2. This also depends. It may be that the one who "denies the authority of the church to exercise discipline" is ignorant or uninformed. If such be the case, then the entire membership should be taught the word of God on this subject before any action is taken. It may be that all objections will be removed, or, at least, all objections should be removed, if possible, before action is taken. It is taken for granted that every member of the church wants to do just what the Lord would have him do. Every member should want to do just what the Scriptures teach should be done; and surely no member would object to doing anything that the Scriptures require, if it is done in the way that the Scriptures require it should be done. All members should be dealt with scripturally. "Brethren, even if a man be overtaken in any trespass, ye who are spiritual, restore such a one in a spirit of gentleness: looking to thyself, lest thou also be tempted." (Gal. 6: 1.)

Please answer the following questions: (1) I have been rebuked for explaining 1 Cor. 14 as given in the Gospel Advocate. I explain sitting by my husband in the class. I am accused of misapplying, disobeying, deceitfully denying God's word. I made it plain that that chapter was to spiritually endowed men and women. (2) Please explain 1 Tim. 5: 19, 20. Show how it does not contradict 1 Tim. 5: 1. (3) Show that a member has no right to submit to an eldership that he knows is wrong, or contrary, contentious, slanderous, that wants one to submit or apologize to the elders for teaching God's word as "it is written."

(4) Should an elder forbid a woman in a class teaching or visiting the sick? (5) Please show that the late version of the Bible leaves out the word "broken" in 1 Cor. 11: 24. (6) Please give a Bible definition of the word "temper."—X.

1. It seems that the wrong spirit is manifested in this question. I think that it would be wise for this sister to be quiet, especially since it seems to irritate matters. The spirit of Christ requires of us that we do everything in our power to promote peace and harmony. Of course no scriptural principle should be violated. There is danger of this sister's manifesting the wrong spirit and giving a wrong interpretation to the scriptures under consideration. I do not think that Paul had reference only to "spiritually endowed men and women" when he wrote 1 Cor. 14: 33-35. I think that it has application to women to-day. The same is true of 1 Tim. 2: 11-13.

2. The scripture referred to here is: "Against an elder receive not an accusation, except at the mouth of two or three witnesses. Them that sin reprove in the sight of all, that the rest also may be in fear." (1 Tim. 5: 19, 20.) This simply means that one should not be so anxious to bring an accusation against an elder. One should hesitate before accusing an elder. The elder, with his experience and honor, should not be rebuked by inexperienced and young people. They should be taught to respect the elder and give honor to whom honor is due. There is no contradiction between the above scripture and 1 Tim. 5: 1. God's Book does not have any contradiction in it.

3. No one should submit to anything that is wrong, and no one should want any one to do any wrong. When we encourage any one in wrong, we become a party to that wrong, and are, therefore, guilty of wrong. All should show respect to those who have the oversight in spiritual things. "Obey them that have the rule over you, and submit to them: for they watch in behalf of your souls, as they that shall give account; that they may do this with joy, and not with grief: for this were unprofitable for you." (Heb. 13: 17.) Elders should not lord it over God's people, but in meekness and humility should instruct all; and those who are instructed by them should submit to them as they teach and enforce or encourage the will of the Lord.

4. All teaching in the church should come under the supervision of the elders of the church. If the elders of the church should tell a sister that they do not want her to teach a class, she should not do so. She should respect the judgment and authority of the elders who are guiding and directing the affairs of the church. It is always understood that elders have no authority, except that which comes from God's word, as they have nothing to teach but the will of the Lord. Visiting the sick is a ministration that belongs to all Christians, and one should do so in the name of Christ. If a member visits the sick to help and minister to the sick in the humility and gentleness of the spirit of Christ, no one should object.

5. The scripture referred to reads as follows in the American Revised Version: "And when he had given thanks, he brake it, and said, This is my body, which is for you: this do in remembrance of me." Many ancient authorities read "is broken for you;" but the word "broken" is not in the Revised Version.

6. The Bible is not a dictionary of words. The word "temper" is used, I believe, only four times in the King James Version. In Ex. 29: 2 it means "to mix, mingle;" in Ezek. 46: 14 it means "to sprinkle, temper;" in Ex. 30: 35 it means "to be salted, tempered;" in 1 Cor. 12: 24 it means "to mix with, compound." In the American Revised Version we do not find the word "temper," but have the word "tempered" in Ex. 30: 35 and 1 Cor. 12: 34. By studying the word as used in the Bible, we soon discover that its present use differs widely from its original use.

From the Brethren

Fayetteville, Tenn., August 28.—
The tent meeting at Howell Hill, in Lincoln County, closed on Sunday might, with seven additions to the church. We had by far the best hearing we have ever had at that place, with several hundred hearers throughout the week. This is the fourth meeting I have held for them. There is no congregation there; it is strictly a mission point. They will erect a house right away. They have a good Sunday school. I have baptized about forty since I first went there to preach.—T. C. Little.

Christiana, Tenn., August 26.—I began a tent meeting in Montgomery, Ala., June 17, and continued it for fifteen days. As results of this meeting, fourteen came from the "digressives" and took their stand for the New Testament order of worship and a loyal congregation of twenty-seven members was established. They meet in a rented hall on Holt Street. On July 7 I began a meeting in a schoolhouse at Bellbuckle, Tenn. This meeting was well attended by both white and colored. The meeting was supported principally by the white disciples. One lady from the Methodists made the good confession and was baptized. I am to return to Bellbuckle this fall to help them build a house of worship. On July 21 I began a tent meeting in Nashville, Tenn., with the South Hill congregation. Nine made the good confession and were baptized. On August 2 I began at Richmond, Tenn., and closed with fifteen additions. On August 9 I began at Morrison, Tenn., and closed with eight additions. On August 16 I began a mission meeting near Hampshire, Tenn., which closed with eight additions. I am now in a meeting here, with a crowded house each night. From here I shall go to Dickson, Tenn., a destitute place, for a two-weeks' tent meeting.—Alonzo Jones.

Ash Flat, Ark., August 25.—The Burwood meeting closed on Sunday night, August 16, with the brethren and sisters very much encouraged and seemingly highly pleased both with the preaching and singing and the visible results. There was a fine attendance of attentive listeners throughout the entire meeting. Fifteen persons were baptized, several of whom were men of families. On Wednesday following the close of this meeting we (my family and I) left Nashville in a "Ford" for my old home at Ash Flat, and reached here on Friday night without accident or serious trouble. While spending the week with my aged parents, both of whom are very feeble, I am preaching at night to a crowded house of lifelong neighbors and their descendants. It is a great pleasure to me to be with them again and to feel that those who have known me from infancy still love to hear the "old story" I have been telling them for more than a quarter of a century. Brother Porterfield, of Imboden, Ark., closed a very successful meeting a short time before we came. There have been four baptisms and two Hartselle, Ala., September 4.—Since last report I have conducted the following meetings: On the East Pike from Hartselle, with four additions; at Antioch, near Hillsboro, Ala., with fourteen additions; at Beulah, near Vinemont, with three additions: at Union, with five additions; and in Clay County, at Campbell Crossroads, with two additions. My next meeting is to be at Center Ridge, near Delrose, Tenn. I have conducted one tent meeting and have three others yet to hold. There are many villages and towns in North Alabama, with from one thousand to five thousand population, where there is no church. The laborers are too few for such a large field.—W. O. Norton.

Wellington, Texas, August 27.—I am now in a good meeting with the North Grosbeck Church, northwest of Quanah, Texas, and will continue over the first Lord's day in September, and then go to Binger, Okla. The meeting at Shrewder, north of Gould, Okla., closed last Lord's-day night. This was my third meeting there, and the best one. There were fifteen additions, twelve by baptism. Brother L. E. ## BIBLE CROSS WORD PUZZLE

THIS diagram represents Jacob's ladder, and though it may look as though there were more ladders than the Biblical narrative calls for, the exigencies of the puzzle require that many black spaces be introduced. It provides an exercise in four-letter words, and in words of very few other lengths.

To work out this puzzle, the white spaces must be filled with letters forming words answering to the various horizontal and vertical; words are not the same, but each gives a clue to the other. The first letter of each word is indicated by a number which refers to the definitions listed below.

It is advisable to first fill in, in both directions, those words which you know to be correct. These will furnish hints to those words which you do not know or had merely guessed at. When the puzzle is solved correctly, the letters in the white spaces will spell words both horizontally and vertically. The black spaces are the blind spots of the puzzle and merely form the pattern, incidentally designating the ends and beginnings of the words contained in the puzzle.

Solution of Puzzle in last issue

A. SMITH CHAMBERS.

BY G. A. DUNN, JR.

One week ago this Monday evening (September 7), Brother A. Smith Chambers, although somewhat sick, drove from his home at Sheffield, Ala., to the Hamilton meeting to see me. Little did any one think that this would be his last public service of worship to attend, and, as he prayed, that it would be his last prayer to offer in public, At the close of the services he visited with me, and we talked for quite a while of our future work and how each might serve the other, and it seemed to me that he had just caught a vision of even greater accomplishments. But this past Friday he was accidentally shot at Bellbuckle, Tenn., while returning home from a short vacation, and died within an hour's time. The parents immediately telephoned me to preach the funeral service, and arrangements were made for this service to take place on Sunday afternoon, with Brother C. A. Norred, of Florence, Ala., to assist. I had been on intimate terms with Brother Chambers since my first year of evangelistic work, and not only with him, but also with the parents, and it was always a pleasure to visit with this happy family, and I was admitted to it almost as though I had been born into it, for Sister Chambers wanted to help mother me.

Brother A. Smith Chambers was the only child of Brother and Sister J. F. Chambers, of Sheffield, Ala. He was baptized about ten years ago by my father, at Booneville, Miss. Since that time he had graduated from both Freed-Hardeman College and David Lipscomb College in his preparation as a minister. He was twentytwo years old, but had been preaching for a number of years, and at the time of his death was engaged as minister of the Sherrod Avenue congregation at Florence, but was at the immediate time in his summer meetings. When he took up the local work in North Florence, the membership was less than fifty, with no permanent meeting place; but under his direction they grew, and now possess a fifty-thousand-dollar structure. He was expected to begin a meeting with them this coming week, and because of my association with him they have asked me to act as substitute, which I appreciate. In the summer months his time was spent in a needy section of the country, and no one can fill his place.

The funeral was attended by a large crowd from many cities representing several States, and the grave was literally banked with flowers. The funeral procession of over a mile in length was the longest ever seen in the tri-cities. The Freed-Hardeman Quartette did the singing, and four young men who were graduated with him at David Lipscomb College -Cy Young, George Thorogood, George Kinnie, and Herschel Priestly -acted as pallbearers. The heartbroken parents are being comforted by hundreds of telegrams and other expressions of friendship.

To-day the mother made two requests of me. The first was to take her to the grave and there pray with her to God that she might so live as to be able to join him some day, and this was done. The second request was to try to convert as many as both Smith and I could have done living, and I shall try, but know it is impossible. Although his ministry was a short one, many were converted as a result of his preaching, and none could calculate the other good accomplished. Thus his untimely death is to be mourned by the entire church of Christ, and not only by the parents.

MAKES PUMPING UP TIRES UNNECESSARY.

Chicago, Ill., M. F. Hughes, of 2516 Monroe, this city, has perfected a new air-tight valve cap that enables auto owners to pump up their tires once and never touch them again until punctured or worn out. Leading tire manufacturers, after thorough tests, have approved Mr. Hughes' invention and banished the old theory that air escapes through rubber. One inflation lasts the life of a tire, and tire mileage is doubled. These caps retail for $1.25 for a set of five. The inventor wants agents and will send proof and samples free. Write him to-day.

Daugherty.

Nashville, Tenn., August 31.—A series of meetings lasting eight days was concluded at Herberson's Schoolhouse, near Dickson, Tenn., August 30. Three were baptized. One of the number was a member of the Dunkard sect and one was a Freewill Baptist. Brother W. N. Ridge assisted by leading the singing three evenings and preaching one evening. The Dickson and Colesburg congregations assisted. The little band of Christians seemed encouraged and strengthened. For all of these things we are thankful. This was the writer's first meeting.—J. D. Boyd.

Springfield, Tenn., September 1.—
Two services and dinner on the ground was the program at Mount Zion, Ky., Sunday. About a thousand people gathered. It was a real home-coming, several States being represented. Only about half could get in the house, and not more than half of the good things prepared were eaten. There were three additions.—O. H. Tallman.

Jackson, Tenn., August 31.—I closed at Mount Zion, near Dyersburg, Tenn., after one week's duration, with eighteen additions. I am now in a meeting at Freeman's Chapel (a Methodist church house), eight miles west of Newbern. I drove a Ford eighty-five miles, preached four times, and baptized eleven yesterday, and feel fine this morning. All the Christian families in these parts read the Gospel Advocate, one of the best papers ever published.—F. O. Howell.

Cookeville, Tenn., August 28.—
Since last report I have conducted meetings at Donelson, Tenn.; Nolanville, Texas; and Cordell, Okla. We have a fine community of good people at Donelson, and one of the nicest and best meetinghouses of any rural section that I know. With unity of faith and action, great good will come from the work of this congregation. The Nolanville meeting was the thirty-eighth annual camp meeting. The drought hindered many from camping, as the water had to be pumped on the ranches; but about twenty-five families were encamped, and others came for miles. Brother J. H. Antwine, of Bonham, Texas, led the song service and otherwise assisted in the work. He is a splendid coworker. Fourteen were baptized and one restored. The people Cordell, Okla., on August 23. I found a splendid body of people there. They stood by the meeting from start to finish. Six were baptized and noe restored. The people of the West endeared themselves to me many years ago when but a boy, and I was glad, in the providence of me many years ago when but a boy, and I was glad, in the providence of God, to feast again on their generosity and hospitality. I am glad to report that the work at Cookeville was carried triumphantly on by home forces in my absence. We have not less than eight or ten men there who can and do creditably preach the word, and not less than twenty or twenty-five young men who gladly take public part in the worship. The brethren say the church was never in better shape than now. So far as I know, we do not have even one disgruntled member. While I was gone they baptized a splendid man who was above threescore and ten, and another splendid man of middle age was restored to his "first love." We are bringing to a triumphant close our fourth and best year's work together.—J. Pettey Ezell.

From the Brethren

Rogersville, Ala., September 7.—Brother J. Clifford Murphy, of Pulaski, Tenn., has just closed one of the most successful meetings ever held at the Romine Schoolhouse, thirty-five being added by baptism and fourteen reclaimed.—B. M. Romine.

Fulton, Ky., August 31.—I closed at Palmersville, Tenn., on the fifth Lord's day in August, with good interest, but no additions. I go next to Webb's Chapel, near Arlington, Ky., to conduct the song service for Brother C. B. Douthitt, who is preaching there.

—M. K. Moody.

Haleyville, Ala., September 3.—I closed on Lord's-day night, August 23, at the Wylie Branch meetinghouse, with one restoration. I also preached for them last Lord's day. I shall engage in a six-days' discussion with C. C. Clark (Baptist), beginning September 7.—Chester Estes.

Munfordville, Ky., August 31,—1 closed a very interesting meeting at Union No. 5, near Glasgow, Ky., this morning, at the water, with three added to the one body, all by baptism. We had an audience the last night which filled the house to overflowing. Many were standing and many could not get inside.—Samuel H. Austin.

Knoxville, Tenn., August 31.—I came to Knoxville yesterday and began a tent meeting which is being supported by the Broadway congregation. We had a fine start. This is the third meeting which these brethren have held this year, they having bought and equipped a new tent for this work. We hope to start a new congregation.—J. W. Brents.

Cleveland, Miss., August 31.—I closed at Little Dean, near Cleveland, with twenty-six baptized and three from the Baptists who claimed scriptural baptism. This is in the delta, and a most wonderful opportunity is presented to reach multitudes of people. There are some plantations with people enough to make a large congregation. The harvest indeed is ripe, but the laborers are few.—J. Roy Vaughan. Vaughan.

Shelbyville, Tenn., Septemher 4.—
Brother U. R. Beeson closed our meeting last Wednesday night with seven baptized. On last Sunday night I closed a meeting at Cedar Dell which resulted in ten additions and three reclaimed. Our meeting at Riggs Crossroads resulted in five additions and two reclaimed. My next meeting will be at Center, near Petersburg, beginning on the second Lord's day in this month.—E. P. Watson.

Hohenwald Tenn September 3.—

in this month.—E. P. Watson.

Hohenwald, Tenn., September 3.—
I closed at Mount Hope, in Wayne County, Tenn., with two additions. I also closed at Turkey Track, Lawrence County, Tenn., with four additions. I will begin next Sunday in Wayne County, in a new field. After that I shall go to Browning Schoolhouse, in Lewis County, Tenn.; next to Holland, Mo.; next to Beebe, Ark. The good old Gospel Advocate gets better all along. I hope to send you some new subscribers soon. I baptized a man this summer who was convinced by reading the Gospel Advocate.—L. W. Hinson.

Detroit, Mich., August 29.—Two were added at Vinewood last Lord's day by membership, and an excellent hearing at each service. Brother J. J. Pierce, of Washington, D.C., was with us, and all enjoyed an excellent evening address by him.—W. S. Long.

Erick, Okla., September 4.—Brother Homer Davis, of Bellview, Texas, closed at Erick, Okla., August 31, with twenty-five baptized and seven reclaimed. I led the song service. Brother Davis is to begin at Big Springs, Texas, next Lord's day.—H. A. Gilbert.

Morrillton, Ark., September 2.—The Jerusalem meeting closed on Lord'sday night, August 23. Thirteen noble souls were baptized and three reclaimed. I closed at Linker Mountain last night with two baptisms, a man and wife. I was called to Grange Hall, near Mill Creek, last Lord's-day afternoon to meet Mr. Purington, one of Pastor Russell's followers. Everything passed off nicely. I expect to begin at Coffee, Phillips County, on September 5, to continue ten days.—R. H. Johnson.

Elkmont, Ala., September 6.—Brother O. C. Lambert will close at Ephesus to-night and begin at Athens to-morrow. So far he has had seventeen baptisms at Ephesus and ten from other sources. Brother Creel closed last Sunday night at Pettusville. On Sunday afternoon he baptized sixteen, and two more came forward at the last service. Monday morning, at the water's edge, others came forward, making a total of twenty-six baptisms there. In addition to that, much good was accomplished otherwise.—James C. Dixon.

Abilene, Texas, September 1.—Our open-air meeting in the heart of Haynesville, La., resulted in eight baptisms and great crowds and interest increasing to the last. There were twenty additions in the Nugent (Texas) tent meeting, just closed. Finally, our revival on Southside, in Abilene, is begun in our lovely openair pavilion, and nightly I speak to more than a thousand souls. We cherish the liveliest expectations of great success in the gospel here. My next meeting is to be in Rockwood, Tenn.—Price Billingsley.

Tyler, Texas, August 28.—Our sixth mission meeting at Athens, Texas, came to a close, at the water, yesterday morning. There were twentynine additions. A few members had met for worship in the courthouse for many months, and we now leave them with above forty to worship "as it is written." Last winter a move was put on foot to buy and equip a tent for mission work in East Texas. This was done, and it has been in constant use since April. In every town it has gone a congregation has been left to worship God. The Tyler church has stood nobly by me in this, and we have rejoiced much to see the people welcome the truth as they have. We now have more work on our hands to strengthen and confirm these who have newly come to the faith. We must have help of another minister, and should have other churches to aid in caring for this work. We are made to wonder why many churches larger and stronger than Tyler don't launch out and preach the gospel to the lost, but this church is much encouraged to go farther.—J. W. Dunn.

Edited by Charles H. Gabriel. Of this book and its editor, T. B. Mosley, a first-class music composer, says: "It is the best book of the kind I ever examined. It is indeed a high-class collection of real songs, suited for children, the most beautiful melodies, supported by rich harmonies, which are characteristic of Mr. Charles H. ## CURRENT COMMENT

By JAMES A. ALLEN

Our friend, the editor of The Front Rank, "official organ" of the United Christian Missionary Society, published by the "Christian Board of Missions," is still occupying a back seat when it comes to telling sinners what to do to be saved. The Gospel Advocate would rejoice and be glad to see its friend of "The Front Rank" push away from the back of the house and get up nearer to the amen corner, which can be done only by publishing what Jesus told the apostles to tell "every creature." It looks like a paper representing a "United Christian Missionary Society" ought to do that.

We confess that we cannot see how a man can be a true "missionary" unless he "missionaries." Missionary work consists in preaching and teaching the first principles of the gospel, and no man is a "missionary" whose preaching does not cause sinners to cry: "Sirs, what must I do to be saved?" He may be a great writer, as is our friend, the editor of "The Front Rank," or he may be a great preacher, even a "popular pastor," and a member of the "Ministers' Alliance;" but he is not a "missionary," for the simple reason that he does not preach the gospel.

We do not think "The Front Rank" is a real missionary paper, because it does not point out clearly and plainly what the Holy Spirit, through the apostles, preached to sinners. It is a good paper and carries much interesting and beneficial matter, as well as some that is not so interesting and certainly not beneficial; but, as a "missionary" paper, it seems to have a penchant for printing everything but the right thing.

J. H. Garrison, "Editor Emeritus" of the Christian-Evangelist, says;

But Brother Garvin's statement is only an introduction to a question suggested to him by a recent paragraph in The Easy Chair, in which it was stated that there must be a "middle ground" between the two extreme views concerning baptism—namely, that, on the one hand, it was a mere ceremony, whose form was indifferent and its observance unimportant, and, on the other, that baptism was absolutely essential to salvation, and that, too, in its primitive form, "What is that 'middle ground?'" he asks. It is that ground which well-informed Disciples think they occupy—namely: that it is a divine ordinance, ordained by Jesus Christ as a solemn act of consecration to his service, and that its form is a burial in water, symbolizing, as Paul teaches, Christ's burial and resurrection from the dead and the believer's rising to "newness of life." They do not believe, however, that those sincere believers who mistake the form and meaning of this ordinance will be damned. On the contrary, we welcome to the Lord's table all Christians who desire to commune with us, regardless of the form of baptism which they may have observed.

The above clearly shows the direction in which our "transgressive" brethren are moving. It is a dangerous thing to tamper with God's word. The same spirit that presumptuously introduces a single innovation on the apostolic order of work and worship will ultimately deny the divine inspiration of the Bible.

When innovations were first introduced, bringing division among those who had started out to restore Bible Christianity, brethren who attempted to check the wave of apostasy warned that it would lead to general infidelity. The fulfillment of their prediction has been before us for several years. The United Society has already practiced open membership and eliminated baptism. Many of those on its pay roll would do so openly were it not for the fact that the churches would cease their contributions to the society. Those who promoted this division over the introduction of innovations have already reached the point where they deny the Mosaic account of the creation, the occurrence of the miracles recorded in the Bible, the virgin birth of Jesus and his bodily resurrection from the grave. The man who can find it in his heart to practice anything as worship or service to God that God has not authorized is an infidel in embryo if not

The Gospel Advocate is not surprised that Brother Garrison regards it as "an extreme view" to think "that baptism is absolutely essential to salvation, and that, too, in its primitive form," Why speak of baptism's being "absolutely" essential? If it is essential at all, it is "absolutely" essential. The very terms used indicate that Brother Garrison is not sure of his position. And what does Brother Garrison mean by saying, "and that, too, in its primitive form?" Does he mean that sprinkling and pouring are "forms" of baptism? Baptism has never been in any form other than "its primitive form."

For Brother Garrison to deny "that baptism is absolutely essential to salvation" is equivalent to his affirming that some people will be saved without baptism. If some will be saved without baptism and some will not, he certainly owes it to God and to the world to tell which will be saved and which will not be, as otherwise all might conclude that they are safe and reject baptism. God has commanded the penitent believer to be "baptized unto the remission of your sins." If baptism is not necessary to obtain the remission of sins, why did God command it? It certainly devolves upon Brother Garrison to tell who can be saved without obeying God's command to be baptized and who cannot. His position requires him to show who can set God's law aside and who cannot. No inspired man ever promised salvation to any one before baptism or eyer regarded any one as saved until he was baptized.

It is an awful and dangerous thing to promise salvation where God has not promised it, to encourage people to think they can be saved without doing as God commands. The world is looking for excuses not to obey God, and to say that some can be saved without being baptized, "that baptism is not absolutely essential to salvation," is to give them the excuse they are looking for to ignore baptism. The only safe thing we can do is to say what the Bible says in the words of the Bible. There is not a passage in the Bible that promises salvation to any man before baptism. Such a fact greatly peeves such men as Brother Garrison; but it is a fact, and facts cannot be changed.

BY A. J. BACHMAN.

Just the book for preachers, elders, deacons, Bibleclass teachers, and others that take public part in church services.

The book has three hundred sermon outlines and a helpful supplement containing funeral texts, marriage ceremonies, forms for church letters, and Hedge's "Rules" for debate.

A good book to use in your Lord's-day services, prayer meetings, and young people's meetings. Let the leader announce the subject, hand slips of paper containing different sections of the outline to the members who are to take part in the next meeting, requesting them to make a talk or read the scriptural references on that section of the outline. Or, let the leader put the outline on the blackboard, omitting the scriptural references, then ask the congregation to supply the correct scriptural references at the next meeting, and give reasons why they selected these references.

THE INFALLIBLE GUIDANCE.

BY J. N. ARMSTRONG.

We live in a world of so many uncertainties that one might be caused to wonder if there be anything that is steadfast and wholly reliable and dependable. To be able to set one's feet upon solid rock in our world of quicksand is exceedingly satisfying and restful.

There is just one such rock. It is the guidance of Godyea, it is God. He is the same to-day, to-morrow, and forever. Everything else crumbles; everything else fails. The wisdom, philosophy, vagaries, speculations, and theories of men must vanish as the mist of the morning, and those who lean upon them must find themselves hopelessly put to shame.

God sent Jesus into the world to evangelize the world. Jesus could not accomplish this undertaking alone; so he did intensive service in training a few helpers. The interest of the whole world, born and unborn, was involved. Infallible guidance was the need.

He was the Son of God and had the Spirit without measure. But what about his helpers? How were they chosen? Are we sure through them we find the solid Rock? Is their guidance God's guidance? These questions are as important as the eternal interests of men make them.

The Lord felt the responsibility of selecting these ambassadors, into whose hands he would leave this world-wide undertaking, so keenly that it drove him into a night of prayer. Though he was the Son of God, he felt the need of God's guidance. He would not undertake this selection without God. He recognized the importance of the occasion. How vital to us was next morning's step! "And it came to pass in these days, that he went out into the mountain to pray; and he continued all night in prayer to God. And when it was day, he called his disciples: and he chose from them twelve, whom also he named apostles." (Luke 6: 12, 13.)

Now these go into special training and are thus specially and personally prepared by our Lord himself for the great service into which they are called. Altogether they sit at his feet about three years and a half. What a privilege! But were they then ready to go? You might have thought so. I might have been willing to turn them loose on the job, but our Lord was not. He was particular, careful, that no mistakes be made. "He that heareth you heareth me; and he that rejecteth you rejecteth me; and he that rejecteth me rejecteth him that sent me." (Luke 10: 16.) "He that receiveth you receiveth me, and he that receiveth me receiveth him that sent me." (Matt. 10: 40; see, also, John 13: 20.) They must be as infallible as God. Their guidance must be God's guidance.

So to these good, loyal, and thoroughly prepared teachers of the gospel comes this significant command: "Wait." Think of it! The memories of men are treacherous. They might forget important matters. Then, men are weak and cannot be implicitly trusted; so, truly, they needed to "tarry" "until ye be clothed with power from on high." (Luke 24: 49.) "And, being assembled together with them, he charged them not to depart from Jerusalem, but to wait for the promise of the Father, which, said he, ye heard from me: for John indeed baptized with water; but ye shall be baptized in the Holy Spirit not many days hence." (Acts 1: 4, 5.)

Before this, Jesus had said to them: "But the Comforter, even the Holy Spirit, whom the Father will send in my name, he shall teach you all things, and bring to your remembrance all that I said unto you." (John 14:

26.) "And he, when he is come, will convict the world in respect of sin, and of righteousness, and of judgment.
. . . He shall guide you into all the truth." (John 16: 8-13.)

So, one day in their waiting, "suddenly there came from heaven a sound as of the rushing of a mighty wind, and it filled all the house where they were sitting. . . . And they were all filled with the Holy Spirit, and began to speak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance." (Acts 2: 2-6.) In other words, they were so baptized with the Holy Spirit that those teachers had no more control of their own tongues than my readers have of my pen to-day. No wonder that to reject their words was to reject God. How infallibly safe it was to hear them! How certainly divine was their guidance! We are, no doubt, ready to say this provision was entirely safe for that first age, but it has been more than nineteen centuries since then.

Is it not just as important that we in this age be guided by the Holy Spirit as it was for those who lived in that first age? If God's faithful men, trained by his own Lord, needed to "tarry," to "wait" for infallible guidance in that first age before they could be safe teachers, do not God's faithful to-day need that same guidance?

Humanity is as fickle, unfaithful, uncertain, and unsteadfast as it has ever been. It is just as true now as it has ever been that "the way of man is not in himself; it is not in man that walketh to direct his steps." (Jer. 10: 23.)

God could have supplied this need through all the ages, as he did in the first age. He could have clothed every teacher of his in every succeeding age with power from on high. He could have had each teacher in each age to "wait" till the Holy Spirit came to guide him into all the truth. But it remains an undeniable fact that Jehovah has not thus supplied the need.

It is certain that the New Testament was written in that first page. These men who spoke from God, being moved by the Holy Spirit, wrote for us this holy Book. It is Jehovah's provision for our need, else he has never supplied it. On this our hopes eternally rest, or we have no resting place. Once we let it go, we are hopelessly left to the vain philosophies, vagaries, and speculations of men. With it, we can lay hold of God, the solid Rock of our salvation.

To fill those first teachers with the Holy Spirit until they were infallibly safe for that generation, and then leave his next teachers unguided and unguarded, would be inexplainable—a reflection upon both his goodness and his wisdom. If the New Testament be not that guidance, that permanent and infallible leading, God has made no provision for our safety. On the other hand, the faithful child of God, with this New Testament, is as completely furnished and as infallibly guided as the faithful teacher in the first age, clothed with power from on high.

But the teacher of God must be faithful to what is written. He has no duties, no rights, but to deliver faithfully the message. It is his to "preach the word," just as the Holy Spirit has delivered it, word for word, dot for dot, every "i" dotted and every "t" crossed. Speculations, unnecessary inferences, and unwarranted deductions are unfaithfulness in a messenger of God. It is his duty to men and to God to as nearly as possible, by a prayerful, earnest, and conscientious study of that word. give out faithfully every idea and thought God has put into that word, nothing more and nothing less. He may simplify, paraphrase, or clothe in other words as his skill as a teacher may direct; but he must never lose sight of his work-namely, to give to the people only what God has said. When he has done this, he has been faithful. This is to be his only effort. In the American Revised Edition of the Scriptures, the best English-dressed Bible in the world, you will notice that sometimes the translators, in their efforts to give to us God's word from the original, have not been satisfied with their first effort. So they made another, giving us a marginal reading. This second reading is only another effort on the part of the translators to give us the very ideas and thoughts of God. When they have put the ideas in the original words into English words faithfully, their work is finished. So, when a teacher of God's word has given out without addition or subtraction the ideas couched in the naked text faithfully, his work is done. In any dispute the final appeal must be made to the naked text of God's word. Those who hear the teaching and receive it from such a teacher of the word hear God and are as infallibly and safely guided as the hearers of Peter on that first Pentecost after the resurrection of our Lord.

I certainly could not count safe and sound, as a teacher of God's word, one who did not make it his faithful aim to give to the people only what God has said, free from his own theories, speculations, and inferences; and I should never think of giving my indorsement to one who would be careless at this point. "Be not ye called Rabbi: for one is your teacher." (Matt. 23: 8.) (See 1 Tim. 1: 4; 6: 4; 2 Tim. 2: 23; Tit. 3: 9.) "If any one cometh unto you, and bringeth not this teaching, receive him not into your house, and give him no greeting: for he that giveth him greeting partaketh in his evil works." (2 John 10, 11.)

But, lest some young and inexperienced teacher make a mistake in his application of the important lesson I am here giving, and thereby cause alienation, strife, and even division, among some happy band of disciples, I must add one more word.

When an English text could have another meaning than that I give it, and it sometimes can—at least, faithful men, just as intelligent, just as capable, and just as loyal to God's word as I am, so interpret—I should be humble, patient, and considerate in my differing from such faithful teachers of the word. In brotherly love we must differ on that text as we continue to search for the true meaning. In forbearance I should be willing to listen to such child of God lay before me his faithful findings from God's word, so long as our difference is a difference of misunderstanding of a text of scripture. On this ground great and faithful men of God have always differed in love. In fact, there is no other basis of harmony, peace, and good will among us. Neither is there safety from human creeds in any other course.

FAITH AND ITS FRUITS.

(David Lipscomb, in the Gospel Advocate of May 9, 1895.)

The Lutheran Reformation was aroused by the immoralities practiced and tolerated by the Catholic Church. The priests had become covetous and licentious, haughty and domineering. This was brought about greatly through the large organizations or ecclesiasticisms that were over the churches, made the priests independent of the churches, and exalted the interests of the organizatien above personal piety and devotion. All large ecclesiasticisms are dependent upon money for support and success. The ecclesiasticism soon sees a good money-raiser is more essential to its prosperity than a pious, devoted Christian. So the one is honored while the other is neglected. A good money-raiser or effective organizer of the forces will be given the position of honor. Immorality and irreligion will be overlooked in one who can serve the party in building up its material forces. True religion will perish in such associations.

Tetzel, the unscrupulous salesman of indulgences, was more highly esteemed in the Catholic hierarchy than the praying, devoted, self-denying Luther. The one brought money into the coffers of the hierarchy; the other could only inspire souls with devotion. To all these human organizations and combinations of churches money is much more highly valued because much more essential to the success of the ecclesiasticism than the saving of souls. Soul-saving must give place in all of them to moneyraising.

The Wesleyan Reformation was a revolt against the ungodliness and worldliness of the Church of England. The Church of England had lost sight of virtue, morality, devotion, in the worldly ambition for wealth and honor of its teachers and leaders. So virtue, purity, and holiness were at a low ebb among the people.

While true doctrine or correct scripture knowledge lies at the foundation of all virtue, purity, and devotion-that is, a true faith is the only foundation of true virtue and morality-virtue and purity are the fruits of a true faith. Yet the masses of the human family see the evil of a wrong faith only as it bears fruit in a bad life. So the reformation comes only when the evil fruits of a false religious theory are borne.

There is a tendency in this age to consolidation into monopolies in business affairs, to general organizations and ecclesiasticisms in religion. The one is destructive of individual activity and success, and destroys incentive to personal activity and energy in business affairs. other destroys individual purity, holiness of life, and devotion in religion.

The tendency is that way in all the churches. Morality, virtue, discipline are lost sight of in all the churches in the zeal for strong organizations and big collections and

It is becoming a crying evil in the churches. We believe it is preparing the way for a reformation. He is wise who does not forsake the law of the Lord or the true spirit of Christ in the desire to build up strong worldly organizations in the churches.

The more earnest and devoted Methodists are grieving over the decay of piety, devotion, and zeal in the Methodist organization. These qualities are overlooked in the preachers. The man who can raise the collections stands higher with the conference managers than he who can convert souls. It is so in the conventions of the Baptists, The man is in demand who can raise the contributions. It is so among the disciples. A man's morality may be more than doubtful, but if he organizes and raises the money, this condones many sins, and in the end virtue suffers. Morality is at a low ebb; true, vital religion is ignored. This is the tendency to-day. A reformation in personal morality and holiness is demanded. This is giving the unscriptural extremes of the self-styled sanctificationists currency. But reformation is sadly needed along this line. While guarding against the extremes, let us encourage more holiness of life; let us learn that true religion can exist only in God's institutions.

A true faith will alone bear good fruits. The Divine Spirit will dwell only in temples of God's building. All human additions to God's building bring with them the worldly spirit of selfishness, fleshly, ambitious lives.

FROM AN AGED SISTER. BY F. W. SMITH.

The following letter was received a few days ago:

September 8, 1925.—Dear Brother Smith: There is so much need and so many calls for help, I do not know where my "mite" would do most good. Knowing how you keep in touch with such work, I inclose ten dollars for you to use as you think best.

How I did enjoy your sermons in the long ago at old Oakland, and how I would enjoy hearing you once more! But your pieces in the Gospel Advocate are just as good and instructive, as are all the articles from all the old soldiers of the cross. I read them all, and everything else in the Advocate. "God bless you all" is the prayer of An Old Sister in Christ.

I most certainly appreciate the kindly words and remembrance of this good sister. No man ever had better friends than I had among those to whom she refers at Oakland Church, near Clarksville, Tenn. It was, in those days, one of the best churches I ever knew, and I am told that it is still a good church. But those who composed the membership in those days of which our sister speaks, with few exceptions, have either passed to the beyond or removed to other parts.

We appreciate her commendation of the Gospel Advocate, and sincerely pray that it may prove worthy of the confidence and assistance of all the good men and women who are so loyally supporting it.

We also thank our sister for the liberal donation, and have divided her contribution between Sister Sarah Andrews, in Japan, and Brother E. S. Jelley, who for sixteen years labored in India in the service of the Master and who is now in need of help.

SELF-PITY.

BY JAMES E. CHESSOR.

THE NOXIOUS WEED OF SELF-PITY.

Within many a heart is found self-pity. It is a most subtle, insidious, treacherous enemy. Far from appearing such, its appeal comes in the friendliest guise. But its work is none the less deadly on that account. If allowed free course, complete wreckage will come to the life that harbors it.

It seems indigenous to the soil of most hearts, and, like a noxious weed, it requires no care, but grows vigorously under all conditions; and who that is mortal has not had experience with it? Surely all who have endured distress and disappointment know it well. Almost any trial causes its appearance as if by magic; then the wounded spirit is prone to retire within itself and submit to the coddling of this pitying, sympathetic nurse. Its voice is so soft, its balm so soothing, that one will surrender to its caresses in order to secure a semblance of satisfaction, not realizing how weak he is becoming-how the anodyne of self-pity is sapping his strength, lowering his morale, destroying his power of resistance, so that almost before he is aware of it his faith will surrender and doubt will be allowed to enter and control his life.

It is self-pity which, in the stress of suffering, begins the treacherous work of undermining the soul, preparing the way, step by step, for those questionings of doubt which so often come to confuse the troubled heart in its zero hour of trial and bewilderment. Thick and fast come the Whys, Ifs, Yets, and their ilk. Why should you be called upon to suffer this affliction? If God really loves you, why should he allow this trial to come upon you? See how faithfully you have served him, yet he has not prevented this calamity! And you would be willing enough to endure some other test, but of all things not this! What possible good can come of this ailment or deformity? How can God permit such an attack upon his child? Now, when such questionings are harbored, self-pity is hatching rebellion fast. It is an imminent danger, threatening, imperious—a poison at the heart. Many are the examples of those crushed in this manner. Many are the damaged souls who have not yet shaken off the incubus. But there are those who have resisted and withstood, who have forgotten the claims of self in service to others; who, like Paul, hold not their life as dear unto themselves, so that they may accomplish their course. I shall now make mention of certain steadfast souls who cast out self-pity by submitting to the Lord's way. These examples are of record—Bible characters.

EXAMPLES OF FAITHFUL ENDURANCE.

David passed this way, and in the Seventy-third Psalm he graphically tells us of his experience. His feet were slipping into the Slough of Despond and even of hopeless defeat while he was engrossed in contemplating the prosperity of the wicked and comparing it with his own life of trial. He was on the eve of surrendering to self-pity. "But as for me," he said, "my feet were almost gone; my steps had well-nigh slipped." Then by God's grace he was led into the sanctuary, as it were, and there, in the light of true vision and clear perspective, he saw as in a panorama the fearful destruction of those of whom he had been envious and the provisions for his own glorious future. Hear his confession: "So brutish was I, and ignorant; I was as a beast before thee." This is followed by a pean of praise: "Thou wilt guide me with thy counsel, and afterwards receive me to glory."

Satan attempted this specious strategy even on our The Savior is predicting his trial and blessed Lord. crucifixion, when Peter, taking him aside, actually rebukes his Lord: "Be it far from thee, Lord: this shall never be unto thee." As though he said: "Have compassion; spare yourself." Were ever spoken more presumptuous words? And how sharp was the prompt and selfdeserved rebuke: "Get thee behind me, Satan: thou art a stumblingblock unto me."

Job is an example of faithful endurance. Never in all his sore testing did he give place to self-pity. Amid all the distressing losses of his first fiery trial, "in all this Job sinned not, nor charged God foolishly." "Jehovah gave, and Jehovah hath taken away; blessed be the name of Jehovah." "In all this did not Job sin with his lips." All this expresses his quiet confidence and submission to the will and way of God. There are other early examples, not the least among them the prophets, but Job appeals to us peculiarly. "Behold, we call them blessed that endured: ye have heard of the patience of Job, and have seen the end of the Lord, how that the Lord is full of pity, and merciful."

REJOICING IN TRIBULATION.

And Paul. Not many souls allow God to lift them up to the height of Paul's experience when he said, "We rejoice in tribulation;" and he proved it while enduring his thorn in the flesh. Thrice deliverance was sought, and thrice denied; but instead of moping in sadness and gloom and allowing self-pity to fasten upon him to destroy his faith, he breaks forth in glad acclaim: "Most gladly therefore will I rather glory in my weaknesses, that the power of Christ may rest upon me." Paul exemplifies the Christian attitude toward trials. He never pitied himself, but interpreted his trials as being means for his own good. Hear these words of his: "For, I think, God hath set forth us the apostles last of all, as men doomed to death: for we are made a spectacle unto the world, both to angels and men." This was his secret of patiently enduring all that came to his apostolic lot.

The Christian does not give place to self-pity. He may sorrow, not for himself, but for the loss of loved ones who have passed on before; yet not as others who have no hope. He may pity, again not himself, but others who suffer, and especially the lost on their way to perdition. Bearing his cross, Jesus spoke thus to the weeping women who followed him: "Daughters of Jerusalem, weep not for me, but weep for yourselves and for your children." And on the cross this petition for his enemies: "Father, forgive them." Such an example of self-immolation, such altruism and love for others, the world has never seen. His pity was for the women and their children, whose woes were hidden from their eyes; his prayers were for his murderers, whose enormity was unknown to their calloused hearts. And he is our Exemplar.

So the Christian may be distressed because of the wickedness of men, because of the indignities manifested toward the religion of his Lord by a sin-pursuing world. He may be concerned about this in the interest of truth and of the souls of men. Losing himself in a passion for souls, he will pray and work for the salvation of the lost. He will not once give place to self-pity. Then will be measured to him strength proportioned to his given task. Then will be bestowed upon him by the Giver of every perfect gift, "beauty for ashes, the oil of joy for mourning, the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness."

Do not, therefore, allow the upas tree of self-pity to take root in your heart, to flourish in your life. Its deadly shade and poisoned soil will work distrust and havoc and ruin to character and devotion. Pluck it out root and branch, and let the fruit of the Spirit spring up instead, to bless the world, to make you joyful in service to others, in forgetfulness of self.

TRUE VALUES.

The things of time seem wonderfully small Compared to those beyond—then why enthrall Our minds and hearts by making them our all? What though success our effort does not crown With joy or love or pittance of renown, If, at the last, we gain a victor's crown?

What though our eager hands do fail to grasp The laurel, and unfinished is our task, If, crossing o'er, our Pilot's hand we clasp? For though our earthly eyes may fail to see The consummation of our aims, there we Shall gain for work, heaven's vast eternity.

What though by adverse winds our lives be driven, And on time's rocky coast be sadly riven, So we but anchor safe, at last, in heaven? And though our hearts are often sore oppressed In this short life, and anguish fill the breast, On that fair shore we'll gain a peaceful rest.

All earthly love and fame and wealth and ease—
O, one could well afford to lose all these,
If fanned his soul-life by immortal breeze.
But, "No good thing will he withhold from them
That walk uprightly." Like a diadem
He crowns the life that is with that to come. Selected.

GOSPEL ADVOCATE MANAGEMENT COMMENDED.

Murfreesboro, Tenn., August 16, 1925.—The Gospel Advocate, Nashville, Tenn.—Brethren: I certainly rejoice over the progress the Gospel Advocate is making and the good I believe it is producing. There has been a great improvement in both the additional and breakers and improvement in both the making and the good I believe it is producing. There has been a great improvement in both the editorial and business policies of the magazine.

The policy of refusing to sell space for "patent medicine" advertisements is most praiseworthy. This change in the advertising policy of the Advocate inevitably places a heavier financial burden on its publishers. The brotherhood should recognize and realize this fact and help secure worthy advertisements for the Advocate, and thus make it possible for it to render a greater service for our Master.

Our brethren should be shown and taught that under present conditions it is impossible to publish a religious magazine of merit without a financial loss, unless considerable income can be secured from advertisements. Advertisements of merchandise of merit are desirable. It is good business information. They tell us about the merits of good merchandise, where it can be bought, what we should pay, etc. The brotherhood should realize the effort and the sacrifice now being made to give it a good, clean, religious publication, and should appreciate it, value it, and give the Advocate the support that it so justly merits from the brotherhood.

Besides the good editorial and business policies of the Advocate, its presswork is of a high class. Yes, it is deserving of the support of the brotherhood in every way. I wish I could be of some help in helping increase its circulation to at least a hundred thousand.

I wanted to tell you of my encouragement and of

I wanted to tell you of my encouragement and of my appreciation of the service you are rendering our Master.

Faithfully yours,

TOPIC AND TEXT

BY A. B. LIPSCOMB

Wherever the rich and the poor are thrown together, questions relating to social justice will arise. To know and to perform their duty, Christians do not need to take a course in social economics, but they should study closely what the word of the living God has to say on the subject.

In setting forth a fundamental and working principle of the Christian religion, James says, for the first part: "Pure religion and undefiled before our God and Father is this, to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction." The New Testament writer amplifies and illustrates some of the teachings of the Old Testament; for Moses' law, the prophets, and the Psalms often speak of the fatherless and the widow. For example: "Ye shall not afflict any widow, or fatherless child. If thou afflict them at all, and they cry at all unto me, I will surely hear their cry." (Ex. 22: 22, 23.) Or: "He [God] doth execute justice for the fatherless and widow, and loveth the sojourner, in giving him food and raiment." (Deut. 10: 18.) Or: "In thee the fatherless findeth mercy." (Hos. the sojourner, in giving him food and raiment." 14: 3.) Jeremiah (5: 28), reproving hi speople for their sins, says: "They judge not the cause, the cause of the fatherless." The Psalmist with even greater passion and vehemence appeals to God, "to whom vengeance belongeth," against those who "slay the widow and the sojourner, and murder the fatherless." (Ps. 94: 1, 6.)

These passages show us that back in the olden times orphans and widows, weak and defenseless creatures, were not only forsaken, but were often cruelly and unjustly treated.

The church has not grown so good and so philanthropic under the direct and reflex influence of Christianity but what it still needs such teaching. Could we but see all that is going on in the world, we would find that there are thousands of children who have lost their parents, who every day are cruelly beaten and mistreated, and who, ragged, dirty, and forsaken, are obliged to beg in the streets. Of course, the most horrible examples of suffering are found in the larger cities; but Christians can always find in their own communities, and usually within the circle of their own membership, a widow and orphans who should become the special objects of their care. It is a matter that causes wonder and surprise why so many appeals must be made through the Gospel Advocate and other mediums for the support of the various orphans' homes, when the teaching of the Bible is so abundant, so plain, and so emphatic on the subject, showing us clearly where our duty lies. Surely the laxness and indifference of many must grieve the heart of Him who, like the Father, so tenderly loved little children, and gathered them into his arms and blessed them.

BROADENING OUR VISION.

There is the danger that the disciples of Christ may become narrow and limited in their philanthropies. Granted that we have five or six well-conducted though meagerly supported orphanages, what have we done for the aged, the invalid, and those seeking employment? When properly interpreted, the "fatherless and widows" represent all who are weak and needy and defenseless. They may be children who have parents, but these parents are heartless and cruel and are letting their children grow up in ignorance amid conditions of filth, disease, and vice. Should they be any less the objects of our solicitude than regular orphans? There are boys and girls chilged to work in unhealthy places. Sometimes when we catch a glimpse of their wan faces, they seem to wither like plants in need of sun and air. Shall we let them stay cooped up and die? They may be young men who, in search of employment, have left homes where they were regarded with affectionate and diligent care, and now they are being exposed to all the dangers and temptations of the large cities. You may depend upon it, the devil knows where they are. Well he knows how to surround them, presenting himself to them under changeable and alluring form, it may be appearing as "an angel of light." Shall we Christians stand by and let the devil take them? If he succeeds in taking them, then it will be easier to weaken, overthrow, and conquer humanity. They may be grown-up men and women who are wearing out their days in search of work they cannot find. Even if they find work, they are often so poorly paid they do not have enough to provide food and clothes. They may be old men and old women, put away like worn and useless tools, who, because they cannot give any more, receive no more. Are not all of these classes included in that pure religion which provides for the "fatherless and the widows?" Should we not, as Christians, broaden the scope of our sympathy and interest in suffering humanity until it includes them all?

LOOKING UPON THE THINGS OF OTHERS.

Jesus said: "What man is there of you, who, if his son shall ask him for a loaf, will give him a stone?" That man is the exception and not the rule. Most of us appreciate the necessity of looking after our own families. If our brother is ill or in trouble, we go to him; if our sister is insulted, we are quick to defend her; if our parents are in need, we provide for them. But where other people outside of our family are concerned, our attitude is often different. We go our way, do our work, think and live as if our family and our little circle of friends were the only people on the earth, very much in the spirit of that pious-speaking old fraud who prayed: "Lord, bless me and my wife and my son, John."

Paul exhorts: "Look not every man upon his own things, but also upon the things of others." That is not easy. That is why it is not usually done. "In this we are to blame," says a noted Italian preacher, "that our natural heart which is beating only for our relatives and friends has not been transformed by the Spirit of Christ, who lived and died not only for his family and for his disciples, but for all his countrymen, and still more for every man, whatever his nationality, race, religion, class—for every man only because he was a man, because he was his brother, son of the same father; for every man, even if that man betrayed and killed him."

THE RIGHT MOTIVE IN GIVING.

James tells the Christian, in the second part of his famous statement, to "keep himself unspotted from the world." This is just as important as to look after the fatherless and widows. We may show our interest in widows and orphans, in the poor and oppressed of every nation, and yet be prompted by the wrong motive; we may throw ourselves body and soul into the work of relieving human miseries, not on account of irresistible love, but for selfish reasons, for vanity's sake, to be noticed and to be praised. Paul says in this connection: "If I bestow all my goods to feed the poor, and if I give my body to be burned, but have not love, it profiteth me nothing." There is such a thing as speculating on the sufferings of humanity. A poor man may give merely to make a show before the public. A preacher may get himself elected to some board merely for the honor of it. Some of us know that a well-meaning sister may stir up more trouble as a charity worker than her services are worth. At the same time her own home is being neglected. There lived in Indiana a few years ago a famous character who secured a mayor's office by giving carloads of potatoes to the poor people of Indianapolis. He did not care for the poor, but had an ambition to be mayor. The poor got the potatoes and he got the office. Christians should keep themselves unspotted from the world in their giving as in all other matters. The world is a lie and loves adulation; God is truth and loves sincerity.

THE REVIVAL AT GOWEN'S MISSION. BY S. H. HALL.

There is such a thing as a work esteemed but little by men being the very work that our Lord appreciates as the greatest. If you remember when John the Baptist sent his disciples to where Christ was teaching with the question, "Are you the Messiah, or shall we look for another?" his answer was: "The blind receive their sight, and the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed, and the deaf hear, the dead are raised up, and the poor have the gospel preached to them." The significant point in this answer is that our Lord placed the fact that the poor had the gospel preached to them along with the miracles he performed as evidence that he was the Messiah. I want to ask if one of the unmistakable, incontrovertible facts about our Lord and his teaching that distinguished him from all others is not that he made absolutely no difference between individuals and peoples of the earth, but regarded all as having souls to be saved, and tried as hard to save one as he did another? Look this fact straight in the face and think. There was no difference with him in races. The man in the very depth of poverty was just as interesting to him as the man of wealth. A soul was a soul wherever he found it, and, with no partiality whatever, he did his best to save all, and tasted death for every man.

Not so with too many of the poor mortals that claim to be his followers to-day. There are disciples that have not one bit of interest in the colored race. They have them in their homes as servants and work them all their lives, and not one time during all this time does the thought come that this colored man or woman has a soul to be saved. I have known some who were leaders in our local churches, teachers in our Lord's-day-morning Bible-school work, to do just what I have stated here. Could Christ do a thing like that? Then I have reasons to believe that there are church members who never take any interest in the conversion of some families just because they are miserably poor. Could Christ do that? To have, indeed, a church of Christ in your community, you must have a people filled with the Spirit of our Lord, that strives to save all and that has not this devilish respect of persons and of peoples.

At Lavergne, Tenn., we have such a soul in the person of Brother Jesse Owen. A more humble, modest, meek, and Christlike soul you could not find. I cannot remember the day since he came into the church of Christ that he was not trying to see that the poor and neglected have the gospel preached to them. He, with a few other faithful souls, established "Gowen's Mission." The Brethren Gowen who furnished the place for the mission have stood nobly by him, with others whose names I cannot now give.

And I am happy that Russell Street Church has helped some. The revival referred to in the heading of this article was conducted by Brethren Ed Bacigalupo and J. C. Hutchenson, the latter doing all the preaching except one sermon preached by the former; but Brother Bacigalupo furnished two cars the most of the time, was there in person when he was able, and his two splendid daughters worked much in the meeting. The results were nine baptisms and two reclaimed, among the number an old woman, seventy and odd years old. There was another baptism during the meeting about which special mention should be made. A man over forty years old, I would judge, who had been terribly dissipated, heard Brother Hutchenson preach two sermons, got to thinking after he went home how low down and mean he had been, and began to cry, seemingly hysterically, and called for Brother Owen early the next morning and wanted to be baptized. Brother Owen gave him Brother Bacigalupo's address in Nashville and told him to go to him and have a talk with him. He came. The case bothered Brother Bacigalupo. He wondered if the man were under the influence of mean whisky or were beside himself in some way; so he called me over the telephone and described the case and asked what I would advise. My answer was that no one but God could judge the sincerity of a soul under such circumstances; so I advised him to hurry over to the Russell Street house of worship, get the baptismal suit, and go to the foot of Broad Street and baptize him. This was what the man was pleading for. Brother Bacigalupo had suggested that he go back home, and be certain to be at the services that night, and learn more and think more about what he was doing. This suggestion was made with the thought that probably something abnormal was affecting him, and this would give him time to come to himself. But no! He was afraid to go back home without being baptized; he wanted this done, and done quickly. So Brother Bacigalupo called Brother Clyde Hale and asked him to meet him at the river, got the baptismal suit, and, accompanied by his own brother and the man begging to be baptized, went to the river and baptized him. man was at church that night and at every service thereafter, working with others to save souls.

This case made me think of Paul when he was brought to know that he was the chief of sinners, and when he asked the Lord what to do and was told to go into the city and there it should be told him, and he went, but was weeping, fasting, praying for three days and nights, and just could not cease to thus do till he learned what it was he must do, and did it, and was saved. Never—no, never—refuse to baptize a soul who is crying and begging to be baptized. I wish I could see more of this.

Brother Hutchenson did his work well. We have no better man. He knows the truth, works hard every day in the week to make a living, and preaches somewhere on Lord's day, and conducts meetings when he can do so without interfering with his work. Brother Bacigalupo is another untiring worker. He has been in the church, as has been stated before, hardly four years. He had been preaching at this mission for a number of months and arranged for this meeting. As already stated, he kept two cars busy the most of the time, going after old people and others and carrying them to the meeting and then sending them home, and in getting Brother Hutchenson there, and he also did the baptizing.

It is well to state that Brother Owen saw that all of this good work was not done at their own charges, but, with the help of other good people in the Lavergne congregation, remunerated these brethren for their labors.

If all men and women who claim to be Christians would work as these men work, the whole world would soon know of our Lord. But you can find people in a radius of a mile or so (and sometimes less) of an old congregation calling itself "the church of Christ" who have never heard of our Lord, and for whose conversion this church has done nothing. I have known congregations to exist for years in the midst of other nationalities and not turn their hand one time to convert any one except their own race. Such may be "the church of Christ" all right, but it is "the church of Christ" our Lord said nothing about.

It requires the same type of men and principle to preserve our American institutions as it required to establish them,—Dr. Maurice J. Neuberg.

Yesterday six were added to the congregation, brethren who had moved into our city."

C. W. Thompson, Dumas, Miss., August 19: "I have been reading the Gospel Advocate since my boyhood days. It grows better with the passing years. Howell (Adventist) discuss the Sabbath question at Stewart's Chapel, in which Brother Slayden made it clear that Adventism is from start to finish as false as hell itself. One year ago, August 27, I delivered my first sermon, and since that time I have been instrumental in converting twenty souls. He is the only man there that lifts his voice both publicly and privately against the innovations which they have at Beech Grove. The church there is about equally divided in sentiment, with the digressive element weakening."

Some of the greatest speeches ever heard on an occasion of this kind were made by Presidents Hardeman and Calhoun, Ex-Governor Rye, and County Superintendent J. W. Stewart. Much interest and enthusiasm was in evidence. A fine body of students from ten different States were present. The enrollment is the largest it has been at any opening within the past four years."

EDITORIAL

"WHERE SHALL I GO TO BE RIGHT?"

Referring to a recent editorial in these columns on this question, a brother sends in the following request:

In the answer of Brother Kurfees to Brother J. B. In the answer of Brother Kurfees to Brother J. B. Briney to the above question, said answer appearing in the Gospel Advocate of August 27, 1925, at page 829, in section 6 of said article, I find the following language: "In the Jewish worship, both vocal and instrumental music were divinely commanded." I do not find where instrumental music was ever ordained to be in the worship in the Old Testament. Perhaps I have run over this and did not take the proper notice of same, and would be pleased to have Brother Kurfees give me the chapter and verse (or chapters and verses) where instrumental music was so ordained in the Old Testament. A BIBLE STUDENT. so ordained in the Old Testament. A BIBLE STUDENT.

I am glad to answer "A Bible Student," and will call attention to the facts in the case. In Isa. 38: 4, 5 we are told: "Then came the word of Jehovah to Isaiah, saying, Go, and say to Hezekiah, Thus saith Jehovah;" and a part of the message which Jehovah through Isaiah put in the mouth of Hezekiah was the following: "We will sing my songs with stringed instruments all the days of our life in the house of Jehovah." (Verse 20.) Jehovah indirectly through Isaiah told them to "sing songs with stringed instruments."

David, another one of Jehovah's prophets, was inspired by Jehovah to say: "Give thanks unto Jehovah with the harp: sing praises unto him with the psaltery of ten strings." (Ps. 33: 2, 3.) Again: "Unto thee will I sing praises with the harp, O thou Holy One of Israel." (Ps. 71: 22.) Again: "Praise him with stringed instruments and pipe." (Ps. 150: 4.)

These passages and facts establish the correctness of the statement that "in the Jewish worship, both vocal and instrumental music were divinely commanded." Some people sometimes strangely argue that it was David, and not God, that introduced the instruments of music. But David was not only one of God's prophets himself, but in the instrumental-music matter is, as we have seen, sustained by Isaiah, another one of God's great servants. When God inspires prophets or apostles to say a thing, the thing thus said is what God himself says. This vain attempt to separate David and God on the instrumentalmusic matter, which is sometimes strangely made, is on a par with the attempt of the bobbed-hair crowd to separate Paul and God. It is useless to mince words over the matter, and if we are at liberty to reject one thing which Jehovah said through his prophets or apostles, then we are at liberty to reject anything and everything else which he said through them. There is no halfway ground. We must either accept all, or we open the way for the rejection of all, and thus for the practical repudiation of the Bible. M. C. KURFEES.

WORD FROM WASHINGTON.

BY T. B. LARIMORE.

We have just reached Washington-September 10thus terminating our trip to Tennessee. I have previously told you some things about our trip, but, though some of my articles were longer than I usually write, I omitted some things I wanted to tell you. One of those things was our side trip to Gallatin, the capital of Sumner County, Sunday, August 23. An automobile ride of about thirty miles, from Nashville to Gallatin, through a very fine farming country, but suffering then from drought, brought us-Mrs. Larimore, my granddaughter (Miss Mary George), and me-to the pleasant home of Brother Baskerville, where we stopped for the day and enjoyed a good dinner and association with him and his delightful family; and there Mrs. Larimore and I spent that night.

We have in Gallatin a good meetinghouse, in which I delivered two discourses to good audiences, and met many cld friends and hosts of new ones. Between the two discourses we enjoyed a good supper at the beautiful country home of Brother C. C. Chenault, ten miles from Gallatin. I enjoyed especially the dainty supper served there because no one insisted on my eating more than I wanted to eat, which was very little. I think big dinners and sumptuous suppers have been very helpful to some preachersincluding me-as the little girl said pins had saved many lives. "Pins has saved many lives," the little girl wrote in her composition. "How is that, Mary?" asked her teacher. "Why, by not swallerin' 'em," said the little girl. Big dinners and sumptuous suppers have made many preachers successful, if not, indeed, famous-by no swallowing 'em. An early automobile ride Monday morn ing landed us safe in Nashville again.

I have told you of going to Cookeville, where I wa held a prisoner by a lame back till the latter part of th first week in September. I always stop and stay in th Whitson home when in Cookeville, and it is a good place in which to stay. Jere Whitson is one of the most woderful men I have ever known, and I am glad to clain him as my friend, and Sister Whitson is simply peerles. Every member of the household and hosts of othr friends did everything possible to make my sojourn n Cookeville pleasant. I preached to two good audience there, Sunday, September 6.

The next day we reluctantly left Cookeville and glacy went to Crossville, where we spent twenty-four hours, te pleasant home of Brother J. E. Baxter being our hole while there. I delivered one discourse there in the granmar-school auditorium. Crossville is on the tiptop of Cumberland Mountain. I had long wanted to see tat tiptop town, and I was not disappointed when I sawit. Some sixty years ago, Allen Cross and I were schoolmres at what is now Carson-Newman College-Mossy Crek College then. Allen was booked from Crossville, Tenn.; hence, I presumed Crossville was named for the Cross family. Not so, however. Two highways cross there; hence the name.

We found one good brother, Luke Shanks, whom I had baptized at Cookeville some years ago, sick at Crossville; nor was he the only good brother we found at Crossville whom I had baptized at Cookeville. We were glad to find Brother Proffitt and other good friends and brethren there. Mrs. Larimore was especially delighted to meet in Crossville a favorite cousin and her husband—Mr. and Mrs. S. A. Taylor—who are spending the summer in that little mountain town. Those three enjoyed a reunion and communion pleasant indeed, disturbed by nothing except the fear that they might appear to others to be somewhat selfish in their enjoyment, and I enjoyed their enjoyment.

The saints and faithful in Crossville have now no meetinghouse, but they have a good lot in a good location and are building a good house on it, but necessarily they are building slowly and at a sacrifice that means much self-denial. I deplore the custom of churches' begging money to build meetinghouses, but we ought to help the church at Crossville, and, of course, we will help them. I am going to help them a little, and I suggest that you make a safe deposit for the future by helping them a little to-day. If you wait, you may forget, and they need your help and encouragement now. "Now is the accepted time," saith the Spirit.

Leaving Crossville about two o'clock, Tuesday, September 8, we spent that night in Knoxville, reaching that city about six o'clock. The next day, after making our arrangements to start on an afternoon train to Washington, we visited our good friend, Judge L. D. Smith, in his office, and there met his nephew, William Eagle, whom I baptized in Sparta some years ago, and also met for the first time Brother J. W. Brents, now of Henderson, Tenn., of whom I had often heard and read good things. He is now engaged in a tent meeting in Knoxville. He, Mrs. Larimore, and I took a walk toward the river, stopping in the courthouse lawn to see the tombs of John Sevier, rst governor of Tennessee, and his wife, "Bonny Kate." Ve walked halfway across the bridge that spans the ennessee River at Knoxville. That usually broad, majesc-looking river was lower than I had ever seen it, as a sult of the long drought that has this summer parched getation and lowered rivers and dried up many wells d springs in that region. The Tennessee looked then d there like a dead river-no motion or sign of current ing visible from the bridge.

RELIGIOUS HYDROPHOBIA.

BY F. W. SMITH.

drophobia is defined as "a preternatural dread of wr; canine madness." In short, when a dog has hyphobia, we call him a "mad dog;" and when such an aral sees water, he throws a fit. This kind of a "mad" aral is to be avoided, and the best thing for both the dond society is to dispatch the animal as quickly as pole; for so long as such creatures run at large other ands are liable to become infected with the same dread dise.

v, figuratively speaking, there is such a thing as "rious hydrophobia," and the author of the Sunday-school lesson of September 6, 1925, as published in News and Truth, a Baptist paper, has a violent type of this dreadful malady. While the author did not mention the word "water," he threw his fit just the same; but before coming to his convulsion we shall note how he destroys Baptist doctrine on the subject of repentance:

Repentance is toward God, not toward death nor toward a dead mother or dead wife or some other loved one. Multitudes of those who are put through the mourners'-bench experiences of high-pressure Arminians never think of their sins against God. Their feelings are harrowed up by deathbed stories, and then they are put through the sweat box until they are exhausted physically and mentally, and then a sense of relief comes, and they are told that is conversion. It is the baldest of deception. Study this lesson. Repentance means seeing your sinfulness in God's sight; confessing your sins to him; having wrought in you by the Holy Spirit such a loathing and hatred of sin, because it is offensive to God, that brings about in them a death to sin and a forsaking of it. That is the repentance of the Bible. That is the only genuine kind.

And this from a Baptist pen in a Baptist paper! The old darky was most certainly correct when he said: "The world sho' do move," I was reared in a Baptist community, and frankly declare that it has not been so many years ago when such utterances as the above would have been branded as "rank Campbellism."

Have the Baptists become ashamed of the wild and fanatical scenes they called "getting religion" in their "mourners'-bench exercises?" The very things repudiated by this Baptist scribe were, and no doubt still are, in many sections, regarded as the work of the Holy Spirit in conversion. Instead of being regarded as "feelings harrowed up by deathbed stories" and the baldest of deception," as is now branded by a Baptist teacher, they were termed the evidence of "bright" and "happy conversions."

CLINGING TO THE MYSTIC.

While repudiating the former doctrine and practice of Baptists of the "mourners'-bench system of getting religion," the author still clings to the mysterious operation of the Holy Spirit. In defining repentance he says: "Repentance means seeing your sinfulness in God's sight; confessing your sins to him; having wrought in you by the Holy Spirit such a loathing and hatred of sin," etc. With this Baptist teacher, the reading or hearing the word of God describing and condemning sin is not enough to cause a "loathing and hatred of sin," but, in addition to that, the sinner must be wrought upon directly by the Holy Spirit. Then pray tell us of what possible use can the word of God be in the conversion of sinners, and how much more "scriptural" is this Baptist scribe than those who take their "harrowed-up feelings by deathbed stories" as evidence of conversion? If his feelings are an evidence that the Holy Spirit "wrought" in him, why should not their feelings be evidence that they were converted? What right has he to repudiate feelings in one case and accept them in the other? It is quite evident that while this Baptist may have himself repented, he does not understand the teaching of God's word on the subject.

AN ATTACK OF HYDROPHOBIA.

After repudiating Baptist doctrine and practice, he must have got either the sight or odor of "water," for it is impossible for a Baptist to mention "Campbellism" without throwing a fit. Note this:

Campbellism knows nothing about genuine repentance, and Methodism and the Ku-Klux aren't much better to-day.

It is evident that he had in his mind "water" when he had that spasm, because he ignorantly, willfully, or in some other false way teaches people that Christians do not believe in repentance, that all that is necessary is baptism, and hence he tells people that "Campbellites" believe in "water salvation."

Why one who became a Baptist through the element of water baptism, and who was not permitted to approach the Lord's table without that water baptism, can have the face to charge others as teaching "water salvation" is too ridiculous to demand the slightest respect.

PAUL MISREPRESENTED.

It was exceedingly bad for the author to use such ugly manners in calling the teaching of the New Testament "Campbellism," but even worse to so flagrantly misrepresent the apostle Paul. Hear him:

After a sinner is convicted of his need of Christ and has died to sin in repentance, then there is no whither for has died to sin in repentance, then there is no whither for him to turn in his despair, except to Christ. Saving faith is receiving Christ and resting on him and his atoning blood, and that alone, for eternal life and a once-for-all deliverance from the present bondage and future penalty of sin. That is the experience Paul is talking about in this lesson. When he looked up into the face of the Lord Jesus on the road to Damascus and called him Lord for the first time in his life, right then and there he was saved; for he says "no man can call Jesus Lord, but by the Holy Spirit."

It is true that "saving faith is receiving Christ and resting on him and his atoning blood, and that alone, for eternal life;" but when and how does the sinner receive Christ? Jesus told his disciples: "He that receiveth you receiveth me, and he that receiveth me receiveth him that sent me." (Matt. 10: 40.) Now, the only way to receive the apostles is to receive their words. Hence, it is said: "They then that received his word were baptized." (Acts 2: 41.)

But what did Peter's word contain? "Now when they heard this, they were pricked in their heart, and said unto Peter and the rest of the apostles, Brethren, what shall we do? And Peter said unto them, Repent ye, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ unto the remission of your sins; and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit." (Acts 2: 37, 38.) That is what they received in receiving Peter's word.

Paul's account of his conversion and pardon does not agree with the Baptist scribe. Hear Paul detailing what a New Testament preacher told him to do for the remission of his sins: "And now why tarriest thou? arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on his name." (Acts 22: 16.) Does that sound as if, as the Baptist preacher says of Paul on the road to Damascus when he saw Jesus, "right then and there he was saved?" Did this Baptist preacher ever, in his life, tell a sinner what Ananias told Saul of Tarsus to do to have his sins washed away? THE BLASTING PERIOD.

A recent issue of a Nashville paper published the following story: WHEN MANDY GOT RELIGION.

A colored cook came after midnight from a revival meeting shouting at the top of her voice. Her employer, meeting shouting at the top of her voice. Her employer, letting her in, said:

"Aunt Mandy, this is all foolishness. Religion shouldn't be so noisy. Tell that preacher of yours to give a sermon on the building of King Solomon's temple, which arose without even the sound of a hammer. And remember that real religion is quiet and peaceful."

"Lawd, honey," answered Aunt Mandy, "us niggers aint aimin' to build no temple yit. We is jes' blastin' now." (Everybody.)

Have the Baptists finished the blasting period? If so, we congratulate them on their progress.

MAKING TOO MUCH OF DIFFERENCES. No. 1. BY E. A. ELAM.

And account that the long-suffering of our Lord is salvation; even as our beloved brother Paul also, according to the wisdom given to him, wrote unto you; as also in all his epistles, speaking in them of these things; wherein are some things hard to be understood, which the ignorant and unsteadfast wrest, as they do also the other scriptures, unto their own destruction. (2 Pet. 3: 15, 16.)

Different statements in this passage should be studied and taught, as should the entire will of God.

1. "The long-suffering of our Lord is salvation." In what here is the Lord's long-suffering? "In the last days mockers shall come with mockery, walking after their own lusts, and saying, Where is the promise of his coming? for, from the day that the fathers fell asleep, all things continue as they were from the beginning of creation." (See 2 Pet. 3: 3-7.) These mockers scoffed at the idea that Christ will come again, that the heavens and earth which now are will be dissolved, as Peter describes, and that there will be "new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness," or in which the righteous will dwell. The Lord is long-suffering in that he has not already come and destroyed the wicked.

2. That "the day of the Lord will come as a thief," in which day "the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall be dissolved with fervent heat, and the earth and the works that are therein shall be burned up." (2 Pet. 3: 10.) The thief comes when not expected. (See Matt. 24: 42-44.)

3. That the Lord would have come already-that is, by the time Peter wrote his second epistle-and these fearful and awful things would have transpired already, but for the long-suffering of our Lord, who wishes not "that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance."

4. That this destruction of the heavens and earth and the wicked and the salvation of the righteous in the new heavens and new earth are pending-that is, they are depending upon the long-suffering of our Lord. fearful destruction is held back by the long-suffering of the Lord. This destruction of the wicked together with the material universe and the salvation of the righteous are used by the Lord as warnings to the wicked and encouragement and hope to the righteous. "Wherefore, beloved, seeing that ye look for these things, give diligence that ye may be found in peace, without spot and blameless in his sight;" and "seeing that these things are thus all to be dissolved, what manner of persons ought ye to be in all holy living and godliness, looking for and earnestly desiring the coming of the day of God, by reason of which the heavens being on fire shall be dissolved, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat?"

5. That Christians, therefore, must be "looking for and earnestly desiring" the coming of the Lord. What is the meaning of "looking for and earnestly desiring the coming of the day of God," or of any important day, or the coming of any important personage? Since we look for and earnestly desire the coming of se greatly important and wonderful event as "the day of the Lord" and the melting of the elements witl fervent heat and the burning up of the earth and th works therein, we should steadfastly wait for them, an also should "give diligence" to pursue that life "in a holy living and godliness" whereby we may "be foun in peace, without spot and blameless in his sight." Br do not some do and preach almost anything else? Li tening attentively to all the sermons which are preache and reading thoughtfully all the articles of religiou papers, we get but little to impress us with "the comin of the day of God," the utter destruction of the wor and wicked people, the spotless and blameless life " all holy living and godliness" which we must pursue, a the "new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelle righteousness." "All holy living," "all godliness," " peace," "without spot," and "blameless in his sight? not in our sight or in man's sight, and not some holy liv and godliness in some respects-are very full of mean and should receive all the emphasis which the Lord pla upon them; while the "looking for and earnestly de ing the coming of the day of God" should be cu vated to the full extent and joyous expectation of gospel of Christ. On and on we could pursue this sub of "all holy living and godliness." We can see the sp on the other brother's character and see the blame in life. This is too much by far the occupation of some. But how about our own "all holy living and godliness," our own spots and blame, or our own. "giving diligence" to be found by Christ without such?

As teachers, elders, preachers, and examples, our greatest need is faith. Faith comes by hearing the word of God, but by hearing all the word of God, and not only that which suits us. We need to believe all that God teaches on "all things that pertain unto life and godliness"—this life of "all holy living and godliness," this spotless and blameless life. Also, faith without works is dead; and, therefore, without this pure and holy, godly and spotless life, our faith is vain, and our preaching and teaching are vain also.

We lack humility and trust. God forbids our thinking of ourselves more highly than we should, and condemns our being wise in our own conceits. Our own conceits in many things go a long way further with us than the word of God. This seems to be at present one almost deadly and incurable disease.

6. That Paul wrote of these things in all his epistles, which we find to be true as we read them. Since he wrote of them in all his epistles, we should study and both practice and teach them. But do we? What do we study and teach, anyway?

7. That in Paul's epistles are some "things hard to be understood," and we must note especially, "which the ignorant and unsteadfast wrest, as they do also the other scriptures, unto their own destruction." The ones ignorant of the teaching of the Bible and the unsteadfast in the faith and practice are the ones who wrest, not only some things which Paul has written, which are "hard to be understood," but "also, other scriptures, unto their own destruction." Such "ignorant and unsteadfast" ones seem to delight in twisting or turning the gospel from its true meaning and perverting it "unto their own destruction," and unto the destruction of others. The more ignorant and more unsteadfast in both faith and practice some are, the wiser in their own conceits they seem to be, and the more they try to appear to know all about the "things hard to be understood."

If we desire to read some things which Paul has written of the coming of Christ, the resurrection of the dead, the judgment, the "new heavens and a new earth," the destruction of the wicked, the salvation of the righteous, etc., see 1 Thess. 3: 13; 4: 13 to 5: 11; 2 Thess. 1: 7-10; 1 Cor. 15: 20-28; Phil. 3: 20, 21; Tit. 2: 11-13; 2 Cor. 5: 1-10; Heb. 4: 9; 11: 14-16; Rom. 2: 3-11; 14: 10-13; 8: 19-22; 2 Cor. 5: 10. On these subjects Paul also preached. He preached on them to the learned Athenians and to their supreme judges (Acts 17: 20, 21, 30, 31); also, to Felix (Acts 24: 24, 25). Many other passages state that he both preached and wrote on these subjects. "Go and do thou likewise." Also, we should remember that 2 Pet. 3: 17 says:

Ye therefore, beloved, knowing these things beforehand, beware lest, being carried away with the error of the wicked, ye fall from your own steadfastness.

Knowing beforehand these things (and if we do not know them, we should) which Paul and Peter have taught concerning the coming of Christ, the dissolution of the present heavens and earth, the destruction of the wicked, and the salvation of the righteous, we should be careful and watchful not to "fall from" our own steadfastness, as "the ignorant and unsteadfast," who wrest the "scriptures unto their own destruction," have done. We should search the Scriptures and lay up the word of God in our own hearts, lest we be carried away "with the error of the wicked," and fall from our own steadfastness. "Wherefore let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall."

Our own steadfastness is our sublime trust in God, our implicit faith in Christ, our faithful continuance in welldoing, our integrity of Christian character, and our holy living in all godliness and gravity.

On the point of being ignorant "of the word of righteousness" Paul reproved the Hebrews, declaring that they were thus ignorant because they were "dull of hearing," or had not applied themselves to the study of the word of God, and had not exercised their senses by reason of use in discerning the difference between good and evil, right and wrong, truth and error. (Heb. 5: 11-14.)

But who of us admits that he is ignorant of "the word of righteousness," or has been "carried away with the error of the wicked," or has fallen from his own steadfastness? The other man always is the ignorant one, the unsteadfast one, the one who is "dull of hearing," the one who is "without experience [practice] of the word of righteousness," the one who is a heretic, and the one who is not living the holy and godly life.

In striking contrast with "the ignorant and unstead-fast" and with being led away from our own steadfastness "with the error of the wicked," Peter exhorts us to "grow in the grace and knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ," (2 Pet. 3: 18.) But how much more gracious, merciful, forbearing, and forgiving; how much more faithful and loyal to God; how much more steadfast and unmovable and abundant in his work; and how much more Christlike in all daily life and teaching am I than I was last year or even ten or twenty years ago?

'Men speak of love and live in hate;
Men talk of faith and trust to fate.
O, might men do the things they teach!
O, might men live the life they preach!
Then the throne of avarice would fall,
And the clangor of grim selfishness o'er the earth would cease;

Love would shut out the baleful fire of anger, And in its ashes plant the lily of peace."

JUDGE M. H. MEEKS. BY F. B. SRYGLEY.

I was greatly distressed when I saw in the Gospel Advocate of August 20, in Brother Larimore's notes, that he came to Nashville to bury Judge M. H. Meeks. Having been away from Nashville and having seen no daily paper published there, I had not even heard that Brother Meeks was sick. I had spent some hours in his office the last day I was in Nashville before leaving for the West. It was a shock to me to read of his burial when I did not know but what he was in the best of health. I have been close to the Meeks family ever since, as a boy, I spent some days in his father's home. I had always consulted him on any question of law; and while we were not exactly agreed as to how to worship God, we were nevertheless the best of friends. While Brother Meeks worshiped where the organ was used, he always loved the ancient gospel on what it takes to put one into the body of Christ. He did not encourage the congregation where he worshiped in their departures after the world, and he had no patience with the higher critics who would set aside the word of God. In his last days he was more patient in his study of the Bible, and he grew more and more to love its simple teaching. He had grown more out of harmony with innovations as he drew near the end. I do not say he was perfect, but the love I had for him as a friend, with his many beautiful traits of character, causes me to want to cover up everything which I thought was a weakness with a mantle of charity. Knowing as I did how he had been treated in the Vine Street Christian Church, in which he was an elder, I was not surprised to read from Brother Larimore's pen the statement that "he withdrew from all affiliation with the congregation with which he had long worshiped and said he would work and worship the remnant of his days with the Central church of Christ." This fact brings me nearer to him in death than I had been before. He was my friend, and I feel sure God will not condemn me for loving him as a brother though we differed some as to the items of Christian worship.

Henry Meeks was a good lawyer and a just man. There was nothing of the "shyster" in his law practice. He viewed the lawyer somewhat with the old English idea, that the law is an honorable profession and that lawyers should respect the law and try to see it enforced. I know it is difficult for any lawyer to live up to that high conception of the practice of law and be a practioner in this age of the world when the greatest thing that is expected of the lawyer is to do detective work in looking up evidence and making the best out of a bad case by even defeating justice. I believe that Judge Meeks came as near living up to those high ideals as any lawyer I ever knew. He loved justice and tried to do right between man and man. The Lord deal gently with those that he loved and those that loved him. May his children imitate his good deeds. I pray for his bereaved wife and children. I know I have lost a good friend.

QUERY DEPARTMENT

BY H. LEO BOLES

In a recent issue of the Gospel Advocate, your reply to an inquiry regarding marriage was not quite clear to me. If I understood the query, it meant this: In the sight of God, when is a couple married? In spite of what the Bible teaches, our courts grant divorces for many reasons. This is not right, we know. Does God recognize any union as marriage just because our laws do? Would God recognize a marriage based on friendship alone, or entered into for social position, or for spite, or for business, or to please the parents? I was told by a Chinese student of few days ago that the younger generation of students of China encourage divorce. They think that if marriage is forced upon them by parents or custom, and it proves distasteful, that they have a right to break such marriage, as God would not have them live in misery for something in which they had no volition. If you try to show them that under the old law God recognized marriages made by the parents, and it is a law in China, and is, therefore, right, they will tell you that God permitted concubinage under the old law, and, according to your reasoning, because it is a law in China to-day, a Christian can keep up the practice. I would like to know how to meet such arguments.—Ned Willison.

The above query presents a very interesting pointwhen are people married in the sight of God? fundamental relations of society are based on human nature and originally created. Marriage was designed by God to be a complete union of two into one and indissoluble. The one sin that justifies divorce does so because it has essentially and constitutionally broken this union. Any time that man violates God's design by separating the married for reasons which do not break the essential bond, there follows great calamity to society. When two have been separated for any other cause than the one cause, evils follow. Since there is but the one sin that breaks the essential bond of union, when persons separate without this bond being broken and live with another, it The laws of the land frequently attempt is adultery. to break this bond or grant the privilege for breaking the bond. When such is done, it is done in open violation of God's law.

But when are people married in the sight of God? Horace Greeley wrote, in his famous controversy with Robert D. Owen, the noted infidel: "There may be something better than marriage; but nothing is marriage but a solemn engagement to live together in faith and love till death." True marriage in all civilized society signifies the union of one man and one woman to the exclusion of all others until the death of one party. In order for the union to be recognized as marriage in the sight of God, some things are essential. First, genuine marriage must be intended on the part of both; it must be a mutual contract to form the union as God intended that the union should be. In the second place, both parties must be free and volunteer to form this union. An enforced consent from either party prevents the union's being consummated as God would have it. If either party is coerced into the union, it destroys at least one thing that God intended should be in every marriage-namely, volunteer action. In the third place, both parties must be free of any other tie of wedlock before the union is consummated in the sight of God. A person already married cannot, in the sight of God, contract a new marriage that is scriptural. In the fourth place, the parties cannot form this union acceptably in the sight of God, if they are very closely akin to each other. Brother and sister cannot in the sight of God be married.

Marriage is more than a contract. The laws of the land seem to hold that merely a contract is the marriage. There is a contract in marriage, but this contract must be fulfilled in the actual union of the parties; this is called "the consummation of marriage." All who have contracted and consummated marriage enter upon a new state of life determined by nature. The essence of marriage, in the sight of God, is consent by both parties with consummation by cohabitation.

(1) In the Advanced Quarterly, Lesson VI., May 10, 1925, verse 37 of the eighth chapter of Acts is omitted, destroying the sense of the lesson taught in the Bible, by reason of teaching the act of obedience complete with the confession, which is clearly a part of the text that is meant to be taught in this detailed example of conversion.

(2) In Lesson VII., May 17, with reference to Saul's conversion, the latter part of verse 5 and the first part of verse 6 is omitted, which is misleading to a student who is not familiar with the Bible account of this notable conversion.

(3) Please state whether these are typographical errors, or, if not, state the reason for the omission in both lessons.—T. P. McCanne, Healdton, Okla.

1. The American Revised Version omits verse 37 of the eighth chapter of Acts. It is considered by the best of authorities as an interpolation. One manuscript, supposed to be dated in the latter half of the second century, contains verse 37, but other manuscripts do not contain this verse. The American Revised Version, which is based upon the best authority, considers it as an interpolation. The meaning or thought is not changed in the least by the omission. All agree that the interpolation is an old one, but do not consider it as genuine.

2. Most of the manuscripts omit the first part of verse 6 in the ninth chapter of Acts.

3. There is no typographical error in the cases mentioned, as will be seen by comparing the Revised Version with the Authorized Version. If the querist would refer to the first lesson of his Quarterly, he would see that all quotations and lesson texts are taken from the Revised Version.

BUSH-HAMM DEBATE, BY C. H. MADDUX.

On August 17 Brother Bert Hamm, of Cartersville, Okla., met Mr. Bush, Missionary Baptist, at Nelson Chapel, four miles west of Antlers, Okla., in a five-days' discussion on the following subjects: (1) "The Scriptures teach that the church of Christ was established on the first Pentecost after the resurrection of Christ." (2) "The Scriptures teach that the church of Christ was established during the personal ministry of Christ while on earth." (3) "The Scriptures teach that baptism in water is essential to salvation." (4) "The Scriptures teach that baptism in water is not essential to salvation." (5) "The Scriptures teach that a child of God can so far apostatize as to be lost." (6) "The Scriptures teach that a child of God cannot so far apostatize as to be lost." Brother Hamm affirmed the first, third, and fifth propositions; Mr. Bush affirmed the second, fourth, and sixth.

On the first proposition, Brother Hamm took the position that is always occupied by our brethren, showing that the church was established when the Holy Ghost came as prophesied by Joel and confirmed by Peter-"this is that." This Bush flatly denied, but produced no scripture to refute it. Mr. Bush established the church first on the mount of transfiguration; (2) where Christ sent out the twelve (Matt. 10: 7); (3) where Christ went to the mountain and prayed: (4) where they went "into a house," because they sang; (5) where Christ sent out the seventy; (6) when Christ was tempted. Being driven from these by Brother Hamm's use of scriptures, he then said it was set up when Christ was baptized of John, thus making him (Christ) a Missionary Baptist.

In his second affirmative proposition, Brother Hamm showed that, according to Acts 2: 38; 22: 16; Mark 16: 15, 16; 1 Pet. 3: 21, etc., baptism saves. Bush ridiculed the statement that water saves, as Peter stated. Mr. Bush excluded everything from the plan of salvation but faith. Being driven from this, he then based it on repentance only.

Brother Hamm, in his third affirmative, showed by use of above seventy scriptures that man could fall and had fallen. Mr. Bush said God would not forsake man nor forget him; therefore, man could not fall or be lost unless Satan be stronger than God. Brother Hamm showed that man forsook God, and for this reason was lost.

At the close of the discussion Brother Hamm baptized seven, one was restored, and there are others preparing for baptism.

BIBLE CROSS WORD PUZ

THIS is one of the puzzles which has four long words so crossed that they cut off the rest of the puzzle into four sections. At least three of the four should be guessed without reference to a Bible, and by this time many of the words that were unfamiliar when used in the first puzzles can be recognized by the definition.

© 1925 THE J.C.W. CO. How to Solve a Cross Word Fuzzle

To work out this puzzle, the white spaces must be filled with letters forming words answering to the various horizontal and vertical definitions given below. The horizontal and vertical words are not the same, but each gives a clue to the other. The first letter of each word is indicated by a number which refers to the definitions listed below.

It is advisable to first fill in, in both directions, those words which you know to be correct. These will furnish hints to those words which you do not know or had merely guessed at. When the puzzle is solved correctly, the letters in the white spaces will spell words both horizontally and vertically. The black spaces are the blind spots of the puzzle and merely form the pattern, incidentally designating the ends and beginnings of the words contained in the puzzle.

GOSPEL ADVOCATE

The GOSPEL ADVOCATE is the oldest living periodical published in the interest of the church of Christ. It is now in its sixty-seventh volume, and it has a larger list of regular, paidup subscribers than it has ever had before. Its circulation is increasing rapidly, and it is daily growing in favor with the people. It contains twenty-four pages, and is issued every week. It is printed in large, clear type, on good paper, and is neatly pasted and trimmed. It has by far the largest circulation of any periodical published south of the Mason and Dixon Line in the interest of the church of Christ. It has regular editorial writers, besides a large number of able and regular contributors. It has all of the regular departments of the best religious periodicals.

In editorial policy it stands for individual consecration, against ecclesiastic organizations, as the scriptural and best method of doing missionary work. It recognizes no organization but the church of Christ as a scriptural medium of converting the world and developing the Chris-

It opposes all human creeds and ecclesiastic councils, and pleads for the right of each individual to study the Scriptures for himself and formulate his own faith, without dictation or hindrance from churchly dignitaries. It opposes all clerical assumption of official authority in the church, and stands for the scriptural doctrine that each Christian has an office to fill, a work to perform—that all are kings and priests unto God.

It stoutly advocates the doctrine of missions, and argues unceasingly that every Christian is a divinely commissioned missionary and every church is a scripturally organized missionary society. The mission of every Christian and the design of every church is to preach the gospel to all

It believes in, and stoutly advocates, congregational singing, as opposed to select choirs and instrumental performances, as the best and most soul-stirring church music. Let all the people sing. Provide a book for everybody in the house, and let us all make a joyful noise unto the Lord. Sample copies mailed free to any address.

WALDEN.

On Thursday morning, June 25, 1925, an angel came and took our darling baby boy, Dewey A. Walden. This dear one came on June 10, 1924. This dear one came on June 10, 1924. His stay was short—one year and fifteen days. While with us he was a shining sunbeam. We cannot see why his stay with us was so short. Surely Jesus needs him most to shine with other little ones in heaven. We miss him—yes, we miss him—but his weet face no more we will. sweet face no more we will see. The music of his voice is ringing over there; for I know he's singing with the there; for I know he's singing with the angels as the harps begin to play. We loved this precious darling, but Jesus loved him best of all. Surely God knows best, for heaven is nearer and baby Dewey is waiting to welcome us home. Soon we will join him over there. Mrs. Charles H. Walden.

HOGAN.

On Monday, May 4, 1925, at the home of his sister, in Louisville, Ky., the gentle spirit of Lonnie W. Hogan, son of Price and Ellen Hogan, winged its flight to that upper and better land seen only by faith. He was born on November 4, 1887. He obeyed the gospel in early life and was a faithful, devout Christian to the end. He was married to Gladys Isenberg, and ful, devout Christian to the end. He was married to Gladys Isenberg, and to this union four boys were born. He was a true husband and a loving father. He leaves, to mourn his death, his wife, four little boys, his mother, one brother, three sisters, and a host of relatives and friends. The remains were laid away in Shady Grove Cemetery, at Cave City, Ky. Funeral services were conducted by Brother W. T. Dunagan, assisted by Brother Fitzhugh Duley. Lonnie will be sadly missed by all who knew him, and we sorrow at his passing, but not as those who have no hope.

For forty-five years he was a devoted minister cate since its beginning. For forty-five years he was a devoted minister of the gospel. The congregation at Cliff Creek has lost one of its most faithful and loyal preachers. He labored with the congregation at Cloverport, Tenn., for eighteen years. He leaves to his children a rich legacy, more precious than rubies or gold—the memory of a father who was a faithful servant of God. May God's richest blessings rest upon the loved ones, and may they realize that God is the only source of comfort and consolation. consolation.

TRIGG.

Relatives, friends, and acquaintances were indeed shocked and made sad when the news reached here that Grandpa Trigg had died suddenly at Littlefield, Texas, to which place he had only recently moved, having for the past several years been living at Jonah, where he was in business. John Buchanan Trigg was born on January 15, 1856, at Diana, Tenn, and died on June 13, 1925, at Littlefield, Texas. On February 8, 1877, he was married to Miss Mary F. Collins, and to this union was born one daughter, Mrs. H. J. Pierce, who, with seven children and his wife, survives, and all were present at the funeral, save one granddaughter who resides at Littlefield. Grandpa obeyed the gospel thirty-six years ago and was a devout member of the church of Christ. He spent thirty-five years as a preacher of the gospel, the past twelve years being with the church at Jonah. The body was brought to Weir, Texas, and funeral services were held at the Jonah Church, conducted by Brother Thomas E. Milholland, minister of the church of Christ at Bartlett. Interment was made in the Weir cemetery. Grandpa had a wide circle of friends and was loved by all who knew him, which fact was plainly evident by the great number who were present at the funeral to pay their last respects to him. ## From the Brethren Albertville, Ala., September 4.—On the second Lord's day in August I began with the church at Big Creek, in Giles County, Tenn., and continued eight days, with seven additions. Brother J. H. Horton, of Dickson, Tenn., closed an 'eight-days' meeting with the church at Albertville on August 30, with nine additions.—R. N. Moody.

Vernon, Texas, September 7.—Gospel Advocate readers will note that my address has been changed from Bartlett, Texas, to Vernon, Texas. I have just closed a good meeting at Rochester with thirty additions, most of them by baptism. Ben M. Taylor was song leader. I will begin at New Hope, Ala., next Lord's day.—Thomas E. Milholland.

St. Louis, Mo., September 11.—We have had several additions at the corner of Spring and Blaine Streets, this city, since our last report to the Gospel Advocate. Our new house at the corner of Perdue and Caseville Streets, East St. Louis, Ill., will be open for services on September 20, at 3 P.M. Take Rosemont car, walk one block east from the end of the line.—
J. D. Boyer.

- Tuscumbia, Ala., September 8.— After an absence of seven weeks from the field, caused by trying to erect the pole of a tent for a protracted meeting I was to hold, in which I received fractures of the left shoulder, also dislocation of the shoulder, I am now slowly improving, and hope to be normal again in about five or six weeks. I preached at Piney Grove on September 6, at 11 A.M., for the first time since the accident. I cannot use my left arm and hand to any advantage at the present time. I had to cancel all my meetings on account of the accident.—J. H. Morris.

Walnut Grove, Tenn., September 12.—The church of Christ in the east part of Lauderdale County, Ala., has enjoyed the increase of her membership this year more, perhaps, than for many years. Brother J. H. Horton held our meeting in Rogersville, with nine added. Brother J. H. Stone held a short meeting at Oliver, with twenty added. Brother J. Clifford Murphy held an eight-days' meeting at Romine Schoolhouse, with about fifty additions. We had one baptism at Rogersville, Oliver, and Romine Schoolhouse are within about three miles of each other, and there is a congregation at each place. I am now in a mission meeting at Walnut Grove, in Hardin County, with one baptism to date. A man of the world heard me preach a few sermons recently and invited me into his home, with the request that I make my home with him and hold a few-days' meeting. I accepted, and so I am here. The meeting will continue about eight days. This meeting, as well as two other mission meetings this year, will be largely at my own expense. I go from here to Valley View, near Athens, Ala., September 17, for a few-days' meeting. Pray for me.—W. M. Behel.

Newark, Ark., September 14.—Our meeting at this place closed yesterday morning, having continued fifteen days. The meeting was more than we really expected. There were ten baptisms and two restorations and much other good accomplished in various ways. After closing at Newark, we moved out into the country about five or six miles and began a meeting at night. There were two confessions the first service. The weather has been very dry and hot, but the drought here has been broken by frequent rains for the past four days. We are hopeful of a good meeting here if the rains do not interfere too much with the attendance. I shall probably be here two weeks. My next meeting will be at Westmoreland, Tenn., beginning on the first Sunday in October. After that I shall go to Pleasant Hill, near Nashville, for a meeting. The gospel seems more effective than for some time. There were from four hundred to five hundred people by actual count who attended the Newark meeting, and the crowd was estimated at one thousand several times, and the very best of order and attention prevailed. Many are disgusted with a mixture of worldliness and religion and are honestly inquiring for the "old paths." Let us point them to "the Way," that they may walk therein and be saved, and we be not lost.—Andy T.

Fort Worth, Texas, September 1.—
I preached four sermons one mile south of Jarrell, Texas, with five confessions and baptisms. This was a new field where the gospel had never been preached before to members of my race .- T. H. Merchant.

Mineral Wells, Texas, September 1.

On August 23 I preached for the church of Christ at Millsap, Texas. On August 26 I united in matrimony Brother L. C. Byrd and Sister Charlie Belle Peters, both of Millsap. These young people are of high standing in their community, active workers in young people are of mgn standing in their community, active workers in the church of Christ, and we bespeak for them a prosperous future. Last Lord's day I preached for my home congregation, and had a good hear-ing.—T. P. Burt.

sing.—T. P. Burt.

Springfield, Tenn., September 8.—
Beginning on July 29, I engaged W. D.
McCoy, a Missionary Baptist preacher, in a four-days' debate at New Site, Miss. Following the debate I conducted a five-days' meeting, and haptized ten precious souls into Christ. Of these, six were Baptists, and one a Baptist preacher's son. I closed an eight-days' meeting at Locust, one mile from Bradford, Tenn., August 15, with nine additions. Upon leaving Bradford, I drove to Greenbrier, Tenn., where Brethren C. E. Coleman and O. H. Tallman had a wonderful meeting started. Twenty-three noble souls took their stand for the Lord during the meeting. The brethren here have a mind to work. Our meeting at Springfield is eight days old, with good interest and large crowds. The Gospel Advocate should be in every home.—W. Wilford Heflin.

