vipers." Were they sinners? But Massey says this church taught baptism for the remission of sins, but "not in order to, as the Campbellites teach." He could have added, "and not as Missionary Baptists teach to-day." Who has ever heard Massey or Sloan or any of their kind tell inquirers to "repent, and be baptized for the remission of sins?" Do they not ignore the office, force, and meaning of "for," and give it a meaning it never has in such sentences? Who ever heard one of them tell a mourner, a seeker, or any one else, to "arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord," as Ananias told

Beginning March 28, 1922, the churches of Christ in Nashville will engage in a meeting to be held in the Tabernacle of this city, the preaching to be done by N. B. Hardeman and the song service to be led by C. M. Pullias, of Murfreesboro, Tennessee. The meeting will continue for twenty days. The sermons will be printed and bound in a book of 320 pages. Hardeman's ability as a gospel preacher is a sufficient guarantee as to the character of the sermons. The book will appear about May 1, 1922. The price of the book is $1.50 a copy. You should send in your order at once, so the brethren will know how many to print. Mail your order to-day, so as to be sure to get a copy.

Saul? Surely, if he was "a Baptist," he was not of the Massey-Sloan brand; for they would have said, "Pray on, brother, a little more faith," and called for a song that appeals to the flesh, and when they could deceive him into the belief that he was pardoned they would baptize him "for," "because of," remission, if the church voted to receive him when baptized.

A False Notion.

We have little patience with these devil prodigies who descend into all kinds of villainy and reform and then spend the rest of their life telling the story of their shame. They speak of the most outrageous crimes with a zest that has the appearance of boasting. When a man has been saved from a vile life, we would think he would be too much ashamed of his past to want to rehearse it. When he does rehearse it, we are of the opinion that the young should be sent home. We have a false notion that, when we tell a story of a vile adventure and then end it with a moral, the boy will straightway loathe the evil and love righteousness. It is very much more likely that he will want to try the adventure and practice the moral when the fun is over, like the man who rehearses the tale. That man is a living example to him of how one can go to the devil and come back, and the boy will crave the whole experience.—Selected.

Query Department

Mrs. Worthington, of Crockett, Texas, wishes to know whether thanks should be given once or twice at the Lord's table. She asks this question: "Is it right to give thanks for both bread and wine and then pass them to members, or take them separate? Please give the true teaching of the word on this matter."

The record is very clear on this. It is wise to follow Christ's example. "And as they were eating, Jesus took bread, and blessed, and brake it; and he gave to the disciples, and said, Take, eat; this is my body. And he took a cup, and gave thanks, and gave to them, saying, Drink ye all of it." (Matt. 26: 26, 27.) "And as they were eating, he took bread, and when he had blessed, he brake it, and gave to them, and said, Take ye: this is my body. And he took a cup, and when he had given thanks, he gave to them; and they all drank of it." (Mark 14: 22, 23.) "And when he had given thanks, he brake it, and said, This is my body, which is for you: this do in remembrance of me. In like manner also the cup, after supper, saying, This cup is the new covenant in my blood: this do, as often as ye drink it, in remembrance of me." (1 Cor. 11: 24, 25.) Where Matthew and Mark give "blessed," the Spirit through Paul gives "thanks." Christ could bless the bread; we can give thanks for it. Many ask a "blessing" instead of giving "thanks." If we follow the record, we will give "thanks" for the bread and partake of it, and then we will give "thanks" for the cup and partake of the fruit of the vine. It is dangerous to depart from the Bible.

J. H. Daniel, Little Lot, Tenn., is interested in the different baptisms. Here are his questions: "(1) Matt. 3: 10-12, the fire baptism which John said Christ would baptize with, has it already been, or is it yet to be? (2) Does he mean one baptism when he said 'with the Holy Ghost and with fire,' or are they independent one of the other? (3) On the day of Pentecost there sat upon each of them 'cloven tongues like as of fire.' Did John the Baptist have reference to this when he spoke of the fire baptism? (4) What kind of fire and baptism did Christ have reference to in Luke 12: 49, 50?"

1. "And even now the ax lieth at the root of the trees: every tree therefore that bringeth not forth good fruit is hewn down, and cast into the fire. I indeed baptize you in water unto repentance: but he that cometh after me is mightier than I, whose shoes I am not worthy to bear: he shall baptize you in the Holy Spirit and in fire." (Matt. 3: 10, 11.) He means he would baptize some of them with the Holy Spirit, the others with fire. There were two classes—one to be baptized in the Holy Spirit and gathered into the garner of God, and the other to be burned with unquenchable fire through all eternity. Verse 12 fully explains this: "And he will gather his wheat into the garner, but the chaff he will burn up with unquenchable fire."

2. He means two baptisms. The apostles on Pentecost and the household of Cornelius were baptized in the Holy Spirit. All the wicked will be baptized in unquenchable fire.

3. No, John the Baptist did not refer to the baptism of the Spirit on the day of Pentecost when he spoke of the baptism of fire. The tongues that appeared unto the apostles on Pentecost were not fire, but "like as of fire."

4. The passages in Luke 12: 49, 50 read: "I came to cast fire upon the earth; and what do I desire, if it is already kindled? But I have a baptism to be baptized with; and how am I straitened till it be accomplished!" Christ was to be baptized with the baptism of suffering on the cross. His reign on the earth would be one of conflict and persecution. His people would pass through fiery trials.

Sister W. W. Reagor writes from Nobob, Ky.: "I desire, for the sake of information, an explanation of John 3: 5. A preacher in an argument said that Jesus used the natural birth to illustrate the spiritual, and that 'born of water' refers to the natural birth."

I can see very well why that preacher said "born of water" means the natural birth, because he was in an argument and perhaps could not think of any other way to get around baptism. But why did the Savior say, "Except a man be born of water," if he meant the natural birth? Why did he not say what he meant? The Bible speaks of the natural birth often, but never calls it a birth of water. It is referred to as a birth of the flesh. One is said to be born of his mother; another, born to his father; and frequently, just born; but no speaker or writer of the Bible ever referred to the natural birth as a birth of water. No correct writer or speaker of any age ever referred to the natural birth as a birth of water until the last few years a few ordinary men, when in an argument, have been forced to an interpretation of this language that is sustained by no scholar of the past or present. As evidence that "water" here refers to baptism, let me say that in the days of the apostles when inquirers came to them seeking admittance into the kingdom, they always told them to be baptized. On the day of Pentecost, when these believing Jews asked Peter and the other apostles, "What shall we do?" Peter said: "Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins." Surely no one would say that these were not "born again." Nicodemus asked, "How can a man be born when he is old?"—"born again—and it was in answer to that question that Jesus said: "Except one be born of water and the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." A man is not born of his mother; a child is, but a man never. Why did Jesus say, "Except one be born of water," if "born of water" means the natural birth? All men have been born of their mothers, and there is no exception to it. There is no man that lives in the flesh who has not been born of water, if it means what this certain preacher claims when he is in an argument.

A sister in Christ makes this request: "Please explain as clearly as possible your idea of what the first seven verses of the thirteenth chapter of Romans mean."

"Let every soul be in subjection to the higher powers: for there is no power but of God; and the powers that be are ordained of God." This means that the political powers are ordained of God in the sense that God permits them. Every nation in one sense makes its own laws, and God approves them, or "ordains" them. Every Christian should be subject to these powers, to the laws of the land. It is the duty of the Christian to submit to the law and to the officers of the law. To resist an officer is to be in rebellion against God and puts the Christian where he will be condemned of him. "Rulers are not a terror to the good work, but to the evil." These are political rulers. These rulers are ministers of God. He permits them, and society would be unsafe without these rulers. They are ministers of God in the sense that it is his will that these human governments exist. A Christian should pay tribute, or pay his taxes, to the government under which he lives. At the time the Roman letter was written by Paul, Christians were being watched by the civil authorities, and any word or act that looked like treason to the Roman government would have met strong opposition at the hands of the authorities. This Roman letter could have fallen into the hands of the emperor himself, and he could have found no treason against his government in it. The world would be an unfit place for a Christian to live in, if there were no human laws to govern the ungodly. We should submit to the laws of our country and honor the officers, for in doing so we honor God and submit to the commands in Rom. 13: 1-7.

At Home and Abroad

Change of address: A. A. Bunner, from 1800 West Fifty-fourth Street to 7808 Hope Avenue, Cleveland, Ohio.

A. B. Lipscomb has accepted an invitation to deliver the commencement sermon for the consolidated high school at Scottsboro, Ala.

F. B. Srygley preached at Lawrence Avenue, this city, last Lord's day, morning and night. He reports large attendance at both services.

W. M. Oakley reports two good services at Reid Avenue, this city, last Lord's day. He will be at Montrose, Smith County, Tenn., next Lord's day.

A. J. Bachman writes from Hundred, W. Va., March 3: "The interest and attendance in the meetings here are fine. Eleven have been added to date."

A physician desires a location in which there is a Christian church in either Mississippi, Arkansas, or Tennessee. Address "Physician," care of the Gospel Advocate.

From A. G. Freed, Henderson, Tenn., March 10: "The Freed-Skinner discussion announced to begin at Benton, Ky., on March 21, has been postponed. The time will be announced later."

W. W. Reed, Vina, Ala., writes us to the effect that there has been no preaching there in over two years. He says: "If a preacher will come here, we will do what we can for him." He also says they meet every Lord's day for communion.

J. O. Golphenee recently held meetings at Sumatra and Buffalo, Mont. He reports good meetings at both places. The last communication informed us that he was down with the influenza. We hope he is better and that he will soon be back in the field.

S. M. Spears preached for the Twelfth Avenue congregation, this city, last Lord's day, morning and night. With J. D. Derryberry as song leader, this congregation will support Brother Spears in mission work in McEwen, Tenn., and vicinity, for the next three months.

From A. N. Kennedy, McKinney, Texas, March 9: "I have some time open for protracted meetings during the spring and summer, and will go anywhere I am called. I have been preaching the gospel for twelve years, and believe I am qualified to do the work. Address me at Box 286."

From J. S. Jones, Senath, Mo., March 10: "I expect to be in the northern part of Weakley County, Tenn., and the southern part of Graves County, Ky., in the month of June. I would be glad to hold one or two meetings while there. Any one desiring my services should write me as above."

A. N. Kennedy, McKinney, Texas, says: "Sometime ago I received the new Gospel Quarterlies, and I pronounce them a very great improvement over the old leaflet style. We are using them in our classes and like them fine. I am sure congregations will adopt them when they realize their true merits."

From W. L. Samuels, principal of the high school at Byhalia, Miss.: "The high school here desires to employ a Latin and English teacher for the session of 1922-23. Must be a graduate of a standard four-year college. A Christian lady with ability to teach and lead high-school boys and girls. Nine months' session, with salary of eighty-five dollars per month."

From R. P. Cuff, Macon, Ga., March 6: "A. G. Freed preached for the church in Macon last Sunday, morning and evening. We were delighted to have him stop with us as he passed from Florida back to Henderson, Tenn. It is indeed an inspiration for a man from Tennessee or some other place, who has been in touch with other people than ourselves, to bring us a message of cheer and of zeal for the truth of God."

From W. H. Carter, Lafayette, Tenn., March 6: "W. E. Morgan filled his appointment here last Saturday night and on yesterday and last night. Brother Morgan is able, logical, and plain, as well as strictly scriptural, in the discussion of his subjects. His audiences were good and attention excellent. While there have been no additions, the seed of the kingdom is being faithfully sown, and in due time we will reap if we faint not."

From F. L. Paisley, Martin, Tenn., March 11: "The work at Martin progresses nicely. I have used the recent announcement of F. B. Srygley's preaching at Lawrence Avenue and what was said of the small night audience and why 'Christians' stay at home (at least, away from church) on Sunday night. It has had its effect. Our attendance at night is increasing. Here's my hand for a great meeting in the Auditorium. To be sure, I shall want a book of the sermons."

Recently I spent two days in San Antonio, Texas, very pleasantly. The congregations there are preparing for much work for this year—tent work in different parts of the city. Brother Mullins has recently moved to that city and is laboring with the South Flores Street congregation. The three congregations, with Brethren Bills, Mullins, and Foy E. Wallace, Sr., laboring with them, are co-operating as they should in the work, and the preachers each have good things to say about each other and the different congregations in the city.

From A. A. Bunner, Cleveland, Ohio, March 11: "A better issue of the Gospel Advocate than this week's (March 9) issue, in my judgment, never came from the press of any religious paper. While I have begun to feel the infirmities of old age, the Advocate, like the inner man, seems to grow stronger as age creeps upon it. Why doesn't everybody take it? Everybody needs it. I have been busy for the last two weeks visiting lukewarm members and circulating papers and tracts among all classes. I am trying to work with old-time vim and energy."

R. H. Johnson, Morrilton, Ark., writes: "The brethren at England, Ark., want to build a house of worship. There are just a few members of the church of Christ at England, and they are poor in this world's goods, but they have a mind to work. These brethren have their lot paid for, with the restrictive clause in the deed, but they must have help in order to build. O. E. Billingsley, of Conway, Ark., one of our very best young preachers, held their meeting last year, and can tell you about the church at England. Send contributions to T. L. Helm, England, Ark."

From N. B. Hardeman, Henderson, Tenn., March 11: "I spent the first Sunday in March with McKellar Avenue Church, Memphis, Tenn. We had splendid audiences at both services, and the church has every appearance of being in a growing condition. E. L. Whitaker is located with them, and has the love and respect, not only of the congregation, but also of those on the outside. The church is planning for better conditions. Visitors are always welcome. Brother Norred and others from Harbert Avenue report fine interest. Memphis presents a good field for mission work."

From W. L. Johnson, Burkburnett, Texas: "The first of the present year D. S. Ligon, formerly of Denton, Texas, began regular work with the Burkburnett church. It has been several years since the church has supported a preacher for full time, and consequently the interest had dwindled to a comparatively low point; but, with the assistance of Brother Ligon's enthusiasm, zeal, and constant activities in trying to make things better, a big improvement has resulted in the brief space of time that he has been here. The interior of the church building has been remodeled so that it presents a very modern appearance, and the crowds have increased from about twenty-five persons to approximately two hundred on Sundays and Sunday nights. The church is much encouraged at this splendid showing."

From U. G. Wilkinson, Comanche, Okla., March 9: "I have sufficiently improved that I believe, with the coming of warm weather, I will be able to do some work. My nervous condition is greatly improved; my indigestion is better, though still not near well. I am still weak, though I have gained in strength. I am able to preach a sermon or lecture. Think I could safely arrange to do some work now, such as lecturing to the churches, teaching a Bible school, or holding a meeting, where too much exposure and exertion would not be required. So, if there are brethren who may desire my services, they can write me, and I will arrange to serve them to the best of my ability. I need the work that I may and can do, for I have been unable to do anything so long, and, having no income, I need the help of my brethren. I much prefer to do something, rather than ask their help for nothing. Brethren, please let me know at once if I can serve you. While not so strong physically, I think that I am otherwise at my best, and work that I can do will no doubt be an advantage to me in regaining my strength. I cannot find words to express my thanks to all who have assisted me in my times of affliction. Pray for me that I may be able to go forward in the work, and may the Lord abundantly bless all the faithful."

From C. D. Crouch, Port Arthur, Texas: "I have watched with interest all the announcements that have been made through the Gospel Advocate, as well as all the comments relative to the Auditorium meeting there. It is a matter of special interest to me because it has as its purpose the extension of the borders of the kingdom of Christ. I know N. B. Hardeman, and I know a number of other preachers, and it is my honest judgment that those brethren who have had charge of the plans have made a wise selection. Hardeman is as good as the best from any point of view. His sermons will be great to the ones who are privileged to hear them orally, and they will be no less great in print."

J. A. Taylor writes from Paragould, Ark., March 9: "I have just returned home from Illinois, where I spent six weeks. First, I went to Christopher, where I preached on Lord's-day morning and at night to large audiences. At the evening service three united with the one body from the Christian Church. I went from there to Liberty Church, near Thompsonville, where I taught a ten-nights' singing school. I then went to McLeansboro, where I preached for two weeks to attentive audiences, and a number came to us from the Christian Church. From there I went to Harco, where I taught a ten-nights' singing school. I conducted a meeting at this place in December. Fifteen persons were baptized, and twenty-eight started to keeping house for the Lord. They have secured the Miners' Hall to worship in, and are trying to worship the Lord as taught in his word. Any loyal brother passing that way will be gladly received. I have some time that I could give to holding meetings or singing schools. Address me at 701 South Fifth Street, Paragould, Ark."

From J. H. Lawson, Houston, Texas, March 7: "My work with the First Church continues to grow and prosper. Our audiences are fine and interest fine in all lines of work. Last Lord's day three identified themselves with the congregation, a man of mature years was baptized, and our offering was the best since I have been with the work. We are getting good from our men's training class and also from our vocal training class, and, with the increase in attendance in all the work, I feel that we are getting in position to do more and better work than we have ever done. I have recently received letters from Tennessee and other States asking about oil companies and oil promoters in this part. To these and all others I would say: Stay out of these oil schemes; and if you have any money that you do not need, use it in some other way. Do not be caught with these promises of big profits, for it is a very poor gamble at best. If you can spare a hundred or two dollars, send some good, faithful man to hold a meeting in some destitute field, and you will get a much better return on the investment than you will in any of these oil schemes."

William P. Walker, of Dinuba, Cal., in reporting some additions to the church at that place, makes the following comment: "When I see young men and young women in the prime of life accepting the Master, I feel like shouting—well, I rejoice with the angels of heaven. Brethren, may God help us to forget our petty differences that are now hindering the progress of primitive Christianity. Why should we waste our precious time arguing about Sunday schools, Bible schools, literature, rebaptism, individual cups, women's apparel, pastors, when to observe the Lord's Supper on the Lord's day, ad infinitum? Sometimes brethren ask me: 'Are you for the Gospel Advocate?' 'Are you for the Firm Foundation?' 'Are you for Brother Boll?' I say: 'No, I am for the gospel as it is in the Bible.' I like all the papers. I love all my brethren. Some one may say: 'Brother Walker, I am afraid you are a little inclined to be digressive.' I am not. I am just as strong in the faith of the Bible as any man in the brotherhood. Brethren, while we argue, quibble, and quarrel, thousands of precious souls go down into perdition; never to rise any more. For God's sake, stop this wrangling and go to work. Tell somebody about Christ and his wonderful saving power. Lead some one to Christ to-day. Get into the soul-winning business."

From William P. Walker, Dinuba, Cal.: "February 19 was a great day for the Dinuba church. There were two wonderful services, with the largest audiences in the history of the congregation. George Dickson, a devoted Christian worker, preached at the forenoon services, while I was at Madera in behalf of mission work in the San Joaquin Valley. At the evening service I preached to a large and interested audience. One young man confessed Christ and was baptized. We have had five additions this month—four baptisms and one restoration. The Bible-school enrollment also has made a marked gain. There were thirty in my Callopan class—a class of young men and women—on February 26. I recently stated that we were working for fifty in our class by March 1, and we will get them. I was asked by the one who orders our literature how many Advanced Quarterlies I wanted. I said, 'fifty'; but I think I shall order ten more copies, for I am sure they will be needed. When the quarterlies are properly used, they are a great aid to Bible study, but I fear too many of our Bible schools study the quarterlies more than the Bible. Brethren, look around in your community and see if there are any children not going to Bible school. Ask their parents to let them visit yours. D. L. Moody went to Chicago and built up one of the largest Sunday schools in the world. He was asked how he did it. I am told that he said: 'With work, prayer, and a few sticks of candy.' Brethren, let us work, pray, and, if necessary, buy a few sticks of candy."

T. E. Burch, Wewoka, Okla., writes: "To-day was a wonderful day for the little church at Wewoka. There were sixty in the classes for Bible study, with good lessons and something over twenty-five hundred chapters read during the week. K. C. Moser, one of our most efficient and able preachers, who lives here and with us one-half of the time, was with us to-day and delivered two able sermons. His subject for the morning hour was 'Spiritual Paralysis.' The lesson was very edifying to the church. At the evening service Brother Moser delivered one of the most able sermons it has ever been our privilege to hear from any man upon any subject. His subject was 'Eternal Punishment.' The subject was brought about by the 'pastor' of the First Christian Church having delivered a sermon a short time ago in which he took the Charles T. Russell position on the 'destruction' of the wicked. Many desired to hear the subject discussed by Brother Moser after hearing the Russell position. The subject was well advertised, and he delivered it in a very able manner to a houseful of anxious listeners. Brother Moser, while only a young man, is one among our most able preachers, and we are fortunate in having him and his noble family live and labor here with us. The cause in Wewoka is growing slowly, but surely. Largest crowd in attendance to-night we have ever had, except during protracted meetings. Several were present who had never been in our church house before. Horace W. Busby and Austin Taylor will begin a meeting for us on April 16. We are expecting a great meeting."