Mount Pleasant, Texas, September

Mount Pleasant, Texas, September 14.—Since last report I have assisted the brethrne in three meetings. First, at Cooper's Chapel, five miles from home. This meeting resulted in three baptisms. The next meeting was at old Friendship Church, better known as Hollingsworth Chapel, four miles north of Hughes Springs, Texas. There had been no church organization here in more than twenty years. Brother T. R. Burnett held a meeting here forty-seven years ago and baptized quite a number. Thirty-five years ago Brother Ephraim Smith baptized a few more. These had died, moved away, and quit, until there was nothing left to work on. However, I baptized five persons and gathered up the fragments of other days, and left a working body of fine people, numbering about twenty souls. One incident took place in this meeting, or rather after it closed, that does not often occur. One fine man who had attended the meeting throughout, taking a great interest in it, but apparently unmoved, drove me home in his car. We talked of the Mount Pleasant, Texas, September throughout, taking a great interest in it, but apparently unmoved, drove me home in his car. We talked of the meeting on the way. At last we came to a large lake, known as the "Club Lake," near Omaha. Stopping his car at the lake to admire the water, he turned to me and said: "What a beautiful place! If you will, we will go down into the lake, and you may baptize me." With joy I told him I would. We waded out into the water, and, after taking his confession, with and, after taking his confession, with none to witness but God, I buried him in baptism, and we both went on our way rejoicing. Brethren, pray for me.—Ed S. Duncan.

- "Your Quarterlies received and briefly examined. They show that much time and care have been exercised in their preparation. They are clear, scriptural, and to the point." (E. L. Whitaker.)
- "I think the Quarterlies very instructive and helpful in the study of the Scriptures both in the home and in the public assembly, and it will give me pleasure to commend them to all the faithful workers in my field of labor." (J. D. Jones.)
- "The Sunday-school literature that is published by the Gospel Advocate Company I can heartily recommend to any one who is in search for good helps on our Sunday-school lessons." (Robert E. Wright.)
- "A complete assortment of the Sunday-school literature published by the Gospei Advocate Company was sent me recently. Having examined it carefully, I am glad to say I consider it excellent, and gladly com-mend it to congregations, teachers, and classes." (T. B. Larimore.)
- "As a whole, I think your Lesson Helps far surpass other literature of its kind. Here in this great mission field (Louisiana) where we have placed them, many comparisons have been made between them and both the denominational and our society brethren's literature, and at no time have your Lesson Helps come off second best." (C. C. McQuiddy.)
- "It is a pleasure to write a word of com-mendation of Brother Elam's Notes on Bible School Lessons. They are the product of case who has given the greater part of his life to the study and teaching of God's Word. They are true to the Bible, comprehensive, and scholarly. If you love the truth, you will be delighted to study with him these wonderful lessons." (A. G. Freed.)
- wonderful lessons." (A. G. Freed.)

  "Brother E. A. Elam's Notes, as published annually, is, in my judgment, serbutural and the best thing of its kind I have ever seen or that is published to-day. Everyhody ought to have a copy and preserve it for study and reference. Brother Elam's twenty-five years work, if every year should be bound in a separate volume, the twenty-five volumes would be a great addition to any library. (C. M. Puillas.)

  "At the Central church of Christ in Fost Worth we have been using in our Bible school Elam's Notes and other literature of his. For a great number of years the writer of this has felt that Brother Elam was ose of the best-prepared men in the brotherhoods for the preparation of such literature. His Notes, in our best judgment, represent, or reflect, the best efforts he has ever made. Both as an elder of the congregation and as a teacher in our Bible School. I have very great pleasure in indorsing his Notes. To the extent that an expression of our yiews is of value, I assure you we are very pleased to give it." (J. G. Wilkinson.)

  "I have used Elam's Quarterlies for years. They are superior to any that I have seen.
- pleased to give it." (J. G. Wilkinson.)

  "I have used Elam's Quarterlies for years. They are superior to any that I have seen. Elam's Notes on Bible School Lessons are much fuller than they. They give the historical setting as to time and place that is needed and valuable. They give so many scriptural citations and references—Scriptures that introduce the text or corroborate the text—that the average student may know the geography, the history, and the full meaning of the lesson. They give so many lessons, deducted from the copieus citations of Scriptures, that the student may know more perfectly God's will. For years I have used Peloubet's Select Notes. I compare them weekly. I do not hesitate to say that Elam's Notes are infinitely superior, if you want to know the Bible." (C. F. Holt.)

"AND GAVE HIM TO BE HEAD OVER ALL THINGS TO THE CHURCH."

BY JOHN R. CROWDER.

I wonder if preachers of the church of Christ and other members of the body of Christ believe we are complete in Christ.

So many Christians, including a great many preachers, are joining the Ku-Klux Klan and other secret orders that it seems they do not believe they are complete in Christ. I know one preacher, who is a good friend of mine, that was once opposed to secret orders, but is now a member of the Klan. I am sure he is not a member of that order because he can do more real good through it than he could through the church, giving God the glory. He surely would not join a hooded order in order to let his light shine and to be in better company than the people of God. This preacher attended a Klan meeting in the town in which he lives one Wednesday night in preference to going to prayer meeting. When preachers or other members of the church affiliate with secret orders and attend their meetings instead of the church services, it seems to me they are getting in a sad

The besetting sin with the church to-day is a lack of faith in the word of God and a desire to be like "other nations "-the world.

Why don't we spend our money, time, and influence in building up the church of the living God? Of course the reason is that some think more of the pleasures and friendship of the world than they do of the cause of Christ. Preachers who belong to something more than the church should never refer to the following scriptures in their preaching, as they are not practicing what they preach: "For in him dwelleth all the fullness of the Godhead bodily, and in him ye are made full, who is the head of all principality and power." (Col. 2: 9, 10.) "Be not unequally yoked with unbelievers: for what . . . portion hath a believer with an unbeliever? And what agreement hath a temple of God with idols? for we are a temple of the living God; even as God said, I will dwell in them, and walk in them; and I will be their God, and they shall be my people. Wherefore come ye out from among them [unbelievers], and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch no unclean thing: and I will receive you." (2 Cor. 6: 14-17.) The Lord has promised to receive us on condition that we come out from among unbelievers, and all know very well that secret orders have some unbelievers in them. "And be not fashioned according to this world." (Rom. 12: 2.) What is there peculiar about the life of those who join every worldly order, or any order that they know is mostly composed of unbelievers? "No soldier on service entangleth himself in the affairs of this life." (2 Tim. 2: 4.) What about the oath? "But I say unto you, Swear not at all." (Matt. 5: 34.) James also makes about the same statement. (See James 5: 12.) "Every plant which my heavenly Father planted not, shall be rooted up." (Matt. 15: 13.) No doubt all secret orders do some good; but, as they are of the world, no church member should belong to them. Now, knowing that fraternal societies are of the world, we cannot afford to be yoked up with them. "If ye died with Christ from the rudiments of the world, why, as though living in the world, do ye subject yourselves to ordinances, Handle not, nor taste, nor touch (all which things are to perish with the using), after the precepts and doctrines of men?" (Col. 2: 20, 22.) "And whatsoever ye do, in word or in deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus, giving thanks to God the Father through him." (Col. 3: 17.) Some say that conditions are such that we need the Ku-Klux Klan. Well, my way of looking at it from a Christian duty is that if anything good is to be done, it cannot be too good to be done through the church. Work done through societies may help people of the world and. be good in that sense, but it cannot be done in that way scripturally by Christians. The word of God instructs a Christian unto every good work. Therefore, if a Christian does work, it must be done in the church, where the Word instructs it to be done, or it cannot be a good work for the Christian. Of course, when I say "in the church," I have no reference to the meetinghouse, but to the body of Christ. "Every scripture inspired of God is also profitable for teaching, for reproof, for correction, for instruction which is in righteousness: that the man of God may be complete, furnished completely unto every good work." (2 Tim. 3: 16, 17.) If we are Christians, we are bought with a price, and let us while it is day work for the cause of the One who bought us with his blood. "The night cometh, when no man can work." (John 9: 4.) "Unto him be the glory in the church [not a church or society] and in Christ Jesus unto all generations forever and ever. Amen." 3: 21.)

Santa Rosa, Cal., September 1.—
On Sunday, August 16, Brother Benson spoke at the morning service. He told of his proposed work in China and of the conditions there—how those people by thousands are literally begging to be taught the religion of the Christ. Brother and Sister Benson made a very favorable impression upon the minds and hearts of the people of Santa Rosa. They are young people of unusual ability and are devoted to the work they have undertaken. I believe they are well fitted for this work. Brother Benson spoke at Graton on Sunday night. On Tuesday, August 18, at high noon, the steamer "Siberia Maru" moved out from the port of San Francisco bearing five missionaries to the farout from the port of San Francisco bearing five missionaries to the faraway Orient, leaving behind friends and loved ones and native soil, on a mission of love. As the vessel was leaving, hundreds of long paper ribbons bound friends on board to friends on the shore. These fragile ties had to break, but the hearts of Christians should be bound together by ties stronger than can be nearts of Christians should be bound together by ties stronger than can be made of any material substance. Will we allow these ties to weaken and break as did the thin paper ones? Is it well pleasing to the Heavenly Father for me to live in ease and plenty, even if I am able and have earned this living heaveth. this living honestly, seeing my brother is in need while devoting his time to teaching the gospel and to good works?—Felix G. Owen.

Union, S. C., September 7.—Our tent meeting came to a close last night. We had good crowds and interest from the beginning. About the first of the meeting I was asked to teach what the Bible says about the impossibility of falling from grace. I told the crowd that we had in the audience supporters of both doctrines, and for them to get all the scriptures that they could find all the scriptures that they could find supporting their side of the subject and hand it in to me, and I would play neutral for the time being and develop both sides if we could not get another preacher to come out. Last Saturday night was set for the subject, and a large crowd was out and the interest was fine. The supporters of "can't fall" handed in about a dozen references and the other side a dozen references, and the other side about fifty. During the service several questions were asked, and several asked for Bible readings at different times. We have had several calls for the scriptures used, with some of the We have had several calls for arguments made; so we will have out arguments made; so we will have out a tract covering a part of it within a few days. We want to place this tract in many homes in this town and country. One fine young man was baptized Sunday, and we feel sure that several others will be with us within a short time. Brother Mosley was with us during the meeting and rendered help and assistance in many was with us during the meeting and rendered help and assistance in many ways. He preached one night on why we do not use instruments of music in the worship, and I feel sure that it was not any trouble for people to know why we sing and do not play. His arguments were clear and convincing. I plan to be with the brethren at Marshall, N. C., for a short meeting, beginning next week.—Thomas H. Burton.

YOUR ATTENTION, PLEASE.

There is much need for more earnest work in the Master's vineyard. The people should be aroused to a sense of their duties and responsibilities. So many act as though there were no such thing as sin in the world. Christians should be more in earnest and should use every possible means to convict the world of sin.

The press wields a wonderful influence for either good or evil. It is a mistake not to circulate literature which has an elevating and uplifting influence. Those papers which teach the word of God in its simplicity should have a wide circulation. Judging from the increase in the circulation of our literature and the Gospel Advocate, Christians are appreciating this fact. There has been a decided increase in all our publications. Many new names have recently been added to the list of subscribers to the Gospel Advocate, and very few old subscribers have discontinued their subscriptions. This is as it should be. But we are anxious to greatly increase the number of new subscribers. The expense of publishing a first-class weekly religious journal is very great; so, of necessity, we must increase our receipts. The main consideration, however, is that Christians really need a first-class paper to help them in the dissemination of the gospel. We are counting on the hearty cooperation of all lovers of the truth in the work of increasing the circulation of the Gospel Advocate.

Look at the little yellow label on your paper, and if you are in arrears, kindly renew your subscription at once.

For the encouragement of our workers we are making the following offers:

CURRENT COMMENT

By JAMES A. ALLEN

Bishop Warren A. Candler, anent the frightful controversy that is raging among our Methodist friends on the subject of unification, declares that writers on his side of the question are being shut out of certain papers, thus:

Notwithstanding certain of the papers of the church have steadily refused to open their columns to any argument against the plan (unification) or expositions of it which did not agree with the position taken in its favor by the editors of those papers. Hence, from the ministers and members of the church within the limits of the Annual Conferences served by those papers have been withheld full and fair discussion of the subject.

The Methodist Advocate, Nashville, Tenn., promptly contends that its columns have always been open and culls on the Bishop to "name the paper" whose columns have been closed.

Many of our readers are familiar with this debate. It is rocking the Methodist Church to its very foundation. In many ways it has been an eye opener to us. Many of our Methodist preacher friends have posed as being too sanctimonious to enter the lists and prove their doctrine before an audience. When called upon to defend the practice of sprinkling babies or of substituting sprinkling for baptism, they have sweetly declined on the ground that they do not believe in debates; and yet these same men are now in the midst of the fray, debating with main strength and might, and that, too, with their own brethren. We remind them that, in the future, they are estopped from claiming that they do not believe in debates.

While the Christian people are taking no part in this private war among the Methodists, still, when the Bishop introduces the matter of being shut out of "certain of the papers," he suggests a subject with which they are experimentally familiar. It would be interesting, as well as amazing, to hear Christians "name the paper" that refuses to print the gospel as the apostles of Jesus Christ preached it. If we were asked to "name the paper" that refuses to tell sinners what the Holy Spirit, speaking through inspired men, commands them to do to be saved, we would reluctantly be compelled to commence by "naming" the much-esteemed Methodist Advocate.

The columns of few papers are open to the truth as it was preached by holy men of God in New Testament times. Error and falsehood are played up and headlined; things frivolous and fastidious, even to the point of being silly, are given the right of way; but the things upon which Jesus predicated the salvation of "every creature" are rigidly and positively tabooed.

Our great dailies are almost as bad. A brutal crime, committed by some brutal member of the riffraff, is sensationally spread out on the first page as a choice morsel for the public. If some scoundrel corrupts his neighbor's wife or outrages his daughter, it is given unlimited space. But if some good man writes an article telling sinners what to do to be saved, and telling them nothing but what he can read word for word in God's own Book, it is straightway railroaded to the wastebasket. This kind of thing is a disgrace to civilized people. But "name the paper!" Ah, sir, we take one fell swoop and "name" them all! Only papers published by Christians publish both sides of every question.

The World Evangel, Eugene, Oregon, says:

Recently the Roman Catholics of Cana of Galilee burned the Word of God which had been given to village boys by Protestant evangelists. And this happened in the town where Jesus performed his first miracle. And it happened in 1925. Latin countries are in as great need of the gospel as the heathen lands.

It is a sad commentary on the depth of degradation to which humanity has sunk that Roman Catholics should burn the Word of God. But it is also a bad indication for the future, along the same lines, that others are coming right along behind the Catholics. Many Protestants of various sects and parties are busy blue-penciling the Bible; and those who blue-pencil the Bible to-day will burn it to-morrow.

No one can accuse the Catholics of having any love for Bible reading. The least that can be said is that the priest would much prefer that his parishioners let it alone. Certainly, the less they know of the Bible, the more respect they will have for pope and priest; and this is the grand desideratum with "the powers that be" at the Vatican.

But others care almost as little for the reading of the Bible, either publicly or privately, as our good Catholic friends. There are prominent Protestant ministers in this town who would consider it a calamity to have the attention of the general public called to the plain teaching of certain passages of Scripture; and they have never, and will never, unless they are converted, read these Scriptures from their pulpits.

And these Scriptures, that are so perfectly excommunicated from fashionable churches, are the Scriptures that tell lost and dying men and women what the Spirit of God, speaking through inspired men, directs them to do to be saved! The Gospel Advocate is endeavoring to awaken the public to the true situation in this matter.

NOTES FROM WEST TENNESSEE.

BY JOHN R. WILLIAMS.

The meeting at Oak Ridge began on the fourth Lord's day in August and closed on the night of the fifth Lord's day. One was baptized and three were restored to fellowship. I hope some good was done otherwise, but do not know. A few of the members said they were benefited by the preaching, while many never said anything about the preaching and but very little about the meeting. So that leaves the matter for the preacher to guess at, and oftentimes his guesses are wrong.

I notice in the religious papers a great deal is being written about preachers. Some are good, some better, and some best; while some are bad, some are worse, and some are worst. I have met many preachers since I began to preach. I have known some of them to go wrong. The public is more ready to condemn a wrong done by a preacher than when done by one not a preacher. The public expects more of the preacher than of others, which is right. The preacher should not only teach by precept, but by example. He claims to be able to teach others their duty; then he should be able to live what he teaches others. Of all the preachers I have met, I find that all of them are human beings—just flesh and blood like other folks. The preacher has more temptations to overcome than others do. The devil knows the weakness of the preacher, and works hard on that weakness to cause the preacher to fall. Preachers, like other folks, do wrong; and fortunately for preachers that do wrong, as well as other folks, the dear, good Lord has given a remedy-repentance, confession, and prayer. Repentance does not, cannot, wholly undo the wrong, but it cuts us off from it and gives a new start. David said: "For I know my transgressions; and my sin is ever before me." The preacher may know that God has forgiven him of his wrong, but he can never forget it. Neither will the public ever forget it. Like his shadow, it follows him wherever he goes. When the preacher does wrong, God's remedy is the only one for him; and when he repents, confesses his wrong, and asks the forgiveness of God and the church, he has done all that God requires of him. When he does that, God requires the rest of us to forgive him; and unless we do, God will not forgive us. Just now I cannot recall any preacher that I have ever met but what I have heard some criticism by others. The faultless preacher is hard to find, but the worst fault of all is an unforgiving spirit.

The congregation at Mount Hermon, Ky., has sent to the Tiptonville brethren twenty-one dollars and twenty cents; also, the congregation at Dickson sent ten dollars. Brother R. C. White had previously sent ten dollars, and a Sister Hayes one dollar. Here is an opportunity for the brethren to have fellowship in a needed and worthy cause. If each congregation in West Tennessee will give one Sunday's gasoline bill, the meetinghouse will soon be paid for. What do you say, brethren? Will you invest in the Lord's work? I assure you the property will be protected from all innovations or departures from the teaching of God's word—a safe, secure, and good investment. They are very thankful for the help received, but need more help. When this house is paid for, then the fight will begin to establish a congregation in the county seat of Lake County.

The Lord willing, I am to begin a meeting in Kentucky Bend on the third Lord's day in this month. Pray for us. Since I started the congregation there last fall, the "digressives" have already come on the ground to cause division. If they would only meet us in the open, the trouble would soon end, but this they will not do.

"HE THAT DOETH THE WILL."

BY JAMES E. CHESSOR.

"THEY SAY, AND DO NOT."

"And let us not be weary in well-doing: for in due season we shall reap, if we faint not." (Gal. 6: 9.)

We have seen that knowledge and emotion are not adequate to do well in Christ. They are essential, but they are not enough. Neither is professing sufficient. Professing is not doing. The Pharisees were of the sort that profess, and do not. Jesus arraigned them because they were lavish of professions, but barren of good works. They knew the law of Moses (or could have known it), but they failed to live up to it, and even went so far as to make it void by their traditions. They sat on Moses' seat, said Jesus, as expounders of the law, and they taught much that was good. And so long as they taught truth, the truth could be accepted from them for truth's sake. "All things therefore whatsoever they bid you, these do and observe." We can accept truth from any source.

"But do not ye after their works." A strange situation, indeed! Do as they say, but do not as they do! Why? "For they say, and do not." They made great professions of zeal and correctness, but belied their professions by heartlessness, hypocrisy, inertia, arrogance. No wonder the Savior turned upon these "whited sepulchers," this "generation of vipers," these hypocritical pretenders, in one of the strongest philippics of all literature. "Woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites!" "Even so ye also outwardly appear righteous unto men, but inwardly ye are full of hypocrisy and iniquity!"

The world is heartily sick of a "do-as-I-say" religion. "Be ye imitators of me," said Paul, "even as I also am of Christ." There is nothing wrong with professions, if we live up to them. But, after all, "actions speak louder than words," and cannot be denied or gainsaid. "What shall we do to these men [Peter and John]? for that indeed a notable miracle hath been wrought through them, is manifest to all that dwell in Jerusalem; and we cannot deny it." "They took knowledge of them, that they had been with Jesus." So, too, with us, if we bear fruit, and not profess merely. Words count for little; actions startle the world. Let us profess, and then be swift to do. Only thus can we accomplish the work given us to do. For as words without thoughts never go to heaven, so also words without deeds never reach anywhere in the moral universe. "How can I hear what you say," said Emerson, "when what you are is dinning in my ears?"

THE FUTILITY OF GOOD INTENTIONS.

Lastly, resolving is not doing. Good resolutions are not enough. Many a soul has died in sin and without hope because of failing to carry out a good intention. Indeed, there was never a sinner that deliberately resolved to be lost; but they procrastinate, and, like trembling Felix, defer to a more convenient season, which never comes; and, like Felix, they perish when least expecting it. Legend says that the profligate monarch was engulfed in the destruction of Pompeii, godless and wicked to the last.

Surely, "the way to hell is paved with good intentions." Every sinner fully expects to reform and be saved before it is too late. Christians, too, are ever resolving to be better servants, purer, cleaner, and to do more for the Lord; but too often they fail to do according to the intent of the heart. Good resolutions are always in order, and they should come more often than at New Year's or during a protracted meeting; but they can avail nothing while dormant. To profit anything, they must eventuate in more abundant service.

We must will—resolve—to do God's will in order to properly understand his will. "If any man willeth to do his will, he shall know of the teaching, whether it is of God, or whether I speak from myself." And knowing God's will, we must do it in order to enter into the kingdom of heaven. "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father who is in heaven." We must resolve to do his will, and then do it. Very simple is this teaching. To do well, we must learn what to do, feel sincerely the need of doing it, resolve to do it, then arise and attend to it. "But an angel of the Lord spake unto Philip, saying, Arise, and go toward the south. . . And he arose and went." "And now why tarriest thou? arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling upon his name." "And he took them the same hour of the night, and washed their stripes; and was baptized, he and all his, immediately." The will of God, whether to alien or Christian, does not admit of delay. Good intentions cannot make up for good deeds.

But Christians too often impoverish their spirituality by irresolution, indecision, feebleness of purpose, wavering. The remedy is to essay something for the Lord, trusting him to make their strength proportionate to the given task. But because of feeble energy, their faltering, reluctant spirit, their weariness in well-doing, they fail sadly. Not a few drift back to the weak and beggarly elements of the world. What is worse, they make other men question the reality and value of religion and turn away from it in cool neglect.

THE DIVINE EMPHASIS OF "Do."

It is interesting to note the emphasis of "do" in the Bible. It looks as if there were something in the "doreligion," much as it is ridiculed. Let us see.

Note, first, that alien sinners must do something to be saved in Christ. The Pentecostians, convicted of sin, cried out: "What shall we do?" Saul of Tarsus, stricken by the supernatural light, asked: "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" The Philippian jailer, sore frightened by the earthquake, inquired: "What must I do to be saved?" All these penitents were told by the inspired preacher what to do, and each one did what he was commanded to do. They believed on the Lord Jesus Christ, repented of their sins, and were baptized for the remission of sins. Thus it was that at the end of their obedience they were made free from sin and became the servants of righteousness.

But in these articles I am trying to emphasize the obligation of Christians to do well in Christ. They are encouraged in the Philippian letter to work out their own salvation with fear and trembling. It is said of Jesus, their Exemplar, that he "went about doing good." Pure religion is doing good deeds in accordance with God's will. "Pure religion and undefiled before our God and Father is this, to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep oneself unspotted from the world." The wise man is he that heareth the sayings of Jesus, and doeth them; he builds on the rock. The foolish man is he that heareth the sayings of Jesus, but doeth them not; he builds on the sand.

Let the alien know that he cannot do well in sin. Let the Christian be encouraged by the assurance that the plaudit, "Well done!" shall be for the faithful servant when the Lord returns. Let him know that, if he is steadfast in well-doing, the reward will be eternal life. "Who will render to every man according to his works: to them that by patience in well-doing seek for glory and honor and incorruption, eternal life." Let him not, therefore, be weary in well-doing, knowing that "in due season we shall reap, if we faint not."

COMMENTARY ON FIRST CORINTHIANS. No. 23. By C. E. W. DORRIS.

WHOREDOM. (Verses 1-5.)

Verse 1. It is reported commonly ["actually reported," A. R. V.] that there is fornication among you. Paul now introduces a second sin in the church at Corinth. Up to this time he had been dealing with the sin of division, but now he begins with the sin of whoredom. The messengers from Corinth, as well as those of the house of Chloe, had informed him that one of the brethren was cohabiting with his father's wife. In this chapter Paul reproves the whole church at Corinth for tolerating a species of whoredom which was abhorred even by the heathens. At this time the sin of licentiousness was one of the besetting sins of the Gentiles. Purity of life was almost unknown. So far was unchastity from being held in disrepute that temples were everywhere dedicated to Aphrodite (Venus), and in Corinth at the time Paul wrote stood one with a thousand priestesses, harlots, a gigantic brothel in the name of religion. No wonder, then, it required much time to cleanse the church, formed of converts from these heathens, from impurity. As is not so much as named among the Gentiles. There was in the church a sin that the unconverted Gentiles would not tolerate—that of one cohabiting with his father's wife, his stepmother. That one should have his father's wife. The woman with whom this sin was committed was not the guilty person's mother, but his stepmother; a sort of sin which was condemned by the Greeks and Romans. Commentators and critics have found difficulties in this statement. One part of the case is clear, that a man who was a member of the church had illegal connections with his father's wife. But the difficulty is, was the father dead or alive? The opinion of some is that he was alive, and they think that to this Paul refers in 2 Cor. 7: 12, where, speaking of the person who did the wrong, he introduces also him who had suffered the wrong, which must mean the father, and the father then alive. Some think that the son in question had married the wife of his deceased father-not his own mother, but stepmother, then a widow. I am inclined to the idea that the father was living at the time the son committed the crime. Note: (1) The person or the people blamed. The famous church of Corinth has fornication-nay, incest-charged upon her. Heinous sins may creep into the best and purest churches, yet this does not unchurch them; nor should true Christians immediately separate from the communion of a church because heinous sins and scandalous offenses are found in it. They should remain with it a reasonable length of time and try to bring about a reformation of life before separating from it. But if no change of life can be wrought within a reasonable time, then the true part of the church should separate itself from the corrupt part. The church at Corinth was a true church. although erroneous principles and scandalous practices were found among the members. All members of a church do not have to be faithful in order for it to be a true church; for if it did, there could be found but few, if any, true churches. A few brethren at Corinth were faithful. (2) The crime charged upon them-namely, that fornication was found among them; yea, the highest degree of fornication-to wit, incest. By the general name of fornication all uncleanness is forbidden, all unlawful conjunctions and sinful mixtures are condemned. By incest is to be understood the uncleanness of a person with some near relation, as a mother, a sister, etc. (3) The crime of incest is not barely expressed, but amplified and aggravated by its heincusness—such as was "not so much as named among the Gentiles." Not that many of the more brutish Gentiles were not guilty of this sin, but the more civilized among the Gentiles did by the light of nature detest and abhor it, condemn and forbid it. How sad it is that what is not so much as named among the heathens should be practiced among Christians! Whereas such sins ought not to be so much as named among Christians, which are practiced among the heathens. (4) The notoriousness of the crime—namely, "it is commonly reported." The fame, or rather the infamy of the fact, spread far and near. The sin became so public that it could not be colored, much less concealed. All sin is a work of darkness. When both shame and fear are cast off, sin has a hard forehead, a brazen brow.

2. Ye are puffed up. Instead of being humiliated and withdrawing fellowship from the guilty party who brought such a disgrace into the church, they were puffed up and full of strife and contention relative to their parties and favorite teachers and neglected the discipline of the church. Had they considered the greatness of this crime in the true spirit, they would have rather mourned and put away this transgressor from their fellowship. It is remarkable that neither here nor in any of the passages where this affair is spoken of the woman, who was the other party to the crime, is not once mentioned. The church is not ordered to deal with her. The reason is, she was a heathen, an unbeliever, consequently not subject to the discipline of the church. Have not rather mourned. Instead of being puffed up, they should have mourned and humbled themselves before the throne of grace. Might be taken away from among you. At the time of humble mourning they should have expelled the guilty party from their fellowship by the means of church discipline. Observe: (1) The fault charged upon the church. They did not censure this offender; therefore, Paul censures them. The tolerating of scandalous sins in particular members of churches is a thing very displeasing to God. (2) As they did not censure the offender, so neither did they mourn for the offense, as they should and ought to have done. Note that the fall of particular members of churches is a just cause of mourning to the whole church; because, as members of the same body, we should sympathize with one another. (3) The cause of both why they did neither censure the offender nor mourn for the offense-namely, "they were puffed up," partly with pride of their own gifts and partly with vainglory on account of their admired teachers. This pride hindered their sorrow. A proud man is seldom a compassionate man. True humility will teach us to lament and bewail others' frailty. The Corinthians, being puffed up with pride, were so far from their compassionate mourning over this incestuous person that they rather rejoiced at it and exulted over that party to whom he belonged. To rejoice at the downfall of others, either by sin or by affliction, is forbidden by the Spirit of Christ.

THE BIBLE AND NEW TESTAMENT FUND.

BY S. F. MORROW.

I am glad to say that the Testaments which we have been writing about have been received at the office of the Gospel Advocate. All who have seen them seem to be well pleased and surprised at the low price the American Eible Society made us on these books. As stated in other articles, these prices are made possible only by gifts from good people who want the word of God placed in every home, both rich and poor, that all may know of the goodness and mercy of our God.

We are receiving much encouragement from those who are interested in the salvation of souls. Some are sending checks. We hope many will do this. All gifts will be acknowledged through the Gospel Advocate. Some are promising to give annually as long as they live or are able to pay. We have little fear of a man who is willing to give this way. "But this I say, He that soweth sparingly shall reap also sparingly; and he that soweth bountifully shall reap also bountifully. Let each man do according as he hath purposed in his heart; not grudgingly, or of necessity: for God loveth a cheerful giver." 9: 6, 7.) "If God is for us, who is against us?" (Rom. 8: 31.) All who have ordered books will receive them soon. If not, they should let us know.

I have had ten thousand slips printed giving the proper division of the word. You will find one pasted in each book. As you give them out or sell them, call attention to this slip. You will be surprised to see how most people will appreciate the proper division of the word. I tell the people if they will read the New Testament carefully and prayerfully, desiring to know what the will of the Lord is. all can know his will, both great and small, and will not have to ask priest or preacher as to the plan of salvation or our Christian duty after we are born into the family or church of God. "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth." (2 Tim. 2: 15.) Here is what is on the little slip:

PROPER DIVISION OF THE WORD.

The first four books of the New Testament are designed to present the evidences, "that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God; and that believing ye might have life through his name.'

The fifth book, Acts of Apostles, tells those who believe in Jesus how to become Christians. In this Book the Holy Spirit, speaking through inspired men, answers the question: "Sirs, what must I do to be saved?"

From Romans to Jude are letters to Christians and churches telling them how to live the Christian life and to conduct the work and worship of the church.

Revelation, the last book in the New Testament, tells the faithful Christian about his future home in "a new heaven and a new earth."

Forty years ago a proper division of the word was taught by almost all our preachers. Brethren, it is still in the Bood. Why not teach it?" "Wherefore let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall." (1 Cor. 10: 12.) Let us all awake to our Christian duty and put a Bible or a New Testament into the hands of ten thousand poor souls who are perishing daily for the bread of life by January 1, 1926. Make all checks payable to the Gospel Advocate Company, stating that they are for the Bible and New Testament fund.

DR. CRANE'S ARGUMENT AGAINST ARGUMENT. BY A. M'GARY.

Dr. Frank Crane sometimes writes some sensible and good things, but at other times delivers himself of as rank tomfoolery as ever came out of the mouth of the starkest

His recent deliverance under the heading, "The Defenders of the Faith," contains a lot of as arrant nonsense, badly tainted with the ill-concealed breath of skepticism, as any foolhardy infidel ever belched out.

He says: "Mr. Bryan died in the midst of faithfully defending the faith that was in him. It was a splendid struggle, but useless. He was one of a long line of those who have thought it was up to them to defend the faith." Then, going on, he said: "The trouble is that the faith is a hidden thing, dwelling in the minds of the commons. It is like a lump of leaven growing secretly. It is not helped by those who take the sword in hand to fight for it. It is not hindered by those who take up arrows against it." As to the former, it depends upon what kind of a "sword" they use. If it is "the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God," it is "helpful," Dr. Crane to the contrary notwithstanding.

Dr. Crane is mistaken in telling us what the "trouble is." The real "trouble" with him is that he doesn't know what he is talking about when he talks about "the faith;" for what he says about it is positive evidence that it is an utter stranger to him—that he would not know it | from "the doctrines of devils," if he should meet it face to face in the middle of the road!

He says: "We are here but a little while, and we need some notion in our minds as to the future state." This shows what a rank stranger the faith of Christ-the faith he once for all delivered to the saints—the faith the Holy Spirit, through Jude, exhorted Christians to "earnestly contend for "-is to Dr. Crane. He vainly imagines that it is a mere sectarianized "notion."

Further on in his silly romancing he says: "No man was ever convinced by argument." This is certainly a very wild and extravagant asseveration for a would-be ecclesiastical philosopher to make. Does he entertain the "notion" that Christ nor Paul nor any apostle nor Luther nor "Mr. Bryan" ever "convinced" one soul "by argument?" This is not meaning that either Luther or Bryan were wholly right as to "the faith" in their "arguments." But they both "argued" for much truth, and I dare say they both "convinced" thousands! Even "argument" for erroneous sectarian "notions" have "convinced" multiplied millions into such soul-wrecking "notions." I dare say that Dr. Crane, while he was playing the game of sectarian theologian, "convinced" not a few by the false "arguments" he then delivered for so

I wonder if he doesn't indulge in some hope of "convincing" some one that "argument" is "useless" by his "argument" against "argument!"

- D. F. Draper, of Fort Worth, Texas, was in the Gospel Advocate office last week. Brother Draper was on his way to Gallatin, Tenn., for a meeting.
- H. C. Shoulders, Bowling Green, Ky., Route 4, September 23: "I began a meeting at Liberty, near Granville, Tenn., September 14, which continued for seven days. Fifteen persons were baptized into Christ and one was restored to the fellowship of the congregation."
- R. A. Craig, Lynnville, Ky., September 22: "Our meeting at Lynnville, Ky., began with good interest, and I feel sure we will accomplish much good. The work at Shelby-ville is moving along with fine interest. We expect to begin a meeting in Frankfort sometime in October.
- M. Keeble, Paducah, Ky., September 23: "The baptismal suit came yesterday, and I am very thankful to you. I am in a fine meeting; and although we are having some rainy weather, the crowds are increasing. The two white rainy weather, the crowds are increasing. The two white churches here are supporting this work. One confession last night. Pray for me."
- Charles C. Shockney, Nashville, Tenn., September 28: "I recently held three very good meetings—one at Pond Creek, with no additions, but seed sown; one at Cub Creek, with six additions; and one at Taylortown, in Dickson County, with two additions. Brethren, pray for me, that I may be a worker in the Master's vineyard.
- J. E. Wainwright, Shreveport, La., September 14: "A fine spirit is prevailing in the Fetzer Avenue congregation. We have grown wonderfully since I began work here two weeks ago. The present building is heavily taxed and we are looking out a more central location. Brethren Taylor, Winkler, and Phillips have labored with this congregation in times past, and did a commendable work."
- L. S. White, Wichita Falls, Texas, September 23: "Since returning home eighteen have been added to the congregation here. Several of these were by confession and baptism. The work is doing well along all lines. Three hundred and thirty-nine were present in the Bible classes last Sunday. Foy E. Wallace, Jr., and Austin Taylor will begin a series of meetings here on the second Sunday in October."
- W. T. Beasley, Franklin, Tenn., September 26: "My meetings in Oklahoma were as follows: Jester, ten baptized, two restored, and one by membership; Lake Creek, three baptized, one restored, and two by membership; Eastview, twenty-seven baptized and three restored. Of the number baptized, one was a Baptist and two were Methodists. I am to begin a meeting near Centerville, Tenn., to-morrow. The Beasley-Gibson debate will begin at New Hope, near Yuma, Tenn., October 26, and continue six days. The general church propositions will be discussed. Mr. Gibson is a Baptist."

TOPIC AND TEXT

BY A. B. LIPSCOMB

What does the Bible teach about energy? The word itself is not spelled out in so many letters in the sacred volume. But the thing this word "energy" stands for is found on almost every page. There is abundant energy in the first sentence of Genesis, which reads: "In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth." There is boundless energy in the next motion, when "the Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters." Passing to the days of Noah, there is relentless energy in the solemn declaration of Jehovah: "I will destroy man whom I have created from the 'face of the ground; both man, and beast, and creeping things, and birds of the heavens; for it repenteth me that I have made them." Again, there is indefatigable energy in another direction when Jehovah gives to Abram the promise: "I will make of thee a great nation, and I will bless thee, and make thy name great; and be thou a blessing: and I will bless them that bless thee, and him that curseth thee will I curse: and in thee shall all the families of the earth be blessed."

It is this God of abundant, boundless, relentless, indefatigable energy who has made his presence felt in all ages, and who holds men and nations in the hollow of his hand to-day. It is God's energy that proclaims his omniscience and his omnipresence and that glorifies them both. What would his infinite knowledge mean to us did we not know he was using it conveniently for the betterment of mankind? To what great advantage is his immanence? Why should we rejoice in the fact that he moves about everywhere did we not know he was busy everywhere, making all things work together for our good?

David declares in the One Hundred and Thirtyninth Psalm that he could not hide himself from God.

"Whither," he asks, "shall I go from thy Spirit? or whither shall I flee from thy presence? If I ascend up into heaven, thou art there: if I make my bed in Sheol, behold, thou art there." David is glad that he cannot escape God. He glories in his immanence. Why? Is it merely from an intellectual point of view? No, he glories in it because of the divine energy behind it all, because there is no place remote to God's loving and compassionate heart.

"If I take wings of the morning, and dwell in the uttermost parts of the sea; even there shall thy hand lead me, and thy right hand shall hold me."

A PROTEST AGAINST LAZINESS.

When God was about to reach the zenith of his created works, the grand climax of his inventive genius, he said: "Let us make man in our image, after our likeness." Since we are made in the image and likeness of this great Being of incomprehensible energy, it follows that we ourselves should be reasonably energetic. Nay, more, it appears that we should be divinely energetic. It is also obvious that the one who remembers his Creator best is the one who spends his utmost energies in the right direction. We can readily understand how the painful, laborious, earthly life of Jesus was so well-pleasing to the Father. It was because that Son spent his energies wisely. There were no idle moments, no wasted opportunities, no vain regrets in that busy life. "He went about everywhere doing good." When we lose sight of the Savior's example in this respect, we lose the spirit of energetic service. This means we fall away from the image of our Maker and incur his sore displeasure. However free from sin a man may be otherwise, he cannot be unenergetic and stand justified before the Lord. Note the strong rebuke administered to the "one-talent man" in Matt. 25: 26: "Thou wicked and slothful servant." Here we find "wicked" and "slothful" used as correlative terms. We often see and sometimes we smile good-naturedly upon the lazy character. But do we realize that a lazy character is a wicked character? A thoughtful and observant man once said that the most common fault of the preachers he knew was not immorality, but laziness. Here lies a distinction without a difference. We all need to remember that laziness is immorality, and it is rebuked by our Savior in the most scathing terms. This sin does not belong exclusively to preachers. It makes an insidious attack upon old and young alike. I have seen its deadly grip fastened upon the entire congregation. This sin has many aliases. There are some who call it "inconvenience;" there are some who call it "indisposition;" there are some who call it "impossibility." But usually when you bring the excuse, whatever it may be, to a close analysis, it is just pure, downright, inexcusable laziness.

SATAN AN ENERGETIC WORKER.

The Bible stresses the fact that Satan is a tireless and energetic worker. On that day in Job's time when he appeared among the sons of God, he was asked to explain his presence in their midst. "Then Satan answered Jehovah, and said, From going to and fro in the earth, and from walking up and down in it." From that day until this Satan has never ceased to make his rounds. In his own wicked way he is a fine example of perpetual motion. Simon Peter gives us this always timely warning: "Be sober, be watchful: your adversary the devil, as a roaring lion, walketh about, seeking whom he may devour." One of Satan's favorite methods is to get people either to waste or to misapply and burn up their energies in the wrong direction. He laughs in his sleeve when professed Christians grow lazy and indifferent, when they cease to pray and read the Bible, when they neglect the Lord's table and show no interest in the spread of the gospel. He is none the less pleased when he finds them, young and old, running after picture shows and various worldly pleasures, or wildly speculating in an effort to become rich in this world's goods. All of these things, James declares, constitute the variety of faith without works. "What doth it profit, my brethren, if a man say he hath faith, but have not works? can that faith save him?" Charles Wagner, in "The Busy Life," writes pertinently on this point:

It is vain that one has bread to eat, pleasures and joys; it is vain that one possesses every advantage of wealth and beauty; for, without energy, one becomes the plaything of circumstances, the slave of the bread one eats of the woman one loves, of the wealth one possesses. It is vain to have intellect and perception, and to accumulate knowledge of men and things: for, without energy, we surrender the earth to the wicked, knowledge remains useless, and the most beautiful idea is a sterile germ. The greatest defect in human life in our day is the profound stagnation of mental force. Though favored in many respects, we are miserable and poor in character. Our moral fiber is relaxed. That is why civilized society sometimes appears to us like one of those splendid vessels that science, industry, and art have provided with the most sumptuous furnishings, but which, in mid-ocean, runs short of fuel; then the magnificent vessel is no more than a derelict which floats hither and thither at the mercy of the winds and waves.

WHEN ENERGY MERGES INTO ENTHUSIASM.

Energy begets enthusiasm. Enthusiasm is energy at its highest point. God was energetic when he made the heavens and the earth, the beasts of the field, the fowls of the air, the fish of the sea, but we may truly believe he became enthusiastic when he made man. Just so we reach the ideal state in our activities when our energy merges into enthusiasm.

Enthusiasm is the greatest business asset in the world. It beats money and power and influence. Single-handed, the enthusiast has been known to convince and dominate where the wealth accumulated by a small army of workers would scarcely raise a tremor of interest. Enthusiasm often tramples over prejudice and opposition, spurns inaction, storms the citadel of its object, and, like an avalanche, overwhelms and engulfs all obstacles.

Jesus Christ was an enthusiast. Paul was an enthusiast. All the apostles were enthusiasts. Moreover, the early disciples were enthusiasts. Though persecuted and scattered abroad, "they went everywhere preaching the word." For the salvation of souls, for the betterment of the world, for the enrichment of our Christian manhood and womanhood, let us join their enthusiastic company.

THE WORK OF THE ELDERS.

BY DR. W. E. BLACK.

As the word of God teaches us to do everything decently and in order, there must be system in all we do. In order for us to make a success in those things that we wish to do in the spiritual world, we must do them as God directs. Those directions must come through the inspired apostles, to whom Jesus gave the great commission.

In order for the church of Christ to have peace and order, it must have scriptural elders as overseers. They must have the qualifications required by the apostles, otherwise we cannot expect to have harmony in the church. If these elders are elders indeed and in truth, they will rule and oversee the flock; and if the flock are aware of their duty to an elder, they will be willing to be led by them. Sometimes the disciples of Christ refuse to be led by the elders, and this starts trouble that it takes a long time to overcome.

When a congregation makes a selection of elders, they should select such men as they would be willing to follow or to be led by, and not select men for elders that they think they can manipulate and handle any way that they think best. Suppose there was a congregation that was not ruled by the elders, but by some one of the congregation, and that church should not have peace and joy; should we wonder at it? The Bible says that all things must be done in decency and in order, or in the way that God directs. It is impossible to please God in doing anything unless you do that thing just like he directs it to be done.

A church that is not ruled by scriptural elders cannot have peace. The point I want to impress is that we should try harder than ever to improve on the present conditions and make them more peaceful by being more sure that the men selected for elders are fully qualified, and then to impress on the congregations that it is their duty to be willing to be governed by the men selected. It is expedient that every disciple should study the word of God in order that disciples may know their duty to each other. There is a duty that the elders owe the entire congregation, and there is a duty that the congregation owes the elders; and unless both do their duty as God directs, the system is broken and we cannot do the work in decency and in order. How can we insure better peace in our churches unless we all study to know just how God wants his work carried on? As a fleshly father cannot afford to give his children everything that they ask for, just so an elder cannot give babes in Christ everything they ask for. If the child of the fleshly father does not receive what it asks for, its feelings are hurt, and sometimes it may raise a great fuss in the fleshly family and cause much trouble. A father must be positive with the child in order for the child to honor him. An elder must also be firm, and the congregation will honor him the more as they grow older in the faith.

An elder that rules well must keep his eyes and ears open in order to see and hear any danger that might be approaching, and, if possible, prevent its coming any nearer. The disciples of Jerusalem were afraid for Paul to come into their midst, not knowing the exact condition of his life and practice at that moment. Yet Paul was fully converted, though they were not aware of it. Just so, a condition of the same nature may exist to-day. Our congregations may be afraid of something that is harmless, and yet it is the elders' duty to withhold such from them until they can prove to them that all is well, just as you would withhold a poison from an infant in your own family or keep it out of its sight or reach.

BROTHER S. R. CASSIUS AND HIS WORK.

BY S. H. HALL.

One of the best examples of mission work that I know of just now is the accipplishment of Brother S. R. Cassius at Watts, Cal. While I was in Los Angeles, in February of this year, I had the pleasure of visiting this mission and speaking to a part of his congregation. Since that time he has completed his house of worship.

Brother Cassius took hold of that work a little more than ten months ago. At that time there were only fourteen members worshiping in a dance hall. Since that time he has added sixteen more members to his list, established a splendid Bible school for Lord's-day morning, and built a house that cost two thousand eight hundred dollars. He raised two thousand dollars of this from his own people and begged six hundred dollars from the white brethren, which leaves him owing two hundred dollars. He allows them to pay him only five dollars a week till the church is out of debt. This is not enough support, and I am glad to say that a few of our good people at Russell Street have decided to see that he gets five dollars a month more for his support. Will not others fall in and help this work? If you will, make your checks payable to S. R. Cassius, 810 Walton Street, Watts, Cal. Where can you go for a better record than Brother Cassius has made? He has, with just a little more help, a self-supporting congregation among his own people, and has accomplished it much sooner than many of our white preachers do among our own race. Another great thing about Brother Cassius is the way he has brought his household up to fear the Lord. His son is a pillar in that church. Brother Cassius is getting old and cannot stay with us much longer, but he has trained a family to take up his work where he leaves it and carry it on. This is, indeed, an indication that our brother should be placed in the class with such saints as was Abraham. Speaking of Abraham, Jehovah said: "For I know him, that he will command his children and his household after him, and they shall keep the way of the Lord, to do justice and judgment."

There are, I am told, about seventy-five thousand colored people in the section in which Brother Cassius lives, with but one congregation of the church of Christ there to act as a leaven for their good. Let us help Brother Cassius make it all it should be in the way of strength before he is called from it. May God make his last days his happiest and best.

- P. C. Breeden, Terrell, Texas, September 20: "The Gospel Advocate of September 17 has so many fine articles in it. I think the one by John T. Hines, giving the plan by which the younger members can develop their talents and thus get all the congregation in good working order, is so practical. I would like to have several copies to hand out."

Thomas J. Wagner, Rockwood, Tenn., September 21: "I recently conducted a meeting in Coffee County, under a tent, with seven baptized. The few brethren there are sawing a house pattern. Four miles from there, where I labored during 1923-24, a new house of worship is being erected. The kingdom is spreading. Long live the Gospel Advocate!"

David Thompson, Mayfield, Ky., September 21: "Last Lord's day closed my work with the church in Mayfield. Due to the condition of my throat, the doctors advised me to leave off all public speaking for some time. My work here has been very pleasant, and we were looking forward to a continuation of the work until this condition made a change of plans necessary."

Herring, one of the elders of the church of Christ (white), put this meeting on and called me to hold it. We have no colored members in Haleyville. Eight were added to the saved here in July, making nineteen added this year. We thank God and take courage. There is a good opening in Ashland City for a good physician. We want a preacher who is a doctor. Should any one be interested, let him write the elders of the church at this place."
- C. Maynard, Muskogee, Okla., September 21: "Our protracted effort being put forth in the Midland Valley addition under the auspices of the C and Kankakee Streets congregation starts off nicely. Large crowds are in attendance, and the people are giving fine attention. Brother Allen is doing some excellent preaching. At the close of his sermon last night one made the good confession, being baptized this morning at eleven o'clock. One also placed membership. Others seem 'almost persuaded.' The writer is leading the singing."
- H. H. Sanders, Tampa, Fla., September 24: "The Gary church of Christ, of Tampa, wishes to thank the good brethren and sisters of Nashville, Tenn., and vicinity, for their great help in the work here. ### MAKING TOO MUCH OF DIFFERENCES. No. 2. BY E. A. ELAM.

Continuing from last week, allow me to suggest that instead of wresting the "things hard to be understood" and even "other scriptures" unto our "own destruction," let us in humility and trust, in reverence and submission to God, accept them by faith, avoiding all the questions which God teaches should be avoided. The teaching of God on all questions, whether understood or not, must be believed, received, and obeyed. We do not understand the connection between dipping seven times in the river Jordan and being healed of the leprosy, except that God commanded Naaman to do that. Naaman did not understand this and in a rage was about to go away, when his servant of more faith persuaded him to obey God. Many so reason about baptism. So God teaches many things for which the wisdom of men can give no reason. In faith we accept them, and trustfully obey God in all his "We walk by faith, not by sight." commandments. "Faith is the assurance of things hoped for, the conviction of things not seen." We believe everything that God says; therefore, we believe everything he says about the coming of Christ, the dissolution of the heavens and the earth, the destruction of the wicked, "the new heavens and a new earth," the salvation of the righteous, and with glorious expectation we look for and earnestly desire "the coming of the day of God," although we do not understand when and how, in his goodness and wisdom and power, all these wonderful things will be brought about. We must, then, in deepest reverence and faith, respect and receive that which God says in regard to "secret things" (Deut. 29: 29), in regard to all questions which he says must be avoided, and in regard to being not wise in our conceits.

Let me furthermore suggest that all study devoutly with all other scriptures 2 Pet. 3, and, when this chapter has been sufficiently studied, that all preachers preach on it, together with all other "things that pertain unto life and godliness," striving by the help of the Lord to maintain a life of all "holy living and godliness" and to be found "without spot and blameless in his sight" when the Lord comes.

Preaching theories, however pleasing and beautiful they may be, or simply fighting the theories of others, will not save; only doing the will of God in the spirit of Christ will save. Only the elders, the teachers, preachers, and all others, will be saved, who give diligence to pursue in purity of heart and integrity of soul the life of "all holy living and godliness" so as to be found by the Lord "without spot and blameless."

IN OPINIONS GOOD MEN MAY DIFFER.

In opinions and judgment good men may differ, and doubtless have done so since the days of Mark, Barnabas, and Paul; but since Mark, Barnabas, and Paul never magnified their differences into strife, factions, and divisions, Christian men should not do so now. The differences of Mark, Barnabas, and Paul were not concerning some particular points of the teaching of the gospel, but in judgment; and good men to-day will not allow their differences of opinion and judgment to gender strife, factions, and divisions. Mark and Barnabas never went over the country criticizing Paul, and he never said or wrote anything abusive of them. He never called Mark a coward for turning back at Perga, but in forbearance and love a happy reconciliation was effected, and he afterwards highly commended both Barnabas and Mark. At one time, when Peter at Antioch dissembled and "walked not uprightly according to the truth of the gospel," and when Barnabas was carried away with this dissimulation, Paul resisted Peter to the face, "because he stood condemned," and reasoned the matter out with him and the Jews, until Peter and others accepted the correction and all became of one mind and one heart. (Gal. 2: 11-21.) It is remarkable that Peter and Barnabas did not resist the truth as presented by Paul, and he used no words of denunciation and vilification of them. As we have seen, Peter afterwards referred to Paul as "our beloved brother Paul" and in the most reverential manner commended his letters as inspired of God.

It is very necessary and very helpful to consider the fact that, although Paul, not conferring "with flesh and blood" and not consulting the other apostles, began immediately to preach the gospel because he received it by revelation from God, yet three years after his conversion he visited Peter at Jerusalem and remained with him fifteen days. (Gal. 1: 11-17.) Then fourteen years afterwards he went up to Jerusalem again "by revelation" [that is, God sent him], taking Barnabas and Titus with him, to confer with James, Peter, and John, in order to see if he had "run in vain" or was still "running in James and Peter and John gave to him and Barnabas "the right hands of fellowship," that they should preach the gospel to the Gentiles. (See Gal. 2: 1-10.)

A lesson: If these inspired men could humbly and trustfully confer together, learn from one another, and help and encourage one another in faithfully following the will of God, how much more should uninspired men dc so! How much more should uninspired men fear lest they have run and are still running in vain! Some uninspired men are the ones who are wise in their own conceits and who are so sure they are right. We uninspired ones should the more devoutly study that which comes by inspiration.

Another most remarkable fact is, these inspired men learned by consultation that they were of the same mind and judgment and heart. No faction followed Peter, or Barnabas, or Mark. None were allowed to say they were of Paul, or of Peter, or of Apollos. None sought to draw away any disciples after themselves. None gloried, save in the cross of Christ. Paul taught the Corinthians to follow him in as much as he followed Christ. He followed Christ, and was very careful and humble to do so. He determined to know nothing-no theories, philosophy, or wisdom of his own-nothing, "save Jesus Christ, and him crucified." Some now seem determined to know and to preach almost everything which Paul determined not to know and to preach. We should all read and study the Bible faithfully for ourselves, so that we will follow no partisan leaders and will not be afraid to speak until we have learned their mind. The word of God in all these and in all other matters must be our only rule of faith and practice. The word of God must not be claimed and preached as our only rule of faith and practice unless we truly believe it all and strive faithfully to practice it all. What do we believe and practice about walking "worthily of the calling wherewith" we are "called, with all lowliness and meekness, with long-suffering, forbearing one another in love; giving diligence to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace?" And what do we believe and practice about many such passages? If we had no faults and made no mistakes, there would be nothing with which to suffer long or with which to forbear in love. If we were altogether lovely, others could love us without an effort. If all were meek and lowly and forgiving, there would be no necessity for such commands.

BROTHER PHELPS IS NOT SATISFIED. BY F. B. SRYGLEY.

Sometime ago Brother D. J. Poynter asked Brother Lappin, of the Christian Standard, what course he should pursue when a congregation where he worshiped introduced an organ into the worship contrary to his conscientious convictions. Brother Lappin undertook to answer this question, and, as I saw it, made a miserable failure. I called his attention to his failure in the Gospel Advocate, but, instead of giving his readers my objections to his answer, he published an article from T. G. Phelps which seemed to me to be an effort on the part of Phelps to help Lappin out of trouble. I published Brother Phelps' effort at assistance in the Advocate, and tried to show that Phelps had failed. Now Brother Phelps sends me a long communication which seems to be an effort on his part to "patch up" his failure. The communication from Brother Phelps is addressed to me as though it were a private communication, and I, perhaps, would have thought so, if he had not added the following at the close:

I hope you find room to publish this, with whatever comments you desire to make.

Brother Phelps ought to know that this controversy began in the Standard, and that if he wants to continue it the Standard should be opened and my reply to him should appear in that paper, and then, if he wants to continue the matter and get his reply to me in the Advocate, I should have some assurance that a reply from me would appear in the Standard. The Standard could not well make objection that it lacks space, since Brother Lappin published Brother Phelps' effort at assistance. It is very con venient for Brother Phelps to start a discussion in the Standard and then throw it off on the Advocate and let the impression go out that the Advocate is filled with debates and disputes, while the Standard is too nice to stoop to such things. I know the readers of the Advocate can see the justice of my claim, even if Brother Phelps should not admit it. While I am not under obligation to ublish or reply to anything in this communication, nevertheless I will, and will give all that the brother says on every point which I herein review.

F. B. Srygley.—Dear Brother: I see that you have published, in the Gospel Advocate of August 27, my article to Brother D. J. Poynter as it appeared in the Christian Standard of recent date, and I am wondering if Brother Poynter requested your aid, or did you feel the force of my short article to the extent that you felt that something must be said to try to counteract its effect? Now, candidly, Brother Srygley I think your comments on my letter constitute the weakest article I ever saw from you, and I have been reading after you for many years.

No, Brother Poynter did not request my aid. He was not trying to do anything, and, therefore, needed no aid. He had taken no position on the question, and why did he need aid? He had simply asked Brother Lappin a question, and Brother Lappin had tried to answer it, and it was Lappin and not Poynter that needed assistance; and when I attacked Lappin's answer, it was Phelps who tried to aid Lappin, the one that needed help. I did not know Brother Poynter when I wrote my reply to Lappin, and I said if Brother Poynter was satisfied with the answer he was easily pleased. It turned out that Brother Poynter was not satisfied, and Brother Phelps wrote his article to the Standard to try to help Lappin satisfy Poynter, and yet he very complacently asks me if I am trying to aid Brother Poynter. I am trying to aid Brethren Lappin and Phelps by showing them how to answer a question. The brother says: "Now, candidly, Brother Srygley, I think your comments on my letter constitute the weakest article I ever saw from you." The brother says, "Now, candidly," as though he was not exactly candid in what he had said before this, and I really believe he gave the thing away; but he ought to be candid all the time. To me this language would indicate that either he was lacking in candor in the question he had just asked or that he was lacking in candor in the statement he was about to make, and that he felt inclined to deny it before he was accused of it, or that both the question and the statement were lacking in candor. The reader can take his choice; but as for my part, I do not care to express myself. I will deal with what he says on its merits and pass no criticism on his candor or lack of it.

The brother then complains at my "false accusations, insinuations, and misrepresentations." His first complaint is expressed in the following language:

First, false accusations. You say: (a) "Change the issue when you see you cannot meet it as it is." Now, I do not think any one ever accused me of that before. No, my brother, you are mistaken in your man. (b) "But why run away from the text in hand?" I did not. Reference to other scriptures bearing on the same subject is not running away. And you try to break the force of the references by a play upon "was" and "is." (c) "Where did Brother Phelps ever know a 'sectarian' to do worse than that—throw down a text which is against him and run off to another where he thinks he can get comfort?" I did not do it. I know of no text against me. If you know of any, please show them to me.

I do not desire to falsely accuse Brother Phelps, as he has enough to answer for without making any false charges against him. The text under consideration was Eph. 5: 19, and the brother asked Brother Poynter to read Amos 5: 23 and some other Old Testament passages. If this was not an effort to get away from Eph. 5: 19, what was it? But I am allowing Brother Phelps to explain his own conduct; and if my language seemed severe to him, I gladly withdraw it. But the brother is mistaken when he says I was trying to break the force of the reference by a play upon "was" and "is." I do not play upon these words. One is in the past tense and the other in the present. One refers to the Old Testament way of praising God; the other, to the New Testament way, or the present way. As for trying to break the force of his argument, I did not do this, for it had no force. Every one admits that in the old worship, which was typical, they used the instrument; but in the present dispensation melody is made with the heart and not upon a mechanical instrument. He says: "I know of no text against me. If you know of any, please show them to me." The one under consideration (Eph. 5: 19) is against him, for it says "making melody with your heart," while he says melody can be made with the instrument and that God will accept it in the worship. I quote from the World's Great Bible Dictionary: "Melody, sweet musical sounds (Amos 5: 23); of the heart, ought to accompany the voice in praise to God (Eph. 5: 19)." The man who made this dictionary had no trouble with the "little word and" which seems to have thrown Brother Phelps. The truth of the matter is that we ought to sing-that is one thing-and make melody with the heart—which is another thing; but the two added together by the conjunction "and" constitute the praise which we are to offer to God. If the brother is not trying to run away from this passage, why does he not stay with it? The brother further says on this point that no one has explained to him "why Paul in Eph. 5: 19 used two different Greek words and connected them with the conjunction 'and,' if they both mean the same thing." course, no one can explain that to the brother, because it is not true. One of these Greek words means to sing and the other means to make melody with the heart, but neither of them, according to the New Testament, means to play upon a mechanical instrument.

The brother further says:

Now. Brother Srygley, watch me and see who is in the "hole." But I do know that there is not an English Bible that has ever been adopted by the people that has ever translated the word "baptize." If it is plain that the word means immerse, why did not the translators of the Authorized Version or the Revised Version so translate it? Is it possible that they did not know of Josephus, Plutarch, et al.? Of course your answer to my question will be the answer to yours.

The answer to the above is that our translators did not translate the word "baptize," but only transferred it into our language; but wherever any scholar has translated the word, he has always translated it to dip, to plunge, or to immerse. But in the case of the word "psallo," they have translated it, and they translate it "to make melody with the heart." It seems to me that Brother Phelps is still in the hole.

The brother resents the charge that I made against him that he was trying to get an excuse to go with the popular current rather than to learn the will of God on this subject and abide by it and take the consequences. I submit his conduct as shown from his own statements as the reason for my opinion. It looks to me like the old case of Balaam when God had said: "Thou shalt not go with them; thou shalt not curse the people: for they are blessed." Balaam refused to accept this as an end of all controversy, and God permitted him to go, but he went as a sinner. Brother Phelps was determined to go with "more honorable" crowds, and went, as I believe, as a sinner. He has given up union ground on this subject and forsaken the plea for union on the Bible, and the Bible alone. He has his instrument and division, and he has both contrary to the New Testament.

But at the end of this long communication the brother says:

I would advise Brother Poynter to do just as I did—stay out and away from the instrumental-music crowd till he is fully convinced that they are right in using it.

Why did you not say that at the start and advise Brother Lappin to say that in answer to Brother Poynter's question? But, instead, Brother Lappin had to tell about "Uncle Billy," and you had to tell why you left the truth, and it was all to save your "pet" rather than to give a scriptural answer to a civil question. This is a correct answer to a proper question, and I am willing for the matter to rest here.

"WHO AM I?"

BY F. W. SMITH.

The following passages are submitted as a foundation for a few remarks suggested by the above question propounded by Moses: "Come now therefore, and I will send thee unto Pharaoh, that thou mayest bring forth my people the children of Israel out of Egypt. And Moses said unto God, Who am I, that I should go unto Pharaoh, and that I should bring forth the children of Israel out of Egypt? And he said, Certainly I will be with thee; and this shall be a token unto thee, that I have sent thee: When thou hast brought forth the people out of Egypt, ye shall serve God upon this mountain." (Ex. 3: 10-12.)

THE PROMISE TO ABRAHAM.

What God was about to do through Moses was the fulfillment of a promise made to Abraham regarding his fleshly offspring: "And he said unto Abram, Know of a surety that thy seed shall be sojourners in a land that is not theirs, and shall serve them; and they shall afflict them four hundred years; and also that nation, whom they shall serve, will I judge: and afterwards shall they come out with great substance." (Gen. 15: 13, 14.)

From this promise to its fulfillment was, indeed, as men measure time, a long period, and "impossible" of fulfillment by any degree of human wisdom and power. But neither time nor circumstances can prevail to hinder God in bringing about the complete consummation of his "unconditional" promises to man, such as is here made to Abraham. To be sure, when a "conditional" promise is made to the man by the Lord, it may fail of fulfillment, because of man's noncompliance with the condition or conditions on which the promise was made. But no "conditions" are specified in this promise to Abraham regarding the deliverance of his children from Egyptian bondage; but there were "conditions" in connection with their remaining in the land of Canaan, and the reason Abraham's children were thrust out of Canaan, or Palestine, was because they did not comply with the conditions God imposed. It may also be said without fear of a successful contradiction that neither the Old Testament nor the New Testament contains one promise of Abraham's children owning and inhabiting that land again. If Palestine were to be entirely populated with Jews again, that within itself would be no proof that it was a fulfillment of a divine and prophetic promise.

THE CALL OF MOSES.

God chose to fulfill his promise to Abraham through human agency, and he called Moses as the instrument through whom the Israelites were to be delivered. Hence, God appeared to Moses on Mount Horeb in a bush aflame that was not consumed by the tongues of fire, and out of this burning bush gave to Moses his great commission to return to Egypt and deliver a nation of slaves. But as Moses, a descendant of Abraham, had spent forty years in Egypt as the adopted son of the king's daughter and knew what a powerful kingdom held within its grasp the Hebrew slaves, he stood aghast at the task God was imposing upon him and exclaimed: "Who am I, that I should go unto Pharaoh, and that I should bring forth the children of Israel out of Egypt?"

WHAT THIS QUESTION IMPLIED.

Had God assigned to Moses some small or trivial duty to perform, perhaps he would not have propounded such a question. But the undertaking of such a stupendous thing as liberating a race of slaves from the powerful king of Egypt without a large, well-trained, and well-equipped army was staggering to Moses. How could he, notwithstanding his "learning in all the wisdom of the Egyptians," his knowledge of statesmanship and of military genius, his blood relation to the Hebrews, and his heart yearning for the deliverance of his own race, single-handed and alone, undertake such a thing? Well did he say, "Who am I?" His question not only implied an impossible thing for him to accomplish, but it also implied a deep feeling of insufficiency, a self-littleness, characteristic of all truly great men in every age of the world. Whatever may be said of Moses, no one can justly charge him with being an egotist, a self-inflated or self-important character. Meekness and humility were the cardinal virtues of Moses, who was one of the greatest men that ever lived; and it is not only a pity, but lamentable, bordering on the tragic, to witness the profound egotism of some preachers and other public men.

GOD'S REPLY TO THE QUESTION OF MOSES.

"And he said, Certainly I will be with thee." Here was the promise of God's "presence" and "power," a sufficient guarantee for the success and complete accomplishment of the work assigned to Moses. If necessary for the deliverance of the people, the mighty throne of Egypt would crumble to dust and her vast and powerful armies would be as straws in the pathway of the sweeping storm. No matter how great the undertaking God assigns to his people nor how seemingly impossible of accomplishment, with the promise of his "presence" and "power," they should be filled with faith, courage, and hope.

God's victories do not depend upon the wisdom and power of men, nor upon great numbers. Gideon and his three hundred brave men in the hands of God were too much for the innumerable hosts of the Midianites. Elijah on Mount Carmel was too much for the wicked Ahab and the hundreds of false prophets of Baal. Elisha in Dothan, surrounded by the armies of the Syrian king, was more powerful than all. Zerubbabel, with a handful of men, rebuilt the temple in the face of a mountain of opposition.

How did these humble servants of God accomplish such great things under such great difficulties? God tells us: "Not by might [human might], nor by power [human power], but by my Spirit, saith Jehovah of hosts." (Zech. 4: 6, 7.)

When man has faith to do what God commands and will move in obedience to his command, God will open the way to success. When Moses undertook the mission God assigned, every obstacle was removed, and Israel was brought from under the galling yoke of Pharaoh.

WORD FROM WASHINGTON.

BY T. B. LARIMORE.

When in Nashville we wound up odds and ends of duties and pleasures preparatory to starting Wednesday for Washington City, with a little time allowed for a short stop in East Tennessee, the land of my nativity. But Tuesday night I had an acute reminder that "man proposes, but God disposes;" so we had to postpone our departure from Nashville and give up altogether the contemplated brief stay in East Tennessee. Brother J. Pettey Ezell, the well-beloved preacher for the Cookeville congregation, meeting us in Nashville, insisted so earnestly that we go to Cookeville for Sunday that we went, expecting to leave Cookeville on Monday for Washington via Knoxville. But the acute reminder that caused the change in our plans and purposes developed into a rather severe attack of lumbago, which made me a prisoner from the time of my arrival in Cookeville, prevented my preaching for the church there Sunday and Sunday night, and again delayed our start to Washington City.

Being in Cookeville is no hardship, however, as many a preacher can testify—all preachers who have been fortunate enough to occupy the "preacher's room" in the hospitable home of Brother Jere Whitson. I did not occupy that room this time, however, it being located in the northeast corner on the second floor; while, for reasons easily understood by those who have been afflicted with lumbago, I spent nearly a week in what Brother Whitson styles "the old folks' room," on the first floor of this delightful home. I had such skillful osteopathic service, was so comfortably situated, and so surrounded with loving attention from home folks, neighbors, and friends, that I could do no less than do my very best to improve, and I did improve.

This was not my first visit to Cookeville. In 1893 I held a series of meetings in the old frame church house that is still standing, but is now used for a woodworking shop. The first day of that meeting a young lady made her appearance in Brother Whitson's home—the first daughter of the family—and she was named "Mary Alice Larimore," sometimes called "Mallie" for "short." She is married now, and the mother of two bright children—a boy and a girl. I acquired two namesakes during that meeting—Mary Alice Larimore Whitson and Larimore Denny, son of Judge Denny. My home during the meeting was the home of Judge George H. Morgan, an active, earnest member of the church, who passed away years ago.

That first meeting was in a much smaller Cookeville than the Cookeville of to-day. The Tennessee Central Eailroad, the railroad that serves Cookeville, had been completed only three years before that time, and the town had only a few hundred inhabitants; but it was beginning to grow, a habit it has steadily continued ever since. There being no convenient baptizing place near, Brother Whitson, before the meeting began, constructed one just below the town spring-a clear, beautiful, neverfailing freestone spring that could furnish drinking water for the Cookeville that now is, if it were necessary. That baptistery was, I think, the first outdoor baptistery made by man I had ever seen. Like everything else Brother Whitson plans and constructs, it was properly made. It was fourteen feet long, seven feet wide, and seven feet deep, that depth being necessary to get the proper fall of the water. Seven feet of the length were used for the steps leading down into it, leaving a clear baptizing space seven feet square. It was walled with lumber and fitted with a top that could be easily slipped off, and several loads of fine gravel were put into it, forming a fine bottom. It was supplied with water from the spring-not to its full depth, of course, but sufficiently filled to make it easy to baptize even a tall man in it. A cautious citizen of the town remarked, when the baptistery was begun, that it would be better to wait to see if it would be needed; but Brother Whitson builded by faith, and the result justified his faith. He thinks the baptistery was used every day during the three weeks the meeting continued, the meeting resulting in about forty additions and closing at the water Monday morning.

My next meeting in Cookeville was in 1909, when I preached the first sermon in the commodious, up-to-date, conveniently located brick building then just completed. That meeting continued three months, lacking three days, with services twice every week day and three times each Sunday; and Brother Whitson says the interest was as great at the close of the meeting as at the beginning, not having flagged at any time. There were about eighty additions at that meeting. The new meetinghouse was provided with an excellent baptistery—one of the best I have ever used-and the baptistery near the spring was filled up. Before building the baptistery in the new house, some of the brethren there visited meetinghouses in Nashville and elsewhere to study baptisteries and get ideas how to construct one. That is commendable. A baptistery is such an important part of a church-house outfit that care should be given to its construction. A baby baptistery in which there is scarcely room to properly baptize a believer who is above the average height is very discouraging and disappointing to me.

Since my first visit, in 1893, Cookeville has changed and improved in many ways as much as our meetinghouse has changed and improved. Its population now numbers more than three thousand, it is said. While it does not claim to be a manufacturing city, it nevertheless operates a surprising number of factories: The Cookeville Veneer Company, manufacturing egg cases, with branch factories in Mississippi; two handle factories; two planing mills; a flooring factory, using the latest improved machinery, that ships flooring north, east, south, and as far west as California; two brick-manufacturing plants, equipped with up-to-date machinery; an overall-manufacturing company, making overalls, pants, and such things as are usually made in such factories; two flouring mills; a creamery, making butter and ice cream; two bottling works, where coca-cola and chero-cola are made; an ice factory that supplies not only Cookeville, but the surrounding country and near-by towns; an up-to-date laundry; a large canning factory, with modern equipment; two sawmills; a company that manufactures gravestones; and several other smaller factories.

Cookeville, I am told, has one of the best hydroelectric plants in the South, having the latest improvements in that line, with the added advantage of a natural feature in Burgess Falls, near by—a fall of two hundred and thirty feet, which gives additional hydraulic power. It has a fine water system, water being brought from a large spring, or a collection of springs, three or four miles away, where it gushes out of a mountain, is pumped into a pipe line and brought to Cookeville on its own pressure. With such equipment, Cookeville is able not only to furnish all the light, power, and water needed for the various manufactories now there, but also for any others that may come as the city grows.

Headquarters and the main central office of the Gainesboro Telephone Company are in Cookeville. That company owns and operates about a thousand telephones, with twenty-six exchanges. The Putnam County Home Telephone Company, which serves many subscribers in this section, also has headquarters there.

Cookeville occupies front rank among cities of its size in the matter of church and school buildings. The Methodists, Presbyterians, and Baptists have commodious, attractive church houses, the latter having recently erected a very handsome, up-to-date structure in the western part of the town. A very attractive, brick school building, sufficiently large to accommodate all the grammar-school and high-school pupils of the town, has recently been built. The Tennessee Polytechnic Institute is located in Cookeville, its main executive building being the building originally erected for Dixie University, a private school enterprise that was run a few years and then taken over by the State for the teaching of certain arts and sciences. Since it became a State institution, three large, well-equipped boarding halls, or dormitories, have been built, also a fireproof machinery building and a modern dairy building, the institution having one of the finest dairy herds in the State. The Tennessee Polytechnic Institute is said to be one of the best of Tennessee's State schools, comparing favorably with any of the State normal schools.

Cookeville boasts a Federal building that stands fifth in point of size and cost among the Federal buildings of the State, which is used as a post office and for the Federal Court business. The Federal judge, John J. Gore, who presides over this circuit, which includes Nashville, lives in Cookeville. Brother Whitson tells an interesting story of this same Judge Gore, which so forcibly illustrates the power of early impressions that I am impelled to tell it here. Judge Gore is a product of the Upper Cumberland country, which, by the way, has furnished many men prominent in affairs of the State and nation. He is a son of Mounce Gore, of Gainesboro, who was a captain in the Confederate Army and a stanch Democrat. When John J. Gore was a small boy, the Stafford brothers, friends and neighbors of the Gores, though decidedly Northern in their sentiments during the war and strong Republicans since, were very fond of the little lad, and, to tease his father, taught him to say he was a Republican. The child would declare he was a Republican before he knew what it meant, and he continued to declare it till he grew up and really became a Republican—the only one in his family-and he now holds appointment as Federal judge from a Republican President. So much for early teaching begun in fun. However, Judge Gore is highly regarded by both Republicans and Democrats.

When I first went to Cookeville, it had only the ordinary country roads, well-nigh impassable in wet weather. It has long had macadamized streets and roads, and is now having its main streets made of asphalt. A section of a very important highway leads from the Kentucky line through Byrdstown, Livingston, Cookeville, Carthage, and Lebanon, and thence to Nashville. Another fine road leads from Cookeville to Sparta, McMinnville, Woodbury, Murfreesboro, and Nashville. These roads are maintained by the State.

Cookeville has solved its race problem in a way that seems excellent. There is not a negro family or any family of a foreign race living within the limits of the city; but the negroes of this immediate vicinity have a town of their own, called "Bushtown," whose eastern line is the western line of Cookeville. Bushtown has a good school building, a lodge hall, three church houses, one or two stores (conducted by colored merchants), and colored road overseers to supervise the work on the streets. The two towns live peaceably, notwithstanding they are so close together.

There have been as marvelous changes in the church of Christ in Cookeville since 1893 as there have been in other things. At the beginning of that meeting the congregation numbered about fifty, and there were only two men in it who would conduct the public services-Brother Morgan and Brother Slaughter. Now the church numbers more than four hundred, and there are in the membership eight or ten men who can and will creditably conduct the public worship, and not less than twenty-five younger men who will take part in the public work. The members of the church are at peace among themselves and with all the world, never having had any of the dissensions that have hindered and hampered many other churches. Not only has the work in Cookeville prospered, but, with the cooperation of a few other congregations and individuals, the work has been extended throughout the county, Brother W. M. Oakley being now engaged successfully in evangelistic work in Putnam County. The work in the county has, within the past three years, resulted in the converting of about two hundred and fifty souls and the establishment of five congregations, there being now fifteen congregations in the county. Much of the credit of this work belongs to Brother J. Pettey Ezell, who has labored with the Cookeville congregation four years, and has been very earnest in urging upon the church this missionary work. His labors with the Cookeville congregation have been, the brethren there say, eminently satisfactory.

Thinking all these things over, I have concluded that, since I had to be held a prisoner somewhere a few days, I made a very wise choice of a prison. Cookeville has always been generous, gracious, and good to me, and I am as grateful to Cookeville as it is possible for me to be.

ANNE RUDOLPH'S RIDE.

It was late in the fall of 1777 that a foraging party from the British camp in Philadelphia made a descent upon the farm of Major Rudolph, south of that city. Having supplied themselves well with provender, one of the soldiers happened to espy a valuable cow in the lane leading to the barnyard, and poor Sukey was immediately confiscated.

Now, this cow happened to be the pride of the farm, and was claimed as the exclusive property of Miss Anne Rudolph, aged twelve years. Of course, no other animal on the estate was so important as this cow, and her confiscation by the soldiers could not be tolerated. So Miss Anne made an impetuous dash for her recovery; but finding the men deaf to her entreaties and the sergeant proof against her indignation, the spirited child rushed to the stables, saddled her pony, and was soon galloping toward the city, determined to appeal to the commander ir chief of the British army.

Meanwhile, poor Sukey trudged along, her reluctant steps quickened now and then by a gentle prick with the point of a bayonet in her well-rounded side.

To reach the city before the foraging party was the one thought of the child, as her pony went bounding along the old Chester road at a pace that soon brought her within the British lines. She was halted at the first outpost by the guard and the occasion of her haste was demanded.

The child replied: "I must see the general immediately!"

"But the general cannot be disturbed for every trifle. Tell me your business, and, if important, it will be reported to him."

"It is of great importance, and I cannot stop to talk to you. Please let go my pony—tell me where to find the general."

"But, my little girl, I cannot let you pass until you tell me whence you came and what your business is within these lines."

"I came from Darby, and my business is to see the general immediately. No one else can tell him what I have to say."

The excitement of the child, together with her persistence, had its influence. The officer well knew that valuable information of the movements of the Americans frequently reached the British commander through families residing in the country. Here might be such a case, and this consideration determined the soldier to send the child to headquarters. So, summoning an orderly, he directed him to escort the girl to Lord Cornwallis.

It was late in the afternoon by this time, and Cornwallis was at dinner with a number of British officers when "a little girl from the country with a message for the general" was announced.

"Let her come in at once," said the general, and a few minutes later Miss Anne Rudolph entered the great tent.

"Well, my little girl, I am General Cornwallis," said that gentleman, kindly. "What have you to say to me?" "I want my cow!"

Profound silence reigned for a moment, then came a burst of laughter from all the gentlemen around the table. The girl's face reddened, but she held her ground, and her set features and flashing eyes convinced the general that the child before him was of no ordinary spirit.

With ready tact the general drew from her a narration of her grievance. "Why did not your father come?" he asked.

- "My father is not at home."
- "And have you no brothers?"
- "Both of my brothers are away. But, General," she cried impatiently, "while you keep me here talking they will kill my cow!"
- "So your brothers also are away. Now, tell me, child, where are they?"
  - "My oldest brother is with General Gates."
- "And your other brother—where is he?" inquired the General.

"He's with Harry Lee."

The girl's eyes fairly blazed as she spoke the name of gallant "Light Horse Harry Lee." "But, General, I want my cow."

"Aha! One brother with Gates and one with Lee. Now," said the General, severely, "where is your father?"

"He was with General Washington," answered the little maiden, "but he is a prisoner now."

"So, so. Father and brothers all in the Continental army! I think, then, you must be a little rebel."

"Yes, sir, if you please. But I want my cow."

"Well, you are a brave little girl, and you shall have your cow and something more, too." Then, stooping forward, he detached from his garters a pair of brilliant knee buckles, which he laid in the child's hands. "Take these," he said, "and keep them to remember that Lord Cornwallis can appreciate courage and truth even in a young rebel." Then, calling an orderly, he instructed him to go with the child through the camp in search of the cow, and, when he should find the animal, to detail a man to drive her home again.

So Miss Anne returned home in triumph with her cow. And those sparkling knee buckles are still treasured by her descendants as a memento of Cornwallis and the Revolution.—Selected.

THE BETTER LAND.

- "I hear thee speak of the better land;
  Thou call'st its children a happy band.
  Mother! O, where is that radiant shore?
  Shall we not seek it, and weep no more?
  Is it where the flower of the orange blows,
  And the fireflies dance through the myrtle boughs?"
  "Not there, not there, my child!"
- "Is it where the feathery palm trees rise,
  And the date grows ripe under sunny skies?
  Or 'mid the green islands of glittering seas,
  Where fragrant forests perfume the breeze,
  And strange bright birds, on their starry wings,
  Bear the rich hues of all glorious things?"
  "Not there, not there, my child!"
- "Is it far away, in some region old,
  Where the rivers wander o'er sands of gold,
  Where the burning rays of the ruby shine,
  And the diamond lights up the secret mine,
  And the pearl gleams forth from the coral strand?
  Is it there, sweet mother, that better land?"
  "Not there, not there, my child!"
- "Eye hath not seen it, my gentle boy;
  Ear hath not heard its deep sounds of joy;
  Dreams cannot picture a world so fair;
  Sorrow and death may not enter there;
  Time doth not breathe on its fadeless bloom,
  Beyond the clouds, and beyond the tomb;

  "It is there, it is there, my child!"

To work out this puzzle, the white spaces must be filled with letters forming words answering to the various horizontal and vertical definitions given below. The horizontal and vertical words are not the same but each gives a clue to the other. The first letter of each word is indicated by a number which refers to the definitions listed below. It is advisable to first fill in, in both directions, those words which you know to be correct. These will furnish hints to those words which you do not know or had merely guessed at. When the puzzle is solved correctly the letters in the white spaces will spell words both horizontally and vertically. The black spaces are the blind spots of the puzzle and merely form the pattern incidentally designating the ends and beginnings of the words contained in the puzzle.

From the Brethren

Hornbeak, Tenn, September 2.— The writer began a meeting in the "Holiness" tabernacle at Gratio on the first Lord's day in August and continued it until Tuesday night after the second Lord's day. Large crowds were in attendance. One was added by primary obedience; one was added obeyed the gospel, but had drifted off after the "Holmess" movement, returned unto her "first love;" and two others confessed their wrongs. I began at Minnick on the fourth Lord's day and continued until M day and continued until Monday night after the fifth Lord's day. Good in-terest was manifested and two were added to the one body—one from the Methodists and one body—one from the Methodists and one by confession and baptism. I was called to work with them next year, monthly, and to conduct their meeting. Brethren Thurman and Huffstutter, of Rehoboth, conducted the song service at Gratio, and Brother D. B. Gwynn led the singing at Minnick.—Porter Hogan.

Henderson, Tenn., September 17.— The tent meeting at Knoxville, Tenn., continued over three Sundays. The crowds were fair and the interest fine throughout. While there were no additions during the meeting, many people heard the gospel for the first time. The Knoxville church is to be commended for their splendid effort this year. They bought and equipped a new tent and supported Brethren Gleaves and Brooks in meetings previous to the one I held. They also supported Brethren Charles Brooks in the property of the one I held. ported Brother Everett Derryberry as leader of the song service. As a re-sult of this effort, a new congregation will be started. There are many fine people in the Knoxville church. There are some of the best lawyers and doctors in the South in this congregation. The church is composed almost entirely of brethren from Middle Tennessee. Brother and Sister T. B. Larimore favored us with a brief visit on their way from Cookeville to Washington. My next meeting will be at Bridgeport, Ala.; thence to Paragould, Ark. It was my privilege to attend the opening of the school in Henderson yesterday. It was great. Let correspondents please address me here.—J. W. Brents.

DAVID LIPSCOMB COLLEGE NASHVILLE, TENNESSEE

San Francisco, Cal., September 15.

Brother and Sister B. D. Morehead were with us from Saturday till Tuesday, when, in company with the Bensons and Miss Cypert, they sailed for Japan. Brother and Sister A. W. Lee, of Oklahoma City, Okla.; Brother and Sister L. Q. Harris, of Berkeley; Brother Felix Owen, of Santa Rosa; and Sister Killebrew and Mrs. Trice and the writer, of San Francisco, went aboard the ship with the missionaries and then came ashore and watched them sail. These are all worthy young Christians, and we feel sure they will do much good in their chosen fields. Recently we had the pleasure of having Brother and Sister F. B. Srygley with us for a night and a day. They were en route to Nashville from a meeting in Los Angeles. We had not seen them in a number of years, and it certainly was a treat to have them in our home. The first Sunday in September Brother Tenny and wife, of Graton, were with us, and Brother Tenny preached a good sermon for us. Brother Frank Young has also been with us the last two Sundays. He has a son in a local hospital, and he is here on that account. I am glad to report that his son is improving. Misses Ruth Perkins and Alma Poor, of Armona, were with us recently. We are always glad to have visitors. We still meet in Richmond Hall, Fourth Avenue and Clement Street. I am preaching each Sunday night in Berkeley. We have a good and growing congregation in Berkeley.—W. Halliday Trice.

Edited by Charles H. Gabriel. Of this book and its editor, T. B. Mosley, a first-class music composer, says: "It is the best book of the kind I ever examined. It is indeed a high-class collection of real songs, suited for children, the most beautiful melodies, supported by rich harmonies, which are characteristic of Mr. Charles H. Brother Merritt was married to Miss Ella Hood on March 6, 1904. To this union three sons were born. He obeyed the gospel under the teaching of Brother Fred M. Little, at Clarksburg, Tenn., on September 4, 1924, and lived a good life until the end. His suffering was intense, but he bore it with patience. He was a man that had the confidence of the entire neighborhood; was honest, fair, and upright in character, leaving an example for others to follow. The wife has lost a true companion; the children, a loving father; the neighborhood, a good citizen; and the church, a loyal member. May God bless Sister Merritt and her two children.

THOMPSON.

John J. Thompson was born on January 24, 1853, and died on July 4, 1925. He was married to Miss Mary Wells on February 26, 1880. To this union were born three children—Nina, Annie, and David. The two daughters died in early womanhood. Brother Thompson obeyed the gospel in August, 1883, and was an earnest, faithful, consistent Christian until death. For a number of years he was a member of the Green Plains congregation, was one of the founders and an elder of the church at Union Grove, and at the time of his death was a member of the church of Christ in Murray, Ky. He was a faithful companion, a good brother, a loving father, a useful citizen, an accommodating neighbor. He is survived by his wife; an aged sister, Mrs. Dillie Floyd; one son, Brother David Floyd; one son, Brother David Thompson, one of our best young preachers of the gospel; and two grandchildren. This is a sad bereavement for the family, the church, and the community in which he lived; but we sorrow not as those who have no hope. Funeral services were conducted by Brother E. H. Smith and the writer, after which his body was laid away in the Green Plains Cemetery. May God bless and comfort the bereaved ones. J. B. Brown.

MARTIN.

On June 29, 1925, at her home in Huntsville, Ala., the gentle spirit of Mrs. L. B. Martin left its earthly tenement of clay and winged its way to the city of the unclouded day. She was modest, quiet, and retiring in disposition, and loving, kind, and gentle toward all with whom she came in contact. Her beautiful life is more effectual than any sermon or tribute that could be spoken or written of her. Her memory will ever live in the hearts of those who knew and loved her best, and the influence of her life will be felt by many. While quite young she became obedient to the gos-pel of God, by which she obtained the remission of sins, being thus born into the family of God, and enjoyed the promise of a rich inheritance with the saints over there. She lived sixty-two years on this earth, the largest portion of it being spent in the service of Him from whom all blessings flow. "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord from henceforth: yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors: for their works follow with them." She leaves, to mourn her loss, a companion and seven children, with a great number of friends and loved ones. I would say to them: Be faithful unto death, and there will be a happy meeting "over there" that shall never end.

BOYD FANNING.

LITTLE.

Brother W. H. Little, son of Brother J. M. and Sister Laura Little, was born on January 1, 1882, and died on May 25, 1925. He was married to Ida Dempsey on November 2, 1904, and to this union four children were born, two of whom are dead. His wife died more than twelve years ago, and he was married again, to Lucy Reynolds, on October 10, 1915, to which union two children were born. He is survived by father, mother, widow, and four children. Brother Little stood high in the estimation of the people. He was full of enterprise and energy, one of the most progressive farmers in our county. He was a friend to every move that benefited the country materially and morally. He became a Christian about eighteen years ago, since which time he had been true to the church and an active worker, teaching a Sunday-school class the most of the time. Not many weeks before his death he was appointed as one of the elders of our congregation. We sum up his life in this: He was a first-class citizen, an accommodating neighbor, an obedient son, a true husband, a loving and dutiful father, and a faithful Christian. To his loved ones left behind I would say: Be true to God, and he will be true to you, and some sweet day you will be gathered to the beautiful home "over there."

COLLEY.

Martha Loraine (Meeks) Colley greeted the light of this world some twenty-seven or twenty-eight years past, in Corinth, Miss. Very early in life she remembered her Savior by vielding humble obedience to his will. On October 17, 1922, she was united in marriage to Brother R. L. Colley, of Fulton, Ky., a faithful, earnest, active, and loyal minister of the gospel. On July 2, 1925, she bade farewell to earthly scenes and entered into the heavenly rest. Her body was gently laid away by loving hands. was gently laid away by loving hands. Until recent years she had lived in Corinth, where she was nurtured "in the chastening and admonition of the Lord," and where she received the greater part of her education. She also attended Freed-Hardeman College. Her life at home was that of obedience and devotion to others. As a wife she meritad praise. a wife, she merited praise. Her home was always tidy and inviting and was always tidy and inviting and given to hospitality. As a Christian, she lived a life that approached perfection—modest, unselfish, diligent, faithful, 10yal, and above reproach. She was a true helpmate to her husband. Brother Colley said: "Loraine not only helped me to preach, but she helped me to live that which I preached." "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord: . . . that they may rest from their labors: for they may rest from their labors; for their works follow with them." Brother Colley, the mother, the sister, and the brothers have the sincere sympathy of friends and brethren everywhere. It was the writer's sad privilege to offer, in his humble way, the last words of consolation.

LOS ANGELES NOTES.

BY W. EDGAR MILLER.

The summer of 1925 has been a strenuous one for the churches of Christ in Southern California. We are just closing the vacation season, and it seems to have been pretty well observed by almost every one in one way or another, resulting in quite a dropping off in attendance at the services on Lord's days. However, the pick-up appears to be going to take place quite rapidly, as last Sunday (September 2) saw quite an increase in numbers at the Central congregation, which meets at 1044 South Hope Street. Notwithstanding the drop in attendance during the warm weather, the work has been moving along quite well. Of particular interest is the work of the young men at the evening services. Each Sunday evening the young men conduct a meeting of their own, at which time a number make talks, offer prayers, lead the songs, and read the Bible lessons. Much improvement has been noted in the work of those who take part since this work was started some months ago, and we feel that this is one of our most valuable lines of endeavor. We have among our young men much valuable talent, and we confidently expect to see arise from their midst some who will eventually go forth to proclaim the glad tidings of salvation to a lost world. In fact, one has already started in the person of Brother Emmett Broadus, who left this week for David Lipscomb College, in Nashville, Tenn., where he expects to spend the next year better preparing himself for this great work, after which he expects to go to China as a missionary. He goes not alone, for he took with him, as his wife, Sister Margaret Neil, one of Central's best young women, who decided to cast her lot with him in this work. These young people are to be most highly commended for the great sacrifice they are making in order to carry the gospel to the heathen.

Our Japanese mission work here in Los Angeles is prospering under the persistent efforts of Brother Ishiguro, who is so ably assisted by his wife and by Sister Hettie Lee Ewing. A car has been bought for Brother Ishiguro and is proving a valuable aid in the work. He told me last Sunday that they now have an enrollment of about sixty in the Sunday school and that there was an attendance of forty-four on that day.

There is a phase of this Japanese mission work developing that perhaps had not been thought of by many, and that is its use as a place for training and instructing missionaries who go to Japan. Brother Morehead and wife recently spent a few weeks at this place, and Sister Hettie Lee Ewing is working and studying, expecting to go to Japan in the fall of 1926. In this way much will be gained that will be invaluable to those who go over.

Brother Riggs recently held a tent meeting at Fullerton, about thirty miles south of Los Angeles, and established a congregation of about forty members, who meet regularly for worship.

The outlook for the work this fall and winter is better than ever before.

From the Brethren

Clay, Miss., September 10.—The meeting at Saltillo, Miss., closed on Sunday night. About sixteen hundred were present at the last service. Three were baptized and thirty-two came out from the "digressives." I did the preaching. The Gospel Advocate is good.—Charles Nichols.

Florence, Ala., September 14.—There were ten baptisms in the Iron City meeting, with fine interest. Brother Gilbert E. Shaffer, of Lawrenceburg, Tenn., led the song service. I preached last night for the Sherrod Avenue congregation, of this city. One baptized and one restored.—C. E. Holt.

Portales, New Mexico, September 14.—Sunday night ended the Oklahoma Lane meeting. No additions, but the gospel was preached and good was done. Brother E. A. Bedichek is holding a meeting at Clovis. Good crowds and interest. I am sick and am trying to take a little rest. Brother George W. Magnis is doing his best to establish the cause at Oklahoma Lane, near Farwell, Texas.—D. S. Ligon.

Buffalo Valley, Tenn., Route 1, September 18.—Our meeting on the head of Martin's Creek, of one week's duration, closed on Sunday night. As a result, ten Christians covenanted together to meet each Lord's day to keep house for the Lord. We moved here (on Indian Creek) on Morday, set up the tent, and began on Tuesday night. Crowds and interest are increasing at each service. Brother Kirk has returned to school, and Brother J. D. Derryberry is in charge of the song service.—W. M. Oakley.

Waverly, Ky., September 19.—I am here in what seems to be a promising meeting. We were hindered the first several days by rain. The audiences are attentive and growing. Two baptisms to date. The meeting will continue another week, then to Walnut Grove for ten days. It was in this community I was born, and I am preaching in the house my father helped to build more than fifty years ago. There has been no break in the work during all these years. There are still some of the members living who began at the beginning, still faithful and loyal to the Lord and regular in attendance. I have resigned the work at Little Rock, Ark., and will do evangelistic work. I am open for work after two more meetings. I could hold one more meeting while in these parts. For the next three weeks address me at Waverly, Ky.; then at Little Rock, Ark.—M. O. Daley.

Clovis, New Mexico, September 2.

—After the meeting closed at Portales, Sunday night, August 16, I went over beyond Floyd, where I had held a meeting a few weeks' before. An old lady, a faithful Christian, some eighty-two years down the way of life and on the road to glory, who lives out some six miles beyond Floyd, had requested me to come and preach a time or two at her house. After closing at Portales' I decided to go over and preach a night or so at the old sister's home. Well, when I got over there, they decided, as her daughter, who lived close by, was not very well and had more room, that' the preaching should be there. I was gladly surprised to have a good hearing. There were two confessions, and one was the aged sister's daughter, who was not at that time able to be baptized, but will be as soon as I can get back over there. I am at this writing out at Oklahoma Lane, near Farwell, doing my best to preach the gospel. Brother Bedichek has just closed a good meeting at Farwell and is now at Bovina preaching the word.—D. S. Ligon.

Paducah, Ky., September 17.—On the first Lord's day in August I began a two-weeks' meeting at Sheffield, Ala. Interest grew at every service and the meeting resulted in five baptisms. This was the first time the pure gospel was ever preached in Sheffield to my race. The white church encouraged us much while there. On the third Lord's day in August I began a meeting at Decatur, Ala. We had a large tent, and it was packed every night. Twenty-eight were baptized, all grown people, all from sectarian churches. Among these were one presiding elder, one so-called "sanctified preacher, and one Missionary Baptist preacher. The white Christians stood by us and did everything to encourage the work. This leaves thirty-one there to keep house for the Lord.—M. Keeble.

POTTER ORPHAN HOME.

BY H. C. SHOULDERS.

This is a home for dependent children. When I took charge of the Home the first of March, the buildings were very much out of repair. Something had to be done. So it was decided to make the necessary repairs. We tried to get everything done by the first day of July. However, we lacked a little, but got things in a very fair condition. There a few things that ought to be done, and then everything would be in fine shape.

We put in electric lights, city water, a new laundry, and plastered thirtyone rooms and did a lot of painting. We also had a lot of work done on the farm, and have made a pretty good crop, considering the dry season we have had to contend with.

After checking up, we found we were in debt about one thousand dollars. I at once began the work of raising the amount needed to pay off the indebtedness. Just at this time I have the debt cut down to five hundred dollars. This debt must be paid by the last of October.

Now, brethren, let us raise this amount in one day. This can be done without putting a burden upon any congregation. Let the elders of every congregation make a special talk on the first Sunday in October on the Home work, make the announcement for the second Sunday in October, and then on that day let every member of every congregation make a small contribution for that purpose, and the debt will be paid and all friends of the orphan children made happy. Now. do not forget that the time is the second Sunday in October. This is a work that does and should belong to every Christian in the land.

CURRENT COMMENT

By JAMES A. ALLEN

"Rev." A. J. Weeks, "D.D.," in an article, entitled The Mother Church of Methodism," published in the Christian Advocate, Nashville, Tenn., says:

To me the most interesting section of London is down on City Road where Wesley's Chapel is situated. It is this that I want to write about. Many articles have been written about it, and I have not discovered anything new to tell Methodists concerning it. I am convinced, however, that Methodists will do well to pause now and then and think of the early days of Methodism, think particularly of the things for which Wesley and his associates stood in those first days and of the mission of the movement when it was young.

The point we make is that about seventeen centuries intervened between "the early days of Methodism" and the early days of Christianity. No one can reasonably claim that Methodism and Christianity are the same thing. as there were Christians on earth about seventeen centuries before there were any Methodists. What it takes to make a Methodist is not what it takes to make a Christian, as Methodists themselves admit that a man may repudiate Methodism and still be a Christian. We kindly submit that "the things for which Wesley and his associates stood" in those "first days" of Methodism are true to the extent that "Wesley and his associates" were able to read them in the writings of the apostles; and we also kindly submit that such things as were advocated by "Wesley and his associates" "in those first days" for which they could not produce a "Thus saith the Lord" are not true. Christianity was nineteen hundred years old when "the movement" called "Methodism" "was young." As there were no Methodists in New Testament times, nobody can find anything in the New Testament that will make him a Methodist to-day.

W. S. Gross, in the Baptist Flag, thus describes what he erroneously considers to have been a case of conversion to Christ:

The summer of 1867, while trying to plow with an unruly horse, I became so vexed that I swore one of the most wicked oaths that I could think of. It seemed to give great relief. Something seemed to drop on me. It seemed to run down into every avenue of my soul like electricity. I found myself in love to God for the first time in my life. My madness was all gone. I unhitched my horse from the plow and went out of the field in deep meditation. I at once made up my mind to go to church the next morning. I saddled my horse and rode five miles to Elkhorn, a little village in the southwest corner of Ray County, Mo. I purchased a Bible. I got back as soon as I could. On the outside of the lid of that Bible was a picture of Christ, with a tablet in his hands. On it was printed these words: "I am the resurrection and the life. He that believeth in me, though he be dead, yet shall he live." Tears often blinded my eyes and fell on that book. I could not keep from trying to read it. The more I read it, the greater my trouble got to be.

One day while trying to plow corn, the tears so blinded my eyes that I could not see. I seemed to give out. I stopped and sat down on the plow. I could see nothing but a burning hell awaiting me. I thought I was a goner. I fell off on the ground and cried out: "O God, save me from a burning hell." There came a breeze of wind from the west. It swept down the eastern hillside over me, and all my sorrow was gone. I sprang to my feet. It seemed that heaven had come down to earth. O the joy that crowded into my soul at that time! Tongue cannot tell it. Jesus seemed to be there with salvation by grace.

I did not seek God. He sought me and found me and turned my roving feet toward heaven.

I am now in my eighty-fourth year. O, could I but live to see Jesus come to earth again! I feel like, if I had all of this world, I would freely give it to see him come to earth again. In the language of Sister Hall, who, when she was dying, clapped her hands and said: "Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly." And she fell on sleep. Amen.

We note that when Mr. Gross was "trying to plow with an unruly horse" and "became so vexed that I swore one of the most wicked oaths that I could think of," that, besides the "great relief" he got from such a wicked explosion, "something seemed to drop on me." This "something" that "seemed to drop on" him ran "down into every avenue of " his soul " like electricity," and he found himself "in love to God for the first time" in his life. His "madness was all gone," he made up his mind "to ge to church the next morning," and later "purchased a Bible."

Now, the question to be decided is, Was it the Holy Spirit that "seemed to drop on "Mr. Gross at the moment he swore these terrible oaths? If it was the Holy Spirit that "dropped" on him, then his would be a case of conversion; if it was not the Holy Spirit, then it was not a case of conversion and has no connection with becoming a child of God.

In the first place, it was a very natural and usual thing for "something" to "drop" on Mr. Gross when he permitted the unruly horse to make him exhaust his vocabulary in such energetic swearing. A man's mind generally clears after he does his worst; and all agree that, when a man uses "the most wicked oaths," he would get his just deserts if a mountain should "fall" on him.

But, without discussing in detail such experiences as Mr. Gross had, the whole matter depends on whether or not the Holy Spirit "drops" straight from heaven on people. All agree that the Holy Spirit converts people and that every conversion is the work of the Spirit. All agree that the sinner, before his conversion, is "dead in trespasses and sins," and that, before he can become a child of God, the Holy Spirit must quicken him into spiritual life.

There are no differences on this point. The whole controversy is over how the Holy Spirit does this work. Some, occupying the position upon which Mr. Gross stands, contend that the Holy Spirit "drops" straight from heaven into the heart of the sinner and thus converts him. Hence, numerous such experiences as that related by Mr. Gross are treasured up as an evidence of pardon and are related as a proof that the relater is a child of God. It is sad to relate that those who rely upon experiences of this sort as an evidence of the pardon of their sins are sometimes on the mountain top, out in the sunshine of a clear conscience, while at other times they are down in the valley, under the cloud, and frankly acknowledge that they do not know whether they have been converted or not.

In the first place, as God's Word is paramount authority, we note that none of the millions of people who were converted in New Testament times were converted in this way. The Holy Spirit, indeed, converted them all; but he did it through speaking the word to them or preaching the gospel to them, as he spoke through inspired men. Paul says, "The Spirit speaketh expressly;" and it is certain that "all truth" spoken by the Spirit was spoken through men who spoke "as the Spirit gave them utterance."

And then, if the Holy Spirit "drops" straight from heaven into the heart of a sinner and converts him, against his will, even though he be so wicked as to curse by verse at the antics of an unruly horse, whose fault would it be if the Spirit did not "drop?" And if the Spirit "drops" from heaven, without preaching the gospel and independent of the Word, why does not he "drop" in China or Japan? The fairest and most densely populated portions of this globe are to-day lying in heathen superstition and ignorance. "God is no respecter of persons." A Chinese soul is as precious in the sight of God as a soul in these United States. If the Holy Spirit "drops" straight from heaven, why were there no conversions in Japan before our missionaries got there?

We are certain, for more reasons than one, that it was not the Spirit of God that "seemed to drop on "Mr. Gross when he cursed so wickedly. We are glad that when he exploded, his mind cleared, and that he found himself in love to God and bought a Bible. We only regret that he did not follow the examples of conversions that are recorded therein. No man to-day has Holy Spirit religion that refuses to follow the teaching of the Holy Spirit as given through inspired men. There is no communication from heaven to earth outside of the Bible.

YOUR CO-OPERATION IS SOLICITED.

Now is the time for you to help us extend the circulation of the Gospel Advocate. It is a fact that the people are not reading religious papers as they did formerly. It is next to impossible for a publisher to publish a religious paper without a heavy loss. Paper and labor have both been so exceedingly high and it costs so much to produce a religious journal that, without the hearty coöperation and support of its constituents, the publishers must suffer a great loss. We are not complaining, and feel that the Gospel Advocate has fared as well as most religious journals. However, we earnestly request just now the hearty coöperation of every one of our readers in extending its circulation. An active worker in every congregation could easily double or triple the circulation of the paper in that congregation. We are receiving a number of new subscribers daily, but not so many as we can handle. We have room for many more.

THE COUNTRY CHURCHES.

BY C. E. HOLT.

It is a fact, regrettable though it be, yet a fact nevertheless, that the country churches are declining in numbers and in interest. They are being absorbed by the churches in the towns and cities. Good roads and automobiles have contributed largely to bring about such conditions. Every blessing has its curse, as every rose has its thorn. The country schools are being destroyed in the same way and from the same causes.

This age is one of unrest. It is an age of speed and greed and unstableness. Witness the great crowds in the cities as they surge and throng the streets on business or pleasure bent. Visit the many places of amusement, the picture shows, the parks, the swimming pools, the ball parks, and the other pleasure resorts, and one is amazed to see the multitudes of all ages and conditions that crowd the various resorts.

The people of the rural districts have become infected. Good roads and automobiles make it easy for them to make daily trips to the cities and join in the bacchanalian performances which seem to be the chief concern of all classes and castes. The people are abandoning their beautiful country homes where they have plenty of fresh air, good water, quietude, and where they can hear the birds sing, and where they can enjoy the beauties of nature's fields and forests—all these and more have they voluntarily given up for the stuffy, polluted atmosphere of the cities. They prefer to live in the "flats" than in the free and invigorating atmosphere of the country.

The city churches are being continually augmented by the influx from the country churches. The few members that do not move to the cities prefer attending services in the city churches. "The churches in the cities have preaching every Lord's day; and they have nice pastors. so we can hear a sermon every Sunday. In the country we have but little preaching, and what we do have is of a poor quality. Therefore, we prefer the short, sweet sermons from the lovely pastors of the city pulpits." This, in substance, is what we hear from thousands of people who have given up all religious interest in their own communities. They would rather burn gas in going to town to hear a sermon from a city pastor than to contribute money to have a good, sound gospel preacher visit them and preach the gospel to their neighbors.

In hundreds of communities in the rural districts, a few years ago, even within the lifetime of many now in middle life, there were large congregations, and these were visited by the best preachers in the land. Their protracted meetings were genuine love feasts. The singing was fine, led by some of the strong-lunged men of their own communities. An imported, hired song leader was a thing unknown and undreamed of among those country churches. Large numbers would be baptized in the beautiful streams in the presence of large assemblies. The preaching was of a high order. It was plain, old-fashioned gospel truth, without the frills and ruffles and furbelows of colleges or universities. Everything was simple and free from worldly show and formalism.

The good old days of bygone years are unknown to the young hothouse plants of modern times. An old disciple, after several years in a large city, visited a countryside church in which the worship was simple and the preaching plain and forceful and scriptural. His old and faithful wife was not physically able to attend the services. The old brother was not only delighted, but charmed, by the simplicity and spirituality of the way the worship was conducted. Returning, he said to his wife that he was amply repaid for his trip—that his soul was thrilled and filled with the beauty and loveliness of the things seen and heard and felt on that occasion. His feelings are thus in verse expressed:

Well, wife, I've found the model church, And worshiped there to-day; It made me think of good old times, Before my hair was gray.

The meetinghouse was finer built
Than they were years ago;
But then I found when I went in,
It was not built for show.

The sexton did not set me down Away back by the door; He saw that I was old and deaf, And saw that I was poor.

He gently took me by the hand,
And led me boldly through
The long aisle of that crowded church,
To find a pleasant pew.

I wish you'd heard the singing, wife; It had the old-time ring. The preacher said with trumpet voice: "Let all the people sing."

Old "Coronation" was the tune; The music upward rolled, Until I thought I heard the angel choir Strike all their harps of gold.

"Twas not a flowery sermon, wife, But simple gospel truth; It suited aged men like me, It suited hopeful youth.

And along this happy vein his conversation and description ran until, with an outburst of joy, they both, with their feeble voices quivering and blending with a feeling of ecstasy of heavenly cadences, closed with a vision of the city celestial.

"AND PETER."
BY JAMES E. CHESSOR.
I.

"And Peter."

Those are two of the most heartening words to a follower of the Lord Jesus. A believing penitent, drawn to the Savior by love, might find greater consolation and hope in such sayings as, "Christ died for the ungodly," or "Him that cometh to me I will in no wise cast out," or from John 3: 16. But to those of us who have loved the Savior and have tried to follow him and be true to him, yet realize how often we have denied him and failed him, those two words—" and Peter"—come as a benediction.

When we think of Simon Peter, our hearts alternate between great fear and great hope. If a man could live se close to his Lord-seeing his marvelous miracles, hearing his wondrous words, watching his beautiful life, so that he is constrained to cry out in adoration, "Thou art the Christ!"—if such a man can then turn round and deny his Lord with oaths and cursings, how can we ever hope to stand? But when we look again and see this man-this unlettered, uncultured fisherman-becoming once more one of Christ's foremost followers, our fears vanish. And when we see with delighted amazement how, after such a lamentable fall, our Lord sought him out, forgave him, welcomed him back into the fold, reinstated him in his apostolic office, gave him greater responsibilities, and chose him to be his mouthpiece at Pentecost-why, our hearts leap for joy! Truly there is hope for any man; there is hope for you-for me. Blessed be his namewhose love is so deep and tender-whose pardon is so full and free!

II.

It was Love that caught the first sight of the risen Lord. "Now when he was risen early on the first day of the week, he appeared first to Mary Magdalene, from whom he had cast out seven demons." She loved much because she was forgiven much. Then he was seen by true Repentance. "The Lord is risen indeed, and hath appeared to Simon." "He appeared to Cephas; then to the twelve." First he comes to the women—and Mary first of all—who wept for him; then to the man who wept for himself. "For God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes."

While the Son of man was for three days "in the heart of the earth," Simon Peter was "in the gall of bitterness." Have you ever pictured the happenings of those three days? Without a shadow of doubt, the most miserable man in the whole world, at that time, was Simon Peter. "And he went out, and wept bitterly." Where he went we do not know, nor does it matter. But we do know that he wept; that he mourned over the great sin of his renunciation.

Jesus had told his disciples at the last supper that they could not then come whither he was going. Peter was not willing for that to go unchallenged, so far as he himself was concerned.

- "Lord," said he, "whither goest thou?"
- "Whither I go," Jesus explained, "thou canst not follow me now; but thou shalt follow afterwards."
- "Lord," said Peter, dubiously, "why cannot I follow thee even now? I will lay down my life for thee!"
- "Wilt thou," said the Master, sadly, "lay down thy life for me? Verily, verily, I say unto thee, The cock shall not crow, till thou hast denied me thrice!"

And so it happened. He followed Jesus "afar off" to the trial. With wavering faith and quaking heart he stood in the courtyard witnessing the shameful travesty. He was off guard, and weaker than he supposed. There he was accused, and with the red glare of the fire full in his face, he denied shamelessly. Then in the fainter light of the porch he denied again, this time with an oath. For the third time the frightened apostle was confronted, and for the third time he denied. "Then began he to curse and to swear, I know not the man."

O those bitter oaths and shameless curses! "And immediately, while he yet spoke, the cock crew." Bird of ill omen, how the shrill cry smote upon his dull ears! "And the Lord turned, and looked upon Peter." The Lord in the agony of his humiliation, in the majesty of his silence—"the Lord turned, and looked upon Peter!" "Blessed are those," says Farrar, "on whom, when he looks in sorrow, the Lord looks also with love! It was enough! Like an arrow through his inmost soul shot the mute, eloquent anguish of that reproachful glance. . . . It was enough! 'He saw no more enemies, he knew no more danger, he feared no more death."

"And Peter remembered the word of the Lord. . . . And he went out, and wept bitterly."

III.

As he fled disconsolately through the moonlit streets, utterly undone and alone in the world, the marvel is he did not die of a broken heart. He did love his Lord, and yet he had denied him in the hour of his direst extremity. And when the end had come and his Lord was crucified, who can picture the remorse of that lonely disciple? How his mind would travel again and again over that scene in the high priest's palace! "The Lord's last look was one of reproach—and now he is gone! He will never know how bitterly ashamed I am—how deeply sorry!" There was a time when Peter had cried: "Depart from me; for I am a sinful man, O Lord!" Now, when his sin is intensified a hundredfold, he would give all the world for one look—one word—one explanation—one utterance of sorrow in his ears.

And so that most miserable of all Sabbaths wore on, and the first day of the week dawns.

Mary Magdalene was the last at the cross and the first at the tomb. She sees the stone rolled away. "They have taken away the Lord!" she thinks. Without waiting to investigate, she runs back to the city. "To whom shall I go?" Apparently the disciples were all scattered. But she did know where Peter was, and John. It was natural to think of Peter now; after all, he was the strong man of the twelve. She "cometh to Simon Peter, and to the other disciple, whom Jesus loved." And the two ran to the tomb, but John outran Peter.

When they arrive, they see the evidence of the resurrection in the coiled graveclothes and the folded napkin, and John's feet outran Peter's just as his faith had done. "And he [Peter] departed, wondering with himself." How distracted must Peter's mind have been! "If he is risen, will he ever forgive me?" Ah! Simon Peter, do you so easily forget? Do you not remember that, when you asked the question, "Lord, how oft shall my brother sin against me, and I forgive him? till seven times?" the answer was: "I say not unto thee, Until seven times; but, Until seventy times seven." Simon, if the Lord sets that standard for you, will he himself fall short of it? Nay, verily!

So the two disciples went away home. Mary Magdalene, however, who seems to have followed them back to the tomb, enters it. There is an angel in the sepulcher, and this is his message: "He is risen. . . . Go, . . . tell his disciples and Peter." Mark well, it is not Peter and his disciples. What depths of love there were in those two words—"and Peter!" For poor Peter might well have thought he was no longer worthy to be called a disciple.

"And Peter." Words cannot express what a load of care was lifted off his mind. O, the joy of being forgiven!

He was all alone somewhere when the Lord appeared to him. We know nothing of what passed between them. No inkling is given. Simon Peter, always ready to say something, for once says nothing. No word ever passed his lips, so far as we know, of what transpired when his Lord met him. Was not the penitent disciple lifted up then? For immediately afterwards he is his former self again, only more humble. Frank and full confession; free and full forgiveness! Peter had turned again. Henceforth he was to establish his brethren. Henceforth he was to be a Rock.

The episode on the shore of Tiberias cast away the last doubt.

"Simon," said the Lord, "lovest thou me more than these?"

"Yea, Lord; thou knowest that I love thee."

For the third time came the searching question; for the third time the humble declaration of love.

And then, at last, Jesus described Peter's ultimate suffering because of his fidelity. "When thou wast young," he said to him, "thou girdest thyself, and walkedst whither thou wouldest: but when thou shalt be old, thou shalt stretch forth thy hands, and another shall gird thee, and carry thee whither thou wouldest not."

"Now this he spake," John explains, "signifying by what manner of death he should glorify God."

Peter never forgot this. "Knowing," he wrote afterwards, "that the putting off of my tabernacle cometh swiftly, even as our Lord Jesus Christ signified unto me."

And so it happened. His love never waned; his faith never wavered. At the last he was crucified because of fidelity to the Lord whom, in an evil hour, he had denied. He laid down his life for him. He gave the last full measure of devotion.

INTEREST GROWING IN NEW TESTAMENT WORK.

BY S. F. MORROW.

We are receiving letters and cards asking about the size and prices of our Testaments, and will answer all through the Gospel Advocate, as our time is precious and so short, and we realize we have done so little in the vineyard of our Lord and Master, and so many precious souls have gone on to eternity untaught, unprepared to meet their God. O that I had lived more godly before them, taught them the word of God in its beauty and simplicity and power, and, above all, placed a New Testament in their hands and taught them the proper division of the word, which word "is quick, and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart!" (Heb.4: 12.) How active we all should be in seeing that all have this precious word and get all to read it daily if possible! When this is done, our responsibility ceases in part.

The size of the large Testament is eight by five and onehalf inches; price, fifty cents. The size of the small Testament is four and one-fourth by three inches; price, ten

These prices are made possible by the kindness and generosity of the American Bible Society. This society is giving Bibles and Testaments away to millions of people annually-mostly, I think, to the Old World. They are printed in many different languages, so that all may know the Lord. At the prices we can secure these books, it does look like we should see that America is well supplied with the Word of Life. We sincerely hope and pray that every congregation in America, regardless of sect or denomination or color, will keep a supply of Bibles and New Testaments at their places of worship, and especially see that the widows and orphans have one. If all will do what the Bible says, we all will do the same thing and all will go the same way, for Jesus says: "I am the way, the truth. and the life." Again: "I am the light of the world." Jesus prayed that we all might be one, as he and the Father are one. (See John 17.)

As Nashville is known as the Jerusalem of the gospel, won't it take the lead in this good work? Brother Fletcher Williams, of the Williams Printing Company, tells me he has been keeping Testaments at his place of worship. Sister Yeagley called at the office and secured sixty Testaments for her class at the Tennessee Industrial School. We hope that many will follow her noble example.

I give the following card to let all know how our books are appreciated:

McEwen, Tenn., September 28, 1925.—Dear Brother Morrow: I received the Testaments. They are nice. I was glad to get them. They will go like hot cakes. I will sell them and send the money for more if I need them. This is a splendid way to put the Bible in the reach of all. I thank you.

Yours in the one hope,

Our idea is to get every congregation to keep a supply of Testaments on hand all the time, and let it be known, so all can get one. I find counties in this State where there is not a Testament for sale. We have not ordered any Bibles, but can supply them from the Gospel Advocate Company. Our great fight is to get the New Testament in the hands and hearts of the rising generation. Just as soon as possible you can see samples of the books at the Advocate office. Miss Schild, our efficient saleswoman, will gladly show them or any other book in the house. The Gospel Advocate Company is giving us space and help free, and my time is free. In consideration of these facts, it appears to me that all who love the Lord and his cause and their own salvation should enter into this fine work with great pleasure at once. Don't wait for some one to come to see you. Decide with yourself and the Lord what you should do and give for yourself and the good of others. May the Lord bless us all in doing our duty to-day.

THE WORK IN SOUTH AFRICA.

Sinde Mission, Livingstone, North Rhodesia, August 13, 1925.—Dear Readers of the Gospel Advocate: The Lord's work at Sinde Mission is prospering. Seven souls have been baptized into Christ in the last two months, making thirty for the year. The last three meetings have yielded three more confessions, one each time. There are now eight waiting to be baptized. To make certain that they know fairly well what it means to become a Christian, Brother Short has followed the custom of most missionaries in Africa. That is, to keep the natives in a class for a few weeks or months, not to test their conduct so much, but to be reasonably sure, if possible, that they know what the Lord expects of them. We do not want any conversions because of the loaves and fishes. Therefore, it is necessary to have the natives work for everything they get from us, even for a worn shirt or pair of trousers. Sometimes we regret to have this duty to perform, but it must be done to teach thrift. So much has thrift been stressed that there is only now and then one who asks us to give him something gratis. We hope to see the day when we can give them things without an evil With women and children we make some difference, also with the teachers. Please pray for our work.

ARRIVAL OF THE NEW MISSIONARIES.

BY J. M. M'CALEB.

We watched the papers to see just when the ship would arrive. Also, three days before it was due, a wireless message came, saying: "Moreheads, Bensons, and Miss Cypert on board Siberia." Five or six of us were there to meet them. Happy meeting? Of course. It reminded me of that time when those on this side and those on that will meet in the sweet by and by.

The boat arrived at about eleven o'clock, and by four in the afternoon we all stood around a well-spread table at Zoshigaya and sang, "Praise God, from whom all blessings flow," after which Brother Morehead expressed thanks.

The Bensons will go on to China after a stop-over of about ten days. The Moreheads will remain in Tokyo for a year or two to get a good start in the language. Some of the Nashville (Tenn.) churches are sending the Moreheads; the church at Morrillton, Ark., in coöperation with others, is sending the Bensons.

It is too early yet to express an opinion further than to say they all seem healthy, capable, and consecrated. Of course all of us on the field are delighted.

J. W. Howell, Columbus, Miss., September 20: "In February of this year Brother Lollar began a Bible class in a good community near here. I preached three sermons at Chestnut Grove, in the same county, a Methodist stronghold. Many of the people had never heard a gospel preacher preach. Billie Keen led the singing. I am to begin a meeting with the Southside church of Christ, Indianapolis, Ind., October 4. If you have friends in Indianapolis, please send their names and street number to W. P. Lowe, 2910 Shelby Street, and we will try to interest them in the meeting. The church worships in the new house at 1201 East Cruft Street."

F. L. Paisley, Benton, Ill., September 24: "I began a tent meeting here last Lord's day. Rain has hindered some, but the attendance is increasing rapidly. This is where I met W. J. Moore in an eight-nights' discussion last January. After preaching each night I am waiting upon a young man who is fighting a hard battle with double pneumonia, hoping to conquer that he may obey the gospel ere the meeting closes, which he had resolved to do before he took sick. This is my last meeting for the season. I go to Chicago next to work with the Central congregation during the winter.' We hope to locate many negligent members who have moved there from all parts of the United States. Send names to R. S. King, Room 511, Peoples Gas Building, Chicago, Ill."

TOPIC AND TEXT

BY A. B. LIPSCOMB

I would stress in this week's article the importance and value of the Christian's home. The lesson of home influence is not only a timely lesson for the preacher to present, but it is one which is now engaging the attention of noted economists and sociologists. Thinking people have become painfully aware of the fact that in most places the old home influence, once the most powerful factor in our civilization, is dead, and in other places it is rapidly becoming decadent. No community hardly is an exception. In all centers of life, to borrow the phrase and sentiment of Paul at Athens, one might say: "As I passed by I saw the altars of your homes broken down, and found the sounds of Christian worship displaced by the discord of frivolous songs and dances." Verily this generation is up against the perils of the Jazz Age!

For a preacher of Christ's gospel, under such conditions, to keep his mouth closed, would mean for him to become derelict in duty, a traitor to his Master's cause. On the other hand, if the rebuke is administered in Christ's own spirit, it may result in a great blessing, bringing the vision of "the more excellent way."

HOW THE BIBLE EXALTS THE HOME.

There is no better way to start such a lesson than to emphasize the exaltation which the Bible gives to the home. In this respect it is unparalleled—yes, it is unapproachable in all of ancient literature. It is also true that those examples of modern books which grown the home with a halo of glory borrow from the Bible the chief measure of their song. Read all the books, both prose and poetry, and you will see that in such women as Sarah, Rebekah, Rachel, Ruth, and Hannah, of the Old Testament, and Eunice, Lois, and the Marys, of the New Testament, the world still finds its best ideals of womanhood, wifehood, and motherhood. In such men as Joseph, Moses. Samuel, Daniel, John, and Paul it finds its finest examples of brave and holy manhood. In both cases the men and women are the finished products of the faithful homes.

We often make too much and think too much of our earthly dwellings. We are prone to forget that we are pilgrims and sojourners on the earth, and that there is "no abiding city here." The homes over which these queenly women reigned and out of which these uncrowned princes came were neither fine nor permanent—in most cases they were nomadic tents—and yet they provide history's finest examples of the sacred family circle.

We may safely say that the Bible everywhere sets the home to the seat of honor, proclaiming it to be divine in its origin, character, and mission. Moses gave instruction for the ancient Hebrew home as follows: "Therefore shall ye lay up these my words in your heart and in your soul, and bind them for a sign upon your hand, that they may be as frontlets between your eyes. And ye shall teach them your children, speaking of them when thou sittest in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way, when thou liest down, and when thou risest up." (Deut. 11: 18, 19.) Paul, giving instructions for the conduct of the Christian home, says: "And, ye fathers, provoke not your children to wrath: but bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord." (Eph. 6: 4.) These two passages, which may well stand for the whole scope of Bible teaching on the subject, make the home the school of moral and spiritual life. Wherever the Bible has gone and its teachings have been obediently received, there the home has been elevated. On the other hand, where the Bible has not gone or where its study has been neglected, there the home has deteriorated into a mere lodging place. Missionaries have ever found in the presence of their home life among the heathen a force quite as potent as the spoken message. The most corrective influence that might be exercised in society to-day would be for men and women everywhere to exalt and exemplify in actual practice the Bible doctrines of the home.

"WITH ALL HIS HOUSE."

Joshua said: "As for me and my house, we will serve the Lord." Cornelius was "one that feared God with all his house." The Philippian jailer is found "believing in God with all his house." Crispus, the chief ruler of the synagogue, "believed on the Lord with all his house." expressions have a grave significance. It shows that the men led their families in embracing the Christian faith. In making their religious decisions, they did not forget or neglect their households. Wife and child and even servant -every responsible being under that roof-must become partakers of his joy in salvation. No husband or father has a right to neglect the Christian culture of his family. Duty is not finished when they provide food, raiment. shelter, and insurance. The crying need is for fathers and mothers to take their God-given places in their homes as examples and teachers.

There are many who are worrying themselves considerably over the proper furnishings for the home. There is the danger that after all the money has been spent you shall have failed to provide that which, after all, makes the home most useful and attractive—the Christian influence. It is time to make such a home if you have never had it, to build again the altars if they are fallen down, to kindle again the incense fire of morning and evening prayer, to blow the dust from your Bible and let the sacred pages be read. "Tell ye your children of it, and let your children tell their children, and their children another generation."

AN ENCOURAGING REPORT FROM ISHIGURO.

BY S. H. HALL.

All who love the truth will be glad to get the following report of Brother Ishiguro's work at Los Angeles, Cal. Remember, this mission is not only conducted for the purpose of converting as many of the Japanese as possible in California, but as a training station for those who desire to ultimately go on to Japan. Sister Hettie Lee Ewing is there now in training, and is proving a great help to the work while so doing. Here is Brother Ishiguro's letter:

Our missionary work is greatly improved since we have Sister Ewing's help and the use of a good car. Regardless of the summer heat and the attraction of the beaches, our Sunday school has had seven new recruits, and we know of two others to come next Lord's day. We have begun another class—a Bible class for the young men and young women, under Sister Ewing's teaching. We cannot tell just what this will amount to, as it has been organized only two Sundays, and it is very hard to get young people to come out to the class and stay for church, too. We hope, however, to work up an interest and to get them to bring some of their friends. Sister Belle Ragsdale was away for several Sundays on her vacation, and Sister Ewing met her class while she was away. But she is back now, with renewed interest; and Sister Vivian Cox is always present with a fine class.

I am sorry to tell you that one of our little girls, Humiko Shigakuni, about six years old, died last Sunday, and was buried Tuesday. The father of the child is a Buddhist in belief and the mother is a Shintoist. But before the little girl died, she talked to her mother about our God, and told her that she wanted to go to God and that God would keep her until they could meet again. The mother said that she was sorry to give her up, but that she died so happy that she thought that surely she went to dwell with God. It seemed to make a deep impression on the parents, and they called on me to conduct the funeral services. Although the Buddhist priest was present, I had the privilege of conducting all the services. I hope this influence will lead the parents to God in time. This serves a example to show the influence of our Sunday-school work. Some of our strongest church members have been reached through the work we have done for the children.

Sister Ewing week-day classes meet regularly. comes for her lesson in Japanese and helps us in English. I meet my ladies, English classes (and we have four such classes) on Tuesdays and Thursdays. Sister Ewing follows in this work on Thursdays and Fridays, giving them drills in pronunciation and conversation. We are thus drills in pronunciation and conversation. doubling our work along this line.

Altogether, we feel greatly encouraged over our work. I hope you will overlook slowness in writing you. Thanking you from the depth of my heart for your great interest, and asking for your prayers for all of our work, I am,

Your brother in Christ,

H ISHICUPO

H. ISHIGURO.

A brief report came to-day (September 29) from Brother Ishiguro, stating they had fifty-one little tots in the Bible study on the fourth Lord's day, and there are four more prospective baptisms among the parents. Eternity alone can tell the good this work will accomplish. My prayer is that the Lord may bless it.

I am sorry to say that Sister Ishiguro is now in the hospital, having to go there for an operation. She is reported as doing well. This brought on an extra expense of something like one hundred and fifty or two hundred dollars. The Nashville friends hurried to him one hundred and twenty-five dollars to help in this emergency. If others desire fellowship in this good work, send your checks to W. Edgar Miller, 376 West Mariposa Street, Pasadena, Cal.

OUR TRIP ACROSS THE PACIFIC.

BY B. D. MOREHEAD.

The first lap of our voyage on the steamship Siberia was from Los Angeles to San Fransisco.

Brother Samuel Witty; Sister Ewing, from Texas, who is preparing to come to Japan as a missionary; and Brother and Sister Ishiguro came to the ship with us.

The twenty-four-hour trip up the coast was well enjoyed. We had three fine days while in San Francisco in Brother Halliday Trice's home.

At high noon, Tuesday, August 12, we met the Bensons and Miss Cypert and about fifteen brethren and sisters in Christ who came to see us off from the pier. We all went on board the ship and made some pictures on the deck. The signal was given to start. Our visitors told us goodby, and we began to slowly move out into the mighty ocean with a thrill no one can realize until he leaves his homeland

We were soon comfortably situated in our cabins with a fear that we would soon be seasick, but I am happy to say that not one of us five missionaries was sick throughout the entire voyage.

When we were out about thirty-six hours, a young man died on board the ship with tuberculosis. He was kept on the ship for twenty-four hours. The funeral bell was tolled, and the ship stopped for five minutes. The body had been placed on a board with heavy pieces of iron tied to his legs, then wrapped with a canvas and a Japanese flag. Two ministers, an American and a Japanese, read a few verses from the Bible. Without any manifestation of sorrow, no tears, no flowers, the body was gently dropped feet downward into the bosom of the rolling Pacific.

We glided along across the ocean in one of the two smoothest-riding ships on the Pacific. The Lord's day came. Brother Benson and I had part in the public religious service which was conducted in the Social Hall. In the afternoon the Bensons, Miss Cypert, Mrs. Morehead, and I worshiped in one of our staterooms.

On Monday, August 24, we arose early to see the Hawaiian Islands. We had sent Brother Langpaap, one of our missionaries, a wireless, and by nine o'clock we were in his home. Brother Langpaap is doing a wonderful work in our possessions for the Lord. He certainly did treat us royally, and seemed very glad to see us. We were made to realize to some extent what it means to have some people of the one faith to visit one while separated from home ties. We were in Honolulu eight hours, seeing wonderful sights, coconut trees, banana trees, and watching the divers go down out of sight for a nickel.

It might be of interest to state that we were well entertained on the ship. We had physical recreation in the way of games and swimming, and had books, music, and Japanese entertainments.

The Lord's day came again, and we again had our worship in our stateroom. The subject under consideration was the Philippian jailer.

On Monday before we arrived in Yokohama we sent Brother McCaleb a wireless. At ten o'clock in the morning, Thursday, September 3, we dropped anchor in the Yokohama harbor after being on the water fifteen days, lacking two hours. Brother McCaleb, Brother Harry Fox, Mrs. Harry Fox, Brother Rhodes, Brother Bixler, and Miss Kennedy met us at the dock. Some Japanese brethren met us also. We all went to Brother McCaleb's home to be served a good dinner, thus indicating the welcome we were given by those with whom we expect to labor for the Lord.

Brother Benson and Mrs. Benson are in the country with some of the missionaries. Brother McCaleb has gone to My wife and I are staying with Miss the mountains. Cypert and Miss Kennedy until Brother McCaleb returns.

May the Lord bless all the Gospel Advocate workers.

The churches in the homeland are amply able to sustain these noble Christians as they labor for the advancement of the cause of Christ on far-away shores. Let us all send "once and again" to their necessity. Brother and Sister Morehead were sent out by the Waverly-Belmont congregation, Nashville, Tenn. All who desire to have a part in their work may send their remittances to Brother Frank J. A. A. Jones, Arcade, Nashville, Tenn.

A VISIT TO QUEBECK.

BY S. P. PITTMAN.

On Sunday, September 13, it was my pleasure to preach to a representative audience in the schoolhouse at Quebeck, in White County, Tenn. It will be recalled by the readers of the Gospel Advocate that Sister J. Claude Martin, of Nashville, has taken a special interest in the cause of Christ in this community, soliciting and giving of her own means to build a meetinghouse. There was not a place of worship, called a "church house," in the village. It is gratifying to know that through the efforts of Sister Martin and of her local colaborer, Sister John Cooper, a neat, modest, yet commodious house of worship is nearing completion. The readers of the Advocate will be glad to hear of this, as well as every other laudable effort to build up the cause of primitive Christianity. gregation and the community should feel thankful to these good women for their persistence in this noble work.

E. C. Fuqua, Pasadena, Cal., September 22: "The church of Christ at Sichel Street, Los Angeles, Cal., was recently treated to a series of powerful sermons of 'sound doctrine' by F. B. Srygley. It was a feast that we all will remember, but to me especially it was a royal banquet. In spite of his sixty-six years, Brother Srygley seems in his prime—just as he did when I lingered at his feet more than thirty years ago. Aside from N. B. Hardeman's meeting last year, this is the first preaching I have heard for twenty-seven years, and of course it was a 'treat.' Being in strict missionary work all my life and hard of hearing, I have been cut off from all means of edification and education that come from hearing good preaching by the brethren. How it rejoices my soul to hear it just like I have tried to preach it all my life without hearing it! And that the entire audience also appreciated it was evidenced by the profound attention given. Great good was done. Eight were baptized, one or two were restored, and lasting good otherwise accomplished. Sister Srygley did a splendid part in making the meeting and their visit a success. A grand woman—the noble companion of a grand old soldier of Christ. God bless them richly here till death, and in eternity according to their noble works."

- Jesse S. Bills, Farmington, Tenn., October 3: "Ulrich R. Beeson, of Waldo, Ark., has just closed a twelve-days' meeting for the church at Farmington, with twenty additions to the church—eighteen by baptism."
- Andy T. Ritchie began a meeting at Westmoreland, Tenn., last Lord's day. Brother Ritchie recently closed a splendid meeting with the Mount Zion congregation, near Newark, Ark., with about twenty-five baptisms and several restorations.
- Leslie G. Thomas preached twice at Coopertown, Tenn., last Lord's day. B. W. Davis was present and made a talk at the Lord's table at the morning service. It was announced that Brother Davis would preach a few nights there this week.
- J. G. Allen is in a splendid tent meeting in the Midland Valley Addition, Muskogee, Okla., with three additions to date. The Muskogee newspapers have been very kind about publishing reports giving extracts from his sermons. Much interest has been aroused.
- Mrs. Mary K. Mitchell, Hilham, Tenn., October 3: "I have been a reader of the Gospel Advocate for a number of years, and I enjoy it very much. Of all papers, I have never found its equal. I feel like I couldn't do without it. It surely has been a help to me."

Robert Alexander, Norman, Okla., September 28: "Since entering the university at Norman, I have agreed to preach for the church at Chickasha every Lord's day. We had a good meeting there yesterday, with four from the 'digressives' and one baptized."

- Charles F. Hardin, Ontario, Cal., September 29: "Three were added at our services last Sunday, making a total of thirty-one thus far. I wonder if we appreciate the ripe and golden truth the Gospel Advocate brings, and the wonderful influence it has and is having?"
- Dr. S. L. Pharr, of Marietta, Miss., sends the Gospel Advocate three new subscribers and three renewals. Dr. Pharr not only helps the Advocate in the great work in which it is engaged, but he becomes a benefactor to every home in which he places the Advocate.
- Married, at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. M. Wilkerson, 926 North Fifth Street, this city, October 2, 1925, Mr. W. A. Oakley and Miss Ophelia P. Wilkerson, W. M. Oakley, father of the bridegroom, officiating. Both are members of the church of Christ.

I wish to commend the Wichita Bible School, Wichita, Kan., and the County Line Bible School, Bakersfield, Mo. The course is terse and practical and is very beneficial for young preachers and Lord's-day Bible-school teachers. Write for information."
- H. C. Shoulders, Bowling Green, Ky., Route 4: "Remember that next Sunday is the day we want to raise five hundred dollars for the Potter Orphan Home. We have a debt of that amount that must be paid by the last of the month. This is a wonderful work, and every one should be glad of an opportunity to help the children's home just a little. Then let every one take this work to the Lord in prayer before next Sunday, and then make your contribution as you pray, and I am sure the debt will be paid."
- F. S. Vance, Sentinel, Okla., September 22: "My protracted-meeting work for this season is over. Meetings this year were best I have ever experienced. I am now at home, and have started into my second year's work with the church here. We had large crowds last Sunday, morning and night, with one addition by membership Sunday morning. The congregation has had about sixty additions to its membership since August of last year. Roy Lanier did the preaching in our meeting this year and also last year. The church here is in fine condition."
- E. C. Lowry, Atlanta, Ga., September 28, sends us a list of subscribers to the Gospel Advocate and says: "The Gospel Advocate is doing a great work through its columns in standing for the primitive gospel. It brings all members of the church of Christ closer together and encourages us all to greater efforts in the spread of the kingdom and the strengthening of churches already established. May it grow better and larger as the years go by. It shall be my endeavor to send another list of subscriptions within the next few weeks. I want to place it in the home of every member of the church of Christ at East Point."

Willie Hunter, Tompkinsville, Ky., September 28: "My year's work came to a close here yesterday, and we had a fine crowd present. It was unanimously decided that I should continue the work here another year, which I promised to do, for a while at least. There have been about forty additions to the church during the year, more than thirty of them by baptism. Our membership now numbers around three hundred. My preaching at other places during the year has resulted in about fifty additions. I am now in a meeting at Gamaliel. After one more meeting in this State and one in Tennessee, my protracted-meeting work will be through for this year. Success to the Gospel Advocate."

THE PASSING OF R. B. NEAL.

BY M. C. KURFEES.

For many reasons it makes me sad to record the passing of R. B. Neal. His home for many years has been in Grayson, Ky.; but he was called to Huntington, W. Va., on business, and died suddenly on the street in that city or. Monday, September 14, 1925. His death was caused by heart failure, and his home town with all that region is in mourning over the distressing event.

Robert Burns Neal was born in Georgetown, Ky., February 19, 1847, and, hence, died in his seventy-ninth year. It is seldom that a preacher of the gospel dies leaving behind him a greater number of devoted and faithful friends to mourn his departure and cherish his memory than are left by this lamented servant of God. They are not only numerous in Kentucky, West Virginia, Ohio, and Tennessee, but there are many of them in other States. His body was removed to his home on Tuesday morning, September 15, where it lay in state until the funeral and burial services on Wednesday, the following day, and Grayson and the surrounding region are mourning their great loss. That the reader may see how deeply they are touched, I republish the following clipping from the East Kentucky Journal, of Grayson, Ky .:

The death of Brother Neal has removed one of our most trusted and beloved religious leaders who has been called into the rewards and joys of life everlasting. It has taken from our midst a powerful and law-abiding citizen who made himself servant of all and enemy to none; it has claimed a man who has had more to do with the education of the Christian young men and women in the mountains of Eastern Kentucky than possibly any other person, and it leaves a vacancy in the home and in the hearts of his friends and loved ones which none other can fill.

Brother Neal never seemed to grow old. He was ever filled with that good nature and optimism which made him a friend to all and caused the children to love to sit beside him and listen to his wonderful words of wisdom. loved to shake hands with him and see that pleasant smile brighten upon the face that was the symbol of his happy and unselfish life. The memory of this noble life will ever be a beacon light to guide the young people, in whom he had an abiding interest.

Brother Neal was educated in Georgetown College, Georgetown, Ky., and in Transylvania University, at Lexington, Ky. Much of the work of his early life as a preacher of the gospel was done here in the city of Louisville. The monument erected by his energetic and untiring labors in this city, while only a few remain who were cotemporaries with him in that work, still stands to commemorate his name. It was back during the seventies that his work began in Louisville. He was the active and leading evangelist who did the work resulting in the establishment of the Campbell Street Church, now the Haldeman Avenue Church. This church was established by what was then the Floyd and Chestnut Streets Church, now the Broadway Christian Church, and Brother Neal was the wide-awake evangelist who carried forward the work under the direction of the Floyd and Chestnut Streets Church. He was thus largely instrumental in establishing the Campbell Street Church and was its first minister. It was during a part of that work while he was yet quite a young man that he fell from a buggy and sustained a severe injury. It was first thought that he would probably not recover at all, but by careful nursing administered by his host of friends he rallied and became able to resume his work, though he never recovered entirely from the injury resulting from the fall, and it was more or less a handicap to him the rest of his life.

At the time of this serious accident he was engaged to be married to Miss Lucy Snyder, of Louisville, whom, on account of the apparently helpless and hopeless condition in which the injury had left him, he offered to release from the engagement; but "Miss Lucy," as she is still familiarly known among her many friends and acquaintances, being then the rare and noble specimen of womanhood that she has ever been, declined to be released, and they were married on December 6, 1877. From that day to the day of his death she was a helpmeet to him in the highest sense of the word—the mainspring and inspiration of his life. She thus stood by him to the end and still survives him, and I am sure that, as she wades the deep waters of sorrow, the Lord will sustain her and verify tc' her his promise: "When thou passest through the waters, I will be with thee; and through the rivers, they shall not overflow thee." (Isa. 43: 2.)

In spite of the handicap resulting from his fall, Brother Neal's energy and zeal in the work of the Lord were never diminished, and it may be truly said of him that, after he became a member of the church of God on March 4, 1866, he was a ceaseless, energetic, and untiring worker in the church throughout his life. In fact, he was one of the most indomitable and indefatigable workers with whom I have ever been acquainted. In addition to this, he possessed the tact and the ability to surround himself with a host of cooperators to help in the prosecution of his aims. One of the greatest and most telling works of his life in recent years has been his magnificent fight against Mormonism. It is my judgment that he did a greater work in this field than any other man. With both tongue and pen he has exposed its misleading tenets, and his work in this field, as in others, will live after him. I think he was looked upon by that mistaken movement as its most dreaded foe. He most severely exposed its fallacies, and the friends of truth owe him a lasting debt of gratitude for his splendid achievements in that line.

But I come now to notice one of the chief things in his remarkable life and character. He was not only an active and persistent worker himself in the kingdom of God, but perhaps his main forte was his tact and remarkable success in getting others to work. He was a past master in dealing with young people and in putting them to work, and he never failed to win their affections. They were frequently as devoted to him as if he had been their father or brother. When he met with the accident before mentioned, hosts of them crowded around him and seemed ready to give their all to help him. To them he seemed their own possession, and they were ready to make any sacrifice in his behalf. Such a man, of course, could exert only a happy and salutary influence over the people.

Thus a faithful and sainted man of God, loved and admired by thousands of his fellow citizens, has finished his earthly career. He is now free from all handicaps and has joined a host of his coworkers who had preceded him to the heavenly country. "There the wicked cease from troubling; and there the weary are at rest." (Job 3: 17.) In the Patmos vision it was revealed: "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord from henceforth: yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; for their works follow with them." (Rev. 14: 13.) The works of R. B. Neal will follow him and will long tell the eventful story of his life.

"Servant of God, well done;
Rest from thy loved employ;
The battle fought, the victory won,
Enter thy Master's joy."

THE COVENANT MADE WITH ABRAHAM.

BY F. B. SRYGLEY.

I am in receipt of the following letter from a friend and brother in Mississippi:

Dear Brother Srygley: My home is in a Methodist nest, and I have quite a tilt with them at times, so I desire a little help on the covenant question. They claim, in order to sustain their theory of infant baptism, that the law of Moses was abolished, and not the Abrahamic covenant. I want you, through the Gospel Advocate, to show that the covenant made with Abraham was renewed with Isaac, Jacob, and Moses, and the whole thing went out together. I cannot quite marshal all the scripture in an argumentative way. Give me your whole argument.

It is all right to "have quite a tilt" with the Methodists at times, provided the brother means by this that he and his Methodist friends talk over the teaching of the Bible in order to learn more about it; but if he means that the Methodists study the Bible in order to prove infant baptism and he studies it to beat them in the argument, then perhaps they could both do better.

The brother says: "I want you, through the Gospel Advocate, to show that the covenant made with Abraham was renewed with Isaac, Jacob, and Moses, and the whole thing went out together." I do not believe I can show that the Bible teaches any such thing. If the brother will read carefully the covenant made with Abraham, he will see that there were several promises made to him, and one of them refers to Christ; and instead of that promise being abolished by Christ, it was established by him and fulfilled in him. At the call of Abraham and before he reached Canaan, God said to him: "Get thee out of thy country, and from thy kindred, and from thy father's house, unto a land that I shall show thee: and I will make of thee a great nation, and I will bless thee, and make thy name great; and be thou a blessing: and I will bless them that bless thee, and him that curseth thee will I curse: and in thee shall all the families of the earth'be blessed." 12: 1-3.) The last promise was not abolished in Christ, but fulfilled by him. God fulfilled the first of these promises in fleshly Israel, but the last was fulfilled by Christ. Fleshly Israel grew out of the first promise and spiritual Israel out of the last one. Paul explains this matter when he says: "For it is written, that Abraham had two sons, the one by a bondmaid, the other by a freewoman. But he who was of the bondwoman was born after the flesh; but he of the freewoman was by promise. Which things are an allegory: for these are the two covenants: the one from the mount Sinai, which gendereth to bondage, which is Agar. For this Agar is mount Sinai in Arabia, and answereth to Jerusalem which now is, and is in bondage with her children. But Jerusalem which is above is free, which is the mother of us all." (Gal. 4: 22-26.) passage makes it clear that there were two covenants made with Abraham, or two promises out of which the two covenants grew. To show what became of one of these covenants, the apostle further says: "Nevertheless what saith the scripture? Cast out the bondwoman and her son: for the son of the bondwoman shall not be heir with the son of the freewoman." (Verse 30.) This shows what became of the promise made to Abraham, which was fulfilled in the nation of Israel and the law of Moses.

If the brother will study the New Testament carefully, he will be able to see that much is said in that book about the promise made to Abraham, which was the promise of a Redeemer. It is found in these words: "In thee and in thy seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed." On the day of Pentecost, Peter said: "For the promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call." (Acts 2: When God made the promise to Abraham that all the families of the earth should be blessed through his seed, he said nothing about the conditions upon which he would bless them; but when he gave the commission to the apostles, he stated to them the conditions upon which he would bless the families of the earth. As recorded by Matthew, Jesus said: "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in [or, into] the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost." 28: 19.) That "Methodist nest" ought to be able to see that, according to this commission, only the taught are to be baptized. But the commission as recorded by Mark reads: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned." (Mark 16: 15, 16.) Every "nest" ought to be able to see that this language teaches that only believers should be baptized. This is the fulfillment of the promise made to Abraham when God said to him: "In thee and in thy seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed." This commission embraces the world, and so did that last promise made to Abraham. "And this I say, that the covenant, that was confirmed before of God in Christ, the law, which was four hundred and thirty years after, cannot disannul, that it should make the promise of none effect. For if the inheritance be of the law, it is no more of promise: but God gave it to Abraham by promise. Wherefore then serveth the law? It was added because of transgressions, till the seed should come to whom the promise was made; and it was ordained by angels in the hand of a mediator." (Gal. 3: 17-19.) The law was added to what? To the promise made to Abraham: "In thee and in thy seed shall all the families of the earth be When, therefore, the law was abolished, only the promise remained. While God promised Abraham that he would bless all the families of the earth through Christ, he said nothing to Abraham about the condition; but in the New Testament the conditions are clearly laid "Wherefore the law was our schoolmaster to bring us unto Christ, that we might be justified by faith. But after that faith is come, we are no longer under a schoolmaster. For ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus. For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ. There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female: for ye are all one in Christ Jesus. And if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise." (Verses 24-29.) This ought to show that "nest" or any other "nest" that.

though the old covenant contained infants, the heirs now according to the promise must have faith and be baptized into Christ and be Christ's. But Paul says again: "Now if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his." (Rom. 8: 9.) Then, in order to be Christ's, one must believe in Christ, be baptized into Christ, and have the Spirit of Christ. "And they that are Christ's have crucified the flesh with the affections and lusts." 24.) All these things put the covenant of Christ out of the reach of infants. "Ye are the children of the prophets, and of the covenant which God made with our fathers, saying unto Abraham, And in thy seed shall all the kindreds of the earth be blessed. Unto you first God. having raised up his Son Jesus, sent him to bless you, in turning away every one of you from his iniquities." 3: 25, 26.) While there was nothing said to Abraham about repentance, this passage clearly shows that, in order to be blessed according to the promise made to Abraham, one must repent, or turn away from his iniquities. In order, then, to be blessed according to the promise made to Abraham, one must believe in Christ, repent (or turn from sin), and be baptized into Christ, and live the life of a Christian. It is evident that infants cannot do these things, and are, therefore, not subjects of gospel address. Infants are not saved by the gospel, but they are safe without it.

I hope these few passages will be satisfactory to my friend and to all the "nest."

WHAT IS THE INTENDED APPLICATION? BY F. W. SMITH.

Under the heading, "Parable of a Cruel Parent," the Christian-Evangelist of July 30 has the following:

The kingdom of heaven (in some congregations) is like unto a householder and parent with many children whom he is under obligation to support, seeing they are his own and dependent, and working in his fields. But in the course of time some of these children, in disobedience, grew to have ideas of their own how best to till the fields, which they did, producing abundant crops for their master.

Albeit this pleased not the householder, who said unto himself: "I know what I will do! I will summarily punish these my disobedient and willful children by withholding my sustenance and support [their living] from my entire family [innocent, helpless, obedient, and disobedient alike], until all suffer together for what is justly due them from my increase. Moreover, I will adopt others, alien children, to whom I will give my support, while I leave my own family to starve and die, because, forsooth, some of my children seem willful and disobedient to my own way of thinking."

Moral: Let him that thinketh, think like I do, if he wants my consent to live and work for my Master. (Contributed.)

To whom or what the Evangelist intended the above to apply is left to the conjecture of its readers based upon the parenthetical phrase, "in some congregations." Does this apply to the God-appointed elders in congregations whose business it is to oversee, or to lead and guide, the churches; or does it apply to some self-constituted dictator in the person of either man or woman? Lastly, is the Evangelist covertly criticizing the Christian Standard for its refusal to support the ecclesiasticism known as the "United Christian Missionary Society?"

Perhaps the Evangelist is striking at the "pastors" who have "charge" (?) of the churches which refuse to raise money for the society, or to encourage their membership to do as they formerly did. Confessedly this "parable" is exceedingly difficult to figure out; and as there seems to be a number of legitimate suppositions regarding the intended application of it, some of these will be noticed.

GOD-APPOINTED ELDERS.

1. That the congregations of the New Testament had a class of men (not women) who were termed "elders" cannot be successfully denied. "Paul and Timothy, servants of Christ Jesus, to all the saints in Christ Jesus that are at Philippi, with the bishops and deacons." (Phil. 1: 1.)

- 2. These men were divinely appointed to a certain work in the congregation. "And when they had appointed for them elders in every church, and had prayed with fasting, they commended them to the Lord, on whom they had believed." (Acts 14: 23.)
- 3. The duties of these elders are clearly defined in the word of God: "For this cause left I thee in Crete, that thou shouldest set in order the things that were wanting, and appoint elders in every city, as I gave thee charge; if any man is blameless, the husband of one wife, having children that believe, who are not accused of riot or unruly. For the bishop must be blameless, as God's steward; not self-willed, not soon angry, no brawler, no striker, not greedy of filthy lucre; but given to hospitality, a lover of good, sober-minded, just, holy, self-controlled; holding to the faithful word which is according to the teaching, that he may be able both to exhort in the sound doctrine, and to convict the gainsayers. For there are many unruly men, vain talkers and deceivers, specially they of the circumcision, whose mouths must be stopped; men who overthrow whole houses, teaching things which they ought not, for filthy lucre's sake." (Tit. 1: 5-10.)
- 4. These elders, or bishops, had the oversight of the churches, and those under their rule were commanded to obey them. "Obey them that have the rule over you, and submit to them: for they watch in behalf of your souls, as they that shall give account; that they may do this with joy, and not with grief: for this were unprofitable for you." (Heb. 13: 17.)
- 5. These elders were not to lord it over God's heritage, but be gentle and Christlike in their work. "The elders which are among you I exhort, who am also an elder, and a witness of the sufferings of Christ, and also a partaker of the glory that shall be revealed: feed the flock of God which is among you, taking the oversight thereof, not by constraint, but willingly; not for filthy lucre, but of a ready mind; neither as being lords over God's heritage, but being ensamples to the flock. And when the chief Shepherd shall appear, ye shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away." (1 Pet. 5: 1-4.)
- 6. That this class of men are to continue in the churches until the end of time is as clearly taught as that they ever existed, and to oppose them in the faithful discharge of their duty is rebellion against God. Does the Evangelist mean for these men to be set aside by the whims of disgruntled and unruly members?

THE STANDARD VS. THE EVANGELIST.

The Christian-Evangelist has no settled or fixed policy, but has its sails set to catch every popular breeze. It advocates everything in religion except the teaching of the New Testament. It favors the destructive critics, and is an avowed advocate of "open membership" and the champion of the most modern ecclesiasticism.

The Christian Standard is the width of the heavens from the Evangelist in the things mentioned, and does have a fixed policy to which it tenaciously clings.

The Standard opposes the destructive critics and open membership and very stoutly clings to New Testament teaching on the terms of membership in the kingdom of God. It has also repudiated the "United Christian Missionary Society" and is advocating the congregational independence of the New Testament, holding that the local church is the only missionary society approved of God.

If the Christian Standard will take one more stepnamely, repudiate and oppose instrumental music in the worship—it will be solidly on New Testament ground. Until it does take this step it cannot consistently plead for Christian unity.

THE MORAL OF THE PARABLE.

The author of the parable under consideration kindly favors us with a "moral," as follows: "Let him that thinketh, think like I do, if he wants my consent to live and work for my Master." A saying of holy writ is in order: "Physician, heal thyself." Why does not the Evangelist work with the Standard? Is it not because the Standard does not "think" like the Evangelist does?

But, after all, what does the thinking of any man in religious matters amount to, if he does not think as the Eible teaches? Unless all men, when it comes to religion, think as the Bible teaches, how can the following scripture be obeyed: "Now I beseech you, brethren, by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye all speak the same thing, and that there be no divisions among you; but that ye be perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment." (1 Cor. 1: 10.)

Poor old Evangelist! "Everything in general (except the truth) and naught in particular" is its motto.

MAKING TOO MUCH OF DIFFERENCES. No. 3. BY E. A. ELAM.

That wise and good men have differed and still do differ in opinions and judgment in regard to some things does not justify factions, divisions, and estrangements. Certainly differences do not justify unkind and hard speech. He is a narrow and unwise man who cannot work with those who do not accept all his opinions, theories, crotchets, and conclusions.

The Lord emphatically declares that nothing should be done "through faction or through vainglory, but in lownness of mind" each should count "other better than himself; not looking each . . . to his own things [his own abilities, selfish interests, and welfare], but each . . . also to the things [abilities, interests, and welfare] of others." (Phil. 2: 3-5.) On this same point, in Rom. 12: 3, 16, Paul teaches that no man should think more highly of himself than should be done, should not be wise in his own conceits, but should be humble, condescending "to things that are lowly."

The spiritual welfare, the unity and peace, and the greatest good of the church in all the world must be the earnest consideration and devout prayer of all the children of God. This must be done at the sacrifice of personal interest, comfort, welfare, and pride of opinion.

I do not know how to impress this teaching except to say that it is the teaching of the Lord. This the Lord says, and it must be observed because he says it. If brethren—professed followers of Christ and teachers of others—will not hear and obey this teaching and will not endeavor to escape the fearful punishment of disobedience in pressing their theories, opinions, preferences, judgments, etc., then there is nothing more to be offered or that can be done. When the word of God fails to reach and move brethren, we have to fail. If they cannot be reached by the word of God, there is no power in heaven, on earth, or beneath the earth, that can reach and move them; for if they will not hear the word of God, they would not hear though one rise from the dead. "Ephraim is joined to his idols; let him alone."

It is indeed grievous to hear sermons by brethren and to read articles by them on the word of God as their only rule of faith and practice, when they neither believe nor practice the word of God in regard to strife, vainglory, divisions over theories and speculations, asking forgiveness of one another, making reparation for wrongs done others; or in regard to humility, forgiveness, forbearance, Christian love, etc. "For many walk, of whom I told you often, and now tell you even weeping, that they are the enemies of the cross of Christ: whose end is perdition, whose god is the belly, and whose glory is in their shame, who mind earthly things." (Phil. 3: 18, 19.) No wonder the great-hearted Paul wept over the distressing fact that many brethren were so living as to make themselves enemies of the cross or gospel of Christ! We have heard brethren say of certain things, "That is enough to make the angels weep." But if brethren on earth would weep more over the contentious, bitterness, and divisions, which, it may be, some of them are causing and feeding, it would do far more good than to talk about angels weeping. To study that which Jesus teaches in regard to peace—"blessed are the peacemakers;" "the bond of peace;" "follow after peace with all men;" "as much as in you lieth, be at peace with all men;" "seek peace, and pursue it," "follow after things which make for peace;" etc.;—to strive to bring about harmony, good will, and peace; to pray for such a glorious consummation, and yet to fail because all are not ready to obey God, produces great grief and draws bitter tears from the faithful and true followers of "the Prince of Peace."

Comparatively speaking, every strife stirrer, faction producer, division causer, and peacebreaker, is, in his own estimation, as innocent as an angel, a devout lover of peace, a deplorer of all disturbances, and is ever ready to defend his own course, because he has done all this work of Satan in faithfulness (!) to Christ and in loyalty (!) to the truth. Some are experts in disturbing the peace of congregations, in causing factions, and in withdrawing then from the field of action in perfect satisfaction with their victory, leaving the innocent to weep and suffer and bleed over the destruction wrought.

Let us study the following passages:

Now I beseech you, brethren, mark them that are causing the divisions and occasions of stumbling, contrary to the doctrine [teaching] which ye learned: and turn away from them. For they that are such serve not our Lord Christ, but their own belly; and by their smooth and fair speech they beguile the hearts of the innocent. (Rom. 16: 17, 18.)

These sins and such sinful teachers existed in Rome, as well as with us now, or Paul would not have taught so emphaically against them.

By the tenderness and power of the gospel these appeals were made to brethren to obey this passage. They come to us with the same force.

Realizing the enormity of these sins, we feel more fully the force of the command to "mark" and to "turn away" from these sinful teachers. To "mark" them means to observe them closely and to note their movements so as to be able to distinguish them from true teachers of the gospel.

These were false teachers, as the passage shows. There have always been false teachers—wolves in sheep's clothing. "Beware."

These teachers did two things: (1) caused divisions or separation into parties; (2) caused some to stumble—that is, to fall away from obedience to the teaching of Christ.

Jude (verse 19) speaks of some "who make separations, sensual, having not the Spirit." Paul (Rom. 14: 21) says: "It is good not to eat flesh, nor to drink wine, nor to do anything whereby thy brother stumbleth"—that is, falls into disobedience to God.

"Contrary to the doctrine which ye learned" means any teaching contrary to the gospel or teaching of Christ. This teaching was learned through Paul, and is learned now by us through the inspired apostles. There is no other source from which to learn it. When the gospel of Christ separates those who obey it from those who do not, this division is right and must exist. But any teaching which is contrary to that of Christ is wrong. All who cause divisions, separation into parties, by any teaching on any questions which God says should be avoided, or any teaching which is contrary to that of Christ, are condemned by this and other passages. Such divisions, too, are contrary to Christ's teaching on harmony, good will, unity, and peace.

"Turn away from them" means to avoid them, to withdraw from them, to reject them, lest their association and teaching corrupt others or the whole church. "A factious man after a first and second admonition refuse; knowing that such a one is perverted, and sinneth, being self-condemned." (Tit. 3: 10.) One who claims to teach the word of God, and yet will not practice it in striving to obey it, in keeping down strife and factions or in anything else, is self-condemned.

Such teachers have no love for Christ or regard for his teaching; if so, they would not pursue such a course. All they teach and do in religious service is not to advance the cause of Christ; for they serve "their own belly"—that is, they seek their own ease, comfort, and selfish ends; seek to feed and to enrich themselves; and seek to gratify their own appetites and lusts, and to satisfy their own vanity and worldly ambitions.

To make this known as their true motive would be to defeat forever their unholy purpose; hence, they come with "smooth and fair speech." They wear an assumed politeness and gracious manner; they fawn and flatter and promise much; they affect great learning, and, indeed, may be well educated, and their words are as smooth as butter and as sweet as honey, but they eat as a gangrenous sore. They don the livery of heaven in which to serve Satan. With such blandishment "they beguile the hearts of the innocent"—the guileless and unsuspecting, the sincere and true. The business world is more or less acquainted with the blarney of men who represent bogus schemes to obtain money. But "the sons of this world are for their own generation wiser than the sons of light."

God has given all teaching necessary to acquaint the church with all schemes and all schemers in matters of religion; also, with all dangers of being self-deceived and of being deceived by others. "Be not deceived." Paul was once deceived (Tit. 3: 3), and persecuted the church and did all in his power against the truth in all good conscience. Afterwards he spoke of others who were deceived and were deceivers of others. "But evil men and impostors shall wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived." (2 Tim. 3: 13.) The man who is deceived believes that all his theories and notions are the truth of God, as Paul verily believed that he ought to do many things contrary to the name of Jesus. We should gladly accept God's warnings against such teaching and teachers and thank him for giving the true test of false teachers.

BY T. B. LARIMORE.

A good brother in Christ whose wishes and judgment I appreciate, as also his friendship and brotherly love, requests me to republish the story of one of my personal experiences published years ago and frequently related and referred to. Not having access to the published account, I must write from memory, but I think I can write the story accurately.

I was on the Pacific Coast, in California, June 7, 1909, expecting to remain there three weeks longer, and had so written W. R. King, my personal and very special friend in Denver, Col. Brother King was a lawyer of recognized ability and integrity whose home was in Lawrenceburg, Tenn., but who was temporarily living in Denver because of failing health.

The very day I wrote Brother King I would be in California three weeks longer, I decided to start home, and did so without notifying any one of my change of program. At the Antlers Hotel, near the foot of Pike's Peak, early in the morning, June 9, I tried to get a good view of the Peak, but could not, as somber clouds enveloped it. I had decided to stand on its summit that day, however, and I did, regardless of the gloom. Accordingly, my daughter Ettie and I and a few others—seven, all told—paid our fare at the foot of the famous peak and soon stood on its top.

As we stepped from the car that carried us up the mountain, a man who was interestedly waiting for us led us to a near-by tower about forty feet high, crying: "Right this way to the highest tower in the world! Right this way to the highest tower in the world!"—relieving each of us of twenty-five cents at the foot of the tower and then permitting us to climb it. Almost immediately after we reached the top of the tower, I said: "You can all stay here as long as you wish, but I'm not interested. I'm going to walk out to the brow of the mountain toward Denver and see if I can see anything that looks like a city."

Asking no questions and knowing no direction but upand down, heavy clouds enveloping the scene and obscuring the sun, I did walk to the brow of the mountain and look, as the sequel subsquently showed, directly toward Denver, but could see no semblance of the city seventy miles away. As I stood there, silent and alone, on the icy brow of that towering mountain peak, the cloud suddenly parted, rolling back to my right and my left, and the unobstructed rays of the sun converted the mountain top of ice and snow into a world of glittering glory. Looking toward Denver and thinking of my friend there, I resolved to send him a telegram advising him that we would be in his home that afternoon; so, after a few moments. I turned and walked away-walked into the one and only house there, the telegraph office, prepared a telegram and handed it to the operator, who sent it immediately.

When my daughter and I reached Brother King's home that afternoon, he told me he was sitting on his front porch facing the Peak that day, as he did every day, between twelve and one o'clock. He felt disappointed, he said, because the clouds were so dense around the Peak that he could not see it at all; but suddenly the clouds were rifted, the sun in all its glory shone down on the mountain top, and he clapped his hands and cried out: "O, I see Brother Larimore standing on Pike's Peak!" Then he said to the members of his family who, hearing his outcry, had come to him: "No. it couldn't have been Brother Larimore. He has too much sense to go up on Pike's Peak this sultry summer day. But I never saw him more plainly in my life. He walked straight toward me a few steps, stood there a moment or two, and then walked away, as if he had a purpose in view." Then, looking at his watch, he said: "It's 12:50. I've been out here long enough." And he went into the house.

In a short time he received a telegram from me, dated "Pike's Peak, 12:56"—just a few minutes later than it was when he saw me "turn and walk away" from where I stood on the Peak. In talking this singular occurrence over, and, later, in a letter he wrotone relative to it, he frankly said: "I do not understand how I saw you. Not simply with natural vision, of course; for, if you had been sixty feet tall and ten feet wide, you wouldn't have looked larger than a toothpick on Pike's Peak. But I never saw you more plainly in my life than I saw you then and there."

I have no theory to suggest as to the source or meaning of the strange experience I have just related, neither have I of the following: A sudden break came in my prearranged line of appointments, leaving a vacancy of about ten days. That very day a letter from a Brother Ramey, of whom I had never heard, reached me, calling me to Lafayette, Ga., to preach "three weeks, two weeks, one week, one day, or just one discourse, at any time that suits you," the letter said. "We simply want to hear you."

We had neither of us ever heard of Brother Ramey, and the letter gave us no information about him except his name. About three o'clock the next morning I said to Mrs. Larimore: "I want to tell you what kind of a looking man Brother Ramey is, and I want you to put down every point exactly as I tell you, for it's just that way." "Have you had a vision?" she asked. "No." "A dream?" "No, but I want you to put it down just as I tell it to you—every point—for it is just as I tell you." Then I proceeded to describe Brother Ramey, even to the minutest detail. At the end of the description I said: "And he's about thirty-seven years old."

We wrote Brother Ramey that we would give Lafayette the time unexpectedly left vacant. The evening we reached Lafayette, our train and a long excursion train met there, and there were many people on the long platform. I didn't see Brother Ramey, so I said to Mrs. Larimore: "You stay here, and I'll hunt Brother Ramey." I made my way through that crowd, from end to end of the long platform, but failed to find him; then, looking about, I saw him a few yards away. I went to him and said: "Brother Ramey, this is Brother Larimore." He took us to his home, and before I took the seat he offered me, I said, "How old are you, Brother Ramey?" and he said: "I'll be thirty-seven years old one month from to-day!"

While that meeting continued, I sat at Brother Ramey's elbow at the dining table three times a day; and when the meeting closed and we reluctantly said good-by, Mrs. Larimore said to me: "You couldn't describe Brother Ramey more accurately now than you did before you ever saw him!"

ON CERTAIN GENTLEMEN IN BONDAGE.

No more remarkable examples of the triumph of the human will over adversity can be found than the lives of famous slaves. History records many of them and speaks of poets, philosophers, and authors, men distinguished in many fields, who were included among their number. There have been great rulers, military leaders, and statesmen who rose from slavery and who made significant and important contributions to human progress.

Among the slaves of ancient times, the fable teller Æsop is probably the most celebrated and best known. Scholars have not been wanting who have doubted the very existence of such a personage. But if myth he was, Æsop was as much a real person in spirit as was Homer. The popular version of his life relates that he was born a slave in Samos in the seventh century B.C., and that he gained his freedom through his remarkable ability as a narrator of animal stories. He is mentioned by Herodotus and was known to Plato. Numberless fantastic tales have come down to us concerning him, but it is certain that many of the fables attributed to him were inventions of a much later age. The oldest collection of the fables known at the present day, that made by Demetrius of Phalerum, dates only from the fourth century B.C.

Roman history puts us on much more certain ground and furnishes us with accounts of two slaves who became distinguished in widely different fields of achievement. Spartacus, the first of the two, was born in Thrace, and, having been captured at an early age by the Romans, was sent to Capua to be trained as a gladiator. A keen sense of the injustice of slavery, together with his own personal wrongs, drove him in the year 73 B.C. to revolt. No leader in Roman history ever displayed more admirable qualities or loftier ideals. From a small band of perhaps seventy gladiators who had taken refuge with him on Mount Vesuvius his followers grew until they numbered more than one hundred thousand men. The Roman generals sent against him were defeated in several sharp engagements, and for a time Rome itself seemed at his mercy. Instead, however, of attempting to take the city, Spartacus conceived the plan of leading his army of slaves northward past Rome and beyond the borders of the Roman Empire, where they would be free to disband and to return to their homes. Noble as this project was, it was a fatal mistake. The army clamored to be led on the capital, dissensions arose, and Spartacus and nearly his entire army were eventually betrayed and slain in battle. Legend has come down to us which says that before the fighting began the great slave leader stabbed his horse in order that there might be no retreat, a magnificent even if futile gesture.

It is pleasant to record that the second of the great Roman slaves had a much more fortunate career than did the first. The philosopher Epictetus was Greek by birth, but from early childhood he served as a slave in the household of Epaphroditus, one of the courtiers of the Emperor Nero. We are not informed as to how he obtained his freedom; but in the year 90 he had already established a reputation as a teacher and was expelled, along with many other Stoics, by the Emperor Domitian. The remainder of his life was spent at Nicopolis, in Southern Epirus, where he continued his work as a teacher. A third great Roman might be included in the little company of slaves who became famous. The servile origin of Justinian's great general, Narses, has been disputed, but old writers persistently inform us that he was born a slave in Armenia about the year 472. He entered the service of the Eastern Roman emperor at Constantinople, and from one post to another rose until he became treasurer and chamberlain. Sent to Italy to watch the Roman general, Belisarius, whose loyalty was suspected. Narses eventually superseded him in command and in a series of brilliant campaigns drove the Goths from Italy. Thereafter for a number of years he ruled Italy as a province of the empire. The later years of his life are involved in a maze of legend. He was removed from his command by Justinian's successor, and is said to have been insulted by the empress. Tradition represents him as intriguing a short time before his death with the Lombards for the disastrous invasion of Italy which followed shortly upon his withdrawal from the country.

Of the men who rose from slavery to distinction in m dern times, several might be mentioned. The names of Booker T. Washington and of Bishop Samuel Crowther are familiar to every one. The most picturesque career of any modern slave, however, was that of the Haitian dictator, Toussaint L'Ouverture. Born into slavery in 1743, he managed to obtain some education, and in time was made overseer of the plantation of a wealthy French planter. The confusion produced in the government of the island by the French Revolution gave L'Ouverture his opportunity. Through a series of slave revolts he at length succeeded in making himself master of the country and set about to establish a government. Though a dictator in fact, he contented himself with the title of president and for a short time ruled well with a council composed of eight white members and one colored member. Later difficulties with Napoleon brought on a short but decisive civil war which ended in the complete overthrow of the slave leader. The last years of his life were spent in prison in France. The last stand of Toussaint against the French army of thirty thousand men under General Leclerc will always offer an attractive and heroic picture to the historian .-Z. S. Fink, in Christian Advocate.

Happiness consists in living for others; that is clear. Man aspires to happiness; therefore, it is a proper desire. If he tries to get it in a selfish way, in seeking wealth, glory, love, he may not succeed, and his wishes remain unsatisfied. Then it must be selfish desires that are wrong, and not the wish to be happy. Now, what are the dreams which may be realized apart from our outward circumstances? Only love and self-sacrifice.—Tolstoy.

CENTRAL CONGREGATION, NASHVILLE. BY E. H. IJAMS.

Members of the Central church of Christ, Nashville, Tenn., met for the first time on Sunday, October 4. The first meeting was devoted to worship and organization, and was a very significant service because of its simplicity and spirituality. Humility and reverence characterized everything said and done.

The Central congregation is meeting for the present in a residence located on the church property. The buildings which will house the activities of the church later are under construction, but will not be available for sixty or ninety days. In the meantime the congregation will continue to meet in the residence building at 143 Fifth Avenue, North.

The Central congregation is beginning its meetings at this time, in advance of the completion of its buildings, in order "to take heed to itself" and study the all-important subjects of Christian grace and growth. It has planned an extensive program of gospel teaching and preaching, coupled with an equally extensive program of good works. The brethren joining hands and hearts in this work realize that consistent service in the name of Christ requires a high degree of individual Christlike devotion, spiritual-mindedness, and godliness of character. Hence, the Central congregation is resolved to look very carefully to itself, and is making the most of present opportunities to build itself up in spiritual understanding and grace, whereby it can "offer service well pleasing to God with reverence and awe." The present congregation will work and pray for the grace to imitate the apostle Paul, who said: "I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus." Its meetings will be planned with this purpose in view.

The elders of the Central church of Christ are Dr. J. S. Ward, C. E. W. Dorris, J. E. Acuff, and E. H. Ijams. After a prolonged period of study and prayer, these brethren were chosen with the unanimous approval of the congregation. No doubt their selection will be quite generally approved wherever these brethren are known. Dr. Ward was for more than twenty years associated with David Lipscomb and others in the work of the Nashville Bible School and of David Lipscomb College. Brother Acuff is one of the trustees of Burritt College and is well and favorably known as an elder and preacher in the church of Christ. Brother Dorris has contributed many fine articles to the Gospel Advocate during the many years in which he has preached and lived the truth of Christ. Brother Ijams is a member of the present faculty of David Lipscomb College and an experienced teacher. With these loyal and mature brethren as elders, nothing can be expected of the Central church of Christ but unquestioned loyalty and steadfastness to Christian truth and purpose.

The program of work outlined by the Central congregation ought to appeal to the best aspirations of every Christian. It is located in a field of abundant opportunity. It will have in the heart of the city an auditorium in which to hold gospel services every day in the week. Fvery day except Sunday these services will be broadcast by radio station WDAD. The congregation is also preparing to systematically seek the sick and the needy and minister to their necessities. It is also planning to "go teach" the erring and the unsaved and try to bring them to a knowledge of the truth. Daily Bible lessons will be given to all high-school or college students who will attend them in the afternoon after school. Several able Christian teachers have agreed to give night lessons to those who want to prepare for some definite form of Christian service or leadership. In addition to all this, the congregation will try to give constant heed to the language of the great commission, which says: "Go teach all nations." In pursuance of this purpose, the congregation has already taken over in full or in part the support of these brethren laboring in mission fields: C. M. Sitman, Jr., Amite, La.; J. P. Sanders, Jackson, Miss.; W. O. Norton, Hartselle, Ala.; Hugh E. Garrett, Columbus, Ga.; C. W. Landers, Pensacola, Fla.; T. H. Burton, Union, S. C.; J. W. Shepherd, Richmond, Va.; Roy Vaughn, Mississippi; J. A. Hines, Fort Collins, Col.; John Sherriff, South Africa; W. Percy Pittman, North India.

In short, the Central church of Christ proposes to emphasize "doing" the word, as well as "hearing" it, and to make the doing humble, godly, and in every respect consistent with all the teaching of the New Testament. The congregation hopes to show its faith by its work.

Brother A. M. Burton and the other brethren associated with him in undertaking this work have set these high standards of achievement with the clear understanding that they can be accomplished, not with material means or with organization, but only through the personal devotion, sacrifice, and zeal of men and women whose minds and hearts are truly converted to the gospel of Christ. Sustained effort to serve God with works of faith and righteousness must depend on the God-given strength which comes to the sincere, spiritual-minded followers of Christ. Therefore, the members of the Central church of Christ ask the prayers of brethren everywhere to the end that they may, individually and collectively, offer fruitful service to God with reverence and humility. The elders will be glad to have encouragement and counsel from any fellow worker in the vineyard of the Lord. Address any of them at 143 Fifth Avenue, North, Nashville, Tenn.

It is perhaps well for brethren at large to remember that the Central congregation at present has very limited quarters in which to work and worship. Much of the work which it plans to do must be deferred until its buildings and equipment are in place. It cannot at present invite the general public to its services. However, reports of progress will be given out from time to time, and announcements made as rapidly as preparations are made to take up the different phases of the work. In the meantime the Central congregation very earnestly requests the prayers of all God's people.

J. H. Hines, Montgomery, Ala., September 24: "I have just closed a tent meeting in Montgomery. Four souls obeyed the gospel. I visited the church at Excel, Ala., last Sunday. Three were added, one returned to his 'first love,' and two were baptized into Christ.' Alabama is in need of gospel preachers. We like the new song book, 'Choice Gospel Hymns.' Our singing is the best ever."

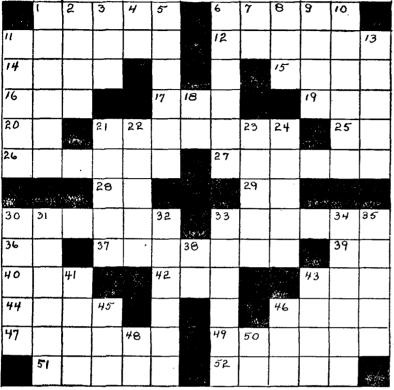

John C. Graham, Chattanooga, Tenn., September 15: "Beginning on August 16, I conducted a meeting of seven nights' duration in Parnell Schoolhouse, near Estelline, Texas. The meeting resulted in twelve baptisms. Charles Dammeron, a student of Abilene Christian College, led the song service. At the close of the meeting a decision was made to meet regularly for worship at the schoolhouse."

Vernon Rozar, Zolfo Springs, Fla., September 22: "Brother Hill, of Avon Park, and J. B. Peden, of Moore Haven, were with us last Lord's day; also brethren and sisters from Jacksonville, Tampa, Bowling Green, Arcadia, and other places. In the afternoon four cars went to Sweetwater, where Brother Peden gave us a splendid talk on the divinity of the Bible. Our crowds are increasing here. Pray for the work here."

W. P. Lowe, 2910 Shelby Street, Indianapolis, Ind., September 24: "The work here on Cruft Street moves on nicely. We have finished the house we bought sometime ago—that is, we have painted, papered, varnished, and cleaned it up—and are now ready for the meeting which is to begin on Sunday, October 4. Services will be held each evening at a quarter to eight o'clock, also at eleven o'clock on Lord's days. If any one who has friends or relatives here will give me their names and addresses, I will look them up. Emmett G. Creacy and Willie Miller, of Horse Cave, Ky., will conduct these meetings. Remember, take a Shelby Street car to Cruft Street, get off at Cruft Street and walk one block east."

CROSS WORD PUZZLE

OF average difficulty is this thirteen-square puzzle, with no words longer than seven spaces and only a few two-letter words to balance the black squares. It can be easily solved, even without a reference book, and with a Bible handy it should be finished in fifteen minutes of law

To work out this puzzle, the white spaces must be filled with letters forming words answering to the various horizontal and vertical definitions given below. The horizontal and vertical words are not the same, but each gives a clue to the other. The first letter of each word is indicated by a number which refers to the definitions listed below.

It is advisable to first fill in, in both directions, those words which you know to be correct. These will furnish hints to those words which you do not know or had merely guessed at. When the puzzle is solved correctly, the letters in the white spaces will spell words both horizontally and vertically. The black spaces are the blind spots of the puzzle and merely form the pattern, incidentally designating the ends and beginnings of the words contained in the puzzle.

THE NEED IN EAST TENNESSEE. BY THOMAS J. WAGNER.

Sometime ago I gave a brief report of our mission meeting at Spring City, in which Brother F. L. Paisley wielded the "old Ierusalem blade" with great force, and during which two or three who were formerly affiliated with the "digressives" took their stand with five or six more who had come from various places to Spring City, and, finding no church of the New Testament order, had been meeting with some of the sectarian bodies. Besides these, over thirty were baptized.

My purpose for writing at this time is to mention some facts connected with the meeting which will surely be of interest to the readers of the Gospel Advocate who are interested in real mission work.

First, I mention the fact that there had never been a gospel sermon preached in Spring City by our brethren, if I am correctly informed; but the people heard the word gladly. Our crowds increased steadily from the first, so that it became necessary to take two spells making seats on the outside of the tent, until about three hundred could be seated on the outside. Most of the time these seats were all filled, and cars parked all around the tent were also filled with people. I mention this to suggest to the readers the idea that people who have never heard the gospel unmixed with humanism hear it gladly and respond to the call when convinced that it is truly the word of the Lord. There are hundreds of towns in East Tennessee alone which have never heard the gospel.

I never knew so many old people to respond to the call. One man eightytwo years old was baptized, one seventy-nine, two women about that old, and a number over sixty. Most of those baptized were men and women of families.

Those people are meeting each Lord's day for worship. There is no one at present who can take the lead in the services; so Dayton and Chattanooga are cooperating with us in sending a man each Lord's day to help them. They are meeting at private houses at present.

I pray God to send more laborers into the vineyard. I make this suggestion to those churches who have preachers located with them: If you want to do some mission work, write me that during the coming year you are willing to release your preacher from local work and support him while he comes to this virgin field of East Tennessee and assists us in a meeting of two or three weeks' duration. Don't wait until you forget it, but take the matter up with the congregation and write me at once, and we will make proper arrangements.

TENNESSEE ORPHAN HOME NEWS.

BY J. W. FRY.

The Tennessee Orphan Home, like others, feels the effect of the severe drought and has experienced lean months. We know those who fellowship the Home are likewise affected by the drought, and we trust others interested in the welfare of dependent children not heretofore fellowshiping our work, as well as those who have been irregular in doing so, will now take part in helping us to catch up.

Forty-seven children are attending the city public schools; twenty-six not of school age. We are sending one girl to the State Deaf and Dumb School, one to the State Blind School. one to the Tennessee Industrial School, one to the Fanning Orphan School, and one to Harding College, Morrillton, Ark. One eighteen-yearold girl, a graduate from a hygienic beauty culture school, will take a position next month in the beauty department of the Castner-Knott Dry Goods Company, in Nashville. The total number is seventy-nine. Since June 1, last, thirty-seven children have been received into the Home and thirty-eight have been placed. Several children are on the waiting list, to be admitted as soon as room can be made for them. All our children in the city public schools and those we are sending to other schools have the school spirit for acquiring an education, and we believe they will make good. All in the Home are enjoying good health. At the last annual meeting the number of directors of the Home was increased. The followingnamed brethren guide the destiny of the Tennessee Orphan Home: Dr. S. T. Hardison, W. D. Fox, George W. Johnson, Oury Harris, R. O. Elliott. S. F. Morrow, H. P. Lucas, J. C. Lawson, J. #### From the Brethren

Lake City, Fla., September 30.— From July 1 to September 30 I labored for the Lord at Trenton, Lake bored for the Lord at Trenton, Lake Butler, Oxford, Ocala, and Live Oak. While much of this work seemed fruitless, yet some of it has born fruit to the glory of God by visible results, and we hope that some seed has fallen into good ground that will yet spring up and be manifest in the judgment. Among the visible results, one man has gone forth preaching the word with a zeal for God and for the salvation of souls. Brethren, let's go to the work of saving souls more go to the work of saving souls more earnestly than ever before.-J. O. Barnes.

Berry, Ala., September 24.—The Alabama Power Plant people at Gorgas built a church house and gave it to all people that would preach each month. So the Baptists, Meth-odists, and the church of Christ each have a day. We have only about six members to carry on the work. They asked me to do their monthly work. They secured Brother C. R. Nichol last year for a meeting. This year they secured Brother C. E. Wooldridge, of Dallas, Texas, as he is to be near them in Navambar. The Por near them in November. The Baptists are not agreed among themselves and the Methodists are almost dead, and I think it an opportune time to teach the truth there. So I am asking you to aid us in taking on the work. Send your remittance to Louis Underwood, Gorgas, Ala. Just before sending your remittance, I ask you to read 2 Cor. 9: 7.—Frank Baker.

Granby, Mo., September 22.—I began my protracted-meeting work on the first Sunday in June and will close it on the last Sunday in November. I have conducted meetings as follows: The first half of June, at Highland, Ark., four baptisms; June 28 to July 12, Hugo, Okla., twelve additions; July 12-26, Konawa, Okla., twelve additions; August 2-9, at home (this meeting was to have continued until August 16, but, due to sickness and death of mother, I had to close); August 16-30, Albion, Okla., two baptisms; September 6-20, Rocky Comfort, Mo., one baptism. I am now at Star Church, near Granby, with good prospects for a good meeting, and will be here until the first Sunday in October I whill be in Sunday and will be here until the first sunday in October. I shall begin on October 11 at Garfield, Ark., and continue until October 25; November 15-29, Helena, Okla. On December 7 I am to debate with W. C. Toler (Baptist) at Highland, Ark. On December 15 I shall meet D. B. Scott (Baptist) at Darwin, Okla.—Will M. Thompson.

Inola, Inola, Okla., September 18.—We had a six-nights' discussion at the Gregory Schoolhouse, beginning on September 12 and closing last night. The disputants were T. J. Marrs, of Dale, Okla., representing the so-called "Church of God." and Brother Paul E. Gorbet, of Leonard, Okla. The propositions discussed were: (1) "The Holy Scriptures teach that it is the duty of all Christians to meet and working of Saturday, the sevent and worship on Saturday, the seventh day of the week." T. J. Marrs affirmed. (2) "The Holy Scriptures teach that it is the duty of all Chris-Brother Gorbet used the Bible only, and showed that all the outside stuff they brought in was infidelity; and his powerful speeches, with his de-portment as a Christian gentleman, won for him the respect of all the people. Mr. Marrs asked the priv-ilege of preaching in the schoolhouse one night, and the whole audience one night, and the whole audience turned him down.—J. S. Yocham.

Dickson, Tenn., September 22.—I closed at Hebron, near Joppa, Ala., Sunday night, with five baptized, two restored, and one from the Baptists claiming gospel obedience. There was good interest throughout the eight days. This was my first visit to this days. This was my first visit to this church in twenty-two years. Many who were there then have crossed to "the other side." Brother R. N. Moody and his estimable wife were with us four days. His presence was of much help to me. His son, Brother B. F. Moody, lives near this place, and helped much in the meeting. It is alhelped much in the meeting. It is always a pleasure to have my preaching by ethren in a meeting. We were also cheered and encouraged by Brother M. A. Creel, of Cullman, Ala., one day. My next meeting will be in Largo, Fla. Then, if arrangements are perfected, I am to engage in an eight-days' debate near Carrollton, Miss., with Mr. R. L. Jackson, Second Adventist, on the state of the dead, the punishment of the wicked, and the establishment of the kingdom. I will close my present engagements will close my present engagements with a meeting at Hodges, Ala., where I recently had a four-days' dwith Ben M. He is about as shrewd a man as they have, and capable of darkening counsel very effectively if some one is not present to expose his false reasoning. I would like to meet him one time more where a debate is needed.

Blytheville, Ark., September 12.-A brief report of my summer's work may be helpful to the congregations where I labored. I began at Crosno, Mo., the first Lord's day in July. Brother Boyd recently moved into this community, and, not being satisfied with conditions, mustered up a few feeble brethren and went to work. I assisted them a few days, with very good results. Next we held two short meetings near Blytheville, with fairly good results, using the Methodist and Baptist meetinghouses These are our regular mis-ints. The next meeting was lacon, Miss. This meeting none). sion points. near Macon, Miss. This meeting called for another next year. Among others, we baptized a Methodist preacher and his family. I then went to Berea, a congregation near Fayette, Ala. This was a good meet-Fayette, Ala. This was a good meeting, too. The interest was good. People were turned away for lack of room. I went next to Bishop, Ala. There were no visible results, but quite a number in the community and adjoining communities have obeyed the Lord since the meeting. The last meeting was at Gilt Edge, Tenn. When we began there, the officers of the law began to arrest men for bootlegging, and some of the violators were my brethren. I am well pleased with this part of my summer's work. I did all in my power to build up the congregations and induce men and women to become Christians. I am greatly pleased with the Gospel Advo-Brethren Allen, Elam, and Billingsley have said some things that need to be said. We must exalt the standard of Christianity.—O. C. Dobbs.

McQuiddy.)
- "It is a pleasure to write a word of commendation of Brother Elam's Notes on Bible School Lessons. They are the product of one who has given the greater part of his life to the study and teaching of God's Word. They are true to the Bible, comprehensive, and scholarly. If you love the truth, you will be delighted to study with him these wonderful lessons" (A. G. Fresd.)
- "Brother E. A. Elam's Notes, as published annually, is, in my judgment, scriptural and the best thing of its kind I have ever seen or that is published to day Everybody ought to have a copy and preserve it for study and reference. Brother Elam's twenty-five years' work, if every year should be bound in a separate volume, the twenty-five volumes would be a great addition to any library. (C. M. Pullias.)
- "At the Central church of Christ in Fort Worth we have been using in our Bible school Elam's Notes and other literature of his. For a great number of years the writer of this has felt that Brother Elam was one of the best-prepared men in the brotherhood for the preparation of such literature. His Notes, in our best judgment, represent, or reflect, the best efforts he has ever made as a teacher in our Bible School, I have very great pleasure in indorsing his Notes To the extent that an expression of our views is of value, I assure you we are very pleased to give it" (J. G. Wilkinson.)

  "I have used Elam's Quarterlies for years
- pleased to give it" (J. G. Wilkinson.)

  "I have used Elam's Quarterlies for years
  They are superior to any that I have seen.
  Elam's Notes on Bible School Lessons are much fuller than they. They give the historical setting as to time and place that is needed and valuable. They give so many scriptural citations and references—Scriptures that introduce the text or corroborate the text—that the average student may know the geography, the history, and the full meaning of the lesson They give so many lessons, deducted from the copious citations of Scriptures, that the student may know more perfectly God's will. For years
  I have used Peloubet's Select Notes. I cempare them weekly. I do not hesitate to say that Elam's Notes are infinitely superior, if you want to know the Bible." (C. F. Holt.)

EVOLUTION.

BY H. J. PHILLIPS.

The world to a great extent has gone wild over the evolution theory. "And God said, Let the earth bring forth the living creature after his kind, cattle, and creeping things, and beast of the earth after his kind: and it was so. And God made the beast of the earth after his kind, and cattle after their kind, and everything that creepeth upon the earth after his kind." (Gen. 1. 24, 25.) So God created every animal to continue after its kind. If the monkey broke the laws of nature and turned to man, then every other animal that God made should turn to something else. cattle, the horse, the bird, the fishes. etc., should all turn to some other animal, fowl, or fish. If the animal laws have changed, the same would be true in the law of vegetation. Our wheat might have once been cucumbers; our corn, watermelons: etc.

The Bible teaches man all he knows about creation. "And God said. Let us make man in our image, after our likeness: and let them have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over the cattle, and over all the earth, and over every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth." (Gen. 1: 26.) "So God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him: male and female created he them." (Verse 27.) "And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nestrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul." (Gen. 2: 7.) This is what the word of God tells us about creating man, or the creation of mankind. I believe just what the Book teaches us on this subject. The very minute I disbelieve this, I will not believe any other part of the word of God.

Now, just a few questions that I have never been able to get any man to answer on this subject. If monkey turned to man, when did this first happen? When did the monkey family cease turning to man? Why did not all monkeys turn to men? When will man evolve into some other being or animal? Why does the evolution law work so slowly? Man has been man nearly seven thousand years. If man came from the monkey, what did the monkey come from?

Man has always tried to change God's laws, but God's law shall stand forever. No man has any right to change one word of the teaching found in the Bible. If God did not create man a living soul and in his likeness, then the whole Bible is a fable. As for me and my house, we will serve the Lord, and not the teachings of man.

From the Brethren

Celina, Tenn., September 24.—On the fourth Lord's day in July I began a meeting at Arcot Schoolhouse, in Clay County, which resulted in three restorations. On the second Lord's day in August I began at New Hope, Clay County. The meeting resulted in twenty-three additions—seventeen baptisms and six restorations. This congregation had ceased to meet, but they are now meeting on Lord's days. On the fourth Lord's day in August I began with the Beech Bethany congregation, in Clay County. There were nine additions—seven baptisms and two restorations. This was a very pleasant meeting with a zealous congregation that meets regularly. It is the home congregation of Brother John Arms, who is quite active in the field as a preacher and whose influence is an active agency in keeping the "home fires burning." I have preached a few sermons at other places without visible results.—L. L. Yeagley.

Waco, Texas, September 25.—My first meeting for the summer was with the East Side Church, of Waco, Texas. This meeting was well attended and resulted in five being baptized. It was a pleasure to be at home and labor with the home forces. My next meeting was at Seminole, Okla., where I had preached a great deal in the past three years. Six were baptized. The church at this place is a good one and knows how to stand by the preacher. I then went to Mansfield, Ark., for a two-weeks' meeting, embracing the first fifteen days of July. Here I found everything ready for a great meeting. Many heard the gospel gladly, and eleven were baptized. This church seemed to be wide-awake to every duty. I went next to Stratford, Okla. There were several things to hinder—rain, picnic, and some indifference. But this meeting was the greatest of my life. There were eighty-one additions. Sixty-four were baptized. The greater part of these were grown people. After this meeting I went to Muskogee, Okla., to continue over four Sundays. This meeting resulted in thirty-six additions. Eight were baptized. The last meeting was at Baldwin, near Fayetteville, Ark. Eleven were baptized and two restored in this meeting. I did not find anything to complain about in this meeting. I found the churches awake to every duty. The support was the best I have received in the past thirty years. I am now at home with loved ones enjoying a few days' rest, the first time in over four months. The Lord has wonderfully blessed me with good health, and I am in fine shape for the work.—Lee P. Mansfield.

CURRENT COMMENT

By JAMES A. ALLEN

The American Baptist, of Memphis, Tenn., "successor to Baptist Monthly Magazine and Baptist Flag," in announcing "Our Platform," says:

We stand for the things that are commonly believed among us as set forth in the New Hampshire Confession of Faith.

Nothing is said about "the things that" were "commonly believed among" Christians in New Testament times and that were preached by inspired men long centuries before the birth of the Baptist Church. There were no Baptists in New Testament times, for the reason that "the things" that make people Baptists and that are "commonly believed among" Baptists were not taught by inspired men.

No one claims that "the New Hampshire Confession of Faith" is of divine origin. Why stand for "the things" that are "set forth" in something that everybody knows has no divine authority? Why not "stand for" "the things which ye both learned and received and heard and saw in" Paul and that were taught by inspired men centuries before "the things" constituting "the New Hampshire Confession of Faith" were originated? Somebody has to add something to "the things" that were preached by the apostles before any one can become a Baptist.

We rejoice in the great Christian work being done by the women of our nation, and would urge that their work in the future shall be, as it has, in the main, been in the past, in strict accord with New Testament teaching. We lament the fact that women are essaying the rôle of spiritual teachers in mixed assemblies. To their shame be it said that there are now a number of churches who have women for pastors. This is contrary to the teaching of Christ, Paul, Spurgeon, Boyce, Broadus, Carroll, Felix, Hawthorne, and all the Baptist worthies from Christ to Spurgeon. Our B. Y. P. U.'s should exercise themselves not to train women for the pulpit, as is being done by some of them at the present.

"As in all the churches of the saints, let the women keep silence in the churches: for it is not permitted unto them to speak; but let them be in subjection, as also saith the law. And if they would learn anything, let them ask their own husbands at home: for it is shameful for a woman to speak in the church." (1 Cor. 14: 33-35.) "Let a woman learn in quietness with all subjection. But I permit not a woman to teach, nor to have dominion over a man, but to be in quietness." (1 Tim. 2: 11, 12.)