Matthew C. Cayce, Jackson, Miss., writes under date of March 10: "Our work in Jackson is getting along nicely, except a goodly number of our people are sick with the 'flu.' My plans now are to go to Nashville for a visit of ten days, enjoy the beginning of the great Hardeman-Pullias meeting to be held in the Auditorium, and leave there in time to begin a two-weeks' meeting in Columbus, Miss., on the first Sunday in April. Any one having friends there whom I might by a personal visit interest and invite to attend our meeting will kindly send me names and addresses. The best news I have had in a long time is that of the coming of T. C. Fox to this State to give his time in the great work of preaching the true gospel in Mississippi. Two Nashville congregations, prompted by the love for souls and possessing the spirit of Christ and yearning for the salvation of the lost, said: 'Go; we are with you with our money and prayers.' It is fine to note the awakening in missionary zeal by the churches. Why not more churches send more preachers until all shall have the gospel preached unto them and congregations be established where now there are none? Read Phil. 4: 15-17: 'And ye yourselves also know, ye Philippians, that in the beginning of the gospel, when I departed from Macedonia, no church had fellowship with me in the matter of giving and receiving but ye only; for even in Thessalonica ye sent once and again unto my need. Not that I seek for the gift; but I seek for the fruit that increaseth to your account.' Please also read 2 Cor. 9: 6-11. To give is to increase fruit to your account, is to lay up treasures in heaven. Can we love God and be selfish, enjoying salvation, while there are whole counties in which there are no New Testament churches, but all kinds of isms and sects abound? May God help us to realize and discharge our duty along this line. We need no human societies or organizations, but only faith and love, to do God's will. Send and be sent, work, watch, pray, give, preach, and live right. Brother Fox is now in Natchez, where he will put the work on a permanent, self-sustaining basis, and at the same time assist other destitute places as he can. There are many more places needing meetings than there are preachers, and I rejoice greatly that Brother Fox is here. There is plenty to do, and I hope we shall make every lick count. My address from March 20 to March 30 will be 2409 Twelfth Avenue, South, Nashville, Tenn.; from April 1 to April 17, Columbus, Miss., Box 103. Mail addressed to me at 352 East Fortification Street, Jackson, Miss., will be forwarded to me when I am away."

If you wish us to stop your paper, write us to that effect; but do not ask it unless you have paid all arrears, if there are any. Do not ask your postmaster to attend to it for you, but do it yourself.

The date on your tab shows the time to which your subscription is paid. When money is received, the date will be changed, which will answer for a receipt. Two weeks' time must ordinarily occur from the time your remittance is sent before the tab on your paper is changed; if no changed by that time, notify us at once.

Subscribers, after paying for their papers, will favor us by noting whether the date on the address label is changed, and, if it is not changed within a month, by writing to us. We are careful, but mistakes may occur or letters may be lost. Things About Which God Has Not Legislated.

BY F. W. SMITH.

A broad distinction should be made between the legislative acts of divine revelation and those things which are purely and simply incidental and about which God has not legislated. The following query is regarding a matter about which God has not legislated:

Dear Brother Smith: If you were to find that the question of "individual communion cups" was about to divide a congregation, some for and some against their use, would it be right to submit the question to the congregation and let the majority rule? Suppose both factions claim grounds for offense, supported by Matt. 18: 6; 1 Cor. 8: 9-13; and like passages?

X.

Regarding the question of the Lord's Supper, certain things are matters of divine legislation. (1) The nature of the institution. It is a memorial feast. (1 Cor. 11: 24.) (2) It must be observed as such, and not as a common meal. (1 Cor. 11: 29.) (3) The elements must be unleavened bread and the fruit of the vine. (4) The day is the first day of the week. (Acts 20: 7.) (5) Communicants, baptized believers. Now, as to where—that is, in what place, whether in a house, grove, or cave of the earth—God has said nothing. Neither has he specified any particular hour on the Lord's day for its observance, nor has he said one word as to how many plates or whether there shall be any plates at all to be used on the table, nor, in fact, as to whether we shall have a table at all. The plates and table are of our own devising, and equally so is the number of cups that shall be used. It is seldom that a congregation meets to partake of the Supper without from two to four cups on the table. I have been holding meetings from one end of this country to the other for thirty years, and it has even in the rural districts been seldom that I have ever seen less than two cups on the table. Now, in all reason, cannot the most ordinary mind see that the same authority for two or four cups will permit forty or four hundred? If not, why not? With this fact staring us in the face, then, in Heaven's name, why should any one enact a law of his own, demanding one, two, or four cups, and bind it on God's children where he has left them free? If God had legislated as to the number of cups, then we would have to conform to his law; but since he has not so legislated, he who makes a law here and seeks to bind it on God's children is attempting a very dangerous thing. Of course, in all such matters as the one under consideration, where God has not said we shall or shall not, we should use forbearance and maintain the Christian spirit toward those who do not understand this fundamental principle.

The scriptures here cited by the querist do not, in my judgment, apply to the case in hand. These objectors evidently think some law of God is being violated in the adoption of the individual cups, while the characters referred to in the passages cited did not know, nor did they claim, that what was being done was contrary to divine law. They did not have knowledge, while these objectors claim they have; but before they interpose their objections they should not only be willing but anxious to produce the divine law forbidding the use of individual cups. To simply fall back on the passages cited does not fairly meet the issue, and they should present something more to the point.

I would not advise the settling of the matter by a majority or any other kind of a vote, for the reason that the service can be acceptably attended to with one cup. But I do advise those brethren and sisters who are objecting to the individual cups to think seriously about the course they are pursuing, and, if they cannot find divine warrant for their action in this matter, not to cause division over it. We are so wedded to customs that the slightest change causes us alarm. I spent one winter with the Bathurst Street Church, in Toronto, Canada. Their custom is to ask people who wish to confess Christ to signify it by standing, and I have gone out into the audience to take confessions. If such a thing were proposed in this country, some people would think it a violation of the Scriptures, and yet it violates not a single principle of New Testament teaching.

Hardeman-Pullias Meeting.

Never before, since the gospel was first preached in its primitive purity in Nashville, have the members of the churches of Christ manifested such a truly wonderful spirit of perfect harmony and zealous coöperation. Not only are thirty-five congregations in Nashville and vicinity praying and working for the success of the meeting, but expressions of encouragement are being received from all points wherever the good news has gone.

Through an unselfish desire to help finance the meeting, the McQuiddy Printing Company has agreed to publish a book of Brother Hardeman's sermons at so small a cost that there will remain a margin of profit at the very reasonable price of $1.50 per copy.

Hundreds of subscriptions have already been received, and every week brings an increasing number of orders. Remember, when you buy a book, you are not only contributing a small amount toward financing the meeting, but you are preserving for your children's children a book worthy a welcome place in every home. This 320-page book will contain a photograph of Brother Hardeman and Brother Pullias, and will present in attractive form the simple, sacred, saving story of Jesus Christ our Lord. Send in your order to-day for as many copies as you may require.

Get Out of Doors.

Get out of doors! 'Tis there you'll find
The better things of heart and mind,
Get out beneath some stretch of sky
And watch the white clouds drifting by,
And all the petty thoughts will fade
Before the wonders God has made.

Go wade a trout stream in the spring
And brother with the birds a-wing;
Know what it means to wander far,
Your guide the sun or evening star.
Who sleeps beneath the open sky
Soon grows too big to tell a lie.

Get out of doors! The fields are clean,
The woods will teach you nothing mean.
Who toils beneath the summer sun
Sleeps soundest when his work is done.
If splendid manhood you would know,
Get out where you've a chance to grow.

Read deeply kindly Nature's books,
Familiarize yourself with brooks
And with the majesty of trees,
The constant industry of bees.
And all that shapes the Master's plan—
They'll teach you how to be a man. —Selected.

Isabel's Box.

"I have come to hold you up. Stand and deliver!"

Isabel, at her desk, gave an exclamation of pleasure.

"Who but you would drop in on such a dismal afternoon! Pull off that raincoat and sit down this minute. I'll have Annie make us some chocolate for old times' sake, and maybe she has some little cakes."

"How do you know I didn't come for chocolate and little cakes?" Barbara demanded.

"Because you've just told me that you've come for half my wardrobe."

Barbara laughed, but the laugh changed to a pretty earnestness as she clasped her hands about her knees in her old, little-girl way.

"I want heaps of things—any warm clothes you have," she said. "Give me your old sweater—shoes—anything."

"Barbara, I don't see how you do it," Isabel said, slowly.

"Do what?" Barbara asked.

"Keep yourself—down in those grimy places all the time."

Barbara fairly rocked the hands about her knees now. "O, but you don't understand! If you only, only did understand, Isabel! They're exactly like other people. The girls down there love the same things, want the same things, dream the same things that people do on Van Vleet Avenue. They do, I tell you!"

"Books? Music?" Isabel suggested, lightly.

Barbara's eyes flashed. "You haven't any idea how they love them. You can't love them so up here, where they're commonplaces. You should hear Mary Silver tell about the one good concert she ever heard—see her grow red and pale with excitement over the memory of it! And Rebecca Lovinsky! I never knew what starving for books meant till I knew her. She looks at a magazine stand the way some people look at jewels."

"We throw ours away. You could have them every month."

Barbara held out her arms with a swift gesture. "You don't know how I need them. O Isabel, if you'd only give them all to me—all! O, can't you put them aside for me, dear?"

"Of course I will!" Isabel agreed. "What are you begging so hard for? I'll get you some this minute, you grasping soul!" She ran out of the room, and returned with an armful of magazines. "And I'll send you a box of clothes and stuff in a few days," she promised. "Now are you satisfied?"

"O, if you would!" Barbara cried again. Isabel did not notice the wistfulness of it.

She really meant to send the box. She answered Barbara's telephone messages with repentant promises. But by and by Barbara gave up telephoning. And then the winter set in, and Isabel was busy with a whirl of activities, and Barbara with a very different whirl. It was spring when they met by chance.

"You look tired," Isabel declared.

"It was a hard winter with my people," Barbara answered, soberly.

"By the way—don't you want some of my old things? Or some magazines?" Isabel asked. "I'll send you a box next week."

Barbara sighed.—Selected.

Clearing the Way.

It was the crowded avenue of a great city. A large limousine passed quickly by. "Gee, I wisht I wah him!" remarked a street urchin, as he noted the result of wealth in its luxuriant environment.

I happened to know the history of the man who drew this remark. I knew that he had once been very poor. He had worked for any wage at any job. He always sought to do the best that he knew how. He liked to finish things—in the right style. Those were the days when he cleared the way.

Honor and glory always seek out the fit. But it takes the sweeping away of many things to bring us to solid ground.

The clearing-away process is tedious, back-bending, and quite thankless. But it is not only necessary, but essential. Continents must first be cleared by the pioneers. Ground must be broken by the heavy-armed diggers and drillers before the great structures of commerce are able to open their life to the world.

Clear the way for your better self! It may blister your hands and furrow your brow; but clear the way.

There is work in every part of every day that must first be cleared away before that which is more important may be tackled and done.

There is work for us all. But there is nothing more important at the start of days—and of life itself—than to clear the way for that which we hope we shall sometime be and do.—Selected.

Who Was to Blame.

The boy was standing before the judge of a juvenile court, charged with a crime that had shocked the entire community and brought grief and misery to his parents.

"Where did you get the idea of committing such a deed?" asked the judge.

"I read it," replied the lad, simply.

The judge hesitated a moment, then turned and addressed the boy's father.

"Did you ever take the pains to examine the literature your boy was reading?"

"Why—er, no—that is, it never occurred to me," responded the man, cut to the quick by such a question.

Who was to blame?

Do you—teacher, mother, father—realize the tremendous influence on character building which is represented by the literature which is falling into the hands of your boys and girls?

Are you seriously and sympathetically trying to guide your boys and girls toward literature which you are certain will create clean and healthy attitudes?

Don't ever put yourself in the position of the father who had to acknowledge that such matters had never occurred to him.—Selected.

Law of the New Birth.

BY COLEMAN D. NICHOLS.

Paul said: "For the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death." (Rom. 8: 2.) Paul's "law of the Spirit of life" in this extract most certainly includes all that is meant by Peter's "being born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God, which liveth and abideth forever." (1 Pet. 1: 23.)

It follows that we are born into the family of Jehovah by "the seed of the kingdom," "the word of God, which liveth and abideth forever," or "the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus." These latter expressions distinguish the gospel of Christ from the law of Moses, which was dead and ineffective, having been annulled and nailed to the cross.

If the quotations cited include the gospel of Christ, we are therefore born by the gospel. Hence, the gospel is Paul's "law of the Spirit of life" and Peter's "incorruptible seed, which is the word of God." If these expressions include the gospel and the gospel includes the last commission given by the Christ, it follows that we are born by the law exhibited in that commission; hence, the commission recorded by Matthew, Mark, and Luke constitutes Paul's "law of the Spirit of life" and Peter's "incorruptible seed, which is the word of God," and is, therefore, that "seed" or "word" or "law" or "gospel" by which we are born into the family of God.

David said: "The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul." (Ps. 19: 7.) In reference to the same law, James (1: 25) calls it "the perfect law of liberty." Here James refers to the gospel. David must have made a prophetic reference to the gospel.

Jesus said: "Except ye be converted and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven." (Matt. 18: 3.) Conversion puts one into the kingdom of God; but "the law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul;" therefore, the law of the Lord puts one into the kingdom of God. The gospel is the embodiment and expression of that law. Therefore, we are converted or born by the gospel.

Jesus said: "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven." (Matt. 7: 21.) "The law of the Spirit of life," "the perfect law of liberty," the "incorruptible seed," and the gospel of Christ contain an expression of the will of the Father. Therefore, to obey the gospel is to keep "the law of the Spirit of life" and "the perfect law of liberty," and, hence, is to "do the will of the Father," and thus enter into the kingdom of God.

It is the Father's will that we believe on his Son; that we repent of sins; that we confess his name; and that we be baptized into Christ. But faith (Mark 16: 16), and repentance (Luke 24: 47), confession (Rom. 10: 10), and baptism (Matt. 28: 19), are commandments of the worldwide commission, and, hence, are conditions of Paul's "law of the Spirit of life" (Rom. 8: 2), Peter's "incorruptible seed" (1 Pet. 1: 23), James' "perfect law of liberty" (James 1: 25), and is, therefore, an expression of the Father's will, and, hence, that law by which we are born into the family of God, or enter the kingdom of heaven.

As I See It.

BY AN ELDER.

There may be something wrong about the support of our preachers; in fact, I suppose that it will ever be that some good men will not be properly appreciated, yet I am inclined to think that the support is adequate. Some, however, might get a lesson from Paul or William Carey.

There is something wrong about the way some preachers report their meetings. For example, I read reports like these: "They know how to treat the preacher, as they paid me four hundred dollars for fifteen days." And again, "five hundred dollars for fifteen days," or "two hundred dollars for a week," etc. While it is possibly—I say "possibly"—all right for a preacher to get such support, at the same time I think that he is lacking in discretion when he makes such a report. Does he want his brother preacher, who doubtless can preach just as well as he, to grow green with envy, or else become discouraged and feel that he is not properly appreciated; or does he want the churches to take notice that he is a big preacher, "and when you send for me, lookout for the support, for I'm a 'big un'?" Shame on such reports! How would such a report sound to one of the humble fishermen of Galilee? And what would that matchless prince of preachers, Paul, say, should he see such a report from a gospel preacher? Wouldn't it be more in keeping with the true spirit of the Master in making up a report to tell more of the spiritual good accomplished than to tell how much money you took in? I am just a local elder, yet I must say that this cheap advertising is disgusting to me, and I hardly think that I am alone in the matter. The sectarian world has gone wild on cheap advertising; let us not copy after them. I am afraid such reports are harmful. Let me suggest a remedy: To the preacher, quit it; to the editor, blue pencil such reports.

In Covenant Relationship.

BY CLED E. WALLACE.

"Behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called children of God; and such we are." (1 John 3: 1.) But this is a covenant relationship, and the children are responsible, have duties to perform. When word came to Christ that his mother and his brethren were seeking him, the reply was emphatic: "For whosoever shall do the will of God, the same is my brother, and sister, and mother." (Mark 3: 35.) Spiritual kinship with God and Christ can be established and maintained by complying with the provisions of God's law, and in no other way. Either transgression or disobedience will close God's ears and hide his face, making prayer an abomination and leaving man without divine mercy, hence lost. (Isa. 59: 1, 2; Prov. 28: 9.)

When God destroyed the Egyptian army and bore Israel on eagles' wings and brought them unto himself, he said to them: "Now therefore, if ye will obey my voice indeed, and keep my covenant, then ye shall be mine own possession from among all peoples: for all the earth is mine: and ye shall be unto me a kingdom of priests, and a holy nation." (Ex. 19: 5, 6.) Israel was in covenant relationship and in return for God's mercy must keep his law.

But "behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us," We are children under a "better covenant," through which "we have been sanctified through the offering of the body of Jesus Christ once for all." (Heb. 10: 10.) Both covenants bear witness to the facts of universal sin and condemnation, and that no atonement can be made without the "shedding of blood." The provisions of the Old Covenant for sin's remission were only temporary, being dedicated only by animal blood. The New Testament is dedicated by the blood of Christ, which can take away sin. In shedding his blood, Christ made it possible for God to be just and justify sinners. (Rom. 3: 26.)

"But God commendeth his own love toward us. In that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us. Much more then, being now justified by his blood, shall we be saved from the wrath of God through him." (Rom. 5: 8, 9.)

All the provisions of the New Testament are provisions of grace made meritorious by the blood of Christ. We have access into the benefits of the blood only through these provisions. They alone can change the heart and renew the mind. "This is the covenant that I will make with them after those days, saith the Lord: I will put my laws on their heart, and upon their mind also will I write them; . . . and their sins and their iniquities will I remember no more." (Heb. 10: 16, 17.) Man is hopeless without the gospel found in the New Testament. It provides that whosoever believes in the Lord Jesus Christ with all the heart, turns away from sin, confesses Jesus to be Christ, God's Son, and is immersed into the names of Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, shall receive forgiveness of sins. These are the conditions of pardon in the New Testament. (Mark 16: 15, 16; Acts 2: 37, 38; Rom. 10: 6-10.) They are conditions God has imposed, and God looks in blessings upon the man who is poor and of a contrite spirit and who trembles at his word." (Isa. 66: 2.)

Those who comply with God's conditions of pardon as set forth in the New Testament are in covenant relationship with him. He has borne them on the eagles' wings of his love from the lowlands of condemnation to the sunlit summits of his favor. "Ye are come unto Mount Zion." And when a man becomes a Christian, he makes sacred vows to keep as best he can the provisions of the New Testament. He loved us and loosed us from our sins in his blood, "and he made us to be a kingdom, to be priests unto his God and Father; to him be the glory and the dominion forever and ever." (Rev. 1: 5, 6.) A Christian's life is dedicated to the interests of the kingdom of God. In becoming a Christian he obligates himself to make the things of the kingdom first. To fail in this is more than ingratitude. It is treachery. And traitors die.

Personal Notes.

John M. Rice recently spent a few days with the church in Putnam, Texas, with two baptisms.

C. R. Nichol will begin a meeting with the church in Montgomery, Ala., March 19. The meeting will be with the congregation with which Fred M. Little labors.

J. C. Foster, Hillsboro, Texas, has entered his third year with the church at that place, and reports the work promising, with the assistance of the Christians in that town.

Ben West reports fine services at Northside church of Christ, Fort Worth, Texas, on the first Lord's day in March with two confessions—a man and wife, who were formerly Baptists. Horace Busby will begin their meeting on April 2.

Foy E. Wallace, Jr., with Austin Taylor as director of the song service, closed a meeting with the church in Ozona, Texas, recently, with one baptism. He reports a splendid congregation there, with W. D. Black as evangelist for the congregation.

T. M. Carney, who labors with the church in San Angelo, Texas, reports three additions to the congregation recently, and that the work goes encouragingly forward there. Recently he was with the church in Vernon, Texas, one night, with one restoration.

W. D. Black, Ozona, Texas, writes: "I visit Mertzon once a month, preaching at Arden in the afternoon. I also go to Sonora on the second Sunday of each month. On the first and third Sundays I preach at Ozona, and at Barnhart in the afternoon of the third Sunday. The work at all these places is progressing nicely. The interest is good in all lines of Bible study. I also visit Eldorado on every fifth Sunday. I have meetings to hold at Alpine and Menard. Austin Taylor will lead the song service in the Alpine meeting, which is to be the first and third Sundays in April. These meetings will be held before the close of my ten months' labor with the church at this place and under the direction of the church here, after which I will spend three months in the evangelistic field, returning to the work here the first of September. The Lord willing, I will labor with them at least another year in this field, which is indeed 'white unto harvest.'" hymns. In the prayers he draws nigh unto God with subdued heart and in full assurance of faith. In the Lord's Supper the memory is refreshed and the heart is made tender and full of gratitude. No person can thus worship God and not be made better. But the whole divine arrangement falls of its purpose if the heart is not in it. If the thoughts are not concentrated upon the meaning of the service and the whole thing done in solemn earnestness, the worship is vain. God is dishonored and the soul is deadened and made callous to the most appealing, the most sacred and sublime things of the gospel. It is no wonder that such persons quit the church, and it is no wonder that often they cannot be renewed unto repentance. Because the people at Corinth had failed to discern the Lord's body in partaking the Lord's Supper, Paul said that many among them were weak and sickly and not a few were asleep. For the same cause we have many members in the same condition to-day. Those Corinthians who turned the Supper into a feast and spent the hour gormandizing were no greater sinners than our modern people who turn the service into a talkfest and who laugh and joke, write foolish and blasphemous things or draw pictures in the song books during the service. Yet how common these things are among us! We have all seen such things often. But have we heard any preachers, elders, or Bible-class teachers open their mouths against such irreverence and blasphemy? Do they not all give it the sanction of silence? Do you see any articles in the papers against this prevalent sin? Do our congregations ever hear anything said on worship, with emphasis upon the fact that it must be true spiritual worship? O, to be sure, we are told that we must worship just as God has directed in his word, but this teaching only emphasizes the acts of worship, and not the manner in which these acts are performed. Are we often told that worship takes place in the heart? That it consists in emotions? Do we not often fail to experience any feelings of worship in the worship (?)? Do we not fail to get any inspiration to a nobler life, to more consecration and prayerfulness? When we fail to get any spiritual benefit or uplift from the worship, is not our worship vain? If the spiritual man receives no food, is there any wonder that he perishes?

Lord, teach us to worship.

The Consciousness of God.

I remember—for I have had the unspeakable joy of having been born and bred in a minister's family—I remember one occasion which made a very profound impression upon me when I was a lad, in a company of gentlemen where my father was present and where I happened to be, unobserved. One of the gentlemen in a moment of excitement uttered an oath, and then, his eyes resting upon my father, he said with evident sincerity: "Dr. Wilson, I beg your pardon; I did not notice that you were present." "O," said my father, "you mistake, sir; it is not to me that you owe the apology." I doubt if any other one remark ever entered quite so straight to the quick in me as that did, the consciousness that my father, taken by surprise, was at once so conscious that he was not the person offended that he should so naturally call the attention of the man who had uttered the oath to what was the simple fact, that the offense was not to him, but to his Master. It was exactly as if a disrespectful word had been spoken of the President of the United States in the presence of an ambassador of the United States; the apology would be due not to him, but to his government. And if ministers could always so contrive it that in their presence the presence of God was manifest, the whole problem of the ministry would be solved, and evangelization would be irresistible.—Woodrow Wilson.

Field Reports

Guymon, Okla., March 1.—Since last report two have been baptized, and I have not been idle (except in sickness), preaching at nine different places. My program calls for more missionary work, and I desire to hear from those in the West who are so interested.—T. H. Matheson.

Taft, Fla., March 6.—Our audiences are still increasing at Pluecastle. The services yesterday were fine. Some came from Orlando. We hope the time will not be long until we will have an ingathering. We are sowing the seed now. We will welcome any loyal gospel preacher that may come this way. I can hold one meeting in June.—G. B. Lambright.

Langston, Ala., March 2.—I am now located here, teaching and preaching. I am principal of the school here, and preach monthly at Scottsboro and Woodville. These are two good congregations endeavoring to carry on the Lord's work in the Lord's way. My school closes on April 28. I would like to be kept busy after that date preaching the old, old story.—L. T. Farrar.

Springfield, Mo., March 3.—Since writing I have preached at Mountain View, Center Point, Rogersville, Turner and Ramsay Streets, and Hutton Valley. I find the cause in good condition at all places. I have just closed an interesting Bible reading at Center Point, near here. I will be at Rogersville on Sunday. I shall enter protracted-meeting work on March 28, to continue through the year, and will work in Arkansas, Missouri, and Kansas.—M. S. Mason.

Montgomery, Ala., March 6.—Announcement has been made to the effect that C. R. Nichol, of Clifton, Texas, will begin a meeting at Catoma Street, this city, on March 19. W. G. Klingman is expected to be on hand to direct the song service. All in reach of Montgomery ought to avail themselves of this opportunity to partake of the bountiful repast of things spiritual which will be in store for them. As we have reason to believe all the Christians in the city will cooperate wholeheartedly, great results are assured.—Fred M. Little.

Citrus Park, Fla., February 25.—The meeting at Brooksville, Fla., continued over three Lord's days, with no visible results. I was invited to that place by Dr. Lowry. He and his wife and daughter and niece constitute the faithful ones in that community. They are from Kentucky, and know just how to make a preacher feel at home. While we did not see any visible results, it was a benefit to the spiritual man to be in this Christian home. I reached this place this morning to begin a mission meeting to-morrow. Four or five meet in the public-school building every Lord's day to keep house for the Lord. We are still praying that brethren will respond to our appeal made in the Gospel Advocate in December to help us buy a horse and buggy. We are planning to move the last of March, and trust that others will help us to get on the little place where I may work.

and preach the gospel in the country around me; where we may have a good cow and raise chickens for the children to have milk and bread. Address me at Bradentown, Fla., Box 111.—John Hayes.

New York, N. Y., March 6.—Yesterday was a splendid day for us here; the largest crowds since I have been with the work. Last evening we held services in the home of an elderly lady who lives alone and is not a Christian. She has requested that we hold services in her home at least two Sunday nights in the month. We pray that this may be a harvest for the Lord. Brother Earnest Joyner, of Philadelphia, was with us yesterday, and spoke at both services. He is a God-fearing man, and his messages were inspiring and soul-stirring. May God's blessings be upon him. According to Popular Science Magazine, "there are nearly six million people in the city of New York, and it is the largest center of population on the globe. It is growing faster than London at the rate of nearly two to one. London doubles its population every thirty years and New York every eighteen years. New York's cash balance demands a sum of more than thirty million dollars, and it is the wealthiest city in the world. In fact, its total assessed value is greater than all the United States west of the Mississippi, and its income exceeds that of twenty States combined. Every nineteenth American lives in New York City, and one-tenth of all manufactured products is made there." Pray for us, that the work may grow and abound unto the praise and glory of the Lord.—E. E. Shoulders.

Fort Smith, Ark., March 6.—Brother W. F. Ethridge, who has recently located in this city, is preaching very acceptably for the church worshipping on Dodson Avenue and Seventeenth Street. Brother E. W. Dunn, of Burnsville, Ark., for years a gospel preacher, is seeing much of the fruits of his labors. The Lone Star, Burnsville, and Valley View churches have enjoyed much of his labors and the fruits which followed. Brother O. L. Hays, of Ada, Okla., is in a mission meeting at Excelsior, Ark. The effort is fellowshiped by the church at Valley View. The meetings are being held in the Miners' Union building. This is the first time Excelsior has ever had the full gospel, and but for the Miners' Union granting the use of their building this effort could not have been made. The services at Lone Star yesterday were well attended. Brother H. H. Dunn, the son of Brother F. W. Dunn, has the direction of the church there. The Lord willing, I will be at Uniontown next Lord's day. About twenty-five years of history covers the effort there. First some of the modern methods were introduced, then the instrument, and now the church no longer meets as the church. The people of former days are gone, and no leaders have been left to take the work. A few meet for Bible study. I have been asked to visit them one Lord's day each month and help with the gospel message. I have the third and fourth Lord's days, and will be glad to serve places in need.—R. L. Ludlam, Jr.

BY JOHN B. WILLIAMS.

THE MEETING IN THE BLACKSMITH SHOP.

Now that I was fully engaged in the work of an evangelist, I desired to be busy all the time. A preacher is one who preaches.

The calls for work were not coming in very fast, unless it was from congregations that did not pay a preacher anything only by bragging on his sermons, upon which the preacher's family could not subsist. I knew a place—Samburg, on Reelfoot Lake—that I thought a meeting would do good. Upon inquiry, I learned that the people were anxious for a meeting, but there was no place to hold it. I had no tent then. The only vacant house in Samburg was an old blacksmith shop about twenty feet wide and about forty feet long. It had one door minus the shutter and two windows minus the glass. Blocks and planks were provided for seats and the old forge was used for a pulpit, or rather a place for a lamp, as I had to stand, not behind, but on the side of the old forge.

The meeting began according to announcement. The house was filled and the people stood all around the shop. About the middle of the meeting, one evening, just before time to begin, a very angry cloud came up from the southwest, with wind, thunder, lightning, and a heavy rain. The lightning struck and set fire to several old cypress trees standing in the lake. I shall never forget that sight. The blazing fire amid the storm was a grand sight to look upon. The storm did not keep the people away. So different now! If a little cloud appears, the congregation disappears. The house was full. I went also through the storm. We had but few song books, but the people learned the songs and would sing with all their might.

A very pious old Presbyterian, M. Graham by name, lived at Samburg, who in his infancy had had water sprinkled on his head and called "baptism." One night while preaching on New Testament baptism, I noticed that he left the shop. Soon his wife followed. When she got on the outside of the door, she discovered the old man standing there with a big stick in his hand. She asked him what he intended to do with that stick. He said: "I intend to break that preacher's head when he comes out." She asked him why he wanted to do such a thing as that. He said: "If what that preacher preached to-night is true, I am on my way to hell." She finally persuaded him to go on home and thus saved my head.

Next morning when I met him, he refused to speak to me. Finally I got him to speak and to tell me his trou-

Vegetable Compound Helped Her

Jasper, Minn. — "I saw in the paper about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and took it because I was having such pains in my stomach and through my back that I could not do my work. I had tried other medicines, but none did me the good that your Vegetable Compound did. Now I am able to do all my work alone while before I had my daughter staying at home to do it. I have told a number of friends what it has done for me and give you permission to use my letter as a testimonial."—Mrs. JESSE PETERSEN, Route 1, Jasper, Minn.

There is no better reason for your trying Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound than this—it has helped other women. So if you suffer from displacements, irregularities, backache, nervousness or are passing through the Change of Life remember this splendid medicine. What it did for Mrs. Petersen it may do for you.

The Vegetable Compound stands upon a foundation of nearly fifty years of service.

ble. He told me what he had told his wife. I told him it was not for me to say, but God, as to where he was going after death. I asked him if he was willing to let the teaching of the New Testament settle the question. After some delay, he said: "Yes." We began and read what is taught by the New Testament on baptism. Finally he said: "I surrender." Then I baptized him, his wife and only son. Many times after that he would say: "God sent you here to teach me the truth; and if I am saved in heaven, it will be on account of your coming to Samberg." He made a good, faithful worker in the church, and to the day of his death I had no better friend.

The meeting continued for two weeks, with sixty-five additions. Brother preacher, don't you know I felt good?

We then undertook to build a house of worship for God—my first meeting-house. We framed, covered, and weatherboarded the house, but could go no further. The people were poor fishermen with no permanent homes; so we could not finish our first meetinghouse.

Mr. Samberg, a Roman Catholic, whose wife obeyed the gospel during that meeting, swapped us a lot with a dwelling house on it, which we turned into a meetinghouse. Here was my first congregation and first meetinghouse. Our meetinghouse we traded to Mr. Samberg was finished up by him and converted into a hotel. It still stands and makes my heart sad, like our first home, that we had to give up for lack of funds. They both stand as secret reminders of my efforts and failures.

Later, while holding a meeting at Samberg, while Brother Ealon Wilson (my singer) and I were going from preaching one night, rocks were thrown at us, but the only damage done was knocking Brother Wilson's derby off. The congregation exists now only in the memory of a few.

Gospel Work in Georgia.

BY J. BEDFORD BECK.

I am glad to be able to report to the readers of the Gospel Advocate that the work is growing all the while down in this section of the country, and it will be only a question of time until we will have congregations working in all parts of Georgia.

On the last Lord's-day night in February the brethren closed a good meeting at Brunswick, Ga., which continued for three weeks. During the meeting the congregation was strengthened by eight in number—five by baptism. The interest was good throughout, and the attendance was the greatest the last night of the services. Brunswick is a seaport town of about fifteen thousand people, with only a small congregation of Christians there. Almost every town in this section of Georgia that I have been in has at least two or three members of the church of Christ, who, if they had some one to stand by them and help them, would be instrumental in establishing a congregation in their respective towns.

Two years ago Brunswick had only about four members, who began to work for a church there, and now they are seeing the fruits of their faithful work. Brother and Sister R. L. Crowell left and went to Detroit, Mich., about the first of the year, leaving us with only one man to help the good sisters carry on the work the three Lord's days that I am not there. Sisters Stucky, Burnsed, and Rhea have been faithful workers all the while, and now they have four male members in the congregation to help them. Brother Dial, who was converted under the preaching of Brother Charles Holder, at Bridgeport, Ala., with the help of Brother Rhea, another Alabama man, will push the work there. I make this report so that those who have been fellowshiping us in this work may see what we by their help are doing. I should have mentioned Miss Alta Featherstone, a Tennessean, who is a teacher in the city school of Brunswick, as one of the faithful sisters, too.

I spend one week each month at Brunswick, one at McGregor, and the remainder of my time at Summit, Ga. There are Tennessee ladies at each of these places who came down here as teachers and have married and are now instrumental in establishing the church.

THE SAFEST WAY TO DESTROY UNSIGHTLY HAIR

It is difficult to find anything more repulsive than an unnecessary display of unsightly hair on the person of an otherwise highly refined and beautiful lady.

The failure and danger connected with many so-called hair removers has discouraged many ladies and caused the needless and very unsatisfactory use of the razor, an instrument intended for the coarse skins of men only.

Unsightly hair on the exposed portions of the body can be destroyed with the roots safely and without injury to the skin, but the remedy must go deeper than the surface.

Nu-Art, a highly successful preparation, scientifically prepared, goes into the hair follicles and destroys the hair roots without injury to the skin or complexion. Thousands have found it highly successful and gratifying.

Mail a dollar bill with your name to 225 P. O. Building, Nu-Art Laboratories, South Orange, N. J., and you will be mailed a package, in plain wrapper, containing a bountiful supply of Nu-Art, by return mail. It will please you immediately, or your money will be cheerfully refunded.

Sharing With Others.

BY W. M. WILSON

This is the basis of an unselfish, God-approved life. Upon this principle rests the brotherhood of man. Charity, benevolence, and the kindred graces evolve from this great law of sharing with others. Whoever lives forgetful of the needs of his fellow man is living a life foreign to the one intended by the Lord of glory, who lived not for his own good, but for the good of others.

Man has been placed in the sphere in which he can most grandly serve others and honor God, and a refusal to work in his sphere to the betterment of those with whom he has to do is to render himself unfaithful to his high calling. Service should be the watchword, the battle cry, the countersign of all men who are alive to the great mission which their Creator intended them to fulfill.

Looking at this subject from a different angle, we see with a clear vision that our own lives are made worth while to the extent that we use our influence, time, and talents to improve the environments of our fellow beings. On the principle that we get out of a thing what we put into it, we are actuated to greater service.

Investing in self, our money, our time and our talents, means more than an annuity, a dividend; it means the satisfaction of knowing that life to our brother has a higher, holier meaning, and in this, more than large returns of revenue from bank stock, comes large revenues of happiness.

Are we desirous to live on the "good Samaritan" side of life, or are we content like the Levite to pass by those who unfortunately are in want and have no one to minister to their needs?

Hear the words of Paul: "Let each esteem other better than themselves." O that this Pauline principle were operative to-day; that men would have a greater fellow feeling for each other and so treat each other that there would be no occasion for the bitter words, bickerings, and wranglings over the things in which unity is lacking! Let us differ as men and love as brethren, and share each other's woes, and prove by our unselfishness that we are indeed our "brother's keeper," and in that altruistic spirit the church, "the pillar and ground of the truth," will grow and prosper and bear fruit to the honor and glory of God.

When men speak ill of thee, so live that nobody will believe them.—Plato.

Strength comes from well digested and thoroughly assimilated food. Hood's Sarsaparilla tones the digestive organs, and thus builds up the strength. If you are getting "run down," begin taking Hood's at once. It gives nerve, mental and digestive strength.

McCaslin.

On February 22, 1922, the death angel entered the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. P. McCaslin and took their darling baby, Arthur Clyde. He was three years, five months, and twenty days old. He was a flower on earth for just a short while; but our loss is heaven's gain. He leaves a father, mother, brother, and several sisters. Let us all try to be faithful servants of our Maker, that we may enter into eternal rest. LAVINIA YOWELL.

McCracken.

Mrs. W. L. McCracken departed this life on January 26, 1922. She was baptized into Christ, and lived a consistent member of the church for fifty years. She leaves on this side of the valley one daughter. May our gracious God protect and infuse sunshine and happiness into the life of this broken-hearted daughter. Sister McCracken was an earnest Christian. The Bible was her guiding star and rule of action; implicit obedience to God's commands, the measure of her faith; and hope of immortality, her comfort in death. A FRIEND.

Price.

R. A. Price was born on November 29, 1857, and died on July 20, 1921. He obeyed the gospel on September 1, 1886, under the preaching of Brother Kidwell, at Greeneville, Tenn. He was married to Miss Eliza J. Duke on September 23, 1880, and to this union was born one son. On February 10, 1909, he was married to Miss Emma Byrn, to which union were born five children—three boys and two girls. He is survived by his wife and five children. He suffered much, but he bore his suffering with patience. He was willing and anxious to go to be with his Savior. Brethren Pullias, Harper, and Harsh conducted the funeral. X.

Allison.

Sister Jessie Mae Stutts Allison, daughter of Jack and Emma Stutts and granddaughter of John D. and Sarah Wade, was born on October 27, 1895; was married to George R. Allison on July 15, 1913; obeyed the gospel, being baptized by the writer of this notice, at Minor Hill, Tenn., about one month after her marriage; and passed to her reward on August 7, 1921. She leaves a father, mother, two sisters, a husband, and one little boy (G. R., Jr.), as well as a host of relatives and friends, to mourn their loss. I feel that it can be truthfully said of her that a loving wife, a devoted mother, a dutiful daughter, and a faithful Christian has gone to be with those who die in the Lord.

J. T. HARRIS.

Jones.

Mrs. Nancy Jones died on February 23, 1922, at her home at Lyle, Tenn. She has gone to join her husband and children gone before. She was a most faithful wife and mother; and when she realized that she could not get well, expressed her desire to go home. She was born on January 25, 1843. She was Nancy Anderson before her marriage to J. T. Jones, April 24, 1865. She became a Christian at the age of fourteen, and was a Christian about sixty-five years, faithfully attending the service as long as she was able. She will be missed so much, for she was so much help and encouragement. She attended the services at Little Rock for years and helped build up the cause there. She read the Bible and the Gospel Advocate, and would try to get others to take the Advocate. She was the mother of ten children, all gone on before, except three—Mrs. Bernard Norris, of Centerville, Tenn., and Mrs. R. G. Connelly and O. W. Jones, of Lyle, Tenn., all Christians and good citizens. They were good and kind to their mother, and will miss her so much; but our loss is heaven's gain. She bore her suffering with patience. Her influence will live. Her life was indeed beautiful. May the Lord bless the bereaved. Brother Lovell conducted funeral services.