"Our B. Y. P. U.'s" and all other human institutions separate and apart from "the church, which is his body," "should exercise themselves" to quietly and promptly go out of existence, as they but cumber the ground and are not worth their standing room. We recognize, of course, that there is no line of "Baptist worthies" running from Christ to Spurgeon, for the reason that the line of "Baptist worthies" does not "run" that far back. The line breaks off abruptly with John Smyth, who started the first Baptist church. God "added to the church" penitent believers who were "baptized in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins" all along down through the ages for about sixteen centuries before the Baptist church was started and before "Baptist worthies" appeared on the scene.

The Presbyterian Standard, under the heading, "The Menace of Modernism," says:

The name "modernism" is a misnomer. It is not modern except in some of its terminology, but began in the garden of Eden when over against, "And God said," Satan began his campaign with the subtle suggestion, "Hath God said?" Renan, the accomplished French infidel, in one of his writings makes the statement that the first postulate of atheism was the denial of the supernatural. So the first postulate of modern, naturalistic liberalism is the denial of the supernatural authority of the word of God in favor of the changing hypothesis of unregenerate men.

It is true that "modernism" is not modern. The infidels of times past, from Celsus to Ingersoll, were much more learned and talented than any living to-day. The most unlearned, the least informed on more subjects, and the most shallow class of men to-day making any pretensions to scholarship is that supremely egotistical class who dub themselves "experts." In what are they "experts?" And where do they get the right to assume such a title?

Renan, as quoted by the Presbyterian Standard, was right in saying "that the first postulate of atheism was the denial of the supernatural." To deny the supernatural is to deny "the supernatural authority of the Word of God." The Word of God itself is supernatural and divine. To deny any statement of the Word of God is to deny the supernatural.

We wish to impress the fact on the minds of our readers that the religious world itself has set the example of denying "the supernatural authority of the Word of God." The Presbyterian Standard repudiates the command of Jesus that every penitent believer be immersed. It makes baptism itself nonessential and then substitutes sprinkling in its place. There is no doubt that Jesus gave the command: "Go ye therefore, and make disciples of all the nations, baptizing them into the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I commanded you: and lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world." (Matt. 28: 19, 20.) "And he said unto them, Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to the whole creation. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that disbelieveth shall be condemned." (Mark 16: 15, 16.) "And Peter said unto them, Repent ye, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ unto the remission of your sins; and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit." (Acts 2: 38.) In the clearest and plainest language the Bible teaches every penitent believer to be immersed, and also clearly and plainly shows that there were no unimmersed people in the church in New Testament times. Yet the Presbyterian Standard makes void the command of Jesus to be baptized, as it does on some other things.

Now, the so-called modernist "expert" repudiates the Bible statement that "God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him; male and female created he them." (Gen. 1: 27.) The Presbyterian Standard repudiates the command, "Repent ye, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ unto the remission of your sins." (Acts 2: 38.) Which is the worse? Is it not as great a sin to repudiate one passage of scripture as it is to repudiate another? Is not the man who refuses to be baptized as great an infidel as the man who teaches that man evolved from a lower form of life? "If not, why not?"

We need men and women who believe God's word. Not those who believe simply what suits them and repudiate what they dislike, but who will take God's word, from Genesis to Revelation, and honestly seek to conform themselves to it; who will read it, not to prove what they already have in mind, but who will read it with an open and unbiased mind in an honest and earnest effort to learn what it actually teaches, being firmly determined from the heart that they will practice what it teaches all the days of their lives.

A HEADSTRONG PREACHER.

BY DAVID LIPSCOMB, JR.

In Jonah we find a preacher of power. But he was a hater as well as a preacher. He hated the Ninevites with a cruel hatred. Just as John Knox hated the Catholics, or Torquemada the Protestants, so he hated to the telling point. When he was ordered to preach to the Ninevites the preaching God bade him, he tried to go the other way. O, but he was hard-headed! He thought to get away from the presence of God. He was evidently not familiar with the psalm of David: "If I take the wings of the morning and dwell in the uttermost parts of the sea," "behold, thou art there." Kipling says in one of his poems: "Ship me somewhere east of Suez, where there ain't no ten commandments." And in the extreme northwest of North America there is a saying, or used to be, "that north of 54° 40' there runs no law of God or man."

But ask Jonah or any one else that has tried to hide if it is possible. Jonah went west almost in the sense the phrase was used in 1914-18 in the fields of Flanders. A ship was sailing out from Joppa to Tarshish, generally supposed to be Spain or Northwest Africa. He booked passage thereon. And now we come in touch with the superstitions that prevailed and in some measure still prevail among those "who go down to the sea in ships." For the sea, ever changing and never changing, is to many and to me a wondrous, monstrous, awesome thing.

It is very clear that these navigators were setting forth in the time for sailing, when the Mediterranean was smooth and inviting—say, in the halycon days of late summer; and when a sudden, unlooked-for storm arose, they were surprised beyond measure and dismayed. They sought in their ignorant knowledge for the cause—first, among themselves for the sinning one, the one whom Nemesis was pursuing. The blame must be put on somebody. The barbarians at Malta wanted to put it on Paul. Just so in later times, as told in "The Ancient Mariner," Coleridge's great poem, the sailor who shot the albatross brought ruin upon ship and crew in the mythical Sargasso Sea.

In this ship, as in nearly all ships, there were men of many races and of many gods. There was no atheism. The sea does not allow unbelief. There was and is sin in plenty, profanity most foul. But in time of stress such as this each called upon his god—one, perhaps, on mighty Jupiter; another, on Neptune; another, on jolly Bacchus. There were enough to go around, that each might have his own. Just so in the Catholic Church, each nation has its pet saint-St. George for England, St. Andrew for Scotland, St. Patrick for Ireland, St. Nicholas for the old Russia, but St. Lenine for the new Soviet State. And so it goes. Each nation-nay, each person-makes his own religion and has his own patron saint, dead or alive. "I am of Paul; and I of Apollos; and I of Cephas," is not one bit worse than the chase after, or adulation of, modern preachers. Even now we hear of people thinking out loud: I am of Campbell, I am of Lipscomb, I of Hardeman, or Elam, or Larimore, or even of some one outside like Gypsy Smith or Billy Sunday. Ancestor worship, hero worship, or preacher worship, rather than what they taught and teach, has given rise to the many sects in the world. Witness the names: Athanasian, Arian, Benedictine, Dominican, Calvinist, Lutheran, Wesleyan, Swedenborgian-and that last name is big enough to stop on. And the whole business ought to stop, and every one say, "I am of Christ," and come and sit at his feet and learn of him.

After the prayer of the sailors proved of no avail, they began to jettison their freight. All the grain, all the beautiful glassware from Tyre, and all the nuts, raisins, and dates went overboard, and still the boat would not ride. Then in their terror they sought their passenger, perhaps their only one. He was found calmly sleeping down in the hold. His conscience was not keeping him awake. His sleep was deep and sweet. As far as we know, no ghosts of murdered law, no visions of an angry Deity disturbed his rest. He lay unworried by the dashing of the waves or the rolling of the vessel. Jesus' slumber in the boat on Galilee was not more profound.

And now we see respect paid to the true God, the God of the Jews, by these pagan seamen, men who bowed indifferently to Isis or Osiris, Bel or Dagon, Mars or Mercury, but who, when, they came in contact with the worshipers of the true and living God, recognized the weakness of their own and the power of the others. Nebuchadnezzar in all his pride of power admitted that Daniel's God was a God of gods. While he did not turn to him and worship him, he knew and acknowledged his power. Darius cried: "Daniel, thy God can save thee." So now these terror-stricken seamen say to Jonah: "Call upon thy God, that we perish not." Then came the lot. We keep up lot drawing. In sundry ways we use it-apportionment of lands to heirs, selecting jurors, etc. As children we drew straws, tossed the wet and dry bat or paddle, and the like, to decide certain things in our games. Casting dice is sometimes classed as lot drawing. "They parted my garments among them, and for my vesture did they cast lots." Whatever it was or how done, it was used in the case of Achan at Ai, in choosing Matthias in place of Judas. Now, by God's direction and the awakened conscience of Jonah, the lot fell upon him. For the terror of the sailors, the unseasonable and awful storm, brought Jonah's sin and himself face to face. His comrades hurled questions in a volley at him. He told them of his disobedience, and suggested that he was the cause of the storm. And then, as a remedy, he said: "Take me up and cast me into the sea." Ancient people frequently offered human sacrifices to the god of the sea. Agamemnon, on sailing to Troy, offered his own daughter, the beautiful Iphigenia, in order to get fair weather. Perjured Sinon deceived the Trojans by claiming that he was the escaped victim for the home voyage of the Greeks.

Jonah's comrades must gain our admiration for their refusal to act on his suggestion. They rowed valiantly to reach the land, without success. Then they prayed, not their own gods, but to Jonah's God, that they might not be blamed or have Jonah's blood upon them. When Jonah, with the sailor's "Yo, heave, ho!" was thrown into the sea, "the sea ceased from her raging."

This is the first case of vicarious suffering mentioned in the Bible. Abraham's offering to slay Isaac was a supreme test of obedience. Poor Jephtha's daughter's death was the fulfillment of a foolish vow, and John the Baptist's of a drunkard's promise. It remained for the Son of God to offer his life for sin, not of himself, as Jonah, who thought he saw a way out this way, but for the sins of the world, then and forever.

It is to be noted that the seamen offered a great sacrifice to the Lord, and made vows, perhaps to serve Jonah's God alone. Vows made under great fear are easily and quickly broken. It is a question whether Naaman, even with his altar erected on the sacred soil (sacred to him for the time at least), remained true to his declaration of faith in the God of Israel. The impulse of the moment rules us all. To-day we acclaim praises to God for his gcodness; to-morrow we forget it all and are grumbling about the drought.

The subsequent behavior of Jonah shows the truth of this statement. He acquired a great aversion for salt water, and as soon as he was released from his watery, fishy prison, he put as many leagues of dry land as possible between him and the sea. But we see his cross-grained, mean spirit cropping out again in hate to the hereditary enemies of his people because God in his mercy spared them. God rebuked him and said: "Thou hast had pity on the gourd: . . . and should not I spare Nineveh, that great city, wherein are more than sixscore thousand persons that cannot discern between their right hand and their left hand; and also much cattle?"

"DIGRESSIVES" IN AFRICA.

BY A. B. BARRET.

From the letter from Brother John Sherriff we learn more of the move on the part of the "digressives" to intensively evangelize the whites of portions of Africa, at least. Let the faithful in that far-away field beware lest they see their efforts hindered, just as we have seen the Lord's work disrupted here in the homeland. Brethren, our neglect of the world is criminal.

To many readers of the Gospel Advocate the following will be of much interest:

Forest Vale Mission, Bulawayo, Rhodesia, South Africa, July 25, 1925.—Dear Brother Barret: Since writing you on May 24, I have received money orders for £4-16-9 and £5-12-9, English money. This is much better than sending checks which have to be returned for collection. It is needless to say our hearts are full of thankfulness to the sisters for the above and for their mindfulness of us and cooneration with us.

No letters have accompanied the above, but I take it for granted the sisters have sent it. "God bless them." I told some of the churches over there and in Australia, too, that there was lots of talk, and writing, too, about what a sister must not do, but, so far as I could see, the sisters were doing half the work in the churches and the other half wouldn't be done without them. I am sure I was in some churches over there that would not be in existence but for the faithfulness of the sisters. (1 Cor. 15-58; Matt. 25: 34 etc.)

I am thankful to report that the Lord's work is prospering in Bulawayo and the other mission fields. We have not started any special work of our own since our return, but are helping in the town mission work, where there is a great need for it. Speaking at the gospel meeting last Sunday, a young woman and a young man (natives) confessed Christ.

There has been quite a lot of sickness about of late. Molly was nursing some natives on this farm and got a dose of measles. She has had a week in bed, but is now recovering. Sister Sherriff and Miss Benjamin are doctoring seven or eight others with measles, etc., and I have taken two into the hospital the last two weeks with pneumonia, etc.: so we have been kept pretty busy.

monia, etc.: so we have been kept pretty busy.

Sister Short's baby and children returned to Sinde Mission, Northern Rhodesia, last week. Sister Lawyer's children have had whooping cough. Both families are now at Sinde Mission.

Bulawayo has been very gay and busy of late. We have been honored by a visit from the Prince of Wales, who was delighted with Rhodesia generally, especially our wonderful Victoria Falls,

From some numbers of "The Church Up to Par," published in Cincinnati, Ohio, and sent by some one, I see an account of an evangelistic tour about to be made in South Africa, the evangelists being Brother Jesse R. Kellem and Brother Richards. The whole tour is being financed by a Brother Mike Thomas, who may accompany them. Ten of the largest cities and towns are to be evangelized, commencing at Capetown and including Bulawayo. The meetings (among whites only) are to continue from four to ten weeks. The churches of Christ in New Zealand and Australia have agreed to supply pastors or preachers for the churches as they are established, who are to be on the spot when the meeting starts. In each place, or where obtainable, the town halls are to be engaged for the meetings. They expect to spend from twelve to fifteen months in this country. Brother Hadfield has received a long letter from Brother Kellum, he told me, but I haven't heard any particulars yet. This looks like a business proposition, and what I have hoped and prayed for, for more than twenty-five years, but began to think I should never see it. I shall cooperate, as far as Bulawayo is concerned, as far as I can without sacrificing "essentials;" if that becomes necessary, then I will quit. The English and Australian church papers speak very highly of Brethren Kellem and Richards' missions over there a short time ago. I hope and pray that these able men will leave all innovations behind them and come to Africa with the pure and simple gospel of Jesus Christ. We shall see.

I am still toiling away at my stone trade. Have been away from home, out at the stone quarries, for a month since writing you. Glad I have health and strength to do it.

I have heard nothing further from Nashville in regard to supporting me. Brother and Sister Burton and Brother and Sister Davidson are the only ones helping us at present from Nashville. I have always made my work a personal matter; so I shall just go on working and doing what I can, and leave the rest to the Lord, whose work it is.

I must now close, hoping soon to receive a good letter om you or the good sisters themselves. Please convey from you or the good sisters themselves. Please convey our Christian love and greetings to them all, with thanks, and accept same your dear selves.

Yours fraternally in Christ, JOHN SHERRIFF.

COMMENDATION OF "ELAM'S NOTES."

We are receiving many commendations of "Elam's Notes," a commentary on the International Bible-school lessons, prepared by Brother E. A. Elam. It rejoices us to know that the "Notes" are doing good and that they are proving helpful in the study of the Bible. We still have on hand a few copies of the 1925 volume, which may be secured by those who order at once. "Elam's Notes" for 1926 will be ready in the next few days. All should order early. We here give some expressions from wellknown brethren:

- J. E. Acuff, Nashville, Tenn., says: "'Elam's Notes' contains thorough, practical, and logical comments on the lessons, presented in an interesting way which attracts and holds the attention of the student. The book is invaluable to the pupil and teacher, and at the close of the year is a splendid addition to any library.'
- S. T. Hardison, Lewisburg, Tenn., says: "I have been using 'Elam's Notes' from the beginning, and I have been gratified to see how completely and elaborately he explains the context. I am sure it is a valuable book for old and young, and if studied carefully it will aid them very much in getting a correct knowledge of the Bible."
- B. C. Goodpasture, 150 South Ashby Street, Atlanta, Ga., says: "I have used four or five of the popular 'Notes' on the Sunday-school lessons, but consider 'Elam's Notes' by far the best. It is the one book I always recommend to teachers and advanced pupils. It is clear in statement, scholarly in plan, and scriptural in doctrine. In its chosen field it has no equal."

Batsell Baxter, president of Abilene Christian College, Abilene, Texas, says: "Ever since the first issue I have been keeping in touch with 'Elam's Notes.' I regard it as the best work of the kind available. Brother Elam has been one of our foremost Bible teachers for years, and his ripe experience, splendid judgment, and constant companionship with the Bible have combined to make this one of the finest helps to Bible study available.'

- I. B. Bradley, Dickson, Tenn., says: "I am glad to commend 'Elam's Notes' to the congregations everywhere as the best help obtainable. I have long felt and said that Brother Elam's notes are the most valuable aid to the study of the Lord's-day studies that has ever come under my notice. I would like to see the Senior Quarterly for the past twenty-five years bound in yearly or annual volumes, so they could be kept-a valuable accession to any Bible student's library."
- F. C. Sowell, Columbia, Tenn., says: "With almost a lifetime acquaintance with E. A. Elam and his great work in the church of God, I can most heartily recommend 'Elam's Notes' to any person or church desiring a broader and deeper knowledge of the Bible. Every point made by the writer is brought out with the clear light of truth and can be studied with much profit. I am confident it would make every family happier and better to study and use these notes, for they are by far the best and most exhaustive helps along that line I have ever studied."

S. H. Hall, Nashville, Tenn., says: "There is nothing that can mean more to us than the study of God's word, by which we may gain a clear understanding of God's will to us now and his exceeding great and precious promises of every needed blessing in this life and eternal life in the world to come. I know of nothing in the way of human helps that will aid the Bible student more in obtaining this knowledge than 'Elam's Notes,' published and sold by the Gospel Advocate Company. We have no Bible scholar among us to-day, in my judgment, more seasoned and tested, hence more dependable, than Brother E. A.

William Hall, Gallatin, Tenn., says: "It has been my good fortune to have the use of 'Elam's Notes' since the first edition was published, and I do not hesitate to say that those who use 'Elam's Notes' in the study of the lesson for each Lord's day get a very much more comprehensive and complete teaching on the lessons studied in connection with these notes than would be possible without them. And why shouldn't they? The study of the Bible has been the chosen life work of Brother Elam, a man wonderfully blessed with native ability, with which he has coupled industry and energy to know what is the whole teaching of the Word on any particular subject. He asks no one to take what he thinks or what he says, that is not fully in accord with God's revealed will, which can be determined by studying the references. I desire to most heartily commend it to the thoughtful and prayerful study and consideration of all who desire to know the Bible teaching on the subject treated of."

PRACTICAL PHILOSOPHY FOR YOUNG AND OLD.

BY S. H. HALL.

I am giving below some matter that recently appeared in the Friendly Visitor, the little mimeograph paper that we get out in our work at Russell Street. The thoughts, as you will observe, were gathered from sundry sources, but all are sustained by the teaching of the Bible, hence will do us good if lived out in our lives.

"I have written unto you, young men, because ye are strong, and the word of God abideth in you, and ye have overcome the wicked one." (1 John 2: 14.) David said: "Wherewithal shall a young man cleanse his way? by taking heed thereto according to thy word." (Ps. 119: 9.)

It has been well said to young people who have come to appreciate the importance of strength:

"The problems of life are yours to solve because of your Whatever the world is to be, you will make it. strength. The very obvious conclusion is, use your strength-all of

"Captain Scott, in his farewell address, referring to his little son, said: 'Make him a strenuous man.' . . . . little son, said: 'Make him a strenuous man.'... And how we do like the strenuous men, even though we find it hard to imitate them; those men who can wreste with life and emerge victorious; those who scoff at defeat and believe only in triumph; those who can enjoy the thrilling of battle in the contests of clamant manhood with the temptations and allurements of everyday experience! We want more of the robust vigor of health and youth in the moral battles of to-day, 'because you are strong.'"
In connection with the above, read the following under the heading, "The Resolute Attitude of Strife:"

"I like those words. They areal of the stripe."

I like those words. They speak of strenuousness and activity. In our games of tennis, cricket, and football we can see the resolute attitude of strife—the determination to win. If we can get that intensity into our moral battles, we shall be ministers of life, and help, and inspiration, and just as we intensity in the state of t tion; and just as we improve our physical stature in our physical contests, so we improve our moral stature in our moral contests.

"Certainty and uncertainty. Some things may be difficult to understand, and lines of conduct may be difficult to decide. But, usually, we know if a thing is right or wrong, just or unjust. If it is wrong, smite it hard.

"If an action is unjust, condemn it; if a jest is unclean, despise it; if a suggestion is coarse, spurn it; if a temptation is seductive, annihilate it; if a companion is undesirable, avoid him.

"In fact, be proud of your strength, develop it, and whatever is low, mean, despicable, or wrong, smite it with all force, like a man. Be certain of yourself when the crises of life are upon you; when the blood in your veins is running wildly; when the passions of life are struggling for mastery; when the passions of life are struggling for mastery; when the surging tides of youth are in full flood; when life is calling you with its thousand voices. Ah! then, by the grace of God, because you are strong, be sure of yourself, and be the resolute master of your soul. Be certain of yourself, I say, and reserve your buoyant strength for the enrichment of life and for victories in the resolute and sixty.

"Because you are strong he gentle. How beautifully gentle strength can be! The strong man is the gentleman; and we all like to be gentlemen. So, because you are strong men, be gentle men. It is a call to manliness and to righten new the strong men. and to righteousness. Never stoop; walk upright, look forward, work, and win."

How I wish every one who claims to be a Christian would take home to himself and herself the above thoughts, especially the suggestion that it takes strength to be gentle! It does not take strength to "fly into a fit" when things do not go to suit us and say unkind and hurtful things. But it takes strength to be gentle when others are not so, to be kind when others are unkind. I remember that it is not a to be ber reading the thought somewhere that if we are to be successful we must be masters—masters of ourselves and masters of circumstances. To be such masters requires strength. And this we can have if we live in a state of constant surrender to Christ.

I also remember reading the secret of true friendship. It was said that the basis of true friendship is self-for-It was said that the basis of true iriendship is self-for-getfulness, disinterestedness, and love for truth, virtue, and constancy. It involves, above all, the power of going out of one's own self and seeing and appreciating what-ever is noble and lovely in another. It takes strength to do this. Whenever you discover a bit of uncomfortable feeling when you hear others praised, just know you are weak enough to be forever damned if your heart is not made right.

Let us close this study with the following excellent " resolution:

Let me be a little kinder, let me be a little blinder To the faults of those about me; let me praise a little more; Let me be, when I am weary, just a little bit more cheery Let me serve a little better those that I am striving for:

Let me be a little braver when temptation bids me waver:

Let me strive a little harder to be all that I should be: Let me be a little meeker with the brother that is weaker

Let me think more of my neighbor and a little less of

And all of this we may do and be, if, as said before, we surrender to Christ and are daily governed by his Spirit. May he help us to so be.

WANTED-FIVE THOUSAND NEW SUBSCRIBERS.

Letters and communications from many parts of the country assure us that the Gospel Advocate is accomplishing great good. We are rejoiced to know that the Gospel Advocate is effectually contributing to the advancement of the cause of Christ, which is the cause of humanity, and that it is assisting in the great work of propagating pure, New Testament Christianity as it was preached and practiced by the apostles of Jesus Christ in the beginning.

But while the Gospel Advocate is very successfully accomplishing this great work, we have in view the enlarged prospects that lie before us, and we very earnestly and ardently desire to attain to still greater usefulness. We realize that "the harvest indeed is plenteous, but the laborers are few." Sectarianism and infidelity are rampant and are hard at work. And we realize that our field of usefulness is commensurate with the extent to which the Advocate is read by the people; and we also realize that the extent to which the Advocate is circulated among the people is, in a large measure, in the hands of its readers. We are appealing, therefore, to every reader of the Advocate to join us in this great work and to send us at least one new subscriber. Just a little effort on the part of every reader will accomplish untold good.

The Advocate has never been published for money, but for the purpose of advocating the gospel. If the publishers had not made sacrifices to publish the paper, it could not have continued to exist. Sacrifices have been cheerfully made without the hope of earthly reward.

If every preacher and every reader of this journal would speak a word for it, ten thousand subscribers would be added to the Advocate in a few months. The Advocate is helpful to the preachers and arouses the churches to more zeal and spirituality. The churches where the Advocate is read do more work for advancing the cause of Christ than where it is not.

Christians should read papers that teach the truth instead of reading the sensational literature of the day. They need to meditate upon that which is pure and uplifting. We appeal to every one who reads this to go to work immediately to help us add at least five thousand new names to our list of subscribers. We want the boys and girls, the young men and young ladies, the middle-aged and the old, one and all, to help us in this campaign. Write at once for sample copies. Go to your friends and ask them to subscribe for the Advocate. You know many people who would be benefited by reading the paper, yet are not doing so. For the cause that we love and for the sake of the person himself, will you not use your influence to get him to fill out the subscription blank below?

TOPIC AND TEXT.

BY A. B. LIPSCOMB.

It is always a sad sight to find a home that is broken up. Certain members of the family move to distant States, and, sooner or later, death enters the door and dear ones are taken. That home never seems the same again. It often happens that only the shell of the real home is left, but, influenced by fond memories, we cling to the little that remains. But the saddest sight is to find a home that is broken up religiously speaking, where the members of the family are divided among themselves in their relation to the church of the living God. Here there is the haunting fear that the "house divided against itself" may not stand. Yea, we are confronted with the Savior's solemn declaration that such a house shall not stand. The number of such divided homes is legion. Surely some practical teaching from the word of God on this subject would not be amiss in the columns of the Gospel Advocate. We approach the subject reverently and in the fear of God.

First, we may note that home where the husband or wife is a Christian and the other is of the world. This is, indeed, a sad situation, but there is one relieving feature. The New Testament makes the way of duty plain. The duty of the Christian part of that home is to win the other part. We all realize that this is easier said than done. The task may prove arduous and the waiting time may be long; but let there be real faithfulness in the life of the Christian in that home, and victory is almost certain. There is the story of a case-hardened husband who had stood out for years against the overtures of the gospel, turning down repeatedly one invitation after another. Just about the time the folks had given him up as a hopeless case he surprised everybody by walking down the aisle to give the preacher his hand and his heart to God. The preacher, in this instance, was proud of the man's coming, and asked him what point in his sermon finally convinced him. "It was nothing in your sermon at all," the man replied, "but the patient, consistent, unblamable life of my Christian wife that brought me to Christ." He had found a way to get around the pleas of many preachers, but the Christian example in his home was irresistible. This was a living confirmation of Simon Peter's rule: "Likewise, ye wives, be in subjection to your own husbands; that, if any obey not the word, they also may without the word be won by the conversation of the wives; while they behold your chaste conversation coupled with fear." (See 1 Pet. 3: 1, 2.)

Sometimes the painful environment of a divided home works in the opposite direction. It has a tendency to discourage, and too often the Christian member uses it as an excuse for laxness or indifference. The sentiment of some letters which we receive is reflected in the statement, "My husband is not a Christian," or, "I am the only one in my family who is a Christian." The inference is, "What else could you expect from one laboring under my handicap?" But instead of the Christian wife or husband being less faithful because the life companion is of the world, those very circumstances call for a more earnest effort, that he or she, by a godly walk and conversation, may win the unbelieving.

WHERE DENOMINATIONS DIVIDE THE FAMILY.

Next in order, we note that home where the members of the family are members of different religious bodies. This is a more serious problem, and one more difficult of adjustment. But adjusted it must be, for divided interests will certainly mar the happiness of that home. We cannot attempt to say what shall be done in each particular case, but we may safely state some things that may prove helpful in all cases.

1. Among the divided members there should be, so far as conscience may permit, the utmost respect and consideration for each other's religious views. Too often husband or wife causes unnecessary estrangement by not "speaking the truth in love." No unkind word should be spoken, no scornful reflection should be made. Each should study the attitude of the apostle Paul toward his erring Jewish brethren, who had "zeal for God, but not according to knowledge," and try, in their dealings with one another, to employ some of the apostle's wonderful tact, diplomacy, frankness, and tenderness.

- 2. There should be active co-operation in all matters where there is agreement. It will be surprising, perhaps, to find how many such points there are.
- 3. There should be candid, honest, kindly conversation and discussion between the divided members concerning their religious differences. Away with that sickening, namby-pamby idea that the best way for such a family to get along is never to mention their religious differences! That is, perhaps, "the line of least resistance;" but it is not God's way, and it will never bring results. The truth is never afraid of investigation and discussion. Each one usually claims to have the truth on his side or on her side. Then why be afraid to talk about it?
- 4. Let the divided members read and study the Bible together. This is the most important suggestion of all. In that study let each one resolve to search for the truth, rather than for victory over the other person. Don't begin your reading with the idea that presently you may tauntingly remark, "I told you so," but with the idea that each may learn what God has to say. It is my sincere belief that the following out of these simple rules will bring husband and wife or parents and children together. Ir that event, the one who has changed need not cherish the embarrassing thought that he or she has compromised anything or yielded to the other's wishes, but, on the other hand, there is the glorious thought that both have yielded themselves to the truth of God's unfailing word.

THE BENEFITS OF RELIGIOUS UNITY.

The benefits of such religious unity in our homes can hardly be estimated. It is beyond calculation. Usually religious differences in the home fall heavily upon the lives of the children. There is a story of a boy whose mother was a stanch Adventist and whose father was a merely nominal Christian. His mother did not wish the boy to work on Saturday, but the father ruled in the matter. His father might have excused him from work on Sunday, but the mother had her way in that matter. Between the two, he had to work hard every day in the week. Small wonder that the boy soon came to the point where "he hated religion." On the other hand, where unity prevails in the home, it will soon prove to be a molding power over the lives of the young. When children come to know the great truths that have made their Christian parents worthy of their love, they will seek by the same truths to become worthy of such honor. Reading in the New Testament the brief sketches of the life work of Timothy, one might begin to wonder how and why such a young man received such lessons of purity, gentleness, and manly courage. The making of his character is by no means a secret. There is no need for wonder about it. Paul states the explanation in a nutshell: "When I call to remembrance the unfeigned faith that is in thee, which dwelt first in thy grandmother Lois, and thy mother Eunice; and I am persuaded that in thee also." (2 Tim. 1: 5.)

Some mothers were discussing at a parent-teachers' meeting the question as to when the proper religious training of a child should begin. One fond mother of five children said she began to teach her children at the age of six. Another, the mother of three children, said she began at the age of five. Still another, who had one lone little chick, enthusiastically declared that she began to teach her "precious darling" about God at the age of two. A more serious-minded, elderly woman spoke last. She said: "Ladies, you are all wrong; the time to begin the religious training of a child is before the child is born." The dear old lady spoke God's eternal truth about the matter.

WHAT I FOUND IN CHATTANOOGA.

Here in Chattanooga, from whence I write, I have found some wonderful Christian homes. In one instance the mother and the grandmother has actually succeeded in keeping the whole family, including children, sons-in-law, and grandchildren, all of them, on the same street. Three houses in a row, wherein the family spirit prevails in the sharing of each other's joys and sorrows, speak eloquently of a Christian mother's love. In another home where I took dinner, the blessing being asked, the father and mother and each of the four precious children repeated appropriate verses of scripture before they began to eat. I may forget what I had for dinner at that table; it may be, as the Germans say, essen, fressen, vergesen (eaten, devoured, forgotten), but I shall never forget the tender scene when the verses were said. God only knows how much that example will mean to those children in the years to come.

There is a glorious sense in which such homes are never broken up. Neither time, nor space, nor removals, nor changes, nor death, can ever destroy that unity when it merges into the keeping of our Lord Jesus Christ, "of whom the whole family in heaven and earth is named."

COMMENTARY ON FIRST CORINTHIANS. No. 24.

BY C. E. W. DORRIS.

Chapter V.

WHOREDOM. (Verses 3-5.)

Verse 3. For I verily, as absent in body, etc. Paul was absent in body, but with them in spirit, and had already judged the guilty party as though he had been present, and advised the church to withdraw fellowship from him. Some think that the apostle, by some particular revelation of the Spirit, knew all the affairs of the Corinthians as fully as if he had been personally present with them. But if this matter in all its circumstances was made known to Paul by the Spirit, then why did he found his knowledge of it on general report? (See verse 1.) I am of the opinion that by the means of both the Spirit and the general report Paul was enabled to criticize and advise as well as if he had been present.

4. In the name of our Lord Jesus Christ. That is, by the authority of Christ, who is the head of the church, and under whose authority every act is to be performed. When ye are gathered together. The withdrawing fellowship is to be public and the act of the whole church. The nearest and best friends and the closest ties of kinship should and ought to enter heartily into the act because it is a duty imposed by the Lord upon the church, and because it is the divine remedy to lead the offender to repentance and to God. And my spirit. My apostolic authority derived from the Lord. The withdrawing fellowship from the guilty party was carrying out Paul's directions received from the Spirit, and hence he would be with them in spirit. He was particularly directed by the Spirit to give this command to withdraw fellowship from the disorderly walker. He ordered them to assemble, not only by the authority of the Lord, but by the authority of the Spirit. With the power of our Lord Jesus Christ. The act of withdrawing fellowship from the disorderly, if done by the Lord's directions, is not man's decision, but the Lord's. It is the Lord's decision and not the church's, and therefore the whole church should and ought to participate in the act and thereby do the Lord's will. The decision is already made by the Lord, and the church's only duty is to see that it is carried out. When the act of withdrawing fellowship from the disorderly is done as the Lord directs, he is present in authority to sanction the act in heaven. (Matt. 16: 19; 18: 18-20.)

5. To deliver such a one unto Satan. This was the highest degree of punishment inflicted by the church. All such persons should thus be dealt with. To deliver unto Satan is to withdraw fellowship—that is, to turn over to the authorities of the prince of this world. The thought is found in 1 Tim. 1: 20. As there are but two families, or kingdoms, in the moral world, God's and Satan's, the expelling of a person from the fellowship is a virtual delivering of him into the hands of Satan, to share in all the miseries resulting from his usurped dominion, and a depriving him of all advantages which God has provided in the church. By the sentence of excommunication from the fellowship, if justly done, a person is as if he were put out of the protection of God. For the destruction of the flesh. Unless prevented by repentance. The humiliation of being withdrawn from and the sense of a lost condition were adapted to bring about repentance. That the spirit may be saved. This is the object of all true discipline as related to the party withdrawn from. Discipline with any other object in view is without the sanction of heaven. But if carried out as God directs, it is calculated to lead to repentance and salvation. He who participates in the act of discipline because of envy or malice or any other evil motive is as guilty before God as is the accused, and unless he repents will be lost. The Corinthians having been very blamable in tolerating this wicked person, and the faction, with their leader, who patronized him, having beasted of their knowledge and learning, Paul did not order the church to use admonition before proceeding to withdraw fellowship from him, but required them instantly to deliver the offender to Satan that he and the faction might be aroused to a sense of their danger, and that the whole church be convinced of its error in tolerating such gross wickedness. Possibly the cause of this order to withdraw fellowship immediately and without admonition is due to the long practice of this heinous sin. The deprivation of church fellowship is a more dreadful punishment than most people are sensible of. The church must pronounce solemnly what Paul determined, and this in the face of the whole church. "When ye are gathered together "-that is, in the presence of the entire flock at Corinth. A public crime must have a public doom, that others may hear and fear. The church, or congregation, were witnesses of the censure and partook in the withdrawal of fellowship, but they did not judge and determine it; the Lord did that. This is true now when the withdrawal is done in harmony with God's directions. go by the direction and authority of Christ, and with an eye to the glory of Christ, is to do in the name of Christ. This should be the manner and the end in pronouncing church censures; and then Christ will be at the consistory, and his cooperation will make good the censure, as his commission was our warrant to pronounce it. Then the guilty may and ought to dread the sentence as coming out of Christ's own mouth and to be inflicted by Christ's own hand. The excommunicated person is in a miserable state. He is delivered into the hands of Satan, as God's executioner, to inflict severe punishments; he is cast out of God's protection, deprived of the church's communion, and exposed to the temptations and snares of our adversary, the devil. Persons ought not to be in this severe and solemn manner proceeded against, save for notorious, scandalous sins. To pronounce this awful censure upon every slight and trivial occasion is to prostitute one of the most venerable ordinances of Christ to contempt and scorn. The great and special end for which the ordinance of excommunication was instituted by Christ in his church, and to be executed by his agents, was, and is, to restore the fallen person by repentance and to be a warning to others. The reforming of men, and not the ruining of them, is the intention of this ordinance. The censure is not mortal, but medical.

F. W. Smith is delivering a series of sermons to the church at Franklin, Tenn., where he has been preaching so long, on the fundamental principles of Christianity. Splendid audiences attended every service during the past week, and on Lord's-day morning and evening the house would scarcely accommodate the audiences. The meeting will continue throughout this week, with services every night at half past seven o'clock.

F. O. Howell, Jackson, Tenn., October 4: "The meeting at Phil Campbell, Ala., starts off with fine prospects for doing good. I am to be associated with C. E. Several places have called me back for 1926. I have some time for meetings in the spring and early summer. I can hold some meetings this winter. Brethren, should you need me, call me at Checotah, Okla."

E. A. Elam preached at Russell Street, this city, last Lord's day, on the subject, "Who Then is Greatest in the Kingdom of Heaven?" He emphasized the Lord's standard of true greatness, humility, and service—the servant of all is the greatest of all. Jesus declares that he came to serve others, not to be served, and to give "his life a ransom for many." This lesson he emphasized in washing the apostles' feet, and, as he says, by his death on the cross.

John T. Smithson, Murfreesboro, Tenn., October 10: "The meeting with the West Riverside congregation, Mc-Minnville, Tenn., closed without any additions. In many respects the meeting was a good one. I promised to return for another meeting next year. I am now in a very interesting tent meeting about ten miles southeast of Murfreesboro. This is the first meeting that has been conducted in this section. We are hopeful of good results, as the interest is good and the crowds are large."

Horace White, Ponca City, Okla., October 9: "Will some writer or writers of the Gospel Advocate write me a letter, either privately or through the Advocate, against Baptist doctrine, as I want it to send to a young Baptist preacher, a man I knew before I became a member of the body of Christ? If any brother cares to answer this, I am sure it will work great good for the cause of Christ. I have not been a member of the church very long, and I was a Baptist before. The cause of Christ is growing out in this part of the West. We have a fine little congregation at this place, with George W. Hardin as minister. Many letters against Baptist doctrine will be the more appreciated." Write him a letter, brethren. We also suggest that Brother White send his Baptist preacher friend a copy of the Folk and McQuiddy debate, the Smith and Lofton debate, or the Cayce and Srygley debate, all of which the Gospel Advocate will be glad to furnish at one dollar and fifty cents per copy.

- F. B. Srygley preached at Hillsboro, Tenn., last Lord's day.

- W. H. Owen preached at Murfreesboro, Tenn., last Sunday. He reports large and appreciative audiences both morning and night.
- F. B. Srygley held a ten-days' meeting at Rich Pond, Ky., October 6, which resulted in fifteen baptisms. The audiences and interest were splendid.

- C. H. Smithson, Tioga, Texas, October 10: "I preached at Manchester, Texas, last Sunday. I go next to Francis, Okla., for a meeting. I will close my work in and around Tioga the first of November and can answer calls for work anywhere."
- C. M. Pullias will begin a two-weeks' meeting at Joseph Avenue, this city, next Lord's day. The Joseph Avenue congregation cordially invites all visitors to hear Brother Pullias. The song service will be in charge of T. B. Simpkins. Take First Street car.
- J. Porter Sanders, Jackson. Miss., October 5: "We have put the Gospel Advocate in many homes during the year, and hope to do more in that way. I find it to be a very beneficial way to get people interested. I am to prepare about five thousand tracts for 'winter delivery.'"
- E. P. Watson, Shelbyville, Tenn., October 10: "We closed a most excellent meeting at Arbor Hill, near Petersburg, with fourteen baptized and ten restored. We are now at home in our regular work. Brother Todd will begin a mission meeting in the tent at Hinesville next Sunday."
- E. N. Glenn reports that the audiences and interest seem to be increasing at San Diego, Cal., "although worldliness and 'popular' doctrine and sectariarism." says Brother Glenn, "prevent many from doing their duty." D. W. Nay and son, Noble, of Pasadena, were with them recently.

Willie Hunter, Tompkinsville, Ky., October 9: "I closed a twelve-days' meeting at Gamaliel last night. Ten were baptized during the meeting, one coming from the Baptists. Laymon Hammer led the song service. This makes eleven baptisms there since my debate with A. J. Sloan last winter."

A. C. Traylor, Athens, Tenn., October 5: "I began here vesterday, with good crowds and fine interest manifested both morning and evening. In the afternoon I preached at Niota to the faithful band of people that meet there for worship, with a good crowd and fine interest there. East Tennessee truly is a mission field, and I feel that great good could be accomplished here if I just had some one to hold up my hands in the way of a support. If any one wishes to do some real mission work, just say the word, and I am here for work."

- J. F. Buffington, Crandall, Miss., September 30: "On the first Lord's day in October I am to be with the Brewer congregation. The Lord willing, I shall begin a meeting on Saturday night before the second Lord's day in October at Bolinger, Ala. Success to the Gospel Advocate. I will send in a few new subscribers soon."
- M. L. Strong, Valdosta, Ga., October 2: "Brethren who wish to come South to a good climate where they can get good homes near the line of Florida, where it is as healthful as anywhere in the United States and where the climate is fine, will do well to correspond with me, as I may be in position to help them find a good home or farm at reasonable figures."
- H. D. Jeffcoat, Ackerman, Miss., October 7: "The meeting at Dell, Ark., closed last Lord's day, with very good interest, but no additions. I have assisted in ten meetings this year. I now want to visit the churches and see how they are getting along. I am sending some subscribers to the Gospel Advocate. I am glad to work for it. I find that those that read it are at work."

Arrangements are nearing completion for a debate between C. R. Nichol and J. J. Walker on instrumental music in Christian worship, to be held at Springfield, Tenn., in the near future. The exact date will be announced through the Gospel Advocate just as soon as it is definitely settled. Many are anxious for this debate to be immediately repeated at Nashville.

Allen Phy, Brownsville, Tenn., October 5: "Our meeting at Morgantown, county seat of Butler County, Ky., closed last Wednesday night, after eleven days' duration. Two were baptized. James A. Salmons led the song service. We have only about twelve loyal members in Morgantown. I hope to go back there next year. There are many county seats in Kentucky where the pure gospel has never been preached."

- J. G. Allen, Muskogee, Okla., October 4: "We had two good services to-day at C and Kankakee. All are anxious for our protracted meeting to begin. This is set for October 23. Brother McClung will be our preacher. We were forced to close our tent meeting last night for the second time in two weeks. Last week the tent blew down, and it rained so hard that we missed two nights, and this morning the wind wrecked it completely, so we were forced to close. We had ten additions while we were there, with a splendid interest at the close."
- J. H. Morris, Tuscumbia, Ala., October 5: "Since last report I have preached at the following places: Nauvoo, Ala., second Lord's day in September, two services, good crowds; Sheffield, Ala., third Lord's day, at night; Hamilton, Ala., fourth Lord's day, morning and night, and at a mission in the afternoon, with good crowds at all three services; Iuka, Miss., first Lord's day in October, two confessions, baptizing at 3 P.M. Rained out at night. I will begin a week's meeting at Piney Grove, near Tuscumbia, on the second Lord's day. Success to the Gospel Advocate."
- H. D. Jeffcoat, Ackerman, Miss., October 10: "I. B. Bradley will, the Lord willing, meet R. L. Jackson (Second Adventist) in an eight-days' debate at Old Union, ten miles northwest of Carrollton, Miss. Carrollton is on the Columbus and Greenville Railroad, between Winona and Greenwood. The debate will begin at 10 A.M., Monday, October 26. Jackson is said to be a strong man among the Adventists, and we know Brother Bradley's ability. So we are expecting a lively time. We hope the brethren in reach will avail themselves of this opportunity and come. We will try to care for all who come."
- J. Madison Wright, Salisbury, N. C., October 10: "I held six protracted meetings this summer in Maine, with twenty-two additions. There were fourteen baptized at South Bancroft, and they promised to meet every Lord's day for worship. Half of the meetings were held where there were no members meeting for worship. I was in every New England State to investigate conditions, and I believe that by patient preaching of the pure gospel of Christ, Christianity in its ancient purity can be planted in New England. As to support, no one responded to the plea made for that work through the papers. The Christians in New England where I held meetings said they did the best they could do, and Mrs. Lavinia Wright, 1754 East Fourteenth Place, Cleveland, Ohio, was a faithful worker to make ends meet at home. So, by God's providence, I have been able to do the work asked of me this season. All wishing meetings this winter in Florida will please address me in care of P. Roscoe Cagle, 213 West Monroe Street, Salisbury, N. C."

WORD FROM WASHINGTON.

BY T. B. LARIMORE.

Having observed that visitors to Washington desire to see the place where the body of Woodrow Wilson is buried, I will try to describe in this article the Washington Cathedral, on Mount St. Alban, in the Bethlehem Chapel of which his body rests.

The Washington Cathedral grounds-the Cathedral Close, as the grounds around a cathedral are called in England-are about three miles north of the White House and the Treasury-a distance corresponding, it is said, to the distance between Westminster Abbey and the Bank of London, in England. This has very little significance to most Americans, we having long ago outgrown any special reverence for England, as our mother country; but Episcopalians have, I believe, a decided leaning toward English thought and English tradition, and in many things connected with the cathedral there are evidences of a great appreciation of English institutions. Woodrow Wilson was a Presbyterian, but his widow is an Episcopalian.

Washington Cathedral is the first monumental building seen by visitors who approach Washington from the west by automobile. The summit of Mount St. Alban is four hundred feet above the Potomac, while the altitude of Washington is only twenty-eight feet. That part of the cathedral now finished is plainly visible from the Virginia side of the river, and when completed the highest tower of the building will be above the top of the Washington Monument. Mount St. Alban is the highest point in the District of Columbia, and is said to be one of the greatest cathedral sites in the world, rivaled by only that of the Temple of Jerusalem, which was situated on the summit of Mount Moriah, a plateau about one thousand feet square, rising to a height of four hundred feet above Jerusalem. The city of Washington, the valley of the Potamac, and the hills of Maryland and Virginia are visible from the cathedral grounds.

The grounds comprise sixty-seven and one-half acres. much of it still in woodland of fine native growth. Many oak trees have been cut down to make room for the foundation of the building, but the cathedral is surrounded by a fine growth of oak and other forest trees. The trees that had to be sacrificed to make room for the cathedral will furnish oak for the woodwork inside the great structure. The landscape architect, Frederick Law Olmstead, says of the location of the cathedral: "The setting of Washington Cathedral is most rare in picturesqueness and beauty, whether we consider its aspect as viewed from the city or that of the city as viewed from the cathedral. Seen from the city, the cathedral will crown a densely wooded hill, standing, tree-embowered, at the summit of easy, graceful slopes.'

On the grounds, protected by an iron railing, is the Glastonbury thorn tree, which grew from a shoot of the famous Thorn of Glastonbury, England, after it was cut down in the seventeenth century by the Puritans, who claimed it was an object of superstitious reverence. In the same section of the grounds stands the Peace Cross. ai: Iona cross of stone, twenty feet in height, erected to commemorate the close of the Spanish-American War. Adjacent to this cross, a declivity in the hillside forms a natural amphitheater, the acoustic properties of which are so excellent that speech in an ordinary tone of voice can be heard distinctly by seventeen or eighteen thousand persons there, and open-air services are held in this amphitheater every pleasant Sunday afternoon in summer. Amplifiers have recently been installed there, and fifty thousand people can participate in the service on the grounds, while the radio reaches, at a conservative estimate, two hundred and fifty thousand additional hearers.

On the north side of the cathedral grounds is the Braddock Boulder, a large stone, dedicated in 1907 by the Society of Colonial Wars in the District of Columbia. A bronze tablet on the stone states that over the road immediately north of the grounds General Braddock and hi-English troops, in 1755, marched on their way to Fort Duquesne, where he suffered defeat at the hands of the French and Indians. Braddock was mortally wounded in that encounter, and his forces were saved only by the foresight of George Washington.

There are now several buildings on the cathedral grounds: St. Alban Parish Church, erected in 1857, before Mount St. Alban was selected for the cathedral site; the Little Sanctuary, a small chapel, in which are to be seen the Canterbury pulpit, made of stones from Canterbury Cathedral, the Jerusalem altar, made of stone from the temple quarries of Jerusalem, and other ecclesiastical furnishings; St. Alban's School for Boys, established in 1907, through a bequest of Mrs. Harriet Lane Johnston, niece of President Buchanan, in memory of her two sons, James Buchanan and Henry Elliott; the Bishop's House, built in 1913, the gift of Mrs. Susan E. Murray, in memory of her daughter, Mabel Murray; the National Cathedral School for Girls, which occupies the north side of the grounds. There are tennis and basketball courts for the girls, and a running track, baseball diamond, and football field for the boys. In a small circular building near the Bishop's House is the Jordan Font, constructed of white Carrara marble, fifteen feet in diameter, with stone steps for descending into the water that flows through the font when used for immersion. This font is lined with stones brought from the Damascus Ford of the River Jordan, where tradition says our Lord was baptized. The font will be eventually placed in a permanent baptistery on the south side of the cathedral.

The principal building on the grounds is, of course, the cathedral itself, which is in course of construction. It is said the building will probably be completed within the next five years; but, if so, the work must progress more rapidly than it has heretofore progressed. In 1891, at the home of Mr. Charles C. Glover here, a meeting was held, when it was resolved to build a great cathedral in the capital. In 1893, Congress granted a charter to the Protestant Episcopal Cathedral Foundation of the District of Columbia, "for religious, educational, and philanthropic purposes." The grounds were selected, and, in 1906, were formally set aside for the cathedral; plans prepared by Dr. George F. Bodley, of London, and Henry Vaughan, of Boston, a pupil of Dr. Bodley, were accepted in 1907; and the next year ground was broken for the building of Bethlehem Chapel, the first part of the cathedral work completed.

This cathedral, like all others, is built in the form of a cross, the arms of the cross forming the north and the south transepts. The main or front entrance will be at the west, and the building is being constructed from east to west. All stones from the building are from Bedford, Ind., each stone being quarried, cut, molded, and numbered before being shipped to Washington. The work progresses just as money is contributed for the cost. When finished, the total length of the building will be 534 feet; its width, 135 feet—width at the transepts, 215 feet; and the height of the central tower, 262 feet. The total cost will be approximately eleven million dollars. It has a greater length than any of the great cathedrals of Europe, and is excelled in area by only one, the Cathedral of Milan.

The eastern end of the building—called the Sanctuary, or Apse-the head of the cross-is the part that is completed, and beneath this Apse is a crypt reached by flights of steps leading down from the north and the south sides, and in that crypt is Bethlehem Chapel, beneath the floor of which is the burial vault in which lies the body of Woodrow Wilson. His burial place is marked by a stone sarcophagus within a recess in the center of the south wall a space eight feet wide and eighteen and a half feet high, with an iron grill in front of it. Just beneath that recess, in the vault below, is his body. The cream-colored limestone of the sarcophagus is marked with the Crusader's cross, and beneath it is the inscription: "Woodrow Wilson. 1856-1924." Woven into a delicately carved oak canopy above the sarcophagus are the words: "I am the Resurrection and the Life, saith the Lord." Surmounting the canopy are three flags. The ones to the right and the left are the President's flags, presented to Wilson at his inauguration, as Commander in Chief of the Army and the Navy, and the central flag is the one carried by American troops when they passed through London during the World War, and is the first American flag ever saluted by an English king on English soil.

A similar recess in the opposite wall marks the place where the body of Admiral Dewey lies in the vault beneath; and the bodies of five other persons—two bishops and their wives and the architect of the cathedral, Henry Vaughan—are in the vault. Back of the altar, in the extreme eastern end of the chapel, lie the bodies of the first Bishop of Washington and his wife, in an albaster tomb, above ground. There will be space, when the cathedral is completed, for a thousand bodies to be buried in vaults beneath it—bodies of those who have rendered notable service to their country or fellow men, in any line of human endeavor.

The chapel is beautiful, with its stained-glass windows, its symbolic figures, its artistic carving. At the western end of the chapel is a great pipe organ, and every time I have visited the place the notes of the organ were sounding softly through the stillness of the room. Visitors are requested to be quiet while in the chapel.

Near the steps leading to the south entrance to the chapel is a temporary office, where a model of the cathedral as it will appear when completed can be seen, and where visitors are asked to register their names. Not since the fourteenth century has such a building been constructed, and probably not in this generation or the next will another fourteenth-century Gothic cathedral be attempted. It will be both beautiful and impressive, and will become more and more a place to which visitors to Washington will desire to go.

When I think of the sunny slopes of Arlington—the most beautiful burying place I have ever seen—I wonder that Woodrow Wilson's body was not laid there; but it may be fitting, as things of this world go, that the body of our heroic war-time President should sleep its long sleep in this Westminster of America.

"TRIUMPH OF SCIENCE."

BY F. W. SMITH.

Under the above heading the Columbia Herald of September 4 has the following to say:

Dr. O'Connor's visit to this county recalls the splendid work that was done here under his direction ten years ago in the eradication of hog cholera. Up to that time this dread disease of swine had taken annually a big toll from the farmers of the county. It was the haunting nightmare of every hog grower in this section. But since the big "clean-up" staged by Dr. O'Connor and his associates the county has been practically free from the disease and the farmers have saved annually thousands of dollars. This was a notable triumph for science working with the lower animals, but always to the benefit of man. It is in line with similar triumphs that have been achieved in making human life all over the globe safer and healthier. It brought directly home to the people of this county achievements of science wrought elsewhere, but what is done immediately about us makes much more of an impression than merely written or spoken evidence of similar results elsewhere.

In view of the record made here in cholera eradication, it is astounding that people should in this supposedly enlightened age speak slightingly of the achievements of science, or disparagingly of "fanatical scientists," as was done in the Tennessee Legislature. Man owes all of the improvements that have been made in living conditions, in his battles with the elements, with disease, and with death, to the discoveries of scientists, to their long and patient and often heroic work. No class of men in the annals of time have wrought more for the direct benefit of mankind, received less reward, or been subjected to so much derision and contempt as the scientists. Yet their work lives on after them, ever a blessing to mankind. They have been heroic enough, devoted enough to truth for truth's sake, to go right on, despite all discouragements, to the achievement of greater and even greater victories, content always and ever that the service that they did for humanity might constitute their only reward.

Has the Herald gone on record as an advocate of the "monkey theory" of man's ancestry? If not, what is the point sought to be established by Dr. O'Connor and his "hog-cholera" medicine? Where does the Herald fit in with the "science" (?) of "hog-cholera medicine" and the "scientific" discovery (?) that man sprang from a lower order of animal life, against which the Legislature protested?

The Herald says: "In view of the record made here in cholera eradication, it is astounding that people should in this supposedly enlightened age speak slightingly of the achievements of science, or disparagingly of 'fanatical scientists,' as was done in the Tennessee Legislature."

If the Herald does not, in the above language, seek to place the "science" of hog-cholera medicine in the same class with the so-called "scientific discovery" that man evolved from a monkey, then there is no point in what it says. We therefore submit that "it is astounding that" the Herald "should in this supposedly enlightened age" compare the scientific discovery of a hog-cholera medicine with the scientific (?) discovery that man evolved from some lower form of life, having as his near if not immediate progenitor the gentleman known as Mr. Monkey!

Candidly, if the Herald does not know the radical difference between "hog-cholera medicine" and the infidel theory based upon unreasonable and nonsensical guesswork that man evolved from some lower form of animal life, against which the Legislature protested, then it needs to go to school. When did a Legislature in Tennessee or elsewhere in these United States ever "speak slightingly of the achievements of science" that discovered a remedy for hog cholera or any other demonstrated "achievements of science" in medicine, mechanics, or any of the arts? The world is greatly indebted to Newton, Watts, Fulton, Edison, and others, but it has been cursed by Darwin, Huxley, and their kind beyond the description of tongue or pen. It is such illogical classification of things by the Herald that leads people into all sorts of ridiculous and foolish positions on the subject of evolution.

Dudley Field Malone, with all his reputed ability as a lawyer, is in the same class with the Herald in this matter, and writes the same kind of nonsense. In a recent speech by this defender of infidelity we have the following: "In a scientific age we face once more the attempt to test the truths of science by the judgments of the prophets who believed the earth was flat, and to limit knowledge to the ignorance and the pronouncement of a legislative majority."

A "scientific age," indeed! Where has Malone's "scientific age" given one scintilla of proof that man sprang from a monkey? He flatly misrepresents those who oppose his infidel theory, for no one attempts to "test the truths of science by the judgments of the prophets who believed the earth was flat."

When the so-called "truths of science" can demonstrate as clearly that man sprang from a monkey as they have that the earth is not flat, there may be some point in what this brilliant lawyer says. The so-called "truths of science" regarding the origin of man are tested by a book called "The Bible," that carries its own evidence of absolute reliability, and not by the guesswork of men who hate the very name of God and are ignorant of his word.

This Mr. Malone further said: "The defense contended and now insists that the right of a teacher to teach his subject, and teach it completely, and the right of a minority to learn the accepted facts and theories of science without having knowledge measured by the religious opinions of the majority, are rights well within the protection of our constitutional guaranties."

This, no doubt, to the Herald and all others who do not believe the Bible account of creation, sounds very deep and learned, but it is destructive not only of the home, but of the very foundation of the American government. The constitution of this government gives to men the right to worship God according to their knowledge of his word and the dictates of their consciences, but it does not give to its citizens the right to deny the Bible records, the Book by which presidents, governors, and other officials are sworn into office, and the Book which, in fact, lies at the very basis of this and all other civilized governments.

Mr. Malone's "accepted facts and theories of science," believed and put into practice, would, in a short time, cause this nation to lapse into barbarism and become worse, if possible, than the "heathen Chinee." His mean and untruthful fling at the "ignorance" of the people of Tennessee is but an exposition of his own ignorance of our citizenship.

Why does the Herald, a paper published in Tennessee and supported by people who believe the Bible, join hands with such men as Malone, Darrow, and others who reflect upon the intelligence of its constituency?

It is impossible to worship God acceptably while denying the divinity of his Son, the miracles and inspiration of the Bible, which Mr. Malone's "facts and theories of science" are continually doing.

MAKING TOO MUCH OF DIFFERENCES. No. 4.

BY E. A. ELAM.

TWO KINDS OF WISDOM CONTRASTED.

Continuing from last week, let us study another passage:

Who is wise and understanding among you? let him show by his good life his works in meekness of wisdom. But if ye have bitter jealousy and faction in your heart, glory not and lie not against the truth. This wisdom is not a wisdom that cometh down from above, but is earthly, sensual, devilish. For where jealousy and faction are, there is confusion and every vile deed. But the wisdom that is from above is first pure, then peaceable, gentle, easy to be entreated, full of mercy and good fruits, without variance, without hypocrisy. And the fruit of righteousness is sown in peace for them that make peace. (James 3: 13-18.)

In the first place, this passage declares that those who are wise and have understanding show this by their "good life... in meekness of wisdom." Those who do not live this "good life," and who do not do so in the "meekness of wisdom," however learned and brilliant they may be, are not wise according to God's standard. Those who are not meek are not wise. Note the expression, "the meekness of wisdom." Meekness belongs to wisdom; wisdom produces it. We should study and cultivate meekness. There is such a Christian quality as "a meek and quiet spirit."

Too much attention cannot be given to proper education -I say "proper education;" but far too little attention is given to the cultivation and possession of qualities of mind and heart which constitute Christians-followers of "the meek and lowly" Savior. Attention is called to the many sermons and articles in various religious papers of to-day. It is very noticeable that they are almost destitute of teaching on Christian virtues and graces-sincerity, honesty, faithfulness, integrity, nobleness of purpose, love of righteousness, hatred of iniquity, moral courage to live against prevailing evils and popular sins, self-control, steadfastness in the service of the Lord, godliness, brotherly kindness, forbearance, forgiveness, love of enemies, purity of heart, and holiness of life. If some discussion or contention could be raised over these virtues, graces, and Christian qualities, many of us would be ready to speak and write on them; but not so many are striving and praying to build up the church everywhere in the daily manifestation and practice of them. This is the education the church needs. This is the education which preachers need: first, for themselves in the development of their characters; next, to fit them for preaching "the word "-all of it-for the good of others.

NOTE THIS: Some young preachers, ambitious for literary degrees, seek congregations near colleges and universities, from which congregations they may receive a support while completing their education. In such cases they are using preaching and the church of God as stepping-stones. It is not wrong for one to preach while going through school. One should preach wherever there is need, but he should not seek an audience for personal advancement and quit the field when he has gained his end; much less should he cater to a congregation in order to hold the place until he has finished his education. Such preachers are using their preaching and the church of God to rise to a "higher education," but not to a "higher" spiritual life for themselves and the church. Their study and prayers are not to build up the church in the faith of the gospel and true holiness, except, it may be, indirectly, but to advance their own temporal interest. Many times they are less prepared to preach the gospel when they have gone through the university. No one can be spiritually benefited who makes godliness a way of gain either of money, literary education, or otherwise.

The passage quoted above not only emphasizes the truth that one should show by a good life one's works in meekness of wisdom, but it also condemns bitter jealousy and jaction in the heart.

Jealousy begets bitterness and produces factions, and where "these are is confusion and every vile deed." These are the fearful results of jealousy and faction. Or where bitterness, confusion, and vile deeds exist, we know that there, too, jealousy and factions exist. A tree is known by its fruit. But none were ever found who would attribute the bitterness, confusion, and vile deeds of their congregation to their own jealousy and factious spirit. Yet there is the fruit.

A very pointed truth is here presented—namely, those who claim to be Christians and profess to be preachers of the gospel, and yet harbor bitterness and are moved by a jealous and factious spirit, glory and lie against the truth. They glory and lie against the truth, because the truth which they profess to believe and to teach produces no such fruit. Preachers may accuse one another of lying, and in some cases the accusation may be false; but since the Lord says those who profess to preach the gospel while full of bitterness, jealousy, and a factious spirit lie against the truth, the accusation is true absolutely. To lie against the truth—and, therefore, against God—is a most fearful thing to do. They lie against the truth, because, while professing to live the truth and to teach it, they virtually say the truth produces such conditions. This is false.

With the closest attention and deepest interest we should study the two kinds of wisdom which the Lord places before us, and should note the contrast between them.

"EARTHLY, SENSUAL, DEVILISH" WISDOM.

With many brethren this kind of wisdom seems to be the better and more preferable kind. But what kind is this? If we will stop to learn the meaning of "earthly, sensual, devilish," we can soon know.

"Earthly" means pertaining to the earth. The earthly wisdom seeks the things of the earth. "Macknight on the Epistles" says earthly wisdom is "mere worldly policy." Policy is prudence or wisdom in the management of public or private affairs; the rules by which a business or a government is conducted. Policy, polity, and politics are closely related. Consult any good dictionary. It matters not how wisely or unwisely any earthly government may be conducted, what its polity and policy may be, all this is earthly wisdom. To attempt to conduct the affairs of the church—the church whose foundation and government are clearly given in the New Testament-according to the policy and politics and spirit of civil governments and other affairs of the world is to follow "earthly" wisdom; but it is also to fall under God's condemnation, because "the wisdom of this world is foolishness with God." "For the word of the cross"-the whole gospel systemthe church, its foundation, its government entire, and the whole beautiful Christian life of purity and holiness, of self-denial and crucifixion of the flesh, with the heart set upon things above-" is to them that perish foolishness," but to those who are being saved "it is the power of God." This "word of the cross"—" Christ crucified "—is to the Jews "a stumblingblock" and to the Gentiles "foolishness." But the foolishness of God "-that which worldly wisdom counts foolishness and insufficient to accomplish the desired end-"is wiser" than the wisdom of men; and that which the world counts weak "is stronger than men." (1 Cor. 1: 18-25.) many wise after the flesh" ever become Christians (1 Cor. 1: 26), and those in the church who are "wise after the flesh" cannot conduct the affairs of the church according to God's wisdom, because his wisdom is foolishness to them. God's thoughts and ways are not their thoughts and ways. (Isa. 55: 8, 9.) . "For who hath known the mind of the Lord, that he should instruct him?" (2 Cor. 2: 10.) Those who are "wise after the flesh" cannot instruct the Lord on the subject of setting the church in order and managing its affairs, or upon any other subject. "The Lord knoweth the reasonings of the wise, that they are vain." (1 Cor. 3: 20.) "None of the rulers of this world hath known" the wisdom of God; "for had they known it, they would not have crucified the Lord of glory." (1 Cor. 2: 8.) None in the church to-day, who would conduct the affairs of the church according to the ways and wisdom of this world, know the wisdom of God; for, if so, they would not attempt to manage the church and its affairs according to "earthly" wisdom, or the wisdom of the world. .Such men, although "wise after the flesh," are not scripturally competent to serve as elders or to "set in order the things that are wanting, and appoint elders in every city "-churches in every city (Tit. 1: 5), because they do not know the will of God; they do not study it.

It is now a growing evil to resort to the policies and the politics of civil governments and other worldly institutions in managing the affairs of the church. Following "earthly" wisdom, many seek to put over measures in the church by popular vote-that is, by the vote of the majority of "big and little, old and young, men, women, and children." All who so proceed are either ignorant of God's wisdom, or, worse, they are rebellious against it. In either case, they will wreck the church if allowed to follow the wisdom of the rulers of this world, or "earthly" wisdom. People can no more become Christians, or enter the church, according to "earthly" wisdom—"the wisdom of the world "-than they can conduct the affairs of the church-appoint elders, select preachers, do what is called "mission work," manage the finances of the church, etc., according to the same worldly wisdom. Either is a rejection of the wisdom of God—of God himself, therefore.

"Sensual" wisdom relates to the senses, or is sensuous; it is not spiritual, but carnal, or fleshly. It is being "wise after the flesh." It seeks to carry its point or to reach its selfish ends, however intellectual and refined, by worldly ways and means. That only which God teaches is spiritual. No wisdom which in any way is contrary to the teaching of the Bible, and in church affairs contrary to the New Testament, can be spiritual. Such is "earthly" and "sensual."

James, guided by the Holy Spirit, does not use "a curse word" in saying some wisdom is "devilish." The devil is very shrewd, and is, indeed, wise. He has the polish and intellect of an angel and "fashioneth himself into an angel of light." (2 Cor. 11: 14.) All the maneuvers he leads church members to make, all the tricks he prompts them to resort to in order to carry any measure, and all the smooth and fair speech which he uses through his ministers in order to beguile the innocent is "devilish" wisdom. It is "devilish" because it fills all who are governed by it with an evil spirit and prompts them to become factious, bitter, envious, and to perform all the vile deeds described in the passage quoted above.

When one rants and raves, or brings "a railing accusation" against another (Jude 9), one manifests this wrong kind of wisdom. To think that such wisdom is evidence of virtue and strength is a deception and a shame.

THE WISDOM FROM ABOVE.

This is the greatest and highest kind of wisdom, and the only true wisdom. For this we are taught to pray. (James 1: 5.) All who seek it, cultivate it, and are controlled by it manifest a most excellent spirit and form a most admirable character.

Does this wisdom render one less qualified for teaching the truth, preaching the gospel, or contending earnestly for the faith? Sharp, cutting, and harsh language shows a sad lack of such wisdom.

The beautiful fruit of this wisdom is clearly set before us, as is the analysis of love in 1 Cor. 13. Seeing what this wisdom will do for us, it follows that without its fruit none possess it.

"Is first pure." It renders one pure—pure in heart and life; it fills one with peace—that peace of God which passes all understanding and which knows no ending, and brings one into the blessedness of being a peacemaker. It fills one with a kind and, gentle spirit. It is "easy to be entreated," or to be approached and to be persuaded to extend forgiveness; it always manifests the forgiving spirit. It is "full of mercy"—not cold, relentless, and without compassion, but is "full of mercy and good fruits;" it shows mercy to all who in various conditions of life need it—"blessed are the merciful." It is without "variance," or without doubtfulness; it is impartial and steadfast, always the same. It is "without hypocrisy," or is open, frank, unpretentious, sincere, and true.

A very encouraging promise of this passage is that "the fruit of righteousness"—with all that righteousness means—"is sown in peace" by those who "make peace." Blessed are the peacemakers." Are we peacemakers?

The impression these passages and many like them make upon our hearts depends altogether upon the regard which we have for the word of God.

TECHNICALLY WRONG, BUT SCRIPTURALLY RIGHT.

BY F. B. SRYCLEY.

Brother E. C. Love has gone back to California and taken up his paper again, and he now seems to think he must lead a faction in order to succeed. He appears to be making every effort that he can command to divide the churches on the individual-cup question. Sometime ago I called his attention to the fact that he was inconsistent in allowing two cups in the worship and opposing twenty. The brother admitted that he was "technically" wrong in having two cups, but yet he was right in it. His proof that he was right was that the apostle Paul was inconsistent in circumcising Timothy and refusing to circumcise Titus. While I had never proposed to discuss with him the individual-cup question, I did make a few remarks in the Gospel Advocate in defense of the apostle. Brother Love now contends that I "butted in" on his discussion with Brother Fuqua on the individual-cup question, but he is mistaken. I had no thought of this. I have not thought it necessary to discuss this question with Brother Love, because I have believed all the time that, with his inconsistent position on this question, he would kill himself. I am like the Irishman when he refused to shoot the woodpecker; he decided if he were left alone he would beat his own brains out. I have never raised this question with Brother Love, but I did raise the question of his inconsistency in allowing two cups and opposing many. It was then that the brother admitted that he was technically wrong in that, but still he was right. On that point I said: "The brother says 'technically' two cups are unauthorized. How does he know it is only 'technically' done? If two cups are unauthorized, they are unauthorized. I wish the brother had told by what process of reasoning he reaches the conclusion that it was only technically done."

The brother still tries to defend his position, and in reply to the above he said:

I am of the opinion that most others who have not already bowed the knee to the Great Germ God can see the point. But Brother Srygley says he can't see it. Well, I will tell him, so that if the scales ever fall from his eyes he can see it. Two cups are not one cup. The Scriptures authorize one cup. The use of two cups mars the institution to some extent. But it still remains a fact that about half the congregation drink of each cup. They did not all drink of the cup as Jesus said, but several of them did, and the spirit of the institution was not changed. The law was broken technically, but not intentionally, as in the case of the individual cups. No one deliberately said I will not drink after this or that one. That kind of a spirit, in my judgment, will unfit us for partaking of the institution altogether. In other words, two cups violate the letter of the law, but individual cups violate both the letter and the spirit of the law.

Though he says that "most others who have not already bowed the knee to the Great Germ God can see the point," I can see the point all right, but it seems to me that it sticks the wrong way-toward Brother Love instead of toward me. Then he says he is going to make it so plain that I can see it if I ever get the scales from my eyes. In his efforts to make it exceedingly plain he says: "Two cups are not one cup. The Scriptures authorize one cup." I can see that all right, even with scales. I can also see that, if the Scriptures authorize only one cup and Brother Love uses two, he has one without any scriptural authority. If God will accept one without any scriptural authority, how does Brother Love know that he will not accept twenty? Can the brother see that? I know there may be scales on some one's eyes; and if it is not scales that keeps the brother from seeing this, what is it?

But "the use of two cups mars the institution to some extent." Still, according to Brother Love, God will accept it "marred" to some extent;" but Brother Love, and not God, has decided how far it can be "marred." If some congregation "mars" it by adding twenty cups, Brother Love thinks that is too much "marred." But unless there are several scales on my eyes, he offers no proof from the Bible that God will accept the worship "marred" to some extent," but will not accept it "marred" any further.

The brother then says: "About half of the congregation drink of each cup." Then, according to Brother Love, he is only about half right in his worship. But worship that is only half right could hardly be right at all. There must be some scales here somewhere. In the worship that Brother Love here defends, all do not do "as Jesus said," but several do. Those that do not do what Jesus said, do not worship him. Then the brother is encouraging some who want to worship in doing that which Jesus did not authorize. If it is not scales which prevents the brother from seeing this, what is it?

"The law was broken technically, but not intentionally." Then, since it was only technically wrong, it was, therefore, right. How does the brother know that the congregation that uses individual cups does so in order to deliberately break the law of God? According to this logician, if they think it is right to use the individual cup and are not deliberately trying to break the law of God, they have only "technically" broken it, and Brother Love thinks it is all right to do so. The man who has changed baptism to sprinkling with no purpose to break God's law is all right, according to this logician, because he has only "technically" disobeyed God. It is all right with him for one to disobey the letter of the law, but one must not disobey the letter and the spirit both. Every error in the religious world to-day can be defended with the same argument.

But the brother challenges me to debate with him. Very well, I am willing to debate with him on the issue which I have raised. A proposition which would express the issue between us should read about this way: "In the worship of God one can do a thing which is "technically" wrong and at the same time scripturally right.' E. C. Love affirms." If the brother will agree to debate this proposition, I will see that he gets an opponent with no more scales than he has. This is a much more important question than two cups, because it embraces everything which man is to do in the worship and service of God. The settlement of this question will go far in deciding whether E. C. Love is qualified and fit to lead a faction in the churches of Christ. If anything comes of this, I will notify the readers of the Gospel Advocate.

QUERY DEPARTMENT

BY H. LEO BOLES

(1) Who are invited by Jesus in Matt. 11: 28—alien sinners or the disciples of Christ? (2) What is meant by the word "labor," and what by "heavy laden?" (3) If the invitation is to Christians, what would Jesus have them "take" that they have not already taken, seeing that they have already confessed Jesus as Lord and have been baptized into the new life under an agreement to live it? (4) Does the commission to go and teach or disciple the nations justify us in teaching through a Sunday school any more than through the "Ladies' Aid Society," seeing that neither is mentioned in the New Testament? (5) As "God is not the author of confusion" (1 Cor. 14: 33), could five different teachers, at the same time and in the same room, teach by divine authority? (6) Could five gospel preachers, by divine authority, preach at the same time, in the same room, to the same assembly of people? If they cannot, then by what rule could we justify five Sunday-school teachers teaching at the same time?—J. M. Dennis, Franklin, Ky.

1. The scripture referred to reads as follows: "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light." (Matt. 11: 28-30.) All who are "heavy laden," or who are burdened with sin, are invited. It includes both the alien sinner and the erring child of God. The "labor" and "heavy laden" are that which sin imposes upon one; they have reference to the soul. The rest which Jesus will give means the forgiveness of sins and the comfort and consolation which come from our Lord.

2. "Labor and heavy laden" are the toils of sin; that which has affected the soul and distressed the life.

3. "The alien sinner" takes the government of Christ upon him and enjoys the ease and release of the burden of sin. The Christian who has fallen into error and sin takes upon him the easy yoke of Christ; he disentangles himself from the toils of sin and adjusts his life in harmony with the will of God.

4. The truth of God should be taught to all as opportunity is offered in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. The church is the divine institution through which the truth is taught. "To the intent that now unto the principalities and the powers in the heavenly places might be made known through the church the manifold wisdom of (Eph. 3: 10.) Again: "Unto him be the glory in the church and in Christ Jesus unto all generations forever and ever." (Eph. 3: 21.) Again, the church is the pillar and support of the truth. "But if I tarry long, that thou mayest know how men ought to behave themselves in the house of God, which is the church of the living God, the pillar and ground of the truth." (1 Tim. 3: 15.) church is to teach and support the truth. The church through its eldership teaches its members publicly and privately on Sunday and week days, individually and in classes, or groups. When the church assembles on Sunday for study of God's truth, it is usually called a "Sunday school." If the church should meet on Monday for such instruction, I suppose it could very appropriately be called a "Monday school." Such work does not necessitate any other organization than that which the Scriptures authorize.

5. Yes. However, it depends upon the size of the room, the number in the class, and the amount of noise and confusion which might arise. I have seen three or four teachers in the same room at the same time with small groups, or classes, quietly teaching. I have spent near thirty years of my life in the schoolroom. When I first began teaching, our school buildings were not constructed so as to afford the conveniences that we now have. I have had three classes of children taught at the same time in one large room. Of course, it would have been better if separate rooms could have been provided. I mention this to emphasize that it is not an impossible thing for two or three classes to be taught in a quiet way in the same room at the same time.

6. No. I do not think that "five gospel preachers, by divine authority, could preach at the same time, in the same room, to the same assembly of people." But I do think that five gospel preachers could at the same time and in the same room (if the room was large enough) teach in a quiet way five different classes, or groups, of learners. Our brother in this question is not asking for information. He is trying to argue the question. It is one thing to ask for information with a query, and it is an entirely different thing to try to argue a point by interrogation. The query department is not the place to argue questions. Let all understand this.

I have read both the King James and the Revised Versions of the Bible. Can you recommend one translation in preference to the others? In this version I am now using, I have found a number of verses in the book of Matthew omitted. Why is this? One of my friends, a Catholic, has been presenting me with some of the Catholic literature which he reads. These journalists claim that the Catholic Church originated with Saint Peter; that it was then called "the Catholic church of Christ." Where was the word "catholic" first used?—W. E. BRACKETT, Sherman, Texas.

It is generally conceded by Bible scholars that the American Standard Version is the best version now extant. The American revisers had many advantages that the translators of the King James Version did not have. King James Version was translated in 1604-1611. language of that translation is more than three hundred years old and contains many words and phrases which are not now in use. Many changes in the meanings of words have been brought about since that translation was made. The American Standard Version was translated and revised in 1872-1901. The language is the English of to-day, with all of the beauty and purity and literary style of the King James Version. The American revisers had at their command all that the King James revisers had, and in addition they had the most important and authentic manuscripts and tablets which have been discovered during the last four hundred years. The American revisers had for reference the recent revisions made by England, Germany, France, Holland, Norway, Sweden, and Denmark. The American Revision Committee represented the rarest and ripest scholarship of modern days. It is to be expected that it would give to us the best translation.

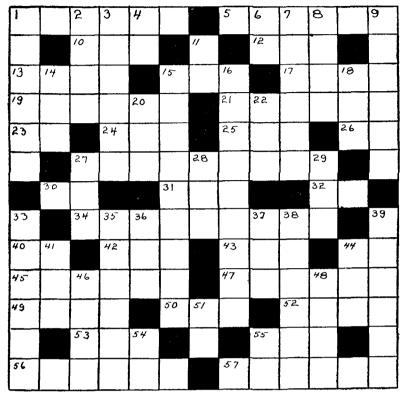

The Catholic Church did not originate with Peter. The Catholic Church is a gradual development of "the man of sin." It began in the latter half of the second century and was not fully developed until the sixth century. The present Catholic Church is not what the Catholic Church was in the sixth century. It has been modernized. The word "catholic" means "universal." It meant the "universal church." Later it was applied to this development of "the man of sin," or the Catholic Church as we now have it.

To work out this puzzle, the white spaces must be filled with letters forming words answering to the various horizontal and vertical definitions given below. The horizontal and vertical words are not the same, but each gives a clue to the other. The first letter of each word indicated by a number which refers to the definitions listed below.
It is advisable to first fill in, in both directions, those words which you know to be correct. These will furnish hints to those words which you do not know or had merely guessed at. When the puzzle is solved correctly, the letters in the white spaces will spell words both horizontally and vertically. The black spaces are the blind spots of the puzzle and merely form the pattern incidentally designating the ends and beginnings of the words contained in the puzzle.

From the Brethren

Sulphur, Okla., September 25. have just closed a short meeting at Arnold View, near Wayne. I preached eight times. Three were baptized. Brother Albert S. Hall and I will go to Pontotoc next week for a mission meeting. No church of Christ has ever been there.—Ira Wommack.

Viola, Ky., October 5.—At the morning hour yesterday I preached to the church at Mayfield; at 3 P.M. I preached here in the tent; after this service I baptized a man and his wife; then again at 7 P.M. I preached in the tent. I am to continue here until next Sunday night, and on Tuesday night following I am to begin at Temple Hill, Ill.—W. A. Record.

Haleyville, Ala., September 28.— On the third Lord's day in September I filled my regular appointment with the church at Double Springs, with three additions. The church there is a unit and is making great progress. I was at Bethel, sixteen miles south of Haleyville, on the fourth Lord's day in September. There were three baptisms, two from the Methodists (over sixty years old).—Tim Walker.

Pensacola, Fla., October 3.—More people are coming to Florida now than ever before. We are glad to see it this way; and being interested in the church and church work and making my home in Pensacola, I would like to see more of our brethren come this We have two congregations of loyal brethren in Pensacola and one or two near the city. We have a fine school system here, doing splendid work both in the city and country. W. T. Tracy.

Ardmore, Okla., September 29.—We had a large audience for each service yesterday. At the close of the morning service a lady who had been a member of the Methodist Church came forward and confessed with her mouth what she believed in her heart, mouth what she believed in her heart, and at the close of the service last night she was buried with her Lord in baptism. We have had ten additions to the local congregation since the first of July. We thank God for what he is doing through his people at this place.—J. C. Hollis.

Jackson, Tenn., September 25.—I have just returned from my evangelistic work and am now in school here at the Union University. I had a good summer in the field, and found the work moving along nicely here when I returned. The new house on Shannon and Chester Streets will be ready for use by October 15. Brethren passing through Jackson are invited to stop and see our new house —the Central church of Christ—and worship with us. You will find me at 314 North Church Street, or telephone 754.-L. R. Wilson.

Knobel, Ark., October 3.-I am now at Knobel in a good meeting. My meetings for the summer and fall meetings for the summer and fall have been as follows: Northfork, Ark., twelve days, one baptized; a mission meeting at Sales Schoolhouse, nine days, no visible results; Arkana, Ark., eleven days, eight baptized and one restored; Bluff Springs, near Lowry, Ark., six days, no additions; Agnos, Ark., eleven days, seven baptisms and two restorations; Sturkie Ark., fourteen days, ten baptisms and five restorations; Gatewood, Mo., fourteen days, ten baptized and five restored. The meeting at Knobel is now one week old. My next meeting will be near Greenway, Ark.; and next at Zanoni, Mo. I shall go home in November to open the County Line Bible School, November 16. This will be its eleventh term. Write for catalogue.--S. C. Garner.

Louisville, Ky., October 3.—Besides visits among the churches in five States, I have held meetings as follows since April: Louisville, Ky., with five baptized and three restored; Individuals of the control of the con anapolis, Ind., two restored; Detroit, Mich., three by membership; Jackson, Mich., one baptized and noe restored; Blackton, Ark., six baptisms, one restored; Kileton, Miss., one baptism, one restored; Duck River, Tenn., one baptized, one restored; Columbia, baptized, one restored; Columbia, Tenn., one baptism, two restored; McMinnville, Tenn., fifteen baptisms, three restored. My next meeting will be at Springfield, Tenn., by invitation of the white brethren. We are glad to note that the white disciples are doing more than ever to have the gospel preached to our people. As a result, congregations are being planted in many places where the church of Christ was heretofore unknown.— G. P. Bowser.

Nashville, Tenn., October 1.—Our meeting on Little Indian Creek closed at the water last Monday, with six baptisms and three restorations, and a new congregation of fifteen souls covenanted together to meet each Lord's day for work and worship and to keep house for the Lord. Little Indian Creek is situated between the Buffalo Valley to Granville, on which live some of the best people to be found in Putnam County. Notwithstanding all, it is a community in which the ancient gospel of Christ in its simplicity had never before been preached, and, sad to say, many people of the same o preached, and, sad to say, many people more than fifty years old had never seen any one baptized. The people received us kindly, welcomed us into their homes, and, best of all, were willing to hear, and we had good crowds and fine interest from the beginning to the close. Mr. Alvin. ginning to the close. Mr. Alvin Bachman furnished us a fine place to set the tent and otherwise showed us much kindness, for which we heartily thank him. We left a number almost persuaded to be Christians. We were invited to move down the creek for another meeting while there, but a promise was out of long standing on the south side of the county—Baxter, Route 1, where we are to begin next. Brother J. D. Derryberry was with me in charge of the song service, and did his work well. Our tent work will continue until winter. "The harvest truly is plenteous, but the laborers are few."—W. M. Oakley.

Cimarron, New Mexico, September 27.—Three and a half years ago I came from Des Moines, N. M., where I had been for six years with the same company (the Santa Fé Railway), and also evangelized that entire country for about four years. I came over here in the same capacity, but a many times heavier agency. I soon found myself among a class of people who seemed by their manner living never to have thought of the life beyond this. I was permitted to preach a few times in the community church; but when I began to press the truth into those who would turn out to hear me, the preacher at turn out to hear me, the preacher at that time, who was a sport and had been here six years, finally refused to allow me space in the house. I preached at various places occasionally when opportunity presented and my office work permitted. We live in the depot living rooms upstairs. My faithful wife, in her great zeal for spiritual things, never lost an opportunity to present the truth to opportunity to present the truth to her callers, and she made an audience of almost every caller. It finally developed that any callers would expect to hear some gospel, and, of course, people thought we had such a peculiar religion. In the month of August a Southern Methodist lady preacher came along and started a series of meetings in the community church building; but they wanted her to step aside during show nights, and she re-belled. Through the kindness of a merchant in the center of town there was a vacant hall made ready and her services continued there. Soon as her great "Holy Ghost" meeting was over (I had attended almost every night) there was a cry for another preacher to come in while the people were stirred up and seemed to be thinking; so I at once wrote for Brother J. C. McDonald, of Snyder, Okla., who began the meeting just one week from the day I wrote him. Brother McDonald presented truth as "it is written," and one was baptized. I have heard lots of comments about this meeting, and have reason to believe that when Brother McDonald comes here next year we will have a wonderful meeting. We have met for worship each Lord's day since Brother McDonald was here, and to-day I preached to a nice audience. We are holding meeting in my living rooms upstairs, and hope to start a Bible reading in the near future. One was baptized and one who had been dead to the cause for many years came in. We now have five members here.—C. A. Trevillion.

KIRK

Lillian Frances Mary Kirk was born on January 2, 1922, and died on August 8, 1925. She was the daugh-ter of O. M. and Mamie A. Kirk. Her father passed away a little more than a year ago, and even though Lillian was very young, she took her father's death very hard and often spoke of him and expressed the desire E. Badger conducted the funeral at Graton, Cal., on Sunday, August 9. Jesus said: "Of such is the kingdom of heaven." Hence, we sorrow not as those who have no hope. While her mother and little brothers will miss her greatly, still they have the sweet assurance that Lillian is safe in the arms of Jesus.

BUNDREN.

On Thursday night, September 17, 1925, Dr. G. A. Bundren, of Grubbs, Ark., departed this life. He had for some time been a victim of heart trouble. On the morning of Septem-ber 17 he told father that he realized his days were limited, that he would soon be called to go; but he said it would be a happy exchange for him. Brother Bundren was a Christian worker, a kind father, and a loving husband. He obeyed the gospel while in youth and continued in the in youth and continued in the work for the Lord until his death. He was seventy-nine years, eight months, and seventeen days old. He leaves one daughter, one son, and some grand-children to mourn his departure; but they weep not as those that have no hope. #### SONG SUNBEAMS

Edited by Charles H. Gabriel. Of this book and its editor. T. B. Mosley, a first-class music composer, says: "It is the best book of the kind I ever examined. It is indeed a high-class collection of real songs, suited for children, the most beautiful melodies, supported by rich harmonies, which are characteristic of Mr. Charles H. Gabriel, who is, no doubt, in a class by himself as a composer of this grade of music."

CLIFFORD.

Mrs. Amanda Clifford (née Simons), widow of George Clifford, died at her home in Gadsden, Tenn, September 9, 1925. Sister Clifford was eighty-four years, ten months, and twenty-one days old. She was the mother of two sons and one daughter, all of whom are living. She obeyed the gospal more than forty years ago, lived a Christian life, and went to her grave in the triumphs of a living faith and with the Christian's hope. She was a doting, loving mother and grand-mother, having in her home at the time of her death three motherless grandchildren. Hers was largely a life of trials, sorrows, and disappointments; but above all these, we believe, she "laid up for herself treasures in heaven," and now they will be given her, and they will be hers to use and to enjoy, as long as eternity shall last. We hope to meet her where partings will be no more. Funeral services were conducted by the writer in the church house at Gadsden.

J. L. HOLLAND.

LUSK.

How sad, yet how true, the saying. "It is appointed unto men once to die!" On July 20, 1925, the angel of death visited the home of Brother Lewis Lusk, in Milan, Tenn., and claimed as his own his beloved wife and devoted companion, Fannie. Sister Lusk's maiden name was Patton. She was born on August 30, 1863, and was married to Lewis Lusk on January 7, 1883. Besides her husband, she leaves three sons and a host of other relatives to mourn her death. She obeyed the gospel and became a child of God in August, 1883, and was a faithful Christian until death. Hers was a Christian home and a home for preachers. She was a devoted wife, a loving mother, a good neighbor, and one of God's noble women. The writer has shared the hospitalities of that home many times, and was present and tried to speak words of comfort to the sorrowing ones at the grave, after which the body was lowered to its last resting place, to await the resurrection morn, when Jesus shall come to claim his own. J. L. HOLLAND.

DEAN

Lillie Mai Dodson was born on May 14, 1860. While in her teens, at Old Lasea, in Maury County, Tenn., she obeyed the gospel. She was married to John G. Dean, September 19, 1877. To this union six children were born, who survive her. Her husband preceded her a year and a few days. Early on the morning of August 1, 1925, near the old home, at her son Walter's, without warning, she was summoned to leave the cares and toils of this world. Funeral services were conducted on Sunday afternoon, at the home place, by Elder E. P. Watson. She was industrious, working with her hands for the comfort of her family. She was pleasant in her home, a kind friend and a good neighbor. What a shock to the children, and to the community as well, on learning that Sister Dean, while engaged in the morning work, fell prostrate on the floor with her broom in hand, never uttering a word. The remains were laid to rest beneath beautiful floral offerings, presented by the children as a token of love, in the cemetery at Caney Spring, Tenn. The eldest son was absent on this sad occasion, being in California. We trust they may be reunited in the heavenly home.

Mrs. G. H. WALKER.

BEASLEY.

Brother Zack W. Beasley was born on August 4, 1849, and died on July 5, 1925, aged seventy-five years, eleven months, and one day. Brother Beasley was married to Ella Beasley in February, 1869. To them twelve children were born. Eight are now living—three sons and five daughters ing—three sons and five daughters—all members of the church of Christ. Brother Beasley obeyed the gospel under the preaching of Brother Frank Davis in 1875. I first met Brother Beasley thirty-three years ago, while I was conducting a meeting at Boston, Williamson County, Tenn. He afterwards moved near Burwood, in the same county, and worshiped at Thompson Station till I started the congregation at Burwood. He and Sister Beasley then began to worship with us at Burwood. Brother Beasley was an elder in the Burwood congregation becoming such by virtue of gation, becoming such by virtue of his spiritual growth. Brother and Sister Beasley seemed to remember their marriage vows to make life pleasant and happy for each other. Brother and happy for each other. Brother Beasley was esteemed very highly by both the church and the world. That was evident from the great concourse of people that attended his tuneral and burial. Funeral services were conducted by the writer, after which his body was laid to rest in the Burwood cemetery. Brother Beasley will be sadly missed in the home, in the community and in all church, in the community, and in all the walks of life. May the rich promises offered in God's word comfort and console the sorrowing ones in their sad bereavement.

GOSPEL ADVOCATE

The GOSPEL ADVOCATE is the oldest living periodical published in the interest of the church of Christ. It is now in its sixty-seventh volume, and it has a larger list of regular, paid-up subscribers than it has ever had before. Its circulation is increasing rapidly, and it is daily growing in favor with the people. It contains twenty-four pages, and is issued every week. It is printed in large, clear type, on good paper, and is neatly pasted and trimmed. It has by far the largest circulation of any periodical published south of the Mason and Dixon Line in the interest of the church of Christ. It has regular editorial writers, besides a large number of able and regular contributors. It has all of the regular departments of the best religious periodicals.

In editorial policy it stands for individual consecration, against ecclesiastic organizations, as the scriptural and best method of doing missionary work. It recognizes no organization but the church of Christ as a scriptural medium of converting the world and developing the Christian character.

It opposes all human creeds and ecclesiastic councils, and pleads for the right of each individual to study the Scriptures for himself and formulate his own faith, without dictation or hindrance from churchly dignitaries. It opposes all clerical assumption of official authority in the church, and stands for the scriptural doctrine that each Christian has an office to fill, a work to perform—that all are kings and priests unto God.

It stoutly advocates the doctrine of missions, and argues unceasingly that every Christian is a divinely commissioned missionary and every church is a scripturally organized missionary society. The mission of every Christian and the design of every church is to preach the gospel to all the world.

It believes in, and stoutly advocates, congregational singing, as opposed to select choirs and instrumental performances, as the best and most soul-stirring church music. Let all the people sing. Provide a book for everybody in the house, and let us all make a joyful noise unto the Lord.

PARKER-COLLEY DEBATE.

BY R. L. REESE.

Beginning on September 1, at Refuge church of Christ, near McNairy, Tenn., a four-days' debate was held between R. L. Colley, Christian, and N. V. Parker, Primitive Baptist. The following propositions were dis-

- · (1) "The Scriptures teach that eternal life to alien sinners is a gift of God, without any action on the part of the sinner."
- (2) "The Scriptures teach that faith. repentance, confession, and baptism are conditions of salvation, or pardon, to alien sinners."
- (3) "The Scriptures teach that all for whom Christ died will be saved in heaven without the loss of one."
- (4) "The Scriptures teach that it is possible for a child of God to so act as to be lost in hell."

Parker affirmed the first and third propositions; Brother Colley affirmed the second and fourth.

This debate was conducted on a high plane and resulted in a great victory for truth and righteousness. Brother Colley was highly commended for his able defense. It was the consensus of opinion that Parker failed in every contention.

NEGLECTING GOD'S SERVICE. BY C. B. THOMAS.

Because of increased production in the automobile factories, many new people are coming to Flint, Mich., daily. Some of these are members of the church of Christ, and, as such, they should be found at the house of the Lord at least on the Lord's day. But this is not always the case. In going away from their home congregations into strange places, many fail to recognize this fact, and, as a result, soon lose all interest in church work. Therefore, I earnestly request all who read this, who have friends or relatives living in this city, to write them and insist that they attend church regularly, and at the same time write me, giving me their names and addresses, and I will look them up and encourage them to continue in the faith.

We would be glad if Brother Thomas would suggest that all who have friends at home, who "forsake the assembling of themselves together, as the custom of some is," would both write to them and speak to them on the subject. Let them not confine their efforts to the comparatively few that depart for distant cities. All members need to take the lesson to heart and to practice it daily within the precincts of their own congregations. "Exhorting one another: and so much the more, as ye see the day drawing nigh." (Heb. 10: 25.) When people neglect God's service while away from home, it shows that their hearts were not right while they were at home. J. A. A.

SANTA ROSA CHRISTIAN ACADEMY.

BY FELIX G. OWEN.

The second year's work will begin on October 5. A good interest is being manifested. I believe there is no estimating the good done the first year, but we hope to do better work in every way the second year. The school is located two miles west of the city on a paved highway and electric car line. Free tuition and free bus service give the convenience of town. We have primary, elementary, and high-school grades in regular school work; and, besides, every pupil recites one lesson daily from the Bible. Believing the Bible to be the revealed will of God, we believe the implanting of its principles in the human heart is the only real remedy for the awful sins of any generation. During the earliest years of childhood the most lasting principles of character are rooted in the heart of the individual, and this is the period when there is the greatest need of Christian training. People become and are what they are taught. But do we realize when and where and how this teaching is done? The public sign-boards, the cheap and meaningless pictures of the newspapers, and even the news of the newspapers-all these go to make up the character of the child who comes in contact with these influences. Then there is the influence of personal touch with others, companionship. The influence is not according to what one says or does so much as what one is. In selecting a teacher, preacher, or leader, the great question is not, "What does he say, do, or teach?" but, "What is he?"

  "At the Central church of Christ in Fort Worth we have been using in our Bible school Elam's Notes and other literature of his. For a great number of years the writer of this has felt that Brother Elam was one of the best-prepared men in the brotherhood for the preparation of such literature. His Notes, in our best judgment, represent, or reflect, the best efforts he has ever made. Both as an elder of the congregation and as a teacher in our Bible School, I have very great pleasure in indorsing his Notes. To the extent that an expression of ever views is of value, I assure you we are very pleased to give it." (J. G. Wilkinson.)

  "I have used Elam's Quarteriles for years.
- pleased to give it." (J. G. Wilkinson.)

  "I have used Elam's Quarterlies for years. They are superior to any that I have seen. Elam's Notes on Bible School Lessons are much fuller than they. They give the historical setting as to time and place that is needed and valuable. They give so many scriptural citations and references—Scriptural citations and references—Scriptural citations and references—Scriptural that introduce the text or correborate the text—that the average student may know the geography, the history, and the full meaning of the lesson. They give so many lessons, deducted from the copious citations of Scriptures, that the student may know more perfectly God's will. For years I have used Peloubet's Select Notes. I compare them weekly. I do not hesitate to say that Elam's Notes are infinitely superior, if you want to know the Bible." (C. F. Koit.)

CURRENT COMMENT

By JAMES A. ALLEN

Several weeks ago, upon my suggestion and at my request, I was permitted to speak to the Vine Street Christian Church, of this city. I had some hope of accomplishing good, and, for this reason, I was a self-invited guest. I was of the opinion that many in the Vine Street Church are beginning to realize that instrumental music in the worship, the hired choir, and humanly organized societies are unscriptural and worldly. Since I preached there an active member of the congregation, a prominent business man of Nashville, informed me that he thinks it unscriptural to have a hired choir to do the singing for the congregation. I may be wrong, but my personal opinion is that the brethren upon whom the main burden rests at Vine Street would be glad to see the congregation abandon innovations and reinstate the apostolic order of things.

In introducing me to the audience, Judge John R. Aust, a very active member of the Vine Street Church, at my request, stated clearly and plainly that I was opposed to some of the things they had in their worship and that my presence did not mean that I had changed my views one whit. That there might be no misunderstanding, Judge Aust himself conducted the preliminaries, leaving me nothing to do but to preach the sermon. I preached the word of God to the best of my ability as adapted to the prejudices and passions of the audience.

I took no part in those things they practice that I believe are sinful. I participated in a part of the prayer, and, rather than miss the Lord's Supper altogether, I partook of the emblems. But I have since regretted that I even partook of the Supper. My experience at Vine Street convinces me that it is doubtful if a church with so many innovations in it and with so much of the spirit of the world can set the Lord's table. I regret that, for the sake of trying to do them some good, I passed that Lord's day without completing my worship. Some may ask, if I could go once, could I not go again? My reply is: Not at the eleven-o'clock service, unless some of our brethren would have a special meeting in the afternoon.

so that I might fully and acceptably engage in the worship.

I am aware that many of our brethren, while traveling, have partaken of the emblems with the "digressives" rather than miss them. I did this once while traveling in Florida. I never expect to do it again.

When it was announced that I would preach at Vine Street, many of the brethren were anxious that I should "be easy with them" and that I should keep in mind that I was a self-invited guest. Some few earnestly desired that I should "skin 'em." In fact, I received so much advice that I hardly knew what to do with it all. I only mention this to call the attention of the "digressives" to the fact that most of the bitterness o' which they complain is on their side. Most of our brethren, while realizing the sin of compromising the word of God in the slightest particular, wish to treat them kindly and to kindly show them the sin and error of their way.

But, at the same time, we are rapidly coming to doubt that the "digressives" are our "brethren." They have little in common with us. They have, indeed, been baptized into Christ, and are, therefore, children of God. But their sins have disinherited them and they stand as apostate children. The organ and society are not their main troubles. The seat of the trouble lies in the fact that they are actuated by the spirit of the world.

The first principle of acceptable service to God is that those who would serve God must recognize him as the Lawgiver and Ruler. To do this, those who would worship and serve God can do only what God commands them to do. To do anything as worship or service to God that God does not comand to be done is presumption and is an effort to dethrone God as Lawgiver and Ruler. God's word forbids a man to do anything that it does not authorize or command him to do. Clearly the Bible repeatedly prohibits what it does not require. "What thing soever I command you, that shall ye observe to do: thou shalt not add thereto, nor diminish from it." (Deut. 12: 32.)

Those who introduce the organ and hired choirs into the worship confess that they are not commanded and that they can worship without them. This is to give up the question. It cannot be right to have them unless they are commanded; and if they are commanded, they could not confess that they can worship without them.

It is absurd and childish to contend that the Bible authorizes instrumental music in the worship, for the reason that all agree that there was no such practice among Christians in Bible times. How could the Bible authorize a practice that did not then exist? It seems ironical to see a man take his Bible and try to prove that there were instruments of music in the New Testament churches. when that man knows and admits that there were no instruments in any church until the seventh century. For a man to so do is to act the part of a hypocrite. It is simply a matter of agreement, in which all scholars universally concur, that the organ was not introduced until the seventh century. All encyclopedists, historians, and commentators so testify. Chambers' Encyclopedia says: "The organ is said to have been first introduced by Pope Vitalian I. in 666. In 757 a great organ was sent as a present to Pepin by the Byzantine emperor, Constantine Copronymus, and placed in the church of St. Corneille at Compeigne." (Volume VII., page 112.)

It is equally wicked to try to make a play on "psallo" as used by the inspired writers in the Greek original of the New Testament. All scholars testify that the Greek word, as used by the inspired writers, can only mean in English that we must sing; that it can no more include instrumental music than "baptizo" includes sprinkling or pouring. Professional debaters seek to darken the waters, like a cuttlefish, on "psallo," because the majority of almost any English audience knows nothing of Greek. This is the reason they "psallo" so much in debate. And yet the average English reader of the New Testament, by the exercise of common sense, can easily see what "psallo" means by what was done when it was used. When the New Testament congregations were commanded to "psallo," they sang, engaged in congregational singing, as all admit. There could be no "with or without," because all agree that they sang "without." "Psallo," then. means "without."

The prophet asks: "Shall two walk together, except they have agreed?" (Amos 3: 3.) Two cannot agree, except upon a basis of agreement. The word of God is the only basis upon which all can conscientiously agree. All can conscientiously teach and practice what the word of God authorizes and commands. The religious world cannot all agree on anything else and will never be united until all come to this.

The "digressives" were once with us. We are still standing where they once stood. They have "fallen away," departed, apostatized from the original ground occupied by those who started out to restore primitive Christianity in doctrine and practice. The outside world is rapidly awakening to the fact that they have forsaken their original position.

Brother J. G. Malphurs, of Blackwater, Mo., under date of October 8, 1925, writes:

The brethren here are rejoicing over the judge's decision of last Monday, which leaves the meetinghouse and preacher's home safe for New Testament doctrine. The transgressive brethren brought suit against us in the June term of court for possession, and the matter had been in the judge's care until last Monday. He ruled that the defendants (the loyal brethren) had not departed from the doctrine and practice of the church since the property was acquired, therefore he could not dispossess them. It has been a long and trying fight. For years this old church fought apostasy, innovation upon God's plan. The split was unavoidable. We tried to keep the erring ones with us; "but they went out, that they might be made manifest that they all are not of us." (1 John 2: 19.) We are at peace and in the best working condition for years. We expect to remodel the church house and hope to do much mission work. The decision means much to other churches who are on the verge of the same trouble. Brother J. H. Lawson, of Houston, Texas, with three Missouri lawyers, defended us, and did a good job. We hardly think the erring brethren will make an appeal.

It will be noted that the "transgressives" brought the lawsuit. For years hundreds of our churches have been giving up their houses rather than go to law. "But I say unto you, Resist not him that is evil: but whosoever smiteth thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the other also. And if any man would go to law with thee, and take away thy coat, let him have thy cloak also. And whosoever shall compel thee to go one mile, go with him two." (Matt. 5: 39-41.) In 1 Cor. 6: 1-8, Paul teaches that it is sinful for brother to go to law with brother before unbelievers, but teaches that the wise men among the brethren should decide their differences. Rather than bring a lawsuit against a brother before an unbeliever, the apostle asks: "Why not rather take wrong? why not rather be defrauded?"

But at Blackwater, Mo., those who have lost all identity with us brought suit against us. They could hardly be regarded as our "brethren." Brother Malphurs and those with him simply claimed the protection of the court. When suit was brought against Paul for his life, he simply presented his side of the case to the court. If the judges before whom Paul appeared had been as righteous and honest as the Missouri judge, Paul would have won his case

Brother Malphurs says: "He ruled that the defendants (the loval brethren) had not departed from the doctrine and practice of the church since the property was acquired, therefore he could not dispossess them." The Vine Street meetinghouse belongs to us. So did the first meetinghouse of the Woodland Street Church, for whom Walker preaches. Brother E. G. Sewell aided largely in building it, and Brother David Lipscomb personally contributed more than eleven hundred dollars. Hundreds of other houses belong to us. The people who built these houses, and who are still their rightful owners, are not now allowed to hold services in them. In early days the courts had not learned that the "transgressives" have departed from the original doctrine and practice and that they are "not of us." The decision of the Missouri judge shows that they are learning.

The first organ was not introduced among the disciples until after the death of those who originally started out to restore Bible Christianity. A. Campbell was so strongly opposed to it that he would not speak where one was used, and said: "I presume, to all spiritually-minded Christians, such aids would be as a cowbell in a concert." Those who have introduced the organ can claim no identity with the original plea of the Reformation.

We wish to use discretion and to be kind in showing the "transgressives" the error of their way. We wish to exert every effort to win them back to their "first love."

THE PERSON OF CHRIST.
BY L. D. PERKINS.

The person of Christ is an important subject. I say this because I believe it to be the foundation of all others, and upon this foundation rests the Christian religion. Whatever may be said about the various aspects of our Lord's life and work during the days of his flesh, all these must depend for their value and significance on the fact of who and what he himself was and is. That our Lord attached great importance to this is seen from a question put to his disciples when he said: "Whom do men say that I the Son of man am?" When he received their answer, he put the question squarely to them: "But whom say ye that I am?" The fact that he asked this question and in such a way suggests the thought that we should have clear and definite convictions and understanding along these lines.

That personality among ourselves counts for much, far more than either gifts or cleverness, cannot be denied. These go far and mean much in securing success in this life and the affairs of this world. But in the Christian life and work it is the personality of the worker that carries the most potent and permanent influence. This being true among men, how much more must it be in the case of our Lord and Christ! Therefore, anything that will help us to understand and appreciate his marvelous personality will be of infinite value and service to us.

In this connection it may be pointed out that it is one of the most interesting features of the New Testament study to mark the gradual progress of thought made by the primitive saints regarding the personality of the Lord Jesus. Beginning with the dimmest and haziest of ideas, they went on from discovery to discovery until the glory of his resurrection triumph swept them clear above all doubt and uncertainty into a faith that was ready to endure anything and everything for its vindication, even unto death itself. One would have thought that such testimony from such a source would have been hailed by Christians everywhere as being absolutely above suspicion, but it is not so. Such is the way of the human heart to err that this very growth in knowledge and reverent adoration concerning the personality of our Lord has been laid hold of by some who ought to have known better as something that dims rather than enhances the luster of the Savior's personality; "because," they say, "this growing tendency to exalt the person of Christ by the early saints was only an effort on their part to place him on a higher pinnacle than anything which he ever claimed for himself." Any experienced believer will have no trouble in answering such sophistry as that. The universal Christian experience is that they who best know the Savior love and reference him the most. The New Testament saints have testified to this fact-that they found it so.

So far as the mystery of Christ in person is concerned, it has to be at once conceded that the mystery is there. There is no getting away from that fact. Paul said: "Great is the mystery of godliness: God . . . manifest in the flesh." The expression, "God manifest in the flesh," introduces Christ as the Person in mystery. While he was "the fullness of the Godhead bodily," at the same time he was a man in the flesh as you and I are human beings in the flesh. Just where the human begins in the person of Christ is a mystery, and where it ends is just as much a mystery. And what may be said of the human may also be said of the divine or God part. Where does it begin, and where does it end? "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God. The same was in the beginning with God. All things were made through him; and without him was not anything made that hath been made." If he existed in the beginning, and he did, then we might well ask those who are so much concerned about evolution: Did Christ come into existence by the system of evolution—if, indeed, there be such a system? Just why he is called the "Word," we do not know, and it is a mystery unless by this expression it is meant that he was the One who spoke all things into existence.

Then comes the mystery of the transmigration of the soul, for certainly this took place when he entered the body of flesh and came and dwelt among men. Again: "For the word of God is living and active, and sharper than any two-edged sword, and piercing even to the dividing of soul and spirit, of both joints and marrow, and quick to discern the thoughts and intents of the heart." Can it be otherwise than that the Lord Christ is connected mysteriously with the written word of God and is the life thereof?

Next, I would call attention to the declared conception, unlike any other conception either before or since—namely, by the Holy Spirit—an unseen Person. Knowing as we do the way of reproduction in the fleshly kingdom, no man could or would ever have thought of such a way of conception. As we think of the mystery at this point, it grows greater and greater. But that such is truth must be believed and accepted as truth if we are to believe anything the Book teaches. Of him it is declared that he is "the fullness of the Godhead bodily"—God, Christ, and the Holy Spirit forming the blessed Trinity. "The fullness of the Godhead bodily"—all complete. As God is divine, so is Christ; as God is infinite, so is Christ; and as God is eternal, so is Christ eternal.

The great mystery to me is that Christ could be like God and be in the body of flesh at the same time. But the fact that something is a mystery does not necessarily imply that it is any the less a reality. Let us look at the case of human life itself—that is, the physical life that is common to us all. No one in his senses doubts its reality, yet it is a great mystery. No one, not even the wisest, can tell us what it is. Whatever men may gather in the future regarding this life, it must be admitted that so far God has reserved that secret for himself.

The mystery of the Lord's personality has been the theme of endless controversy all down the ages. Every school of thought has pronounced its verdict upon it with ever-varying accents of finality, and the conflict rages still. In our personal experience with the Lord the heart is satisfied, the mind clarified, and the statement in the Old Testament, "The secret of the Lord is with them that fear him," is fulfilled. To the intelligent believer the mystery of our Lord's personality is no more a matter of wonder than the mystery of his own. When I come to think of the plan of redemption of which Christ is the author, how it saves, how it purifies the heart, how it redeems from sin, and his atoning blood which must be shed that sins might be forgiven, I confess it all a mystery unexplainable. But, after all, it is that which all true children of God appreciate. "And without controversy great is the mystery of godliness: he [the Christ] who was manifested in the flesh, justified in the Spirit, seen of angels, preached among the nations, believed on in the world, received up in glory." Wonderful, wonderful, wonderful is the mystery of the Person of Christ, the Redeemer, the Savior, the Lord and King of us all!

> "Who is he in yonder stall, At whose feet the shepherds fall? "Tis the Lord.—O wondrous story!— "Tis the Lord, the King of glory. At his feet we humbly fall; Crown him, crown him, Lord of all."

TREMBLING AT GOD'S WORD.

BY JAMES E. CHESSOR.

PENKNIFING GOD'S WORD.

"If any man thinketh that he is wise among you in this world, let him become a fool, that he may become wise."
(1 Cor. 3: 18.)

It is tragic when men lose the sense of shock over sin and cease to tremble at God's word. The warnings of God can heal backsliding when men give heed and let the fear of God enter their hearts. But hopeless apostasy comes when they turn a deaf ear to God's demands. And such indifference is invariably the result of rejecting God's word, of doing despite to the Spirit of grace. A story in Jer. 36 well illustrates this point.

When the roll with God's warnings, spoken through Jeremiah to the statesmen of Judah, was first read, they trembled at God's word. "Now it came to pass, when they had heard all the words, they turned in fear one toward another." But when, upon the second reading, their wicked king, listening with them, cut with penknife and burned with fire the roll, they were infected with his infidel rashness, and it is said that "they were not afraid, nor rent their garments." They had ceased to tremble at God's word. They were not afraid, "neither the king, nor any of his servants that heard all these words."

Thus they had fallen into a terrible condition of heart. Reverence, awe, fear, were cast out. The result was penknifing the sacred word and burning it with fire! But not with impunity. No, nor shall time come when God's word can be rejected and despised with impunity. It is a fearful thing to esteem it lightly, to handle it deceitfully. So they could burn the record, but not the doom of the unheeded warning, and therefore it was that the dead body of Jehoiakim was at last "cast out in the day to the heat, and in the night to the frost."

Tell me, can we hope to escape a worse fate if we also penknife the word of God? Yet the word of God is irreverently handled nowadays and penknifed, as it were, without fear. But for all this, God shall bring men into judgment—modernists, infidels, agnostics, false teachers—who make subtle efforts to destroy faith—all who handle his word deceitfully. What we need to-day is men who will reverence God, who will tremble at his word. Saith Jehovah: "But to this man will I look, even to him that is of a poor and contrite spirit, and that trembleth at my word."

Knowing Too Much-Worldly-wise.

The trouble with Jehoiakim was that he knew too much. He was wise in his own eyes, puffed up, presumptuous, self-sufficient. That is the trouble with many penknifing scribes and ecclesiastical dignitaries to-day. Paul warns against this sort of thing: "Let no man deceive himself. If any man thinketh that he is wise among you in this world, let him become a fool, that he may become wise!" Divesting himself of all arrogance, emptying himself of worldly wisdom, he may indeed become wise unto salvation. There is no other way to saving wisdom, no other path to salvation.

Those who would know God seek him in vain through the wisdom of the world. "In the wisdom of God the world through its wisdom knew not God." It is not through the wisdom of the world that man sees the cross, or understands it, or can be persuaded to see it, for a characteristic of worldly wisdom is the absence of discernment in spiritual things, "For the word of the cross is to them that perish foolishness; but unto us who are saved it is the power of God." "For seeing that in the wisdom of God the world through its wisdom knew not God, it was God's good pleasure through the foolishness of the preaching to save them that believe. Seeing that Jews ask for signs, and Greeks seek after wisdom: but we preach Christ crucified, unto Jews a stumblingblock, and unto Gentiles foolishness; but unto them that are called, both Jews and Greeks, Christ the power of God, and the wisdom of God."

What we think oftentimes blots out what we could know. We are so wise that we cease to learn; so strong that our strength becomes a weakness. Christ is both the power and the wisdom of God, but we do not always rely on him. "But of him are ye in Christ Jesus, who was made unto us wisdom from God, and righteousness and sanctification, and redemption: that, according as it is written, He that glorieth, let him glory in the Lord." "The foolishness of God is wiser than men; and the weakness of God is stronger than men." Is your faith stronger in the wisdom of men, or in the power of God? Do you know too much to know much about God? Do you know too much to know enough? If so, become a fool that you may be wisebecome a babe that you may learn Christ.

MYSTERIES REVEALED UNTO BABES.

Many things that were hidden from the wise were revealed unto babes. It was a characteristic of Christ's ministry. "At that season Jesus answered and said, I thank thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, that thou didst hide these things from the wise and understanding, and didst reveal them unto babes: yea, Father, for so it was well pleasing in thy sight," "And the disciples came, and said unto him, Why speakest thou unto them in parables? And he answered and said unto them, Unto you it is given to know the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven, but to them it is not given. For whosoever hath, to him shall be given, and he shall have abundance: but whosoever hath not, from him shall be taken away even that which he hath. Therefore speak I to them in parables; because seeing they see not, and hearing they hear not, neither do they understand. . . . But blessed are your eyes, for they see; and your ears, for they hear."

Not many wise are called, nor indeed can be called. The cross has no appeal for them. "For behold your calling, brethren, that not many wise after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble, are called: but God chose the fcolish things of the world, that he might put to shame them that are wise; and God chose the weak things of the world, that he might put to shame the things that are strong; and the base things of the world, and the things that are despised, did God choose, yea and the things that are not, that he might bring to naught the things that are: that no flesh should glory before God."

No, not many wise are called. Their own wisdom sets at naught the wisdom of God. They know too much to learn of God. They know too much to accept Jesus as the divine Son of God, and so they spurn his manger and his cross. The blood atonement is to them folly and myth. They would be saved in their own way, by virtue of natural character merely, as though no Savior were needed, as though no Savior had been sent.

None the less, "the wisdom of this world is foolishness with God." "The Lord knoweth the reasonings of the wise, that they are vain."

"A TREMBLING WALK WITH GOD."

Let us not be deceived by the foolish wisdom of the world, nor puffed up, nor presumptuous. Jehovah yet looks on the heart, and esteems the poor and contrite spirit. He yet looks to that soul that trembleth at his word. And to him shall wisdom be granted liberally, so that he shall have no lack; and strength, too, adequate for his proportioned task.

In the noble phrase of Cotton Mather, let our daily life be "a trembling walk with God." And so, walking by the wisdom of the eternal God, his counsel will guide us unerringly through this "misty mid-region" and to ultimate realms of glory.

COMMENDATION OF OUR LATEST BOOK, "THE BIBLE VERSUS THEORIES OF EVOLUTION."

Sherman, Texas, October 13, 1925.—Dear Brethren: When I reached home last Saturday, I found a quantity of mail awaiting me, and in the lot was the copy of your new book, "The Bible versus Theories of Evolution." And although I had been on the train for three nights and was worn out, I did not sleep until I had hastily examined every chapter in the book, except those from the pen of Brother Lipscomb, which I had seen before. I unhesitatingly pronounce the book excellent. I have carefully reread the chapters by Brethren Boles, Barret, Baxter, and Owen, and either one of these chapters is worth more than the price of the book to any one who wants to know facts about evolution theories. Other chapters may be as good as these, but I have studied these critically.

Frankly, I am agreeably surprised in the book. It is much better than I expected. I feared that the brethren had, at your request, written their chapters in the midst of other duties and without thorough preparation, but I see no evidence of haste or of lack of preparation. I have almost literally studied my "head off" on the vagaries of evolutionists, and it is a genuine pleasure to me to see that so many of my fellow laborers have traveled over the same dark, dangerous, winding way that I have trod. And we have all reached the same destination! We stand together on the summit of God's sun-crowned mountains of jaith.

You have published many good books, but you have never brought out a book that was more timely or that did more good than this one is calculated to do. I bespeak for it a wide circulation, and I shall do my best to make good the prediction. May the Lord bless this effort and make it the means of saving many from the "brute-beast" philosophy of the present day and the utter ruin that it is certain to bring upon the earth, is the prayer of

G. C. BREWER.

CENTRAL CHURCH OF CHRIST.

A gift appreciated beyond expression and which will be far-reaching in its consequences was the entire library of Brother W. H. Timmons, by his widow, Sister Timmons. Brother Timmons was associated with Harding, Lipscomb, Sewell, and many of the pioneers connected with the Restoration movement. He was not only a devout preacher of ability, but a man of scholarly attainments. His library reflects the personality of the man.

The library of the late Carey E. Morgan has been purchased. Brother Morgan appreciated good books and was careful in his selection. The majority of these books are Bible commentaries, books of sermons, books on church history, etc.

In these two splendid libraries combined are many choice, rare volumes now out of print. The collection contains a number of A. Campbell's works (including twentyfive bound volumes of the Millennial Harbinger), "The Old-Path Pulpit," "The Life of 'Raccoon' John Smith," and many other books of like character, and several good Bible commentaries, including Adam Clarke. There are also a number of choice literary volumes, histories, books of reference, etc., including a complete set of Encyclopedia Britannica. It is the purpose of the congregation to maintain a reading room with a religious library accessible to the public, and especially for the use of young men preparing to preach the gospel. Any contribution of good books to this library will be appreciated. Address all communications to Central Church of Christ, 143 Fifth Avenue, North, Nashville, Tenn.

The auditorium in which the Central congregation will meet is now under construction. It will probably be the first of the year before it is complete. In the meantime the congregation is carrying on the work in a limited way in a small room in one of the buildings on the premises. On account of the lack of room the attendance will necessarily be limited until the auditorium shall have been completed. It is desired now, however, to get in touch with any members of the church who may have come to Nashville and have not identified themselves with any congregation. Members of the church throughout Tennessee and neighboring States are coming to Nashville to reside temporarily or permanently. Many such persons for various reasons fail in being promptly identified with any of the congregations here. This should not be. Therefore, the Central church of Christ takes this means of asking all congregations or individual Christians everywhere to aid in finding brethren who come as strangers to Nashville by furnishing their names and addresses as accurately as possible. The brethren here will gladly aid the strangers in getting in touch with brethren and friends in Nashville. The Central church of Christ also desires the names of any brethren or sisters coming to Nashville hospitals for treatment whom they can assist or encourage by visiting or otherwise.

TENNESSEE ORPHAN HOME.

BY JOHN W. FRY.

We are now about the middle of the last month of the eighth year under the present management, which took charge on November 1, 1917. Our fiscal year ends on October 31. Heretofore Brother McQuiddy employed the auditor to audit the books each year. Brother W. C. Slayden has done the auditing. He is a certified public accountant. Unless some one of the directors prefers another, he will audit this year, for he is reasonable and does the work well.

The maintenance cost per child may be more than for any previous year, on account of the drought, which has made our milk and vegetables cost more. We have cared for more children, so the daily average in the Home has been more than heretofore. We have eighty-four children in the Home. Over fifty attend the city public schools; others not of school age. All now are in good health.

Many of our children should be in good, Christian family homes, but we have not the applications for children from families, and have not had as many applications during the last six months as we had hoped. It is our judgment, based on observation and experience, that it is not best for children to remain too long in mass, for some do not do as well in a crowd as in small numbers.

Children in good family homes have more contact with mature minds, and are assigned duties and obligations to carry out, which cannot be given them where there are so many, and it is a true saying that "we learn things by doing them." It is the policy of the Tennessee Orphan Home to keep as near in line, like a good family home, as much as possible. Everything of an institutional character is avoided that can be.

Our contributing churches and individuals to the maintenance of the Home have certainly done well. We count them true and loyal partners in the work, and without their fellowship we could do nothing. However, we do not get new ones added in fellowshiping the work as we would like. So, sometimes, I feel that I do not know how to reach them. We want the advice and suggestions from our directors, and we hope where opportunity is open that they will call attention to the work of caring for children that is being done by the Tennessee Orphan Home, which will be more effective than anything I can say or do. Of course, I know our directors have done lots and lots of good work, and deserve full credit for the success of the Tennessee Orphan Home. We still owe half of the playground equipment, and hope to pay it before the last of this month.

"THOUGH HE SLAY ME."

BY D. F. DRAPER.

Possibly this is the strongest expression in Holy Writ of simple faith. No stronger faith can be thought of than that of believing in one's slayer—not only a belief, but an implicit trust. If I am slain by him, I'll believe it is for the best, and still I'll believe in my slayer.

Job had lost all his property, his children, and his friends, and, added to all this, he was advised by his wife to "curse God and die;" but he yielded not to the temptations of Satan nor to the desperate advice from his grouchy and pessimistic wife.

It has been said that a firm faith is the best theology, a good life is the best philosophy, a clean conscience is the best law, honesty is the best policy, and temperance is the best physic. Sure, an abiding faith gives an anchor to the soul-peace, serenity, contentment, tranquillity, that can be gained in no other way. This is not theory, nor deductive reasoning, nor the declaration of creed or dogma, but the experience of the ages, and the promise of Him who is able to love and to do exceedingly above all that can be seen, heard, or conceived by the mind of man. I close this thought with a fitting quotation: "For I reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us." For "we know that all things work together for good to them that love God." And "if God be for us, who can be against us?"

The eye of faith sees the unseen. The deepest darkness is that darkness that comes to the man who closes his eyes and stops his ears to the demands of his Creator. Inexpressibly tragic and sad is he who, "having no hope and without hope in the world," passes his life here without a trust in him. The darkness of the caverns of earth, that of sightless eyes, is not comparable to the mental and spiritual darkness of such a one. Awful indeed is the blindness of him who has not the eye of faith! There is no darkness like the darkness of hopelessness and woe, for these can exist only where God is not. Our life is but a vapor; it appears only for a moment and is gone. A faith, a hope, a trust, a hold that will not turn loose! Though I'm killed in the act, yet will I trust Him. Such unbounded faith! Sure, such faith is to be rewarded.

TOPIC AND TEXT.

BY A. B. LIPSCOMB.

In all ages of the world there has been a tendency to set apart certain days, places, and occasions of worship, and to think those were the chief realms in which religion was to act. But Paul proclaimed the importance of religion in the ordinary affairs of our life. He said: "Whether therefore ye eat or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God."

Undoubtedly the most prominent day in the world's religious calendar is Easter Sunday. Long before that day arrives there are those who make special preparations for it. There must not only be a special message, but special music and special dresses for the occasion. The idea is that on this glad day special blessings and happiness ensue. Such a tendency cropped out in the days of the first disciples and was very promptly rebuked. "Let no man therefore judge you in meat, or in drink, or in respect of a feast day or a new moon or a sabbath day." So far as I have been able to observe in my reading and study of the New Testament, there is only one day that takes precedence of others. That is the Lord's day, the first day of every week, when we are told "the disciples gathered together to break bread," and when we are enjoined not to forsake our assembling together, but to exhort one another, and "so much the more, as ye see the day drawing nigh." The apostle John specifically named this day when he said, "I was in the Spirit on the Lord's day."

But there is a sense in which the importance of the Lord's day may be overstressed. It can never take the place of the continuous exercise of faith and prayer and devotion to God. A man cannot be so much of a Christian on Sunday that he can afford to be a worldling all the rest of the week. Genuine Christian religion is never spasmodic. It does not go by fits and starts. If one of us should start for Miami, travel one day in that direction and the next six days in another direction, we would never reach our destination. Though a man seem to be traveling heavenward on the holy Lord's day, if during the following six days in the week he be going toward the world, the flesh, and the devil, he will never reach the great Union Station.

BRINGING CHRIST INTO OUR CONVERSATION.

We should bring the religion of Christ into our everyday conversation. When there is an earthquake, or two trains meet with terrible impact, or men are imprisoned in mines, there are those who then begin to talk about the uncertainty of life. Such people imagine that they are engaged in positively religious conversation. No, you may talk about such things and have no grace of God at all in your hearts. We ought every day to be talking Christ and his salvation. If there is anything glad or beautiful or important about it, we ought to be discussing it. I have noticed that men, in proportion as their Christian experiences are shallow, like to talk about funerals and deathbeds. The real, genuine Christian talks chiefly about this life and the great eternity beyond, and not so much about the insignificant pass between these two residences. If we have really obeyed the gospel and have really felt its blessings in our hearts, let us talk it cheerfully with an illuminated countenance. When two persons talk together, God gives special attention and writes down what they say. In Malachi's book we read this language: "Then they that feared the Lord spake often one to another; and the Lord hearkened, and heard it, and a book of remembrance was written before him for them that feared the Lord, and that thought upon his name." But it is important to know that we must live religion or we cannot talk it.

AND INTO OUR EMPLOYMENTS.

We must bring the religion of Christ into our everyday employments. This not only applies to big men who handle large sums of money and who control the affairs of hundreds of other people, but it applies with equal force to the smallest establishment. Do not excuse yourself by saying that in your humble calling the sphere is too small for the action of such a grand, heavenly principle. In this you are mistaken. When you have anything to do in life, however humble it may seem to be, God is always there to help you do it. And God's Son will help you as when he helped the Galilean fishermen drag Gennesaret, as when he talked to the Samaritan woman at the well, as when he led Matthew sitting at the receipt of customs. A religion that is not good in one place is not worth anything in another place. A sermon is of little value unless we can take it with us behind the plow and the counter, to the office or shop or store where we work every day.

AND INTO OUR EVERYDAY BLESSINGS.

Again, we should bring the Christian religion into our everyday blessings. The ancient Jews were taught to honor their king. Showing their duty toward Solomon, the Psalmist said: "Prayer also shall be made for him continually; and daily shall he be praised." We may seriously inquire, do we show that much respect for the King of heaven? "Continue in prayer, and watch in the same with thanksgiving," writes Paul. We are prone to leave out both watchfulness and thanksgiving. When the autumn comes and the harvests are in, the governor issues proclamation for Thanksgiving Day, and we either observe it very formally or else turn it into a day of merry-making. But every day ought to be a thanksgiving day. We do not recognize the common mercies of life. We must see a blind man being led by a child or a dog before we can appreciate our eyesight. We must see some one terribly afflicted with rheumatism before we appreciate the healthy use of our arms and legs. We are so stupid usually that nothing but the misfortunes of others can rouse us to a sense of thanksgiving. "O give thanks unto the Lord; for he is good: for his mercy endureth forever."

Take the practical religion into your everyday life. Make every day a Lord's day, make every meal a sacrament, make every room you enter a holy room. We all have work to do; let us be willing to do it. We all have sorrows to bear; let us cheerfully bear them. Negligence and indolence will bring the rebuke of everlasting scorn, while faithfulness will hear the award: "Well done, thou good and faithful servant." It will gather its garlands and wave its scepter, and sit upon its throne long after this earth has passed away. Let each one be faithful in his own place. Just so, as one great writer put it, "our every step in life shall be a triumphant march, and the humblest footstool on which we are called to sit will be a conqueror's throne."

ORGANIZATIONS.

BY C. R. NICHOL.

Too many people think more about what to them seems to be expedient than they do about teaching the Bible. They are more concerned about giving prominence to some scheme they have in mind or some organization man has formed than they are in working through the divine institution—the church.

The shortcomings of your neighbor does not prove you to be faultless. The failure of Christians to do the work intrusted to them as members of the church does not license one to form an organization to take over the work commanded by the church. If you are a member of the church and refuse to do your duty as a member of the church in obedience to the King, you are a rebel; if you neglect, you are a derelict—unfaithful, unworthy.

We live in an age of organizations—political, philanthropic, as well as religious. One can hardly conceive of a needed work without looking about and seeing an organization which has been formed by man to carry forward that particular work. There is not a good work in which Christians should engage, be it the alleviation of suffering or the salvation of their fellows, that it is not their duty to do as members of the church.

On what ground do men form organizations to do work commanded the church? Surely it is because they think they can bring into existence an organization better fitted to meet the demands of present conditions of society than is the church organized by the Lord nearly two thousand years ago.

I can easily understand how an organization founded by mere man, one with the attributes and limitations of humans, may be inadequate for even the age in which it was formed, to say nothing of its lack of adaptability to an age centuries after its formation.

Is it thought by any one that the church of Christ was built by a mere man—that the Lord gave the world an organization and outlined work it was insufficient to accomplish? Some insist that the church of the Lord and the methods of work followed by the early Christians were quite sufficient for the first century, but that the church and the methods of the first century are archaic, and that men must in these modern times bring into existence an organization—an up-to-date organization—to function in a realm and put over a work beyond the power of the church. Such a view is not one whit short of infidelity.

It has been said: "The straws show which way the wind blows." It is true that a tree is known by its fruit. Judged by its fruit, there is not a religious institution in the world, formed by man, that will meet the requirements of the word of God.

Do you know there is not a destructive higher critic in all the world to-day who has not been tutored, reared, and active in organizations of a religious nature other than the church of Christ? What else can be expected of them? They doubt the teaching of the Bible that the church is the "pillar and ground of the truth" (1 Tim. 3: 15); that the Scriptures furnish one "completely unto every good work" (2 Tim. 3: 17); that God has given us "all things that pertain unto life and godliness" (2 Pet. 1: 3). With such views, they feel no restraint in pushing their latitudinarian views on others. With them, the Bible is insufficient. They carry through their mental crucible and make abide their adjudication every proposition, and those views which do not meet their conception of what is needed they reject.

The Constitution of the United States is a wonderful production; but since it is the child of human thought, I am prepared to see the changing conditions of society make necessary changes in, and additions to, this Constitution. Not so with the word of God. Jehovah knew the end from the beginning. He knew the necessities of humanity. His word is adapted to man as he is, and the church the Lord built is a child of the divine mind. Through it one must work if he would meet divine approval.

Human institutions seek to attract attention to such organizations and are constantly sounding a trumpet in an effort to get people to see what they are doing. He who is properly instructed and reverences Jehovah strives that unto God "be glory in the church." (Eph. 3: 21.)

"ANTI-WAR SENTIMENT GROWING."

BY C. E. W. DORRIS.

A report of the Tennessee Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in the Nashville Tennessean, Monday evening, October 12, page 5, says: "We are glad to find the anti-war sentiment growing. We are coming more and more to see that war is antichristian."

It is strange to know that people who claim to be Christians are at this late hour learning that carnal warfare is antichristian, but I suppose it is better to learn the lesson late than not at all. How any one can read the New Testament and fail to see that carnal warfare is opposite the spirit of the Master is strange indeed. It seems to me that the "Golden Rule" itself ought to be sufficient to convince any one who proposes to represent the Lord that a Christian cannot participate in carnal warfare, but that, on the other hand, if he does, he ceases to walk in the footsteps of the Prince of Peace. No one can follow the Lord Jesus Christ, or even the "Golden Rule," and take the life of his fellow man. This is one of the first lessons a Christian ought to learn. He who has not learned this lesson has not advanced very far in the principles of Christianity. The Lord left carnal warfare and politics on the outside of the church, and that is where Christians ought to let them stay.

If you are wanting a first-class hymn book, send us your order for "Choice Gospel Hymns." We publish only first-class music books, and books that are filled up with inspiring hymns. We are very much opposed to this jazz music that is destroying the spirituality of the churches.

The forces of evil are exceedingly busy in the world. The Gospel Advocate's ability to participate in the struggle is measured by the extent to which it is read. If every reader would send us only one new subscriber, it would immediately double our circulation. We appeal to every reader to assist us in this great work.

Strong, Valdosta, Ga., October 2: "Brethren who wish to come South to a good climate where they can get good homes near the line of Florida, where it is as healthful as anywhere in the United States and where the climate is fine, will do well to correspond with me, as I may be in position to help them find a good home or farm at reasonable figures."
- C. E. Wooldridge closed at Oakwood, Tenn., last Lord's-day night, after continuing eleven days. It rained almost every day, but there were splendid audiences and interest throughout. Brother Wooldridge preached on Monday and Tuesday nights at Albany, Ala.; preached last night and is to preach to-night at Anniston, Ala.; and is to begin a meeting at Gorgas, Ala., to-morrow night.

Price Billingsley is in the third week of a very fine meeting with the Charlotte Avenue congregation, of this city. Brother Billingsley is doing some splendid preaching, and the congregation is being greatly strengthened and built up. As we go to press, forty have been baptized and about ten identified with the congregation otherwise. There will be services every day this week at 10:30 A.M. and 7:30 P.M. Lindsley Avenue Church (formerly South College Street Church), Nashville, Tenn., from which numerous other congregations in Nashville were started, will have a homecoming on the first Lord's day in November. All in other congregations who were formerly members of this congregation are invited to attend.

Ira Lee Sanders, Hart, Texas: "The mission meeting at Binger, Okla., resulted in eight additions, and I left them with a congregation numbering thirteen. I am now in a mission meeting at Hart, supported by the church at Wellington. The meeting will close this week, and I shall then take up the work at Wellington again."

The attendance at the Twelfth Avenue Church, this city, last Lord's day, was the largest for some time. Nearly every seat in the large auditorium was filled. H. S. Lipscomb did the preaching both morning and evening. The Bible-study attendance was four hundred and fifty. T. Q. Martin will hold the spring meeting for this church.

James J. Reynolds, Woodlawn, Tenn., October 15: "I recently made a short visit to Indianapolis and preached once in the protracted meeting at South Side. With the help of Emmett G. Creacy, the East Side and South Side churches are doing good work. I am now in a meeting at Dry Creek Schoolhouse, near Linton, Ky., with good crowds."

J. W. Brents, Henderson, Tenn., October 16: "I had a very fine meeting at Bridgeport, Ala. There were six additions, besides untold good done in other ways. Many excellent people are numbered with this congregation. Charles Holder and J. Wilford Beck encouraged me by their prayers and presence a number of times. A visit in beautiful Sequatchie Valley was very enjoyable to me. I am in a fine meeting at present in Paragould, Ark. Large crowds."

E. Gaston Collins, Meaford, Ontario, Canada, October 15: "We are having good interest and attendance. Preaching at four other places besides Meaford each month. At that, I am here two Sunday mornings and every Sunday night in the month. We are having an interesting vocal-music class each Tuesday night; prayer meeting and children's class, Thursday night; boys' class, Friday night. Next Sunday we are to have an all-day meeting, with basket dinner in the basement. I am still desirous of names and addresses of Christians in Grand Rapids, Mich."

Brother and Sister George Benson, Hongkong, China, September 21: "The present confusion in South China is so serious that the American Consul will not permit us to go inland at present. Therefore, we will remain in Hongkong and begin a vigorous study of the Chinese language. Address all mail in care of A. M. Grant, Box 541, Hongkong, China."

J. F. Buffington, Crandall, Miss., October 15: "On last Lord's day I was at Carrell Schoolhouse, in Choctaw County, Ala. There were four baptisms. This is the place where I held a meeting in August. One was added at that meeting and one has moved in, so there are six loyal members there now. I go next Lord's day to Coffeeville, Ala., for a few services."

Brother and Sister J. W. Shepherd expect, if the Lord wills, to return to Nashville in the near future to make their home. Sister Shepherd arrived last week to make some necessary arrangements, but Brother Shepherd is compelled to continue his work in Richmond for some time. Brother Shepherd is well known by Nashville and Tennessee churches, and they will be exceedingly glad to have him in their midst again.

J. H. Hines, Montgomery, Ala., October 14: "Since our last report ten have been added to the Highland Park congregation—eight by statement and two by baptism. Have just closed my fifth year with this splendid congregation. During the five years two hundred and forty-seven have been added to the congregation and four hundred and one have been added in the field, making a total of six hundred and forty-eight added."

J. L. Hines, Mount Juliet, Tenn., October 17: "I closed a two-weeks' meeting at Mount Juliet on September 24, resulting in about eighteen sermons being preached to the church. On October 2 I concluded a meeting with the Sulphur College Church, near Hartsville; no additions. On October 13 I closed at Joyner's Chapel, near Lafayette, Ky., with four baptized, one of which was from the Baptists. I am to preach at Macon, Ga., Sunday, October 18, and will begin a meeting at Wysox, Ky., October 25, which will close my work for the year."

J. H. McBroom, Atlanta, Ga., October 15: "The South Pryor Street church of Christ is in splendid condition. It has had many things to overcome, but is now one of our best congregations. In the last eighteen months we have spent over five hundred dollars on our building, held three meetings alone and helped in others, and have given liberally to the needy and to missions. We have had eighty-five additions to the congregation, with several subtractions on account of the Florida boom. We have had four baptisms, two restorations, and two by statement in the last three weeks."

S. L. Dowling, Valdosta, Ga., October 7: "S. W. Colson, of St. Petersburg, Fla., preached for the Welcome Hill congregation, in Brooks County, Ga., in August, eleven days, with three baptized, one restored, and the church greatly strengthened. On the first Lord's day in September he began a meeting at Black's Schoolhouse, in Lowndes County, Ga., and continued it eleven days, with four baptized and splendid interest throughout the meeting. Then he began a meeting at Pine Grove, in Lowndes County, preaching eight days, with increasing interest to the last and with three baptized. Brother Colson preaches the word meekly and humbly, but fearlessly, not shunning to declare the whole counsel of God.' He also loves and works for the Gospel Advocate, thinking, as I do, that it is by far the best paper published by any of the brotherhood, and he secured seven subscribers to it while at Pine Grove. Brother Colson is a preacher that will do good wherever he may go."

E. A. Elam spent a few days of last week with friends in Chattanooga, Tenn. He preached on Wednesday evening for the St. Elmo congregation and on Thursday evening attended the meeting being conducted by D. H. Friend with the Central congregation. John C. Graham oreaches for the St. Elmo congregation, and, as Brother Elam reports, is doing a good work and is much beloved by the church. Brother Elam enjoyed a most pleasant visit with him and family. He stands firmly fixed on the firm foundation of the truth of God. E. H. Hoover is the preacher for the Central congregation, and is likewise much in favor with his congregation. Brother Elam also reports a most pleasant visit to Brother Hoover and his good wife, and also with Brother Friend. Brother Friend's meeting was well attended, and he preached a good sermon on "Naaman the Leper." The members of each one of these congregations, as Brother Elam states, are moving along in peace and harmony in their respective work.

Subscribers, after paying for their papers, will favor us by noting whether the date on the address label is changed, and, if it is not changed within a month, by writing to us. We are careful, but mistakes may occur or letters may be lost. Our rule is to change the date on the day payment is received; but the mechanical work of correcting and printing the list takes time, and payments even from near-by places may not appear the first week. Credits for payments from a distance may be even more delayed. Mistakes are easily rectified if prompt notice is given.

The date on your tab shows the time to which your subscription is paid. When money is received, the date will be changed, which will answer for a receipt. Two weeks' time must ordinarily occur from the time your remittance is sent before the tab on your paper is changed; if not changed by that time, notify us at once.

A STATEMENT OF THE GOSPEL ADVOCATE.

Reports from different quarters of the country concerning the conduct of different preachers come into our office. Some of these reports are of immoral conduct and others are of conduct of questionable propriety. It is expected that these reports shall govern the course the paper is to pursue in regard to these preachers. If these reports are true, the ones concerning whom they are made have disqualified themselves as preachers or teachers of the gospel. These preachers should repent of their sins and bring forth fruit worthy of repentance before trying further to teach others. This every one knows the Bible teaches. If these reports are not true, then they are slanderous, and those who circulate them are guilty of slander; and he who utters a slander, the Lord says, "is A slanderer is classed with liars, thieves, fornicators, etc. No one should give utterance to any report of any improper conduct in any person until that one knows it to be true and can sustain it.

Hence, the Gospel Advocate states that it is not an ecclesiastical court to receive charges against preachers and others and to decide on their guilt or innocence. If these reports are slanders, those who circulate them should repent of their sins and do all in their power to repair the injury they have done others. If the slanders have been made in public print, the correction of them should be made in public print also and circulated at as much expense and as widely as they have been made. This is a very serious matter and should receive far more attention than is given to it. Therefore, the Advocate justly and in the spirit of Christ declines to act on such reports until it is satisfied by proper proof that they are true. Furthermore, the Advocate declines to act as an ecclesiastical court to decide the truth or falsity of such charges. This is the province of the church. Where a preacher, for instance, has been charged with improper conduct, the church where he is preaching should investigate the charge and decide whether or not, in the face of all evidence, it is true or false, and act accordingly. If the preacher is in a meeting with any church, it is the duty of that church to examine the charge made there, and without prejudice or partiality, for the sake of truth and the glory of Christ, should decide the matter as to the truth or falsity of the charge. If false, the church should vindicate the preacher and exonorate him to the extent that the charge has been circulated, and also condemn the ones who started such report; but if the report is true, then the preacher should be dealt with accordingly, and the truth of the charge should be reported to the elders and the congregation at the preacher's home, and they should deal with him according to the will of God, and not according to the preferences and prejudices of friends and relations of the one whose conduct is in question. In patience and forbearance, but in justice and with impartiality, all accused of wrongdoing, or found guilty, should be dealt with. Without this, the will of God cannot be done. No congregation which deals in political tricks or attempts to whitewash a wrongdoer can be the church of Christ.

Hence, the Advocate says, this is the course churches should pursue in such cases; and when this scriptural course has been pursued and the congregations concerned in such cases have reached the conclusions according to the will of God, it is willing and ready to publish this conclusion. This it will do when it is convinced that the cause of Christ demands it. But it cannot take sides for or against any one in any charge until the church pursues this scriptural course and makes a scriptural decision. In that case, every other congregation should act accordingly.

Should a report of the work of some unworthy person appear in the paper, that should not be construed as an indorsement of that person by the paper. The paper in-dorses nothing wrong and no wrongdoer. It makes mistakes; but it is set for the maintenance of the truth and against all that is wrong.

The Advocate also states that where factions arise in a congregation it cannot be expected to take sides as a factionist with either party. Its desire, great effort, and carnest prayer is to teach the whole truth in the fear of God, in the unity and peace which are in Christ, and, hence, to oppose all error and all sins as this is done by the word of God. # QUESTIONS ANSWERED.

BY F. W. SMITH.

The following questions have been presented for an answer through the Gospel Advocate:

Brother Smith: Please answer these questions for me in the Gospel Advocate: Will this earth be blotted out, or will it be purified and made better for the home of the righteous? Will the holy city, the new Jerusalem, come down and rest upon this earth?

Of course, there is nothing practical in these questions; and if I should miss the correct answer a mile, none will be made the worse off either for time or eternity. All that I know regarding the future of this earth is what I read in the Bible.

The Master said: "Blessed are the meek: for they shall inherit the earth." (Matt. 5: 5.) Whether this has reference to the "earth" in its present form or to some future state of this same earth, I do not know.

The apostle Peter wrote: "But the day of the Lord will come as a thief; in the which the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall be dissolved with fervent heat, and the earth and the works that are therein shall be burned up." (2 Pet. 3: 10.)

If such language as the foregoing were used to describe the destruction of a dwelling in which one lived, we would understand that the house was reduced to vapor, smoke, and ashes, or to the constituent elements of which it was composed. Adam Clarke, the learned commentator, makes the following guess on the passage: "They will all be separated, all decomposed, but none of them destroyed. And as they are the original matter out of which God formed the terraqueous globe, consequently they may enter again into the composition of a new system; and, therefore, the apostle says (verse 13), we look for a new heaven and a new earth: the others being decomposed, a new system is to be formed out of their materials." That is Mr. Clarke's guess; and if any one wishes to believe his "guess," I hardly think he will be lost. As for myself, I have no "guess" to offer on the subject and simply say, I do not know.

But some one may be disposed to ask: "What do you know relative to the things about which Peter is here writing?" The answer is easy, for I know this: "Seeing that these things are thus all to be dissolved, what manner of persons ought ye to be in all holy living and godliness?"

Instead of wasting time in speculating about the future state or condition of this earth, if, indeed, it will have any existence at all, we should see to "what manner of persons ought ye to be in all holy living and godliness." It will take all the time God has given to us in this world to fit ourselves, by his grace, for whatever abode he has in reservation for us. Why, then, waste time on unprofitable and speculative questions?

If a preacher were to announce two subjects on which he would discourse—viz., how to live soberly, righteously, and godly in this present world, and what will become of this earth—he would have ten members of the church to hear the latter subject to one that would hear the former.

There is an element of curiosity, or a desire to hear something new and extraordinary, in most of Adam's race. The spirit of the Athenians, who "spent their time in nothing else, but either to tell or to hear some new thing," is characteristic of many church members, including not a few preachers.

With all the teaching in the Bible on the subject of how to become a Christian and how to live the Christian life, in reason's name, why will men spend their time in preaching about things that in no way at all affect the salvation of the soul?

The second question, "Will the holy city, the new Jerusalem, come down and rest upon this earth?" is in the same class with the first—that is, subject to guesswork and fanciful speculation. The passage is this: "And I saw the holy city, new Jerusalem, coming down out of heaven from God, made ready as a bride adorned for her husband." (Rev. 21: 2.)

Is "the holy city, new Jerusalem," to be understood in a literal sense? I once heard a very able preacher discourse from this passage, and he actually literalized the passage and had the "holy city" as the capital of the new earth, into which the glorified saints would enter. I felt then, and do now, that he was at sea, beating the air.

Another guess from Mr. Clarke is as follows: "New Jerusalem—This doubtless means the Christian church in a state of great prosperity and purity; but some think eternal blessedness is intended." He then cites us to his comment on Gal. 4: 24-27, where the apostle says: "But Jerusalem which is above is free, which is the mother of us all." This, Mr. Clarke says, "signifies the church of Christ, the metropolis of Christianity, or rather the state of liberty into which all true believers are brought." It may be so, but again I am compelled to say, I do not know, and neither do I have the slightest idea that I will ever know in this life.

LET THE WOMEN KEEP SILENT IN THE CHURCHES.

BY F. B. SRYGLEY.

I am in receipt of a letter from the West where I did some preaching last summer, from which I quote the following:

We had forty-seven present last Sunday, and have had more than forty several times. We round up a new one once in a while. We had one new one recently whom we did not care for very much. He insisted that we adhere strictly to Paul's admonition that "women keep silent in the churches," using the word "silent" in its strictest sense, and that the church was everything that pertains to church work. Useless to say that he was much offended because we did not do to suit him and his wife, and said that he could not worship with us, but would have to get a few together and start a congregation of his own. Unfortunately, he went to the homes of some of the members, and one of the brethren is inclined to follow him in his belief.

It is encouraging, no doubt, to these faithful ones to have forty-seven present at the weekly meeting. It is good, also, to "round up a new one once in a while;" but it is so often the case in the West when one thinks he has found a brother that will be of help in building up the true worship, he has only found a hobby rider that will only give trouble. The brethren there and everywhere should adhere strictly to Paul's admonition that "women keep silent in the churches;" but there is a vast difference between adhering to Paul's admonition and adhering to some brother's interpretation of Paul's admonition.

The brother must be wrong in saying that "the church is everything that pertains to church work." In one sense a Christian woman is in the church all the time, if she is a Christian all the time, for the church is composed of all Christians. All Christians are members of the church, and are, therefore, in that sense, in the church all the time. Therefore, if a Christian woman must keep silent in the church, and there is no limitation to the silence she must keep, she would have to be silent all the time. Everything a Christian woman does that meets God's approval, she should do it as a Christian; and that which she cannot do as a Christian, she should not do at all. But if she is a Christian, she is in the church, and therefore all that she does is done in the church. All the work she does is done as a Christian in the church, and it is all "church work" in that sense. Teaching children is a Christian duty for all Christian mothers, and this is also church work in a very important sense, and yet I am certain that no woman can succeed in training a large family in absolute silence. Many of us, no doubt, can remember that our mothers sometimes spoke in training their children, and frequently they spoke words "with the bark on them." The passage under review reads in the Revision: "As in all the churches of the saints, let your women keep silence in the churches: for it is not permitted unto them to speak; but let them be in subjection, as also saith the law. And if they would learn anything, let them ask their own husbands at home: for it is shameful for a woman to speak in the church." (1 Cor. 14: 33-35.) In this passage the question of speaking in tongues in the public assembly was the question under consideration; but, admitting that it was written to regulate churches of the present day, one could hardly afford to say that the silence enjoined must be absolute silence, for this would forbid Christian women to sing; and if all the women were stopped in some of our meetings, there would hardly be brethren enough present to sing bass. I have never heard of one of these hobby riders wanting to stop the women from singing. They are only wanting to break up what they call the "Sunday school," or destroy the systematic study of the Bible on Lord's-day morning. Though the brethren do this teaching on Sunday morning before the hour set for the whole church to come together to worship, and though these hobby riders are not required to attend and teach with them or be taught, yet they will not even meet with them and worship because they cannot have their way and destroy the work of teaching the Bible on Sunday morning. To adhere to these hobby riders is not adhering to Paul's admonition.

Of course this man and his wife would be "much offended" because they cannot have their own way. These faithful brethren can do nothing but let them go their way and start whatever they want to start. It would be well if all the churches were free from all such hobby riders, because they will not be satisfied till they have their own way in everything. We are under the command of Jesus to teach, and no man should be allowed to make laws where God has made none and declare we shall teach only in the way he approves. It would be a blessing if all the churches that are doing a good work in teaching the Bible in the best way they can on Sunday morning would also allow all preachers who make an effort to destroy this work to pass on. It is a pity to bring a man into the congregation and pay him to legislate for God's people and destroy the best work they have. Let them pass on and get their support from churches that are making no effort to teach the word of God in classes as other books are taught. If our schools were under the direction of such men, our children would never get through the high school. The Bible is the best book in the world, and it deserves the best teaching that Christian people can command.

In another letter this same brother writes:

It seems that we no more than get rid of one hobbyman in our congregation than two or three take his place. We have some with us now, who want us to abardon the Sunday-morning Bible school, claiming that to be work of the church, wherein we have women teachers and division into classes, both of which are unscriptural. I fail to see where the Bible study, even though we may have a prayer and two or three songs, is a part of the assembly and an institution doing the work of the church.

We do not divide people into classes when we teach the Bible, but recognize the division that already exists. In teaching anything, such a division should be recognized. We did not make one seventy years old and another seven; this was already done, and we recognize the fact and arrange our classes accordingly.

I think the brother is correct in saying that this work of teaching is not a part of the Lord's-day worship, which usually follows it. It is not necessary to have any institution separate from the church in which to teach the Bible on Sunday morning any more than it is to hold a protracted meeting.

It is unfortunate that these brethren should keep up trouble over these things, when there are so many people in their city who have never heard the gospel preached and who have had no opportunity to learn the Bible in their homes. All these brethren can do is to try to teach these "hobby riders" better, but go right on with the work of teaching the Bible. This is a duty we cannot afford to give up. Let the good work go on.

WORD FROM WASHINGTON.

BY T. B. LARIMORE. FUNERAL PREACHING.

Alexander III., known as Alexander the Great, was born three hundred and fifty-six years, and died three hundred and twenty-three years, before the beginning of the Christian era, hence about twenty-two hundred and eighty-one and twenty-two hundred and forty-eight years ago, respectively, according to the Encyclopedia Britannica, believed to be the best authority available on that subject. In an ancient Latin book, but not as ancient as some Greek books that glorify Alexander, I read as follows: "Alexander, his horse, Bucephalos, being dead, conducted funeral rites, and built around his tomb a city called Bucephalos."

Julius Cæsar, who was, in some respects, to the Romans what Alexander was to the Greeks, died, according to the Britannica, forty-four years before the beginning of the Christian era. When he was mobbed and murdered, Mark Anthony delivered a eulogistic discourse, or harangue, over his dead body, by which he wrecked the Roman republic, and thus prepared the way for the Roman empire.

In the sanguinary sixties, Bob McKelvey, an erstwhile Methodist preacher, but then a Confederate cavalryman 'going all the gaits," lost his war horse in battle. Having buried his body decently, as he believed duty demanded, he announced that, at a definitely designated time and place, he would preach the horse's funeral-would deliver an oration in memory of the horse. Those who knew Bob knew that memorial discourse would be well worth hearing, hence they prepared a platform on which the orator was to stand. Five thousand soldiers stood in silent, respectful admiration while Bob eloquently told of the loyalty, beauty, and bravery of his beloved horse. He took for his text part of the thirteenth verse of the fourteenth chapter of Revelation: "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord." Having announced his text, he said: "I am going to take with this text a liberty common among preachers. I am going to change it just enough to make it suit the occasion. Thus revised, my text is: *Blessed are the dead that die in the war." The sermon, based upon that text, was a classic. All his fellow soldiers who heard him were sorry when Bob said "Amen" and stepped from the platform.

Profane, praying, preaching Bob is gone, nearly all the gray-clad soldiers who heard him are gone, the Confederacy is gone, but the memory of those bygone days still lingers with the few who, soldiers then, are tottering on the verge of the tomb to-day.

A few years after "the war" a telegram called me to the funeral of a Brother Imes, near Corinth, Miss. It was a Masonic funeral. Returning from the funeral, 1 reached the leading mercantile establishment-Jewish, of course-in Corinth just as the proprietor, closing the door for the day, stepped out. Taking me cordially by the hand, he said, "Funeral preaching is a curse-funeral preaching is a curse," repeating the declaration with impressive emphasis. Then he added: "I don't know what you said at that man's funeral. I was not there. But a do know you said nothing but good about him, for there was nothing else to be said. But that is the way they preach about all of them. A few weeks ago a man who was of a fine family died here, and they took his body to the aristocratic church of the town-he didn't belong to any of them-for the funeral services. Of course they preached him to heaven. They always do that. preacher said he died of some sort of liver trouble, when every man in the house knew the preacher knew he drank himself to death. Everybody knew that. Still that same preacher will preach from that same pulpit next Sunday, and people will be expected to believe he at least thinks he is trying to preach the truth." Then he repeated his text: "Funeral preaching is a curse," Apropos to all this, I deem it my duty to testify that the longest, the loudest, and the most superlatively eulogistic funeral oration I have ever heard—and I have heard many—was delivered over the body of one of the worst men I have ever known. A somewhat prominent professional man whom I knew was white—externally. The mother of his half dozen children was black. He treated his children and their mother very unkindly. When be died, the editor of the one and only paper of the town said editorially: "We have never known a better man." Some men who read that editorial declaration considered it rather hard on them, knowing the editor knew them.

I believe even tombstones should either be silent or tell the truth. Some one has said: "If it's the truth you're looking for, steer clear of obituary columns and tombstones." These things ought not so to be.

Moreover, there are exceptions. A godless old bachelor—they are not all godless, notwithstanding they may decline to do their whole duty—accumulated a fortune and died intestate. His nephews, having divided among themselves what he had accumulated, decided to meet the manifest demands of common decency by having a modest monument mark his grave. They informed the tombstone man of this decision, and left all the details to him, merely suggesting that the inscription on the stone should be strictly true. Accordingly, after the contract had been conscientiously complied with, the monument said to every passer-by:

Here lies old Twenty-per-cent.
The more he made, the less he spent.
The more he made, the more he craved.
If he's gone to heaven, we'll all be saved.

And many who saw it said, "That's the truth."

This world would be better and brighter far if even every man who claims to be a Christian so lived that, at the close of his career, the following cheerful, hopeful message might appropriately be chiseled upon the monument prepared to mark his final earthly resting place:

> Beneath this verdant, grassy sod Sleeps the dust of a man of God. He blessed the world through which he passed, Righteous and hopeful to the last.

INVENTIONS OF MEN BRING EVIL.

Man is evil. He is fleshly, mortal. "Jehovah saw that the wickedness of man was great in the earth, and that every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually." (Gen. 6: 5; see Gen. 8: 21.) If a man is so evil and all the imaginations and thoughts of his heart are evil, and that continually, could he without God do good? "They are all gone aside; they are together become filthy; there is none that doeth good, no, not one." (Ps. 14: 3.) How can such evil and sinful beings bring forth good institutions or do that which will bring good to man? "A good tree cannot bring forth evil fruit." God cannot establish an institution that brings evil. An evil tree cannot bring forth good fruit.

Man, wicked and corrupt, with a continued tendency to evil, cannot bring forth or establish an institution that will bring good to man. "God made man upright; but they have sought out many inventions." (Eccles. 7: 29.) God created man innocent, upright, with capacity for understanding and following that which is good, yet, in his evil surroundings, prone to follow that which is evil. Man's only hope of attaining to God is by hearkening to and following the directions of God. To rely on and follow the directions of God, to walk in his institutions, is to walk in the light of God's wisdom. To do what God commands us to do, and work in and through his appointments, is to have God to work in and through us "to will and to work, for his good pleasure." (Phil. 2: 13.) This is to do the works of God and is to seek good in accordance with the good pleasure of God. When man turns from the appointments of God and relies on his own wisdom and inventions, his own institutions, he rejects the wisdom of God and walks by his own wisdom; he is relying on his own works, not on the works of God, to bring good to himself and the world. Man cannot serve in both institutions nor the two masters. He will "hate the one, and love the other;" he will "hold to one, and despise the other." (Matt. 6: 24.) He cannot dovetail or graft the one into the other .- D. Lipscomb.

There would be less backbiting if we looked at people as we look at a picture in the best light.—Exchange.

MAKING TOO MUCH OF DIFFERENCES. No. 5.
BY E. A. ELAM.

We read in some religious papers that Dr. T. W. Brents and Brother J. A. Harding preached sometimes on "the millennium," as some good men do now, Brother A. G. Freed, for instance; that Dr. Brents wrote a sermon on the subject; that Brethren Lipscomb, Brents, J. M. Barnes, Harding, and others differed on laying on of hands as an ordaining ceremony; and that Brother McGarvey wrote something concerning the future of the Jews, and that Brother Larimore has preached and written something on the same subject. But it is very encouraging and significant that these good men did not magnify their differences on these subjects into strife or press them upon congregations until factions were formed and separations occurred. That devout Christian and brilliant scholar, Moses E. Lard, taught some things on "the millennium." Of his position on the subject, Dr. Brents, in "Gospel Sermons," page 325, says:

We have read much of what has been written on the subject, and Brother M. E. Lard is the only man, whose writings have fallen under our notice, who seemed to have a tangible theory as to what the millennium really will be. On this point we believe his theory is correct, but we shall write as though he had not written.

Dr. Brents calls what he and Moses E. Lard wrote on this subject, and what all others have written on it, a theory. Not only so, but, he says, while he had "read much" of what others have written on the subject, it is all theory, containing nothing tangible.

He says also:

There is surely something taught in the Bible on the subject, and it can do no harm to study it. While it is vastly interesting, it is not so important as that one's salvation depends upon a knowledge of it. A mistake concerning it, therefore, would be entirely harmless. Hence, we do not see cause for alarm, even were we to indulge a little speculation about it, so long as we make no effort to force our speculation on any one else.

Certainly there is no harm in studying what the Bible teaches on "the millennium;" not only so, but we cannot obey God fully without doing so. But what does the Bible teach on this subject? If on this subject, as on all others, we "hold the pattern of sound words," speak "as it were oracles of God," and add nothing to and take nothing from the word of God, no harm, but much good, will be done. It is the speculations or theories of men on this and on other subjects which do the harm. Certainly the Lord is competent to say all he wishes us to know on this subject. Read and teach that and stop.

Let us note particularly that Dr. Brents says there is no "cause for alarm" in indulging "a little speculation," "so long as we make no effort to force our speculation on ony one else." All who refer to Dr. Brents' preaching and writing on the subject should relate that he spoke of it as speculation, essential to no one's salvation; that he should be indulged in "a little speculation" (not so much); and that he should "make no effort" to force his "speculation" on any one else. There are two points in this: (1) he should make no effort to force his speculation on any one else; (2) in this case he should not be disfellowshiped.

Brethren Lipscomb and F. B. Srygley and I heard Dr. Brents preach one evening to a very large audience on the same subject. Not one of us accepted all he said, but all went on as usual in Christian fellowship, allowing him to hold to his theory or opinion in regard to it, since he himself declared at the beginning of his sermon that believing or disbelieving what he should preach affected no one's salvation. At the beginning of his sermon he announced that he purposed to preach on a subject, and, so far as salvation is concerned, it mattered not whether his hearers believed one word he said. Brother Srygley and I have spoken of this several times since. We thought then and still think he should have preached to that large audience of saints and sinners something which must be believed and practiced in order to salvation. He had preached a very clear and powerful sermon in the morning on Acts 2: 37, 38, including much of Peter's sermon on the day of Pentecost, and a larger audience had returned in the evening to hear him again. It seemed a waste of time—his time and the time of his audience—to devote more than an hour to something not necessary to salvation. Some in the audience might have learned the right way of the Lord had he preached on that.

I relate this in justice to Dr. Brents, and especially that those who are making so much of the fact that he preached a few times on "the millennium" and wrote a sermon on the subject may learn what he said about believing or not believing what he preached; and that while he had read much of what others had written on the subject, it is all theory, containing nothing tangible, and that Lard only seemed to him to hold a tangible theory.

While Dr. Brents spoke only occasionally and wrote only one sermon on "the millennium," I have never seen stated the fact by those who refer to his having done so that he said it matters not whether any one believes or disbelieves what he said, that he considered what he had read of what others taught on the subject as intangible speculation, and that Moses E. Lard only presented a tangible theory. This should be related by every one who uses Dr. Brents as an example of preaching on the subject. It is injustice both to him and to the truth not to state this.

All agree with Dr. Brents that no one's salvation depends upon believing the various and conflicting theories, or any one of them, on "the millennium," or on other speculative subjects, which good preachers hold and teach. As a rule, no two, who really think for themselves, teach alike on the subject, or on any other speculative subject. Only the word of God is true.

Brethren Brents and Harding were satisfied with stating their opinions on "the millennium" and with letting it go at that, while they devoted their time and energy to teaching "the way of salvation" and to building up the church in the most holy faith of the gospel. It would be most instructive and helpful and pleasing to God for all preachers, elders, and other teachers to study and faithfully teach all the New Testament says against misrepresentation of others, dishonesty of every kind, and the common and everyday sins of thousands of church members; against strife, bitterness, and unholy divisions; on forbcarance, meekness, lowliness of mind, forgiveness, and endeavoring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace; on speaking the same thing, being of the same mind and judgment, and being of one heart and soul, doing nothing through faction or vainglory; on common honesty, truthfulness ("putting away falsehood," and every Christian, speaking "truth each one with his neighbor: for we are members one of another "-Eph. 4: 25). integrity, uprightness, home duties and home life (I weep over the general neglect of these daily home duties), keeping unspotted from the world, helping the poor in every way and as fully as the Bible directs, escaping from the corruption that is in the world by lust, becoming partakers of the divine nature, cultivating and manifesting the Christian virtues and graces, purity of heart, holiness of life, and "all things that pertain unto life and godliness." How much better would this be than so much criticism, faultfinding, contention, and strife! If this were faithfully done, what great and rapid progress the church would make and how much nearer heaven all would be! But it is next to impossible to make some see that strife, a partisan spirit, and unrighteous divisions are condemned by the word of God, especially when they themselves have in any way caused such; or it is next to impossible to make them see that what they have done has been the cause of such.

Strife, parties, and divisions over speculative questions -not matters of faith and practice, or matters admittedly not essential to the salvation of sinners from their "old sins" or of babes and full-grown men in Christ in heavenshould be avoided now as much so and as earnestly as they were by the good men mentioned above. They are as shameful and sinful and as much condemned by the Lord now as they were in the New Testament times. The differences of these good men, who worked together in Christian fellowship, should not be magnified by lesser lights and smaller souls into occasions of factions and separations, but all time and attention should be given to the study and practice of the plain and tangible teaching of the word of God. More especially, the fact that some good and wise men held to different theories on such questions as "the millennium," etc., should not be used by men of less wisdom and love as justification for pressing such differences of opinion, either for or against, upon congregations unto strife and division.

I could mention one good man, who lived a pure and godly life, who crippled his influence as a preacher by making somewhat of a hobby of laying on of hands. Yet, I am glad to say he had sufficient love and wisdom not to attempt or even to dream of causing factions over the subject. This he would never have attempted. We cherish his memory.

Brother Lipscomb, in order to more thoroughly investigate the subject, invited Brother J. M. Barnes to preach to the students of David Lipscomb College (then the Nashville Bible School) on the laying on of hands as an ordaining ceremony. For the same reason he invited Brother G. G. Taylor to lecture to the school on Christians' relationship to civil government, when he knew Brother Taylor's position on this subject was different from his own. These wise, good, and godly men could investigate a subject on which they differed without bitterness and the use of harsh language and abusive epithets and in the forbearing and Christian spirit. This should be done now, and in forbearance all should endeavor and pray to speak the same thing, to be of the same mind and judgment, and to be of the same heart and soul. How many of us writers and teachers are striving now to be thus one?

When a brother undertakes to state the teaching of Brethren Fanning, Brents, Lipscomb, or any other brother, on any given subject, he should be sure he understands the teaching he undertakes to give. He might misrepresent some one. Some writers and speakers of to-day seem not to be careful to properly represent others. Some seem not to know just what the brethren named above taught on certain questions. It is stated by one that "Tolbert Fanning, for another example, contended that the church has no elders now, but they ceased to be with the spiritual gifts." No, not at all. He taught that brethren grow into the qualifications and work of elders and should do the work, but that they cannot be made by election or by "ordination;" and that by "elections" or "ordination" an impure man cannot be changed into a pure one, an unholy one into a holy one, a covetous one into a liberal and honest one, etc. Into these Christian virtues, graces, and duties one grows, and so should use them. Let us be careful and just to properly represent others.

They say that man is mighty,
He governs land and sea;
That he wields a mighty scepter,
O'er lesser powers that be.
But a mightier power and stronger,
Man from this throne has hurled;
For the hand that rocks the cradle
Is the hand that rules the world.

QUERY DEPARTMENT

BY H. LEO BOLES

I see in the Gospel Advocate of August 6 your answer to a question on a case of adultery, given from J. H. Crab-tree, of Texas. He wanted to know if the man or his first wife was in adultery. You say you think not. I want to know whether or not, when he put his wife away and married another woman, if she became his flesh; and if she became his flesh, can a man be the flesh of two women at the same time? If fornication separates the flesh, does not an adulterous marriage separate flesh just the same?—O. S. Moss, Gainesboro, Tenn.

That the reader may understand clearly the question and answer that Brother Moss refers to, I quote the question and its answer as published in the Advocate of August 6. It is as follows:

"We have in the church of Christ at Huckabay, Texas, a man and his wife who have been members for several years. They have several children, some of them mar-ried. The man left his wife without the one scriptural ried. The man left his wife without the one scriptural cause, secured a divorce, and married another woman. He lived with her for six or eight months, secured a divorce from her, and married again his first wife. Are either or both of them now living in adultery? What is the duty of the church toward them? Please give any light that you may be able to give, through the Gospel Advocate.—J. H. CRABTREE."

There are two questions suggested here by the querist.

(1) Are either or both of them now living in adultery?

(2) What is the duty of the church toward them?

I do not think that either party as described above is now living in adultery. Of course, the husband, while separated from his lawful wife and living with the other woman, was living in adultery. But since he has left her and gone back to his legal and scriptural wife, he cannot be said to be living in adultery. He has quit his sin and should be penitent of it. If, indeed, he is penitent or has repented of it and asked God to forgive him, he has been forgiven, and, hence, is not guilty of the sin of adultery.

repented of it and asked God to forgive him, he has been forgiven, and, hence, is not guilty of the sin of adultery.

What is the duty of the church toward them? It is the duty of the church, if God has forgiven him, to forgive him. This will include helping and encouraging him in living the Christian life. It is the duty of the church, so far as it may be able, to strengthen him in the Christian life and shield him from temptations of like nature. It is the duty of the church, so far as it may be able, to forget and remove the shame of the sin of which he has been guilty. It is the duty of the church to commend him and guilty. It is the duty of the church to commend him and his good wife in the course that they are now pursuing, They stand in need, as never before, of the help and encouragement of the church. So often brethren and sisters make mistakes in not encouraging those who are trying to live right. Many have been driven into deeper sin because those who claim to be spiritual have not come to the rescue of those who had fallen. The strongest test of one's spiritual life is shown just at this point. It is the duty of the church to commend him and

When the man "put his wife away and married another woman," he married the other woman only in a legal sense, not in a scriptural sense. He committed the sin of adultery. The second woman did not "become his flesh" in the sense that his scriptural wife had "become his flesh." No, a man cannot "be the flesh of two women at the same time" in the scriptural sense of husband and wife becoming one flesh. The scriptural meaning of husband and wife "becoming one flesh," or "bone of my bones, and flesh of my flesh," is to become or be scripturally married. All who are scripturally married become "one flesh," and those who are not scripturally married do not become "one flesh,"

As an excuse for the use of the instrument in the worship, the transgressive brethren give us these scriptures: Rom. 4: 15; 5: 13; also 1 Cor. 12: 28, where it says "helps." They say the division between the church comes on questions that deal with methods of service and not the scriptural basis of church fellowship. Please give us all the help you can, as our town is very much disturbed over these questions just now .-- X.

The word "helps" here referred to (1 Cor. 12: 28) is traslated from the Greek word "antileepsis," and means in this place "the ministrations of the deacons, who have the care of the poor and the sick." It has no reference to instruments of music or anything of that kind. It is a woeful perversion of the scripture to apply it to instruments of music. God does tell his people how to praise him, as the following scriptures show: "And be not drunken with wine, wherein is riot, but be filled with the Spirit; speaking one to another in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing and making melody with your heart to the Lord." (Eph. 5: 18, 19.) Again: "Let the word of Christ dwell in you richly; in all wisdom teaching and admonishing one another with psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing with grace in your hearts unto God." (Col. 3: 16.) Again: "Is any among you suffering? let him pray. Is any cheerful? let him sing praise." (James 5: 13.) In all three of the above quotations God instructs his children to "sing praise," "singing with grace in your hearts unto God," and "singing and making melody with your heart to the Lord." Any one who claims that the New Testament does not instruct God's people how to praise him is either ignorant of the New Testament teaching or is a willful perverter of the same. Either condition renders one unfit and unsafe as a teacher. If the division "comes on questions that deal with methods of service," then they are to be condemned for causing division over such trifles. But the division comes over the question of whether God's people should sing his praises and make melody in the heart to God, or should they play on an instrument as praise to God or accompany the singing his praises with the instrument? The issue is clear and should not be confused.

At the age of twenty-three I was not a church member and married a Catholic. We lived together nine months and separated. There were no children born to us. Seven years later I married a member of the church of Christ, and we lived together seven years. We had three children. Then I obeyed the gospel and am trying to live right. Am I living in adultery or not? Please answer through the Gospel Advocate.—X.

I cannot answer definitely this query, as I do not have all of the particulars before me. Our brother does not state why he was separated from his first wife. It all depends upon the cause of the separation. As I understand the Scriptures, there is but one scriptural cause for husband and wife separating, granting a privilege of marrying again. That scriptural cause is stated by the Savior as follows: "But I say unto you, that every one that putteth away his wife, saving for the cause of fornication, maketh her an adulteress: and whosoever shall marry her when she is put away committeth adultery." (Matt. 5: 32.) Again, it is stated by the Savior as follows: "And I say unto you, Whosoever shall put away his wife, except for fornication, and shall marry another, committeth adultery: and he that marrieth her when she is put away committeth adultery." (Matt. 19: 9.) This is as plain as I can make it. The Savior is specific and definite, and all should be able to understand his language. It is a fearful thing to violate the will of God.

Is it a violation of the law of Christ to give the Lord's Supper at night to those that cannot be present in the daytime?—X.

The Scriptures do not set the hour when people are to meet to eat the Lord's Supper. No specific hour is designated in the Scriptures; hence, any convenient hour on the first day of the week will be pleasing to the Lord. Such an hour as will suit the convenience of the community should be appointed; but if there are some who cannot meet then, some other hour that does suit their convenience may be appointed. There is no violation of Scripture in some eating the Lord's Supper in the morning and others eating it at night.

THE MIRACLE.

A delightful story comes from the Christian Medical Missions in Bagdad. In the lovely date-palm gardens of the city a thief was discovered, not long ago, robbing one of the trees of its luscious fruit. The owner, a hasty, passionate man, promptly shot him, and the man fell from the top of a lofty palm to the ground. He was hurried away to the Christian hospital, with a bullet in his body, a broken arm, and a shattered leg. On his way he begged to be put beneath a Moslem roof, even if it were a prison, rather than be left in the clutches of dogs of infidels. But, as he was a criminal, his captors paid no attention to his wishes.

At the hospital they speedily put him under an anæsthetic, extracted the bullet, set his broken limbs, and before long he was comfortably settled on a palm-fabric cot, trussed up with dressings, but alive and likely to get well. For a long time he was very suspicious and surly and would have little to say to the missionary whenever he attempted to converse with him. But gradually he yielded to the kind treatment he received and one day he astonished the missionary with the remark: "This is a miracle! It's a place of miracles!"

"We deal," replied the missionary, "with much more difficult cases than yours, Ibrahim. You should see some of them."

"Ah! That is not my meaning," replied the man. "As I have been lying here I have seen rich men come to the door of this hospital and offer jewels even to half their wealth to the surgeon to come and attend their wives and children; but always he says, 'The poor must come first;' and he who might be so rich slaves here in the heat night and day for wretches like me, who can give him nothing. That is a miracle."

Indeed, so touched was Ibrahim by the loving sacrifice of his new friends that he simply had to be turned away from the hospital when he was recovered.

"But what can I do for you, sir?" he begged. "Is there nothing I can do?"

"Yes," replied the surgeon, "send me some more patients."

"Allah!" cried Ibrahim. "Here is a man who might have all the world if he asked for it, and all he wants is more work. You are a miracle, sir! But I will do something for you. Do you like dates, sir?"

"Yes, I like the dates," said the surgeon, smiling.

"Then, sir, let me know when you want some, and I'll always steal them for you!"

The missionary and the surgeon shook their heads over their patient, as he left them, and one remarked to the other: "Another miracle is wanted there, but evidently we've made some impression. Let us have hope that the rest will come in time."—Youth's Companion.

SECRET OF BEING HAPPILY MARRIED.

The love between a man and a woman is like a plant. It must grow or die. It cannot stand still. Nothing stands still. One's love either grows wider and deeper or it grows less. The first passion is not the real thing; it is only a phase of it, a kind of preparation. That will pass. It should be the beginning of that affection which endures and is patient. If it is to grow, it must have the bread of friendship and mutual sacrifice to feed upon. Love is capable of miracles, but there is one miracle which it cannot perform. It cannot fast and grow strong. It is like every other thing that has life. It must be fed. When you get a wife, do not expect the ravens to feed her love for you.

Most men and women could be happily married if they would put into the enterprise the same sense and honor that is needed in running a successful peanut stand. You could not succeed with inferior goods and dishonest measurements. You know the first step in making a hare pie is to catch your hare. The first step toward making a happy marriage is a decent boy and a decent girl. The world is full of them. They are not hard to find. Nobody of ordinary common sense can long be fooled in choosing a mate. It is as easy to distinguish between a good and a bad person as it is to tell a straight from a crooked stick. The first important function of the human intellect is to help one in choosing his mate and his way. If one is foolish enough to marry without consulting his intellect as well as his heart, he is almost sure to be unhappy.

Once the well-chosen two are married, the rest is mostly up to the man. He is the leader, the captain, the pathfinder. Much depends upon his honor and courage and good faith. At the altar he has taken upon himself the most solemn and binding obligation known to this world of ours. Before God and man he has promised to be true to the woman of his choice, and leaving all others to cleave to her. Does he mean it? Is he honest in this great undertaking-as honest as he would be with a business partner? Will he treat his wife with as much good faith as he gives to Smith and Jones, who are associated with him in the shop? Are the laws of God as sacred to him as the by-laws of his corporation? If so, there is not one chance in a hundred that his marriage will be unhappy, for the wife will be apt to follow in his footsteps whichever way they lead. It is natural that it should be so.

We should all understand that a man who is a traitor to his home, who breaks the heart and spirit of his wife and brings discredit upon his children, is guilty of the grossest breach of honor of which a man is capable. I would sooner forgive him who defaults in the countingroom. There may be some faint flavor of righteousness in his motive, and he is always hoping to restore the sum he steals. In any event, he is not seriously undermining the foundations of civilized life.

So many men try to stand on both sides of the fence in this matter—to be openly straight and secretly crooked. How sure they are to wreck their homes and build up a growing distrust of themselves! For here is a great truth. No man ever fooled his wife or his community for long as to the exact condition of his character. It will come out, somehow, in whispers that travel like the winds of heaven.—Irving Bacheller, in Delineator Magazine.

1920 THE J.C.W. CO.

To work out this puzzle, the white spaces must be filled with letters forming words answering to the various horizontal and vertical definitions given below. The horizontal and vertical words are not the same, but each gives a clue to the other. The first letter of each word is indicated by a number which refers to the definitions listed below.

It is advisable to first fill in, in both directions, those words which you know to be correct. These will furnish hints to those words which you do not know or had merely guessed at. When the puzzle is solved correctly, the letters in the white spaces will spell words both horizontally and vertically. The black spaces are the blind spots of the puzzle and merely form the pattern, incidentally designating the ends and beginnings of the words contained in the puzzle.

GOSPEL ADVOCATE

The GOSPEL ADVOCATE is the oldest living periodical published in the interest of the church of Christ. It is now in its sixty-seventh volume, and it has a larger list of regular, paid-up subscribers than it has ever had before. Its circulation is increasing rapidly, and it is daily growing in favor with the people. It contains twenty-four pages, and is issued every week. It is printed in large, clear type, on good paper, and is neatly pasted and trimmed. It has by far the largest circulation of any periodical published south of the Mason and Dixon Line in the interest of the church of Christ. It has regular editorial writers, besides a large number of able and regular contributors. It has all of the regular departments of the best religious periodicals.

In editorial policy it stands for individual consecration, against ecclesiastic organizations, as the scriptural and best method of doing missionary work. It recognizes no organization but the church of Christ as a scriptural medium of converting the world and developing the Christian character.

It opposes all human creeds and ecclesiastic councils, and pleads for the right of each individual to study the Scriptures for himself and formulate his own faith, without dictation or hindrance from churchly dignitaries. It opposes all clerical assumption of official authority in the church, and stands for the scriptural doctrine that each Christian has an office to fill, a work to perform—that all are kings and priests unto God.

It stoutly advocates the doctrine of missions, and argues unceasingly that every Christian is a divinely commissioned missionary and every church is a scripturally organized missionary society. The mission of every Christian and the design of every church is to preach the gospel to all the world.

It believes in, and stoutly advocates, congregational singing, as opposed to select choirs and instrumental performances, as the best and most soul-stirring church music. Let all the people sing. Provide a book for everybody in the house, and let us all make a joyful noise unto the Lord.

From the Brethren

Cleveland, Tenn., October 10.—After being away from the work here the most of the time since the first of August, I am now back at home. I spent a few days over six weeks down on Port Lavaca Bay, in Texas; and while I did not stay as long as I should and would have stayed, for the reason that Mrs. Farmer was very poorly and I feit it my duty to hasten home, yet I feel very much improved. I am now at my post of duty again, ready to push the work in Cleveland and other points in East Tennessee with all the power within me. Brother E. H. Hoover recently closed a fine meeting with the Cleveland church. Twelve were added and the church was much strengthened. Brother Hoover did some fine work and endeared himself to the people of Cleveland.—G. W. Farmer.

Paris, Texas, October 11.—To-day closes Brother F. L. Young's work with the church of Christ on Lamar Avenue, in Paris. He has been in the Avenue, in Paris. He has been in the service of the church in Paris for some seven years, with the exception of the time spent in holding revival meetings. Brother Young has been a very useful man in the work of the Lord since being in Paris. The good done is known only by the Eternal One. Brother Young is very dear to the Paris church. He has made a profound impression on my life for his respect for the divine order of the New Testament church. His faith to me is sublime. This has been manifested the more in the last few months of his stay with us. As is known by the church, he has not been well for some months. But his deep yearning for the prosperity of the church has been expressed in his fervent prayers and beautiful life as a child of God. For the last month or two he has preached on Lord's-day mornings while seated in a cushioned chair placed on the platform. His lessons were filled with deep appreciation for the goodness, mercy, and forbearance of Cod. His kindly exhortations for service of the church in Paris for some were filled with deep appreciation for the goodness, mercy, and forbearance of God. His kindly exhortations for a life with God and a humble submis-sion to the will of God have made a profound impression on the church which will bear fruit to the honor and giory of God. His greatest joy is preaching the unsearchable riches of Christ. He is getting stronger now, and he hopes to get strong again and Christ. He is getting stronger now, and he hopes to get strong again and find many useful days in the service of God. The greatest sadness of his life came while living here—the passing of Sister Young to the boundless joys of the great beyond. Her body rests in the beautiful Evergreen Cemetery just outside the city gate of Paris, where he requests the placing of his body when his spirit shall pass into the joys which are for the chilof his body when his spirit shall pass into the joys which are for the children of God. One of the greatest joys of his life was the home-coming of his children, a few weeks ago, from the various places of the United States. These days were filled with delight, and these children are the pleasure of his useful life. They love their father with that filial love so as to care for him so long as is necessary. The Paris church is anxious for Brother Young to spend the rest of his stay with men in our midst, and one of the pleasures of our lives shall be to have him live with us on his return from California. I have written thus freely. My heart is in the above. I feel, however, the weakness of my thoughts in expressing to the world my fine feeling for our be-loved brother. And, now, may the love of God, the eternal One, the grace of the Lord Jesus, our Savior, and the communion of the Holy Spirit be with us all.-Lee Garrett.

Jackson, Miss., October 5.—I closed a four-weeks' tent meeting here last Wednesday night, which we consider an eminent success in more ways than one. Three were baptized and one united with us by statement. The meeting was well attended for Jackson, and interest was good and went beyond our expectations. The meeting son, and interest was good and went beyond our expectations. The meeting had the effect of increasing the attend-ance at our regular Lord's-day meet-ings considerably. Two of those bap-tized during the meeting are about sixty years of age and had been mem-bers of the Baptist Church for years. bers of the Baptist Church for years. I am very busy and have two more meetings, one at Carpenter and one at Ridgeland. It is a wonderful work to show people the true way of the Lord. There are lots of honest hearts that will accept the truth when told to them in its simplicity. We are growing and are still on the firing line, with some skirmishing and some sharpshooting. We have put the Gospel Advocate in many homes during the year, and hope to do more in that the year, and hope to do more in that way. I find it to be a very beneficial way to get people interested. I am to repare about five thousand tracts for "winter delivery." Keep shooting straight from the shoulder, and don't forget us in your prayers. Brother S. H. Hall is to be with us in a four-weeks' meeting next June.—J. Porter

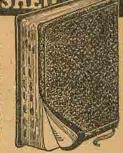

Ravine, Miss., October 11.—I closed one of the best meetings of my three and one-half years' work in Mississippi, near Vicksburg, on the first Sunday in September, with fifteen additions—nine baptized and six restored to followship. I closed a good additions—nine baptized and six restored to fellowship. I closed a good meeting at Lexie, Tenn., on the first Sunday night in October, with five baptized, one restored, and one from the Baptists. I am now in a meeting about fifteen miles from Macon, Miss., and will continue here about fifteen days. I will be in the Mississippi field until about Christmas, after which time I will be back in my old field in Middle Tennessee. My family is now living in Nashville and our is now living in Nashville and our children are now in David Lipscomb College. All correspondents should address me at Woodbine Station, Route 9, Nashville, Tenn. I shall be glad to be kept busy in the evangelistic field after January 1. I have already field after January 1. I have already arranged some meetings for 1926, and shall be glad to hear from others who would like for me to hold their meetings. I shall continue to keep in touch with the work in Mississippi as far as possible, for I have learned to love the work in this field, and I pray God that it may continue to prosper.-T. C. Fox.

From the Brethren

Alma, Ark., October 1.-I closed a two-weeks' meeting at Clarksville, Ark., last Friday night, with twentynine confessions, three restorations, and eight by relationship. Clarks-ville is a town of thirty-five hundred inhabitants, the county seat of Johnson County, and is the home of a Presbyterian college. It has been considered a hard place to reach. Among those baptized were Baptists, Methodists, Presbyterians, and worldlings .- C. C. McQuiddy.

Bixby, Okla., October 7.—After the discussion I held with T. J. Marrs at Inola, Okla., on the question of the Sabbath and the Lord's day, I continued preaching the gospel until I baptized sixteen and reclaimed one. The brethren are arranging to try to get a larger building and have a meeting in Inola about December 1. Brother J. S. Yochem preaches there and for two other congregations. I made my home with Brother and Sister Yochem.—Paul E. Gorbet.

Abilene, Texas, October 6.—Our meeting at the South Side church of Christ was an extraordinarily good one. Brother Price Billingsley did some fine preaching, straight from the shoulder. We had possibly the largest crowds ever assembled at a religious gathering in Abilene, and the interest was good from the beginning to the close. There were seventy-two additions—thirty baptisms, nineteen reclaimed, and twenty-three to take membership. We have had three additions since the meeting.—J. H. Mead. ditions since the meeting .- J. H. Mead.

Madison, Tenn., October 7.—Glosing the meeting at Newark, Ark., on Sunday, September 16, I moved out into the country a distance of three miles and began at Mount Zion the same night. Large crowds, fine interest, unstinted hospitality, and general rejoicing among the brethren were the outstanding features of the meeting; for the gospel was preached, as best I was able to declare it, under the most favorable conditions. The song service was an inspiring feature. The meeting closed at the water on the morning of September 25. The visible results were twenty-four baptisms and four restorations. Several of those baptized were from the Methodists and Baptists. Most of the number were men and women of mature years, and some had been open enemies of the truth. Brethren Laird mies of the truth. Brethren Laird and Z. D. Barber, of Morrillton, Ark., and Z. D. Barber, of Morrillton, Ark., were present at some of our services. My present program is somewhat varied. I get up of mornings, feed two horses and two mules, milk five cows, and then hie away to the field and put in from seven to eight hours at actual labor, preparing land for wheat. At five o'clock I start for Westmorreland forty-five miles away Westmoreland, forty-five miles away, where I am preaching each night to what they call a good crowd, though it looks small to me. I drive back home each night after church, making a ninety-mile drive, with a sermon thrown in, from five o'clock till bed-time.—Andy T. Ritchie.

"The Sunday-school literature that is published by the Gospel Advocate Company I can heartily recommend to any one who is in search for good helps on our Sunday-school lessons." (Robert E. Wright.)

"A complete assortment of the Sundayschool literature published by the Gospai Advocate Company was sent me recently. Having examined it carefully, I am glad to say I consider it excellent, and gladly commend it to congregations, teachers, and classes." (T. B. Larimore.)

"As a whole, I think your Lesson Helps far surpass other literature of its kind. Here in this great mission field (Louisiana) where we have placed them, many comparisons have been made between them and both the denominational and our society brethron's literature, and at no time have your Lesson Helps come off second best." (C. C. McQuiddy.)

"It is a pleasure to write a word of commendation of Brother Elam's Notes on Bibls Echool Lessons. They are the product of one who has given the greater part of his life to the study and teaching of God's Word. They are true to the Bible, comprehensive, and scholarly. If you love the truth, you will be delighted to study with him these wonderful lessons." (A. G. Freed.)

"Brother E. A. Ellam's Notes, as published annually, is, in my judgment, sorbutural and the best thing of its kind I have ever seen or that is published to-day. For a great number of years the writer of this has felt that Brother Elam was one of the best-prepared men in the brotherhood for the preparation of such literature. His Notes, in our best judgment, represent, or reflect, the best efforts he has ever made. Both as an elder of the congregation and as a teacher in our Bible School, I have very great pleasure in indersing his Notes. To the extent that an expression of our views is of value, I assure you we are very pleased to give it." (J. G. Wilkinson)

"I have used Elam's Quarterlies for years. They are superior to any that I have seen. Elam's Notes on Bible School Lessons are much fuller than they. They give the historical setting as to time and place that is needed and valuable. They give so many scriptural citations and references—Scriptural citations and references—Scriptures that introduce the text or corroborations that instruction that instruction the text or corroboration of the geography, the history, and the full meaning of the lesson. They give so many lessons, deducted from the copious citations of Scriptures, that the student may know more perfectly God's will. For years I have used Peloubet's Select Notes. I compare them weekly. I do not hesitate to say that Ellam's Notes are infinitely superior, if you want to know the Bible." (C. F. Heit.)

CURRENT COMMENT

By JAMES A. ALLEN

An editorial in the Presbyterian Standard discusses "modernism" thus:

"Modernism," as we see it, is any view of the Bible and its doctrines that undermines our faith in the old Book as the inspired word of God, our infallible rule for this life. It may come in many disguises and call itself by many names; but if it tends to undermine the old foundations of the church, by making man's reason or man's experience the test of the validity of any Bible truth, it is modernism in the last analysis.

We fully indorse the doctrine of the above paragraph, whether or not it is a correct definition of the thing that is to-day called "modernism." While the teaching of inspired men is always new, every part of it is at least as old as the New Testament. Anything in the religious world that is not as old as the New Testament is too "modern" to be a part of Christianity. There is no such thing as "new" truth in the religious world. A truth may be "new" to some men, but that same truth is as old as the era of inspired men.

One reason it is sinful to sprinkle babies, to substitute sprinkling for immersion, or to belong to the Presbyterian Church, is that all of these things are too "modern" to have been preached by the apostles. Such things did not exist in New Testament times, and they ought not to exist to-day. "Modernism" in religion is unscriptural and sinful.

The editor of the American Baptist, Memphis, Tenn., says:

Dr. W. M. Taylor, pastor of the All-Souls' Unitarian Church (?) of Chattanooga, Tenn., in a recent sermon said: "Evolution is the very door to heaven." We are fully persuaded that it is the only door he will ever enter; and since Christ says he is the "door," it seems that Dr. Taylor is headed up a blind alley. We suppose that when one denies that Christ is the door, as Dr. Taylor does, it is more or less natural, perhaps, for him to try and "butt" in another way. This is particularly true of one who admits that a billy goat had a place in his ancestral line.

Our esteemed contemporary makes a good point against the Unitarian. But, as Christ is the "door," we would like for him to tell us if a man can enter "the door" without doing what Christ commands. Christ commands all penitent believers to be baptized to be saved; and when a man has entered the institution in which he is saved, he should not want to enter any other. All the saved are in Christ, "in whom we have our redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of our trespasses, according to the riches of his grace." (Eph. 1: 7.) As baptism to a penitent believer puts him "into Christ," we would like for our editor friend to tell us how a man can be saved before baptism. No man can be saved until he is "in Christ," and no man is "in Christ" until he is baptized, If a man can be saved before he gets into the Baptist Church, as our friend admits, what is the use of going into it at all? Is there anything better than being "saved?" When a man reaches the point where he is saved, it seems to me that he should stop right there and try to remain in a saved condition until God calls him home. He might get into trouble if he plays the part of our friend's billy goat and "butts" into something else. To be "in Christ" is to be in the church of Christ, and that is good enough for me.

Under the heading "The Baptist Paper Made Her a Baptist," the Western Recorder copies the following from the Baptist Standard:

As an illustration of the value of the denominational paper in the church budget, we have a letter from a good woman in another State, who writes: "For two years I lived in Texas, and while there was a member of Broadway Baptist Church at Fort Worth, and each member was sent the Baptist Standard. I never shall forget how I learned what the Baptists believe. We were living on Mr. —'s farm, and he gave me his Standards after he had read them, and it was in them that I learned what Baptists believe. Then I knew I had been a Baptist ever since I was converted. I had joined the Presbyterians, but was not satisfied. I lost no time in joining the Baptist Church after I learned what they believed and why."

If somebody had given this lady a copy of the New Testament, it might have made her a Christian. Baptist papers do not do that. Neither does the New Testament ever make a Baptist. The New Testament had been making people Christians about sixteen centuries before John Smyth started the first Baptist church.

The lady also says: "I knew I had been a Baptist ever since I was converted." Our Baptist friends cannot accept that, because their doctrine is that a person is converted, or saved, before he becomes a Baptist or gets into the Baptist Church. They will not take a man into the Baptist Church until he is baptized, yet they say that he is saved before baptism, and that if he dies he will go to heaven. It is a peculiarly confused doctrine. It is more difficult to get into the Baptist Church than it is to go to heaven. To live and die so that I will go to heaven is as far as I want to go. Why should anybody go farther in order to join the Baptist Church?

- 10. Acknowledges offense and seeks God's face.
- 11. In shame bears God's indignation. (Jer. 31: 19; Mic. 7: 9.)
- 12. Humbled and accepts punishment. (Lev. 26; 41; Lam. 3: 39.)

From a close study of these and related scriptures and a knowledge of present-day church conditions, it is clear that vastly more is involved in repentance than is commonly thought. Possibly our teachers do not give a tithe of consideration to the subject which it demands. Many congregations wink at sin, describe it in mild, inoffensive terms, or ignore it altogether or cover it up with hush and polite whitewash. This, when what is required is that in shame and mourning they should rise up and cast it forth with all their might. Rude public exposure can heal it and withhold from worse things. I admit that these works answerable to amendment of life seem at the time exacted killingly exorbitant and well-nigh impossible of being rendered. So steep is the divine price of repentance that most are unwilling to pay it. Yet the Lord's hand is cruel that it may be kind. These fruits of repentance are just and right, and in the long run kind. seeing it is the only way to pardon, honor, and full restoration.