Mrs. BONNIE THORNTON.

Morris.

On Wednesday morning, February 22, 1922, the spirit of our beloved brother, J. H. Morris, a citizen of Pulaski, Tenn., took its departure. He was in his eightieth year, yet very active and vigorous for one of his age. He still read without glasses. "His eyes were not dim, and his natural forces were not abated." For a number of years he had been one of the most active elders of this congregation. He came more nearly attending all services of the church than any other member in it. He taught his class in "Hebrews" and led the congregation in prayer on Sunday before his death on Wednesday. His widow, three sons, and one daughter survive him. He being a lawyer, his children naturally inclined toward a professional life. One son is a lawyer and a very successful stockman on the island of Cuba; another, who is a traveling man, makes his home in Montgomery, Ala.; while his youngest son is a practicing physician in this town. His daughter resides in Oklahoma. Funeral services were conducted at the home by the writer of this article. Burial was at Maplewood, this city. J. T. CLARK.

Williamson.

Mrs. Fronie Williamson, wife of Mr. Pogue Williamson, was sixty-eight years old a few days before she died; they had also been married forty-eight years a few days before her death. Early in life she joined the Methodist Church, but later united with the Christian Church, and was true to her faith; but, owing to the condition of her health, she could not have the pleasure of attending church. "Aunt Fronie," as she was called by many of her friends, suffered greatly for many years of her life. She was very patient, though in her last illness, her suffering being so intense, she often expressed herself as ready and anxious to go to that home where she could be at rest. She leaves four sisters, one brother, and her aged companion, who misses her most. May the Lord bless and comfort him his few remaining years until he is called and they shall be reunited where are no more sad partings. Funeral services were held in the Methodist Church by Brother Wilson, a Christian preacher, of Henderson, Tenn., in the presence of a large number of sympathizing friends and relatives, after which her body was laid to rest in the McMoresville Cemetery. ONE WHO LOVED HER.

Field Reports

Wellington, Texas, March 6.—I preached on Saturday night and on Lord's day and Lord's-day night at Forestburg Church, near Quanah. It was my first time to meet with them, but I found some fine Christians there. The church here is still getting along nicely. While there was no preaching here last Lord's day, yet the house was almost full at the hour of worship. They had singing in the evening, with another good crowd present. Next Lord's day is my preaching day.—Lee Sanders.

Estevan, Saskatchewan, Canada, March 3.—I wish to make mention of the five-weeks' house-to-house meetings just concluded here, with Brother H. A. Rogers, evangelist, preaching seven times a week. Great interest was shown. The evangelist's teaching was very plain and forcible and resulted in seventeen additions, fourteen being buried with Christ in baptism, the other three having been baptized. The church here is greatly encouraged with the results, and each one seems to desire to do more for the Master. Our prayers go out for Brother Rogers as he leaves us to labor in other fields.—T. Orr.

Watertown, Tenn., March 7.—Being now located at Grant, Tenn., I am now working with five congregations in Smith and Wilson counties. The work so far is very encouraging at every point. Our new house of worship in Grant will be under construction at once. We are few in number, but a working body; so we are planning for great things for our Master. My work is as follows: First Lord's day, at Bethlehem; second, Watertown; third, Flat Rock in the forenoon and Grant in the afternoon; fourth, Commerce. I have some meetings promised, but have time for more. A pull together and much will be done. Souls are perishing; let us never stop to rest.—Vernon Rozar.

Algood, Tenn., March 7.—The work at the three places where I labor moves on. We plan to have our meeting at Algood to begin on the first Lord's day in June, to be held by R. E. L. Taylor, of Decherd, Tenn. I preach monthly at Monterey now instead of Smyrna as formerly. The meeting there will begin the first of April, to be held by Brother E. H. Hoover. I do not think plans have been completed for the meeting at Livingston. I will assist in these meetings. I will be with Brother R. V. Cawthon in a meeting at Cookeville, beginning next Lord's day. I have some time left which I could use in meetings this summer, either preaching or leading the singing. Should any congregation desire my services, address me at Algood, Tenn.—E. Gaston Collins.

Union, S. C., March 6.—Yesterday was a good day with the church in this town. We had two of the largest audiences that we have had this year. I had twenty-seven adults in my Bible class in the morning. Several new ones attended both the morning and night services. I teach four Bible classes, preach three times, conduct one song drill, and speak at the mid-week prayer-meeting each week, and I am planning to begin the work in a neighboring village on Sunday afternoon. This is a small part of what a missionary finds to do. Brother Gibbs is located in Greenville, and he needs our prayers and all encouragement that we can give him. It is certainly commendable in the "baby" congregation of Nashville to send out and support a missionary. The Waverly-Belmont congregation is supporting Brother Gibbs. This should be encouraging to the older congregations that are not doing anything. Brother, open your eyes and behold the grain white already unto harvest. Who will go? Who will send? May God hasten the day when his people will awake to their duty and do his will.—Thomas H. Burton.

RENWAR VS. RHEUMATISM.

It is certainly a pity that so many people suffer year after year the intense pains of rheumatism when it can be so easily expelled from the system by the simple treatment of taking Renwar Rheumatic Salts. Rheumatism is caused by uric acid in the blood; and in order to effect a complete cure, it is necessary to entirely eliminate this acid from the blood. Renwar is guaranteed to relieve, or your money refunded. It contains no injurious drugs. It is the one sure remedy, and it does not in the slightest degree injure the stomach or affect the heart. Mr. Joseph L. Boehmer says: "One 50c bottle has done me more good than all sanatorium treatments; and what it did for me, why should it not do the same for others? Should any one doubt the virtue of Renwar and the certainty of curing this malady, refer them to me." Musings of Mammon

I am Money.

For me men barter their control over the forces of God;
Such as justice, which is the first element of social staties;
Such as faith, which is a lever for moving mountains;
Such as confidence, which is humanity's coherer; without confidence men are huddled units, impossible of union, like grains of sand that cannot be twisted into a rope;
Such as hope, which is to the human soul what the life germ is to a seed—the power that lifts it out of sodden clods into light;
Such as love, which is the greatest dynamic force in the universe;
Such as understanding, which is the ultimate desire of all souls.

I am Money.

For me men barter their control over the forces of God.

I am Money.

Whosoever barter his control over these forces of God for me
Is my slave.
I possess him when he thinks he possesses me.
I lash him to labor. He shall not know release.
He shall lie for me, steal for me, and trample precious lives under his feet.
Women and innocent children are sold for a pittance.
(The price of Jehovah's son was thirty pieces of silver.)
He who loves me shall forget God, unless I permit him to mock God by tithing.
I will desert him in the hour of his death.
I have no business in eternity.

I am Money.

Whosoever barter his control over the forces of God for me
Is my slave.

I am Money.

Whosoever keeps his control over the forces of God is my master.
He knows my value and my limitations;

He is likely to forget me in the dally use of more powerful forces;
The measure of his giving is the extent of his brother's need;
He shall have life, and have it abundantly.
He will not need me at the hour of his death;
For he is the son of God now, and it is not manifest what he will be when he shall meet the risen Lord.

I am Money.

Whosoever keeps his control over the forces of God is my master.

I am Money.

My slaves are many; they are puppets of passion, covetous, contemptible.
The sons of God are few, but I hate them.
I hate with the smothered and cunning hate of a captive.
Perhaps these sons may be dazed by visions of power.
My power to do good. They shall see me, and feel me, and give me, and see the result of their giving.

I will whisper:

"The forces of God are intangible; results are remote; You are weary of waiting; no one understands you; Give me in abundance to feed the famishing millions. For I clothe the naked, and house the shelterless orphan; Give me for the glory of God, and you will be honored."

And when he is mine,

I will prompt him to place in importunate palms—a penny.
He shall have limousines, and women in sensuous silks;
He shall see wonderful jewels that flash on the tremulous breast of desire,
But never again the sheen of a tear on the cheek of a frozen child.
My slaves are at war even now to encompass their own destruction.
The sons of God must be led to forget their invincible power.

I am Money.

The sons of God are but few,
I hate them.

—Mary Davison Myrick, in World Call.

Calamity's Lessons.

The newspapers tell us that the recent ten-million-dollar fire in the "Loop" business district of Chicago revealed many problems which would have to be met by firemen before they could hope to cope successfully with fires in great modern skyscrapers. The destruction of the wonderfully built Burlington building demonstrated thoroughly that no modern structure is fireproof. True enough, the walls stood intact, but its fifteen stories of windows stared like sightless eyes over the scene of desolation; for the contents had been destroyed by a heat so intense that glass from the windows had melted and, according to the firemen, ran like water. It was also demonstrated that the modern fire department is practically helpless against a blaze that gets a full headway in the upper floors of a tall building.

The origin of the fire at this writing is in question; but whatever the origin, one thing is certain—it spread with amazing, nerve-racking, heart-breaking rapidity. What is characteristic of fire is characteristic of sin. "Behold," says James, "how much wood is kindled by how small a fire!" He had in mind the little blaze that is often started by one slanderous tongue. That little blaze spreads until it has blackened the social fabric of the community, leaving ruined characters in its wake. Sin should be treated like fire. We should endeavor to stamp out its small beginnings. What a pity we do not look upon it as an infectious disease—a malady that doth eat as a gangrene! The sign of smallpox on a house is a greater protection than lock and key. The danger is only physical. But when sin is uncovered, men gaze upon it with morbid curiosity. It is spread from mouth to mouth and published in the papers. The first shock is overcome by familiarity. It communicates some of its virus to every one who sees, hears, or tells of it. Sin and sinners are inseparable. They are not fit companions for ourselves or our children. Sin should not only be stamped out, but it should be avoided.

Easier to Start than to Put Out.

If the fire was started by an incendiary, he has doubtless learned by this time that it is much easier to start one than to put it out. Begin a quarrel, set a slander going, tell a lie—that is easy enough; but it will take the whole department to get the trouble under control after it is well started. Again, how bad a master a good servant may become! Fire under control warms and cooks in our homes and drives away the dross from useful metals in the furnaces; but fire uncontrolled kills and destroys in the most ruthless fashion. This is just as true of the tongue, of appetite, of passion. Splendid servants they are if you force them to serve; terrible masters, if they get control of you. When they are dominant, you learn to your sorrow how much easier it is to burn down than to build up. Some of the great public buildings that were years in building were burned down in less than an hour. Some will never be replaced. So a character, a reputation, that has taken years to build, may be ruined in an hour of sin. It is a sad thing to behold the ruins of the once stately Burlington building; but it is a sadder thing to behold the shipwreck of a soul, a ruined life, naught remaining but bare, burned walls and the ashes of failure.

Shall not this great conflagration teach us again the evil of a slanderous tongue? The most charitable explanation for tale-spreading folks is that they are out of their right mind. A noted police officer states that the neighborhood gossip and the anonymous letter writer have one of the nastiest, lowest, and most vicious forms of insanity known to medical circles. Their distorted imagination visualizes scenes which they would have come true, and their insane mind immediately grasps the story and they repeat it as if it were true. Gossip and anonymous letters, says the New York Medical Journal, are a constant pest at police headquarters. But reports registered with police officers in an attempt to injure character by these means or false telephone reports are a failure; in fact, the police take more pleasure in tracking the informer than the one informed about.

What the Firemen Teach Us.

But I must not forget the firemen. "Honor to whom honor is due." No one can watch or read of their efforts and not feel proud of man's capacity for heroism. Chivalry is not dead, knighthood is still in flower while the brave firemen remain what they are. Risking life to save life, encountering smothering smoke and falling walls, they are heroes whether they claim the honor or not. We learn from them the nobility of generous effort for the welfare of other people. When the alarm sounds, it is not their house that is burning, nor do they ask whether it is a cottage or a palace. It is enough to know that somebody's house is afire and somebody needs their aid. We learn from them, too, the value of disciplined cooperation. While the fire devours they do not waste time, some idling, some sulking, some criticizing, but all work together, follow their leaders, and do their duty. What a splendid example for Christian workers everywhere!

Paul Gilbert said: "I used to know a student who during his college days was known as a nuisance because he was so continually neglecting his studies and interfering with those who wished to work. Suddenly he dropped out of college, and I heard nothing of him for several years; then I learned, to my amazement, that he had become a most earnest, effective young man. 'How did you come into this life of helpfulness?' I asked. 'I came into it one night sitting on a barn with my nightshirt stuffed into my trousers watching my father's factory burn. When I thought of all his sacrifice and love and need, I just determined then and there to be a help.' In the same spirit I do not see how any thoughtful being can look upon the spectacle of devastation made by a great fire and not resolve to lead a better life. I do not see how any poor lost sinner can recall such scenes and not feel the need of a Savior. The most thrilling sight at a fire is a daring rescue, when a brave fireman, forgetful of self, forces his way through fierce heat and blinding, stifling smoke to carry out to life and safety some helpless child. Forth from the flames the brave man staggers, gasping, blistered, burning, but bearing the little one safe in his arms.

Men and women, there was One who went through fiercer flames, more awful anguish, even the infinite agony of Gethsemane and Calvary, to save you and me from death. He came forth gloriously, "having led captivity captive" and bringing good gifts unto men, even unto us in our extremity and bitter need. Will you let him save you? There is no other way of escape. Let him take you in his mighty arms and carry you safe beyond the smoke, the flame, the turmoil of earth, to life, to heaven, to God.

"Lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world." With us by his Spirit; with us in the great sacrament of his love; with us amid weaknesses, divisions, failures, disappointments, he is with us still. And it is his presence alone which sustains his envoys and gives to their work whatever it has had, or has, or has to have, of vigor and permanence.—H. P. Liddon.

If We Only Understood.

BY MRS. J. T. STANFILL.

A different world methinks 'twould be,
If all were rightly understood;
If, face to face, we all could see
A friend or brother as we should.

Knew we what motives filled each breast,
What longings filled each heart,
Methinks we'd strive with greater zest
A blessing to impart.

We'd strive to make our friends more glad,
We'd help them all we could;
We'd cheer the weary and the sad,
If we only understood.

We'd lend a hand to the fallen one
And help him to be good;
We'd try to forget the ill he'd done,
Perhaps, if we understood.

Lord, help us more gentle and patient to be,
More kind to our fellow man;
Each day may we be more like unto Thee,
Lord, help us to understand.

Field Notes.

BY EARNEST C. LOVE.

This is Troy, Tenn., March 13. The past week has been an interesting one in many ways. I had a new experience. I heard a Baptist and a Methodist preacher debate. That does not happen often. R. H. Pigue, of Fulton, Ky., was the Methodist, and J. R. Clark, of Wewoka, Okla., was the Missionary Baptist. The debate was held in a Baptist house three miles from Martin, Tenn., March 7, 8. There were two sessions each day, and each speaker had two half-hour speeches at each session. There was no night session. The house held about five hundred people and was packed full, and some stood throughout the debate. This shows the interest.

It was a four-days' debate, but two days had been held in December last, when Clark was called home on account of sickness in his family. Clark affirmed the first two days, and Pigue affirmed for the two days that I heard. I was not for either one as such, because I believed both wrong on some things and both right on some, and did not care which won. But, in my judgment, Pigue outclassed Clark as a debater. Clark, however, is a younger man and may learn in time. Pigue is a scientific debater, and has had much experience in his sixty-four years.

They debated the general church proposition, which allowed them to dodge around a great deal. I had been looking for a Baptist preacher to debate in Covington, Ind., and so approached Clark. He would sign nothing but the church proposition. The Baptists challenged me to meet one of their schoolboys at Covington last December. Of course, I wouldn't do that, but promised to find them a man. It remains now to be seen whether they want a debate in Covington or not.

It is not suitable in these notes to give the details of the debate, but I will write that up under another heading, as it will surely do our readers good.

My next stop after leaving Martin was at Rives, a few miles south of Union City. There I was met by Brother D. D. Woody, one of the Freed-Hardeman boys, who lives there with his widowed mother. I was entertained one night in their home. Our appointment was completely rained out. However, I met many of the brethren and sisters at their homes.

These Woodys are related to the Maury County Woodys. Brother D. D. Woody is a young man, full of zeal and energy, and promises to do much for the cause of Christ. A great many speak well of his ability and his pleasant disposition. May the good Lord guide him and use him in a long fight against the powers of sin.

When I reached Troy, Friday, March 10, Brother W. F. Roberts met me at the train and showed me to his home. We had a good crowd at the services that night, and the next day I got busy for the Gospel Advocate. Brother Roberts is what we boys used to call a "John Morgan hustler." He got busy with his telephone before breakfast, and, by promising to pay me and let them pay him, he had me five or six subscribers and renewals before I hardly knew what was going on. I heard him say: "Well, I'll tell you what I'll do. I'll give Brother Love the two dollars, and you can hand it to me at your leisure; and at the end of the year, if you say the paper was not worth two dollars, I'll give you your money back." One could hardly get around that.

Brother Roberts is a practicing physician, and a good one, they say. Anyway, he is going nearly all the time. In spite of that, he finds a great deal of time to help others. You know the Lord always picks a busy man. I don't know anything about his business, but here is what I saw in two days: On the way from the depot, a young man not very well dressed stopped him and engaged in a low conversation. I think I heard the Doctor say: "Will a dollar be enough?" He thought it would, and we passed on. The next day two men came to fix up the papers for a farm he was helping them buy. As soon as they left, a man from the country came in and said: "Doctor, here is that two dollars I borrowed. I thank you very much. That did me more good than a hundred dollars would have done some people. Good-by." And he was gone. The next I noticed was a man and wife who wanted him to help them get a secondhand buggy so the wife would have some way to go about. But Sister Roberts is not less active. I counted nine little dresses she and the other sisters had made for the orphans in Columbia. Now, if we could find this spirit of helpfulness in every Christian heart, the outlook for the church would be more encouraging.

There are many faithful and zealous brethren in Troy. I took dinner with Brother and Sister J. L. Forrester, who were living near old Vernon, Hickman County, when my mother died there thirty-eight years ago. They knew the Pettys, Lewises, Nunnelys, Grahams, Slaydens, Meachams, etc. Also, I met Sister McLemore, who was formerly Miss Jennie Horner, of Perry County. She knows the Paschalls, my mother's people there.

It was my intention to go to Hornbeak on Saturday, March 11, but on account of the extremely bad condition of country roads I decided to come back again later and take in Hornbeak and many other near-by country places. I am anxious to go to Hornbeak to meet Brother John R. Williams. He is evidently one of the greatest men in West Tennessee. One finds people he baptized in nearly every congregation. His preaching is powerful and convincing. Brother Forrester said when he heard him the first time, he got so mad he wanted to leave the house, and would have done so, but couldn't get out without making a disturbance. Then, after hearing three or four sermons, he asked Brother Williams to hear his confession and baptize him.

Sister Forrester said she was then a Methodist, and she went to Brother Williams and said: "You've got my husband, but you'll never get me, with your water salvation." He replied: "Now you just keep on kicking till you kick all the gears off, and then you will be all right. The harder you kick, the sooner you'll get them off." Four years later, after reading the Bible through several times, trying to find the Methodist Church and its prominent doctrines there, she, too, made the good confession to Brother Williams and was later baptized. He said: "Well, you finally got them all kiked off, did you?" She said: "Yes, I guess so." Young preachers of this day find it hard to put convincing and convicting logic into their sermons to the same extent as did our old preachers. Here's wishing for Brother Williams many more years of usefulness and activity. Let us all honor more than ever the men who have "blazed the trail" and done the pioneer work. They are worthy of double honor, because they have "well done," laboring incessantly in word and doctrine.

The biggest boosters for the Advocate are the biggest workers in the church. It seems those two things go together. Get all the members to read the Gospel Advocate, and you will have a better working church. Try it.

I go to Obion next.

Bible Educational Fund.

BY A. M. BURTON.

The David Lipscomb College originated in the twofold desire on the part of disciples of Christ to see colleges in which children, while obtaining a literary education, would be taught daily, also, the Bible as the most important study of life and as the only rule of faith and practice, and, therefore, excluding all additions and devices of human wisdom from the work and worship of the Christian. This purpose was set forth in the original subscriptions to build the College in the following clause:

"The supreme purpose of the College shall be to teach the Bible as the revealed will of God to man and as the only and sufficient rule of faith and practice, and to train those who attend in a pure Bible Christianity, excluding from the faith all opinions and philosophies of men, and from the work and worship of the church of God all human inventions and devices. Such other branches of learning may be added as will aid in the understanding and teaching of the Scriptures and as will promote usefulness and good citizenship among men."

The main purpose of this school, without going into detail, is to teach the Bible as a textbook to all pupils alike, and to teach it in all its parts and benefits and blessings; its history; its literature; its characters; its business principles—industry, economy, diligence, just weights and measures, uprightness, integrity, fair dealing and common honesty—"all things that pertain unto life and godliness."

That the benefit of Christian religion may be placed within the reach of earnest, God-fearing young people who are eager to know and to do the will of God and to teach others the way of life, but who are unable to meet the financial cost of a college education, it is now proposed to start a twenty-thousand-dollar fund, of a self-perpetuating nature, as the directors may devise so as to be most practical, from which worthy applicants may be helped to the extent of half their expenses; the other half to be furnished by the student himself, through money earned during spare time or otherwise.

The amounts advanced from this fund shall be as loans, to be repaid at the rate of not less than fifty dollars each year after the student leaves college. A note shall be signed, without interest, for the amount received as a loan by the applicant himself, and this note shall be indorsed by two or more members in good standing of the applicant's home congregation—the latter being necessary both as a guarantee of the applicant's sincere desire to profit through sharing in the fund and to insure the perpetuation of the fund, that it may help other deserving applicants.

It is proposed to create the fund in the following manner: The writer, feeling that our best material for developing great and strong men for the future lies among those who are not able to wholly finance themselves through

David Lipscomb College, as has been the case in the past, is willing to subscribe ten thousand dollars of the fund, payable one thousand dollars annually. The other ten thousand dollars can be raised by getting one hundred ex-students or friends of the school to subscribe one hundred dollars each, paying ten dollars annually. Death of the subscriber, or any unavoidable necessity of life, to cancel the subscription, if necessary. Or if, for any reason, the College should depart from the principles laid down by its founders in the deed of transfer, and in its present by-laws, then this fund shall be returned to its donors or their heirs. Payment of subscriptions may be made twice a year, the first installment between December 1 and January 1, and the second between June 1 and July 1 of each year.

Having read the above proposition to Brother E. A. Elam, one of our directors, he at once said: "Put me down for one thousand dollars, payable as above, one hundred dollars per year for ten years, subject to the above conditions."

We all know the value of a good education. We are acquainted with boys who have had to work their way through school, who have graduated with honors and made a great success of their lives as helpers—teachers, preachers. Often the boy who has helped himself through school accomplishes more for the Master than those whose parents have been both willing and financially able to give them every advantage in life. Shall we not, as Christians, share the burdens with these boys, lend them a helping hand, and enable them to have more hours for study and self-improvement? There can be but one answer—a pledge to give ten dollars a year for the next ten years, with the assurance that it will be wisely expended on a deserving student now, and when repaid by him, on and on through the years, to help prepare others for their work in the Master's vineyard, where the harvest truly is plenteous, but the laborers are few.

This fund will be under the efficient management of the board of directors. The details of applying the fund to worthy young students will be worked out in due time.

Donations are solicited. Almost any one can give ten dollars per year, or one hundred dollars per year, or one thousand dollars per year, for ten years. Address all responses and donations to A. M. Burton, Life and Casualty Building, Nashville, Tenn.

Lessons from the History of Work in Mississippi.

BY LEE JACKSON.

With the beginning of the new year, while we are turning our vision toward renewed efforts in behalf of the cause for which we are supposed to stand, it may not be unprofitable for us to take a retrospect of the efforts made in the years of the past.

As I sit and write, there lies before me a long list of the names of men who in bygone time made noble, self-sacrificing efforts to permanently establish in Mississippi the simplicity and purity of New Testament teaching. Included in this list are such names as that of James A. Butler, Robert Ursery, David Holmes, James E. Matthews, William Clark, William E. Matthews, Alex. Graham, P. B. Lawson, Dr. S. R. Jones, W. M. Brown, T. J. Edmonson, Dr. J. P. Deams, J. M. Hackworth, Dr. W. N. McCain, George Plattenburg, W. J. Barber, Jacob Creath, R. W. Locke, Griffith Cathey, George W. Archer, W. A. Crane, and the names of many others, all of whom at some time in the past preached and labored for the cause of Christ in Mississippi. As great among those whom I have named can be mentioned Dr. William E. Matthews. He came to Mississippi from Alabama in 1828, and died at his home near the village of Coila, in Carroll County, in the year 1861, being about fifty-eight years old at the time of his death. In the columns of the Millennial Harbinger, Alexander Campbell once referred to Dr. Matthews as being the "distinguished Christian philosopher, of Mississippi."

Before the beginning of the year 1840 a congregation of men and women claiming to be "Christians only" was established at Battle Springs, in Hinds County, through the efforts of Elder William Clark. The roster of this first congregation in Mississippi contained the names of such men as Elder William Clark, John P. Dunn, Abraham Congleton, William E. Matthews, and others. These persons had all been Baptists, but under the leadership of William Clark and Dr. Matthews they laid aside their sectarian name and stood out boldly for gospel teaching and gospel worship. They were influenced to take this stand through the reading of the Christian Baptist and Millennial Harbinger, as edited and published by Alexander Campbell. This congregation at Battle Springs became strong both numerically and financially, and for a number of years its members labored nobly for the cause of truth. Dr. Matthews became an able preacher, and as a result of his work splendid congregations were built in Claiborne, Jefferson, and Wilkinson counties, in the southwest corner of the State. One of the congregations in Wilkinson County, known as "Chapel Hill," was near the home of Governor Scott; another one of them was situated a few miles east of Woodville, and became known as "Antioch;" another one in the same county was the strong and wealthy congregation first known as "Ebenezer," but afterwards called "Consolation." They worshiped in a large brick building, and one of the events in the history of the Consolation congregation was a visit by Alexander Campbell, when he preached several discourses for them. The Battle Springs congregation, as the mother of the other congregations around, continued until some years after the Civil War, when it ceased to exist. The Consolation congregation has also long since passed out of existence, and the old brick meetinghouse has been torn down.

About one mile south of the present town of Oakland, where we have a new congregation meeting for worship in a new meetinghouse, there once stood a commodious building in which some seventy-five persons known as Christians only met regularly for worship. This was during the years between 1845 and 1860, and this congregation was made up of some of the most prominent families in this section of country at that time. The meetinghouse was known as Brown's Chapel, and in this house such men as Carroll Kendrick, Jacob Creath, W. J. Barbee, and George Plattenburg did some of their splendid preaching. Alexander Campbell also once preached in this house. One of the old men now living in Oakland—about eighty-three years of age—remembers the time when Alexander Campbell preached here. The present congregation here in Oakland is about fifteen years old, and it is made up of the new people of a new generation, none of them having any knowledge of the fact that this prewar congregation existed here.

It is now not generally known among the readers of the Gospel Advocate that such men as Tolbert Fanning, of Tennessee; John T. Johnson, of Kentucky; and Moses E. Lard, of Missouri, ever preached in Mississippi, but they did; and two others must not be forgotten—William Baxter and Knowles Shaw. At one time before the Civil War, Baxter owned a home near Woodville, Miss., and Shaw, the composer and singer of sweet songs, lived for a while in Columbus, and held meetings at several places in the State. It was in 1842 that Tolbert Fanning made a visit to Columbus and held a meeting which resulted in sixty-eight additions. This congregation in Columbus, established by Fanning, remained true to New Testament simplicity for many years and did a great work for the support of the gospel in other places. At about the time that Fanning visited Columbus the congregation at Thyatira, in Tate County, was established by members of the Cathey's Creek congregation, in Tennessee. These brethren at once began their weekly Lord's-day worship, and the congregation continues to this present time, having done a great work for the cause of the Lord. Included in their roster of noble names we find such men as Griffith Cathey, Dr. Webber, R. W. Locke, and Alex. Cathey. Some very able men have preached for the Thyatira congregation, but none of them ever did a greater or more enduring work than that of the self-sacrificing B. W. Lauderdale, who labored with this congregation for six years. As a preacher, he never courted opposition and never made enemies, yet he was always lovingly bold in defense of the truth.

Only a few years later than the date of Fanning's work at Columbus a congregation was planted at Palo Alto, in what was then a part of Chickasaw County, as the result of the preaching of Dr. J. P. Deams. This congregation grew strong in numbers and wealth and became an effective working force in behalf of the gospel. The town of Palo Alto has ceased to be, and the congregation has ceased with the passing of the town. At the village of Prairie Mount, in Chickasaw County, and about twenty miles northeast from Palo Alto, another congregation was established through the joint efforts of Dr. J. P. Deams and Dr. J. M. Hackworth. It was in a small stream, perhaps a half mile north of Prairie Mount, that George Plattenburg was baptized, and with that congregation he did his first preaching. He possessed the advantages of a thorough education, and in process of time he became a forceful preacher, in addition to being noted as an educator and also as a writer. Not a vestige of Prairie Mount now remains, and the fact that this congregation once existed is generally unknown. And the same is true of a congregation known as "Middleton," in Montgomery County, about six miles from the present town of Winona. This congregation at Middleton was planted in the year 1848, under the preaching of W. S. Speer. Such men as Jacob Creath, Carroll Kendrick, T. W. Caskey, and B. F. Manire did a great deal of preaching at Middleton. The people of that community in this present generation are probably ignorant of the fact that this congregation ever existed.

Time and space forbid a lengthening of this story, and yet it is by no means finished. I have mentioned the name of no man who is now living, and I have carried my records back beyond the time when innovations, dissensions, and divisions were introduced as hindering causes to our success. An eminent Episcopal preacher, who is now dead, said to me some years ago that as an observer he was convinced that the failure of our plea in Mississippi was more largely due to dissensions and divisions in our congregations than to any other causes. This adverse criticism was by an old man who remembered the time when we were gaining ground in Mississippi, which, for some reason, we have since lost. The question arises: Is there any probability that we may profit from these criticisms of our enemies and from the experiences of our past history? Is it possible for us to learn that there is more to be gained for the permanency of the cause of Christ in Mississippi through a more general manifestation of the Spirit of Christ in our dealings with one another, so that there may be less of personal jealousies and factious rivalries?

Popery.

BY EARNEST A. LOVE.

Another pope has passed away, and the papers have given Roman Catholicism a great deal of free and favorable advertising. I can remember the deaths of three popes. Leo XIII. died in July, 1903. The day he died I was on my way from Fresno, Cal., to Santa Cruz, via San Francisco. From Stockton to San Francisco, I took a river boat, because it was cheaper. The trip was made at night, the boat leaving Stockton at six o'clock. The longshoremen, who all seemed to be Irish Catholics, "struck" for fifty cents an hour (they were getting forty cents), and came upon deck and engaged in the wildest carousals I have ever seen.

Of course, the death of the pope was a topic of conversation. I was younger then than now, and so expressed myself rather freely against Catholicism. From that day till this I have known that Irishmen are Catholics and that their religion is largely muscular. They were drinking, swearing, telling vulgar stories, and doing almost everything bad, and yet they resented my saying "the Catholic Church is a corruption of the true church." Some of them wanted to throw me into the river. I guess they thought that would prove my charges false.

There is no doubt that much of the Roman Catholic doctrine and many of the customs are borrowed from the heathen religions. They are idolatrous and even ridiculous in many instances. I say this to remind Protestants that old Rome is still trying to capture America, and we must not forget what it is that is after us. To-day there are those who would have us believe that Rome has changed; but the boast of Rome is that she never changes. Here are some facts. The priests still hear the confessions of their erring members in private and still grant absolution (absolve te)—that is, they still claim to forgive sins; they still think they can turn a piece of bread into a real Christ. To this priest-made god every Catholic bows the knee upon entering or leaving the church. Even the priest bows to, prays to, and kisses the god he has just made, and at the next mass he eats this god.

Also, the priests are still collecting money for pretending to pray souls out of purgatory, and they still believe that it is possible for a person to do more good works than necessary to save him, and that these good works are at the disposal of the pope and can be applied by him to others who are deficient. Furthermore, they still maintain that it is a crime for a priest to marry, and they still keep convents or nunneries where large numbers of women are kept behind closed doors and high walls, where no man may enter but a priest.

Now, if any one thinks Rome is changing, read the following, from the Nashville Tennessean, January 24:

"Thousands to-day paid homage to Benedict XV., whose body lay in the sacrament chapel of St. Peter's. An endless line of worshipers passed by the grilled door of the chapel, kissing the foot of the dead pontiff, which protruded through the chancel." "Pope Benedict's request that his body be not embalmed upset much of the traditional ceremony connected with the death of a pontiff." "Thousands who might have taken part in the customary ceremony of kissing the pope's foot were disappointed, although other thousands were enabled to make their obeisance as the dead pontiff lay for a while in the sacrament chapel."

Think how unthoughtful this pope was in requesting that his body be not embalmed! Think of the disappointment of those thousands who wanted so much to kiss the foot of a dead man, but were denied the privilege! Somebody is always taking the joy out of life. The Catholics have long wished for an American pope, and it is reported that the pope would accept an invitation to move his residence to America. Wouldn't that be grand! Then the Americans would get to do that kissing. I guess some Americans participated in that recent kissing fest. Does some one say, "Rome has changed?" Well, it needs to change some more yet.

The Tennessean for January 23 editorially gives the full title of a pope, which we quote as follows: "His Holiness, the Pope; Bishop of Rome and Vicar of Jesus Christ; Successor of St. Peter; Prince of the Apostles; Supreme Pontiff of the Universal Church; Patriarch of the West; Primate of Italy; Archbishop and Metropolitan of Roman Province; Sovereign of the Temporal Dominions of the Holy Roman Church."

Let us examine some of these titles.

"His Holiness." "Holiness" means separate from sin. There is no proof that popes are entitled to any distinction for their holiness. He, at least, has no more right to the title than any other servant of Christ. "The Pope." "This means 'papa.' He wants the whole world to call him 'papa,' yet he has neither wife nor children, so far as we know; but, of course, we don't know everything.

"Bishop of Rome." There never was such an office in the church of Christ. There were bishops of the church in every city, but no one man ever was allowed to rule a church in Bible times. "Vicar of Jesus Christ." This is perhaps the most blasphemous of all his claims. "Vicar" means "instead of." So the papa is here instead of Jesus Christ! That means that God's children must not look to Christ for help, but see the pope about it. To add blasphemy to blasphemy, the pope himself will likely pray to the Virgin Mary instead of Christ. This is Catholic doctrine and practice. Christ never asked for a vicar. He needs no vice president, as he maintains a living, spiritual communion with all his children. He never sleeps or goes on a vacation; so there is no need for a vicar.

"Successor to St. Peter." Peter was eyewitness of the resurrection of Christ, and in the very nature of the case could have no successor. No one can take the place of an eyewitness. It never was intended that any apostle should have a successor. The idea is not even hinted at in the New Testament. "Prince of the apostles." Peter was not prince or ruler of the other apostles. This is mere assertion. Peter is said to have had the keys of the kingdom of heaven, and could bind and loose. But that same power was given to all the apostles (John 20: 23) and to the whole church (Matt. 18: 18). Having the keys was a mere privilege and not an office.

"Supreme Pontiff." This is a ridiculous title. Before Christianity made its advent into Rome, certain heathen priests were required to look after the bridge across the Tiber. It is claimed that in little niches arranged along the bridge were placed idols; and as many people visited the bridge or crossed it, it gave these priests a great opportunity to come in contact with the people. So the bridge priests soon became important. The chief priest of the bridge was called "Pontifex Maximus," meaning "Supreme Pontiff," or chief bridge fixer. Now, will some one rise and explain why the "Vicar of Jesus Christ" still clings to the old heathen title of bridge priest? Nothing shows more clearly the heathen origin of popery.

"Patriarch of the West." "Patriarch" means "chief father." Then he is the chief father of the West. That does not mean much, since he has already claimed to be the Papa of the universal church—east, west, north, and south. But this title grew out of a struggle between Rome and Constantinople—the Greek and Roman churches. The Greek is the older of the two churches, and for a long time (until 1056) disputed Rome's claims to the primacy.

The remaining titles are all political. He might as well drop them now, for they are no longer recognized even by Catholic Italy. The pope claims the right to rule the world temporally, and he ruled it at one time almost completely, from about 800 to 1500; but from the days of Martin Luther till 1870 he continued to lose temporal power. At the latter date the troops of Victor Emmanuel II., King of Italy, marched into Rome, and the pope's dream of ruling as a temporal sovereign was rudely shattered. He now rules only the Vatican—the pope's private dwelling. Let us pray that God will deliver us from the "man of sin."

"Over the Hill."

BY JOHN T. HINDS.

It is true, of course, that our Lord said: "A prophet is not without honor, save in his own country." But this is not saying that such a thing is right or that Jesus indorsed it. No doubt he was stating the general truth in the matter; but the fact that it was the truth was detrimental to the Lord and has been of incalculable damage to both preachers and the church.

The same practice has come down to our own day, and is carried out not only in religious work, but in common things. The following lengthy quotation is from the editorial page of the Fort Smith Southwest American. It is so timely and well said that I give it without comment. I hope the time may come when we will use more common sense and economy in church work.

Did you have to leave your "old home town" to get recognition for your abilities?

Most people do. That's the chief reason we're a nation of roamers.

David Gibson, the business writer, defines an "expert" as "a fellow who lives one thousand miles from his customers and charges one hundred dollars a day."

Every human being is an expert of some sort. Like the big experts, he usually is underestimated at home and has to seek strangers to get a chance to demonstrate his powers.

A good many corporations do their banking business with out-of-town banks. They find it easier to get loans.

For instance, a Cleveland corporation will bank in Chicago, by mail, and a Chicago corporation bank in Cleveland.

Or, take a bright young advertising writer in Blankville. He finds it much easier to get clients in Blankville if he moves to New York or Chicago and opens offices.

Nearly all of us have the delusion that everything, including human ability, is better on the other side of the hill.

Distance lends enchantment.

"A prophet is not without honor, save in his own country."

When he goes back to the old home town, though they recognize him—claim him as one of the prominent ones.

We have just as good business ability here in Fort Smith as in any other city. And yet, the usual experience is that many of our brightest young men are compelled to migrate to a distant community to obtain recognition.

In turn, the bright young men come from the distant community to Fort Smith and step into the opportunities that should have gone to our own young men.

In the old home town a boy is looked on as a youth long after he has grown up and attained the powers of maturity.

Go back to the town you were raised in and take a census of your old-time schoolmates. Generally, the ones who had nothing except black failure predicted for them, have become successful men—in some distant community.

When business men get this "over-the-hill" stuff out of their heads, keeping the young men in the home town will cease to be a problem.

Atlanta (Ga.) Notes.

BY E. C. GOODPASTURE.

The West End Avenue, South Pryor Street, and East Point congregations conducted the last of a series of three union services at West End Avenue last Sunday night (March 12). This service was attended by a fine representation from all the congregations. Brethren Farmer, Bell, Boyd, Harwell, Johnson, Stroud, McDaniel, Dr. Patne, Hockaday, and Klingman, delivered stirring speeches. A stranger would have thought all were regular preachers. These services were highly beneficial, and were never better than this year.

The Ladies' Bible Class at West End is one of the most interesting features of our work just now. The class is studying Genesis. I prepare and mimeograph a list of questions on each lesson. Many are studying these questions who cannot attend the class. We are expecting fifty at our class next Thursday. This question system is the best I have been able to devise.

There was one confession at West End last Sunday (March 12). There was also one at South Pryor. Brother Hockaday and the South Pryor congregation are doing a great work. S. H. Hall will be with the South Pryor congregation in a meeting in May. We are all looking forward to a great meeting.

John A. Klingman is building up the church at East Point. The brethren there have planned greater things for this year.

Hugh E. Garrett, our field man, is still in South Georgia. He is now preaching in Americus. His last meeting was at Waycross. Though there were no visible results, yet the good seed was sown that will later bring forth fruit. Calls for meetings are coming in thick and fast. Brother Garrett's time is already filled for several months ahead. "The harvest indeed is plenteous, but the laborers are few."

J. B. Beck, who labors with the congregations at Brunswick, Summit, and McGregor, Ga., sends an encouraging report of his work. He is now in the midst of a meeting at Summit. Brother Billingsley's meeting at Brunswick was a decided success. There were eight additions, and many heard the primitive gospel in its original purity for the first time.