Sins known to the public cannot be put away by some convenient private arrangement. Nor do they go out of date. The Lord must cancel them, which he does only when the full price of repentance is paid, or they eat the soul to eternal damnation. And he who genuinely repents of his sins never attempts to excuse himself, or hedge, or dodge, or hide. He does not wish the shame hushed up and forgotten, or resort to crafty device to put it out of mind. He does not use mild terms in describing them, or ambiguous phrases in the matter of their settlement. Not the repentant man. Instead, cost what it may, he wants men to see the fruits of his repentance and to know that he has reformed. His confession does not have a string to it; he surrenders unconditionally by specifically naming his transgressions and in shame renouncing them, and wherever possible he makes restitution. And then, with spite toward nobody, he accepts the hard lot which through disobedience he has brought upon himself.

The penitent must name his own particular wrongs. "He shall confess that he hath sinned in this thing." (Lev. 5: 5.) "Tell what thou hast done." (Josh. 7: 19.) "Confess your faults." (James 5: 16.) "If we confess our sins." (1 John 1: 9; Prov. 28: 13.) In no uncertain terms one must own to and declare his own sins. This is the Lord's way of strengthening the erring from another fall and helping others to have confidence in him. If this is the law (and it is), then let it be understood that he who does not bring these fruits is a condemned impenitent, cowering in the bondage of divine disfavor, regardless of what is believed about him or what he says. This in connection with my article on immoral preachers.

BRYAN AS A BIBLE TEACHER.

BRYAN AS A BIBLE TEACHER.

Cleveland, Ohio, October 9, 1925.—Dear Brother Allen:
Do you not think it is about time for the religious press, especially that part of it that belongs to the disciples of Christ, to let up on William Jennings Bryan and let his memory as well as his body have a rest? It at least seems this way to me. If Mr. Bryan was the good and great man he has been represented to be, his happy spirit is now with the Lord and the apostle Paul and other men of faith. And if this is so, he went there without obeying the gospel of Christ; and if William Jennings Bryan can get to heaven without obedience to the gospel of Christ, all other men can do so, too; hence, there was no need of the gospel. He has all of his life strictly avoided the gospel plan of salvation and has preferred to be a Presbyterian instead of a New Testament disciple of Christ. In the sight of high heaven, what better is one unbeliever than another? That he was the honest man that many have tried to make him appear, the evidence, to my mind, is wanting. The good and honest heart God will save, for such a one will come to a knowledge of God's truth. I heard Mr. Bryan lecture one time and noted carefully his manner and style, and I could detect no sincerity in his countenance, but the very opposite of sincerity. And as to his great ability in defending the Bible against the attacks of its enemies, I never could see it. A man like David Lipscomb would make a man like W. J. Bryan pale away into utter insignificance. His lecture, "The Prince of Peace," was very unscriptural in much of it. His answers to Darrow—the rough neck—showed his great lack of information on the questions put to him. As to his motives in taking up the cudgel at Dayton, Tenn., and elsewhere, I leave in the hands of the to him. As to his motives in taking up the cudgel at Dayton, Tenn., and elsewhere, I leave in the hands of the great Searcher of hearts. In idolizing Mr. Bryan, we make others think that Presbyterianism is just as safe for the world as Christianity. I am satisfied that the lauding of the name of Mr. Bryan through the press has done great harm to New Testament Christianity.

In hope and prayer, A. A. BUNNER.

I think eulogies on Mr. Bryan's great defense of the Bible can be pushed to the point where they are misleading. We wish to give Mr. Bryan full credit for the good he did. Especially that he is dead, we do not wish to say a word that would detract from what is justly due him.

Since the time my father took me to hear Bryan, I have felt a peculiar admiration for him. From that time till his death I never missed an opportunity to hear him. For a while I was a subscriber to his Commoner. I also have several of his books. I think that in many ways he was one of the greatest men of the century.

While Mr. Bryan was in advance of the sectarian bodies, though he himself was an elder in the Presbyterian Church, still he had little or no conception of Christianity as taught by the apostles or of the New Testament church. To his credit, he continually affirmed most positively, with childlike faith, that he believed the Bible from cover to cover. At the same time, the position he occupied made void some of the clearest and plainest teaching of the Bible and undermines its claims of a divine origin. Mr. Bryan was not a great Bible scholar, his eulogizers to the contrary notwithstanding. In many ways he knew little of the Bible. His answers to Darrow's questions were weak and disappointing and showed that he knew little of the Bible along those lines, though his great bravery and boldness in promptly consenting to meet Darrow and submitting himself to be questioned by him will be justly admired until the end of time.

The trial at Dayton was unfortunate in many ways, though I think great good has resulted and will continue to result from the public interest it created. I think it unfortunate that such issues should be championed by two such men as either Darrow or Bryan, both of whom knew little of the Bible. While Darrow is a shrewd criminal lawyer for a defendant, he showed that he is grossly ignorant of the issues discussed at Dayton. Mr. Bryan was not able to properly expose him. Only the colossal ignorance of Darrow prevented Bryan from making an utter failure.

Though I knew Mr. Bryan to be a sectarian, my great admiration for him led me to believe that if some one should present to him a clear statement of what Jesus Christ and the apostles command men to do to be saved, he would see it and accept it. In company with my uncle, S. H. Allen, of Chattanooga, Tenn., I called on him at the home of Richard Rogers, where he stopped during the time he was in Dayton. Mrs. Bryan was at the gate in an automobile waiting for him to go to Chattanooga; a reporter was craving an interview; and while he seated himself and courteously granted us as much time as we could respectfully ask for, I saw that it was a most inopportune occasion upon which to have such a talk with him as I desired to have. Realizing that he was flooded with mail that he never read, I requested that he designate some way in which I could submit some things to him in writing so that it would reach him. But he stated that he could not promise to either read it or to reply to it, and requested that I state then what I wanted to say. When I informed him that I was a member of the church of Christ, he seemed to jump at the conclusion that I was trying to get a statement from him indorsing the Christian Church, which I might use as advertising propaganda. I stated that such was not my desire and that I was not trying to quote him, whereupon he declared that he never said anything that could not be quoted. He said that he could not favor or take sides with any denomination.

I quoted the words of Jesus, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved," and asked him if the word "baptize" in the Greek original did not mean to immerse, Mr. Bryan stated that he had studied Greek six years, but that he had never studied that. The reader will note that these words were in the final instructions of Jesus to his apostles, yet Mr. Bryan said he had never studied that.

It is only candid to say that no man knows much about the Bible or the Christian religion who has never studied the words of Jesus to his apostles. Especially is this true of a man who has never studied the comprehensive, allembracing words constituting the great commission. spoken to them by Jesus in his last interview. A man may be able to speak as eloquently as did Mr. Bryan, and he may have the reputation of being a great Bible scholar; but if he does not know what a sinner is commanded to do to be saved, the fact remains that he is not a safe Bible teacher. It is a public calamity to hold such a man up as a great Bible teacher.

But we loved Bryan and admired the many excellent traits of his character. He was a man of wonderful talents along some lines. We do not wish to institute any comparison between Bryan and Lipscomb. Competent critics consider that Lipscomb had the greatest brain, the most profound mind, of any man of modern times. In my opinion, he exerted a greater influence for pure, Bible Christianity than any other man, and was the safest, sanest teacher of the Bible since the days of inspired men.

Blind hero worship is disgusting and sinful; yet the lives and deeds of great men are a precious heritage. Napoleon at St. Helena gave orders that his young son read and study biography, and said that the study of biography is the best study of philosophy. Solomon, in Prov. 2: 20, says: "That thou mayest walk in the way of good men, and keep the paths of the righteous." The deeds of such men constitute an incentive to youth and kindle the spark of ambition as nothing else can do. But in imitating the virtues and copying the talents of such men, we should carefully shun their weaknesses and vices. Jesus Christ is the only perfect Model of what a man ought to be, with all of the virtues and none of the vices.

A. Campbell, Benjamin Franklin, and D. Lipscomb were the three great outstanding men of the reformation of the nineteenth century. Every young man ought to secure every book from or about such men. To study the lives and writings of such men is a better education than can be conferred by any university or college. Without this to build on, a degree from any college cannot have the proper foundation. Preachers whose libraries are made up of the filth and trash that flood the public to-day, and who have no taste for the works of those good men, are hopeless. They are not worth standing room in a potter's field and will do more harm than good. They but cumber the ground. JAMES A. ALLEN.

IMMERSION BIG ISSUE IN CHURCH.

BY S. H. HALL.

Under the above heading, the Associated Press gives the following in the Beaumont (Texas) Enterprise of October 8:

Oklahoma City, October 7.—The conciliation committee of the Disciples of Christ named last year in Cleveland to seek a way to heal divergent views on doctrinal questions, seek a way to heal divergent views on doctrinal questions, mainly immersion, submitted to the international convention of the churches that immersion should be made essential for membership or employment in any of the church's agencies.

The report probably will be debated to-morrow and is expected to bring into conflict the conservative and progressive elements within the denomination.

The conciliation committee's report is regarded as the most important matter to be brought before the convention.

Last year at the Cleveland convention debate became so warm over the question of immersion that a truce was declared and the committee named to report one year later.

It was charged at Cleveland that the United Christian Missionary Society, representing a union of the majority of the church agencies, had employed persons for services in various capacities, including missionary work, who had not been immersed.

In the same paper, on the day following the appearance of the above, I find this:

Oklahoma City, Okla., October 8.—Debate started today over immersion as a necessity for entering the church in the annual international convention of Disciples of Christ (Christian Church), with those favoring immersion in the majority of the committee on recommendations that brought the matter before the convention. will probably not be reached to-day.

Is it not sad to think that a body of people who claim to stand with the movement to restore to the people the church as it was in the days of the apostles could enact such a scene as that described above? How, in the name of everything that has the semblance of reason to it, can a question like this be settled by majority vote? As to the necessity of immersion for entering the church our Lord established, this has been forever settled by Him who has all the authority that Jehovah has both in heaven and on earth. If these brethren succeed in getting a change by majority vote, by whose authority will this change be effected? Most certainly not by that of our Lord and Savior. Then, by whose authority will it be done? There is but one answer that can be given to this question, and this the reader knows.

But, I presume, this voting is not to settle the question as to whether immersion is essential to entering the church; but they are voting on the question whether they shall stay with the Book or abandon it and walk by human reason, expediency, or the demands of this enlightened (?) age in which we live. Is not this a pretty come-off for people who claim that they take the doctrine of Christ as their guide? I am wondering where J. J. Walker will stand in this voting! He loudly declared in our debate at Montgomery, Ala., that the music question should be settled in each congregation by the majority vote; that if a majority vote for it, it is scriptural and should be used; but if a majority vote against it, it is unscriptural and should not be used. And, remember, he claims that the instrument inheres in the word "psallo" just as immer-sion inheres in the word "baptizo." If the music question can be settled by majority vote, why not settle baptism in the same way?

At this writing I am at Port Arthur, Texas, in a series of meetings. I was amused to see the following in the Port Arthur News of October 8:

"What is the greatest sin of 1925?" To the person what is the greatest sin of 1925?" To the person answering this question most nearly corresponding with what Rev. R. R. Yelderman, pastor of the First Christian Church, considers the correct answer, a handsomely bound New Testament will be awarded at next Sunday night's service at the church, preceding his sermon on "The Greatest Sin of 1925." If similar answers are turned in, the first one taken from the question box will be awarded the Testament, Rev. Yelderman said.

All kinds of schemes are resorted to by these digressive brethren to get a crowd. But I suggest to Mr. Yelderman that, so far as they as a people are concerned, one of their greatest sins for 1925 is described in the clippings above. At Livingston, Tenn., some of their leaders deny that they are having any trouble over baptism. Do you suppose they are so ignorant as all this?

THE IMPORTANCE OF THE GOSPEL.

BY A. B. LIPSCOMB.

I believe I know the readers of the Gospel Advocate well enough to say that the most of them love to hear the gospel preached; that over and above everything else in the world they value the great, fundamental, permanent truths of the Christian religion-"those things that cannot be shaken;" and that they decry the modern tendency of getting away from the sublime truths of the Bible.

Only last night I read a modern recipe for a popular preacher. It was rather surprising, and yet there was much truth in it. The preacher, to be popular, it went on to say, must have three characteristics in due proportion. The first was a voice and a pleasing personality, the second was ability to make sensational selection of sermon topics, and the third was a bit of heresy.

I am sure that the readers of this paper do not share that sentiment. I do not have, nor do I crave, any of those three assets, unless it be a voice; and whatever voice I have shall be used to lift up before the world the Savior of men, because I know, and all of us should know, that Jesus Christ is the great magnet of the Christian religion. "And I," he says, "if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me." Paul says in Rom. 1: 16: "I am not ashamed of the gospel: for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth; to the Jew first, and also to the Greek."

Almost the first word that our eyes light upon when we open the New Testament is this word "gospel." "The Gospel According to Matthew. We read it through, and there comes "The Gospel According to Mark;" and having finished that, there is "The Gospel According to Luke;" and then "The Gospel According to John." An interesting question sometimes comes up: "Why are there four gospels?" or, "Why are there four records of the gospel?" The answer to that question is an interesting story. Without going into details, it may be observed that there are four Gospels because there were four types of men to be reached. Mark, who wrote the first one of the Gospels, the earliest of the four writers, put great emphasis upon the facts. He intended to reach the hearts of those who are utter strangers to Jesus Christ, and it was necessary, therefore, to tell them the facts about our Lord. Matthew writes the same facts from a different viewpoint, with a special appeal to the Jews, who doted so much upon the law and the prophets. You will find that he is continually referring to the fulfillment of scripture in the Master's daily life. Luke writes especially for the Gentiles. They were not especially interested in the law and the prophets. What they wanted to know was: "Does this new message that you bring belong to one favored race, or does it belong to all the world?" And so Luke, the good physician, writes the gospel in such a way as to make an appeal to the Gentile heart. John wrote long years after the other three, and at a time when the Christian religion had come in contact and in opposition with the philosophy of the world. Therefore, John writes a Gospel especially intended to appeal to philosophic minds.

After all, there are not four gospels, but there is the one gospel written by four men, from four different viewpoints, and to reach four types of men in the world. And all of us belong somewhere within those four types. Each one of these Gospels holds up Jesus Christ as the one great outstanding figure of his record. He is the central character in them all. If you would cherish in your hearts the truest, the best, the most beautiful picture of Jesus Christ, stick close to the New Testament Christ. The reason why I say that is because in modern times there are so many books appearing and authors cropping up who purport to improve upon the plain, unvarnished simplicity of the four New Testament writers. You will find that the most popular book of a religious nature that appeared last year besides the Bible was Papini's "Life of Christ," written by the master scholar of Italy, a man well known as a writer of plays and poems, and a disciple of William James, the famous philosopher, himself a student of all the philosophies of the world. One preacher became so enthusiastic over that book that he said: "It is the finest, most luminous story of Jesus Christ I have ever read." I don't agree with him. I can't agree with him. I have read Papini; I have read Renan, besides many others who lift Jesus no higher than a great modern man and teacher, and I come back in my search to Matthew and to Mark and Luke and John. These men were his disciples; these men sat at his feet and heard him teach and preach; these men, to use their own word, "handled" him and received in turn the benediction of his personal touch, In their records I find the sweetest, truest, most beautiful picture of our Savior that I can ever find.

This Jesus, the outstanding figure of them all, has a great deal to say about the gospel. His life seems full of it. For example, while standing in the synagogue at Nazareth, he asked for a book, and they gave him the roll. He turned to the prophecy of Isaiah and read the passage: "The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath anointed me to preach the gospel to the poor; he hath sent me to heal the broken-hearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, and recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised, to preach the acceptable year of the Lord." But note that significant expression, "He hath anointed me to preach the gospel to the poor." Some time after that John the Baptist became discouraged, things were not working as he thought they should, and he began to wonder in his heart if he was mistaken, after all. He sent two disciples to Jesus Christ with the question: "Art thou the Messiah?" "Are you really the One, or shall we look for One to come?". Note the answer that Jesus sends back. It was a time when he was very busy, healing the sick and teaching the people, and he said: "You go back and tell John what you have seen and heard. Tell him that the blind receive their sight; tell him that the deaf hear; tell him that the lame man leaps like a hart; tell him that the lepers are cleansed; tell him that the dead are being raised. Don't forget to tell him that the poor have the gospel preached unto them."

Later we find Jesus in the house of Simon, and Mary comes with an alabaster box of precious ointment. She breaks it and pours out the ointment upon the Master's head; and there were some there who were filled with indignation. They said: "Why this fearful waste? Why was not this ointment sold and the proceeds used for the poor?" The Savior's heart was touched. He said: "Leave her alone. The poor you have with you always, but you do not have me always. She has done what she could. She has anointed me beforehand for my burial." And now note: "And I say unto you, that wherever the gospel is preached in the whole world, this thing that she hath done shall be told as a memorial of her." Thus we find that the gospel was a favorite word and thought with our Savior. It was the burden of his heart, and, therefore, it was always on his lips. Nor should we be surprised to find that almost the last message that he speaks -the words which come floating almost from the air as he ascends to the Father-have reference to that gospel: "My work is done on earth; go now, and preach the gospel to the whole creation."

When we study the lives of the apostles, the same thing is true. How much emphasis those writers placed upon the gospel! Take Paul, for example. Writing to the church at Corinth, he says: "Woe is me, if I preach not the gospel"-a warning to every preacher in this land to-day. And writing to the church at Galatia, he says: "Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which has been preached, let him be accursed." And even after he is an old man, facing the end of the journey, he is still happy-happy in the memory that the glory of God has been committed to him in that he is intrusted with preaching his gospel. The glorious privilege of preaching the gospel! You will find it all the way through their letters, running like a silver thread that can never be eliminated, the fact that they are emphasizing and featuring the gospel; and I am not surprised, nor should you be, to find almost the last figure in the last book that of a mighty angel in the midst of the heavens, intrusted with the everlasting gospel to preach it to every nation, kindred, tribe, and tongue.

PITHY PARAGRAPHS.

When our mothers were small girls, they looked forward with a great deal of pleasure to the time when they could wear long dresses like their mothers wore; but-alas!that time has passed, until now it seems to be a race between mother and child as to which can wear the shortest dress. But the scheme of redemption changeth 0 0 0

"Things that are seen are temporal, but things that are not seen are eternal." Yea, the world with all of its allurements will pass away, "but the word of the Lord will endure forever." 0 0 0

When Paul preached, he hid himself behind the cross of Christ; but to-day many so-called "gospel preachers" have hid themselves behind college degrees. Better follow Paul. 0 0 0

In New Testament times Christians were "the light of the world," and when followed the people were led into the church of Christ; but now the light that emanates from many professed Christians leads to confusion and every kind of evil speech. "Behold, the world do move;" but "Jesus Christ is the same yesterday and to-day, yea and forever." * * *

Paul says: "If any man hath not the spirit of Christ, he is none of his." The Spirit of Christ will lead men to do the same things to-day that it did in New Testament times; also the spirit of antichrist will lead men to-day just like it did in New Testament times. So we had better try the spirit that is within us, lest we be deceived.

There is no excuse for men and women being deceived if they measure themselves by the Bible. (See Gal. 5: 18-26. The Spirit of Christ will never lead men and women to have bitterness in their hearts against their fellow man. Just as well say that we can kill, commit adultery, or commit any other crime, as to say we can bear malice. It can't be done.

I know professed Christians that will sing with a great deal of earnestness, "Am I a Soldier of the Cross?" who can't repeat the last commission or even tell where it is found, in the Old Testament or the New Testament. Things did not use to so be.

The greatest mistake that leaders ever make is to try and build up a congregation by feeding them "taffy." The thing can't be done. The word of God is the only food that will make men and women what God wants them to be in this life and save them in "the sweet by and by."

BIBLES AND TESTAMENTS APPRECIATED.

BY S. F. MORROW.

To let all know how good brethren and sisters are appreciating the Bible and Testament Fund, I will give a few sayings from some,

A brother at Arlington, Texas, writes: "I am not able to buy a Bible. I want one for myself and one for a widow. I have been a member of the church of Christ for sixty years. Your Bible will be greatly appreciated and thankfully received."

I pause here and ask the question, What do you think of the Bible and Testament Fund? A brother who has been a member as long as this one states he has and is barred from the highest privilege on this earth-to learn more of God through his word! How can we pray without God's guidance in his word? How can we walk without a light for our feet? "Thy word is a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path." (Ps. 119: 105.)

Last week I gave one of our Testaments to a bright young lady who said she was a Catholic. I saw her today, and she said she had been reading it almost continually and was delighted with it.

I know brethren who have not given this question any serious thought seem to think every one already has a Testament. Dear brother, if you have reared a family. just think at what age you put a Testament in their hands as their own book and advised them to read it. I fear this is the principal cause of the fearful condition of the present generation. We are told that ninety per cent of the crimes of to-day are committed by youngsters under seventeen. The object of this fund is to supply a Testament to every one, both old and young, and, above all, to teach them a proper division of the word.

Here is what a sister at Wichita Falls, Texas, says: "I have a class of children, some whose parents are not members of the church. The children tell me they have no Testament to use in getting their lessons. Please send me two dozen."

This sister sends a dollar and pledges one dollar per month or more as long as she lives. She says it has been her highest pleasure to put the Bible in the hands of those who have none. We infer from this that she is old, but, like Mary when she anointed the Savior's feet, willing to do what she can.

"Uncle Minor's Stories" is a very interesting book, and is pleasing to both young and old. It is handsomely illustrated. Price, $1.50, postpaid.

ISAIAH'S MESSAGE AND HEZEKIAH'S WRITINGS.
BY M. C. KURFEES.

Brother Ernest D. Garrett, of Marshall, Texas, sends in the following comment on an editorial in our issue of September 24, 1925:

In Brother M. C. Kurfees' answer to "A Bible Student," in the editorial of September 20 issue, I find it stated that Isa. 38: 20 is a part of Jehovah's message to Hezekiah through Isaiah, the beginning of which message is recorded thus: "Then came the word of Jehovah to Isaiah, saying, Go, and say to Hezekiah, Thus saith Jehovah." (Isa. 38: 4, 5.) According to both the Authorized and Standard Versions, this message is contained in the fourth to eighth verses, inclusive, and was delivered while Hezekiah was sick unto death (verse 1); but verses ten to twenty, inclusive, are the writings of Hezekiah after he had recovered from his sickness (verse 9). How about this?

It is true that Isaiah's message to Hezekiah while the latter was sick "is contained in the fourth to the eighth verses" and that "verses ten to twenty are the writings of Hezekiah after he had recovered from his sickness;" but Isaiah records it all, and if there is anything in it in the way of worship to God that was not God's will at that time, which was the point the editorial had in view, then it is strange that Isaiah would record it without noting the fact. The writer of the editorial knew when answering "A Bible Student" that the words, "We will sing my songs with stringed instruments all the days of our life in the house of Jehovah," were the words of Hezekiah; but being quoted by Isaiah, without disapproval, the latter by such silence, if we may judge him by other Biblical examples, was certainly remiss if the use of such instruments was not, at that time, in harmony with God's will.

But, touching the question of a divine command for instrumental music in the Jewish worship, it is here freely conceded that Jehovah sometimes commands persons to do what is contrary to his own will when he sees, from their stubborn desires, that they are determined to do that way; but when this is the case, there is always, as far as the writer can here recall Biblical examples, some indication that it is not God's will. Take, for example, the case of Balak calling upon Balaam to curse Israel. (See book of Numbers, chapters 22, 23, and 24.) Balaam knew it was wrong to curse Israel, for Jehovah plainly said to him: "Thou shalt not curse the people; for they are blessed." (Num. 22: 12.) Hence, he very properly said to Balak's messengers: "Get you into your land; for Jehovah refuseth to give me leave to go with you." But Balak's messengers, being no doubt convinced that Balaam, if a little inducement were held out to him, would yield, reported his decision to their master, who promptly "sent yet again princes, more, and more honorable than they," who came to Balaam and said: "Let nothing, I pray thee, hinder thee from coming unto me: for I will promote thee unto very great honor, and whatsoever thou sayest unto me I will do: come therefore, I pray thee, curse me this people." To this the self-willed Balaam replied: "Tarry ye also here this night, that I may know what Jehovah will speak unto me more." He already knew Jehovah's will, and yet had the face to tell the messengers that he would see "what Jehovah" would say unto him "more!" He wanted to go with them, and was trying to find an excuse to go, though he knew it was contrary to Jehovah's will, and hence Jehovah said unto him: "Rise up, go with them." Then verse 21 says: "And Balaam rose up in the morning, and saddled his ass, and went with the princes of Moab." Exactly; that is what he wanted to do, and verse 22 says: "And God's anger was kindled because he went." Thus, Jehovah was angry with Balaam for doing what he had told him to do, but why? Because Balaam wanted to go with them, and was determined to go if he could find some excuse for it, and Jehovah told him, in substance, to go on and do what he was determined to do.

The same thing, in principle, is found in the case of Israel asking for a king. To have a king was contrary to Jehovah's will, and Israel knew it, but was determined, nevertheless, to have one, and so said to Samuel: "Make us a king to judge us like all the nations." (1 Sam. 8: 5.) Samuel went to Jehovah with it in prayer, and Jehovah said unto him: "Hearken unto the voice of the people in all that they say unto thee; for they have not rejected thee, but they have rejected me, that I should not be king over them." (1 Sam. 8: 7.) When Samuel remonstrated with them, they stubbornly replied: "Nay; but we will have a king over us, that we also may be like all the nations." (1 Sam. 8: 19, 20.) Then Jehovah said unto Samuel: "Hearken unto their voice, and make them a king." (Verse 22.) Thus, it is another plain case of Jehovah's commanding a thing to be done which was contrary to his will, and was only commanded by him because he saw the people were determined to have it that way; but the fact that it was contrary to Jehovah's will is carefully put into the record.

Now, contrary to all of this, in the case of instrumental music in the divine worship under the Jewish dispensation, there is no such note of divine disapproval of its use when Jehovah commands them to use it. The passage in Amos 6: 5 which speaks of them that "invent for themselves instruments of music, like David," is sometimes quoted as proof that instrumental music in the worship even then was contrary to God's will; but the science of logic teaches us that "what proves too much proves nothing," and this proves too much. Amos not only speaks thus of instrumental music, but he condemns the people in the way they were doing seven different things as follows: (1) They "that lie upon beds of ivory" and "stretch themselves upon their couches." (2) They that "eat the lambs out of the flock." (3) They that eat "the calves out of the midst of the stall." (4) They "that sing idle songs to the sound of the viol." (5) They "that invent for themselves instruments of music, like David." (6) They "that drink wine in bowls." (7) They "that anoint themselves with the chief oils."

Now, let our readers look carefully over this list, and they can see that in quite a number of other things besides inventing "instruments of music, like David," the people were condemned. It was certainly not wrong to "lie upon beds of ivory" nor to "stretch themselves upon their couches;" neither was it wrong to "eat the lambs out of the flock" nor "the calves out of the midst of the stall," nor to "drink wine in bowls," nor to "anoint themselves with the chief oils." Of course these things were not wrong in themselves. Two other specifications in the list remain. One of them was singing "idle songs to the sound of the viol;" but what was it that was wrong in this? Was it merely the singing of "idle songs" or also singing songs at all "to the sound of the viol?" "Idle songs," we know, would be wrong whether sung "to the sound of the viol" or sung without the viol; but what is the extent of the prophet's condemnation here? So far as the statement by itself is concerned, no mortal man can tell whether the prophet merely meant to condemn singing "idle songs" or to condemn also singing songs at all "to the sound of the viol." The passage itself does music, like David?" Who can tell but that, in this specification of them "that invent to themselves instruments of music, like David?" Who can tell but that, in this specification precisely as in the others, the prophet was merely condemning the way the people, "like David," were inventing and using "instruments of music," and was not condemning the use of "instruments of music" itself? Five of this list we know were not wrong, yet the prophet condemned the people in the way they were doing them precisely as he condemned them in inventing instruments of music.

Let it be noted here that, even if it could be shown conclusively that the use of instrumental music in the Jewish worship was contrary to the will of God, that would have nothing whatever to do with the question of its right or wrong in Christian worship. Not a solitary thing would there be gained in favor of those who oppose its use in Christian worship. Whether it was right or wrong in the Jewish worship can only be determined by determining whether God did or did not incorporate it in that worship; and whether it is right or wrong in Christian worship can only be determined, in like manner, by determining whether God did or did not incorporate it in that worship. That God commanded it in the Jewish worship is just as true as it is true that God spoke through David in the Psalms.

Hence, finally, even without the passage from Isaiah, when we have such other inspired passages as, "Give thanks unto Jehovah with the harp: sing praises unto him with the psaltery of ten strings" (Ps. 33: 2, 3), and, "Unto thee will I sing praises with the harp, O thou Holy One of Israel" (Ps. 71: 22), then, if we are to credit these Psalms as God's word on the music question, at that time, just as we credit them on other subjects, the conclusion stated in the other editorial is enevitable that "in the Jewish worship, both vocal and instrumental music were divinely commanded." The writer of this editorial is not in sympathy with the critics, high or low. who scrap the Scriptures of the Old Testament and try to separate their writers from the God who inspired them. Most assuredly, if the Psalms are God's word-that is, if God spoke through them-then "both vocal and instrumental music were divinely commanded."

COMMENTARY ON FIRST CORINTHIANS. No. 25. BY C. E. W. DORRIS.

Chapter V.

PURGING OUT THE OLD LEAVEN. (Verses 6-8.)

Verse 6. Your glorying is not good. Your boasting during such a time of corruption is without effect for good. You are triumphing in your superior knowledge, and busily employed in setting up and supporting your respective teachers and theories, while the congregation is left under the most scandalous corruptions and of such degree as threatens its destruction. Know ue not. With all your boasted wisdom, do you not know and acknowledge the truth of a common maxim, that a little leaven leaveneth the whole lump? As a little leaven leaveneth the whole lump of dough, so one sin or sinner, if tolerated in a congregation, will have a tendency to affect the whole congregation. The thought is: If this leaven, the wicked son, be permitted to remain in your fellowship; if his conduct be not exposed by church discipline, the floodgates of impurity will be opened on the church and the whole state of Christianity ruined in Corinth. Here is wisdom for the church to-day. If all the congregations had followed God's directions and withdrawn fellowship from all leaven of heresy, the church would not be in such a deplorable condition of strife and division. Following the divine wisdom of discipline is the salvation of all congregations from schism and strife. All congregations should and ought to follow the wisdom of God and withdraw fellowship from all leaven of evil as soon as it appears and before it spreads to a degree that it cannot be handled.

7. Purge out therefore the old leaven, etc. Remove the leaven of impurity by withdrawing fellowship from the fornicator, that the congregation may be free from the impure leaven, or influence. The guilty party is called "the old leaven" because he is not a new offender, but because he had continued long in the evil practice for which he is now to be withdrawn from. Since his crime is whoredom, it may be that it is called "old leaven" because the Corinthians in their heathen state had been much addicted to that vice. It was the custom of the Jews previous to the passover to search their houses in the most diligent manner for the old leaven, and throw it out, sweeping every part clean; so the church at Corinth was advised to so act with the guilty son. (See Ex. 12: 15-19.) For even Christ our passover, etc. The Jews at the passover were required to put out of their houses all leaven. (Ex. 12: 15-19.) So, as Christ is our paschal Lamb, slain for us, the church should put away from it all the leaven of sin. No congregation can live righteously and meet the approval of God and fail to do this. To be unleavened is to be separated from sin and notorious sinners. The Jews were to cast all leaven out of their houses with detestation upon the penalty of being cut off from the congregations of Israel. Thus Christianity obliges every one of us to cut off every notorious sinner from the congregation, every lust from our hearts, every member of the old Adam, that we may be a new lump, answering our holy and heavenly calling. The reason assigned for putting away from us the old leaven of uncleanness and malicious wickedness is, because "Christ our passover is sacrificed for us." We should, therefore, be as careful to put away sinful lusts out of our hearts as the Jews were to cast the material leaven out of their houses. We do not find Christ expressed in the New Testament by the name of any other animal which typified him, but only this of a lamb, this being more significant of his innocency and sufficiency than any other. In John 1: 29 he is called God's Lamb, and here he is called our passover or paschal lamb. He is God's in regard of the Author, ours in regard of the end; God's in regard of designation, ours in regard of acceptation. Note that Christ is our Sacrifice. A sacrifice was necessary for a sinful creature to atone divine displeasure. A sacrifice for sin must be pure and sinless, and such sacrifice could be found but in the Son of God. He was a sacrifice for us, not for himself; for, being perfectly sinless, he needed no sacrifice. The weight of all our sin was laid upon his innocent shoulders. Our guilt became his by a voluntary susception of the punishment, and consequently the sufferings of this sacrifice are imputed to us. He took our sins upon himself and gave us the benefit of his sufferings.

8. Let us keep the feast. Some think this has reference to the Lord's Supper, or to Easter, but I am inclined to the idea that it refers to constant duty. We always have a paschal Lamb; therefore, it is always our duty to keep the festival by putting out of our fellowship all leaven of sin. That it does not refer to Easter is certain, because the Lord never authorized Christians to keep it as Easter. Not with old leaven. That is, not with wicked practices, such as gluttony, drunkenness, whoredom, fraud, etc. It is called "old leaven," probably because the Corinthians in their heathen state had been much addicted to these practices. Leaven of mulice and wickedness. "Malice" is ill will in the mind. "Wickedness" is ili will expressed by actions, especially such as are accompanied with treachery. By "the leaven of malice and wickedness" is meant all these bad dispositions and actions which hypocrites cover by putting on a show of piety. Unleavened bread of sincerity and truth. Paul gives the epithet of "unleavened" to sincerity and truth in allusion to the emblematic meaning of the unleavened bread which the Israelites were to eat during the feast of the passover; therefore, they were taught to celebrate that feast with pious and virtuous dispositions. Paul included both wicked principles and wicked men. The Corinthians were to "keep the feast, not with old leaven "-that is, the impure principles which actuated them while in their heathen state; "neither with the leaven of malice and wickedness"-that is, radical depravity, producing unrighteousness in the life; nor with the persons who are thus influenced and thus act; but with the unleavened bread—that is, the upright and godly persons, who have purity of heart, affections, and conduct, and who have received the testimony of God (the gospel of Christ), and who are inwardly as well as outwardly what they profess to be. Under the reign of Christ we must be saved equally from Judaism, heathenism, and from sin of every kind; malice and wickedness must be destroyed; and sincerity and truth, inward purity and outward holiness, take their place. The inference drawn by Paul from Christ's dying a sacrifice for us is: "Therefore let us keep the feast." Not an anniversary, or yearly, but a daily feast, even all the days of our Christian life. Let all the days of our lives be as the Jewish feast of the passover was, free from leaven, from the leaven of malice and wickedness, and full of sincerity and uprightness both toward God and man. Note the duty of each individual Christian. Seeing Christ has died as a sacrifice for us, our duty is to live unto Christ by living up to the rule which Christ has given us, abhorring all malice, abandoning all wickedness, and exercising that truth and uprightness toward man which will be an ornament to our profession while we are upon earth, and will bring us at length to the glory of God in heaven.

There is a splendid location for a good doctor at Black-water, Mo., also a good druggist. Blackwater is a thriving small town in an excellent farming and stock-raising country. A good Christian physician is almost sure to make good. If interested, address J. G. Malphurs, Blackwater, Mo.

- H. R. Daniel, Elkton, Ky., October 14: "I closed a nine-days' meeting at Mount Olive, in Dickson County, Tenn., on Monday night after the first Lord's day in this month. William Freeland. Bowling Green, Ky., October 12: "I closed a meeting at Price's Chapel, eight miles from Bowling Green, last night, with nine baptisms and one restoration. The brethren there are working together in perfect harmony and the spirit of Christ prevails. One lady came to the true light from the Baptist Church. This meeting continued over three Lord's days. This is a Baptist community, but Paul reminds us that the gospel of Christ' is the power of God unto salvation.' Brethren, let us have your prayers, that much good in this way may be accomplished."

C. A. Norred, 524 Walnut Street, Florence, Ala., October 16: "The congregation here wishes to establish a congregation in Tuscaloosa. A church must be planted there. If necessary, I shall visit there myself. Young people from faithful homes are going to Tuscaloosa to the university and falling into the hands of the 'transgressives.' We are determined to put a stop to such conditions. I wonder if you would put a line in the Gospel Advocate stating my desire to get in touch with any Christian in Tuscaloosa who is interested in the work and worship set forth in the New Testament. Please send any bill for such announcement to my address, and I will mail you the amount at once." There is no bill. The Gospel Advocate stands ready to render all the assistance in its power to Brother Norred and the church at Florence in this most commendable undertaking. We hope some brother living at Tuscaloosa will write Brother Norred immediately.

- N. B. Hardeman will preach at Sardis, Tenn., on the third Lord's day in November.

- L. I. Brigance, Henderson, Tenn., October 24: "We all greatly appreciate the Gospel Advocate and your work in connection with it. I hear brethren say that the Advocate hasn't had such a fine front-page editor since the lamented F. D. Srygley. Call on us any time we can serve you."
- B. C. Goodpasture, Atlanta, Ga., October 19, orders twelve copies of "The Bible versus Theories of Evolution," and says: "There have been three confessions, one restoration, and one from the Baptists at West End Avenue since last report. We are planning to do an unusual amount of work this winter."
- H. C. Shoulders closed a ten-days' meeting with the Mc-Broom Chapel congregation, near Double Springs, Tenn., last Thursday night, with three baptisms. Brother Shoulders made the Gospel Advocate office a very pleasant visit as he returned to Bowling Green, where he is serving as superintendent of the Potter Orphan Home.

Horace W. Busby, Sparta, Tenn., October 16: "The meeting is fine here, with good crowds, good singing, and six baptized to-night. We will close Tuesday night, and I will begin at Lake Victor, Texas, October 24. I am to be in Abilene for two meetings the last of November and the first of December, with the North Side and the College congregations,"

S. Houston Proffitt, Hohenwald, Tenn., October 20: "I. A. Douthitt, of Sedalia, Ky., began a meeting with the Hohenwald church of Christ on Sunday morning, October 11, and continued it until Monday evening, October 12, and continued it until Monday evening, October 13, with two services daily. Twenty-nine were baptized, two came from the Missionary Baptists, and one was reclaimed. His next meeting will be at Bethel Church, near Mayfield, Ky."

Samuel E. Witty closed a splendid meeting at the West Side Central church of Christ, Detroit, Mich., Lord's-day night, October 18. There were eighteen baptisms, four restorations, and about nineteen to come from other congregations. Claud F. Witty preaches for this congregation. There are seven churches of Christ in Detroit, and all are working in peace and harmony and are in a prosperous condition.

O. C. Lambert, Waverly, Tenn., October 23: "I am now in a meeting at Camden, Tenn. Only one baptism to date. Brother Pullias has recently closed a fine meeting at Waverly, which resulted in eleven baptisms. The first week we had a circus, a tent show, and a county fair in town, and the last week it rained nearly every day. But the crowds were good and the preaching excellent. Brother Pullias is much loved here, and we are expecting him again next year."

H. L. Samuels, Magee, Miss.: "I desire to report one of the best missionary fields for the church of Christ to be found in our country. I located at this place two months ago as superintendent of the public school with an enrollment of over three hundred pupils. Soon after my election here I found that there was not a loyal church of Christ nearer than Jackson, Miss., fifty miles away. I was given authority to select my own faculty of thirteen teachers, and was very anxious to secure a few teachers who were members of the church of Christ, in order that we might meet for Lord's-day worship. If any who know of members of the church of Christ near this lecation will write me as to their location, I shall make an effort to locate them."

Harvey W. Draper, Houston, Texas, October 13: "It may interest you to know that on last Lord's day at the Bible study we had an increase in attendance of twenty-five little fellows, inmates of the DePelchin Faith Home, a nondenominational orphanage located just one block from Central church of Christ. This orphanage was one of the factors in deciding the location of our church building, which was finished about eighteen months ago, and just now we have persuaded those in charge of the homeless little ones to let us have them each Lord's-day morning for Bible teaching. L. E. Carpenter, formerly of Port Arthur, Texas, began regular work with us on the first of September, and already his efforts are beginning to be felt."

- O. H. Tallman, Springfield, Tenn., October 16: "I have just returned from Clearwater, Fla., where I assisted in a fifteen-days' meeting, the first to be held in their splendid new church house. The interest was better than expected. Three were added to the one body. While there we got in touch with a colored preacher of the Holiness Church, and, with the help of Brother Abbott, we were able to teach him 'the way of the Lord more perfectly. He took his stand with the church of Christ. He will be a useful man among his people. There is no colored church of Christ in that part of Florida, but I hope he can be encouraged and used by colored brethren to the glory of God. For further information, write Charles Y. Abbott, Clearwater, Fla."
- J. Pettey Ezell, Celina, Tenn., October 24: "I am in a meeting here. Large crowds are in daily attendance. The aisles are filled with chairs, the rostrum lined with interesting listeners, and yet they come. The 'digressives' have recently had an evangelist, representing and supported by the Woman's Christian Board of Missions, to hold a mission (?) meeting here in the Methodist meeting-house. Celina a mission point! Just think of it! When there has been a church of Christ here worshiping as the New Testament directs for years and years. Celina is not only not a mission point, but is actively engaged in actual missionary work. L. L. Yeagley, a good and faithful preacher of the gospel, is supported by the Celina congregation to preach at Celina and throughout the county."
- F. L. Paisley, Chicago, Ill., October 19: "My work with the Central congregation began yesterday encouragingly. Several new members have found the place since my meeting here in July. Our great task now is to assemble the many members that have moved here from various sections of the country. There are many here who have not been able to learn of our place of meeting. There are doubtless some here who have not tried to learn where we meet, or, knowing, have made no effort to come. There is so much to attract one away from God they need encouragement. We meet in Room 309, Capitol Building (formerly Masonic Temple), corner of State and Randolph Streets. It is very easy to find. Brethren, if you know any one here or any who are coming, keep me informed as to address. Write me at 216 East Superior Street."
- W. P. Lowe, 2910 Shelby Street, Indianapolis, Ind., October 23: "Our meeting here at 1201 Cruft Street closed on Lord's-day night. Three took membership. The word was sounded out and made plain, and in a kind manner. We appreciate the interest manifested in this meeting, and especially do we appreciate beyond measure the interest manifested by the East Side congregation. The East Side congregation is true to the old paths, to the Book, loyal and free from all isms. This was by far the best meeting ever held in South Indianapolis, and much of it was due to the good preaching and singing of E. G. Creacy, of Horse Cave, Ky., and William Miller, of Persimon, Ky. Remember, to reach us when visiting Indianapolis, take a Shelby Street car, get off at Cruft Street and walk east one block. Services each Lord's day. Bible study at 10:30 A.M.; worship at 11:15 A.M.; services at 7:45 P.M. We extend a cordial welcome to all."

Conducted for a half century by D. Lipscomb, E. G. Sewell, F. D. Srygley, and J. C. McQuiddy.

WORD FROM WASHINGTON.

BY T. B. LARIMORE.

Our September series of meetings began September 20 and ended October 4, resulting in two confessions and baptisms, seven others taking membership during the meeting. Brother G. C. Brewer did the preaching; hence, it is needless to say it was as good as the best.

The audiences were not as large as Brother Brewer is accustomed to preach to; but they were good for this section of our country, where it is difficult to induce people to listen to gospel preaching-about as large audiences as we are accustomed to have here. The meeting was well advertised, however. A coincidence in the two meetings we have had here this year—the Hardeman meeting and the Brewer meeting-was that each resulted in the same number of additions to the family of God.

Brother Brewer endeared himself to me and to others by the kind, courteous consideration he manifested toward me from the beginning of the meeting to the end of it. Not all younger preachers treat battle-scarred veterans of the cross with such commendable consideration. I have been blessed in having such consideration shown me, however, wheresoever I have gone, ever since I reached the top of the hill and started down the sunset, sun lit side of it.

The middle Sunday night of the meeting-September 27 -Brother Brewer delivered a lecture on "Evolution versus Christianity," having been urged to do so. The lecture had been well advertised, a large audience heard it, and it evidently gave great and general satisfaction. I am sure the lecture did good. Neither Robert Owen, of Lanark, Scotland, who crossed sword in debate with Alexander Campbell, nor any other atheist was or ever has been more definitely or decidedly against divinity than is the modern theory of evolution.

Grover Cleveland Brewer is not afflicted with that troublesome malady, egotism-popularly called "the bighead "-and I hope and pray he may never be. I baptized his mother, and she consecrated him to Christ and his cause before he was born; and I believe he is doing, and will continue to do as long as he lives, a great work for that

The "saints and faithful" here were glad Grover brought his wife and their little daughter, Elizabeth, with him, to see the capital of our country.

A marriage that seemed to give general satisfaction, with the probable exception of a few bachelors who felt as if they had been left, was that of Paschal Barnes, formerly of Tennessee, now of this city, and Miss Maggiebelle Gaither, formerly of Lawrenceburg, Tenn., but who has been with us about a year. They were quietly married in our Washington City meetinghouse, Friday evening, October 9, in the presence of a small audience of friends and well-wishers, and went immediately to their cozy little cottage just beyond the Potomac, in Virginia.

Ever since we came to live in Washington City, three years ago, our home has been in the home of the Barnes family-a Tennessee family consisting of three brothers and four sisters-all grown, all young, all busily engaged in work, some for the government, others in other occupations. Since that time I have had the privilege and pleasure of performing the marriage ceremony for all the boys, and there are left of the family only the four girls. It has been suggested that I bend my attention now to marrying off the girls; but, as two of them are going with us to California, I am inclined to say nothing further on the marriage question, lest we lose our girls and have to make the westward trip alone. I resigned my work as minister of the Washington City church of Christ a few weeks ago, and we expect to leave here about November 3, turning our faces toward Berkeley, Cal., where we shall probably make our home.

"NO NEW THING UNDER THE SUN."

BY E. A. ELAM.

That which hath been is that which shall be; and that which hath been done is that which shall be done; and there is no new thing under the sun. Is there a thing whereof it may be said, See, this is new? (Eccles. 1: 9, 10.)

Theories which now are have already been, have died away, and have arisen again. Some read them, revive them, give them a new verbal dress, and start them going again. Much of what one preaches depends upon what one reads. If one reads and studies man's theories, opinions, and notions, one will teach these, more or less. If one reads and studies and loves the word of God, one will teach and "preach the word." Some read too much the wrong books.

In his sermon on the millennium, Dr. Brents points out some of the theories concerning it which have been advanced. One is "the breaking down of denominationalism, and the universal acceptance of the true gospel of Christ, as taught by Mr. Campbell and his coworkers." Another is:

Another is:

The millennium will consist in the return of the Jews to Jerusalem as a nation, and their conversion to the Christian religion: and that Christ will literally come to Jerusalem and reign among them in person. Some go so far on this line as to assume that after the Jews shall be converted, they will go out as missionaries to convert the world, and that through their agency the world is yet to be converted to Christ—that the nation that rejected and crucified the Lord of glory is to be the means of converting the world to him. This may all be true, but it is, to our mind, not only unscriptural, but wholly unreasonable. We have two good reasons for not believing it: (1) the Bible does not teach it; (2) the Bible teaches just the opposite.

He quotes Jer. 19: 1-11 to prove that this theory of the return of the Jews as a nation to Jerusalem and their accepting Christ as a nation is unscriptural-that the Bible "teaches just the opposite." He says many Jews as individuals may accept Christ, "but as a nation, never." ("Gospel Sermons," pages 328-330.) He adds that some say: "O, Jesus is coming to Jerusalem to live and reign among the Jews!" And further adds: "It requires a greater degree of credulity than we can command to believe this will ever occur." While he begs to be heard as he presents his opinion on "the millennium," he says: "Time, the prover of all things; has shown much of what has been written on the millennium to be false."

Attention is called to this to show that no new thories on "the millennium" have been offered lately; and if so, what better are they than others which have already been offered? And that nothing new concerning the return of the Jews to Jerusalem has been learned. If it is God's purpose to gather the Jews as a nation to Jerusalem and to place Jesus over them as king, our belief or disbelief of this cannot change his purpose in the least.

For his dominion is an everlasting dominion, and his kingdom from generation to generation; and all the inhabitants of the earth are reputed as nothing; and he doeth according to his will in the army of heaven, and among the inhabitants of the earth; and none can stay his hand, or say unto him, What doest thou? (Dan. 4: 34, 35.)

Our opinions as to how God will carry out his purposes can have nothing whatever to do with the fulfillment of them. It is not for man to attempt to stay God's hand or to ask him what he is doing. Our whole life work is to hear and in faith to do the words of Jesus. "Every one therefore that heareth these words of mine, and doeth them, shall be likened unto a wise man, who built his house upon the rock." This is or should be our business. Let us, then, with the inspired apostles, be contented to know nothing, save Jesus Christ, and him crucified; to preach the gospel in its fullness, as set forth in the New Testament (and it can be found in no other book); and to patiently wait upon God to carry out his own purposes. We can neither "stay his hand" nor aid him in carrying them out by any wisdom of our own. I repeat, we can faithfully obey his commandments-do his will-and patiently await the fulfillment of all his promises in his own way.

A few years ago I read some articles by a young brother, setting forth and enlarging upon the theory that the seven churches of Asia, addressed in the book of Revelation (chapters 2 and 3), represented seven different ages of the church throughout the world and extending throughout time—namely, the Ephesian age, the Smyrnian age, the Pergamenian age, etc. I thought, "this is something new under the sun." This young brother stated that the church of to-day is passing through one of these conditions. But when I turned to Adam Clarke and consulted his commentary on these seven churches, I learned that this theory had already been advanced by some imaginary persons. That was written before Clarke wrote his commentary. Concerning these churches, Clarke says:

I must here advertise my readers: (1) That I do not perceive any metaphorical or allegorical meaning in the epistles to these churches. (2) I consider the churches areal; and that their spiritual state is here really and literally pointed out; and that they have no reference to the state of the church of Christ in all ages of the world, as has been imagined; and that the notion of what has been termed the Ephesian state, the Smyrnian state, he Pergamenian state, the Thyatirian state, etc., is unfounded, absurd, and dangerous; and such expositions should not be entertained by any who wish to arrive at a sober and rational knowledge of the Holy Scriptures.

As Clarke says, these notions are "unfounded, absurd, and dangerous." They are dangerous to the unity and peace of the church and to the salvation of souls, because they take the heart from the plain and simple will of God—the words of Jesus—and weaken faith in the gospel of Christ. God solemnly warns against doing such fearful things. Jude (verse 11) speaks of those who "went in the way of Cain." Cain worshiped God, but not according to his will—not in faith. The great difference between Cain and Abel, to begin with, was Abel's faith and Cain's lack of it. Abel believed God and in faith did as God directed—offered the sacrifice of blood without question and clung to God's will. Sin crouched at Cain's door; he was of the wicked one, made offerings to Jehovah without faith, went in his own way, and finally killed his brother. Faith, on the one hand, and the lack of it, on the other hand, have marked the great difference between religious people and the worshipers of God (for some worship him in vain) from the days of Cain and Abel until now. Kind reader, on which side are you?

"AN APPEAL TO THE CANDID."

BY F. B. SRYGLEY.

I recently received a letter from Brother Wood, of Dallas, Texas, in which he said he was sending me a copy of a booklet which he hoped I would read carefully and then write him what I thought of it. As this book is now public property, I will tell the public, through the Gospel Advocate, some things I think about it.

On the outside cover of the booklet I find the following: "An Appeal to the Candid, Being an Examination of the Nichol-Whiteside Review of R. H. Boll. Published by Dr. Eugene V. Wood, Dallas, Texas."

The first page of the booklet is called "Introduction," and from this page I quote: "Brother Boll knows absolutely nothing about my intention of examining the Nichol-Whiteside Review of his three books just mentioned, and it will be a great surprise to him to hear of it." This shows that Dr. Wood is a self-appointed agent to defend Brother Boll. Why not allow Brother Boll to defend his own position? He is of age, and he ought to know what he teaches better than any others; so why not allow him to defend it?

I was the more surprised at the Doctor when I read in his booklet the following: "Every man who thinks at all will want to know what it is that Boll teaches that is so objectionable and so dangerous, otherwise he will not know what his attitude is to be toward the matter. This, too, I believe, you will agree is right. Then will you not also agree, my dear brother, that you should learn what Boll teaches from Boll's own writing, and not from what his opponents or his friends say about his teaching?" I do most heartily agree to this, but I am wondering if Dr. Wood agrees to it. If he does, why did he rush in to defend Boll's doctrine, especially since he had not even been asked to do so? I do wish the Doctor had remained out of this and let Boll attend to it, so we could all do right by reading Boll's writing instead of his on this question. Just as the Doctor shows us what is right and gets us all to agree to it, he rushes in and fixes us so we cannot do what he says we all know is right.

In the "Introduction" to the booklet the Doctor says again: "I shall not attempt to cover every point of the Nichol-Whiteside booklet, but we shall together examine enough of the book to let you see the real spirit of it and the irrelevancy of its arguments. If you had read the three booklets of Brother Boll of which the book we are now examining is a purported review, there would be no need that I write to you." The Doctor compliments himself at the expense of his readers when he says that by his aid in this examination he will "let you see the real spirit of it and the irrelevancy of its arguments." Of course the readers can see what the Nichol-Whiteside book says, but they cannot see the real spirit of it without the Doctor's help. When did the Doctor get to be a discerner of spirits? The reader might think he saw the spirit of it, but we have to have the Doctor's aid to see "the real spirit of it." I would not even suggest that the Doctor was not candid when he wrote that statement. "If you had read the three booklets of Brother Boll of which the book we are now examining is a purported review, there would be no need that I write to you." Now, as this is to be "an appeal to the candid," surely the appealer would be candid; but, as a matter of fact, he could have bought the full set of Boll's books for a few cents, and it would have been cheaper for him to have bought all his friends a set than it was to prepare and publish his book. This fact would render his book needless, according to his own statement, and I do not see why he wrote it unless he just wanted the practice in book making.

While the Doctor calls only the first page of his book "Introduction," he devotes about sixteen pages, nearly one-third of the entire book, to outside matters that are not germane to the arguments. In these outside matters, among other things, the brother says: "It seems to me that a number of brethren have agreed together to oppose Boll because they do not agree with all he believes, and their influence has led others to disfellowship him." This has the appearance of a bad seem to me. They "have agreed together to oppose Boll"-not his doctrine, but Boll. Of course the brother offers no proof, only it seems so to him. I wish he had told us what he based that seem so upon. It had never occurred to me. I know there are many good brethren who do not believe Boll's teaching, and they are perfectly agreed in their opposition to it, but to say that they have gone into an agreement to oppose Boll is an intimation of a very serious charge. There is a disposition on the part of many brethren to defend Boll with his false doctrine and all, simply because they like him. God forbid that I should ever put any man above the truth.

In these introductory remarks the brother has a division which he calls "Boll Personally Disparaged." He then quotes some rather brisk language from the book he is reviewing, such as the following: "Boll desires to attract attention to himself and to get into the limelight, obsessed with such desire." And again: "'All this fuss Brother Boll makes about Christ coming for his saints, taking them off to heaven for several years and then coming with them, is pure balderdash.' 'Balderdash,' beautiful word in Christian literature!" As the brother complained so at the brisk language of the brethren that he was reviewing, my attention was naturally turned to his own style in dealing with others, and I here give a sample of the Doctor's "beautiful language:" "I was reliably informed that a preacher of Dallas said, 'The time has come when we are going to have to draw the line against any one who has anything to do with that church that has Boll to preach for it.' Note, now, 'we will have to draw the line,' then bewailing and sanctimoniously urging that Boll divides the churches." The Doctor almost called that preacher a prevaricator and a hypocrite for holding and expressing an opinion about a church that is fed on Boll's teaching. "Bewailing and sanctimoniously urging." In the language of the Doctor, I reply: "Beautiful words in Christian literature!" It is all right for the Doctor to use brisk language in talking about a preacher of Dallas, but it is terrible for others to use such language about his friend.

Again I quote: "Furthermore, there seems to be a disposition on the part of the reviewers to hunt motes, to strain at gnats, and to force an issue; and when they can't make it appear big and frightful, they insist that Boll did not come out clearly and frankly and that what he says is not nearly so bad as what he secretly believes." It is bad for Nichol and Whiteside to use any rough, brisk language in talking about the Doctor's idol, but he must be allowed to tell how it seems to him, even if it does make his opponent out a hypocrite and dishonest.

The brother makes this further observation: "Sincerely, brother, and in due kindness toward the reviewers, the best that I can say for their booklet, aside from its ugly personal reflections, it is only quibbling and sham logic." The Doctor is quite bold to accuse Whiteside and Nichol of resorting only to quibbling and sham logic.

Again I quote: "Mark the above sentence, reader, for we shall see the connection later. Boll's piety is exasperating, and the fact that it is only a pose does not make it any less so, it seems. It would not be at all strange for wicked men to dislike a man for piety—they always think that Christians are hypocrites—for now, as of old, they that are born after the flesh persecute those that are born after the Spirit, and Cain slew Abel because his own works were wicked and Abel's righteous; but that Christian men without cause should discredit a brother's piety is unaccountable." That is a serious charge coming from a brother who is objecting to disparaging personalities. The Doctor is so in love with his friend he almost has a nightmare every time any one says anything against him, but he is very free in personalities when it comes to others.

The Doctor says in these same introductory remarks: "I shall make no contention for a single position that is held by Brother Boll, except to present the position so that you may see and decide whether or not the reviewers refuted his claim." The Doctor perhaps wants to wade around a little in the slough of speculation without getting his shoes soiled. If the position that Brother Boll occupies is true, the Doctor ought to make contention for it; and if it is not, he should not try to defend it even if his friend does believe it. Suppose the position is false (and I believe it is) and the Doctor succeeds in showing that these brethren failed to answer Boll, then what has the Doctor done by writing his useless book? I hope I may contend earnestly for the faith, and I shall not be deterred from that course by the Doctor's cry of persecution for the man who has taught the doctrine. These are a few of the things which I think of this book.

"CAMPBELLITES ANTIMISSIONARY."

BY F. W. SMITH.

Under the above caption a Baptist paper gives vent to its bad manners after the following fashion:

The Campbell movement in its beginning was intensely antimissionary. This has been denied, but can be easily verified by reference to Mr. Campbell's statements. The following will suffice: "It is evident that it is a capital mistake to suppose that missionaries in heathen lands without the power of working miracles can succeed in establishing the Christian religion." (Campbell's "Christian Baptist," page 15.) "Is, then, the attempt to convert the heathen by means of modern missionaries an unauthorized and a hopeless one? It seems to be unauthorized; and if so, then it is a hopeless one." (Campbell's "Christian Baptist," page 15.)—Elkhorn Baptist.

IN THE WAY OF THE BAPTISTS.

The people vulgarly called "Campbellites" by Baptist scribes must be terribly in the way of the Baptist sect, for they lose no opportunity to misrepresent and vilify those who refuse to be called by any other than a Bible name. Is all this religious hatred generated by a self-conscious inability to defend Baptist doctrine in discussions with those who claim to be Christians only? If not, whence does it come? What have the people dubbed "Campbellites" done to the Baptists to merit or demand such a tirade as above quoted? Are they in the way of the Baptists?

FACTS VERSUS MISREPRESENTATION.

To scrap and garble the writings of another so as to misrepresent the author is nothing short of downright dishonesty; and that is exactly what the man did whose statement is under review. In the editorial written by Alexander Campbell, from which the Baptist scribe garbled certain statements, Mr. Campbell, under the heading, "The Capital Mistake of Modern Missionary Schemes," said, "Miracles and missionaries are inseparably connected in the New Testament;" and who will dare deny that statement?

Instead of opposing the sending the gospel to all lands, Mr. Campbell was simply combating the "modern schemes" of such efforts. Right before that Baptist scribe's eyes, in the same editorial, under the heading, "How, then, is the gospel to spread through the world?" Mr. Campbell wrote as follows: "The New Testament is the only source of information on this topic. It teaches us that the association called 'the church of Jesus Christ' is, in propria forma, the only institution of God left on earth to illuminate and reform the world. That is, to speak in the most definite and intelligible manner, a society of men and women, having in their hands the oracles of God, believing in their hearts the gospel of Jesus Christ, confessing the truth with their lips, exhibiting in their lives the morality of the gospel, and walking in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord blamelessly in the sight of all men. When spiritual men-that is, men having spiritual gifts, or, as now termed, 'miraculous gifts'-were withdrawn, this institution was left on earth, as the grand scheme of heaven, to enlighten and reform the world. An organized society of this kind, modeled after the plan taught in the New Testament, is the consummation of the manifold wisdom of God to exhibit to the world the civilizing, the moralizing, the saving light, which renovates the human heart, which elevates human character, and which prostrates in the dust all the boasted expedients of ancient and modern times. The church of the living God is therefore styled 'the pillar and ground of the truth,' or, as Macknight more correctly renders it, 'the pillar and support of the truth.'"

Mr. Campbell, instead of opposing what is called "missionary work," was showing the New Testament way of doing such work in contrast with human schemes. Hear him: "The Christian religion is a social religion, and cannot be exhibited to the full conviction of the world, only when it appears in this social character. An individual or two, in a pagan land, may talk about the Christian religion, and may exhibit its morality as far as respects mankind in general; but it is impossible to give a clear, a satisfactory, a convincing exhibition of it, in any other way than by exhibiting a church, not on paper, but in actual existence and operation, as divinely appointed. The ambassadors of Christ, or his missionaries to the world, were commissioned to go to all nations in quest of materials to build this pillar of truth, this house of the living God; and then to place and cement these materials in such a way as to bear the inscription of the blessed gospel, and to exhibit it in such conspicuous and legible characters as to be known and read of all men. This work the apostles accomplished in having made of twain one new man -that is, of Jew and Gentile one new institution, or associated body, the church; and having placed this in all nations, in the most conspicuous and elevated situations, in the most populous countries, in the most commercial States, and in the most renowned cities, they were taken to heaven, and left the church, by its doctrine and example, to Christianize the world."

One with the least degree of fairness and sense of justice can see that Mr. Campbell was contending for the New Testament order of missionary work, by a church of Jesus Christ not only proclaiming by word of mouth the gospel, but by giving an exhibition of the gospel in their lives.

If the people this Baptist scribe delights to call "Campbellites" do not believe in Christian missions, how does he account for the thousands of congregations they have built i up, and the number of members, including thousands of those who were formerly Baptists?

It is a statement of holy writ, "Be sure your sin will find you out;" and sure enough the sin of misrepresentation by this Baptist scribe has found him out.

WE WANT TEN THOUSAND NEW SUBSCRIBERS.

One thousand people can accomplish much more than one person. Ten thousand people can do more than one thousand people. If every one who reads this paper would go to work immediately to secure new subscribers to the Gospel Advocate, it would not be over one day until we would have ten thousand additional subscribers to the paper. How easily it can be done! All that is necessary is for all to pull together.

Are you not sufficiently interested in the advancement of the gospel of Christ to do the little work necessary to help us add ten thousand subscribers to our list?

We are not in the habit of complaining of heavy expenses. The government is forcing the publisher to pay very heavy postage; the publisher must pay double prewar prices for white paper; wages are just about double what they were ten years ago; still the Advocate is only two dollars a year. Without bringing down the cost of publishing each paper, the publisher must suffer a heavy loss. A decided increase in circulation will cheapen the cost of printing

Surely every subscriber will help us bring about this result. The paper costs double what it did thirty years ago to publish it. Because at that time it succeeded in running without loss should not lead any one to believe that it can do so now.

Double the list of subscribers if you would have the paper on a firm financial basis. In doubling the circulation, you are not only enabling the paper to run without loss, but you are doing a good work in getting others to read the paper. Thousands have been led to the truth by reading the Advocate. If you have no interest in the cause of Christ, if you are not concerned about leading sinners to Christ, then you may decide to knock the Advocate and thus increase the burden of those who have been making heavy sacrifices for years to preach the gospel through its columns. Many people uphold the paper because it is doing good. We do not believe you will be a knocker, for knocking never helps the knocker.

If you will be one of the workers and not a knocker, we would appreciate a note from you to that effect. would be glad to publish the names and addresses of all our workers. We want a worker in every church and one at every post office. We do not want to stop under ten thousand new names. Our list is steadily increasing, but not so rapidly as it should. Will you not join our workers tc-day? PUBLISHERS GOSPEL ADVOCATE.

Summertown, Tenn., October 13.— Felix C. Sowell, of Columbia, Tenn., closed a ten-days' meeting here recently, with two additions. Bridgeport, Ala., October 9.—My whole aim in life is to be good and do good; to help advance the cause of Christ in this big, bright, beautiful, bountiful world of ours; to make the world better by my having lived in it; to help and not hinder everything that is elevating and ennobling and that is in harmony with the teachings of the Bible. I wish the Gospel Advocate the very best success .- (Miss) Mattie Holder.

McMinnville, Tenn., October 17.— Since my last report I have conducted some interesting meetings. I closed at Keltonsburg, in Dekalb County, Tenn., with eight additions to the church, which was in dire need of a revival. Among this number were two from the sects. I next went to friends and relatives in the Hill's Creek vicinity and labored two weeks. There were sixteen baptisms and six restorations. I go next for some work in the neglected fields of Louisiana.— E. D. Martin.

Irving, Texas, October 15.—On the first Lord's day in October I began laboring with the church of Christ in Irving. I had labored with the church of Christ in Madisonville for a little more than three years. In Madisonville all were my friends, and, so far as I know, all wished me to remain with them; but my wife's health had failed, and as in Madisonville I could be at home only three Sundays in the month, while by making the move I could be at home full time, so, in the hope of benefiting her, I moved away from as dear friends as I have ever known. I shall try by the grace of known. I shall try by the grace of God to accomplish a great work in Irving. I ask an interest in your prayers. Correspondents will please note the change in my address.—W. P. Skaggs.

Bakersfield, Mo., October 13.—My meeting at Knobel, Ark., is now in the past. We did not have any additions, but the church was strengthened. The work at Knobel has greatly depended upon the untiring efforts of N. E. Hicks, who taught in the public school for eight years and has been in business for three years and in all these for eight years and has been in business for three years, and in all these years he has been preaching and teaching the word of the Lord as he has had opportunity. Brother Hicks attended the County Line Bible School two winters, which helped him in his preparation for the great work that he is doing. My next meeting will be with the Houston Heights congregation, in Houston, Texas, beginning on October 1.—Cled E. Wallace.

Watseka, Ill., October 5.—I have been kept out of the field work for some five weeks, as I was called home on account of sickness of my only brother. I found him dangerously ill, and after a little more than a week he was called from us. The field work will keep me from being in meetings for several weeks yet, but as soon as possible I want to be back preaching the word. If any points in Kentucky, Tennessee, or Alabama need any preaching or a few weeks of careful Bible study this winter, address me at Box 116, Route 4, Watseka, Ill. Wife and I keep up the worship at home, as there is no loyal congregation in Watseka.—Andrew Perry.

Lebanon, Tenn., October 17.—Our annual Lebanon meeting was interrupted through the illness of Brother Jesse P. Sewell. Brother Sewell continued the meeting three days. On the morning of the fourth day he took to his bed and for five days was not able to be out. Local forces continued the meeting the remainder of the week. When Brother Sewell was sufficiently strong to do so, he took the train for his home in Corsicana, Texas. During the few days he was with us he endeared himself to the entire congregation and town. We regretted to see him go; but he consented to come next year at the same time for another meeting. To this the church is looking forward with pleasure.—J. Leonard Jackson.

Bonham, Texas, October 13.—The work with the Central church of Christ in Bonham moves on splendidly. The Sunday-school work and the regular services on Sundays are all showing excellent interest. Our prayermeeting services also are very helpful to all, and interest in this work is growing. We received a very pleasant surprise Sunday morning, when a party of near twenty-five of our friends from the Denton congregation drove over to Bonham, attended the morning services, and spent the day with us in our home. The party brought lunches, made up of those good things to be had in Denton and prepared by those good wives and daughters. This was spread on our tables in a sort of picnic style, and was much enjoyed by all. But the best of the feast was the pleasant association enjoyed by these old friends, the tried and true. We sincerely hope they enjoyed the visit as well as did we; and they have already been invited to come again and bring the rest of the folks with them. We held the funeral of Sister S. J. Butcher yesterday, and also that of Brother R. S. Crowley. Sister Butcher was more than ninety-four and Brother Crowley more than ninety-five.—R. D. Smith.

BIBLE CROSS WORD PUZZI

FOUR square crosses divide this puzzle into a well-balanced whole. No words are very long, but there is a good quantity of four- and five-letter words, reasonably familiar to the Bible student, but with just enough difficulty to make solving the puzzle interesting.

How to Soive & Cross Word Puzzle © 1925 THE J.C.W. CO.

© 1925 THE LC.W.C.). How to Solve 2 Cross Word Prizzle (33)

To work out this puzzle, the white spaces must be filled with letters forming words answering to the various horizontal and vertical definitions given below. The horizontal and vertical words are not the same, but each gives a clue to the other. The first letter of each word is indicated by a number which refers to the definitions listed below.

It is advisable to first fill in, in both directions, those words which you know to be correct. These will furnish hints to those words which you do not know or had merely guessed at. When the puzzle is solved correctly, the letters in the white spaces will spell words both horizontally and vertically. The black spaces are the blind spots of the puzzle and merely form the pattern, incidentally designating the ends and beginnings of the words contained in the puzzle.

THE HOLY SPIRIT.

BY H. M. PHILLIPS.

There are so many who do not seem to have any intelligent idea of the Spirit that I feel that an article on the theme will not be amiss. In John 16: 13 the Spirit is referred to as a person seven times. However, most people consider the Spirit as something like air, gas, or some intangible matter. The Spirit is a Person, just as God and Christ are Persons. Read the following scriptures and see: The Spirit speaks (1 Tim. 4: 1); testifies (John 15: 26); teaches (John 14: 26); guides (John 16: 13); leads (Rom. 8: 14); searches (1 Cor. 2: 10); helps (Rom. 8: 26). Some things that show character: Mind (Rom. 8: 27); knows (1 Cor. 2: 11); loves (Rom. 15: 30); wills (1 Cor. 12: 11). The Spirit suffers as a person. He can be grieved (Eph. 4: 30); despised (Heb. 10: 29); blasphemed (Matt. 12: 31); resisted (Acts 7: 51); lied unto (Acts 5: 3); quenched (1 Thess. 5: 19). The Spirit is like God and Christ in that he is eternal (Heb. 9: 14); wise (1 Cor. 2: 10); powerful (Acts 1: 8); and works in conversion (John 3: 5). How is he received? By obeying (Acts 5: 32); by repenting and being baptized (Acts 2: 38); by hearing of faith (Gal. 3: 2) after one becomes a son of God (Gal, 4: 6). How do I know when I receive him or am filled with him? By what the word says, referring to the last scriptures mentioned. It is not by one's feelings or thoughts, but by what God says. How do I know when or how I am saved? Just by what the Lord says. So of receiving the Holy Spirit.

In James 2: 26 it is said: "For as the body without the Spirit is dead, so faith without works is dead also." Now, what is the "body?" It is the church. (Eph. 1: 22, 23; Col. 1; 18.) Of what is the church formed? Men and women who are saved, who are in the body, form the church on earth. Now, where does the Spirit dwell? In the bodies of the members. (See 1 Cor. 3: 16.) Suppose there was a time when the Spirit did not dwell in the body, or church, or members' bodies; then the church, or body, would have been dead. But the Holy Spirit has always been in the church, or body, for he dwells in holy places; and what is holier on earth than a person who has had his sins washed away and been made a child of God? Paul says: "Be filled with the Spirit." (Eph. 5: 18.) Now, that did not Imply that they did not have the Spirit at all, but that they were not full of it. They had to keep pure to be filled with the Spirit. To do this, they must not be filled with wine. Rom. 8: 9 says: "If any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his." Do you belong to Christ? I cite two passages (Matt. 26: 28; 1 Cor. 6: 19, 20) that show clearly that we are bought with a price. Acts 20: 28 tells what the price was. So all saved ones are his, and, therefore, have the Spirit of Christ, which is surely the Holy Spirit; for what other Spirit did Christ have? May we all see more what the Spirit is and know that all the saved have him in them.

HARMONY AND CO-OPERATION AMONG THE CHURCHES.

BY G. W. FARMER.

The church of the living God has many evils to combat and many things to beset it and retard its progress. We think and talk of the things without, such as prejudice, infidelity, skepticism, evolution, and agnosticism, with all of their attendant evils, as being great hindering causes and drawbacks to the church, and, indeed, they are; but these are not the greatest enemies to the church's interest. In my candid judgment, the church's greatest retarding influences are the internal evils, such as bickering, contention, and strife within. A want of harmony and cooperation is the greatest curse of the church to-day. It is the sin most inexcusable, insidious, and hateful.

No community of people, be it family, village, town, city, State, or nation, succeeds without harmony and coöperation. "A house divided against itself cannot stand," or, "A kingdom divided against itself cannot stand," is the teaching of the greatest Teacher that ever graced the earth.

How shocking, revolting, and disgraceful to see a family, a home, where love, sympathy, concord, and mutual agreement and helpfuiness should prevail, but instead thereof no harmony, no cooperation! Can such a condition give any promise of success? No. never! See how the affairs of a town or city, or even a State or nation, are allowed to suffer, languish, and die for want of harmony and cooperation. Failure is inevitable in every case.

Think you that the church of God can succeed where no harmony or cooperation among the individual churches exists? Nay, verily. Paul addresses the church of Corinth, "All the saints which are in all Achaia," and, "Them that . . . in every place call upon the the name of Jesus Christ." (1 Cor. 1: 2; 2 Cor. 1: 1.) These he exhorts to "be perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment." (1 Cor. 1: 10.) The congregations of the same town or city, or of different towns and cities, should be harmonious and should cooperate with and encourage each other.

There are to-day many congregations carrying many shades of coloring and going under the name "church of Christ," some of them in the same city, and each claiming to be the true church, and yet there is no harmony or cooperation between them. Some congregations in some of our cities and towns are even antagonistic toward each other. They are divided over such things as the communion cups, the class systems for teaching the Bible, the use of lesson helps, the way to take up the contribution, etc. This is a shame and a disgrace and is enough to make angels weep. There is something wrong somewhere. It shows that there is wanting the spirit of Christ. "If any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his." (Rom. 8: 9.) Tell me that such variance and bitterness is actuated by the Spirit of Christ? No, by no means. Some people seem to think that downright stubbornness and hard-headedness are essential Christian virtues.

There are more congregations of the church of Christ in Nashville, Tenn., than in any other city, so far as I know. We shall use these churches to illustrate our point. We shall suppose there are thirty congregations called "churches of Christ." I believe there are more, but I do not know how many more. Then what relation should exist among these churches? They should all be in harmony with each other. The spirit of concord and cooperation in the work of the Lord should abound. In order that this condition may exist, they must "all speak the same thing" and "be perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment."

Now, what applies to the churches of Christ in Nashville applies with equal force and propriety to the churches of Christ in every other town and city the wide world over. Where this happy state does not exist, the churches become a hiss and a byword, a stench in the nostrils of cultivated, refined, and thoughtful people.

Brethren, I believe the slogan among God's people to-day should be, " More harmony and cooperation."

My soul, be on thy guard, Ten thousand foes arise; The hosts of sin are pressing hard To draw thee from the skies.

SEARCH YOUR ATTIC FOR OLD STAMPS

Fortunes Have Been Found on Old Envelopes

Many old stamps, both United States and Confederate, are worth from fifty dollars to five thousand dollars. The hobby of stamp collect-ing is of far greater importance nowadays than in times past when it was generally considered as a pastime for schoolboys only. To-day collectors eagerly seek out and pay huge prices for those stamps which are scarce to the point of being worth hundreds or even thousands of dollars. Last year in Paris at a stamp sale one stamp of in Paris at a stamp sale one stamp of British Guiana was sold for thirty-two thousand five hundred dollars, this being the highest price ever paid for a single stamp. People who make a bonfire of "grandfather's letters" do not realize that they may be burning rare stamps, which if sold might make them rich.

Make a thorough search through attics and storerooms for old letters mailed from 1848 to 1870. Keep the letters if you wish, but send the envelopes (or folded letters) to Mr. Harold C. Brooks, Box 259, Marshall, Mich. Mr. Brooks, who is mayor of his city, is a private collector, and is said to pay better prices than a dealer. During the past twelve years he has paid thousands of dollars for envelopes bearing old stamps. He specializes in United States and Confederate stamps, but also collects Canadian and other foreign issues provided and other foreign issues, provided they are on the original envelopes and mailed not later than 1870. Loose stamps he does not buy except very old issues unused or mounted collec-tions formed before 1880. Revenue stamps such as found on old photographs, mortgages, deeds, etc., are not wanted. Other things like old coins, Confederate money, old relics, may have value, but he is not interested in Shown below are illustrations of a few rare stamps and the amounts Mr. Brooks agrees to pay to any one who may find them. Besides these are many others of equal value.

Besides the rarities, Mr. Brooks buys many of the commoner stamps, so nothing should be thrown away even though many stamps appear to be exact duplicates. Stamps should not be cut off, as any stamp on the original envelope is worth more, collectors being interested in the post-mark as well as the stamp. Nothing should be written on the face of the envelope. When making up a bunch of envelopes, be sure they are well wrapped and protected with cardboard to prevent their becoming wrinkled in transit. If you have reason to believe transit. If you have reason to believe your envelopes are of special value, send them by registered or insured mail. The advertising manager of the Gospel Advocate has known Mr. Brooks for many years, and you may place fullest confidence in his integrity. On receipt of envelopes he will examine them and report promptly their value. If they are not purchased, he guarantees to return them in good order.

If you have no old letters written during or before the Civil War, show this notice to your friends, especially those whose families have lived in the same house for several generations. Many old families, old banks, and law firms still have stored away hundreds of letters, waiting either to be burned or sold for large sums. Before de-stroying such envelopes or folded letters, investigate their value. Brooks' address is as follows: HAROLD C. BROOKS.

THE LOCAL CONGREGATION.

BY W. G. WHITE.

There seems to be no question concerning the peace, harmony, work, and worship of the church of the living God to-day of more importance than the power, scope of action, function, and organization of the local congregation. I am aware, however, that when a fellow says anything about the organization of the church, he sets himself up as a target to get the jeers, jars, and criticism of the greater part of the preachers and is advertising as an "old-timer." For there are but few preachers now that believe, and fewer that preach, that a church ought to have elders and deacons; and but few, if any, congregations that have elders to teach, guide, rule, or oversee the congregation. Of course, you hear a preacher preach on the identity of the church, and with such skill make an argument that cannot be answered, that the church of the New Testament has its elders and deacons; but when you follow him home, you find him intrenched in a congregation of two hundred or three hundred members that have not even a trace of the officers he has just proved are characteristic of the New Testament church. Not only that, but the "program" of all the work of the church is turned over to the business meeting.

No wonder, then, there arises an idea to get something apart from, and bigger than, the local congregation, established on a money basis, to do things unknown to the churches and startling to the world. I am aware of the fact that so often the church's failure to do the work assigned it has furnished an excuse (whether good or bad) to turn to something else through which to accomplish the work, instead of trying to stimulate the church to greater activity, and so do the work through the divinely appointed means instead of man-made machinery.

God's way for his children to do his will, whether feeding and clothing the poor, spreading the gospel, caring for the sick and dying, or any and all things they are called on to do, is through the church. If there is any way to accomplish that except through individual effort, the Christian home, and the local congregation, I am ignorant of it. A congregation composed of its ministers, elders, deacons, and faithful membership, doing the work of the Lord, has all the authority delegated to God's people. And if by some catastrophe the rest of the world were wiped off the face of the earth, still the church would be in tact, having all the authority it ever had, and all God had ever given to the institution bought with the blood of Calvary's Lamb. I am trying to say by that that the local congregation is supreme. It ought not, it should not, it cannot, be supplanted, surpassed, supplemented, or substituted. There is no way known to me to double up or single out God's people that they may have more authority or do more work than is given each congregation, only in the sense that a number of congregations can do more work of the same kind than one can do.

There might be one man picked here, one there, and one somewhere else, these selected for their ability and willingness to give and to do, and this extended until it amounted to a wealthy congregation so it could be a power; yet when done, the very fact that it differed from the ordinary church would prove that it differed from the church of the New Testament as well. Besides, who could or would say that members picked on a money basis, scattered over a county or a city and from and beyond the different congregations, is a church of Christ identifying itself with the church of the New Testament? The poorest church of the land living up to its duties, fulfilling its obligations, supporting and sounding out the truth according to its ability, ranks second to no church in the world.

The GOSPEL ADVOCATE is the oldest living periodical published in the interest of the church of Christ. It is now in its sixty-seventh volume, and it has a larger list of regular, paid-up subscribers than it has ever had before. Its circulation is increasing rapidly, and it is daily growing in favor with the people. It contains twenty-four pages, and is issued every week. It is printed in large, clear type, on good paper, and is neatly pasted and trimmed. It has by far the largest circulation of any periodical published south of the Mason and Dixon Line in the interest of the church of Christ. It has regular editorial writers, besides a large number of able and regular contributors. It has all of the regular departments of the best religious periodicals.

regular contributors. It has all of the regular departments of the best religious periodicals.

In editorial policy it stands for individual consecration, against ecclesiastic organizations, as the scriptural and best method of doing missionary work. It recognizes no organization but the church of Christ as a scriptural medium of converting the world and developing the Christian character.

tian character.

It opposes all human creeds and ecclesiastic councils, and pleads for the right of each individual to study the Scriptures for himself and formulate his own faith, without dictation or hindrance from churchly dignitaries. It opposes all clerical assumption of official authority in the church, and stands for the scriptural doctrine that each Christian has an office to fill, a work to perform—that all are kings and priests unto God.

It stoutly advocates the doctrine of missions, and argues unceasingly that every Christian is a divinely commissioned missionary and every church is a scripturally organized missionary society. The mission of every Christian and the design of every church is to preach the gospel to all the world.

It believes in, and stoutly advocates, congregational singing, as opposed to select choirs and instrumental performances, as the best and most soul-stirring church music. Let all the people sing. Provide a book for everybody in the house, and let us all make a joyful noise unto the Lord.

giving loving admonition and warnings to us children, he said he was ready to go, and only regretted leaving dear mother. My dear father gave himself unreservedly to his Savior in early manhood, being baptized about fifty-six years ago—one of the very first in North Alabama to unite with the movement for the restoration of primitive Christianity. He was elder, deacon, teacher, and often song leader in the Lord's-day worship throughout all these years. That his work was appreciated was shown at his funeral when the church near his home would not hold his friends and those dependent upon him for help in material ways, as well as spiritual guidance. He leaves, besides his comcompanion of nearly sixty years, ten children (by two marriages), fifty-four grandchildren, and a large number of great-grandchildren. He had labored long and well, he had given his eventful life in willing service to his fellow man and loving, humble obedience to his Heavenly Father, and surely he has entered into the rest that remaineth to the people of God, and we should not grudge him the beloved sleep, though we miss his sweet presence, ready wit, and kind and wise advice.

Livingston, Tenn., October 3.—I am making this appeal in behalf of the few faithful disciples at Rogersville, Tenn. Rogersville is the county seat of Hawkins County, and until less than two years ago there was not even one loyal church in the entire county. In April of last year I began a meeting in the courthouse, and learned of a small congregation about one mile from town, which though learned of a small congregation about one mile from town, which, though worshiping scripturally, had all along been under the influence of the "digressives" and which had gone to work under the State Board. I began privately teaching them of their error and succeeded in converting the entire membership of thirty-eight, who transferred a splendid building lot which they had bought to the church of Christ (with the clause in the deed). These are very poor people who are anxious to build a house. ### SCRIPTURE STUDIES

BY JAMES A. ALLEN

No man can afford to be indifferent or careless in matters of a religious nature. The fleeting and transitory affairs of this world are lost in insignificance in view of those momentous things that involve human destiny. Every person should most carefully and diligently examine that upon which he hopes to be accepted when he goes into the presence of his Maker.

The religious world is divided and disunited. Parties and sects, each advocating reform upon a different platform, seem to be on the increase in this country as well as in other countries. Entire communities, to say nothing of the sacred ties that bind families, are estranged by this distinction drawn by party lines. In the primitive church, an accurate history of which is given in the Bible, this state of things did not exist. Then the disciples of Jesus were "brethren," all were "children of God," members of the family of God, which is the church, and were recognized as being "a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, a holy nation, a peculiar people." (1 Pet. 2: 9.) Instead of being members of different denominations, each with a human creed to govern it, they were taught to "all speak the same thing, and that there be no divisions among you; but that ye be perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment." (1 Cor. 1: 10.) Persons today in the different sects, all claiming to be authorized in the Bible, cannot fellowship each other on account of the fact that they do not "all speak the same thing;" but in the primitive church all who wore the Christian name were "fellow heirs, and of the same body, and partakers of his promise in Christ by the gospel." (Eph. 3: 6.)

It is unnecessary to inform the reader that the church of Christ rejects all human creeds, all catechisms, disciplines, and confessions of faith, as being of no authority in the Christian profession, and that Christians accept no guide but the Bible. Sects and parties wage an endless war between themselves over their differences, but they forget their antagonism toward each other to present a solid front against this position.

The Bible presents the primitive church, as it was under the teaching of inspired men, as a model of what the religious world ought to be, and of what it must be; and in the primitive church all were governed implicitly by the word of God, and it alone. There were no party lines, no sects, no denominations, and no human creeds written by men; but, as one brotherhood, all looked for guidance to Him who is "the head over all things to the church, which is his body, the fullness of him that filleth all in all." (Eph. 1: 22, 23.) All human parties are opposed to the Bible alone as a guide because it condemns human parties and they cannot exist under its guidance.

We submit that, as the apostles were guided in their work by the Holy Spirit, they taught the way perfectly; they taught persons how to become members of the church of God, set congregations in order, and gave the ordinances of divine service; in other words, to put it in the language of the Bible, they taught the primitive disciples "all things that pertain unto life and godliness." (2 Pet. 1; 3.) Every party in Christendom concedes that this is correct, but, strange to tell, they will not live up to their own concession. To put it in the fewest terms, we simply say that the apostles were right, that they were right in everything, and we find that this is conceded on all hands. We now advance one step further and say that, if the apostles were right, all are wrong that do not teach what they taught and practice what they practiced. And this is where sectarian parties do not live up to what they themselves concede. They acknowledge that the apostles were right, as all must do, but they refuse to acknowledge that they are wrong in teaching things that the apostles did not teach. Not only is this illogical, but, we might courteously add, it is absurd and unfair. If the apostles were right, then, to the extent that what we teach differs from what they taught, to that extent we are wrong.

We have no favorite doctrines or dogmas of our own, or of others, to press upon the attention of the public. We have no interest whatever in the advancement of any church, except that ancient church whose members "were called Christians first in Antioch." (Acts 11: 26.) We simply wish to persuade people to observe only such things as are taught in the oracles of God. We want no rule of government but the Bible, no cause to plead but the cause for which Jesus died. We argue that all the sects have more or less apostatized from the institutions of the Savior, and that, by all the obligations of the Christian religion, they that fear and love the Lord are bound to return to the ancient order of things in the Christian kingdom in spirit and truth. Let this investigation embrace whatever topic it may, or let this controversy occupy whatever ground it may, this is the naked question at issue. * * *

God speaks to man in the Bible. Divine revelation is addressed to the human mind in human language, otherwise it would be no revelation. Nothing is a revelation, nothing can be revealed to man, except it be communicated in language man is capable of understanding. The Bible reveals God to man, tells man of his duty, his responsibilities, and his obligations, and does it in terms best adapted to the human mind, to man's intellect, to his intelligence. Indeed, in the sacred Scriptures, "holy men of God spoke as they were moved by the Holy Ghost" (2 Pet. 1: 21); they spoke "as the Spirit gave them utterance" (Acts 2: 4). The Bible being the production of the Holy Spirit, speaking through the ministers of God, it would seem enough to say that it is just what it ought to be. God having created the organs of speech, the Spirit of God being "the Spirit of wisdom and knowledge," the Spirit of eloquence and revelation, author of the gift of tongues, and "the Advocate" of Christ, he certainly selected the best forms of human language in which to make known the will of God to man. God, as man's Creator, knows better how to communicate with man than all the councils and general assemblies that ever met. The Bible as it is, as God has given it, is better adapted to man as he is than any creed or catechism known to earth.

All that God says to man is said in the Bible. Everything that came from God can be taught in the words of God. No new message, no new revelation, need now be expected from heaven. The apostles, being directed by the Holy Spirit, taught "all truth" (John 16: 13); they taught all that Jesus had commanded them to teach (John 14: 26). Any doctrine, any church, or any creed that was not taught by the apostles in the beginning of the Christian era cannot be a part of the truth and must be repudiated as being of human origin. The words of the Bible are the words of the Spirit of God. The Holy Spirit, through inspired men, speaks to us in the Bible. No communication or impression comes to any man from the Spirit except as it comes through the Word. No man is guided by the Holy Spirit when he repudiates what the Holy Spirit says through inspired men or when he refuses to do what the Holy Spirit, through inspired men, commands him to do to be saved.

Jesus said: "Upon this rock I will build my church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." (Matt. 16: 18.) Nearly nineteen full centuries have passed since Jesus established his church. But we know that it is upon earth to-day, because in Dan. 2: 44 God promised that, when it was established, it should "stand forever." Then, as the primitive, apostolic church of Christ is upon earth to-day, it is only necessary to identify it to distinguish it from the other churches and organizations in existence. Jesus also said: "The seed is the word of God." (Luke 8: 11.) In creating the material universe, God gave the law that all seed should produce fruit "after their kind." (Gen. 1: 11.) When inspired men planted the seed of the kingdom in good and honest hearts, it produced members of the church of Christ. Let the same seed be planted in the same soil to-day, and it will make members of the same church. Thus we identify the church that Jesus established.

The apostles were commanded to "preach the gospel to every creature." (Mark 16: 15.) They taught that unless "every creature" obeyed the gospel he had no hope of being saved. But notwithstanding the awful importance thus attached to obeying the gospel, the dogmas of creeds have so long confused the public mind that most of the preachers, and still more of the people, either cannot or will not tell what man must do to be saved. The cause of this cannot be attributed to Jesus Christ and his apostles. The duty of man is set forth clearly and plainly, so plain "that he may run that readeth it." (Hab. 2: 2.) Isa. 35: 8 teaches that "the wayfaring men, though fools, shall not err therein."

In the commission (Matt. 28: 18-20; Mark 16: 15, 16; Luke 24: 46, 47), the fact that Jesus predicated the salvation of the entire world of man upon an intelligent understanding of the gospel is conclusive evidence that the gospel is adapted to even the feeblest intellect, as well as to the greatest minds, and that it is admirably suited to the most illiterate and unlearned of earth.

The first to obey the gospel under the preaching of the apostles were of the common people. In a single brief address large concourses of people were made to intelligently understand the gospel, were taught what it required at their hands, were made to see their duty clearly, and then only a short time was occupied in performing that duty. The gospel was always obeyed the same hour in which it was believed.

The book, "Acts of Apostles," signifies by its name what it contains. It is a record of their "acts," or labors. as they carried out the commission given to them by Jesus. "Go ye therefore," said Jesus to them, "and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost; teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world." (Matt. 28: 19, 20.) In answer to the question, "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" Peter said: "Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." (Acts 2: 37, 38.) "Then they that gladly received his word were baptized." (Verse 41.) Such as believed and were baptized were saved, and these were added to the church. (Verse 47.) During the entire labors of inspired men all were required to comply with these same conditions, or terms, of salvation; all were required to believe, repent, and be baptized upon a profession of faith in Jesus. We have not the space to give particular attention to the different cases of conversion that are recorded; so we shall only give the references of some of the most prominent cases and request the reader to examine them for himself. By examining these accounts as they are given in the Bible, everything will appear plain; it can be easily seen what people must do to be saved, what they must believe, how they must be baptized, for what they must be baptized, etc. (See Acts 2: 36-47; 8: 12, 35-39; 16: 13-15, 29-34; 18: 8; 22: 16.)

Time and chance are rapidly passing. Eternal concerns stare us sternly in the face. These are not questions about the momentary affairs of time, the fleeting shadows of this world, but they are questions upon which hangs the destiny of man in eternity. Human life is brief and uncertain. The brightest names that earth can boast glisten for a moment and pass away, are vanished by an unseen hand. The history of the past advises us that we, too, like our fathers, must soon join the sleeping nations in the dust, that we must soon go the way of all the earth. Human performers appear upon the stage, make their bow, perform their part, and pass off, never to return. Strangers meet, shake hands, get acquainted, and form friendships, but are separated, to meet no more upon mortal shores.

Reader, it is wise to prepare to meet God in peace. It is best to accept what we all know is the truth, rather than to risk eternal concerns upon the shifting sands of opinion, upon the guesswork of men. Truth alone can save. Error is dragging the world to perdition. If we are wrong upon these questions while we live, we will be wrong upon them when we come to die; and mistakes and errors left uncorrected in death must go uncorrected forever.

Jesus said: "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned." (Mark 16: 16.) Denominations may wage an endless war about essentials and nonessentials, but this is yet the answer to the question as to what sinners must do to be saved, and will be "even unto the end of the world." (Matt. 28: 20.)

SOME PERTINENT FACTS.

No one can be scripturally baptized without trusting faith in God through Christ.

There is no such thing in the New Testament as an unbaptized Christian. In New Testament times all converts were baptized.

Baptism is immersion in water. Jesus Christ was immersed in the river Jordan. Every member of the church of Christ in New Testament times was an immersed person. There were no unimmersed persons in any of the New Testament congregations.

The whole religious world practiced immersion for the first thirteen centuries of the Christian era. The Pope of Rome authorized sprinkling as a substitute for baptism in A.D. 1311.

Baptism, to a penitent believer, is "for the remission of sins." When a penitent believer was baptized in New Testament times, "he went on his way rejoicing." (Acts 8: 39.)

No inspired man ever sprinkled water on a baby. Only penitent believers were baptized in New Testament times. Those who are depending on the fact that they were sprinkled when they were babies are building on the sand.

NELSON COMPLETE CONCORDANCE

To the

American Standard Bible

By M. C. HAZARD, Ph.D.

A concordance is a word-finder—an index to the words in the Bible designed to increase your knowledge of what the Bible contains by enabling you to find easily any word, verse, or subject in the Bible.

This new Concordance, by Dr. M. C. Hazard, is the first Complete Concordance ever issued to the American Standard Version of the Bible—the most accurate version of the Holy Scriptures in the English language.

Five years have been occupied in its completion, during which time the editor and publishers have had constantly in mind the problems of the Bible student. Comparisons have been made with other concordances and numerous improvements have been introduced to make a work so accurate, so full, and so convenient that it will be an indispensable working tool in handling aright the word of truth.

WHY I DID IT.

BY H. L. CALHOUN.

Some of my brethren have expressed a desire to have me set forth my reasons for withdrawing from the Christian Church, which uses humanly organized missionary societies and musical instruments, and uniting with the church of Christ, which opposes all human organizations for doing mission work and the use of all musical instruments in the worship of God in song. I am glad to gratify this wish if I can feel that by so doing I am accomplishing any good.

There was a time in my life when I regarded humanly organized missionary societies and instruments of music in the worship as expedients. I once delivered an address before the Tennessee State Missionary Society, in which I took that position in regard to humanly organized missionary societies. This address was printed in tract form and circulated by the advocates of missionary societies. It has been reproduced recently on the pages of a State missionary paper, and the editor of this paper pronounces it practically unanswerable as an argument for missionary societies. It is quite natural that he and perhaps others should like to see how the man who produced such an argument can answer it. Concerning the principles set forth in that address regarding matters of "faith," "expediency," and "indifference," I have no need to speak. Those principles are true and will stand for all time. But when it comes to an application of those principles to humanly organized missionary societies, there is room not only for a difference of opinion, but for a change of opinion; and that is just what has occurred in my case. I have changed my opinion. I no longer regard humanly organized missionary societies as expedient. My reasons for no longer regarding them as expedient are the same as the reasons commonly given by other members of the church of Christ. Since delivering the above-mentioned address a number of years have passed and many opportunities have come to me to observe at close range the workings of humanly organized missionary societies. There was a time when I hoped that these things might be put away from among us, and that as a united brotherhood we might go on together in our work and worship. For a number of years I refused to recognize the division, and I went as freely among one side as the other so far as they would permit me to do. But my hopes have been disappointed and I have been forced to see that these things have divided a once happy and growing brotherhood. I reached the point where I had to choose one side or the other. I have always believed and preached the simple gospel to the best of my ability. So after years of heartache over this situation, knowing that the Holy Spirit says "that there be no divisions among you" (1 Cor. 1: 10), I felt that I must stand against the things that caused the division; hence, I have reached the point where I am resolved to spend the remainder of my days among those who are standing for those things for which we can give a plain "Thus saith Whatever causes division among God's chilthe Lord." dren is contrary to the teaching of the Holy Spirit and is therefore sinful. Until the introduction of these humanly organized missionary societies the Restoration movement was united, and it was making rapid growth; since their introduction division, strife, and diminution in rate of growth have followed. In the light of these facts, humanly organized missionary societies are not only contrary to the teaching of the Holy Spirit, but they are not even expedient, since they have hindered rather than helped. This statement is so evidently true that I do not see how any well-informed person can deny it.