Your Co-Operation is Solicited.

Now is the time for you to help us extend the circulation of the Gospel Advocate. It is a fact the people are not reading religious papers as they did formerly. It is next to impossible for a publisher to publish a religious paper without a heavy loss. Paper and labor have both been so exceedingly high and it costs so much to produce a religious journal that, without the hearty coöperation and support of its constituents, the publishers must suffer a great loss. We are not complaining, and feel that the Gospel Advocate has fared as well as most religious journals. However, we earnestly request just now the hearty coöperation of every one of our readers in extending its circulation. An active worker in every congregation could easily double or triple the circulation of the paper in that congregation. We are receiving a number of new subscribers daily, but not so many as we can handle. We have room for many more.

SERMON OUTLINES

A Book of One Hundred and Fifty New Sermon Outlines

Just the book for preachers, elders, deacons, Bible-class teachers, and others that take public part in church services.

The book has one hundred and fifty sermon outlines and a helpful supplement containing funeral texts, marriage ceremonies, forms for church letters, and Hedge's "Rules" for debate.

A good book to use in your Lord's-day services, prayer meetings, and young people's meetings. Let the leader announce the subject, hand slips of paper containing different sections of the outline to the members who are to take part in the next meeting, requesting them to make a talk or read the scriptural references on that section of the outline. Or, let the leader put the outline on the blackboard, omitting the scriptural references, then ask the congregation to supply the correct scriptural references at the next meeting, and give reasons why they selected these references.

True Friends.

Make books your friends; enrich your life so doing.
And learn the volumes years have tried and known;
For great the treasure that is yours for taking,
Mid covers hid, that you make your own.

And you can learn the secrets of the ages
Of splendid lives that grew 'mid toil and pain,
Their high ambitions and their disappointments,
Who, yet undaunted, bravely rose again.

The Passing

He lay on a cot in a hospital ward, and nurses were walking on their heels and talking, from forte to fortissimo, round about. They were by no means unkind. They did all sorts of things for him that mattered little. The essential difference between them and him was that he was dying.

A soldier? No—that is, not in the definition that includes a gun and a uniform. He had obeyed marching orders from some higher source all his life, and now, with his drawn white face and a smile upon it, he listened for the voice of his commander.

Young and fair to behold? The contrary. He was old and poor, and if God had not come into the ward to be with him at the last he might have said:

"I fear that I shall be alone
At the very end;
Who will there be to comfort me,
And who will be my friend?"

But, as it was, his face shone and he seemed content. A man coughed and protested on the other side of the screen. But he did not hear and he did not behold. He was listening to music that was far out yonder where the morning star is singing, and he was looking into the flawless light that falls on tired eyelids at the last as noiseless and as gentle as the dew.

Who said that Death was a sorrowful thing? Who built up round about this tranquil and beautiful transition the somber and chilling solemnities, the ceremonies of woe, the austerities of garb and ritual that are so different from the warm, glad outpouring welcome at the threshold of the Father's house?

The man was always poor; he now is rich, with the sunless treasures of the kingdom of heaven glittering before him.

He was lonely; and now the seraphim and the cherubim flock round him, a being bright as they, as strong and free and radiantly pure.

He was hungry and shabby and unwelcome; he had not the wit, the dapper external presence, the gay gentility that would endear him to society at large.

Who put these roses by his bed? They came too late. He is beyond them now, in a garden by a river where the snow falls not and the canker never comes. Did flower petals ever drift athwart the din and dust of the Via Dolorosa of his life? Perhaps they did.

For before he closed his eyes, and this beautiful final smile of his began, there was in those eyes the faith of a child, that never grew old and was never broken. The men and women that make up the world might have been cruel; he suffered and was mute. From a nature gentle and quivering sensitive no rasping answer ever was returned. He did not seek his own. He was not what they call "a good business man."

They may have taken from him all he had. We do not know what the world did to him. We only know that above our clouds of battle thunder and our dim, distrustful senses there are trumpets sounding and the shining ones await his soul.—Philadelphia Public Ledger.

Making the Goal.

A boy never rises higher than his ideals. Life never overshoots its mark. Success keeps its eyes on the goal. Tell me, my boy, your ideals, show me your goal, and I will tell you what you will become if you do not loiter by the way and take your eyes from the goal.

That was a fine home run that you made the other day; but I noticed that you did not pause by the way, you did not dillydally, you did not waste time. No, your eyes were fixed on the goal, and something within you said: "Make the goal! Make the goal!" You did not have eyes for even your best friends in that noisy crowd; just then your attention, your energies, your very life were concentrated upon one thing—making the goal.

An aim, an object, a goal must always be before you if life is to be worth while. A young man with no goal before him is to be pitied. When he walks, he falls over stumbling-blocks, because he has failed to look ahead; when he runs, he lands out in the desert of nowhere.

When an active boy arises before daylight and turns the entire garden upside down before breakfast, he has an object, a goal. If you say to him, "Why do you get up so early and work so hard?" the boy looks at you in a disgusted way, wondering if you were ever a boy, as he replies: "Working? I am not working; I am going fishing!"

You see, the boy has a goal. He knows where the big, lazy perch hide in the depths of the still, black waters of the pool, and to-day he hopes to bring home the big fellow, the one he saw yesterday and dreamed about last night.

The boy worth while will have a goal, an object in life, as he grows older. Other things will appeal to him, will lure him on as the big trout or perch lured him in his boyhood days. Education, some vocation or profession, perchance some girl with dancing eyes, a bright smile, and a pure heart, a home of his own—one goal after another will rise before him in life, and one ideal after another will be set before his eager eyes.

These are God-given goals, helpful ideals. They lift and inspire; they tide a young man over the shallows and miseries of the self-centered life. The self-centered life of the very young person may remind us of the kitten that tries to circle about itself and play with its own tail, but the self-centered life of the mature person reminds us of the caged lion—shut up, alone; no goal beyond the four walls of the cage.

Boys, remember that honest, upright, pure ambition is of God—the ambition to be useful, to do something worth while, to make the most of your opportunities and powers, to be useful in the world.

Here is the mirror of life. Do not breathe upon it evil thoughts or impure desires or unholy passions, lest it be dim and useless. Look! Look within! Do you see that goal before your eyes? Make the goal, my boy, make the goal!—G. W. Tuttle.

At Home and Abroad

J. C. McQuiddy, in a private letter to Brother Srygley, says: "I am glad to tell you I am improving. I gain no flesh, but otherwise am much better."

After April 1 A. B. Barret's address will be Murfreesboro, Tenn., instead of Houston, Texas. He will begin a meeting at Columbia, Tenn., on April 9.

H. Leo Boles will conduct a meeting for the Highland Park church of Christ, Montgomery, Ala., beginning on April 9. A great meeting is anticipated.

A physician desires a location in which there is a Christian church in either Mississippi, Arkansas, or Tennessee. Address "Physician," care of the Gospel Advocate.

It is understood at this office that both of the daily papers of the city have agreed to publish Brother Hardeman's sermons every day during the Hardeman-Pullias meeting.

H. F. Pendergrass preached at Ostella, Tenn., last Sunday to a large audience. He reports the church there as in a growing condition, with good prospects for the future.

We have the following report from Gus Nichols, Berry, Ala.: "J. D. Tant closed a meeting here last night, with eleven baptized, one restored, the church edified, and a good interest aroused in the school."

From A. P. Hill, Brownsboro, Ala.: "We love the dear old Gospel Advocate. In the twenty-five years we have been keeping house we have been without it only one year. We do not want to be without it again."

E. A. Elam is in El Paso, Texas, preaching some and expecting to be benefited physically by the climate. The news has come that he is feeling better and expects soon to be back at David Lipscomb College with his classes.

John C. Watson, Antlers, Okla., in sending his renewal to the Gospel Advocate, says: "My father began reading the Advocate about fifty years ago, and I wish to keep it in the family. I think it the best religious journal published."

From W. Halliday Trice, Fresno, Cal., March 12: "Today was another fine day for the Nevada Avenue Church. Good crowds at both services and three baptized. A man and his wife were received by letter last Sunday. The outlook for 1922 is very encouraging."

R. E. Wright has changed his address from Wartrace, Tenn., to 263 North Avenue Twenty-five, Los Angeles, Cal. If any of our readers have friends there who are members of the church, they should write Brother Wright, that he may look them up and encourage them to attend church, if they are not already doing so.

J. C. Mayberry, Los Molinos, Cal., in renewing his subscription and sending us a new subscriber, says: "I have been a regular subscriber to the Gospel Advocate since about 1898 and have missed but few copies. It is a great pleasure to read of the noble sacrifices that the faithful preaching brethren are making to advance the cause of our Savior. They shall in no wise lose their reward."

From J. H. Hines, Montgomery, Ala., March 17: "The work at Highland Park church of Christ is moving along nicely. Three more have been added to the church—one by baptism and two by letter. C. C. Merritt visited us on March 15 and 16 and gave us two splendid discourses on mission work. We need more men like Brother Merritt and more preaching along the line of mission work. Churches would make no mistake in having Brother Merritt visit them."

From H. C. Harris, Tupelo, Miss., March 19: "From this date I expect to devote my whole time to preaching the gospel. For years I have been doing a good deal of preaching during the summer and preaching monthly the balance of the year. While not busy preaching I have been busy 'making tents,' but will try and keep busy preaching from now on. I have promised meetings enough to keep me busy most of the summer, but have not promised my time for spring and fall."

The following note comes from Mr. and Mrs. John M. Grissim, Lebanon, Tenn.: "We have been using the new literature for nearly three months, and we are pleased. Brethren Smith and Srygley make the points so clear, using so few words, that our Sunday-school pupils bring up the best lessons we have ever known of them. We really feel that both men have the sincere praise of the 'Grissim Corner band.' Inclosed you will find order for our literature for next quarter."

Sister Ella McDavid writes from Corona, Ala., as follows: "Our congregation was blessed on the second Lord's day in this month by the presence of A. D. Dies, of Oakman, Ala., an excellent gospel minister. He fully explained to his hearers the difference between service and worship. To present our bodies a living sacrifice to God means to work, teach, serve each day in the Master's service. Many expressed themselves by saying that Brother Dies' sermon had given them a new vision."

We hope the brethren who have sent articles to the Gospel Advocate for publication will be patient with us, as many good ones have had to wait for space. Some of the best articles we have are on the waiting list. Frequently good things will wait better than lighter matter. Let all the brethren whose articles have been delayed feel that this may be a compliment. Send on your good things, brethren, and be patient with us. There may be a drought ahead, when all this good material will be needed.

Mrs. Myrt Enoch, Paris, Tenn., Route 5, in a recent letter, among other things, says: "A few miles out from Paris a small band of Christians, five in number, are making a hard struggle amidst all kinds of opposition to meet each Lord's day to worship 'as it is written.' We have a reasonable crowd of young people, and especially juniors, whom I am trying to teach. We are using the literature from the McQuiddy Printing Company, and like it fine." This congregation is worthy of commendation, and we bespeak for it a great future.

From J. V. A. Traylor: "I filled my regular appointment at Harrisonville, Ky., on the second Lord's day in March. Largest crowds at both services we have had since last fall. The church is moving along very nicely. Brethren Hurst and Peak are very much interested in the Lord's work there, and have the ability to teach the Bible in its simplicity. The second Lord's day in next month will be my last time to preach for them for some time, as I will be in evangelistic work from the first of May until fall. Most of my work will be in Tennessee; however, I have one meeting to conduct in Oklahoma."

J. H. McBroom, Shelbyville, Tenn., writes: "I wish to congratulate the churches of Christ in Nashville for the splendid effort they are putting forth to hold a series of gospel meetings at the Ryman Auditorium. You may depend upon my hearty support to make the meeting a glorious success. Each member of the church of Christ should have enough love for the truth and the salvation of souls to sacrifice his personal desires and preferences, if necessary, in order to put forth one great, harmonious effort to preach the gospel in its original purity and power to the people of Nashville. Let every Christian in reach of the city attend the meeting. You may count on the church in Shelbyville for splendid cooperation."

William Behel reports a debate between O. C. Dobbs and Elder C. F. Parker, of the Primitive Baptist Church, at a Primitive Baptist meetinghouse twelve miles from Russellville, Ala. The debate began on February 27 and continued four days. The propositions discussed covered the main differences between the brethren and the Primitive Baptists. Parker affirmed that salvation to the alien sinner is a gift of God independent of the gospel. Brother Dobbs affirmed that faith, repentance, and water baptism are conditions of pardon to the alien sinner. Each affirmed his position on the general church question. Brother Dobbs did fine work in this debate, and the brethren were pleased with it. Great good should result from this debate.

Will J. Cullum writes concerning the East Tennessee work: "The work in this section (Rockwood) is progressing nicely, with enough work to employ several evangelists in establishing the cause of Christ in many places where the gospel has never been heard. Many counties in East Tennessee have no church of Christ in them. I am doing what I can with the facilities for travel that I have at my command (I walk). There are a number of places in reach of Rockwood and Dayton, where I am located, that I would like to work, but their being too far away to walk and get back in time for night service prevents my preaching at these places in the afternoon as I would like. I want to hold two mission meetings in July. I could use Tom Nix to a great advantage, if he could get support for his family. Will some congregation support him in two meetings to be held in towns of two thousand or more population and where the gospel has never been heard?"

BY M. C. K.

CHAPTER IX.

MISCELLANEOUS MATTERS.

There are several matters coming within the scope of this review which thus far have not received specific treatment and to which, because it is hoped they will serve still further to clarify the general issue in debate, it is now deemed proper to call attention. As has substantially appeared in all preceding chapters, the leading purpose of this review is to examine testimony which is supposed to throw light on the meaning of psallo in the New Testament; and the items to which reference is here made come under this head.

1. The bearing of the Lucian passage on the general meaning of "psallo" at that time. In Chapter VII., which treats of that passage at length, the following statement was made:

"The famous passage in question not only does not determine, but it does not even touch the question as to whether instrumental or vocal music is signified by the term psallo in its general usage at that time. However, it is the purpose to consider, in another place in this review, the bearing which it may be thought the passage has on this particular point."

First of all, it is proper here to refresh the reader's mind with two vital points which were definitely established in Chapter VII.: (1) That the term "lyre" in the passage, "it is impossible to psallein without a lyre," does not merely mean the musical instrument signified by that term, but any instrument whatever with which it is possible to psallein. Any other view of the passage would inescapably commit Lucian to the absurdity of teaching that there was but one musical instrument in the world with which it was possible to psallein! (2) That since the passage, in the light of its context and every other consideration, merely teaches that there must be some instrument before there can be psalloing, it follows that this particular passage determines nothing whatever as to what that instrument shall be.

Now, from these considerations, with all the premises furnished by the passage itself and by its context, and reasoning purely from the logic of all the facts taken at their full value, I respectfully maintain that it is utterly impossible to say, with absolute certainty, that instrumental music is signified by the passage at all. I do not say it is not. On the other hand, I would modestly refrain from dogmatism in a case where the logic of a situation so plainly forbids it. Hence, so far as the Lucian passage standing alone is concerned, avoiding any opinionated view that it supports either kind of music as against the other, I merely contend that, from all the premises in hand, no one can logically draw the conclusion that instrumental music is necessarily signified by the passage, for the simple reason that, when it is once established, as it has already been abundantly established in this case, that "lyre" in the passage merely means that some instrument is necessary in psalloing, it still remains an open and unsettled question as to what that instrument shall be with which the psalloing is done—"whether," as stated in Chapter VII., "with the human heart, as in song, or with an instrument made by human hands, as in instrumental music." And hence the conclusion is inevitable that the passage has no essential bearing at all on the current meaning of psallo in its general usage at that time; and therefore the oft-repeated and overworked assumption about the passage in the book here under review is utterly groundless without a solitary fact to sustain it.

2. The fatal conclusion of the book. In addition to the significant facts presented in Chapter II. on "the conclusion necessitated by the title-page," I wish now to show that it is not only a fact that the fatal conclusion there pointed out necessarily follows from the premises laid down in the book, but that the author of the book actually avows that conclusion, openly committing himself to the position that it is impossible to obey God in the command in psallo without instrumental music. The case does not call for argument further than a mere appeal to the facts. I shall, therefore, present the matter in his own explicit words and leave our readers to draw their own conclusion. Though he makes some gingerly approaches to it, yet he does not, in outspoken fashion, adopt that conclusion at the beginning of his argument, but he finally reaches it and announces it categorically and boldly. On page 52, taking a very pronounced step in that direction, he says: "The wonder is whether, with so much conclusive testimony, very many of those who shall come to see that they have been mistaken, will now declare that instrumental music unavoidably inheres in psallo, and that therefore to employ it is mandatory." That is strong language, but the position it sets forth is not only justified, but positively demanded, as we have seen, by his untenable construction of the language of Lucian. The reader will note also that it is the very opposite position for which I contend—namely, that instrumental music does not inhere in the word "psallo" at all.

Again, on page 311, referring to what he seems to think will be the future developments in the psallo controversy growing out of his book, he says: "Henceforth the question will not be, 'Are we at liberty to use instruments?' With the inherent meaning now so clearly shown, we may well ask, 'Does psallo make playing mandatory as acido does singing?" That is another significant and strong statement, but not too strong for the premises he has laid down.

But on page 172, boldly announcing for himself and for his readers the conclusion which he calls upon them all to adopt, he says: "We must unite in agreeing that if we forego musical instruments, we cannot conform to the divine injunction to psallein." There, clear as the sunlight and without any mincing of words, we have it. The position that "the divine injunction to psallein" cannot be obeyed without instrumental music is clearly, distinctly, and openly avowed. Hence, according to his teaching, every church of God in the world to-day which does not have and use in its worship an organ or some other musical instrument made by human hands is in open rebellion against God. With him, it is no longer even a question of liberty, but a question of absolute requirement. Hence, according to the doctrine which he now boldly avows, instrumental music is as much in psallo as immerse is in baptizo, and we are no more doing what is commanded in psallo till we play an instrument of music than we are doing what is commanded in baptizo till we immerse. No matter whether any of the churches shall ever accept the unreasonable and absurd doctrine or not, it is clearly and indisputably the doctrine of this book and of its author. Neither is it any more absurd and preposterous than many other things have been found to be in this book. In fact, if ever a book deserved a premium for such things, I think this one deserves it.

3. His treatment of the Revised Version. After seeing, as exposed in a former chapter, that the author of this book actually presumes to sit in judgment on the scholarship of Sophocles, the renowned Harvard professor and eminent Greek lexicographer of the Roman and Byzantine periods, our readers should not be surprised to find that he presumes to act in the same rôle toward that illustrious company of similar American and English scholars who, between the years 1870 and 1885, produced for the English-speaking world the eminent Revision of the King James or Authorized Version of the Bible; and I leave them to form their own idea of what it means as to himself when an author, for any reason, casts slurs and insinuations upon such a body of men. For example, he not only speaks of the Revisers as making an effort "to save the Prayer Book and throw dust in the reader's eyes" (page 115), but, not able to meet the unanswerable fact that these world-renowned translators, both of the Authorized Version and of the Revised Version, translated psallo into English by "sing" and not by "play," and referring to the use made of this fact by the opposition, he says: "To what, then, in their desperation, do they essay to cling? To the word 'sing' and the fact that 'scholarly (?) Revisers' permitted it to still stand in lieu of psallo." (Page 204.)

Now, was that ever surpassed or even equaled? Think of the slur in that interrogation point in parenthesis after the word "scholarly!" Think of who cast the slur and on whom it is cast! What does it mean? It means that the author of this book presumes to call in question the scholarship of that eminent body of Revisers!! But who were the Revisers? That the general public, as far as my book might be read, might appreciate the bearing and weight of their authority in settling the meaning of psallo, I took pains, in the course of its preparation, to tell who the Revisers are, and I here copy the statement:

"Even the half dozen men with whom the great enterprise originated about forty years ago, together with the thirty-nine scholars invited by the Convocation of Canterbury to assist in the work, constituted a company of men whose scholarship and varied learning were sufficient to command the respect and admiration of the literary world; but when this number was subsequently augmented by another list of names with equally brilliant attainments, which brought the whole number of Revisers to sixty-seven on the British side, and which has since been known as the English

Company of Revisers, there was a body of men which, for broad and varied learning in the field of Biblical research, was perhaps seldom ever equaled and never surpassed.

"But this is not all. Soon after the work of forming the English Company was well under way, its promoters decided to invite the coöperation of certain eminent American scholars; and, accordingly, there were appointed in this country two Companies corresponding to the two English Companies—one for the Old Testament and the other for the New, the late William Henry Green, of Princeton, Chairman of the former, and the late Theodore D. Woolsey, ex-President of Yale University, Chairman of the latter. In all, there were, on the British side, thirty-seven members of the Old Testament Company, and thirty of the New Testament Company; and on the American side, fifteen in the Old Testament Company, and nineteen in the New Testament Company, making a grand total, including all on both sides of the Atlantic, of one hundred and one scholars." (See Instrumental Music in the Worship, pages 86, 87.)

Now, when our readers stop to reflect that the author of such a book as the one here under review can get the consent of his mind to pronounce adversely on the scholarship of such a company of men, they will have another significant pointer as to how far such a book itself is likely to be worthy of their confidence.

4. A strange and suggestive contrast. To enable our readers further to form a just estimate of the book here under review as a strictly sectarian and partisan production rather than an unprejudiced and impartial examination of facts upon their own merits, I here follow its author's disparaging opinion of the great work of the English and American Revisers with his very high opinion of his own work. The contrast is as suggestive as it is vivid. He not only intimates on page 42 the "joy" which his book will bring "to that great and noble company who, tiring of discord, long for union," and significantly adds that his "own pleasure will be marred by the thought of the fearful responsibility which" his "work unavoidably places upon some," but on pages 100 and 101, speaking again of his own book, he says: "That the volume you now hold presents to you, dear reader, more information regarding the meaning of psallo than was ever beheld by any translator or body of translators, there can be scarcely a doubt." That certainly puts the merits of his book in the superlative degree, so far as his own opinion is concerned. He not only sets aside that illustrious company of scholars, one hundred and one in number, who spent fifteen years of arduous labor in making the Revision, but at one fell swoop he brushes aside "any translator or body of translators" in all history and actually declares that his book furnishes "more information regarding the meaning of psallo than" any or all of them combined "ever beheld"! That is, no one of them nor all of the one hundred and one scholars of the Revision combined, nor any other number of scholars in all the ages, "ever beheld" the amount of "information" on psallo this man is able to give! But, in spite of this note of high praise sounded by himself about his book, and to say nothing of numerous other defects which this review has disclosed, when our readers remember that its author so signally missed the mark even on where psallo does or does not occur in Clement as to claim eighteen instances when really there are only six, they will probably have some "doubt" about both the quantity and the quality of "information" about psallo imparted by this book.

5. *The claim that the translation of psallo by "sing" does not "preclude the use of the instrument."* Evidently feeling, in spite of his reflection upon their work, the force of the translation by the Revisers, he attempts to break it by quoting Professors Riddle and Dwight, members of the American Committee, as saying they "do not think" or had "no recollection" that the Revisers intended "to preclude the use of the instrument" (pages 308-309), and on pages 268 and 269 he asks: "Can a fair mind believe that the Revisers intended to exclude instruments, or that it is honest to quote them or their Revision against the instrument, in view of these statements?" Most assuredly "a fair mind" can so "believe." Of course no mortal but the Revisers themselves could know what they "intended" or did not "intend," but that is not the question and has nothing whatever to do with the question. It is astonishing that any thoughtful person would think that it has anything to do with it. Moreover, his statement on page 268, "Surely the Revisers know their own meaning," is wide of the mark and has nothing to do with the question. We are not only in no wise concerned about what the Revisers "intended" or did not "intend," but we do not have to consult them about their meaning. If they did not mean what they said, the fact would be a sad reflection upon them; and as to the meaning of what they said, another court has exclusive jurisdiction here—namely, the court of English lexicography. Hence, we do not need, and are in no wise concerned with, what Gentlemen Dwight and Riddle or any other members of the Revision Committee think, believe, or know, except in so far as they have expressed themselves in their translation. For the meaning of the English words used in their translation or for what is included or excluded, we are in no sense dependent on them. In the lexical argument in Chapter III, this statement was made:

"A lexicon, then, is 'to fix the bounds' or 'to mark the limits of' words. Of course this means that it must fix such 'bounds' or such 'limits' as include all that belongs to the meaning of the word, and everything not so included is excluded. Hence the correct definition of words is both inclusive and exclusive. It includes all that the word means, and whatever it does not include is excluded from the meaning of the word; otherwise it is no correct definition at all."

I respectfully add that the Revisers were not engaged in a work to regulate the worship of God or anything else by what they "intended" or did not "intend," except in so far as their intentions were expressed in their translation. They were engaged in translating Hebrew and Greek into English, and they translated "psallo" by sing. That settles it. We know what "sing" means, and we know it has no musical instrument in it except the voice. It neither includes nor excludes an instrument any more than it includes or excludes the dance. It has nothing to do with either. Of course we can use an instrument when we sing, just as we can dance when we sing, but neither the instrument nor the dance is in the word "sing." Some of the strongest witnesses he summons to help him on what the word includes and excludes show that they themselves feel the force of this unanswerable fact and cannot meet it. On page 301, Prof. William Hardy Alexander, of the Department of Greek and Latin in the University of Alberta, says of psallo: "In New Testament Greek, it has, no doubt, the meaning to sing, to make music with the human instrument, but there is nothing whatever to show that this idea excludes accompaniment." Of course not, and "there is nothing whatever to show that this idea excludes dancing, but neither dancing nor the 'accompaniment' is in the word psallo or sing; and, in its New Testament usage, Professor Alexander is forced to tell us plainly that there is 'no doubt' about its 'meaning to sing, to make music with the human instrument.' And on pages 285 and 286, J. Corrión Hutchinson, Emeritus Professor of Greek in the University of Minnesota, says: "It did not necessarily, in common usage, imply an instrument, nor did it necessarily imply the lack of an instrument." Exactly so, the idea of the instrument not being in the word, the word neither implied the presence of the instrument nor the absence of it. In other words, the idea not being in the word at all, it, of course, had nothing to do with it. It does not mean "to play an instrument," except, as Professor Alexander says, "to make music with the human instrument."

Hence, that eminent English classic, the Revised Version of 1881 and 1885, representing, in a body of one hundred and one men, the broadest and profoundest scholarship of both Europe and America, stands as a mighty bulwark of strength in support of the contention that psallo in the New Testament means to sing. Moreover, its illustrious predecessor, the King James or Authorized Version, made three hundred years ago by another similar company of learned men of that time, in spite of the fact that the religious body, the Anglican Church, under which it was brought forth, favors and practices instrumental music in the worship, stands as another tower of strength in support of the same contention. In fine, the unanimous verdict of the eminent translators of both the Authorized and Revised Versions of the Bible is that the term psallo, at the opening of the New Testament period, had come to mean to sing, and they so translate the word in the New Testament. This argument has never been answered, and I am profoundly convinced that it never will be.

6. A remarkable contradiction. On page 172, commenting on the passage from Lucian, "it is impossible to psallein without a lyre," the author of this book, as already quoted in another connection, categorically declares: "If we forego musical instruments, we cannot conform to the divine injunction to psallein." But, on page 264, he quotes Professor Ropes, of Harvard University, as categorically saying: "The word does not necessarily imply the use of an instrument." Thus, the author of this book says that the use of the instrument "inheres" in psallo, is necessarily implied by it, and that "we cannot conform to the divine injunction" without it; but his eminent Harvard witness and Greek professor says it does not inhere in it and that "the word does not necessarily imply the use of an instrument!" He says it does, but his witness says it does not; and I am inclined to believe that all impartial and well-informed readers will agree with his witness.

7. The general character of the book. By this I do not mean its literary character, for with this feature of the book I have been but little concerned. I refer purely and exclusively to its logical character, including its manner of dealing with authorities. In addition to the illogical feature, instance after instance of positive suppression and perversion of the language of authorities has been given in this review until the utter unreliability of the book, as a whole, has been clearly and incontrovertibly established. That is, in view of such facts, one cannot know, without information from some other source, that any given thing found in this book may not have been dealt with in precisely the same way, and, therefore, the book is unreliable.

And hence, finally, concerning any passage that has not been subjected to examination in this review, I now make the general observation that a cause which, in order to make itself appear plausible, has to resort, at one point, to the suppression of some and the addition of other vital words and phrases in connection with quotations from authorities, is not likely to be able to present anything, at another point, that could not be similarly exposed or answered in some other way. Furthermore, in the light of his incorrect use of Lucian and Clement, I do not hesitate to say that I believe the language of any other author whom he attempts to use in support of instrumental music in psallo in the New Testament, if critically examined in the light of its context and other facts, could be shown to support no such idea. I have the very best of reasons for this belief—namely, the fact that the world's greatest Greek-English lexicographers covering the New Testament period as a specialty, Thayer and Sophocles, say, by the definitions in their lexicons, that they found no example at all in that period with such a meaning. Moreover, in the list of authorities consulted by Sophocles in the preparation of his great lexicon are some of the most prominent authorities, mentioned in his list specifically by name, which this book parades as supporting its contention. Does the reader believe that two such great lights as Thayer and Sophocles would examine such authorities and not be able to find in them anything which the author of this book could find? With all due respect for all on both sides of the controversy, I do not hesitate to record my profound conviction that all well-informed and impartial readers will answer this question in the negative. Beyond all reasonable doubt, psallo in the New Testament means to sing.

[One more chapter, which, the Lord willing, will appear in our issue two weeks from to-day, will close this review. —EDITOR.]

"The Hired Preacher."

BY F. W. SMITH.

I have placed the heading of this article in quotation marks, not because of anything in the communication which follows, but because of its frequent use and the stigma sought to be placed upon it. I have received from my old friend and brother, J. G. Allen, Muskogee, Okla., the following for prompt notice:

We have been discussing a question of Bible authority for the practice that is becoming common among the brotherhood of hiring a preacher to do all the preaching for the congregation. It is not believed that Paul's stay at Ephesus or Corinth can be classed with the hired preacher, because he worked to support himself while there. It is claimed by some that in hiring one man to do all the preaching for one congregation, that it is a rejection of God's order as much as Israel did when they rejected the judges for a king. Please give this query prompt notice.

There is an abundance of Bible authority for "hiring" (if one prefers that word) of religious teachers, those who devote their time to teaching the word of God. In writing of religious teachers, those "who labor in the word and in teaching," the apostle says: "For the scripture saith, Thou shalt not muzzle the ox when he treadeth out the corn. And, The laborer is worthy of his hire." (1 Tim. 5: 17, 18.) From this it seems that the word "hire," as applied to a religious teacher, is not bad, after all—at least, not quite so bad as some people try to make it appear. Of course Paul's example at Corinth cannot be classed with the "hired preacher," and neither did Paul intend his example as a rule to be followed, only under the same peculiar circumstances which confronted him at Corinth. When Paul went to Corinth, there was no church to "hire" him, and he made tents and taught the people the word of God just as any other faithful preacher would do under like circumstances. But when a church was planted in Corinth and the divine burden of supporting their teachers rested upon them, Paul refused to take anything from them, not because it was not his right, for he said of Barnabas and himself: "Have we not a right to forbear working? What soldier ever serveth at his own charges? who planteth a vineyard, and eateth not the fruit thereof? or who feedeth a flock, and eateth not of the milk of the flock?" (1 Cor. 9: 6, 7, 14.)

There was a reason for refusing their support—viz., a reflection had been cast upon Paul's claims to apostleship, that he was insincere, and consequently an impostor, and against these aspersions he defended himself. "If to others I am not an apostle, yet at least I am to you; for the seal of mine apostleship are ye in the Lord." (1 Cor. 9: 2.) And: "Truly the signs of an apostle were wrought among you in all patience, by signs and wonders and mighty works." (2 Cor. 12: 12.) Rather than have his work injured, he said: "If we sowed unto you spiritual things, is it a great matter if we shall reap your carnal things? . . . Nevertheless we did not use this right; but we bear all things, that we may cause no hindrance to the gospel of Christ." (1 Cor. 9: 11, 12.) If a church should insinuate that a teacher is simply after money, he, like Paul, should refuse to accept anything from them. But

Paul rebuked the church at Corinth in this matter: "For what is there wherein ye were made inferior to the rest of the churches, except it be that I myself was not a burden unto you? forgive me this wrong." (2 Cor. 12: 13.) Again, he said: "I robbed other churches, taking wages of them that I might minister unto you." (2 Cor. 11: 8.)

I have given these facts because of the wrong use made of Paul's making tents while preaching the gospel. I believe that both churches and preachers have been injured by the use some have made of this matter. Now to the main point in the query, "hiring one man to do all the preaching for one congregation." This is a very poor and unscriptural view of a New Testament church. For one man to do all the teaching or preaching for one church, or a dozen churches as to that matter, whether in the pulpit or out of it, is not contemplated in the New Testament. The writer of Hebrews was not writing simply to evangelists, but to all the church, when he said: "For when by reason of the time ye ought to be teachers, ye have need again that some one teach you the rudiments of the first principles of the oracles of God; and are become such as have need of milk, and not of solid food." (Heb. 5: 12.) This contemplates that "all the church" should become teachers. But it may be asked, "Who are the appointed teachers of the church?" Paul, addressing the elders of the church of Ephesus, said: "Take heed unto yourselves, and to all the flock, in which the Holy Spirit hath made you bishops, to feed the church of the Lord which he purchased with his own blood." (Acts 20: 28.) According to this, all the elders in the church at Ephesus were to be teachers or feeders of the church; but, according to further instructions, the same apostle said: "Let the elders that rule well be counted worthy of double honor, especially those who labor in the word and in teaching." (1 Tim. 5: 17.) To know what is meant by the word "honor" here, we have only to read on: "For the scripture saith, Thou shalt not muzzle the ox when he treadeth out the corn. And, The laborer is worthy of his hire." (Verse 18.)

Now, suppose a congregation does not have in its membership a man that gives time to the study of the Scriptures and who is competent to teach publicly and from house to house the word of God. Would not Paul's example in remaining so long at Ephesus and Corinth be Bible authority for a church to have some competent teachers to come among them and teach as Paul did? I am frank to say that if a church has a man who is recognized as an elder who is competent and willing to devote his time to the work of publicly and privately teaching the people, the church should support him and put him to work. But as to how long a religious teacher, call him a preacher or an evangelist, may scripturally remain with and assist a church in teaching the word of God, I do not know; and neither do I believe any one else knows. The same principle that would justify a church in inviting a religious teacher to come and preach the gospel in their community for two or four weeks would justify that church in keeping said teacher or preacher so long as a needed work was to be done which the church felt unable to do itself.

Were the Churches of the New Testament Baptist Churches?

BY F. B. S.

In the "Query Department" of the Western Recorder, the editor, in answer to the question, "Is the Catholic Church the oldest church in the world, and did the Baptists and all others come out from the Catholics?" makes the following statement: "Baptists started in New Testament times, and churches after the New Testament pattern have never been extinct. They have not always been called Baptist churches, but their principles and practices easily identify them as Baptist churches. They were never in Rome, and, hence, never came out from Rome."

The brother says, speaking of the churches of the New Testament, that "they have not always been called Baptist churches." They were never called "Baptist churches" in the New Testament, and were never so called anywhere else for many years after the New Testament was written. Paul says, "All the churches of Christ salute you" (Rom. 16: 16), but he does not say that any Baptist church ever saluted any one. Paul addressed both his letters to "the church of God at Corinth," but he never wrote any letter to "the Baptist Church" at Corinth or any other place. If it is the same church, why has it changed its name? Does the New Testament authorize a change of the name?

But the brother says that "their principles and practices easily identify them as Baptist churches." Instead of trying to identify the New Testament churches with the Baptist churches, I think the brother had better be trying to identify the Baptist churches with the New Testament churches. If any changes are necessary to complete this identification, the Baptist churches will have to make the changes. What principle or practice of the Baptist churches identifies them with the New Testament church? It must be something peculiar to the Baptists. If the Baptists have a principle or practice which some other church has, the brother could not claim identification on that ground; because, if another church has the same principle or practice, it would come as near identifying it as it would the Baptist Church. So the brother can see that, to prove identification by principles and practices, he must show those that others do not have.

If the brother says the Baptists practice immersion, I answer: "So do I." If that fact identifies the Baptist churches with the New Testament churches, what is the reason it does not identify the church that I belong to with the New Testament churches? Baptists believe that one can be saved without baptism, but so do the Methodists and Presbyterians. If this identifies the Baptist churches with the New Testament churches, why does it not also identify the Methodist and Presbyterian churches with the New Testament churches? Baptists believe that one is saved by faith only, but so do the Methodists; and if this identifies the one, it will identify the other also. Baptists do not take the Lord's Supper every Lord's day, but neither do the Methodists nor the Presbyterians.

Then, what is the distinctive principle or practice of Baptist churches that causes our brother to set up such a claim? There were some principles and practices of the New Testament churches which lead me to doubt the claim. For instance, in the New Testament, to inquirers who said, "Brethren, what shall we do?" Peter replied: "Repent ye, and be baptized every one of you unto the remission of your sins." (Acts 2: 38.) Do these Baptist churches who are now claiming to be identical with the New Testament model tell inquirers this? They do not. Suppose they are like the New Testament churches in a few things, does that prove identity? They must be like the New Testament in every essential thing to be identical. In the New Testament, when Ananias went to the penitent Saul and found him fasting and praying, he said: "And now why tarriest thou? arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord." Do Baptist churches of the present day tell penitent ones to do that? I think not. How, then, are they identical with the New Testament churches? They do not preach the same things nor wear the same name. Strange identification!

In the same article, this brother, it seems to me, went out of his way to strike at something which he calls "the Disciples or Campbellites." In these words: "The Disciples or Campbellites had their origin with Mr. Campbell, who at one time was a Baptist. Their chief dogma of baptismal remission came from Rome."

If I understand to whom the brother refers, the people whom he calls "Disciples or Campbellites" do not hold to the doctrine of baptismal remission as taught by the Catholics. If I understand their teaching, they hold that water has no efficacy to pardon sins, and they do not teach baptismal remission any more than they do faith remission. They teach that Christ remits sins, and that faith and baptism are only conditions upon which he remits them. They teach also that repentance sustains the same relation to the remission of sins that baptism does. For the same reason the brother could as truthfully say they preach repentance remission as baptismal remission. Peter, not the Catholics, put repentance and baptism together "unto the remission of sins." Why call this a Catholic dogma, unless the apostle Peter was a Catholic? Baptism unto the remission of sins should not be a cheap dogma, but it ought to be preached as the apostles preached it, and no church can claim to be identical with the New Testament churches that does not preach it as they did.

The self-emptying of Christ was not a single loss or bereavement, but a growing poorer and poorer, until at last nothing was left him but a piece of ground where he could weep and a cross whereon he could die. He renounced all that heart and flesh hold dear, until, without friend or brother, without one tone of love, amid the mocking laughter of his slanderers, he gave up the ghost. Surely he trod the wine press alone.—A. Kuyper.

Query Department

A brother asks for an explanation of Rev. 14: 1-6, especially verse 3.

In our efforts to explain passages from Revelation, we should be careful to obey one statement in Revelation: "I testify unto every man that heareth the words of the prophecy of this book. If any man shall add unto them, God shall add unto him the plagues which are written in this book: and if any man shall take away from the words of the book of this prophecy, God shall take away his part from the tree of life, and out of the holy city, which are written in this book." There is more danger in adding something to it than there is in taking something away. I think there have been more theories built upon Revelation than are not in it, and, therefore, more added to it, than any other book in the Bible. I know the language is applicable to any book in the Bible; but in view of the fact that this book has been used more by wild speculators than any other book of the Bible, it seems proper that the Holy Spirit should have given this warning in the very place where it is found. The caution is found where it is most needed.

With this caution before me, I now quote the exact language inquired about: "And I saw, and behold, the Lamb standing on the mount Zion, and with him a hundred and forty and four thousand, having his name, and the name of his Father, written on their foreheads. And I heard a voice from heaven, as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of a great thunder; and the voice which I heard was as the voice of harpers harping with their harps; and they sing as it were a new song before the throne, and before the four living creatures and the elders; and no man could learn the song save the hundred and forty and four thousand, even they that had been purchased out of the earth." (Rev. 14: 1-3.)