The United Christian Missionary Society has been formed in recent years, virtually controlling all the State societies, and this society is dominated by destructive critics, and these destructive critics are using the United Society to propagate their views, which are radically wrong and subversive of the truth. This society is a hindrance rather than a help in spreading the truth. Its whole influence and tendency I believe to be wrong. This same United Society has developed into an ecclesiasticism usurping the control of individual Christians and congregations in ways entirely opposed to the teaching of God's word. I am thus forced to regard it as sinful in its effects. I believe the church of Christ would have been better off if humanly organized missionary societies had never existed. A study of the history of the Restoration movement shows that the period of its most rapid growth and development was before humanly organized missionary societies were introduced. A study of the church of Christ in the first centuries after its founding on the first Pentecost after Christ's resurrection shows that its growth and progress were greater than they have ever been since. This was before the introduction of humanly organized missionary societies of any kind. I believe that the New Testament church, in doctrine and organization, is the product of divine wisdom. This church as it came from the hands of inspired men, without any of the so-called human expedients, made more rapid progress than it has ever done since their introduction. All the corruptions and perversions of New Testament doctrine and practice have come through the introduction of so-called human expedients. I have come to believe that it is an impeachment of divine wisdom to use any of these so-called expedients. I believe that the simple New Testament doctrine and practice, if faithfully adhered to, will bring greater and more rapid progress to the church of Christ than can come to it in any other way.

Christianity is a matter of faith (2 Cor. 5: 7), and faith comes by hearing the word of God (Rom. 10: 17), and whatsoever is not of faith is sin (Rom. 14: 23). Neither humanly organized missionary societies nor instruments of music in the worship of God is a matter of faith, therefore their use in the worship and service of God is sinful. The foregoing are some of the reasons which have caused me to take the stand which I now occupy. I believe the reasons are sound, and I stand upon them with joy and confidence. It is my purpose to have more to say along these lines in the near future. But this is enough for one

IT IS HIGH TIME TO TELL THE GOOD NEWS. BY A. B. LIPSCOMB.

What is the gospel? Words, we are told, are like knives-sometimes they need to be sharpened. We can use a word so many times and so flippantly and so thoughtlessly that it becomes too familiar. It just passes through our minds without leaving a scratch of an impression, and perhaps this word "gospel" has suffered that thing. What is the gospel? There is hardly a little boy or girl in any Sunday school but who could tell you immediately that the gospel is the "good news." And I often think it would help all of us if we would just remember and cherish the primary meaning of the gospel in our thought. When a preacher starts out to preach, I think it would help him to remember that the gospel is the good news. I am going on an appointment. What do I propose to do? What is my business when I get there? To tell the people the good news. I believe the pulpit would have more radiant utterances, I believe it would take away a large part of that gloom that sometimes pervades the atmosphere of the meetinghouse, if the preacher would only remember first of all that the gospel is the good news. And every Christian should remember the same thing, because we are all preachers in a sense. We read in Acts 8: 4 that "they that were scattered abroad went everywhere preaching the word." That is just another way of saying that they went everywhere preaching the gospel, and that is just another way of saying that they went everywhere proclaiming the good news. Whether you are highly educated or not, you can tell the good news. Perhaps you have an ambition to write a book, and you may fail. Perhaps you do not have it in you to become a historian or to startle the world with some great song, but there is not a Christian anywhere but who can succeed in telling the most glorious message that the world has ever known.

We recall that there was a time in Jesus' life when he said: "Now is my soul troubled; and what shall I say? Father, save me from this hour-shall I say that?" Then he answered his own question. He said: " No, because of this hour I came forth. Father, glorify thy name." And suddenly there was a voice which came from heaven, the voice of God, which said: "I have glorified thy name, and will glorify it again." Do you know that every time one of us tells the story of the gospel, though it be with faltering tongue, if we speak sincerely, God's word comes true and the Lord Jesus Christ is glorified again?

Surely the world needs the good news of the gospel right now more than ever before. Newspapers are supposed to record daily happenings. But for some reason or other they always feature bad news over good news. Do you know why? Because there is something in our poor, weak human nature that much prefers a scandal to a sermon, and the newspapers are catering to the public taste, just feeding us what we want. That is the reason. What is on the front page of papers now? Good news? No. We read the story of the political graft and corruption at Washington; of murders, thefts, scandals everywhere. We read how those men who have the highest places of honor and trust within the gift of the nation are prostituting them for selfish ends, or how two high-brow college boys have killed a little fellow "just for the thrill"—and that is the big news of the day! The great war lasted for approximately fifteen hundred days, and during that war there were those of us who lived in a kind of "chamber of horrors," for we never knew what a day would bring forth. Every day we read the story of some new atrocity, some new cruelty, some new disaster that had shaken the world and was breaking the hearts of the people. Bad news featured from the firing of the first gun until the last. And now that the war is over, there is not very much improvement. And because the world is "fed up' and surfeited on so much of bad news, it is high time and it is a good time for Christian folks to tell them the good news of the gospel of the Son of God.

I read once how Fritz Kreisler got possession of his favorite violin. It is perhaps the most precious violin in all the world because it is the favorite of the world's favorite violinist. Kreisler saw it the first time in a music dealer's shop, and when he heard some one play it, he knew at once that it was a master instrument. He offered the dealer of that shop a fabulous price for the violin. The man said: "No, I can't sell it to you; it doesn't belong to me; I am just keeping it for an English lord. His hobby is collecting famous violins, and it be-He is going to put it in a museum." longs to him. Kreisler said: "A just wave of indignation swept over my soul and my heart was rent when I thought of that divine voice staying for years under a glass cover in a museum, and I made up my mind that I was going to obtain that violin if there was any way in the world to do it, and so I laid siege to the owner. I found him cultured, I found him polite, but I found him obdurate. He did not wish to let that violin go. But I did not give up the quest. I kept going back, time after time, begging him to sell it to me. Finally, one day, taking it out of the case, he said: 'Let me hear you play it.' There was my opportunity. I played as if my soul were in prison and I must pay the ransom. When I had finished playing, there were tears in that Englishman's eyes. And he said: 'Here, take it; it doesn't belong to me; it belongs to you. Let its voice be heard all around the world.'" We Christians cannot afford to be selfish with this glorious possession of ours that we call the "gospel." Let it out; let its voice be heard around the world. Let every Christian tell it.

What is the good news of the gospel about? Well, that depends upon the kind of gospel you believe and preach and practice. I read in the paper recently an announcement of a Sunday theme. A distinguished preacher, it was stated, was coming to our city, and his message would be, "The Good News of the Unitarian Gospel." Well, no doubt there is some good news in that man's message. He will doubtless tell you that man is made in the image of God and that we ought to try to get back to that image. He will likely tell you some interesting things about Jesus and describe him as the world's greatest teacher, and perhaps speak of Him as "the most beautiful character;" but you will never hear him tell that Jesus Christ is the Son of God. But what is the good news of the gospel of the New Testament? Remember, there are gospels and gospels. According to the teaching of the New Testament, the gospel is not a theory, not simply the history of a beautiful character; but the gospel is a story of sacrifice, a story of atonement. The apostle Paul declares this when he says: "For I delivered unto you first of all that which I also received, how that Christ died for our sins according to the scriptures; and that he was buried, and that he rose again the third day according to the scriptures." The good news of the message, briefly stated, is found in the presentation of those three cardinal facts-that Jesus died for our sins; and was buried, but the grave could not hold him, and he rose from the dead; and in the application of those three facts is one's obedience to the gospel. And that is what makes the gospel of the New Testament the glorious message that it is. When we preach anything short of that, our gospel is no longer the gospel of the Son of God.

Let me recite two experiences that I heard recently. One was of a lady who had been going for some time to a new church, and somebody asked her why she had made a change. She said: "When I went to that first church, I always got the impression that I was a very pious, good woman. But," she said, "since I have been coming here, I have been made to feel that there is a great deal lacking in my life, and only Jesus Christ can supply it." That is the gospel of the New Testament. It is not something that smooths over our frailties and weaknesses, but something that gives us to understand what we really are and how much we need our Savier. Let me tell you about another experience, and this man was a prominent judge. Somebody asked him: "Why don't you go to church like you used to? Why did you quit?" He said: "I will tell you why. The minister told me that man is not sinful by nature; that men are falling up rather than falling down; that there is no sin to be saved from and no one to save us. He taught that Jesus was just a beautiful character, whom we would do well to imitate; and," the judge said, "if that be the truth, I don't see any reason why I should go to the trouble to go to church or go to the expense of keeping it up. Let those folks who believe that sort of rose-water lecture pay for it." May God save us from such sophistry! May the Lord teach us how to preach the word more humbly and more earnestly than ever before. May we never be ashamed of the gospel of Jesus Christ, nor put the soft pedal upon the story of redeeming grace.

"ELAM'S NOTES" COMMENDED.

G. C. Brewer, Sherman, Texas, writes: "In the Sherman Sunday school we use the quarterlies that are put out by the Gospel Advocate Company, but nearly all of the teachers use 'Elam's Notes' in preparing their lessons, also a good many of the older students use 'Elam's Notes' in addition to the quarterlies. Personally I do not teach the international lessons, as I have an independent Bible class; but I frequently lecture to the teachers on the lesson that is to come the next Lord's day, and I always use 'Elam's Notes' in preparing my lecture. No teacher who wishes to master his lesson-and all teachers should make an effort to do that-can afford to be without 'Elam's Notes.' He should, of course, study anything that would give him help upon the question in hand, but he may always rest assured that if there is a reference in any part of the Bible that in any way bears upon the lesson, that reference will be cited in 'Elam's Notes.' In this respect I think the 'Notes' excel any other help with which I am acquainted."

NEWS FROM JAPAN.

BY ROBERT S. KING.

Sister Sarah Andrews is now back at work with the church at Okitsu. She writes: "I feel greatly benefited from the summer's rest in the north, but have not entirely recovered. I still have to be careful about overdoing, but it seems I have gained sufficiently for the work again in moderation. I think it wise to just take on a little now, and then gradually increase, rather than to undertake more now and likely have to give up some later. We are expecting Brother Fujimori for a few days' evangelistic work next week."

Sister Andrews has her heart set on building a little meetinghouse at Okitsu for the faithful little band, in addition to the buildings at Shizuoka, where her house was built. In closing her letter, she says: "In case I should have to give up, it sure would be a joy to leave the little band at Okitsu with its own meetinghouse."

She is truly a great missionary and has the work at heart, choosing rather to die in Japan among the people she has taught than to come home. Her support is not what it should be. Many times this summer she has had to use money sent for the building fund in order to get along. Friends, let us do better. She should lack nothing that we can supply.

Brother and Sister Barney Morehead are now fairly comfortably located and are going to the language school, besides teaching a class in English. They like the work fine, only that when they want to talk they have to borrow some one's tongue.

IN SYMPATHY.

BY E. A. ELAM.

In the spirit of Him who wept with the bereaved and in that body in which one member suffers with every other member in affliction and sorrow, our hearts go out in sympathy for Brother Horace S. Lipscomb, his two small boys, and other relatives, in the passing of wife, mother, and loved one, Sister Lillian Brant Lipscomb. Lillian passed through two or three years of excruciating suffering, and her good husband through the deepest anxiety and patient sorrow that almost any one is called upon to endure. While she in this passing has been delivered from the body of this death, he has been left to struggle on in the great battle of life; but not without friends, true and tried, and not without courage, faith and hope and love. May the blessings of God attend him!

[&]quot;Uncle Minor's Stories" is a very interesting book, and is pleasing to both young and old. It is handsomely illustrated. Price, $1.50, postpaid.

"WHAT THINK YE OF CHRIST?" BY JAMES E. CHESSOR.

THE WORLD'S NEED OF A SAVIOR.

"What think ye of Christ?" This is the question Jesus himself proposed to the men of his day. The greatest question mark of the centuries is Jesus Christ. About his name—the Name above every name—and personality the tides of interest and discussion have flowed down the ages. We have in this text a direct personal question which is all-important. It is vital to the deeper welfare of every soul who faces it. "And in none other is there salvation: for neither is there any other name under heaven, that is given among men, wherein we must be saved."

As we answer this question, therefore, our eternal destiny is determined for weal or woe. I urge you, then, to consider the question about Jesus Christ as life's greatest question—and may you meditate with prayer and purpose of heart. The peculiar thing is that we have to think something about him. We do not have to think about Plato, or Socrates, or Shakespeare; but Christ has so impressed himself upon the race and he is so connected with the most ordinary interests and affairs of life that we cannot escape some opinion about him. Even a skeptic has to acknowledge him, for he cannot date a letter without writing "Anno Domini—in the year of our Lord." Jesus is indeed the central fact of all history.

I challenge your thought, therefore, to this great question: "What think ye of Christ?" What do you think of him in the light of the world's need of a Savior? As we read the sordid story of human history, with its record of lust and rapine, war and woe; as we contemplate the tragic and terrible in the condition of the world to-day, with its strife, its selfishness, and its sin; and as we turn our eyes within and see there the appalling condition of our own poor, sinful hearts, we cannot escape the conclusion that humanity needs a Savior. Nor can we escape the conclusion that this Savior must be able to impart a saving power to men-must be an almighty, everlasting, unchangeable Savior-or he is no Savior at all. Confucius taught truth to China, yet China still sleeps; Buddha proclaimed principles of righteousness and left behind a sublime example, yet India languishes in age-long inicuity; Mohammed left behind many correct ethical principles, yet "the unspeakable Turk" has become a by word to the whole human race. Socrates and Piato enunciated philosophical principles that reached the highest realms of thought, and they championed moral ideals that were sublime, yet the greatness of Greece departed from the Attic plains and the Ægean shores. All of these leaders were good advisers, but no saviors. What does it mean? It means that the world needs a Savior who can give power for the ethical and spiritual life which he demands of his followers. Jesus Christ is such a Savior.

IN THE LIGHT OF THE PROPHECTES.

Again I would ask, What think ye of Christ in the light of the prophecies? He is the supernatural fulfillment of all expectation. He did not break in upon the world suddenly and unannounced. He dawned upon it as the day brightens in the east, with many a prophetic gleam before its coming. Even amid the darkness of ruined Eden, light began to shine. God's voice was heard proclaiming the first great prophecy: "The seed of the woman shall bruise the serpent's head."

The first prophecy was very general. Then, as we observe carefully, we will note that the stream of prophecy constantly narrows. First, it is simply "the seed of the woman." Then comes the call of Abraham, and the promise and prophecy that through him "all the nations of the earth shall be blessed." The stream is narrowed further still, and the promise is that a prophet "like unto Moses" is to arise. As Moses was a deliverer, leading his people out of bondage, so the promised Savior would bring spiritual freedom and salvation. Then the prophecies become so specific that they deal even with seemingly minor events, in order that there might be no room for doubt when the Savior finally came. It was prophesied that he was to be born of a virgin (Isa. 7: 14); that he was to be born in Bethlehem (Mic. 5: 2); that in connection with his birth there would be a slaughter of the children (Jer. 31: 15); that he would go into Egypt (Hos. 11: 1); that he would be anointed with the Spirit (Isa. 11: 2); that he would enter Jerusalem in triumph (Zech. 13: 7); that he would be sold for thirty pieces of silver (Zech. 11: 12); that the potter's field would be bought with this silver (Zech. 11: 13); that he would be spit upon and scourged (Isa. 50: 60); that not a bone of his would be broken (Ex. 12: 46; Ps. 34: 20); that he would be given gall and vinegar to drink (Ps. 69: 21): that his hands and feet would be pierced, his garments parted, and lots cast upon his vesture (Ps. 22). Finally, in the fifty-third chapter of Isaiah we have, as it were, a full-length portrait of the Savior who was to come.

We always tend to glorify and magnify a hero, but Isaiah pictured the Savior as the suffering Messiah, characterized by poverty and patience, whose life culminates in a cruel death. According to Isaiah, the Savior was to be "wounded for our transgressions," and "bruised for our iniquities." The "chastisement of our peace" was to be upon him; "and with his stripes we are healed." "He was oppressed," says the prophet, "yet when he was afflicted he opened not his mouth; as a lamb that is led to the slaughter, and as a sheep that before its shearers is dumb, so he opened not his mouth." And there are other graphic touches descriptive of the suffering Messiah.

Is there anything that answers these prophecies? What think ye of Christ in the light of the way in which his marvelous life and death and triumphant resurrection fulfilled the great prophecies? Was he not indeed "despised and rejected of men, . . . wounded, . . . bruised," even as the prophet had predicted? Was he not condemned in Pilate's judgment hall, led as a lamb to the slaughter, and in the midst of the agony of the cross did he not cry out, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" And was it not because, as Isaiah said, "Jehovah hath laid on him the iniquity of us all?" Surely Jesus in his life and sufferings is the fulfillment of Messianic prophecy.

THE INFLUENCE OF HIS AFTER LIFE.

Again I ask, What think ye of Christ in the light of his after influence? How indeed shall we account for his abiding supremacy if he is not the Messiah that was to come, the Christ of the ages? He wrote no book; he founded no city; he made no discovery of science; he amassed no fortune; he effected no military conquest. Measured by the practical standards of to-day, his life would be accounted a dismal and tragic failure. He gathered to himself a little handful of obscure and, for the most part, ignorant followers, who at the time of his death became utterly discouraged and were scattered abroad like sheep without a shepherd. He was stretched in deep disgrace upon a Roman cross and crucified between two thieves. He was laid in a grave that was not his own; and in order that that might be the end of all, the seal of Rome was put upon the tomb and a guard of Roman soldiers was left to watch.

Looking at these circumstances in a practical way, would you not say that that would be the end of the name and the influence of one who never attained to what the world regards as distinguished achievement? Yet we know that this conclusion would be erroneous. For the name of Jesus now shines like the sun in the central dome of human history. In the sordid and sensual Roman life, two thousand years ago, a quiet but potent influence began to assert itself. He who had lain as a little babe in the manger was finally acclaimed even upon the throne of the Cæsars. I challenge you to think of the after influence of Jesus of Nazareth. He was not of the great, yet he was supremely great. Without the training of the schools, he has become the teacher of the world. Without the aid of fortuitous circumstances, he nevertheless towers over all those of his own time, and he has impressed himself upon the life of the world as has no other among all the children of men.

Despite the continuance of human sin and sorrow upon the earth, nevertheless it stands true that the greatest achievements in the fields of morality and art and science and governmental relationships, as well as the highest triumphs in the field of religion, must all be brought and laid as trophies at the pierced feet of Jesus Christ. For he is the one adequate and responsible cause of every beneficent thing.

What do you think of him? You must think something about these tremendous facts. When an astronomer notes a disturbance among the heavenly bodies for which he can assign no adequate cause, he begins to search the heavens for some unknown body-some new planet-in order that he may account for the phenomena observed. At last he finds a new planet—an adequate cause for the effects which he has observed. As you sweep the field of the past with the telescope of history, you find these far-reaching changes in human thought and life which must be accounted for. You have to account for the freeing of the slaves, for the emancipation of womanhood, for the glorification of childhood, for the mighty altruistic missionary movement of to-day, and for the hospitals and the schools and the asylums that have blessed the children of men. And as you see these changes, if you look closely, you will see in the past as the cause of them a mighty Figure towering up, altogether lovely, fairer than the lily of the valley, and chief among ten thousand to our souls-Christ, almighty, everlasting, unchanged, unchangeablethe Christ of the ages!

What think ye of Christ in the light of his supremacy? I challenge your honest thought to answer this question. What do you think of him, not only in the light of his influence upon the current of history and the customs of the race, but in the light of his transforming power in individual lives? How do you account for the unnumbered multitude who, through him, have experienced a new birth unto righteousness, have overcome sin and have died at last victorious, lifted into joy even in the midst of mortal pain by the high hope of heaven which he alone has brought? What do you think of him? "What think ye of Christ?"

"WHAT SHALL I DO WITH JESUS?"

Now, a related question is that of Pilate: "What shall I do then with Jesus which is called Christ?" Are you willing to face that question honestly at the bar of sound judgment and an enlightened conscience? If so, then you will have to make some answer. Pilate had Jesus on his hands, whether he would or not. He had to dispose of him in some way. And may I say, with all reverence, that we have Jesus Christ on our hands. We must answer these tremendous questions concerning him. What will you do with him?

There are four possible ways of disposing of this question. First, you may dismiss it without serious attention. You may say: "I do not care anything about it, and I will not do anything with Christ." But in the light of our individual need for guidance and help, how can any one so answer? No, we cannot afford to answer so lightly.

Again, you may reject Christ. You can reject God's mercy in Jesus Christ, disregard his warnings, ignore his promises, trample the shed blood of his Son under your rebellious feet. But, if you do it, then, upon the authority of the word of God, and in the full light of human experience, I declare unto you that you settle in the wrong way the eternal destiny of your immortal soul!

Again, you may postpone the answer to this vital question to "a more convenient season." Many have done that to the hurt of their souls. But you cannot deal carelessly with the most sacred and vital interests of life without suffering the spiritual consequences of such folly. God said of old: "My Spirit shall not strive with man forever." It is just as true to-day as in the days of Noah. And again and again have preachers seen the hardening that comes from the postponement of obedience to Christ and the entrance into a righteous life. If you are suffering pain, you hurry to a doctor. Yet, when it comes to the health of your immortal soul—your greatest possible interest for both time and eternity-you are negligent and indifferent, and nonchalantly you say to yourself, "I will wait for a more convenient season!" But God does not promise a more convenient season. He says through his word: "To-day, if ye will hear his voice, harden not your hearts." "Behold, now is the acceptable time; behold, now is the day of salvation."

Now, there is one other answer which you can make to this great question which your own heart asks, "What shall I do with Jesus?" It is this: You can surrender to him. And this is what you can ever do. If you ever are saved, you must lay your doubts and your difficulties, your sins and your sorrows, all upon him, and with the faith of a little child bow your will to his will and surrender your heart, for time and eternity, into his tender and blessed hands.

"Behold, I stand at the door, and knock: if any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me." He stands at the door of your heart—even now—at this moment—and knocks—and knocks! "Let Jesus come into your heart."

CALHOUN'S MEETING AT HENDERSON, TENN. BY L. L. BRIGANCE.

This meeting began on the first Sunday in October and closed on the third Sunday night. It was Brother Calhoun's meeting only in the sense that he was the preacher of the occasion. In spite of continued rains, large audiences gathered each evening to hear the "old Jerusalem gospel," and those who came for that purpose were not disappointed.

Brother Calhoun is not a whit behind the greatest preachers of the ancient gospel we have ever heard. He has a pleasing personality, a good voice, and is an unusually fine speaker. His power as a preacher lies, in our judgment, principally in three things. First, his close adherence to the Bible. He preaches those things, and those only, that are taught in the "old Book." No man contends more earnestly for "the ancient order of things" than does he. The church at Henderson has been through the fire in the matter of innovations, and it has little patience with preaching that would compromise or minimize any part of the gospel, or that would tolerate any addition, subtraction, or departure therefrom. Brother Calhoun's preaching has its unqualified support and indorsement. Next, his wonderful clearness and simplicity is one of his outstanding qualities. With all his great scholarship, he makes his points so clear and simple that no one can fail to understand them. Even the small children listen eagerly to what he says. Last, but not least, his preaching is positive. There is no uncertain sound, There is no mincing of words. He speaks as "one having authority, and not as the scribes." He is emphatic. He can say things in "words as hard as cannon balls" when the occasion demands it. But while he speaks the truth boldly and unflinchingly, nevertheless he speaks it in love.

He preaches "with malice toward none, with charity for all."

There were thirteen additions to the congregation during this meeting, eleven of which were baptized. Since Brother Calhoun began his work with the church on the second Sunday in September there have been in all seventy-five added to the congregation. He has baptized every girl in the dormitory of Freed-Hardeman College over which he and Sister Calhoun preside that was not already a member of the church. He preaches in Henderson every Sunday morning and evening. Every one passing this way is cordially invited to hear him.

W. R. Essex preached for the congregation at Sixth Avenue, North, this city, last Lord's day.

A man who will not confess his own wrongs is in no position to show others the way of the Lord.

L. B. Jones, of Murfreesboro. Tenn., made the Gospel Advocate office a very pleasant visit last week.

The only impressions some young men make upon the world are the lines of care upon a mother's face.

W. S. Long, Detroit, Mich., October 27: "At Vinewood Avenue, last Lord's day, there was one baptism and one by statement."

H. W. Wrye preached at Old Hickory, near Nashville, Tenn., last Lord's day. Brother Wrye made the Gospel Advocate office a very pleasant visit last week.

H. M. Phillips closed a meeting at Rains Avenue, this city, last Friday, with one restoration. Brother Phillips will begin a meeting at Hartsville, Tenn., next Lord's day.

It does perishing souls no more good to listen to an elegant sermon without any gospel in it than it does thirsty people to look at a stylish but empty dipper in a

Wilburn Scobey preached for the new congregation in Radnor, this city, last Lord's day. There was one restoration. This was the first service at this place, and sixty-two were present at Sunday school.

The meeting of the congregation at David Lipscomb College continues this week. There have been six additions to date. Brother Elam is doing the preaching. Services every night at half past seven o'clock.

Emmett G. Creacy, Emberton, Ky., October 26: "I am here in what promises to be a good meeting. From here I go to Turkeyneck Bend. The work moves along nicely with the two congregations in Indianapolis, Ind."

Our new catalogue of books, Bibles, church and Sunday-school requisites will be ready in about two weeks. Good books make the best gifts. A copy of this catalogue will be mailed to all our subscribers or to any one wishing a copy.

Thomas E. Milholland, Vernon, Texas: "We feel very much at home back in Vernon. I shake hands with many friends every day. The church is happy, and so are we. Already the Lord is blessing our labors. We baptized two on Sunday evening, and two others were added—one by statement, the other confessing wrongs. During the week an elder baptized a young lady. And so the good work goes on."

Will J. Cullum, Hartsville, Tenn., October 30: "With the close of the service on last Lord's day, our work with the church at Livingston came to an end, and we are now on the ground at this place ready to begin our labors with the church here. From this date my address will be Hartsville, Tenn., Box 134."

Ben West, Stephenville, Texas, October 19: "Large crowds heard at both hours Sunday the Bible talks from Isa. 40: 28-31. Seven additions, all married except one. Ninety-seven at prayer meeting on Wednesday night. Great musical program every Sunday night. We have a wonderful quartet of twelve-year-old boys and girls."

U. R. Beeson, Pine Bluff, Ark., October 24: "Please send me immediately some sample copies of the Gospel Advocate. We need it in this city. The meeting is fine. Good crowds and good attention. Preacher 'heap' fine! Three persons—two women and a man—are to be immersed to-morrow. There is a faithful, heroic little band of disciples here."

J. S. Jones, Wingo, Ky., October 21: "My summer's work is near its close. I am now in a meeting with the Sharp and Oak Valley brethren. I go next to Dongola, Ill., for a meeting, to begin on November 17. In my summer's work and up to the present there have been about one hundred additions to the one body. I will meet Jim Hooper (Baptist) in a four-days' debate in Pryorsburg, Ky., beginning on December 15."

R. E. L. Taylor, Decherd, Tenn., October 21: "I have just closed a good meeting in Milburn, Ky., with thirteen additions—eleven by primary obedience and two by restoration. The meeting was hindered by the rainy weather, but the interest and attendance were good from the beginning to the end. I am now in Illinois in a meeting which began last night. A large crowd was present, and one young man made the good confession."

J. J. Bedwell, Coopertown, Tenn., October 27: "I closed a singing school last week for the church of Christ at Greenbrier. I am now teaching for the church of Christ at Coopertown. Churches at many places are hiring song leaders for their protracted meetings; and when the meeting is over the singer is gone, and they drag along almost any way with their song service. I think it would be much better to use the money in having the church taught and all take part in the song service, as it is a part of the worship. I find good musical talent wherever I go. All they need is teaching and training. There can be good song leaders developed in the churches almost everywhere. In many places we find the church absolutely blank on music. We oppose hired choirs. I believe it the duty of all Christians to learn to sing and take part in the song service."

J. A. Sikes, Avon Park, Fla., October 18: "Brother Elam's 'Notes' on the Bible-school lessons is the most instructive of anything of its kind I ever saw. I also wish to commend the Gospel Advocate for being a paper worthy of praise. I have been greatly benefited by it, and I think it should be in every home. The subjects are discussed in such a way as to be plain and to the point, always willing to give the truth without fear or favor. It has been a light in my home. During I. A. Douthitt's meeting at Avon Park, in 1923, I heard the gospel preached in its simplicity and purity and obeyed its teachings. I did not expect to enter into the field of actual service, but by study I soon saw that whenever and wherever I could assist in doing God's work it was my duty to do so. There is a real New Testament congregation at Sweetwater, and I am trying the best I can to serve them twice each month. I will start a meeting there on Friday, November 13. We are expecting R. E. L. Taylor to be with us in January."

W. H. Owen preached at Schochor, Ky., last Lord's day. Leslie G. Thomas preached twice in Farmington, Tenn., last Lord's day.

H. C. Hale preached at the Russell Street Church, this city, last Lord's day.

The growing tendency among our preachers to "pastorate" is alarming.

John G. Reese preached for the Chapel Avenue congregation, this city, last Lord's day.

A preacher who will not go out and preach until somebody promises to pay him has no trust in the Lord.

Gus Nichols, Cordova, Ala., October 31: "Our Cordova meeting resulted in eight being baptized and four restored."

D. F. Draper, Peebles, Ohio, October 29: "I am in a very promising meeting at Mount Zion, near Peebles, with fine crowds and good attention."

John H. Hines, Montgomery, Ala., October 26: "Your article on the front page is grand. Some of our preachers down here need to read it."

When a church once gets to depending upon a "pastor," the prospects are that it is paralyzed for life. There is little hope of its ever becoming self-edifying again.

Claud F. Witty, Detroit, Mich., October 29: "Samuel E. Witty closed a meeting at the West Side Central Church, with forty-three responses to the invitation. Five more came last Sunday."

- H. H. Adamson, Woodsfield, Ohio, October 25, to E. A. Elam: "You are in a big field and doing a fine work in the Gospel Advocate. Your 'Making Too Much of Differences' (No. 5) is sure a sugar plum. The Gospel Advocate is a great inspiration!"
- G. A. Dunn, Jr., Dallas, Texas, October 30: "F. O. Howell closed a meeting with the Highland Avenue congregation, this city, with six baptisms and one restoration. I am to begin Sunday in the new building of the brethren at Tuscumbia, Ala."
- W. D. Bills, Mulvane, Kan., October 19: "The meeting here starts off nicely, and we are looking forward to a good meeting. This is the home of A. J. Rhodes. He has labored with this congregation for the last ten years and is held in the highest esteem by the entire city."

Price Billingsley closed an unusually successful fourweeks' meeting with the Charlotte Avenue church of Christ, this city, last Lord's-day night, with seventy-three baptisms, twelve restorations, and eighteen from other congregations to become identified with Charlotte Avenue.

- W. S. Moody was with the Twelfth Avenue congregation, this city, preaching morning and night to large audiences, last Lord's day. H. Leo Boles will preach next Lord's day. He will also teach the adult Bible class at the regular Bible-study hour. All are invited to these services.
- J. E. Green, Scottsville, Ky.: "We are working hard in this field with our tent, but without much visible results. However, we are not discouraged. I hand out one dozen copies of the Gospel Advocate every week to people who I think will read them honestly and carefully, also have a large order of tracts and pamphlets for free distribution. We are sowing the seed and hoping and praying for a bountiful harvest in the future."
- C. Maynard, Muskogee, Okla., October 28: "Our meeting began on October 23, with C. McClung, of Fort Worth, Texas, doing the preaching. Our night services are being well attended, and the members are turning out nicely at the noonday services. Brother McClung presents some fine lessons to the church at noon and to the sinners at night. The members are all cooperating in such a way as to bring forth the best results. Pray for us."
- M. Keeble, Lebanon, Tenn., October 21: "On September 16 I began a meeting at Paducah, Ky., which was supported by the Lone Oak and Broadway churches of Christ (white). This meeting continued nearly three weeks and resulted in bringing seven to Christ and in the church's being edified. On the first Lord's day in October I began a meeting at Harris' Chapel, in Wilson County, Tenn., and continued it one week, with fine interest, but no additions. On the second Lord's day I began a meeting at St. John, in Wilson County, and continued it one week. One young lady obeyed the gospel. I began in Lebanon last Monday and will remain two weeks. I found the church ready for the meeting, with their new house almost completed, with its baptistery, dressing rooms, and classrooms. The white Christians here aided them in erecting this building."

- F. B. Srygley preached at Belmont Avenue, this city, last Lord's day.
- M. L. Burns, Bishop, Ala., October 19: "The interest is growing since O. C. Dobbs and Clark Burns held meetings for us. Twenty-six have been baptized since Brother Dobbs left—five for the Mingo church, six for the Mynot church, and fifteen for the church at home, near Maud, Ala. Of these, two were from the Baptists and two from the Presbyterians. Pray for us."
- E. Gaston Collins, Meaford, Ontario, Canada, October 26: "The work here is encouraging. Yesterday was a very rainy day, but we had good audiences. I was at Cape Rich in the morning. C. W. Petch, who is moving to Griersville, was here in the morning and at Griersville in the afternoon. We had an all-day meeting on October 18. Will Cox spoke at 7:30 P.M. All our other meetings are well attended."

The Gospel Advocate sincerely sympathizes with Brother Horace S. Lipscomb in the passing of his wife, Sister Lillian Brant Lipscomb. She died in the triumph of a living faith and has been released from the sufferings attendant upon a long illness to be ever with the Lord. Brother Lipscomb, the two small boys, and Sister Lipscomb's father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Brant, of Louisville, Ky., and other relatives, have many friends who deeply sympathize with them in this great bereavement.

Men that can preach and won't do it because they prefer to work all the week for money, and who prefer to preach a little on Sunday only because they are not willing to make the sacrifice of being away from their homes and families, are the hardest knockers and worst critics that real preachers have. Men who go out into the world to preach the gospel to lost sinners, skimping and straining to raise their families on what people are pleased to give them, are the noblest, best, and most self-sacrificing set of men on earth.

- T. C. Fox, Macon, Miss., October 26: "I closed a fifteen-days' meeting near this place yesterday, with two baptisms. One other made the confession, but was hindered by her husband from being baptized at this time. I am sure others became very much interested during this meeting. I surely did enjoy my part of the work. There are a few very fine Christian people there, who coöperated with me in this work, and they did not forget to have fellowship with me in this meeting. I will be in a meeting near Moorhead, Miss., for the next ten days. Success to the dear old Gospel Advocate."
- L. S. White, Wichita Falls, Texas, October 30; "The church of Christ in Wichita Falls began a meeting on the second Sunday in October and closed it on the fourth Sunday, with two services daily and three services the last day. The meeting had been well advertised. The church planned for, worked for, prayed for, and expected a great meeting. The largest audiences in the history of the church attended the meeting. Austin Taylor led the singing, and Foy E. Wallace, Jr., did the preaching. I never heard better singing or better preaching. Forty-seven were added to the congregation. Twenty-seven were baptized. Most of these are heads of families, and many of them from the denominations. The whole church is delighted."

SLANDER.

BY E. A. ELAM.

Under the head of slander several things need to be studied and avoided. Other members of this unholy and ungodly family are "backbiters," "talebearers," "tattlers," "busybodies," "meddlers," etc.

Any acceptable dictionary defines these characters so that any one can learn how despicable they are.

It is the condemnation of God of these characters so clearly and strongly set forth in the Bible to which especial attention is called. The condemnation of the thief, the robber, the murderer, the drunkard, the fornicator, and the otherwise disobedient, is not stronger, heavier, and more certain than the condemnation of these characters. Yet many seem not so impressed with the fearfulness of the punishment to be visited upon these characters; that is, unless they repent and bring forth fruit worthy of repentance. Forsaking such sins is as essential to salvation as turning away from all others. But it is a rare thing that one guilty of these sins, or of any one of them, ever confesses it and tries to repair the injury done another. It may appear necessary later on to tell in how many ways slander and these other sins can be and are perpetrated.

He that hideth hatred is of lying lips; and he that uttereth a slander is a fool. (Prov. 10: 18.)

It matters not how well educated or how highly cultured and refined one may be, if one utters a slander, God pronounces that one a fool. When God declares one to be a fool, however wise in the eyes of the world that one may be, such a one is absolutely a fool. If a man is a learned and eloquent preacher, but a slanderer, he is a fool in God's eve.

This is sufficient to cause every one who fears God to be very careful not to speak evil of another.

Jeremiah (6: 28) speaks of those who were "all grievous revolters, going about with slanders; they are brass and iron: they all of them deal corruptly." False dealers, revolters, and slanderers are in this passage associated together; and these sins helped to cause the overthrow of the people to whom Jeremiah prophesied.

One of the Ten Commandments is: "Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbor." This is classed with murder, adultery, theft, and covetousness. (See the other commandments.) This commandment is repeated with emphasis in the New Testament.

Backbiting is classed with strife, jealousy, wraths, factions, whisperings, swellings, and tumults. (2 Cor. 12: 20.) In Tit. 3: 2, Christians are commanded "to speak evil of no man," to be not contentious, but "to be gentle, showing all meekness toward all men."

To "take up a false report" (Ex. 23: 1), or to go about as a talebearer (Lev. 19: 16), is to be a slanderer or to speak evil of one. "Deacons" are forbidden to be "double-tongued," and women with them (as stated in the Revised Version, 1 Tim. 3: 8-11) are forbidden to be slanderers. So they are in Tit, 2: 2.

"Idlers," "tattlers," and "busybodies" (1 Tim. 5: 13), or meddlers in other men's matters, either men or women, are condemned. "For let none of you suffer as a murderer, or a thief, or an evildoer, or as a meddler in other men's matters: but if a man suffer as a Christian, let him not be ashamed; but let him glorify God in this name." (1 Pet. 4: 15, 16.) If one is reproached, persecuted even to imprisonment or to death, as a Christian, one should not be ashamed, but should "glorify God in this name;" but if one is imprisoned or otherwise punished as "a murderer, or a thief, or an evildoer, or as a meddler in other men's matters," one should be ashamed. Such a person according to civil law should be punished, and by God's law will be. There is no escape. But if all meddlers in other men's matters, all slanderers, all who circulate evil reports, were imprisoned, the jails would have to be enlarged greatly. Talebearers, slanderers, bearers of evil reports, and busybodies are classed here with thieves and murderers.

Since "a good name is rather to be chosen than great riches, and loving favor than silver and gold," the enormity of the sin of trying to destroy one's good name cannot be estimated on this side of perdition. How great the crime of the assassination of character!

Years ago I read a sensible article by a thoughtful and prudent lady against the indescribable sin of starting an evil report. An innocent, thoughtless girl, as innocent as she was ignorant and as ignorant as she was innocent, did some careless thing, or to older ones an imprudent thing, and this was remarked about, then commented upon, then reported to others, and fire spread abroad, and finally the girl was condemned and ostracised as unfit for decent society. What greater sin against one can Satan commit? Young girls are not so acquainted with evil, as a rule, to be thus guilty. Grown-up and older persons are the more guilty in such cases. To blow the breath upon some delicate and beautiful flower or to touch its leaves is to soil and spot it.

As beauty and perfume are to the flower, so is innate modesty, woman's chiefest charm, to a young girl. This she should never lose, but should be taught and protected by older ones of her sex to preserve it forever. It is admitted that the modesty of young and innocent girls is subjected in many ways to great dangers. One such danger is the example of their lady teachers, not a few mothers, the modern dress of women, the pictures in papers and magazines, etc. While the girl who can withstand all this is an angel, yet I am glad to say there are many such angels on earth.

There is a difference between an evil report and a report of evil. An evil report is something not true; it is a report which causes evil. The one who bears an evil report is himself evil. A whisperer stirs up strife; for "where there is no whisperer, contention ceaseth." (Prov. 26: 20.) A whisperer is to strife as wood is to fire, says Solomon. "A whisperer separateth chief friends." (Prov. 16: 28.) "Thou shalt not go up and down as a talebearer among thy people." (Lev. 19: 16.)

These quotations are sufficient to show the sin and fearful consequences of circulating evil reports, or talebearing.

On the other hand, to report evil others do may be necessary. Paul reports that Alexander the coppersmith did him much evil, and warned Timothy against him. (2 Tim. 4: 14, 15.) Luke reports the sins of Ananias and Sapphira and of many others. Such reports of evil are made in many places in the Bible. This is necessary now in order to protect others against evildoers. But all just, honorable, and true men and women are very careful to know that the report is evil and that it is necessary for the good of others to repeat it before they will do so. These are very different persons from the gossiper, tattler, busybody, whisperer, and meddler in other men's matters, whom God severely condemns.

All these things being true, we realize the goodness of the Lord in giving the third chapter of James on governing the tongue and against the wrong use of it. "Behold, how much wood ["how great a forest"-margin] is kindled by how small a fire! And the tongue is a fire: the world of iniquity among our members is the tongue, which defileth the whole body, and setteth on fire the wheel of nature, and is set on fire by hell." "It is a restless evil, it is full of deadly poison." This is the Lord's description of an evil tongue. But since the tongue speaks from the abundance of the heart, this is the Lord's description of the hearts of all who so turn their tongues

The Lord states that idleness is the breeder of gossip, tattling, and slander. "And withal they learn also to be idle, going about from house to house; and not only idle, but tattlers also and busybodies, speaking things which hey ought not." (1 Tim. 5: 13.) Those, old or young, who have nothing useful to do and no good things to say of others will most certainly find something evil to say and some mischief to do. God's remedy, then, for such erils is useful employment. There is too much idleness a times among not a few church members, including some pleachers. Too much of what is called "church work" is but little more than gossip clubs and tattlers' associations. It seems at times that some preachers, whose conversation and lives should be examples to others, would do far more good by being at home at work than in the way in which they are engaged.

"THE EMBARRASSMENT OF A GREAT STATE." BY F. W. SMITH.

The Commercial Tribune, of Cincinnati, Ohio, indulges its eaders with the following:

THE EMBARRASSMENT OF A GREAT STATE.

Threesee is getting a good deal of advertising out of the ase of young Scopes, who inadvertently and in all sinceity taught that in the science of biology and geology ther is involved the theory of creative evolution. But it is nd good advertising. It presents one of the great States of the Union as living in the dark ages when everybody thouht that the world was made in six calendar days, and is some, even in Tennessee, still think, was flat and suppreed like a table with posts at the four corners resting a nothing. ing a nothing.

No there are a great many intelligent people in Tennessee mxed up with a great many ignorant ones. In a case of this ind, it is only the latter who get themselves exploited. As amatter of plain fact, easily demonstrated, evolution has ben taught as a theory of creation in the schools of Temssee for years. Furthermore, it will be taught for all the years to come unless knowledge comes to extend beyon the present very advanced expositions of science. But it people who still think the earth was made on a rush rder do not like it.

The sort of people sometimes get into Legislatures, as a burh of them did in Tennessee. They have started in to stop ie teaching that God made the world methodically, delibeately, intelligently, and has advanced man to his preset wonderful state of mental, moral, and spiritual develoment in the same way. It is not good advertising for the State. However, it has its local uses. Dayton, the pice of trial, has been put on the man is drawing. the pice of trial, has been put on the map, is drawing like ay other circus and paying like any other side show.

Edbrs are supposed to have at least some information on th subjects on which they write, but in this case the editors the Tribune betrays a woeful lack of knowledge regaring a matter of the most vital importance.

"LIVING IN THE DARK AGES."

This characterization of the State of Tennessee shows how little the editor knows of the people he thus describes. Tennessee has sent to the White House three Presidents and many of the greatest senators and congressmen that have graced the halls of the greatest legislative body in the world.

While illiteracy abounds in Tennessee, as it does in every other State in the Union, yet the majority of her citizens will average in intelligence and culture with any of her sister States. But because the vast majority of her intelligent and cultured citizens oppose the Tribune's infidel theory that man sprang from a monkey, the editor of that journal sees fit to class Tennessee with the ignorance of the "dark ages." But if to believe the Bible account of the creation of the world and the origin of man is an evidence of ignorance, Tennessee will plead guilty to the charge. However, in so pleading, she will demand of the Tribune more than its naked assertion that we are "living in the dark ages," for that journal must furnish undoubted proof that we have descended from the family of monkeys. Until it can come forward with such proof it must appear before the public as siandering as intelligent people as live on the earth.

If there are any in Tennessee who "still think" that the world "was made flat and supported like a table with posts at the four corners resting on nothing," we have no knowledge of such, but this does not prove that no such people are in Tennessee. But, for the Tribune's information, we will say that not one such person had anything to do with framing and passing the law against teaching in our public schools the theory that man descended from a monkey.

Furthermore, those who are upholding said law are not among the class "living in the dark ages" to which the Tribune refers, but are quite as intelligent as those who side with the Tribune. To be frank, it bespeaks an absence of gray matter for the Tribune or any one else to ask sensible people to believe a theory with nothing more to support it than can be produced for the doctrine of modern evolution.

The great State of Kentucky, if we mistake not, came within one or two votes, through its Legislature, of being classed by the Tribune as "living in the dark ages." When the same law against the teaching of the infidel theory of evolution in the public schools of Kentucky came before the Legislature, it was defeated by a scant majority.

It is an easy and no doubt a very gratifying thing to editors seated in their easy-chairs to slander a people of whom they know little or nothing, because of opposition to the destructive work of infidels. If the Tribune desires to live and die in "ignorance" of the word of God, and feed its soul upon the "husks" of infidelity, that is entirely within its power, but it has no moral right to slander those who believe the Bible. For the Tribune, or any other man or set of men, even though they be at the head of universities, to class such men as William Jennings Bryan as "ignorant" or any way connected with "the dark ages" is but to manifest an ignorance of which any being on earth should be ashamed. Note the follow-

DARING TO TEACH SCIENCE IN TENNESSEE.

Vanderbilt University is in Tennessee. It is, in fact, squarely in the center of Tennessee, about as far from the north frontier as the south, and from the east frontier as the west. It is, therefore, in the center of the territory for which the State Legislature decreed last March that there must be no teaching of any theory "that man descended from a lower order of animal." Vanderbilt University is about one mile due west from the legislative chamber in which this famous doctrine was promulgated.

chamber in which this famous doctrine was promulgated.

Despite all of this, Vanderbilt University is apparently not ready to scrap science. And when Chancellor James H. Kirkland welcomed a home-coming crowd of graduates to Vanderbilt on Thursday evening, graduates returning for the semicentennial celebration of the university, he pointed out a new string of laboratories on the campus. These laboratories and the establishment at Vanderbilt of a school of religion, said the chancellor, are the university's answer to the episode at Dayton: "The remedy for a narrow sectarianism and a belligerent fundamentalism."

Is Vanderbilt the beneficiary by as much as a dollar of financial aid from the public school funds of Tennessee? If so, Vanderbilt is breaking the law in a manner much more formidable than the manner in which it was broken by young Mr. Scopes. For Vanderbilt has the temerity to build new laboratories in the heart of Tennessee, and the law makes the teaching of evolution a criminal proceeding in any institution "supported in whole or in part by the public-school funds of the State." Doubtless we shall hear more of this affair from Nashville. For the present one thing is clear: If the Tennessee State Legislature really wished to put an end to the heresy of evolution, it should have made its law more sweeping. What is a mere Scopes, annihilated, when a Vanderbilt still lifts its head?—New York World.

The very heading of the World's criticism is absolutely false. There has never been any question in Tennessee regarding the teaching of science, and until the World can show that man sprang from a monkey or some other lower form of life is a "scientific fact," it should have more regard for the truth than to publish such statements.

Assuming that Chancellor James H. Kirkland is correctly quoted—viz., "The remedy for a narrow sectarianism and a belligerent fundamentalism"—we ask plainly and positively. Does the Chancellor mean to place Vanderbilt University on record as teaching that the Genesis account of the creation of man is not true, and that man has as one of his ancestors a monkey? Is Chancellor Kirkland telling the parents of this Southland that Vanderbilt will teach their boys and girls that the Bible is a lie? Will he come out squarely and fairly with the statement that Vanderbilt University will take boys and girls from Christian homes and destroy their faith in God's word?

Let Vanderbilt and all other schools, colleges, and universities inform parents beforehand what their sons and daughters will be taught regarding their origin. Be honest.

"AN APPEAL TO THE CANDID," AGAIN. BY F. B. SRYGLEY.

It will be remembered that, in the Gospel Advocate of October 29, I gave a few things that I thought about Dr. Eugene Wood's book which he named "An Appeal to the Candid." In a letter the Doctor asked me to do this. And as I thought a few more things about the book, I have decided to give another installment.

The Doctor admits that his book is not a complete review of the Whiteside-Nichol book in these words: "Through these pages we shall examine only enough of the arguments and statements to prove what I have here said." What he had "here said" was: "Sincerely, brother, and in due kindness toward the reviewers, the best that I can say for their booklet aside from its ugly personal reflections, it is only quibbling and sham logic." If that is the best the Doctor "can say for their booklet," I would dislike to read the worst that he could say about it. I judge it would be frightful in the extreme. The Doctor does not say that the book he was reviewing had some quibbling and sham logic in it, but it is only quibbling and sham logic.

The Doctor says he will examine only enough of the statements to prove what he said; but to prove what he said, he would be compelled to examine all, for he said it only contained quibbling and sham logic. Suppose I were to admit that in the arguments and statements that the Doctor does examine that these brethren resorted to quibbling and sham logic, would that prove that they only did it? If in anything in the book they resorted to real logic, then the Doctor has not proved his charge. I wonder if the Doctor did not cover too much ground when he said that they only resorted to quibbling and sham logic? Can one not quibble and sham in one argument and argue straight and logically in another? If not, the Doctor is gone, for I am sure that he is not logical in the statement above quoted.

I believe that Dr. Eugene Wood is the worst man to saw the limb off between himself and the tree that I have ever followed. He does not intimate that he selects such arguments as he feels that he can answer or such as needs answering, but he takes a few to prove a universal charge, and I submit that a few will not prove it. It takes all to prove a charge of this kind. The Doctor seems to think that statements and arguments are like cotton—that he can pull a sample out of a bale, and they will all be just like the sample. Not so, Doctor. A strong man can sometimes make a weak argument. As proof of this statement, I cite the Doctor himself.

I quote again from the Doctor's booklet: "Boll believes that we are now reigning and judging in the same sense that the reviewers set forth on pages 63 and 64. That is, by our righteous and pious lives we condemn the unrighteous and impious, and, therefore, incur their hatred. But the Bible says we must first suffer or endure and then reign (2 Tim. 2: 12), and that it is the man that overcomes and keeps Christ's words to the end who shall rule with a rod of iron." I do not see how Boll could believe with the reviewers, if their book is "only quibbling and sham logic." Surely they were not quibbling and using sham logic when they made that statement, for Boll agree with them on it, and who could believe that Boll would indorse "quibbling and sham logic?" The Doctor certainly covered too much ground when he made that statement.

But in the above quotation the Doctor says: "The Bike says we must first suffer or endure and then reign." I am afraid the Doctor will think I am too personal, but I must say that in the passage the Doctor refers to it des not say it. The Bible says, "If we endure, we shall aso reign;" but it does not say " we must first suffer or endre and then reign." When the Doctor undertakes to ell what the Bible says, he should do that and not add toit. The Doctor evidently was trying to read his doctrine ato the text, rather than to read the truth from the txt. The Word says: "For if we died with him, we shall also live with him: if we endure, we shall also reign with Im; if we shall deny him, he also will deny us: if we are fithless, he abideth faithful; for he cannot deny himslf." (2 Tim. 2: 11-13.) It will be noted that the Doctordid not say that the Bible means that we must first suffe or endure and then reign with him, but he said the ible says it. If he had said it means it, it would have bee an error; but when he says that it says it, it is an importion on the text. When the text says, "For if we diedwith him, we shall also live with him," it does not mea the death of the body; for the death here mentioned ws in the past, and neither Paul nor Timothy had died. here is a death mentioned by this same writer that both h and Timothy had entered-namely, the death to sin. " ht if we died with Christ, we believe that we shall als live with him." (Rom. 6: 8.) Paul and the Roman brehren had already died this death, and they were at thattime living with Christ. Hear Paul still further on this eath and life: "Knowing that Christ being raised fro the dead dieth no more; death no more hath dominiorover him. For the death that he died, he died unto sinnee: but the life that he liveth, he liveth unto God. Em so reckon ye also yourselves to be dead unto sin, butalive unto God in Christ Jesus." (Rom. 6: 9-11.) Thust can be seen that when one becomes a Christian he die and when he lives the life of a Christian, he lives unt God. No wonder, then, Paul said in the text we are examing: "For if we died with him, we shall also live withim." We died with him when we became Christians, and a live with him when we live the life of a Christian.

"If we endure, we shall also reign with him." I see nothing to indicate that we endure in this life and reign with him in the next. Why not rather say we do both here in this life? We endure and also reign in living the life of the Christian. I believe that, and the Doctor says that "Boll believes that we are now reigning and judging in the same sense that the reviewers set forth on pages 63 and 64." This seems to make it unanimous. I believe it; Whiteside and Nichol believe it; Dr. Wood believes it, and he says Boll believes it. But it seems that Boll believes also that we shall reign with Christ in Jerusalem when he comes again. I do not believe that; Whiteside and Nichol do not believe it; and the Doctor never said positively that he believes it; and this leaves Boll in a hopeless minority, unless you count the Adventists and Russellites. The Doctor says that there is a hymn "in 'Gospel Praise,' and I think it is page 79, that says, 'We shall reign as kings and priests on high." Ah! Doctor, you will have to give better proof than a hymn book, even if it is on page 79. If that hymn means by "on high" in the next world, I do not accept it, it makes no difference who edited it. If you want to go by the hymn book, you can do it, but I am governed by the Bible. I am sure it is a mistake to say that we shall reign with him after he comes again, for his reign will end when he comes. Paul said of the resurrection: "For as in Adam all die, so also in Christ shall all be made alive." (1 Cor. 15: 22.) It will be noted here that Paul uses "all" twice-all die and all are made alive. This is universal. The apostle then continues: "But each in his own order: Christ the first fruits; then they that are Christ's at his coming. Then cometh the end, when he shall deliver up the kingdom to God, even the Father." (Verses 23, 24.) When will he "deliver up the kingdom to God, even the Father?" Then. Then when? When he comes. If the Doctor defends his friend's position on this passage, he will have to pull that "then" far enough away from the statement just made by the apostle to get a thousand years in between. Will Christ turn the kingdom over to the Father then as the apostle says? No, indeed, not according to the theory the Doctor is defending; for instead of his doing it then, he is only ready to begin to reign in earnest. Remember, now, I do not quote this from a hymn book, but from the word of God.

But the Doctor claims two literal resurrections—the one of the righteous, which he assumes is the first resurrection spoken of in Revelation, and the other of the wicked a thousand years after. If that is true, Paul never mentioned it, though he gives a long chapter to the subject of the resurrection. Though Paul mentions the resurrection of all, he says nothing about the Doctor's claim that there were two resurrections and that they were a thousand years apart. In the same chapter the apostle says: "We shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump: for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed." (Verses 51, 52.) I reckon the doctor can get a thousand years "in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye." This is no harder than to get a thousand years between the coming of Christ and then. Again I quote: "Marvel not at this: for the hour cometh, in which all that are in the tombs shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of judgment." (John 5: 28, 29.) Here both classes are spoken of and nothing said about a thousand years between the resurrections. This is universal again-all that are in the tombs. Both classes are mentioned, they that have done good and they that have done evil. No theory here of the Doctor's two resurrec-

These are some more of the things I think of the Doctor's needless book.

BY T. B. LARIMORE.

(An epitome of a discourse delivered at Cookeville, Tenn., and published by special request.)

"Behold, how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity!" (Ps. 133: 1.)

David's soul must have been filled with rapturous delight by the contemplation of brethren's dwelling together in unity when he exclaimed: "Behold, how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity!" Any preacher called to preach to "the saints and faithful" at Cookeville may behold in reality a similar scene, and be constrained to exclaim: "Behold, how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity!" I preached on this theme at Cookeville, not because of the probability of anybody's ever trying to introduce any divisive thing there, but because of the absence of the slightest probability of any one's ever doing such a satanic thing; and if any man ever does do so, may the Lord have mercy on his soul—and that reminds me of what a judge says to a criminal when sentencing him to be hanged!

The Cookeville church is a good church, numbering, I think, something more than four hundred souls. When I contemplate the wonderful work this church is doing, I am constrained to exclaim: "Behold, how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity!"

Some things that are confessedly good are not pleasant. Medicine, for instance, is confessedly good; but who says it's pleasant-pleasant to take or even to think of? Similar things may be said of dentistry and surgery, which are unquestionably good. Evidently some things that are pleasant are not good. Manifestly works of the flesh belong to this class. "Now the works of the flesh are manifest, which are these: Adultery, fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness, idolatry, witchcraft, hatred, variance, emulations, wrath, strife, seditions, heresies, envyings, murders, drunkenness, revelings, and such like: of the which I tell you before, as I have also told you in time past, that they which do such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God." (Gal. 5: 19-21.) They are unquestionably not good, then—as far from it as the east is from the west; but they must be pleasant, else why would so many human beings practice them?

So, then, some practice the unpleasant, because it is good, while others practice the pleasant, notwithstanding it is bad. Why not all practice what is both good and pleasant? "Behold, how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity!"

What degree of unity does the Lord approve? The seventeenth chapter of John answers that question. Our Savior is there represented as praying, almost in the shadow of the cross, for the same degree of unity that exists between himself and the Father to exist among all his followers. Can we conceive of its being correct and proper for the Divine Three to be divided? For each to head a party at war against the other two? That would create spiritual anarchy or pandemonium on the earth. Discord and division are not in accord with the word, the will, and the way of the Lord. "For there are three that bear record in heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost: and these three are one," (1 John 5: 7.)

How can this unity be procured, preserved, and perpetuated? This question suggests a delightful scene recorded in the thirteenth chapter of Genesis, "Abram was very rich in cattle, in silver, and in gold." "And Lot also, which went with Abram, had flocks, and herds, and tents. And the land was not able to bear them, that they might dwell together: for their substance was great, so that they could not dwell together. And there was a strife between the herdmen of Abram's cattle and the herdmen of Lot's cattle; and the Canaanite and the Perizzite dwelled then in the land. And Abram said unto Lot, Let there be no strife, I pray thee, between me and thee, and between my herdmen and thy herdmen; for we be brethren." That is, they belonged to the same race, family, or tribe. Abram was Lot's uncle. Moreover, Jehovah excepted, he was Lot's greatest and best benefactor. Nevertheless, when a situation involving the question of brotherly love, forbearance, and harmony developed, he said to his nephew: "Let there be no strife, I pray thee, between me and thee, and between my herdmen and thy herdmen; for we be brethren. Is not the whole land before thee? separate thyself, I pray thee, from me"not in spirit, but in space. "If thou wilt take the left hand, then I will go to the right; or if thou depart to the right hand, then I will go to the left." Abram was evidently ready, willing, and anxious to make any sacrifice not sinful in the interest of peace, harmony, unity, and brotherly love.

Lot selfishly, sordidly, and ungratefully chose the cream of the country, probably all that he considered worth having, leaving only the refuse to Abram. The sequel shows that sordid selfishness made Lot a pauper, a vagabond, and a fugitive on the earth; while generosity, magnanimity, and sublime unselfishness and liberality made Abram richer, greater, and better, drew him nearer and made him dearer to Him from whom all blessings flow, and finally caused him to be called "the father of the faithful" and "the friend of God." We should be immovable as rock-ribbed mountains of earth in defense of truth divine, but always ready to yield where only opinion, pride, or personal preference is involved.

Almost immediately after this wonderful manifestation of Lot's selfishness and Abram's marvelous liberality, "the Lord said unto Abram, after that Lot was separated from him, Lift up now thine eyes, and look from the place where thou art northward, and southward, and eastward, and westward; for all the land which thou seest, to thee will I give it, and to thy seed forever. And I will make thy seed as the dust of the earth: so that if a man can number the dust of the earth, then shall thy seed also be numbered. Arise, walk through the land in the length of it and in the breadth of it; for I will give it unto thee. Then Abram removed his tent, and came and dwelt in the plain of Mamre, which is in Hebron, and built there an altar unto the Lord." "After these things the word of the Lord came unto Abram in a vision, saying, Fear not, Abram: I am thy shield, and thy exceeding great reward." (Gen. 15: 1.)

Evidently, then, the Lord Almighty loves the man who serves him and is willing to sacrifice either himself or his substance in the interest of peace, harmony, and unity among brethren. But how does he regard the one—any one—who does the reverse of this? "These six things doth the Lord hate: yea, seven are an abomination unto him: a proud look, a lying tongue, and hands that shed innocent blood, a heart that deviseth wicked imaginations, feet that be swift in running to mischief, a false witness that speaketh lies, and he that soweth discord among brethren." (Prov. 6: 16-19.) Jehovah crowns the climax of the seven things he hates—that he abominates—with the man who sows discord among brethren. It is a fearful thing to be that man.

"I am the true vine, and my Father is the husbandman. Every branch in me that beareth not fruit he taketh away; and every branch that beareth fruit, he purgeth it, that it may bring forth more fruit. Now ye are clean through the word which I have spoken unto you. Abide in me, and I in you. As the branch cannot bear fruit of itself, except it abide in the vine; no more can ye, except ye abide in me. I am the vine, ye are the branches."

(John 15: 1-5.) Of course, there is never any kind or degree of strife or division among the literal branches of a vine. Our Savior—our Teacher divine—selects the literal vine and its literal branches, bearing precious fruit, to illustrate how we, in unity and love, should bear the fruits of righteousness, and we cannot bear such fruits unless we abide in unity and love.

"For as we have many members in one body, and all members have not the same office: so we, being many, are one body in Christ, and every one members one of another." (Rom. 12: 4, 5.) Here the Spirit represents us as bearing the same relation to each other as do the members of a natural human body, and the twelfth chapter of First Corinthians is chiefly an elaboration of the same thought.

"Now I beseech you, brethren, by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye all speak the same thing, and that there be no divisions among you; but that ye be perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment." (1 Cor. 1: 10.) This pathetic pleading of the peerless apostle Paul, who sealed his testimony with his own blood, should certainly be considered sufficient to condemn any man who will cause or encourage division among the children of God.

"I have fed you with milk, and not with meat: for hitherto ye were not able to bear it, neither yet now are ye able. For ye are yet carnal: for whereas there is among you envying, and strife, and divisions, are ye not carnal, and walk as men?" (1 Cor. 3: 2, 3.) Envying, strife, and divisions, then, among Christians, are positive proof that they are carnal, and "to be carnal-minded is death." (Rom. 8: 6.)

"I therefore, the prisoner of the Lord, beseech you that ye walk worthy of the vocation wherewith ye are called, with all lowliness and meekness, with long-suffering, forbearing one another in love; endeavoring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace." (Eph. 4: 1-3.)

"Only let your conversation be as it becometh the gospel of Christ: that whether I come and see you, or else be absent, I may hear of your affairs, that ye stand fast in one spirit, with one mind striving together for the faith of the gospel." (Phil. 1: 27.) Webster defines "conversation," "manner of life, living." So, then, Christians are taught by truth divine to let their manner of life, their living, "be as becometh the gospel of Christ," that others may see or hear that they stand fast in one spirit, with one mind, striving together for the faith of the gospel. Striving together—not against each other, but together; not for personal gain, glory, or supremacy, but "for the faith of the gospel," "the power of God unto salvation."

"Finally, be ye all of one mind, having compassion one of another, love as brethren, be pitiful, be courteous: not rendering evil for evil, or railing for railing: but contrairiwise blessing; knowing that ye are thereunto called, that ye should inherit a blessing. For he that will love life, and see good days, let him refrain his tongue from evil, and his lips that they speak no guile: let him eschew evil, and do good; let him seek peace and ensue it. For the eyes of the Lord are over the righteous, and his ears are open unto their prayers; but the face of the Lord is against them that do evil." (1 Pet. 3: 8-12.)

Æsop tells a fable illustrating the strength of unity. A father of seven stalwart sons whom he had sometimes known to disagree, being about to die, called his sons to his bedside, and requested each one, in turn, to break a bundle of seven rods securely bound together. Each of the seven having done his best to break the bundle, they all declared it could not be done. The father then cut the cords that bound the rods together, handed one to each son and bade them break the rods, which they did easily. "Thus," Æsop says, "he taught them there is strength in unity; there is weakness in discord."

The motto of old Kentucky, twin sister of Tennessee, is: "United, we stand; divided, we fall." United, Christians conquer and prosper; divided, many of them may fail and fall. The faithful shall never fall, however, but shall be conquerors, and more than conquerors, through Jesus Christ, our Lord.

LASATER.

LASATER.

Mrs. J. P. Lasater (née Alice Burger), wife of Dr. J. P. Lasater, died at her home in Bridgeport, Ala., on Sunday, September 20, 1925, after an illness of a few weeks. Mrs. Lasater was the daughter of that grand old soldier of the cross, Brother Burger, of Manchester, Tenn. For years Mrs. Lasater taught an intermediate class of boys and girls each Sunday morning in the Bible school, and she taught them to practice what they learned. Often they went out with Mrs. Lasater with well-filled baskets to visit the poor and needy. Mrs. Lasater was a worthy woman, a good neighbor, a faithful friend, a devoted daughter, a model mother, a wonderful wife, and a faithful friend, a devoted daughter, a model mother, a wonderful wife, and a courteous, consistent, conscientious, consecrated Christian. Funeral services were conducted at the church of Christ on Monday by Brother Charles Holder in the presence of a great assemblage of people, after which burial took place at Mount Carmel cemetery, near Bridgeport. Mrs. Lasater leaves a husband, seven children, one brother, three sisters, one sister-in-law, other three sisters, one sister-in-law, other relatives, and a host of friends, who sorrow because of her passing, but not as those who have no hope.

(Miss) MATTIE HOLDER.

LOVELL.

On May 3, 1925, the angel of death entered the home of Brother and Sis-ter George Lovell, of Lyles, Tenn., and entered the home of Brother and Sister George Lovell, of Lyles, Tenn., and called for Brother Lovell to come up higher. He was sick for about two years and confined to his bed for ten months. He bore his suffering patiently, never grumbling or complaining, but appreciating all that was done for him. He was sixty-four years old, December 26. He had been a member of the church of Christ for years, and was an excellent Bible teacher and a faithful preacher of the gospel. His great desire was that his boys would be trained in a school where the Bible is taught and that their lives would be guided by its teachings. He was a most devoted husband and father. He leaves a widow and three small sons, also four brothers and three sisters, all members of the church. Funeral services were conducted by Brother Will Morton at the Lyles church of Christ, and the remains were laid to rest in the burial ground near by. May God's richest blessings rest upon Sister Lovell and the children. We would say to the bereaved: Weep not as those that have no hope, for we have a hope that he has gone on to the beautiful home of the soul, where there is no sickness, sorrow, or pain, and God shall wipe away all tears.

How to Solve a Cross Word Puzzle ♠ 1925 THE J.O.W. CO.

© 1925 THE LOW. CO. How to Solve a Cross Word Puzzle (34).

To work out this puzzle, the white spaces must be filled with letters forming words answering to the various horizontal and vertical definitions given below. The horizontal and vertical words are not the same, but each gives a due to the other. The first letter of each word is indicated by a number which refers to the definitions listed below.

It is advisable to first fill in, in both directions, those words which you know to be correct. These will furnish hints to those words which you do not know or had merely guessed at. When the puzzle is solved correctly, the letters in the white spaces will spell words both horizontally and vertically. The black spaces are the blind spots of the puzzle and merely form the pattern, incidentally designating the ends and beginnings of the words contained in the puzzle.

REPORT OF MONTANA MISSION WORK.

BY W. F. LEMMONS.

I here give a final report of all funds received by me for the two months' mission work I did in Mon-

Previously reported, $197.59. Since that report I have received from all sources $44, making a total of $241.59. I feel very grateful to all those who so generously cooperated in this work, and I can assure them that I lost no time, except what was required in going from one meeting to another, and three nights we were rained out. I am sure that our labor was "not in vain in the Lord."

In the future all funds for the Montana work should be sent direct to me, General Delivery, Nashville, Tennessee, as we have no missionary now on that field, Brother J. O. Golphenee has practically done no mission work for more than a year; furthermore, he could accomplish but little in his territory with ever so much support. I feel that it is my duty to call the readers' attention to this and to save the contributors any further waste of funds. He failed or refused to inform the contributors that he was not at work, but left the impression on them that he was still at work. Neither did he so inform me.

Having been on the field myself this year and received information firsthand, and after consulting with the brethren in Montana, as well as some in the Gospel Advocate office, we have decided upon the following program:

- 1. That we will not try to support any man for full time on that field in the future.
- 2. That we will endeavor to raise funds to support two men in June, July, and August, 1926, to hold meetings in such cities as Sidney, Glendive, Miles City, and Billings-cities where the gospel has never been preached.
- 3. In order to do that, sufficient funds will have to be raised to support the two men three months, as well as to meet all incidental expenses. Whoever does the work will have to pay board (as we have no brethren in these cities) and meet other incidental expenses, such as lighting, seating, etc. At that time of the year we can hold meetings on vacant lots. It is certain that we cannot secure church houses.
- 4. That we will get two good men for this work, if we can find men that are willing to "endure hardship as good soldiers of Jesus Christ" and take the consequences. In case no one is willing to take the work, I will take a man with me; and if it comes to that, I promise now that these cities shall hear the old Jerusalem gospel for the first time in their lives. Of course, I am acquainted with the field and the conditions, and I am sure that we can bring results.

Hitherto our work has been confined to the country almost wholly. It is time we were taking the cities and towns. "The field is ripe unto the harvest." Shall we reap? All money received for this work will be deposited, and a report of receipts will be made every three months. It will require something like eight hundred to one thousand dollars to support this work during this time. I shall refer to this fund occasionally.

COUNTY LINE BIBLE SCHOOL.

The County Line Bible School will open its eleventh term on November 16, 1925. Brethren, please note the advantages that we are offering any one who wants a good working knowledge of the Bible, and especially any one who wants to preach the gospel.

We have in our library some of the very best helps: Encyclopedias (Chambers' and Britannica); Concordances (Cruden's and Young's Analytical); Bible Dictionaries (Robison's and Smith's); and Webster's International Dictionary. On the text of the Bible, we have Matthew Henry; Jamison, Faucet, and Brown; Dr. Adam Clarke's Notes and Scott's Notes; and our commentaries on the New Testament are numerous. The faculty will deliver sixty lectures, which we hope will be worth the time and expense of any one attending the school.

The teachers' work and all the helps are free. The teachers are supported by freewill offerings. Board, laundry, and lodging at the dormitory, only fifteen dollars per month.

Bible reading course one term. Bible-reading course with ministerial training course two terms.

For catalogue and particulars, address S. C. Garner, Bakersfield, Mo.

Memphis, Tenn., October 30 .- The mission meeting, near Amity, Ark., which began on the fourth Lord's day in September and closed on the first Lord's-day night in October, was well attended and resulted in six baptisms. The writer preached the word as best he could, and Brother W. D. Cooper led the singing. That field is fully ready to harvest.—A. J. Veteto.

Neosho, Mo., October 26.—The meeting at Rogers, Ark., resulted in seven baptisms, one restoration, and five additions from other congregations. The church has planned to do greater work. Brother John T. Hinds and Brother J. H. Martin were with me most of the time, which added great strength to the meeting. I am now at McNatt, Mo., sixteen miles south of home.—W. T. Hines.

B. C. Goodpasture, Atlanta, Ga., says: "I have used four or five of the popular 'Notes' on the Sunday-school lessons, but consider 'Elam's Notes' by far the best."

Batsell Baxter, President of Abilene Christian College, Abilene, Texas, says: "I regard 'Elam's Notes' as the best work of the kind available. Brother Elam is one of our foremost Bible teachers, and his ripe experience, splendid judgment, and constant companionship with the Bible have combined to make this one of the linest helps to Bible study to be found anywhere."

Sylvania Station, Fort Worth, Texas, October 19.—My five meetings this year were at the following places with the results named: Duncan, Okla., twenty-one baptisms; Thalia, Texas, twelve baptisms; Carlisle, two baptisms; Bangs, twenty-nine baptisms; Meadow, twenty-five baptisms, I have four meetings arranged for next year, and would like to arrange for one or two in some of the Northern States.—J. K. Bentley.

Smithville, Tenn., October 17.—The meeting which began here on the first Sunday in this month, conducted by Brethren L. L. Brigance and R. V. Cawthon, closed last night, with eight baptized. Brother Brigance held our meeting last year also, and it will only take time to tell the good that he has really done in these two meetings. I personally know that he has had great part in building up the congregation, and we shall never forget his untiring efforts with us in the cause. Brother R. V. Cawthon has been with us for nearly nine years, during which time he has done all of our regular work and held seven meetings out of the nine, and then assisted Brother Brigance in these last two in many ways, but especially with his many ways, but especially with his very superior ability as song leader. Brother Cawthon has done more for this congregation than any other one man, and the credit for its thriving condition must go to his extended service among us.—James C. Moore.

From the Brethren

Cleveland, Ohio, October 25.—Since last report we have received contributions from churches and individuals amounting to three hundred and sixty-six dollars. We greatly appreciate the financial assistance given us, and again wish to thank each and every contributor for his generous and loyal support. A short-time loan of fifteen hundred dollars and the kind indulgence of our creditors has given us temporary relief in the payment of some of our bills, but the interest on deferred payments and loan only increases the amount that we eventually will have to pay. So we beg of all who have not as yet contributed to the cause here to do so promptly and liberally as possible, that the work may be carried forward without interruption.—A. L. Hendershot.

interruption.—A. L. Hendershot.

Garfield, Ark., October 16.—During the summer and fall I have been preaching in three States. I have held three meetings in Oklahoma. One of these was at Apache, the home of Brother G. W. Parmer, one of our good gospel preachers. We have a fine band of brethren at Apache. I went out to Ellington, Mo., and conducted a meeting. There I met Brother R. G. Sloan, who lives at Centerville, Mo. He is another one of our gospel preachers. We also have a fine band of brethren at Ellington. I am now in Garfield, Ark., and will hold a meeting at Corinth Church, near this place. We have had some additions all along, with large crowds and good interest. I will go from here to Purdy, Mo., for my next meeting. I am now ready to hear from brethren who want me for meetings next year. Address me at Chandler, Okla.—George W. Miller.

Rogersville, Ala., October 19.—Recently I held a short mission meeting at the Cauhorn Cemetery, in Lauderdale County, Ala., with four baptisms. They promised to build a house of worship this winter. I promised to hold a meeting there in 1926. I have just closed a short meeting at Vina, Ala. There were no visible results. The conditions were unfavorable. We were hindered by rain, and the Methodists were holding their meeting at the same time. There are a few anti-Sunday-school, anti-literature brethren there, who oppose almost everything but their own personal peculiarities, which they press even to the point of being "unreasonable." The apostle Paul asked that he and others be delivered from "unreasonable" men. (2 Thess, 3: 1, 2.) They mistake zeal without knowledge for loyalty to God's word. They, like the Jews, have "a zeal of God, but not according to knowledge. For they being ignorant of God's righteousness, and going about to establish their own righteousness, have not submitted themselves unto the righteousness of God." (Rom. 10: 1, 2.) May God hasten the day when all disturbers of the peace of Zion and all sowers of discord shall cease pressing their personal, individual opinions to the dividing of the body of Christ!—William Behel.

FREED-HARDEMAN COLLEGE.

BY F. O. HOWELL.

On Friday, October 23, Brother G. A. Dunn, Jr., and I visited Freed-Hardeman College, at Henderson, Tenn. We found that the splendid town had many new business houses that were not there just a few years ago. We found one of the most beautiful and best-kept ladies' homes that we ever visited at any institution of learning. We found an enthusiastic and capable set of young men and young women from many States, who love the institution and who are speaking loudly its praises. We found one of the largest and best-prepared faculties that we have ever seen in a school the size of this institution. We found the Ladies' Home supervised by Brother Hall L. Calhoun and his splendid wife, both of whom have wide experience in such work.

I believe the Henderson school is doing a work that is not second to any junior college in the United States; and the Bible department, with its present teachers, Brethren Calhoun and Hardeman, is capable of doing as good work as any school in the brotherhood. Brother Calhoun is gentle, kind, conscientious, scholarly, and well qualified in every way for the confidence of the entire brotherhood, and I, for one, am in favor of putting our shoulder to the wheel, so to speak, and fill the Henderson school to overflowing with our Christian boys and girls. The Ladies' Home can care for fifteen or twenty more young ladies. I feel sure that parents cannot place their girls where they will be better cared for.

We all know that, as a teacher and preacher, Brother Hardeman has few equals. Let those who are thinking of entering school write Freed-Hardeman College for a catalogue and information and investigate our home schools among the churches of Christ before going into some sectarian or State institution of learning,

McQUIDDY'S RUDIMENTS OF MUSIC

Reading music is purely a mechanical problem, and a too liberal use of theory will confuse rather than help in attaining desired results.

Any one may learn to read music accurately and rapidly who will never be able to sing acceptably, for various reasons. Some sing naturally, as do the birds, while others must have long and thorough training before the ability is acquired to sing the Major Diatonic scale correctly; others are unable to sing in "tune," and consequently must have severe drill under a competent instructor before the voice is brought under control. The student will, therefore, understand that neither theoretical technicalities nor voice building will be discussed in this book -merely the art of reading music.

There is no better music composer in this or any other country than is the editor of "McQuiddy's Rudiments of Music." Price, 20 cents, single copy, prepaid; $2.25 per dozen, not prepaid. Address

Moore, S. C., October 22.—We have a tent ready for a meeting to begin on Lord's-day night, if the Lord will. Long nights are coming, and who is preparing good reading for every spare moment? Who is obeying God in giving attention to reading, so that we can grow strong in the faith?—J. C. Mosley.

Muskogee, Okla... October 23.—I began with the C and Kankakee Church last night, and we have bright prospects for a good meeting. Brother J. G. Allen labors with them, and seems to be the right man for this work. They all have confidence in him. I closed at Lufkin last Monday night. This was a great meeting. I shall return in 1926, the Lord willing.—C. McClung.

Mayfield, Ky.. October 21.—Since my last report I have held meetings at the following places: Prescott, Ark., twelve additions; Hatler's Chapel, Tenn., three additions; Cedar Grove, Tenn., four additions; South Point, Tenn., four additions; Manila, Ark., twenty-four additions; Pleasant View, Tenn., twenty additions. I am now in a tent meeting with the church at Pottsville, near Mayfield. I gonext to Holladay, Tenn.—B. L. Douthitt.

Tuscumbia, Ala., October 19.—Our meeting at Piney Grove, nine miles from Tuscumbia, closed yesterday afternoon, with no additions. I preached fifteen sermons. We had rain almost every night, so the crowds were small; but those who came were very attentive, and the few faithful brethren were edified and strengthened in the faith. I am now ready to arrange for monthly preaching for next year and also for some protracted meetings.—J. H. Morris.

Wellsville, Ohio, October 19.—A. A. Bunner, of Cleveland, Ohio, was with us yesterday, and preached two most able sermons to the congregation meeting at Seventeenth and Commerce Streets. He seemed to throw all of his old-time vigor into the work. He is "a workman that needeth not to be ashamed." All were greatly edified and encouraged. He is expected to be with us again on November 15. We are getting ready to work in a meeting with Brother Charles E. Fogle, of St. Marys, the last of November.—John F. Buchanan.

Sparta, Tenn., October 21.—Our meeting conducted by Brother Horace W. Busby, of Fort Worth, Texas, closed last evening, with two additions, making in all fourteen baptisms and one reclaimed. Brother Busby adheres strictly to the word of God in his teaching and presents the truth with great power, and with his forceful exhortations moves people to obey the gospel. The crowds that came to hear him were drawn by the power of his love and the simplicity of his gospel preaching. He has promised to be with us again next year.—J. R. Tubb.

October 9, and on my return stopped with the church at Cedar Grove, in Monroe Country, where Brother Femister is conducting a meeting. I yielded to their earnest request and preached one sermon for them. I was scheduled to begin a meeting at Beckton, in Barren County, October 13, but on account of the critical illness of Elder W. P. Edmunds the meeting was postponed indefinitely. Brother Edmunds passed away and was Edmunds passed away and was buried on October 17. The writer conducted the funeral. This is a great loss to the Beckton church.— Samuel H. Austin, Ellington, Mo., October 21.—I wish to report a meeting conducted by Brother George W. Miller, of Chandler, Okla. The meeting began on October 3 and closed on October 13. The time was divided between Ellington and Exchange; and as we have no church building at Ellington, the meeting here was held in the basement of one of the banks. Brother Miller preached the gospel in its purity and simplicity. One was baptized on the last day of the meeting. We are weak here and the brethren are scattered, but we hope some day to be able to erect a building in Ellington, in which we can preach and Ellington, Mo., October 21 .ington, in which we can preach and worship according to the precepts in the New Testament.—W. the New Testament.—W. F. Haywood.

Bartlesville, Okla., October 17.—I have just returned home from the Blue-Bogard debate. It was the greatest victory for truth I have ever witnessed. Elder Bogard, the greatest Baptist debater in the United States, could not stand up under the sledge-hammer blows delivered by Brother Blue and went down in defeat. Bogard went so far as to say we did not have to obey any of God's commandments to be saved. It was not just a slip of the tongue, for he insisted for at least fifteen minutes that not a single command must be insisted for at least fifteen minutes that not a single command must be obeyed in order to be saved. Brother Young said: "I have heard Bogard in fourteen debates, trying to defend Baptist doctrine, but he certainly received the greatest defeat of his life this time, Brother Blue made the most powerful speech in his opening affirmative I have ever heard fall from the lips of man. It simply paralyzed Bogard, and he did not know what to do. Twelve or fourteen preachers were present.—Will W. Slater. Slater.

Bardwell, Ky., October 21.—On last Lord's-day morning I preached at Keefe, Tenn., with one confession and one restoration. I had the pleasure of hearing Brother Claude B. Thomas preach two splendid sermons, which were appreciated by all that heard him. He is capable of doing much good in the name of Christ.—Joe Ratcliffe. cliffe.

Athens, Texas, October 17.—I closed my last mission meeting in the drought-stricken area, at Luling, Texas, last night, without additions. The visible results of the four meetings were twelve baptisms and one new congregation. I am at home now and ready to take up local work for the winter.—J. S. Daugherty.

Tulsa, Okla., October 22.—The Lord willing, I will begin a meeting at Braman, Okla., on the first Lord's day in November.—James E. Laird.

Wellington, Texas, October 26.—We had another fine day here yesterday, with two large crowds and three additions to the congregation. Though we have recently arranged two new classes, we are going to have to arrange two or three more. The spirit of the church is fine. We are doing good work both in Wellington and at mission points.—Ira Lee Sanders,

San Diego, Cal., October 26.—We have recently started up another class for the young people here. We have four classes now meeting in our small house, which is entirely too small. On Sunday nights recently I have been taking up special subjects for investigation, such as "Divine Healing," "The Lord's Day," "Seventh-day Adventist Doctrine," and "Russellism Compared with Bible Teaching,"—E. N. Glenn.

Tompkinsville, Ky., October 31.—
I preached here on the third Sunday in this month, Brother Phemister held a meeting at Mount Gilead, four miles from here. I assisted him a few days. There were good crowds and interest, but no additions when I left. I am just home from a week's meeting at White Oak, in Macon County, Tenn. After April 1, next year, I mean to give up the work here and go back to regular evangelistic work. I have part of 1926 not yet taken for meetings. If you want me to hold your meeting, let me know in time.-Willie Hunter.

Scottsville, Ky., October 29.-I have spent the summer in mission work in this section with a tent, but without much visible results. I have handed out more than fifteen dollars' worth of tracts and literature. So the seed has been sown abundantly, and I am sure that it will produce its fruit in due season. We had Brother Coleman Overby to assist us in a meeting here in September. There were no additions, but the church was greatly edified. Beginning on October 11, we had Brother R. L. Colley to assist us in a meeting at Fountain Run, which resulted in sixteen baptisms and the burial of the hatchet of strife. Four of those baptized were Baptists.—

SCRIPTURE STUDIES

BY JAMES A. ALLEN

As long as man lived in obedience to God, he enjoyed the happiness for which he was created. Disobedience is what ruined his fortunes and caused him to become an exile from Paradise. Finite mind cannot grasp a full idea of the joys and pleasures that were forfeited when Eden was lost, nor can we form an adequate conception of the blessedness of the first estate of man. Even the very earth was blighted by the touch of sin, the ground began to produce thorns and thistles, and nature suffered an eclipse on account of the fall of man.

The design of the remedial system is to restore man to what he once was. As by disobedience he forfeited his first estate, so the gospel plan, by schooling and educating him into obedience to God, proposes to ultimately effect his regeneration. "Having been begotten again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, through the word of God, which liveth and abideth," he becomes spiritually regenerated by being "born of water and the Spirit." Raised from the waters of immersion to "walk in newness of life," being led by the Spirit, through the word, he adds to his faith virtue, knowledge, self-control, patience, godliness, brotherly kindness, and love; and then he falls asleep in Jesus with the promise of a physical regeneration through a resurrection into a glorious immortality. "It is sown in corruption; it is raised in incorruption: it is sown in dishonor; it is raised in glory: it is sown in weakness; it is raised in power: it is sown a physical body; it is raised a spiritual body." (1 Cor. 15: 42-44.) "The heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall be dissolved with fervent heat, and the earth and the works that are therein shall be burned up." (2 Pet. 3: 10.) "A new heaven and a new earth," wherein dwelleth righteousness, shall supersede those frosted and blighted by sin; "for the first heaven and the first earth are passed away." (Rev. 21: 1.) And then man, in a regenerated state, having regained his holiness, will be restored to happiness and will enjoy the untold blessings of a habitation in the eternal city of God.

The man who indulges in sin must suffer its consequences. When law is violated, the penalty attached thereto must be paid. Such is true in both the natural and spiritual worlds. No man can violate the laws of nature and remain in health, any more than he can neglect or abuse the spiritual institutions of the remedial system and grow in the grace and knowledge of the Lord. When man violates or transgresses the laws of God, in nature or grace, he commits sin; and "the wages of sin is death," physically as well as spiritually.

In the church man is schooled and trained into obedience to God. In Eden he was with God as long as he was obedient; and when he became disobedient, he thus separated himself from God and was driven out into the earth, a wanderer and sojourner, under the penalty of death, but respited through the mercy of God. In the great love of God the scheme of redemption was introduced, culminating in the triumph of the Messiah, through whom man might come back into covenant relationship with God. So in the church, composed of all those who renounce sin and are immersed into Christ upon a profession of his name, he is taught to live a holy life and to observe the ordinances and appointments of the house of God. The creature must stand before the Creator; and unless he has, by such a life, developed a character congenial to God, it would disturb the happiness of heaven to admit him into the society of those with whom he could not congenially associate.

It is a very great mistake to ascribe to the religious world an honest effort to obey God. Many enthusiastic devotees earnestly send up the prayer, "Lord, Lord," who will make haste to become angry if cited to a few plain verses of the Bible. I have no disposition to object to any happy experience that is "better felt than told;" but I never could understand how any person with a good case of true "Holy Spirit religion" could become indignantly insulted at any language the Holy Spirit has plainly spoken. The inspired oracles inform us that "holy men of God spoke as they were moved by the Holy Spirit;" and every one, it must be conceded, who is really led by the Spirit, recognizes that the guiding light shines only from the clear teaching of the word. It is displeasing to God, and was always, during the personal ministry of Jesus, obnoxious to him, for people to say their prayers so fervently and regularly, and yet remain coldly indifferent to the things that he had so plainly commanded. "And why call ye me, Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say?" (Luke 6: 46.) Again, he said: "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father who is in heaven. Many will say to me in that day. Lord, Lord, did we not prophesy by thy name, and by thy name cast out demons, and by thy name do many mighty works? And then will I profess unto them, I never knew you: depart from me, ye that work iniquity." (Matt. 7: 21-23.)

In the church the necessity of living in strict obedience to God should be more strongly emphasized. People who would throw up their hands in horror at the thought of neglecting to be baptized yet habitually slight their duties as Christians and fail to meet the obligations and responsibilities resting upon them as members of the church of Christ. The latter neglect is worse than the first. It is better to neglect to become a Christian than to neglect to live the Christian life after having become one. The salvation of the world is in the hands of the church. It is the institution through which God works good to the world, through which the gospel is preached, believers schooled into living the Christian life, the poor cared for, and orphans and widows visited in their affliction. Every disciple has a part in the work according to his talents, and his place in the rest awaiting the people of God is decided by the way he performs his part. The reward at the end of a life spent in service to God will be found to be unspeakably more than a glorious compensation. Others gone before have found it well to serve God.

A PERFECT MAN.

BY D. LIPSCOMB, JR.

Some one has named as the three perfect men of the Bible, Noah, Job, and Daniel, and from nearly every standpoint the statement is true. Noah got drunk at least once. Some one-there is always some one to explain things-said that before the Flood the juice of the grape did not ferment and form alcohol, and that Noah, drinking his usual draught, was inadverently made drunk. I do not know about all that. After a long, perilous voyage of one hundred and fifty days, from an old world to a new, worried by the growling of bears, the yowling of lions, the screeching of owls, and, maybe, by family squabblings-annoyed by all these things, if he found relief in potent port of fiery sherry, we can easily forgive him. His Maker whom he so faithfully obeyed did, and blessed the sons that had respect to and for him.

Job, too, had his trials-trials unspeakable-loss of property, loss of family, loss of health, and, bitterest of all, the taunts and insults of closest friends. In his misery he cursed his day, but did not curse his Godmaintained his integrity and trust in his God, saying: "Though he slay me, yet will I trust him." And even when the wife, who no doubt had toiled and economized while they were fighting their way from poverty to the affluence in which he is presented to us, said, "Curse God and die," Job from his ashes and potsherds answered: "Thou speakest as one of the foolish women. . . . Blessed be the name of the Lord."

And what a grand and glorious man was Daniel! A vigorous, upright young man who, with his three companions, refused the king's meat and wine and ate the wholesome food of the peasant. Chosen by the despot because of his manly beauty and wisdom, he became a politician without trickery and a lifelong officeholder without seeking-a man without guile. Lions could not harm him, nor plots frighten him; but, true to his God, he, at his open window, worshiped toward that Jerusalem from whence he had come in his childhood and to which it was never given him to return.

But he practiced and prospered under Babylonian, Mede, and Persian-Nebuchadnezzar, Darius, and Cyrus. Nebuchadnezzar, the first who sought world power, and went so mad that he knew not when to come in out of the rain. Belshazzar, a drunken fool, is only remembered to point a moral and adorn a tale. Darius, too, drunk with power, was made a fool of by his courtiers. But Cyrus, clearheaded, forceful, the friend of Daniel, the almost convert to the King of Heaven, stands forth as one whom power could not spoil. On the plain near the ancient city of Pasargadæ stands a massive monument bearing a brief epitaph: "I am Cyrus the king." This is eloquently descriptive of the man. But not like the vicar of Bray, who said that, "let changes of kings be as they may, he was going to be vicar of Bray," whose cassock was reversible -Protestant to-day, Catholic to-morrow.

We can, by reading between the lines, easily see that Daniel's influence brought about the return of the Jews from Babylon. Although age and the duties of his office prevented his return, he could assist his people to go back to the land they loved.

To my mind, to these three great and praiseworthy men there should be added a fourth, and one in all respects their equal and in many their superior; one whose life was so great and pure that I am sure his biographer, Moses, modeled his own thereon. Joseph, the son of Jacob, the son of lovely Rachel, who gave her wonderful beauty to her longed-for and for many years only son, a petted and, maybe, a trifle spoiled child, but a wonder child-a child with dreams of future greatness-dreams which all came true and more. These dreams and the telling of them to his jealous brothers got him in bad with them, and they waited their chance to take it out on daddy's pet. That opportunity unexpectedly came to them at Dothan, somewhere near the caravan route to Egypt. The crueler ones, Simeon and Levi, no doubt leading, wanted to kill him at sight; but Reuben-big-hearted, unstable Reubenpersuaded them to put him in a sinkhole, hoping to rescue him and restore him to his father. And heedless of Joseph, they sat down to eat. By and by a caravan headed toward Egypt came in sight. Moved by the love of money that has ever been a characteristic of the race, Judah said: "Let's sell him. He will bring a pretty penny. He is a likely-looking fellow. We can fix up a tale for the old man." This was done in Reuben's absence, who grieved mightily over it. So Joseph went down into Egypt as a slave, a beautiful slave, to be exposed on the block to the highest bidder. No doubt there was lively bidding for this handsome seventeen-year-old boy. Owners of slaves liked good-looking boys and girls for house servants. Here was one as fair as Antinous or Alcibiades. The auctioneer called attention to his good points-his eyes so clear, his action quick, and his appearance of intelligence. Maybe he had some story given him by the traders of his docility and general handiness on the march. He was knocked off to wealthy Potiphar. The autioneer's statement was soon justified. Joseph, by his wisdom and address and possibly by his skill in cooking, became dear to Potiphar. His father and his grandmother were famous as cooks. Jacob had cooked his brother out of his birthright. He and his mother cooked up a plot and a lamb so nicely that they fooled blind Isaac completely and made sheep taste like savory venison. Joseph, at any rate, pleased his master so well that he made him his major-domo. And he pleased the "missus," too. It is said that Potiphar's wife gave a pink tea or something to her women friends, and during the feast called attention to her butler's (Joseph's) beauty. They all with one voice said: "It is not a man at all; it is an angel." But greater is he who controlleth his spirit than he that taketh a city. And Joseph, in spite of it all, "maintained his integrity." And then she lied and she lied and she lied. There is no fury like a woman scorned. She lied him out of his job. She lied him into prison. She would have lied him to death; but Potiphar, who was a wise old bird, thinking, perhaps, the lady did protest too much, refused to have a slave so valuable killed. But even in prison Joseph prospered. His lot was made as easy as a prisoner's lot can be made. And in this can be seen Potiphar's influence and love for his favorite slave. Joseph is made head turnkey, and the jailer hands over to him care of the prisoners and takes his own ease, knowing that all will be well in his absence.

The story of the butler and the baker forcefully illustrate the whims of a despotic king and the ingratitude of human nature as shown in the forgetfulness of the chief butler. Joseph remained in prison for two years longer, and was remembered at last by the butler when the king had his remarkable dreams. Even then, we might accuse the butler of making favor with the king by suggesting Joseph as an interpreter. Up to this time the greatness of Joseph had been that of the soul. From now on his advancement along all lines is rapid. He becomes really first man in the kingdom-becomes planter, encourager of planters, builder of granaries, and collector of grain. In fact, he corners all the wheat in the kingdom during the first seven years, and during the second seven he makes his sales as he pleases for his king. All the money, all the stock, all the lands became his master's. No such absolutism ever existed before or since. There is no resisting hunger. The Egyptians gave up their all-their rights, their manhood-for bread, life-giving bread. These same Egyptians had no doubt scoffed at the idea of a seven-years' drought. Had the Nile ever failed to bring fertility before? The overflow may at times have been scanty, but always there had been enough water from Assuan to Abukir Bay to insure a reasonable crop. They had been jealous of this foreign favorite. Perhaps they had tried to procure his dismissal from the public service by plots and tales to the king just as in the story of Daniel. But now we can see these haughty nobles coming humbly to the storehouses the hated upstart had built and filled and giving their last pittance for grain. And Joseph, the premier, the grand vizier, second only to the king in the paint of his chariot, the harness of his horses, the color of his clothes, but far and away above the king in ability, in foresight, sat pretty and serenely. Through the fourteen years of abundance and want, never for a moment did he appear to lose his sense of proportion. A succession of changes had made him wise-seventeen years a beloved son, thirteen years a slave, fourteen years a ruler. Through it all we can think of him making his dreams come true. The sun, moon, and stars kotowing to him; the eleven sheaves bowing to his sheaf-enough to turn almost any one's head. In all that land there was nothing labeled "Not for Joseph," for everything was at his command. The high priest's daughter became his wife. High priest's daughter to Hebrew slave! Wonder if the Memphis Daily Sun or the Luxor Times announced it that way!

The story does not lose interest, but rather increases, when his brothers come to buy corn. And eventually the father and all the families migrate to Egypt and settle in the land of Goshen. No other story in the Bible or in other history can furnish a finer illustration of honor or success gained by honor.

The rise of Richard Whittington from poverty to being Lord Mayor of London; of David L. George from a Welsh poorhouse to the control of the greatest, most progressive empire, greater than mighty Rome in her prime, that Rome of which Horace said, "O Sun, in thy course, hast thou seen anything greater than great Rome?" of Ali Courmourgi from charcoal burner to Sultan; of our own Lincoln or Garfield from low estate to the Presidency—these are great examples of courage overcoming difficulties. But no story compares with that of Joseph, the dreamer.

"Mark the perfect man, and behold the upright: for the end of that man is peace."

CHURCH DISCIPLINE—WHAT IS IT FOR?

BY J. G. ALLEN.

Almost every issue of all the church papers has something to say about church troubles. I do not know of any question among us that the brotherhood displays more ignorance upon than that of church discipline.

Every time we hear of trouble, we know that somebody is wrong; but the question is, Who is wrong? Among the writers that are considered sound in the faith, all are agreed on the question of discipline; that as each congregation is independent of all other congregations, it becomes the duty of the elders of every congregation to feed the flock over which they are overseers the pure word of God. Frequently elders are admonished to do their duty, when, lo and behold, a case of discipline comes up, and the elders do their scriptural duty and withdraw from disorderly members; then for elders of some other congregation to invite members thus withdrawn from into their fellowship without their making amends for their wrongs at the place withdrawn from is unscriptural and produces a state of anarchy. If such deeds as this are to pass unnoticed, then away with church discipline! Some one may think that this is all imaginary, but I say nay. I even know of elders' engaging a preacher that had been withdrawn from for adultery by the elders of another congregation, completely ignoring the action of the elders in the case, and of which the elders at the latter place had been informed.