This much covers all about which the brother makes special inquiry. I can give no better explanation of this passage than that given by Adam Clarke:

A Lamb stood on the mount Zion. This represents Jesus Christ in his sacrificial office. Mount Zion was a type of the Christian church. And with him a hundred and forty-four thousand. Representing those who were converted to Christianity from among the Jews. (See chapter 7: 4.) His Father's name written in their foreheads. They were professedly openly and practically the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus. Different sects of idolaters have the peculiar mark of their god on their foreheads. This is practiced in the East to the present day, and the mark is called the sectorial mark. Between eighty and ninety different figures are found on the foreheads of different Hindoo deities and their followers. The voice of many waters. That is, of multitudes of various nations. The voice of harpers. Though the sounds were many and apparently confused, yet both harmony and melody were preserved. They sung a new song. Composed on the matters and blessings of the gospel, which was just now opened on the earth. But new song may signify a most excellent song; and by this the gospel and its blessings are probably signified. The gospel is called a new song. (Ps. 96: 1.)

The above quotation is fully as much as I know about the passage, and perhaps more. Let us be careful not to add to or take from "the words of the prophecy of this book."

F. B. S.

A brother who desires his name withheld asks the following: "If a church is raising money with which to build a new meetinghouse, is there anything unscriptural or out of order in the sisters' meeting and making garments to be sold or in some other way helping to raise the necessary funds?"

It is scriptural for the sisters and every other member of the church to do all that they can in raising the necessary funds for building a house or doing anything else that the work of the church requires to be done. Of course, nothing that is wrong within itself should be done; neither that which is right should be done in an illegal or unscriptural way. It is not right to pervert the Lord's way of doing a thing. If the question implies that the sisters are to organize themselves into a "Ladies' Aid Society" or something similar to such an organization, wrong would be done. It is difficult, it seems, for a group of Christians to do any work without getting the idea that they must "organize." The church is the only scriptural organization for such work, and it needs no organizations within it to accomplish the Lord's will. There is ample scope and liberty for every child of God to exercise fully and freely all of the God-given agencies of an individual Christian in the local congregation. The sisters can make garments and sell them to help raise funds as well as the brothers can raise hogs, cattle, corn, wheat, and cotton. Indeed, I think it very commendable in the sisters of a congregation to raise chickens and turkeys and other poultry, sell eggs, and make and sell garments and dairy products for the support of the gospel and to help carry on the Lord's work.

H. LEO BOLES.

J. F. Milby asks: "(1) What is the meaning of Matt. 24: 22? Who are the elect as mentioned here? (2) What is meant in Rom. 11: 25 by the phrase, 'until the fullness of the Gentiles be come in?'"

(1) Matt. 24: 22 says: "And except those days had been shortened, no flesh would have been saved; but for the elect's sake those days shall be shortened." Christ is here giving a prophecy and description of the destruction of the Jewish temple at Jerusalem. He states that there shall be "great tribulation" when Jerusalem is besieged and that the destruction shall be great, that the suffering shall be intense. In Jerusalem there would be dwelling Jews, both the believing and the unbelieving, at the time that the Romans attacked and besieged the city. Jesus tells his disciples: "Pray ye that your flight be not in the winter, neither on a Sabbath." If the Romans should besiege the city in the winter season, it would be more difficult and severe on the believing Jew to make his flight or escape from the city. Again, if they should attempt to escape on the Sabbath day, it would be difficult, as the gates of the city were always closed on the Sabbath day. The believing Jew would be better prepared for the flight, as he would be expecting it, basing his faith upon the prophecy of Jesus. The destruction would be so complete that unless in the providence of God the time should be shortened for the sake of the believing Jew, who was in this instance the elect, no flesh should be saved. The only safety of the Christian Jew was in his flight, and this flight would be more successful as he was prepared for it.

(2) The Jews had rejected Christ, and Paul bases their rejection upon the hardness of their heart. He teaches that there will be a time when the Jews will give up their hardness of heart and accept the Savior. In the meantime the Gentiles will come into the church—that is, large numbers of the Gentiles will enter into the church before the conversion of the Jews takes place. It seems that the hardness of the Jews is not to continue forever. The acceptance of Christ by the Gentiles is to have its influence in removing the hardness of the Jews. The acceptance by the Gentiles of Christ is to provoke the Jews to accept him. I do not know when that time will be. When the full sum of the Gentiles enter Christ, the hardness of the Jews will cease and they will accept Christ.

Who Are Christians? No. 1.

BY C. R. N.

Several letters have reached me, asking that I write an article in the Gospel Advocate touching the subject of there being Christians in the various religious organizations, or churches, especially the Missionary Baptist Church, since the Baptists immerse those who are members of their communion. (It should be remembered that the fact that one has been immersed does not make him a Christian. There is not only certain faith, but a motive which must be in the heart of those who are scripturally baptized.) One request is: "Commit yourself clearly on the matter. Can there be Christians in the Baptist Church?" Such request does not come from one who has heard me preach, else he would know that I do not leave the people to guess my views on any question I may discuss.

The Missionary Baptists in the South must believe that there is some kind of "baptismal grace" which flows or exudes through the hands of the "regular ordained Baptist preacher." In the act of administering baptism, which validates the baptism, or that the validity of baptism depends on the "authorizing act" of a "regular" Missionary Baptist Church. This is evident from the fact that the Missionary Baptists engage in "union meetings" with Methodists, Presbyterians, and the Christian Church, whom they recognize as Christians, and, too, declare the converts made in such "union meetings" are Christians. Some of the converts made in these "union meetings" may be immersed "into the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit" by a Methodist minister who himself has been immersed. Though the convert and the minister are each recognized by the Missionary Baptists as Christians, they refuse to recognize the baptism of the man as valid. It must follow that the faith which makes one a Christian is not sufficient to make one a Baptist; else one does not become a Baptist by the faith which makes one a Christian, but by baptism administered by a "regular ordained Baptist preacher," on the authority of a "regular Missionary Baptist Church." A member of the Roman Catholic Church may love, and win the love of, a good woman, and they may covenant to abide the marriage relationship in the sight of Jehovah. The marriage ceremony may be said by one who has been authorized by the State to function in such capacity, but such ceremony is not recognized by the Roman Catholic Church, and in the eyes of the Roman Catholic Church the parties are not married, and will not be married, no matter how devotedly they love each other nor by what State officer the ceremony was performed. Indeed, the ceremony must be said by an authorized agent of the Roman Catholic Church before it is valid. The legality of baptism from a Baptist viewpoint depends on the authority of the Baptist Church. The Roman Catholics contend for "apostolic succession;" and the Missionary Baptists in the South (most of them) contend for "church succession," by which they mean they have a regular succession of churches with a flesh-and-blood line to the days of the apostles. Their contention is fallacious, as is that of the Catholics, and would be worthless could it be established.

I do not entertain the view that the validity of baptism depends on the administrator. If the validity of my baptism depended on the character of the man who baptized me, how could I ever be satisfied with my baptism? Though I believe the man who baptized me was a good man, I may be deceived. I am, as all humans, unable to see and know the heart condition of my fellows. The Lord does not make the validity of one's baptism depend on the righteousness of the one who administers the baptism; nor is there any intimation in all the Scriptures that one must obtain authority from a local congregation before he can administer baptism. When the evangelist Philip ascertained that the eunuch was a believer in Christ, he complied with his request and baptized him without seeking any "authorizing" act from the church in Jerusalem, where the apostles at that time held their membership; nor did he seek the voice of the church which he had just established in Samaria touching the baptism of this man. (Acts 8.)

If it be true that in a "union meeting" the converts are made Christians by the gospel, as Baptists claim, and it requires some additional process to make a Baptist of these Christians, it must follow that it does not require the full gospel to make one a Christian, or else that it does require something in addition to the gospel to make a Baptist—and it does! Conversion by the gospel of Christ makes Christians; but such converts are not Baptists, else all Christians would be Baptists. "Baptist conversion is wholly of men, and drives God out of the work;" and it may be added that Baptist baptism is a human institution, which is performed by no higher authority than the Baptist Church, which began in 1607, and is a very humanly human organization, deriving its name from its practice of immersion, which immersion, they insist, is essential only to the existence of the Baptist Church! I am asked if there are Christians in such an institution.

Those who believe and teach that the gospel believed and obeyed will make Christians will neither defend the Baptist faith nor Baptist baptism; nor do I know of any of "our" folk who have ever done so.

One often hears the statement: "There are as good people in one church as in another." "There are good people in all the churches." This is certainly true, but this is true in spite of the distinctive doctrines of the sectarians. Their piety and uprightness is not attributable to the peculiar tenets which make the denominations. Too, it should not be overlooked that the sense in which they are denominated "good people" is not synonymous with the term "Christian." In the sense they are called "good" there are those who are not members of any communion—yea, some such do not even believe in Christ—who are "good."

From a Baptist viewpoint, it is not necessary for one to be a Baptist to be a Christian, nor is there a scriptural reason why a Christian, or any man, should be a Baptist.

I am asked: "Are there Christians in the various denominations, including the Baptist Church?" I shall have more to say next week.

George T. Searey has moved from Oklahoma City, Okla., to Brownsville, Texas, on account of his health. He would be glad to hold some meetings in South Texas.

C. H. Smithson began a mission meeting at Bloomburg, Texas, last Lord's day. He says there are only two members there, and that he hopes to do much good while there.

From W. T. Hines, Braman, Okla., March 16: "I am in my fourth week at Brown Union Schoolhouse and expect to be here another week. There have been no visible results, but a good interest manifested. I have four such meetings to conduct, and then I will be ready for the summer's work. Write me if you can use me."

From J. A. Hudson, Oklahoma City, Okla., March 13: "Yesterday was a fine day with us at the Tenth Street and Francis Avenue church of Christ, this city. Three were added. The morning audience was the largest we have ever had. The evening audience was also large and attentive. In the afternoon we had a business meeting in which those attending were inspired to do more in the work of the Master."

Loss of Appetite, That Tired Feeling and Sometimes Eruptions.

Thousands take Hood's Sarsaparilla as a spring medicine for that tired feeling, nervous weakness, impure blood and say it makes them feel better, eat and sleep better, and "makes food taste good."

Spring debility is a condition in which it is especially hard to combat disease germs, which invade the system here, there and everywhere. The white blood corpuscles, sometimes called "the little soldiers in the blood," because it is their duty to fight disease germs, are too weak to do good service.

Hood's Sarsaparilla strengthens the "little soldiers" and enables them to repel germs of grip, influenza, fevers and other ailments; relieves catarrh and rheumatism. It has given satisfaction to three generations. Get it today, and for a laxative take Hood's Pills.

Holden.

Sister Jennie Holden, wife of John B. Holden, was born on February 24, 1888, and departed this life on March 12, 1922. She leaves a husband and several children, together with her parents, to mourn their loss. She was a member of the church for several years. All that I heard express themselves about her said that she was a good woman. After funeral services, conducted by the writer, she was buried at Haynes' Grove. May God bless the bereaved.

Wallace.

Clarence Wallace, of Wardell, Mo., was born on January 5, 1900, and departed this life on March 11, 1922. He was a good boy. He never knew what it was to enjoy good health, but he had faith like Abraham. He confessed his faith in Christ when a young boy, August 31, 1913, and was buried with his Lord in baptism by Brother John R. Williams, and was faithful until death. "He that endureth to the end shall be saved." (Matt. 10: 22.) "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life." (Rev. 2: 10.) "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord." (Rev. 14: 13.) I would say to the family that will miss Clarence so much: Weep not as those that have no hope, but meet him in the better world. The writer spoke words of comfort to the sorrowing ones.

Clemments.

Mrs. A. M. Clemments was born on September 5, 1878; obeyed the gospel at Old Phillips, under the preaching of Brother J. D. Gunn, in 1895; and died at the Protestant Hospital, in Nashville, Tenn., on March 3, 1922. The funeral talk was made by the writer at her father's house, near Seven Points, in this county, on the afternoon of March 4, after which the body was buried in the old family burial ground near by, to await the resurrection. Father and mother both linger on this side, but they are living in the evening of life, and it cannot be long until they will be called by the Master. May they be comforted by the promises of the word of God in this sorrow; and when they are called, may they be prepared for a happy reunion in that eternal city. The passing of our friends and loved ones reminds us of the brevity of human life. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord: Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them." F. B. S.

Reagor.

Brother G. B. Reagor, son of J. W. Reagor and wife, was born on October 8, 1869, and died on June 8, 1921. He was born and reared near Flat Creek, in Bedford County, Tenn. On May 2, 1896, he was married to Miss Lou Noblett. To this union five children were born, four of whom are living. He is survived by his widow, two daughters, two sons, and two brothers. His father died before I became acquainted with the family, but I knew his mother very well. "Aunt Tid," as she was familiarly called by all the neighbors, was one of the best women I ever knew. Brother Reagor was a devoted husband, a kind and loving father, a good neighbor and friend, and a devout and faithful Christian. Funeral services were held in the New Hermon church house by the writer, in the presence of a great host of friends, and the remains were interred in the grave near by to await the glorious resurrection. May God, our dear Father in heaven, comfort, bless, and keep Sister Reagor and her dear children.

Goins.

On Tuesday, February 21, 1922, Brother J. G. Goins, seventy-nine years old, breathed his last. He had been a cripple ever since the Civil War, and had to use a crutch, but as long as he was able he attended church every Lord's day. "Uncle Johnnie," as we called him, was born in Williamson County, Tenn., on September 26, 1842. He was married to Angeline Parker on February 10, 1867, and to them were born eight children. Six are still living, five sons and one daughter. All were present when he was laid to rest. He obeyed the gospel in 1884 under the preaching of J. P. Litten. Brother G. A. Fitzgerald spoke at his funeral, and he was laid to rest at Iowa Park by the side of his wife, who passed away seven years ago. J. C. Goins and wife lived with him the past six years and cared for him. O, how they miss him! "Uncle Johnnie" was always ready to advance the cause of Christ and to help the poor in every way he could. If he had an enemy, we did not know it. His advice to those of his children who were not Christians was to live better. We may meet him in the "sweet by and by" if we will. Mrs. R. A. CROWELL.

Barry.

H. C. Barry and A. E. Barry, father and son, were both born in Smith County, Tenn. H. C. Barry was born on May 5, 1844. He obeyed the gospel in his sixteenth year, and from then till his death, November 8, 1921, lived a life of faithful service to our Lord. He was married to Mollie Compton on December 4, 1867, to which union were born four daughters and two sons. They lived together fifty-two years without a break in the family, except three little grandchildren who died in infancy. Two years before his death his third daughter, Mrs. C. D. Baird, preceded him to the better land. On February 1, 1922, he was followed by his youngest son, A. E. Barry, who was born on February 16, 1876. He obeyed the gospel in September, 1892, and, like his father, remained faithful till his death. He was married to Cleo Rowland on September 6, 1899, and to them were born two daughters and two sons. One son died in infancy. His wife, two young daughters, one son, his aged mother, three sisters, and one brother are left to mourn. Both were towers of strength in the church and in their homes, and the memory of their useful, blameless lives points to us the only source of human help and comfort in this world.

Sunbeams.

BY J. A. PERRY.

I wish to call attention to some things contained in recent issues of the Gospel Advocate.

I have read with interest Brother William P. Walker's reports from Dinuba, Cal. This is one of the points where I labored some in 1912. I found a few members there, and held a meeting of one week's duration in an old store building, and we got a little band started off in our Master's work. I have kept watch of the reports of growth there under the labors of Brother Riggs, Brother Sewell, and the other preachers who have labored there, and now Brother Walker's work. Think of the good results of visiting fifteen hundred homes and scattering about five thousand tracts in a month! In my work assisting Brother Cayce and Brother Jeffcoat in Mississippi, directly and by the aid of these two servants of our Master, I distributed more than a thousand tracts in that field. Brethren, let us awake to the good of the printed page and the house-to-house preaching of the word. Let every congregation have fellowship in the tract work. The preacher should not have to bear all the expense of printing and distributing these tracts, but individuals and congregations should furnish them for the use of all evangelists who desire to give the best thoughts of our brethren to those who need them. Brother Fuqua is certainly doing a great work in this as well as in his preaching. Thank God for the Dinuba congregation and for Brother Walker's work at that point!

The report of work for 1921 by Brother R. V. Cawthon and the letters from Brother S. F. Morrow, in Florida, contain food for thought. Are we working as others are working, or are we, like the man with only one talent, burying our talent, or, like the watchman, asleep on our post of duty?

Brother Jeffcoat's articles on the work in Mississippi should be read and studied. I know that he speaks truly of that State and its needs; and if I had outside support, how gladly I would labor in that field again! The last week of my work in that field showed me a virgin field rich in souls, but very poor as to support on account of financial conditions. This field is in and around Hattiesburg and next to the Louisiana State line. I would like to enter that field again, but my pocketbook, unaided by other points, will not permit. Brethren, this field ought not to be left in this condition.

The reports of the work all over the country are interesting and encouraging, and the articles on various subjects by the editors and contributors are edifying and helpful to the readers. With all the good things in the Advo-

Makes a Family Supply of Cough Remedy

Really better than ready-made cough syrups, and saves about 82%. Easily and quickly prepared.

If you combined the curative properties of every known "ready-made" cough remedy, you probably could not get as much real curative power as there is in this simple home-made cough syrup, which is easily prepared in a few minutes.

Get from any druggist 2½ ounces of Pinex, pour it into a pint bottle and fill the bottle with syrup, using either plain granulated sugar syrup, clarified molasses, honey, or corn syrup, as desired. The result is a full pint of really better cough syrup than you could buy ready-made for three times the money. Tastes pleasant and never spoils.

This Pinex and Syrup preparation gets right at the cause of a cough and gives almost immediate relief. It loosens the phlegm, stops the nasty throat tickle and heals the sore, irritated membranes so gently and easily that it is really astonishing.

A day's use will usually overcome the ordinary cough and for bronchitis, croup, hoarseness and bronchial asthma, there is nothing better.

Pinex is a most valuable concentrated compound of genuine Norway pine extract, and has been used for generations to break severe coughs.

To avoid disappointment, ask your druggist for "2½ ounces of Pinex" with full directions, and don't accept anything else. Guaranteed to give absolute satisfaction, or money promptly refunded. The Pinex Co., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

HEADACHE—? GRIPPY FEELING—? For Quick Relief Take CAPUDINE

cate, how any disciple can claim, "I cannot afford to take the paper," is more than I can understand. Remember, brethren, you have two men to care for and feed—the outer man and inner man; and as you labor to care for the temporal man, be just as careful to look out for the needs of the spiritual man. Reading the many good things each week in the Advocate will help us in doing this. Now, do not say you are reading the Bible too much to do this. I have read the entire Bible through once each year since 1886, besides my special study of it; yet I cannot afford to dispense with the Gospel Advocate. I have never tasted tobacco in any form in my life, and I would entirely set aside all coffee and tea for the outer man before I would cut the inner man off from the benefit of a good, religious paper.

Notes from Arkansas.

BY R. H. JOHNSON.

I have just returned from Pope County, near Dover, where I preached from Friday night until Sunday. Two young ladies were baptized. A young man was baptized at my last appointment there in January. I am to meet a Mr. Pennington, "Russellite" or "Dawnite," on my next trip, and preach sermon about with him, as he does not believe in debating.

I intended to visit the brethren at Blackwell, Ark., and preach a sermon on "foot washing" as a religious service. Some of our brethren seem to think we as Christian people fail to do our duty in not washing feet. It seems that some cannot distinguish the difference between a good work and religious service. Washing feet is classed among good works. (1 Tim. 5: 10.) I will make this visit when the snow is gone, and will do what I can to get the brethren straightened out on this question.

I was called to Tomberlins, Lonoke County, on February 15 to conduct a double funeral; but when I reached Tomberlins (February 16) there were three instead of two. This was the first time in life I ever conducted three funerals at one time, with three caskets before me containing the mortal remains of the deceased persons. Brother Frank Smith died on February 14, and Sister Brown passed away on February 15. Sister Brown was Brother Smith's mother-in-law. Both died in the same house. On February 15 Mrs. Freeman died. These parties all lived in the same neighborhood, and all died of pneumonia. Brother Smith and Sister Brown were members of the church of Christ, and Mrs. Freeman was a member of the Methodist Church.