Now, if such a perversion of the Scriptures as this is allowed to pass unnoticed, then what can we expect for the future? Nothing-nothing but confusion and every kind of evil. I believe that we have in the church to-day more godly men and women then ever before-yea, men that are determined to stand by the Book, let come what may; and my object in writing this is to encourage them to a greater effort in maintaining the purity of our holy religion. The greatest obstacles that I have ever met with are from those within the church; but when I remember that our Master was crucified in the house of his friends, I am not surprised when I meet with opposition from brethren falsely so-called. I hope, trust, and pray that the time may speedily come when such characters as are mentioned above will be shunned by all God-loving and God-fearing men and women. I consider it my duty to warn the brotherhood against any preacher that is to tear down the truth, so that they may not be imposed upon by unscrupulous men.

THE CONDITION OF TRUE DISCIPLESHIP. BY S. H. HALL.

In reading from Luke 14: 25-33, you find our Lord's own condition of true discipleship and the scripture that some infidels say we cannot possibly obey. Too, the first thing that strikes your attention is the difference between Christ, the true Prophet, and all false prophets. All false prophets, of whatever age or clime, long for the crowds and the multitudes to follow them. They want the plaudits of men wherever they go. When they hit a town, the first thing is to feel the town's pulse and find the course they can pursue that will give them the largest following. Not so with our Lord. The thing he desired was a one-hundred-per-cent convert. He wanted character.

Please note the circumstances under which our Lord laid down the condition of true discipleship: "And there went great multitudes with him." He was in the zenith of popularity, so far as having the multitudes was concerned. But right in the midst of such, for fear some one would think he or she was indeed a disciple of his when such was not the case, "he turned, and said unto them, If any man come to me, and hate not his father, and mother, and wife, and children, and brethren, and sisters, yea, and his own life also, he cannot be my disciple. And whosoever doth not bear his cross, and come after me, cannot be my disciple." (See Luke 14: 25-27.) Would a false prophet have done a thing of this kind which was destined to thin out his crowds and reduce his number of followers?

But this word "hate" here has given some trouble; hence, we must study it. In Matt. 10: 37 we have a similar statement: "He that loveth father or mother more than me is not worthy of me: and he that loveth son or daughter more than me is not worthy of me." The two words "love" and "hate" in these scriptures are two of the most easily understood words in the Bible, when you let the Bible define and explain its own terms. Yet many have stumbled at this word "hate" and felt it impossible to do what is here declared that we must do, else not be a disciple of our Lord. These words are used in the sense of first and second choice. That is, our Lord teaches that whatever we make first in our hearts, this we love; but all things else are hated, because they, to say the least, have a secondary place in our hearts and lives.

Let me give two examples. Go with me back to Gen. 29, and there you find Jacob, in his flight from Esau, his angry brother, landing in the home of Laban, a relative of his father. Laban had two daughters, Rachel and Leah. It says that "Jacob loved Rachel; and said [to her father, Labanl, I will serve thee seven years for Rachel thy younger daughter." To this Laban agreed, and Jacob got busy as a servant to that man. It says: "And Jacob served seven years for Rachel; and they seemed unto him but a few days, for the love he had to her." Love makes everything easy that we do for the object of it, if it is love in the sense of first choice. But Laban knew the power of love and took advantage of it. So, after Jacob had served his seven years, Laban told him it was contrary to the family custom to give the younger daughter in marriage first; that he could have Leah for the first seven years' service, and if he would serve him seven more he could have Rachel. So he served them-fourteen years to get the woman he loved most. I must admit that license was high in this case; but when love-sure-enough love—is there, you will pay the price. Solomon says: "Love is strong as death." By this he simply means we will die or have the object of our love. He also says: "Many waters cannot quench love, neither can the floods drown it."

But when Jehovah spoke in reference to Jacob's attitude toward Leah and Rachel, he says that he saw that Jacob hated Leah and loved Rachel. What does he mean in such a statement? That Jacob had an unkind, cruel feeling in his heart against Leah? Not a bit of it. He saw that she had a secondary place, to say the least of it, in Jacob's heart. And whatever you make secondary to something else, you are spoken of as hating. The expression, "Jacob have I loved, but Esau have I hated," is another case in point. God had promised Abraham that he would bless all nations in his seed-that is, that the Messiah who should save the world would come from his fleshly lineage. This promise had to run through Jacob and his descendants or Esau and his descendants. God saw that it was best for this line to run through Jacob, and made him first in reference to this; hence, he is spoken of as loving Jacob and hating Esau.

And in the scripture we have before us our Lord means that we must make him first or he will be nothing to us. If we will not put him above father and mother, brother and sister, and even our own lives also, he will not be our Savior. He must have the first place in our hearts or he will have none. And not only is this the meaning, but it is just and reasonable that it should be so.

It is a very easy matter for you to tell when you are making father and mother or some other soul first. When this is the case, they can keep you from doing what you know Christ wants you to do. When you know there is nothing under the sun that can keep you from obeying Christ, doing what he says do, then you may know you are making him first, and that you are indeed a disciple of his. There are people unbaptized who will not be baptized, just because their people object. Their people constitute their god, and they will be lost if not changed. There are people in the church whose god is their belly. Read it in Phil. 3: 18, 19. This grieved Paul greatly. Their own lusts, appetites, and passions they bowed down to, and not to the God of the Bible. There are people in the church who will listen in a way to encourage others when they are backbiting and slandering with their tongue. And do you wonder why? Just to "stand in" with the one who is doing the talking and not offend him. Popularity and the well-wishes of your associates, in such a case, become your god, the first thing in your life, and not whole-hearted obedience to our Lord and Savior.

Yes, we must not only love Christ better than we love father, mother, brother, sister, wife, or children, but even better than our own lives also. Just here the words of Paul in Acts 21: 13 are in point. There at Cesarea, Agabus, a prophet from Judea, took Paul's girdle and bound his hands and his feet, and said: "Thus saith the Holy Ghost, So shall the Jews at Jerusalem bind the man that owneth this girdle," and shall deliver him into the hands of the Gentiles." Luke tells us that when he and the others there heard that, "both we, and they of that place, besought him not to go to Jerusalem." But here is Paul's answer: "What mean ye to weep and to break mine heart? for I am ready not to be bound only, but also to die at Jerusalem for the name of the Lord Jesus."

There is nothing in religion but a farce, a pretense, unless Christ is to be made first in all you do and say. Had we not better ask ourselves the question, seriously, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" in all of our work, and, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to say?" in all of our talking. Give him the throne in your heart. You cannot deceive him. He will have nothing less than this. It has been said: "You can fool all the people a part of the time, and some of the people all the time, but you cannot fool all the people all the time." There is no sense at all in being insincere with your fellows. And your insincerity you cannot always keep hidden. It is worse than foolish to be insincere with our Lord. He knows us. He wants the first place in our hearts. He knows whether he has it or not. If he has it not, he can see nothing in your life as a Christian except hypocrisy. Life is too short and uncertain for this. Let us give him our whole heart and let him rule in all we say and do as the days come and go. You will have joy indeed, if this you do. You can look every soul on earth straight in the eye with a conscience that makes the face bright. But to live otherwise gives you the face of the coward and the hypocrite. "Be thou strong therefore, and show thyself a man." There is but one way this can be done, and that is to crown Christ Lord of all in your heart.

THE NEW YORK MISSION.

BY E. E. SHOULDERS.

"And the Lord spoke unto Moses, saying, Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them. When ye be come into the land which I give unto you, and shall reap the harvest thereof, then ye shall bring a sheaf of the first fruits of your harvest unto the priest; and he shall wave the sheaf before the Lord, to be accepted for your on the morrow after the Sabbath the priest shall wave it." (Lev. 23; 9-11)

It is easy to see the significance of this rite to the Israelites. God was to be associated with everything in their lives, and these offerings were to be brought, first, as a recognition of his goodness; and, second, as a reminder of their dependence upon him. We have outgrown much that was taught to and by the Jew; but we have not outgrown the necessity of associating God with our daily life and acknowledging him as Giver of life and all it holds for us.

Let, then, the harvest festival remind us of the abundant kindness of God in supplying his creatures' needs. Year by year earth's inhabitants are fed, clothed, and warmed. Generations come and go, nations rise and fall, yet God forgets not to send seedtime and harvest, day and night.

The festival reminds us, too, of the necessary connection between the divine benevolence and human effort. Our yearly harvests are the result of God and man working together. It is man with God and God with man that effects the provision for human want. "For we are laborers together with God: ye are God's husbandry, ye are God's building." (1 Cor. 3: 9.)

The festival reminds us also of the relation between seedtime and harvest. God has determined that life shall be lived on this principle: "Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap." From wheat, wheat; from tares, tares; from nothing, nothing.

Money talks. It may say to a man: "Keep me, and I will dry up the fountains of sympathy and benevolence in your soul, and leave your soul barren and destitute. Hoard me up, and I will change the heart of sympathy to a heart of stone. Grasp me more tightly, and I will change your eyes that they will care to look upon nothing that does not contain my image, and so transform your ears that my soft metallic ring will sound louder to them than the cries of widows and orphans and the wail of multitudes. Keep me, clutch me, and I will destroy your sympathy for the race, your respect for the right, and your love and reverence for God. Hold on to me with a death grasp, and I will act as an evil loadstone, attracting all the desires and affections of your soul, and at last sink you into an endless night."

On the other hand, money may say: "Give me away, and I will return in streams of spiritual revenue to your soul. I will act and react; I will bless the one that receives me and the one that gives me. I will buy food for the hungry, raiment for the naked, medicine for the sick, and send the gospel to the benighted, and at the same time purchase joy and peace for the soul that gives me, and a larger heaven for both. The only way you can take me to heaven with you is to give me away in this world. He that keepeth me loseth me, and he that giveth me away to good use keepeth me unto life eternal."

"But godliness with contentment is great gain: for we brought nothing into the world, for neither can we carry anything out; but having food and covering we shall be therewith content. But they that are minded to be rich fall into a temptation and a snare and many foolish and hurtful lusts, such as drown men in destruction and perdition. For the love of money is a root of all kinds of evil; which some reaching after have been led astray from the faith, and have pierced themselves through with many sorrows." (1 Tim. 6: 6-10.)

Now, a few words as to cheerful giving. "The Lord leveth a cheerful giver." Everybody loves a cheerful giver. Even the giver loves himself better if he is cheerful in all his giving. It takes more grace to be worthy of admiration in giving than it does in preaching, praying, or singing. In preaching and prayer we reveal our thoughts and feelings, and in giving we test our sincerity of character.

If the gift is not cheerful, love cannot go with it. Greed and selfishness keep giving from being cheerful. Sacrifice is determined not by the amount you give, but by the amount you have left for yourself after you give. In the spirit world of the future you will reckon with God and be valued on the basis of your cheerful stewardship. Then his love will mean everything to you.

Some Christians feel that they have done their full part when they give fifty cents a week. Perhaps they have. They alone can judge. But perhaps their income would indicate that two dollars, five dollars, or ten dollars per week would be nearer their class. Now, just talk plainly to yourself and decide fairly how much you should pledge the New York mission. I am putting it mildly when I say that we are badly in need of your support. Send your pledges or contributions to George M. McKee, 1991 Broadway, New York, N. Y.

Good audiences and fine services each Lord's day. The church here meets for worship at 226 West Fifty-eighth Street, New York City. Bible study and communion and preaching at ten and eleven o'clock, respectively, every Sunday morning.

Try to at least make one person happy every day, and then in ten years you will have made three thousand six hundred and fifty persons happy, or brightened a small town by your contribution to the fund of general enjoyment.-Sidney Smith.

THE CHURCH AT SPARTA SLANDERED. BY H. LEO BOLES.

There are few evils more grievous than the sin of slander, and there is nothing more heinous than when this sin is deliberately perpetrated. The church at Sparta, Tenn., has suffered many persecutions in days that are past, and now it is called upon again to suffer in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. This time it is done by one J. J. Walker, of Nashville, Tenn.

Sparta is a beautiful little mountain town located on the Highland Rim. It is the county seat of White County. Its citizenry may be classed among the most intelligent and refined of our fair Southland. Its men are strong, chivalrous, and possess a high degree of integrity; its women are beautiful, cultured, and refined. There has been a church of Christ in Sparta for more than seventy-five years. The membership of this church has been composed of some of the leading citizens of the town for these generations.

The church at Sparta has been one of the most influential churches in the whole upland country. It has always had a very large enrollment, making its influence felt throughout the town and surrounding country. The church there has been and still is true to the New Testament pattern. It has been blessed all these years with an eldership which has been loyal to our Lord and aggressive in his work. This has helped to make this church a great blessing to all who have come in touch with its influence.

This church has had some of the best and ablest preachers to instruct it in the truth of God. Among those preachers who have passed to their reward, who have labored with the church at Sparta, are D. Lipscomb, E. G. Sewell, Jesse L. Sewell, J. M. Kidwill, and W. H. Sutton. Brother Sutton lived at Sparta for many years; his home was there when he died. All of the above-named preachers labored with the eldership of the church there and helped to make the church a mighty power for righteousness. E. A. Elam has labored much in word and doctrine with this church. He held seven successive meetings for the church, baptizing hundreds of its members and instructing them in the work and worship of the Lord. Many other gospel preachers have done splendid work with the church at Sparta.

This church has not only maintained the work and worship of the Lord in Sparta, but it has been true to the New Testament teaching in its missionary activities. been instrumental in having the gospel preached all over the county and even in neighboring counties. There are but few congregations in the county that have not been established by the direct or indirect efforts of the church at Sparta. There are more than a dozen churches in the county that can claim the Sparta church as the mother church. Not only has the church at Sparta had the gospel preached in every nook and corner of the county, not only has the church established many congregations in the county, but it has built and helped to build nearly all the church houses in the county where faithful disciples are worshiping. Many evangelists have been encouraged and supported by the church at Sparta. It has been, as every church should be, God's missionary society. Its zeal in missionary work has carried its activities even to other States. It sent Brother Elam to Fort Payne, Ala., in 1908, and established a congregation there. In addition to its establishing churches in Tennessee and other States, it has supported and helped to support a number of gospel preachers even while they were unable to be active in the service of the Master. Some years ago the work of faith and labor of love of this church became so widely known that it was overburdened with appeals for help. Struggling bands of Christians wanting to build a church house would appeal to the Sparta church for help. Disabled and indigent preachers appealed to it for support. These appeals came from far and near and were so numerous that the church could not respond to all of them. I mention this to show that the liberality and good work of the church at Sparta was known beyond the limits of its own county and State.

The church is now active and faithful in the service of the Master. It is not living upon its past record. It has a splendid group of brethren acting as elders and deacons. Its membership runs into the hundreds and is composed of some of the most substantial and influential citizens of the town. Among its membership now are such men as J. R. Tubb, Hon. Harry Camp, John Williams, Enoch Golden, Billy Williams, Uncle Billy Young, Martin Young, Dr. A. F. Richards, Dr. R. B. Thurman, Dr. Gist, Hon. L. D. Hill (Speaker of the Senate), and a host of others. The church is active in having the gospel preached now to its own membership and to others in the county. It would be difficult to find a church anywhere that has a richer history in good deeds and missionary work than does the church at Sparta. These facts are recited, not merely to compliment and eulogize the church at Sparta, but to make a comparison between its long and glorious history and the slanderous report of it by J. J. Walker.

For the published letter of J. J. Walker herein referred to, see F. B. Srygley's article on page 1090.

Notice what Walker has to say about the good people of Sparta and the church there. He says: "Religiously neither Africa nor India presents a greater need." What a dark picture he draws! How deplorable the state of affairs in Sparta! It is the center of dire needs spiritually! Again, he says: "Prejudice and hate is the order of the day." What a strong statement! What a serious charge against the good people there! Again, he says: "It is nothing less than pitiful, inasmuch as it takes one back to the spirit of barbarous days." How sad the condition of the religious people in Sparta! The condition is worse there than in Africa or India; the need for gospel preaching greater than in the heathen lands! What a fertile field for missionary work! What a dark picture he draws! He says that "it was a shock to me" to find such conditions prevailing in Sparta. It would be hard to bring graver charges against a people than Walker has brought against the good people of Sparta. No graver slander could be published against a good people. spiritual needs are greater than the heathen of Africa or India! Their condition carries "one back to the spirit of barbarous days!" "Prejudice and hate is the order of the day!"

Be it remembered that Walker "entered the field at Sparta" to hold a mission meeting there. He went presumably to improve conditions spiritually. Who is this missionary (?) that has "the mountain section so heavily on his soul?" From whence does he come? What does he represent? What message does he have? What was his mission in Sparta? What did he do in Sparta? These are questions which the thoughtful are asking. J. J. Walker is pastor of the Woodland Street Church, Nashville, Tenn. He is preaching for the church which drove out the lamented and venerable E. G. Sewell and other faithful servants of the Lord from the church house at Woodland Street. He and others are enjoying the property which was taken from faithful members of the church of Christ. What was his mission in Sparta? There is an earnest, active, large, faithful church of Christ in the little town. Really, what was Walker's mission to Sparta? What he did may be the answer to the question as to what was his mission. What did he do? He repeated a number of times his cant on Christian unity and then proceeded to take steps to divide the body of Christ. How inconsistent! How wicked and hypocritical to preach Christian unity and practice division among the people of God! He organized, as the editor of the Tennessee Christian calls it, "our youngest church." What is there peculiar about "our youngest church" that does not belong to the church that has long been established at Sparta? "Our youngest church" will use instrumental music in its worship and will become affiliated, I suppose, with the United Missionary Society. These two cardinal things will mark the difference between "our youngest church" and the body of Christ already worshiping in Sparta. That which, in Walker's judgment, made Sparta and its good citizenship so much like the heathen in Africa and India is that there was not a church like "our youngest church," A community or town may be enlightened with a high degree of intelligence and culture, with an old, established, active church in its midst; but if it does not have a little group which has separated from the mother church and is using instrumental music in its worship and affiliated with a missionary society, then this town and its splendid citizenship is to be classed with the heathen of Africa and India. All of its culture and refinement, its knowledge of God's word and its history of good deeds, its splendid record of preaching the gospel and establishing churches count for nothing, if it does not use instrumental music. This is the work that Walker did in Sparta; it is the work that the Tennessee Christian indorses; it is the spirit of the kind of missionary work that the Christian Church is doing in Tennessee and other parts of the country. The church at Sparta is to-day busily engaged in doing the work of the Lord. Sparta and the surrounding country is not a missionary field, but is sending out missionaries. And now Walker goes to Sparta, almost under the very shadow of church buildings, and claims that he is doing missionary work. No greater farce was ever practiced in the name of religion. How good people can tolerate such work in the name of religion, to say nothing of encouraging and supporting it, is beyond my conception.

A FINE MEETING. BY M. C. KURFEES.

The Haldeman Avenue Church, Louisville, Ky., has just closed one of the finest meetings of its history. It began on Sunday morning, October 11, and closed on Wednesday night, October 28, 1925, thus continuing a little over two weeks. The preaching was done by Brother C. R. Nichol, of Clifton, Texas. There were only four additions to the congregation during the meeting, but, besides the inestimable value of four human souls, there are other considerations which enter into and determine the value of a meeting. For the good it may do, I mention some of the merits of this meeting.

First of all, in point of fidelity to the word of God, the preaching was first-class. Both in the pulpit and out of it, the manner of Brother Nichol is modest, unassuming, and unpretentious; but his clear, concise, and carefully studied presentation of the truth is forcible and convincing, so that thoughtful hearers soon find themselves face to face with a line of teaching backed by the word of God and by invincible logic. As a rule, he is happy both in the selection of his themes and in his style of treating them. He makes no effort at mere oratory; but his line of thought comes, nevertheless, with an eloquent appeal both to the intellect and to the heart, making a deep and serious impression on his hearers. His illustrations are usually felicitous and striking; and whether his hearers agree with him or not, they are compelled to see the point of his remarks.

His kind but rigid and fearless exposure of denominationalism, with all the needless opinions which cause division in the body of Christ, including the recent speculative movement with its hurtful ambitions and unholy strife, was not only timely and to the point, but was a complete everthrow of all such unfortunate and misguided adventures among the children of God. Though marked by rare pleasantness, both in his sermons and in the social circle, the speaker never deals in levity or frivolousness. In his exposure of error, he is courteous and kind. With relentless logic and argumentation he drives his points home, and is firm and uncompromising in his contention for what he believes to be the truth, but with it all he maintains a deferential bearing toward all who hear him and toward those of whom he speaks.

According to expressions which have come to me personally, the members of the Haldeman Avenue Church equally with their minister hold him in the highest esteem and are unstinted in their praise of both the man and his message. We rejoice over having him in the meeting and over his faithful work among us.

The song service was conducted by Brother A. J. Veteto, of Memphis, Tenn. He has a good knowledge of music and is an excellent leader of song. He made a fine impression upon our people, who were soon convinced that they had made no mistake in getting him to assist in the meeting. In fact, it seems to be the general impression that we were not only fortunate in having, in point of ability, the right man in the pulpit and the right man to lead the singing, but that both of them are good men, being exemplary in both word and deed. I most gladly and heartily recommend them to the churches wherever it is desired to have the gospel of Christ set forth in sermon and song.

OUR MESSAGES.

Married, at 8:30 P.M., Friday, October 30, at 2123 Hubbard Avenue, Detroit, Mich., William E. Rushing to Sarah Bradley, W. S. Long officiating.

- F. L. Paisley, Chicago, Ill., October 26: "Christians coming to Chicago will find a warm welcome at the Central congregation, 309 Capitol Building. The congregation has had its share of ripples, caused by the hobbies of Louisville and Indianapolis, as well as smaller ones, but conditions are now much better. We are conforming to the New Testament pattern in work and worship. A mission has been started in South Chicago."
- A. K. Ramsey, Glenmora, La., October 30: "The readers of the Gospel Advocate are interested in soul saving, whether it be in Tennessee or China, and in mission work everywhere. Louisiana is mostly a mission field, kept up by hard work and sacrifices on the part of some. Yet the work carries on, and some are being saved and others are being trained for service. About half a dozen preachers are in the State, with little of the work self-sustaining."
- L. R. Wilson, Jackson, Tenn., October 24: "C. R. Nichol has just signed propositions to meet Ben M. Bogard (Baptist) in debate at Hickory Ridge, Ark. The debate will be sometime in December, perhaps. With Brother Nichol's ability and his knowledge of Mr. Bogard as a debater, there is every reason to expect a complete victory for the truth. All who would like to see this debate published in book form will please write to Brother Nichol at once and tell him so. Let's have it, brethren."
- L. R. Wilson, Jackson, Tenn., October 23: "Our new meetinghouse here, on Shannon and Chester Streets, is finished, and our initial services in it last Sunday were well attended. Our first series of meetings in our new home will begin on November 1, with Brother Pullias (son of C. M. Pullias) leading the singing and the writer doing the preaching. All who may be passing this way are cordially invited to worship with us. Our house is located one block west and one block south of Court Square. My telephone number is 765."
- F. O. Howell, Jackson, Tenn., October 26: "I am to begin a meeting at Amite, La., November 8, and after that a debate with T. F. Lowery, Missionary Baptist, of Parsons, Tenn., December 1, at Wildersville, Tenn. Those desiring to attend the debate from a distance should write Dr. D. W. Bradfield, Route 2, Wildersville, Tenn. The debate is to be west of town at the Pleasant Grove Baptist Church. I am to have a debate with John R. Clark, Missionary Baptist, near Toone, Tenn., in the near future, unless the Baptists 'fly the coop.' Our meeting here resulted in seven baptisms and one restoration. G. A. Dunn, Jr., did the preaching, and it was well done. Two of those baptized made the confession and were baptized by C. M. Sitman, of Amite, on Sunday, October 25. The meeting was greatly hindered by rain."

J. Pettey Ezell, Cookeville, Tenn., November 4: "The Celina meeting closed last night, with a total result of fifty-five baptisms and sixteen restorations. Despite the almost continuous rain and snow, every service was well attended. On account of the crowds every night, the services began from fifteen to twenty minutes before time. L. L. Yeagley lives and labors at Celina and in Clay County, and is loved for his work's sake. C. M. Pullias is to begin with us on November 8."

J. S. Holland, Bogart, Ga., November 6: "Charles Tidwell, of Rome, Ga., with Professor Reavis as song leader, recently held a meeting here. As a result, six charter members took their stand for the New Testament church. R. D. Smith, Bonham, Texas, November 3: "I had a very pleasant visit with the church in Topeka, Kan., extending from the fourth Sunday in October to the middle of the week following. I was impressed with the faithfulness of the band of worshipers there. Cled Wallace was expected there to begin a meeting last Lord's day, and they were looking forward to a splendid meeting. Frank Grammer was expected to assist in the song service. The meetings with the church in Bonham on Sunday were all good, and we confidently expect excellent results from our efforts in the work here."

Hugh H. Miller, Wichita Falls, Texas, November 6: "I was glad to note in the last issue of the Gospel Advocate the special campaign to enlarge the circulation. It should be made a success. I will try to send in a few subscriptions in the near future. I attribute much of the success of the various kinds of Adventists to their diligence in spreading their literature, and none is more subtle and attractive to an innocent reader than theirs. The more zealous the proponents of false doctrines become in spreading their claims, the greater becomes the need of the stabilizing influence of the Gospel Advocate and other such papers of unquestioned loyalty to the one faith in every home. I preached to good audiences at Dawson, Texas, last Lord's day. I will preach for the Corsicana congregation until the doctors permit Brother Sewell to take the work. We are glad to announce that he is much improved at this writing."

Gus Nichols, Cordova, Ala., November 4: "There were six baptized in our good meeting at Antioch on Sand Mountain last week."

J. D. Boyd was with the congregation worshiping at Twenty-second Avenue, North, this city, last Lord's day, preaching at both services.

C. W. De Armond, Drakesboro, Ky., November 3: "I was at Powderly on the first Sunday in November and preached for them. One was baptized and one came from another congregation."

Claud F. Witty, Detroit, Mich., November 7: "Two additions at the West Side Central Church last Sunday. John T. Smith is in a meeting at Hamilton Boulevard Church, with five added to date,"

R. E. L. Taylor, Decherd, Tenn., November 4: "The meeting at Christian Chapel, near Dongola, Ill., closed with good interest in spite of the rainy and snowy weather. There were two baptized. This congregation is a good, live congregation."

Willie Hunter, Tompkinsville, Ky., November 2: "The work moves on here with good interest. I preached twice yesterday and conducted one funeral. We had two additions—one by baptism and one reclaimed. I am to begin a meeting four miles out from town next Lord's day."

Ben West, Stephenville, Texas, November 3: "Sunday was a day of happy results, with eleven to come forward, part of whom are new members moving here. One hundred and five at the hour of prayer Wednesday night with Bibles in hand. We are studying the Bible, not about the Bible."

H. C. Shoulders, Bowling Green, Ky., November 6: "I was at Rich Pond, Ky., the next Sunday after I was in the Gospel Advocate office. I distributed some copies of the Advocate and asked them to subscribe. I think I will get several. Some three or four told me they were going to take it."

George W. Miller, Carney, Okla., November 5: "I closed my meeting at Garfield, Ark., with good crowds and fine interest. I will go to Cato, Mo., for my next meeting. I think the Gospel Advocate is the best paper in the brother-hood. Inclosed you will find two dollars to pay up my subscription."

J. D. Mathews, Davenport, Okla., November 1: "I preach at Bethel and at Stroud. We have a nice congregation at Bethel, and they own their house. We also have a small congregation at Stroud. We have no congregation in Davenport. The 'digressives' have a house here, but they are very weak."

E. Gaston Collins, Meaford, Ontario, Canada, November 3: "The weather was fine last Sunday. Our meetings were good. Good audiences at both Collingwood and Thornbury. One confession at the latter place. Baptism at Meaford at night, at which time we had a large audience. A good one was also reported for the morning meeting."

J. E. Black, Memphis, Tenn., November 4: "In the Highland Heights church of Christ there is a steady growth. Five took membership with us last Sunday. Good attendance, with fine interest at all the services. Our possibilities are great and the outlook the brightest. We confidently expect this congregation to be both numerically and spiritually strong."

J. R. Stockard, Milan, Tenn., November 2: "Since last report I have held meetings at the following places: Cox's Chapel, no additions; Cades and Whitthorne, no additions; Bogota, ten additions. While at Bogota I signed propositions to debate with the Holiness people; but the debater, Mr. Henshaw, has not yet signed. I enjoy the Gospel Advocate each week."

W. R. Yowell, Gainesville, Texas, November 2: "One week ago G. A. Dunn, Jr., was with us at the Central church of Christ, morning and evening, and Vernon Wood, Jr., in the afternoon. On that day I preached for the congregation at Center Vale, with splendid interest manifested. Yesterday I was at home again, and we had two splendid audiences. Best wishes to the Gospel Advocate!"

C. G. Vincent, Detroit, Mich., November 6: "I fully approve your statement of policy in a recent issue of the Gospel Advocate. It sets forth the true purpose and work of a Christian journal, it seems to me. John T. Smith and Elam Derryberry are with us in a meeting to continue until November 15. Four additions to date. Good singing, high-grade preaching, large audiences, and splendid cooperation. The results, visible and otherwise, we leave to the 'Lord of the harvest.' This is the church with which W. D. Campbell, now with the Central Church, Fort Worth, Texas, labored so long and faithfully."

T. C. Fox, Carpenter, Miss., November 4: "I have just closed a good meeting which was held in O. B. Dodd's home on a cotton plantation five miles from Moorhead, Miss. The attendance and interest were fine. I will be here at Carpenter for a few services. I will be in the Mississippi work until the first of December, after which I shall be glad to arrange for work at any time or place I may of service to the church."

A. McGary, Willis, Texas, November 3: "Sincere congratulations to you for the splendid things I'm reading from your pen. One must be prompted by the spirit of Christ and actuated by real Christian courage, in order to criticize the teachings of a dead man whose memory is held in the high esteem by the millions, as Mr. Bryan's is, as you criticized his teachings. How few would dare to do it! May God ever bless you."

J. T. Clark, Cowan, Tenn., November 3: "Since my last report I have held meetings as follows: Tanner, Ala., four baptisms, three restorations; Oak Grove, Franklin County, Tenn., one baptism; Lanton, Maury County, no additions; Cane Creek, near Petersburg, four baptisms, three restorations; Big Springs, White County, nine baptisms, seven restorations. I am now settled down to regular work with the church of Christ in Cowan and that in Tracy City. The work is fine in both places."

City. The work is fine in both places."

On Sunday, November 29, from 7:30 to 9:30 P.M., Central Standard time, there will be a special program in the Pearl and Bryan Streets Church, Dallas, Texas, which will be sent on the air over WFAA, Dallas, Texas. From 7:30 to 8:30 there will be special singing. The sermon, by E. M. Borden, of Oklahoma City, Okla., will begin at 8:30 and continue until 9:30. On Monday night, November 30, Brother Borden will begin a series of lessons on "The Kingdom of Christ," which will continue for four nights."

H. M. Pathorford, Lealesqueille, Els. November 4: "Our

H. N. Rutherford, Jacksonville, Fla., November 4: "Our church building is located at Margaret and Myra Streets, on the Murray Hill car line. Inquire for the Riverside Park church of Christ, a nice, plain brick building facing Riverside Park. The hours of services on Lord's day are: Bible study, 9:45 A.M.; preaching and Lord's Supper, 11 A.M.; preaching at 7:45 P.M. Prayer, praise, teaching, and exhortation, Wednesday, 7:45 P.M. Elam Derryberry and I were in a good meeting at Green's Chapel, near Horse Cave, Ky., October 11-22. Four were baptized into the one body. There have been four additions in the last two weeks here in Jacksonville, and the church is working in harmony and ready unto every good work."

working in harmony and ready unto every good work."

J. G. Allen, Muskogee, Okla., November 4: "Our protracted meeting at C and Kankakee Streets came to a close last night with five additions, making eleven in all during the meeting. C. McClung, of Fort Worth, Texas, was our preacher, and we all consider this the best meeting that has ever been held by Christian people in this city. There was never more opposition than we had; but thank God, he stood with us and the result was great. The weather was a great handicap, besides two other opposition meetings. Brother McClung is a noble soul and never fails to declare 'the whole counsel of God.' Our congregation has been strengthened with twenty-one new members in the last six weeks. Brethren, pray for us."

A. B. Lipscomb, Valdosta, Ga., November 5: "We received an unusually warm welcome upon our arrival here. I am making a house-to-house canvass of the membership and visiting the sick and the poor generally. The church is planning to extend its influence along many lines. At the first opportunity I hope to visit some of the neighboring congregations. This growing city is called 'The Gateway to Florida.' There is an incessant stream of money and pleasure seekers. All types of humanity are in line, besides all types of cars and dogs. The man who lives in 'the house by the side of the road' has a thrill never experienced before. Would to God there were such a multitude traveling heavenward in quest of the riches that fade not away."

W. F. Lemmons, Evansville, Ind., November 3: "I find the situation bad. The church, composed of twenty-five or thirty members, meets in a hall. Several months ago some of the members, holding to the Sommer idea, split off and began meeting at another place. A lack of leadership is one of the great troubles. This is our showing in a city of some seventy-five thousand population. Compare that with Nashville and other cities of this number. If I could back myself up with finance, I would get a good tent and stay right here until I thoroughly evangelized this city and country. I would pitch it in all parts of the city and preach the old Jerusalem gospel and permanently plant the cause of Christ. The spirit is willing, but the finance is weak. I shall preach here next Lord's day."

Conducted for a half century by D. Lipscomb, E. G. Sewell, F. D. Srygley, and J. C. McQuiddy.

J. J. WALKER A MISSIONARY TO THE HEATHEN.

BY F. B. SRYGLEY.

I clip the following from the Tennessee Christian, "official organ " of our " transgressive " brethren:

A NEW CHURCH AT SPARTA.

We are taking the liberty of giving to our readers a private letter from J. J. Walker, of Nashville, which brings the good news that he has just organized a fine new congregation at Sparta. We knew that he was going up there to hold a meeting, and we knew also that, if he went, a new church would be the result. We are very happy over this, and shall certainly take the first opportunity to pay our youngest church a visit. Brother Walker's letter follows.—Editor.

NASHVILLE, TENN., September 22, 1925.

Mr. M. D. Clubb, Dyersburg, Tenn .:

My Dear Brother Clubb: I can't refrain from writing you this A.M. The mountain section is so heavily on my soul. With its fine towns commercially, yet religiously neither Africa nor India presents a greater need. Prejudican of the commercial property of the commer neither Africa nor India presents a greater need. Prejudice and hate is the order of the day. It is nothing less than pitiful, inasmuch as it takes one back to the spirit of barbarous days. I tell you, as it was a shock to me, so it will be to others under like circumstances. I entered the field at Sparta, lying at the base of the beautiful Cumberlands, a magnificent little town midway between Mc-Minnville and Cookeville, Livingston, our beloved, a bit to the north. For ten days we preached, baptizing sixteen, and having eighteen others to unite with them. The thirty-four are going to erect a new church house soon and will need the fellowship of the State brotherhood. I know you and your magnificent people will help, won't you? Because of location this point is vital. J. H. Potter, banker; J. E. Matlock, merchant; Herschel Mitchell, merchant; Weymond Mitchell, manufacturer; Professor Wallace, principal of the city school; and others of like prominence are among the charter members. The State of Tennessee cannot furnish better material, substantial and dependable, than these who came at Sparta.

Brother Clubb, will you not call your brethren's attention to the new venture for Jesus in our State, that they may help? Please send greetings to any of the above. It will, coming from you, encourage so much. I will be with them Thursday night to complete the organization and fix the building date.

Asking for both prayers and suggestions of all who are interested in the kingdom's extension, I am,

Most earnestly yours,

J. J. WALKER.

It seems from the foregoing that the brother was trying to control himself, but he could not "refrain from writing" to Brother Clubb that very morning, the mountain section was "so heavily on my soul," I am not surprised that it was heavy on his soul. One should load his wagon according to the size of his team. If Brother Walker tries to carry the whole mountain section on his soul, he is liable to break it down.

There are "fine towns" up there "commercially," "yet religiously" they are in the midst of a bad condition! The reader has heard of the "Dark Continent," but Africa with all its ignorance and heathenism " presents no greater need." India, worshiping her heathen gods, is in no greater need than this same mountain section which is "heavily on my soul." The trouble may be with the gentleman's imagination. Much of the load he is trying to carry on his soul is only imaginary. I have spent much time in the section above mentioned, and I never thought of either Africa or India as a fit comparison for it. I would not wish to make any invidious comparison, but I think there is more ignorance per capita on the Bible in the city of Nashville than there is in Sparta, and I would not be afraid to narrow the comparison down to Brother Walker's church. I can pick men out of the church of Christ in Sparta and find a dozen that know more about the Bible than does J. J. Walker himself.

"Prejudice and hate is the order of the day." I never encountered such an abundance of "prejudice and hate" when I was there. I am afraid the brother stirred up some of this, or he was like the man that was drunk and thought every one else was drunk. The brother must have had some of these things in his own heart, or else he was doing something which caused him to expect "prejudice and hate." I guess deep down in his heart he knew he had no business in Sparta, trying to cause trouble in the church there over a thing which he himself admits is not necessary to scriptural worship.

But the people of Sparta treated him so badly that it was "pitiful, inasmuch as it takes one back to the spirit of barbarous days." They must have been rough on his poor burdened soul. They shocked him, and by this letter to the Tennessee Christian he is trying to shock his brethren all over the State. Shocking! Shocking to be where Brother Walker has been in Sparta, Tenn.! Out of all that shocking mass of heathenism and barbarism the brother did manage to gather in a few, such as "J. H. Potter, banker; J. E. Matlock, merchant; Herschel Mitchell, merchant; Weymond Mitchell, manufacturer; Professor Wallace, principal of the city school; and others of like prominence." That is a good round number of nice, decent men to gather together in a heathenish, barbarous town, as Brother Walker represents Sparta to be. My heart goes out to Professor Wallace to have to teach these little barbarians; but if he will keep on trying to divide the church in Sparta, Brother Walker will give him a great name, and perhaps that will compensate him for his sacrifice.

When I read this letter of J. J. Walker and saw how he felt toward the mountain section, and Sparta in particular, I naturally began to search for a cause. I here state some facts as I remember them without looking up the records. Our brother, L. D. Hill, lives at Sparta, and he was Speaker of the Senate of the last Legislature, in which the anti-evolution bill was passed. I remember reading his speech before the Senate in favor of the Bible as opposed to the modern theory of evolution, which is only a guess of some of the scientists. It will be remembered, also, at the time this same J. J. Walker was president (or something of the kind) of the "Ministers' Alliance" of this city, and he indorsed a petition asking the Legislature not to pass the anti-evolution bill. Is it possible that this has anything to do with Brother Walker's feelings toward the entire town of Sparta? If it does, I must say that J. J. Walker is "barking after a cold trail." There is one thing I can say of the section herein mentioned: that they have, as a class, more love for the Bible and less respect for a preacher that doubts it than any other part of our beloved State.

The brother closes his beautiful (?) letter to his Brother Clubb in these words: "Asking for both prayers and suggestions of all who are interested in the kingdom's extension," etc. This includes me, as I am "interested in the kingdom's extension." But what does the establishment of a church in Sparta, where there has been a church of Christ since before the Civil War, have to do with the extension of the kingdom? Has the kingdom of Christ never been in Sparta simply because the church of Christ there has never used an instrument of music in their worship? Has it come to the point in Brother Walker's mind that those who do not use a musical instrument or indorse the unauthorized missionary societies are not in the kingdom? It must be so, as he is extending the kingdom by establishing a new church in Sparta. There is one of the best churches in Sparta to be found in all the State. It is composed of the best class of men and women. There are some of as liberal, faithful men in that church as can be found anywhere. They are liberal with their means; they rend the Bible; they meet on the first day of the week to break bread; in fact, they do everything, so far as I know, that the apostles require. But because they do not use an organ in their worship they are not in the kingdom! My suggestion to Brother Walker is to quit trying to stir up trouble over a thing which is not commanded in the New Testament and preach "Christ, and him crucified," as a change. This may not build up his party or make of him a martyr, but it will extend the kingdom. Let the prother quit trying to force his fads and fancies on the eople and " preach the word," and the kingdom will grow, s certainly as a crop can be raised from the seed. "Now he parable is this: The seed is the word of God." (Luke : 11.)

It will be noted that Brother Clubb, the editor, is happy ver the fact that "a fine new congregation" has been tablished in Sparta. Some men are happy when their arty seems to prevail, even if it does so at the expense d the truth. These erring brethren make much out of wat they call "Christian union," and still cause a divisn everywhere they can, and feel "very happy" over it. "Voe unto the world because of occasions of stumbling! fe it must needs be that the occasions come; but woe to the man through whom the occasion cometh!" (Matt. 18 7.) It is a pity that those fine brethren that Brother Wiker mentioned could not have been satisfied with " hat is written;" but if they would not, it is better that thy be off to themselves where they cannot keep up trible in the congregation. It is good to have a receptaclein which objectionable things can be placed, rather thi have the health and comfort of the family injured. Bull means, Brother Clubb, make your youngest church a sit; for if Brother Walker truthfully represents their subundings, they will need your encouragement and help.

this is a fair sample of the kind of material that Brher Clubb thinks should find a place in a paper, I will new envy him as an editor.

hen God says one thing in the Bible and your preacher or jest says another, you cannot get on the fence.

IMPUGNMENT OF MOTIVES.

BY E. A. ELAM.

Last week attention was called to the sin of slander and to the Lord's condemnation of it.

Asaph declares that which God says to the wicked, classing slander with other wicked deeds:

Thou givest thy mouth to evil, and thy tongue frameth deceit. Thou sittest and speakest against thy brother; thou slanderest thine own mother's son. (Ps. 50: 19, 20.)

To sit and speak against and to slander a brother is a woeful sin. How can one, claiming to be a child of God, find it in heart to engage in such mischief-making and sinful practice?

On the contrary, all should pray with David:

Let the words of my mouth and the meditation of my heart be acceptable in thy sight, O Jehovah, my rock, and my redeemer. (Ps. 19: 14.)

Speaking of his uprightness, David says:

A perverse heart shall depart from me: I will know no evil thing. Whose privily slandereth his neighbor, him will I destroy. Him that hath a high look and a proud heart will I not suffer. (Ps. 101: 4, 5.)

Let us follow this example:

I call to remembrance my song in the night: I commune with mine own heart; and my spirit maketh diligent search. (Ps. 77: 6.)

Is there enough self-examination? Is there not too much examination of others; too much picking others to pieces; too much pulling at the motes in the eyes of others; too much trusting in oneself as righteous, and setting others at naught? Is there enough lying awake at night with one's own conscience, and making diligent search?

Stand in awe, and sin not: commune with your own heart upon your bed, and be still. (Ps. 4: 4.)

Becoming angry, one should not sin by thinking, saying, or doing anything unchristian—that is, contrary to the will of God. (See Eph. 4: 26.)

Try your own selves, whether ye are in the faith; prove your own selves. Or know ye not as to your own selves, that Jesus Christ is in you? unless indeed ye be reprobate. (2 Cor. 13: 5.)

The Authorized Version says "examine" yourselves; but "try your own selves" is stronger. It means, put your own selves to the test by the divine standard. Is there not far too little of this done, and too much trying the other man? "In the faith" does not mean holding to the right theory, being a partisan; but holding to the teaching of Christ in faithful practice-in sincerity and purity of heart and holiness of life. Is there not too much effort to prove that others are reprobates, and not enough fear that we may become such? Paul declares that he was no reprobate, but proved he was not by his life and teaching. Personal piety, everyday godliness, holiness of life, the self-examination and the stirring experiences which the New Testament requires, especially at this time amid so much strife, contention, charges of wrong, and unchristian utterances, would accomplish great

Keep thy heart with all diligence; for out of it are the issues of life. Put away from thee a wayward mouth, and perverse lips put far from thee. (Prov. 4: 23, 24.)

It is my own heart, not the heart of another, I must keep with all diligence. It is my wayward mouth and perverse lips, not such a mouth and lips of another, I must put far away from me. I cannot do that without great diligence and constant and earnest prayer.

A full brother to slander is the impugnment of another's motives. Talebearing, circulating evil reports, meddling in other men's matters, slander, and impugnment of the motives of others are members of the same ungodly family, having sprung from the same evil source.

Motive incites to action; it is that which causes motion; it prompts words and deeds. One has some motive in writing, speaking, and in performing any other deed. This motive may be evil, or pure and holy. The motive may be avowed, or it may be plainly seen by deeds or learned from words. Men do not gather grapes of thorns or figs of thistles; and "by their fruits ye shall know them." One may not desire to conceal motives, either good or evil. But impugnment of motive is wrong. Impugnment comes from a word which means to fight. Impugnment of motives is to attack the motives of others; it is to question their motives; it is to attribute their good deeds to sinister or evil motives. Can anything be worse than this, so far as right between brethren or between man and man is conserved?

The study of the following passage will help to avoid the impugnment of motives:

Judge not, that ye be not judged. For with what judgment ye judge, ye shall be judged: and with what measure ye mete, it shall be measured unto you. (Matt. 7: 1.)

Also, it will be well to study the entire fourteenth chapter of Romans, in which Paul asks: "Who art thou that judgest the servant of another?" "Let us not therefore judge one another any more: but judge ye this rather, that no man put a stumblingblock in his brother's way, or an occasion of falling." "So then let us follow after things which make for peace, and things whereby we may edify one another." "One man hath faith to eat all things," knowing that all meats are clean, which they are, except to the one who esteems them to be unclean and eats "with offense." If, therefore, the brother who is weak refuses to eat meat, and insists upon eating vegetables only, he is to be received and to be treated as a brother; but he is to raise no disturbance in the church over his vegetable diet. He is to be received, "yet not for decision of scruples." "Let each man be fully assured in his own mind" as to whether his diet shall be vegetables only, or meat also; but the vegetarian must never attempt to force or urge others to accept his scruples as to diet. Neither must brethren of more faith attempt to compel him to eat meat; neither must they impugn his motive. If he never learns better and never tries to force his scruples upon others, he can continue to eat only herbs all his life, remain a Christian, and be saved finally in heaven. He is not to be condemned by brethren on account of his vegetable diet. If, on the other hand, by the example of others' eating meat (which to them is not wrong) he is influenced to eat it in violation of his own conscience, and thus eat with offense, the others should refrain from eating it for his sake. From this we see how to deal with one another in love, to suffer long and be kind, and yet not to impugn the motives of others, or to abuse them.

Jesus cast a demon out of a blind and dumb man so that the man spoke and saw, and the multitudes were amazed. The Pharisees said he cast out demons by Beelzebub, the prince of demons. Jesus answered that charge by saying it could not be true, because Satan would not cast out Satan, and thus array himself against himself and divide his kingdom, for a kingdom divided against itself cannot stand. Satan has too much sense for that. Jesus had entered the house of Satan, the strong man, had spoiled his goods, and was casting out demons by the Spirit of God. He condemned his accusers for impugning his motives—that is, for attributing the good work he was doing to Satan. He added: "Ye offspring of vipers, how can ye, being evil, speak good things? for out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh." (See Matt. 12: 22-37.)

"If they have called the master of the house Beelzebub, how much more them of his household!" If the good works of Jesus were attributed to Satan, his followers now should not be surprised at being slandered and at having their motives impugned.

The point I would emphasize here is that those who are evil cannot speak good things. Those whose motives are evil, and who, therefore, are governed by such motives, cannot attribute righteous and pure motives to others in doing good. As the false accusers of Jesus thought only evil of him, they could see no good motive in anything he did. The ones who speak evil of others, first think evil of them.

Every man must be considered honest, sincere, and conscientious in matters of religion and in other things, until he has shown himself to be otherwise. The Golden Rule applies. All should know that because a man is sincere and honest in his convictions, his sincerity and honesty do not make his conceptions right; yet his motives are not to be impugned and he is not to be denounced as a hypocrite.

Above all, the one who impugns the motives of others is more greatly and more seriously hurt than the ones whose motives have been impugned. The one who impugns motives is the sinner and the sufferer, and the one who must account to God for the wrong done others.

LAST WORD FROM WASHINGTON.

BY T. B. LARIMORE.

Notwithstanding we regret to leave Washington and many friends here whom we love and who love us, we have decided to "go West and grow up with the country," as Horace Greeley advised young men to do many long years ago. We are both loath to leave Washington City. If you have read even half I have written for publication about Washington, you have both right and reason to believe we love the capital of our country; but our love for Washington is a minor matter—most decidedly so—compared with our love for the saints and faithful here, and our friends and loved ones here are by no means limited to the number on our church roll. We have spent three delightful years here, and we believe we have just as faithful friends out of the church as in it.

The Washington congregation is not perfect, of course; but it has many members who are earnest, true, zealous Christians, who understand their duty and sincerely strive to do it, who are faithful in attendance on all the services of the church, conscientious in contributing of the means with which God has blessed them to carry on the work of the congregation-in other words, who are "seeking first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness;" and, as a result of such a course, God will add unto them the material things they may need. "But seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you." (Matt. 6: 33.) And do know some of our members contribute one-tenth of al they receive to the cause of Christ just as regularly and conscientiously as the Mormons do to their cause; an they (the Mormons) consider only nine-tenths of what they receive theirs. The other tenth they consider the Lord's, and they withdraw fellowship from a member fe withholding any part of the Lord's tenth just as prompt as for theft or highway robbery. The Mormons disciplidefaulting members. We do not.

When we decided to go West, across the continent, beautiful Berkeley by the bay, three thousand miles aw as the bird flieth, two of our friends—two of the four gis with whom we have had a home in Washington three year, girls as fine as the finest, as good as the best, Miss Hilda and Louise Barnes—said: "Where you go, we ;; where you stop, we stop; where you stay, we stay." As they say yet. Accordingly, when you read this, u may know we four are on our way to the "golden hay shore" where Berkeley, the home of the University of California, is.

We are glad these sweet girls are going with us, fowe could not live in their happy home three years, as we we done, and not learn to love them.

As is customary when and where the relation betwen preacher and people is as it should be, scores of the nnbers of the church, and many others, stormed us Friday evening, October 30—a very stormy evening, by the way—and gave us a delightful time, the substantial gifts they bore adding to the pleasure their appreciated visit gave us.

When it became known that we were going to California, calls began to come, and they are coming still; consequently, we now have New Orleans, Sherman, Los Angeles, Fresno, Armona, and Berkeley on our list. We leave Washington City at 9:35 P.M., November 2. When we shall reach Berkeley, I do not know; but I do know we shall be with delightful people in a delightful town while we stay there. Even though we change homes no more after settling down in Berkeley, we expect to go back occasionally to my native land, East Tennessee, where the heavens caress the mountains and the mountains kiss the stars.

I pray the richest blessings of the Lord on all the saints and faithful in Washington City, trusting that they may have the best of all good things always.

P.S. My Washington City work closed last night—Sunday night, November 1, 1925—with the baptism of one of the prettiest, sweetest, and best of Washington's pretty girls—young women—Miss Annie Lee Smith. I hope and pray that she may live a long and happy life in the service of the Lord, and after that may enter into the rest that remains to the children of God, and be unspeakably happy forever over there.

WHAT I SAW ON A CHURCH BULLETIN.

BY F. W. SMITH.

It has been the custom of the writer, since he entered upon the Christian profession, to observe somewhat closely the public announcements of religious matters.

Usually the character of subject for a religious discourse is a fair index to the subject-matter of the sermon, and from this one can pretty well judge beforehand what will be the nature of the address. For instance, if a preacher identified with any one of certain religious bodies announces that he will preach on the subject of "conversion," we may be assured that the discourse will abound with the doctrine of mysticism. There will be much said about the work of the Holy Spirit, without one quotation of holy scripture properly applied.

When preachers, and especially popular evangelists, who know little of God's revelation to man, desire to attract large audiences, they select and advertise "catchy" and sensational themes. Of course, such preachers, using a trite saying, fail to "deliver the goods;" but the public, like so many of those things P. T. Barnum said were born every minute, continues to bite. Hence, the same preacher with his "claptrap" methods can induce a return of the same audience to be "fooled" again, and, as a result of such preaching, many souls become disgusted with the subject of religion.

Passing by a place of religious worship a few days ago, I noted the bulletin board with an announcement as follows: "If your religion means much to you, so live that it may mean much to others." As I read and re-read the subject, certain reflections came to my mind, the first of which was,

A SPLENDID SUBJECT.

While revolving this thought in my mind, certain biblical characters came before me—viz., Andrew, Philip, and the Samaritan woman at Jacob's well.

When John the Baptist said, "Behold, the Lamb of God, that taketh away the sin of the world" (John 1: 29), two of John's disciples immediately followed Jesus, and after spending several hours with Jesus in his lodging place, Andrew went in search of his brother, Simon, to tell him the good news—viz.: "We have found the Messiah." It seems to me that all who profess to have found Jesus precious to their souls should do as Andrew—go and tell others about it. In this way the gospel will spread and they will be blessed.

On the next day Philip of Bethsaida, the home of Andrew and Simon Peter, began to follow Jesus, and he went in search of Nathanael with the news: "We have found him, of whom Moses in the law, and the prophets, wrote, Jesus of Nazareth, the son of Joseph." (John 1: 43-45.)

When Jesus revealed himself to the woman at Jacob's well, she became so overjoyed that in her haste to tell the good news she left the waterpots at the well (John 4: 25-28) and rushed into the city with the message: "Come, see a man, who told me all things that ever I did: can this be the Christ?" (Verse 29.) The result of this message is thus stated: "They went out of the city, and were coming to him." (Verse 30.) And from what the Savior saw he uttered the words: "Say not ye, There are yet four months, and then cometh the harvest? behold, I say unto you, Lift up your eyes, and look on the fields, that they are white already unto harvest." (Verse 35.)

Suppose that all who profess to be Christians should have the gospel message burning in their souls as those above described, how long would the world be unevangelized?

A SAD REFLECTION.

On further meditation I was made to feel sad, and said to myself: "It all depends on what kind of religion one has as to whether or not it means much to him, and as to whether others should have the same kind. This thought was suggested because of the "kind" of religion held and propagated by the people who worship in the house before which stood the bulletin board with the subject above stated. The preacher and his flock who announced that subject have stripped Jesus Christ of his divinity and have a religion which denies the virgin birth and divine sonship of Jesus Christ. With all of their morality and good works, they are building on the sand, having left out the "chief corner stone" in their efforts to build for time and eternity. Man's salvation depends on his believing with all of his heart that Jesus Christ is more than man, that he is as divine as God himself, and that he existed as a divine being before this world was, or before the Word was clothed with human flesh. (John 1: 1, 2, 14; 8: 58; 1 Tim. 3: 16.)

THE TERM "RELIGION."

The word "religion" is a very comprehensive one, embracing as it does every form and kind of worship in all the world. Hence, the fact that a man is religious, or has a religion, does not prove that he is accepted of God. The Jewish religion became so corrupt that one of its most ardent supporters, the apostle Paul, later in life repudiated it and taught against it. Simply to be religious is not enough; and unless it is the religion of the Lord Jesus Christ, it will not only deceive the one who expounds it, but will in the end prove to have been a fearful mistake.

In the American Magazine for October appears an article from the pen of Edgar A. Guest, a noted writer, entitled, "What My Religion Means to Me." While the author gives expression to many fine and helpful suggestions, he is fundamentally wrong in his conception of what the religion is inculcated by Jesus Christ and his apostles. He says: "The man who is in any way worth while has a religion of some sort." This throws down the bars to even infidels and agnostics, for they, in spite of their denial, worship some sort of god.

The apostle James tells us what "kind" of religion is true: "Pure religion and undefiled before our God and Father is this, to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction and to keep oneself unspotted from the world." (James 1: 27.) Of course, James is writing to and of those who had been baptized into Christ upon a confession of his divine sonship.

Edgar A. Guest's conception of religion is that one can be a prize fighter and be pleasing to God. Hear him: "You will not have to associate with sissies to be religious. You can be red-blooded and virile and strong. If you should choose to become a prize fighter—I hope you won't—I should want you to cling to your religion. You would be a better prize fighter for your faith. . . . You would lift prize fighting to a higher level by your example."

Just how many thousands of people who read Edgar A. Guest's article on the subject of religion will be swept away by it, the good Lord only knows. His conception of religion is exactly what the vast majority of the young people of this age desire and demand, with no little number of grown-ups, with gray hairs thrown in for good measure.

The "restraints" and "limitations" of the yoke of Christ are entirely too galling for even the majority of professed Christians, and we need not wonder at the attitude of those without toward the demands of the gospel of the Son of God.

BEGAN AT JERUSALEM.

(Extract from a speech of A. Campbell in the Campbell and Rice Debate, held in Lexington, Ky., in 1843.)

The gentleman will, if possible, blur the face or the character of a witness whom he cannot at all dispose of. He is sometimes a young man, or he is on the wrong side, or some other demur. I was too young when I renounced Presbyterianism-yet some twenty-four years old; and Mr. Bacon is too young a man, though as old as my opponent. Strange logic! But when evidence is wanting for a proposition, it is politic to attempt to weaken the authorities on the other side, especially when their arguments cannot be at all encountered. But the embodiment of learning and good sense in the writings of these persons whom I adduce here will obtain for them as much esteem and authority as I desire them to have. Mr. Bacon speaks with as much internal evidence of good sense, sound discretion, and intellectual endowment as my opponent or any other writer of his denomination in the country. Whateley is a giant intellect, and of attainments of the highest order.

Weak minds are the slaves of old times and of old customs. They need the crutches of antiquity and human authority. But men of vigorous minds ask, What is truth? not who says it. True, the lesser lights must yield to the superior. The moon will not contend with the sun, nor twilight with the risen day. But it is an evidence, to my mind at least, that a man has some intelligence and some force of intellect when he has so much mental independence as to think for himself.

Mr. Rice seems peculiarly fond of speaking of my church or of his "friend's church." This is very well understood here. The gentleman knows, however, that I have no church, and claim no such thing. I am a member of Christ's church and no more. I have presumed to lift up my voice for reformation, and multitudes have responded to it. But we are not our own church nor our own people, but the Lord's. The authority we possess is not personal nor official. It is the authority of the truth—the great truths elicited, or developed, in the current controversy and reformation. Light has been elicited by the collision and coöperation of many minds; and it is gone forth, and going forth, with a power as irresistible as the light of God's sun.

We began at the right place and at the right time— Jerusalem and the descent of the Holy Spirit. One party begins at Rome, another at Constantinople, another at Geneva, Amsterdam, or Westminster. We begin at Jerusalem. Others began with Luther, with Calvin, or with Wesley. Some with this synod and some with that. But we begin with the twelve apostles assembled in Jerusalem. We must, Mr. President, go beyond the reigns of King Henry VIII., Prince Edward, and the mighty tyrant Elizabeth. We must, sir, go beyond St. Athanasius, St. Augustine, and the Council of Nice. We must go up to Jerusalem and the holy twelve.

Bishop Purcell, as all the Catholic bishops, gloried in Rome and in St. Peter. He has a line, or lineage, of bishops made out from Peter to Gregory XVI., a splendid hoax, a golden dream. Those who have the idea of succession and hereditary grace in their heads cannot dispense with it. So much of the Pope as there is in every man's stomach, so much depends he upon this chain of so many links, not noticing how many wooden ones are interposed. Is not Rome the mother and mistress of all churches? exclaims the prelate-the learned prelate of Cincinnati. Was not Peter the first bishop of the imperial and eternal city? We say prove it and we will believe it. But never was there a greater failure. He could not prove that Peter was ever at Rome; and if he had, that he planted that church and presided over it is wholly out of the question. But we argued then as now, and triumphed then on this ground-and on this ground must always triumph—that Jerusalem is the mother of all true churches, and the mistress, too, if we must have a "mistress" rather than a Lord. We know that Peter was there and set up the kingdom there, and that all the holy twelve were there, and that the first and last apostolic council was there; and letters patent issued thence in favor of all the Gentile churches, and one grand act of incorporation emanated thence. To Jerusalem, then, we make our When Mr. Rice turns his eyes first and last appeal. teward that ancient city-more ancient by a thousand years than Rome; more venerable, too, for a thousand reasons-he will give up his baptism-subject, action, design, and administrator, too. He will, indeed, allow a bishop to baptize a proper subject; but he will permit a deacon, too.

From Jerusalem sounded out the word of the Lord. It was the radiating center of Christianity. Great was the multitude of them that published it. The brethren from that point perambulated Judea, Samaria, Syria, etc. They preached the word everywhere, and every preacher occasionally baptized his own converts; even Paul himself sometimes immersed. What was right in those days is still right. All persons, then, enlightened and gifted by God, may, by a jure divino, a right sacred and divine, proclaim the word when opportunity and circumstances present themselves demanding it. He that persuades a sinner to come to the Lord may also baptize him, for all of which we have the highest authority—the practice of the first church.

I am opposed to all innovations. Innovations, with me, are not the creations of last year, last century, nor of the last millennium. Innovations are customs, usages, rites, and doctrines that commenced one year after John wrote the word amen at the end of the Apocalypse. All have a right to read this book; to think, speak, and act for themselves. When they discover what the Lord would have them to do, they are not to confer with flesh and blood—with expediency, with worldly interests, honors, friends, relations—but to obey and honor the Lord that bought them.

The gentleman has given me so little to do I shall only add that I advocate good order as well as abstract rights; and while I have shown what circumstances authorize in some cases, what they have authorized on former occasions, I think that, in the present day, they authorize a very high regard to good order, and, as a general rule, call for particular persons for particular and special works and services.

But, fellow citizens, we all do fade as a leaf; we are frail dust and ashes; our words soon pass away. They perish from our lips as the sound dies upon the ear. Our opinions are as light as air; but God's word has at all times firmly stood, and shall from age to age endure. "All flesh is grass," and the glory of man as the flower that fadeth away; "but the word of the Lord endureth forever." Bring all things, then, to its discriminating and solemn test. What accords with it receive, believe, and practice; what does not, reject as a human invention, and repudiate as a part of the doctrines and commandments of men.

WHEREIN LIES THE GOOD NEWS OF THE GOSPEL OF CHRIST.

BY A. B. LIPSCOMB.

The gospel is the good news because it teaches us that we may become new creatures in Christ. Sometimes we hear the people say that human nature does not change, that human nature is just the same one age after another. That is a mistake. Human nature is the only nature that does change, that is susceptible of change. God does not change. Jesus Christ does not change. He is "the same yesterday and to-day, yea and forever." But our human natures can be changed, and changed to such an extent, Paul teaches us, that we become new creatures in Christ. "If then ye be risen with Christ, seek those things which are above." Jesus was not simply spinning a theory, but was announcing a glorious possibility and actually foretelling the experience of thousands of twice-born, madeover men and women when he said to Nicodemus: " Except one be born of water and the Spirit, he cannot enter the kingdom of God."

Louisa Fletcher, now Mrs. Booth Tarkington, wrote these lines:

I wish there were some wonderful place Called the Land of Beginning Again, Where all our mistakes and all our heartaches, And all our poor selfish grief, Could be dropped like a shabby old coat at the door And never put on again.

We may thank God that there is such a place. There is such wonderful opportunity, and it is in the gospel message, and that is one reason why it is the good news.

Again, the gospel is the good news because it is the only power that I know of that can enable us to overcome all trials and sorrows and actually to triumph over our enemies, if we have them. We read a great deal about heredity and environment, and no doubt those things have an influence upon children and upon the lives of people generally, but I do not believe that heredity and environment are the determining factors in a man's success. And I do not see how any thoughtful, observant human being can ever believe that. I have been fortunate in visiting the homes of some of our great Presidents. I have been to the home of Jefferson; and I can say what many of the Nashville folks can't say-I have been out to the Hermitage, Andrew Jackson's home. I have been to the home of Washington, and I have been to the home of Taylor, and, of course, I have visited Polk's tomb, but among all these visits I never received quite as much inspiration as I did about three years ago when my wife and I stopped for a day at Hodgenville, Ky., and went in and saw for the first time the little mud-daubed cabin in which Abraham Lincoln was born. I just felt like taking off my shoes when I thought of what had come out of that little cabin. There are some historians who tell us that Abraham Lincoln had a shiftless father and that he had a noaccount mother. I do not believe that, and I can't believe it after I read on those granite walls what Abe himself said about his mother. But no doubt there was a handicap. Humanly speaking, there was not much promise for that boy. Heredity and environment were all against him. A few years ago representatives of the civilized nations of the earth gathered together for the purpose of picking out the outstanding figure in every age of the world; and when they came to modern times, with a unanimous voice they all voted for Abraham Lincoln, the bey who had a shiftless father and, as some think, a commonplace mother.

Heredity and environment are handicaps, no doubt of that, but they are not the determining factors in a man's success. The gospel, then, is the glorious message because it is the power that enables us to overcome every handicap and rise above every trial and sorrow and temptation in this world. I have reached the conclusion that, after all, the only thing that can keep a man down, if he will be true to the Lord, is that man himself. If we will just be true to the Lord Jesus Christ, he will never forsake us. I remember how he said to his disciples, in substance: "Now they are going to persecute you; they are going to reproach you; they are going to tell lies on you; they are going to put you to death. But don't falter on your way; go on, go on; they can never take away the sum total of your joy, they can never discount the power of your personality; go on, go on! Everything you do shall receive a rich reward in heaven if you do it in my name." And so the gospel is the glorious message for all of us because it tells us how to go on, even in the face of handicaps and danger and persecution.

Finally, the gospel is the good news because it is the only power that can enable a man to calmly face death without a tremor and even be happy in the prospect of death. The Christian religion, the gospel message, is the only one that says: "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord." Why, what is death to a Christian, to a faithful child of God? It is just an incident in an ever-unfolding life; it is just a shadow that falls for a moment athwart the flowing stream of that soul's existence; it is just a lifting up, if you please, of that soul to higher ground, where it can use and exhibit its powers as never before. Only the Christian can cherish that thought and die with that imperishable hope.

There are some noble souls in the church to-day. There are men and women who obeyed the gospel when young, and they have been preaching the gospel and living the gospel ever since. Some of them are now facing the sunset of life; and while they do not become affrighted, I am sure sometimes they grow weary and lonesome when they think of some who have gone before, when they think of the empty chairs in the home and of the pictures on the wall. I am just reminded of Mary Galbreath's little poem about the little girl who lost her mother. It is a beautiful little bit of verse. She says:

It's awful lonesome at our house without mother,
It's just as quiet as a mouse without mother;
Father looks so lonely of evenings sitting there.
It just ain't cheerful anywhere without mother.
It's awful hard to get along without mother,
It seems that everything goes wrong without mother;
Of course, father does the best he can, but you know he's just a man,

just a man, And he can't fix and plan like mother. I don't seem to enjoy my play without mother; Things get worser every day without mother.

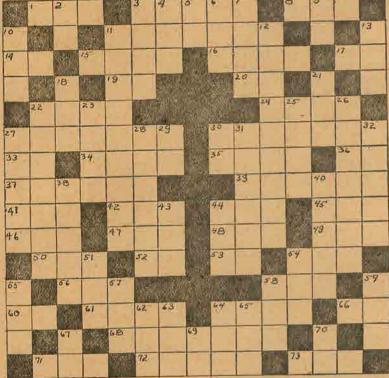

As I close this article I take the plain words of that little child and lay them simply and reverently upon the pages of the New Testament, and I tell you that the gospel is the most wonderful, most glorious, most beautiful message that ever came to man, because it tells us not only how to be calm and unafraid in the face of death, but because it is the power which leads us poor, wandering, homesick children back to God and mother.

As through language the soul speaks to the ear of man, so by action the soul addresses itself to the eye of man. Action is a more perfect unveiling of the soul than language, for it implies more deliberation.—H. P. Liddon.

The present is the time of the earth's finest and biggest and most inspiring opportunities. Get in the path of one. Take it. Make it your own.—William E. Barton.

CROSS BIBLE WORD

THE anchor, as you probably know, is one of the leading symbols of the Christian religion. This design is an unusually striking one and of course the word it exemplifies is worked into the puzzle. There are two long downward words, one of which will be easy to guess and the other harder. But with the cross-clues and references all the words can be easily found. Sometimes the isolated little corners, with two short words, are harder than the main body of the desi

To work out this puzzle, the white spaces must be filled with letters forming words answering to the various horizontal and vertical definitions given below. The horizontal and vertical words are not the same, but each gives a clue to the other. The first letter of each word is indicated by a number which refers to the definitions listed below.

It is advisable to first fill in, in both directions, those words which you know to be correct. These will furnish hints to abose words which you do not know or had merely guessed at. When the puzzle is solved correctly, the letters in the white spaces will spell words both horizontally and vertically. The black spaces are the blind spots of the puzzle and merely form the pattern, incidentally designating the ends and beginnings of the words contained in the puzzle.

NOT "PROGRESSIVES." BY J. E. WAINWRIGHT.

A godly man recently deplored the use of such words as "digression," " progression," and "nonprogression" in a splendid article in one of our religious journals. It is a pity that conditions demand the use of such words.

The Bible does not use these words in regard to either churches or members. Nevertheless, we find their equivalent in such words as "transgression," "obedience," and "disobedience." Two are condemned and one approved. "Progression" is defined as "making progress," while "progress" means to "move forward." We move forward according to the Bible by "walking worthy of the vocation;" press toward the mark for the prize "in Christ;" run the race "looking to Jesus the author and finisher of our faith;" fight the "good fight of faith." These expressions make clear the "how" to progress. To violate or walk across is to "transgress." "Digress" means to turn aside, deviate, introduce irrelevant matter. Nonprogression is the lack of moving forward, as outlined under progressionin short, to neglect duty. Digression and nonprogression are both condemned in the same verse. (Heb. 2: 2, 3; James 4: 17; 2 John 9-11.) The "transgressive" who would belittle his "nonprogressive" brother finds himself in the same class in the sight of God. Both must repent, reform, and get right, else pay the supreme penalty.

The individual or congregation that is progressive meets with divine approbation. (Heb. 5: 8, 9; Rev. 22: 14.) Investigation has revealed many "nonprogressives" who claim to be members of the "progressive" church. Multiplied thousands who are vulgarly called "nonprogressives" are grammatically and scripturally progressive. A former member of a selfstyled "progressive" congregation in our city said that out of a boasted membership about one-third attended regularly; even "special blow-outs" fail to induce some to "forsake not the assembling." One female said she joined because the pastor was good-looking. Page Joseph! Another pastor returns from the Oklahoma conference elated over the "almost unanimous" decision to abide by the Bible on "immersion." How nice it would be for them to agree "unanimously" to abide by the old Book on the "true worship!"

The Boswell-Hardeman discussion on instrumental music in the worship is now ready for distribution. If you have not already given us your order for the discussion, you should do so at once. The subject is a live one and the interest in it is growing. So many who have built on the silence of the Bible have espoused "open membership" and have denied the inspiration of the Scriptures and the deity of Christ that the people are realizing as never before that it is dangerous to build on the silence of the Bible.

This discussion was conducted in a good spirit throughout, each speaker showing marked consideration and courtesy for his opponent. Ira M. Boswell did as well as any one can do who undertakes to prove that instrumental music in the worship is scriptural. Any failure that he made was not on account of his lack of ability, but was due to the weakness of his position. N. B. Hardeman presented the truth in a forceful and convincing way.

Buy the book and circulate it among those who use instrumental music in the worship.

"THUS IT IS WRITTEN."

BY R. L. WHITESIDE.

It is singular how some very plain truths will escape one's attention for years. After reading Luke 24: 46, 47 over and over and quoting these verses in sermons over a period of many years, and reading many comments and sermons on that language, I discovered, a few months ago, a truth that I had not seen before-a truth, too, as plain as daylight to any one who will look. Read the verses: "Thus it is written, that the Christ should suffer, and rise again from the dead the third day; and that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name unto all the nations, beginning from Jerusalem." Jesus here affirms that two things are written: (1) "That the Christ should suffer, and rise again from the dead the third day," and (2) "that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name unto all the nations, beginning from Jerusalem." "It is written . . . that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name unto all the nations, beginning from Jerusalem." This last is the point that I had not before discovered. Jesus must surely have had in mind Isa. 2: 2, 3 and Mic. 4: 1, 2. Both prophets say the same thing. I quote Isa. 2: 2, 3: "And it shall come to pass in the latter days, that the mountain of Jehovah's house shall be established on the top of the mountains, and shall be exalted above the hills; and all nations shall flow unto it. And many peoples shall go and say, Come ye, and let us go up to the mountain of Jehovah, to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths: for out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the word of Jehovah from Jerusalem."

O, yes, I had used Isaiah and Micah many times to show that the gospel was to be first preached at Jerusalem, and from Jerusalem go into all the world; but it had not occurred to me that Jesus used these prophesies for the same purpose. But now, having discovered that the Lord's own interpretation of them fits that very point, I can use them with all assurance.

In this short article I make no attempt to fully develop the argument. I merely call attention to a point that seems to have escaped attention.

GOSPEL ADVOCATE

The GOSPEL ADVOCATE is the oldest living periodical published in the interest of the church of Christ. It is now in its sixty-seventh volume, and it has a larger list of regular, paidup subscribers than it has ever had before. Its circulation is increasing rapidly, and it is daily growing in favor with the people. It contains twenty-four pages, and is issued every week. It is printed in large, clear type, on good paper, and is neatly pasted and trimmed. It has by far the largest circulation of any periodical published south of the Mason and Dixon Line in the interest of the church of Christ. It has regular editorial writers, besides a large number of able and regular contributors. It has all of the regular departments of the best religious periodicals.

In editorial policy it stands for individual consecration, against ecclesiastic organizations, as the scriptural and best method of doing missionary work. It recognizes no organization but the church of Christ as a scriptural medium of converting the world and developing the Chris-

It opposes all human creeds and ecclesiastic councils, and pleads for the right of each individual to study the Scriptures for himself and formulate his own faith, without dictation or hindrance from churchly dignitaries. It opposes all clerical assumption of official authority in the church, and stands for the scriptural doctrine that each Christian has an office to fill, a work to perform-that all are kings and priests unto God.

It stoutly advocates the doctrine of missions, and argues unceasingly that every Christian is a divinely commissioned missionary and every church is a scripturally organized missionary society. The mission of every Christian and the design of every church is to preach the gospel to all

It believes in, and stoutly advocates, congregational singing, as opposed to select choirs and instrumental performances, as the best and most soul-stirring church music. Let all the people sing. Provide a book for everybody in the house, and let us all make a joyful noise unto the Lord.

STAGGS.

STAGGS.

Mrs. Virginia (Dotson) Staggs died at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Dotson, Friday, July 24, 1925. Funeral services were conducted at the Henson cemetery on Saturday by the writer. "Virgie," as she was familiarly called by her friends, had been in bad health for a number of years, but bore her suffering cheerfully. She was a sweet, Christian woman, and always had a bright smile for those who were so faithful in trying to help her. She leaves a husband and two dear little children to mourn their great loss. Besides her husband and children, she leaves her father, mother, four brothers, two sisters, and a host of other friends to sorrow in her early passing from our midst. To the loved ones we would say: Weep not; she is only freed from her pains and is now sleeping that sweet, peaceful sleep which only those who die in the Lord may enjoy.

MURPHY

MURPHY.

MURPHY.

Brother W. M. Murphy, of Lawrenceburg, Tenn., departed this life on August 31, 1925, at the age of sixtytwo years, two months, and fifteen days. Brother Murphy was born in Maury County, Tenn., on November 16, 1862. He obeyed the gospel in early life and lived a devoted Christian life. He leaves to his children a rich legacy more precious than gold, the memory of a father who was a faithful servant of God. Brother Murphy was married to Sister Ella Carter on December 24, 1885. To this union were born six boys and four girls. Eight of the children are still living. His remains were carried back to his old home church, Greenwood, accompanied by a host of friends and loved ones, where funeral services were conducted by the writer. Brother Murphy had many friends and was loved and respected by all who knew him, as was evidenced by the large number present at his funeral to pay respect to his memory. He was under the influence of that love that can suffer long and be kind. We have sorrow at his going, but not as those who have no hope. May the richest blessings of Heaven rest upon the bereaved family.

WHITFIELD.

WHITFIELD.

Brother Samuel Whitfield was born Brother Samuel Whitfield was born near Meaford, Ontario, Canada, in 1870, and died at Woodgreen, Ontario, on September 17, 1925. He was baptized by Brother Roberts while in his teens, and soon after decided to give himself to the work of preaching the gospel. After attending the high school at Meaford, he spent three years at the Nashville Bible School, Nashville, Tenn., and did evangelistic work during the summer months.

When he returned to Ontario, he preached at Beamsville and other places for a while, and then took up the work at Walnut Bottom, Pa., for a few years. From there he moved to Woodgreen where he lived until his death, the result of Bright's disease. He leaves five sons from his first wife and three daughters from his second wife, who also is left to mourn her loss. All who knew Brother Whitfield can testify to his honesty, sincerity, and purity of life. He was true to the work of God and careful not to depart from its teachings and authority. His faith and trust in God were strong. He was liberal in giving to the support of the Master's cause. We will miss his labor and the encouragement of his example, but we would not call him back. He lived for Christ, and his death is gain. It is our hope to see him rise, with those who sleep in Jesus, when our Lord shall appear. Funeral services were conducted by the writer, assisted by Brother E. G. Collins.

TIDWELL.

A. Tidwell was born on July 30, 1857. He was baptized on July 19, 1909, and lived a faithful Christian life until July 3, 1924, when, following a long illness which caused paralysis, he was called to that home where there a long illness which caused paralysis, he was called to that home where there is no more death, neither sorrow nor crying. He was married to Mary Frances Bateman in November, 1881. Seven children—five girls and two boys—were born to this union. The elder boy died in infancy. Besides his wife and a number of relatives, he is survived by six children whom he lived to see born into the family of God. He was indeed a husband, a father, and a Christian. Though he suffered much, he would always say, "Lord, thy will be done," never wavering in faith or failing to take comfort in the promises of God; always diligent in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord. The only sting in death was the leaving alone the companion who had so lovingly walked hand in hand with him for more than forty years, and who never left his side until his eyes were closed in his last long sleep. Funeral services were held at the Rock Church, southwest of Dickson, Tenn., where he had worshiped for years. Nothing except sickness would keep him away from church on Lord's-day morning. The local congregations miss his support, as he truly believed in obeying the admonition to give as we prosper. Loving hands laid him to rest in the Rock Church cemetery, a large crowd of relatives and friends being present to show their love for their friend and brother and sympathy for the beveaved wife and children. "He is not dead, but sleepeth."

MRS. F. L. Eldridge.

From the Brethren

Tucson, Ariz., October 30.—Our work here continues to grow. There are now nearly forty members, and we expect many others during the winter season. That others are interested in this great mission work is strongly evidenced by these facts: Sister A. M. Burton, of Clifton Lane, Nashville, Tenn., recently sent ten dollars, and Brother and Sister C. H. Williams, of 2114 Jones Avenue, Nashville, Tenn., sent a check for twenty-five dollars. We are very grateful for such manifestations of generous cooperation. Should there he others wishing to share in the cultivation of this fertile soil, they have the assurance that it is a paying investment, one that will enable them to return their Lord's talents with splendid profits.—Robert S. Walker.

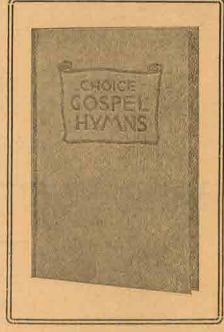

Watts, Cal., November 5.—Not in many years has there been a work among my people that has created so much interest as the work here. It only shows what can be done by a few people who are determined to do right. In October, 1924, I came here and saw both the need and the opportunity to do a work that would awaken an interest in primitive Christianity. I had my son and three other determined men with me in the effort, and we began a work that not only has aroused the interest of the brethren in California, but has aroused the interest of many brethren elsewhere. Much of our success is due to the untiring efforts of my son, A. L. Cassius, who without a dollar in sight began the construction of the first colored church of Christ in Southern California. Our success is due directly to the confidence that Brethren I. J. Williams, P. W. Zollars, and J. R. Arnold reposed in us, aided by a few godly women that wanted to see a real church of Christ built in this city. We held our annual meeting on October 18, and, like our opening meeting in June, the white brethren came from a great distance to rejoice with us. As a result, we now owe less than one hundred dollars on our house. In all, over seven hundred dollars has been given us by our loyal white brethren. Brother G. W. Riggs has put his tent at my disposal, and I hope to preach Christ also in every place that has a fair population of my people.—S. R. Cassius.

Three cups sifted flour, three level teaspoons Calumet Baking Powder, one level teaspoon salt, two tablespoons sugar, one and one-half cups sweet milk, one-half cup chopped nuts, one-half cup chopped raisins. Sift the flour, baking powder, and salt together three times; add other ingredients and mix thoroughly with a spatula or the rounding side of a mixing spoon. Let stand ten minutes. Put in ungreased pan and bake one hour in slow oven (250-350 degrees F.). It makes much better bread if baked in round corrugated pans. Brush with melted butter after removing from the oven.

TENNESSEE ORPHAN HOME. BY J. W. FRY.

I will not say that the Tennessee Orphan Home is the best home for orphan children in the world, but will say, without fear of successful contradiction, that the Tennessee Orphan Home is practicing the best policy in the world to the best of its ability, by placing children in good, Christian family homes, whenever good, suitable homes can be found that will take children on trial.

It has been truly said that beyond question family home life is the highest and finest product of civilization, and children should not be deprived of it except for urgent and compelling reasons. God, in his wisdom, instituted the family home, and there can be none better than a good, God-fearing family home.

We do not expect every child to fit in every home in which it is placed. Therefore, the child is placed on trial with foster parents with the understanding that it may be returned to the Tennessee Orphan Home if not congenial and satisfactory, the trial agreement to be signed by husband and wife, and which in substance is as follows: It shall attend the public schools as much as the laws of the State require, and church and Sunday school as regularly as possible; shall be provided with suitable and comfortable clothing, and given the necessary medical and surgical attention in case of sickness; shall eat at the table with the family, and shall not be transferred to another; etc.

Unquestionably the placing of orphan and dependent children in the home of foster parents where they will be properly cared for is commendable; but considerable thought and investigation are required in order to make the child fit the home and the foster home fit the child. Every child should be a member of a family and in a home it calls its own, where it can own and have things outside of a locker, and where duties can be given it to perform, and it can be supervised in carrying out the responsibilities it assumes, thereby coming in contact with mature minds. It is certainly a great Christian work to help handicapped and unfortunate children by taking them into a family home and doing everything one can to restore to orphans what they have been deprived of by loss of parents.

We do not encourage the adoption of a child until it has remained with foster parents until there is no doubt of its being congenial in the home, and we advise the keeping of a child a few years before thinking of adopting it. We believe this is fair to both the child and the foster parents. It has been our policy to insist that a community or church, where there is a widow with children, should help keep the mother and children together, which can be done with very little assistance, until the widow and children can become self-sustaining. We do not encourage the separation of children and parents where it can be helped.

At the close of our fiscal year, October 31, 1924, we had eighty children in the Home. On the same date this year we had eighty-four. During the past twelve months sixty-seven new children have been admitted and forty-six formerly placed have been returned to the Home, and one hundred and nine children have been placed during the twelve months. Since November 1, 1917, the Home has cared for four hundred and eighty-eight children to date, besides handling over fifty children that have not passed through the Home. Some of our children that have gone out from the Home have married, and some are holding good positions and making their own way. We have done our best to keep in touch with the children that have gone from the Home, and, so far as we know, they are all making good citizens and are well regarded by all with whom they come in contact. We have had only two deaths in the Home during the eight years. One died of "flu" and pneumonia, the other of blood poison.

SCRIPTURE STUDIES

BY JAMES A. ALLEN

The condition of the religious world is enough to sadden the soul of an angel. Comparatively few of the churches in the entire religious world make any attempt whatever to either teach or practice some of the plainest teaching of the Bible. Cardinals and bishops, rectors and popular "pastors" concur in positively refusing to tell sinners what Christ and the apostles command them to do to be saved.

Latent infidelity pervades many of the largest and most prominent churches. In many instances the officers cooperate with the "minister" in denying that our Lord was born of a virgin and that his crucified body was raised from the new tomb of the Arimathean senator. Churches that were not established by Jesus Christ are teaching things that were not taught by the apostles and are wearing names that were not worn by those who "were called Christians first in Antioch."

In his last interview with his apostles, Jesus Christ said: "Go ye therefore, and make disciples of all the nations, baptizing them into the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I commanded you: and lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world." (Matt. 28: 19, 20. "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to the whole creation. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that disbelieveth shall be condemned." (Mark 16: 15, 16.)

In carrying out this great commission, as received from the Lord Jesus, the apostles, commencing with the first sermon on the day of Pentecost, required all penitent believers in Christ to be immersed. Every member of the church in New Testament times was an immersed person. On the day of Pentecost immersion "in the name of Jesus Christ" was declared to be "for the remission of sins." (Acts 2: 38.) Ananias said to the praying, penitent Saul of Tarsus: "And now why tarriest thou? arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on his name." (Acts 22: 16.)

But the Nashville Pastors' Association, successor of the Ministers' Alliance, is made up of preachers who positively refuse to require an honest inquirer to do what Jesus and the apostles command them to do to be saved. Many of these clergymen draw handsome "per annums" for preaching the gospel; and yet, strangely paradoxical as it may seem, they not only refuse to preach it, but assume an air of offended dignity if attention is called to the omission. We are aware that it would not only appear incredible, but would also seem sacrilegious to the uninformed and unthinking public, to assert that not a single member of the said Pastors' Association preaches, or will preach, the things that were preached and practiced by the apostles and first Christians, and that many of the things for which these "pastors" stand were unknown before the great apostasy, or "falling away," became responsible for the present divided, disunited, and unconverted condition of the so-called Christian world."

Under the tutorage of these gentlemen, a large proportion, a great majority, of the religious-speaking public are depending upon sprinkling for baptism. Under their encouragement many thousands of people are hanging their destiny in a dread eternity upon a human tradition, and are going before God in the judgment unsaved and unprepared. It is true that Jesus Christ commands that "every creature" to whom the gospel comes shall believe it and be immersed; and it is also true that he promised that "he that believeth and is immersed shall be saved." But these men, regarded by the public as being ministers of the gospel of Jesus Christ, do not hesitate to make void the commandment thus given by the Lord and to promise salvation where the Lord has not promised it.

I need not explain that all reputable scholars recognize that the word "baptizo," used by Jesus in the Greek original, can be translated into English by only such words as dip, submerge, or immerse. Nor need I submit that immersion was the universal practice of the apostolic age, and that it was also the practice of the whole religious world until the thirteenth century of the Christian era. The Pope of Rome, to whom Protestant denominations are so heavily indebted for many things, authorized sprinkling for baptism in A.D. 1311.

God asks, in the plainest and most unequivocal terms, of every responsible creature, that they be immersed. God asks that they so do in order to show their faith in him, and that, by doing something in which they can see no human reason, simply because he commands it, their obedience may show that they will take God at his word. Those who will not render service because God commands it, but are willing to render it only when their own judgment approves, are walking in their own wisdom and not in the wisdom of God. Baptism, in the wisdom of God, stands as a great test, to determine the fidelity of those who enter the church; and only those who stand the test are worthy to be enrolled with the faithful or to be considered as children of God.

I have seen so much good from suffering, so much good from pain, that I believe in the good of both. It is pain and suffering that bring out sympathy, self-sacrifice, and strength of character.—Selected.

MR. BRYAN'S "BIBLE TALKS."

BY A. M'GARY.

It affords me genuine pleasure to allude to Mr. Bryan's "talk" about the conversion of the Ethiopian eunuch, for in this "talk" he stuck much closer to the facts in the case than "orthodoxians" usually do. He did, however, mar the truth in saying of the eunuch: "He not only submitted to, but sought, the baptism that symbolizes the washing away of sins." His idea that baptism "symbolizes the washing away of sins" is, of course, a sectarian delusion, pure and simple—or, rather, impure and simple.

No one can fairly deduce the idea, from anything the Bible says about baptism, that it "symbolizes the washing away of sins." Saul of Tarsus was told to "arise, and be baptized, and wash away [not "symbolize the washing away"] thy sins."

Mr. Bryan could just as appropriately as he said the eunuch "not only submitted to, but sought, the baptism that symbolizes the washing away of sins," say of the Philippian jailer that he "took Paul and Silas the same hour of the night and symbolized the washing of their stripes." Furthermore, he could with as much propriety say that the jailer washed their stripes to symbolize the soothing of the stripes.

Paul's mind (which was the mind of the Spirit) when he said, "Christ also loved the church, and gave himself for it: that he might sanctify and cleanse it with the washing of the water by the word," was as far from the "orthodox" delusion that "baptism symbolizes the washing away of sins" as the east is from the west. The Holv Spirit, through Paul, thus taught that the sanctifying and cleansing of the church—those of whom the church consists-is effected through their "obedience of the faith "obedience of the command of Christ to believe and be baptized, as per Mark 16: 15, 16 and Acts 2: 38. The apostles were to "preach the gospel," and those to whom they preached it were to believe (what they preached) and "be baptized," in order to "be saved." And the gospel they were to preach and did preach consists of more than merely preaching the death, burial, and resurrection of Christ; for Christ definitely stipulated that they should preach "repentance and remission of sins . . . in his (See Luke 24: 46, 47.) And Paul said, "Be it known unto you therefore, men and brethren, that through this man [Jesus Christ] is preached unto you the forgiveness of sins," as Christ had stipulated, and as Peter preached it "at the beginning" of their preaching in Jerusalem, where Christ had stipulated that the preaching of his gospel should begin, as follows: "Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins." Hence, as Christ stipulated "that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name" as component parts of his gospel, and that it should be believed, those who do not believe itwhatever else they may believe-lack that much of believing the gospel that Christ authorized his apostles to preach and that they did preach.

Hence, those who believe the "orthodox" delusion that "baptism symbolizes the washing away of sins," in so believing, disbelieve the gospel of Christ, for one cannot disbelieve any part of the gospel of Christ without disbelieving the gospel of Christ (see James 2: 10); and Christ said: "He that believeth not [the gospel] shall be damned."

Therefore, as Philip, in preaching Jesus to the eunuch, was preaching the gospel of Jesus just as Peter had preached it in Jerusalem, by the guidance of the same Spirit that guided Peter in preaching it, Philip evidently and necessarily preached to the eunuch substantially the very same things that Peter had preached, and which Christ had stipulated should be preached and should be believed.

Hence, if Mr. Bryan, in directing attention to the baptism of the eunuch, had been less inclined to take care of the "orthodox" figment concerning baptism and more disposed to observe the divine rule Peter laid down for the governance of teachers when he said, "If any man speak, let him speak as the oracles of God," he would not have said that the eunuch "not only submitted to, but sought, the baptism that symbolizes the washing away of sins," but, instead, would have said: "He not only submitted to, but sought, the baptism that washes away sins." (See Acts 22: 16; Eph. 5: 25, 26; etc.)

The "orthodox" figment concerning this matter is, that, at the very instant one believes that Jesus is the Christ, the Holy Ghost, by direct, naked impact upon the heart of the sinner so believing, applies to such heart the blood of Christ, which "washes away his sins." This is a most monstrous, soul-endangering "lie" (speaking as the oracles of God—see 2 Thess. 2: 10-12), and can be shown to be such by hundreds of statements in the oracles of God so clearly that no one who is acquainted with New Testament teachings and who is undeluded would think of calling it in question. What a lamentable pity that as good and learned and wise and sincere man as Mr. Bryan was labored under such a frightful delusion!

If the eunuch's sins were "washed away" before he was baptized, it is very evident that he didn't know ithad no "feeling sense" of such a "washing away." Had he been asked, as he was climbing out his chariot or as he was descending into the water, "Do you feel that God for Christ's sake has pardoned your sins?" it is clearly evident, from the divine record, that he would have answered the question negatively; for, had he had such a feeling before his baptism, he would have rejoiced before his baptism. The same is true with reference to the conversion of Saul of Tarsus and that of the Philippian jailer, who, as the eunuch did, did his rejoicing after his baptism. And Saul of Tarsus was in a most cast-down attitude of mind and heart during the entire three days that intervened between the time he first believed in Christ and his baptism. Had his sins been "washed away" when he first believed in Christ, wouldn't he have had at least a sufficient "feeling sense" of such fact to have kept him from "feeling" so utterly miserable while on his journey to where such washing away of his sins was to be "symbolized" by his baptism? Had Ananias, when he approached him, asked him, "Do you feel that God for Christ's sake has pardoned your sins?" who that has read the record of the case could be so utterly bereft of reason as to even doubt that Saul would have answered the question with a very emphatic negative?

Albeit some things Mr. Bryan said about the conversion of the eunuch, when the fact that he floundered in the welter of sectarianism to the depths that he did is recalled, accentuate to a marked degree his honesty of heart and sincerity of purpose.

It is really very remarkable for one who was as thoroughly imbued with the "orthodox" delusion as Mr. Bryan was to stick as close to the revealed facts in the case as he did. He made no effort to contract the depression that contained the "certain water" unto which Philip and the eunuch came, and which they "went down both into," and in which the eunuch was "buried with Christ by baptism into death," into the "death of Christ," in order that the "blood of Christ" might cleanse him from all sin—for it was in Christ's death that he shed his blood—I say, Mr. Bryan made no effort to contract that depression into a "mere camel's track," as the manner of so many "orthodoxians" is, because the sight of more water, pertaining to baptism, than "a camel's track" could contain gives them "orthodox" spasms.

And I opine, if such were called upon to explain how a "few drops" of water could, even by the greatest possible stretch of the wildest sectarian imagination, be made to appear to right reason as a befitting "symbol" of any sort of "washing," that they would take on the most addle-pated spasms of sophistry.

But this has lengthened to closing time, so I'll conclude with one more reference to Mr. Bryan's saying concerning "the True Vine and its branches," in which he said: "The first step is to become a branch of the True Vine." He should have said "steps," as Paul did; for when one believes in Christ, if such faith is not to die (James 2: 17-24), it must "step" on, continue in Christ's word several "steps" more, take three other steps-repentance, confession, and baptism-in order to "become a branch of the True Vine." This is what the eunuch did. He believed in Christ, through Philip's preaching, and continued in Christ's word that came to him through that preacher's preaching Jesus to him, repented, confessed Christ; and, in "going down into that water" to be baptized, as we by faith can see him do, he was taking the last "step" that stood between him and his "connection with the True Vine." He "came up" out of that "water" a "branch of the True Vine," and went on his way "rejoicing" over that fact—the fact that his "sins had been washed away" through that obedience and that he was thus attached to "the True Vine," a member of Christ's church, "which is his body."

But my final word concerning Mr. Bryan shall be concerning his expressed desire for his "hundreds of millions of Christians [so called] scattered over the world "—his desire that they may be "united together, not necessarily in one church organization, but in a zeal for the coming of the kingdom of God." It is amazingly astonishing to me that a man of Mr. Bryan's general knowledge and wide information and many years of honest Bible study did not find out that the "kingdom of God is here," although it came nearly two thousand years ago. He understood that the eunuch was "born again," for he said so. Now, if a man will turn to John 3: 3-5 and pull off his "orthodox" spectacles and seriously consider those passages, he will discover that in being "born again" the eunuch entered into the kingdom of God.

With reference to this matter, Mr. Bryan reminds me of the fellow who said he couldn't see the forest for the trees. Mr. Bryan couldn't see the kingdom of God for the kingdom of the clergy. I devoutly pray to God that the eyes of the people may be opened to the amazing simplicity of gospel truth, that they may be enabled to clearly distinguish between the dense spiritual darkness of the kingdom of the clergy, which "takes away the key of knowledge" and "shuts up the kingdom of God," and the "marvelous light" of the gospel, which opens "the kingdom of God" to our vision and so clearly "shows the way" into it.

"AN APPEAL TO THE CANDID." BY LEE JACKSON.

I have received from Dr. Eugene V. Wood a copy of his carefully prepared pamphlet, written in defense of Brother R. H. Boll, the preacher for the Portland Avenue congregation of Christians in Louisville, Ky. This booklet is accompanied by a personal request for me to read it and then express my views of its subject-matter candidly and impartially. With this request before me, I am writing this, not knowing whether it will be acceptable to the managers of the Gospel Advocate or not. Yet in my own judgment, what I am writing should be published for the good of the cause of Christ among the Advocate's readers.

In the beginning I will say that what Dr. Wood has prepared in defense of Brother Boll is well written, and in most respects, considering what others have busied themselves in writing, it is timely. Except for the reason that others have injudiciously and overzealously drawn attention to Boll's teaching, there would be no shadow of demand for Dr. Wood's pamphlet, for there is nothing in it that can be claimed as essential matter of gospel teaching, and very little in it that is calculated to be of benefit to men and women in making them more devoted to Christian worship and living the Christian life. These only are the things about which those who are Christians only should feel religious concern.

The Doctor makes a strong and timely point in calling attention to the truth that there is no general or catholic church of Christ which needs a self-constituted board of directors to tell it what must be believed or not believed in matters of private opinion which are no part of gospel faith and are not detrimental to Christian edification in this most holy faith. There is no New Testament teaching that positively identifies any such general church, and as contenders for the New Testament order we are to contend only for the essential things for which a positive "Thus saith the Lord" can be given. It was departure from this simplicity in governing the New Testament congregations that resulted in the first formation of a general church organization and the ultimate formation of denominational church creeds. In those early years of the Christian era ambitious men, like Cyprian, of Carthage, and others, felt that they needed more prestige as men of importance, and so they began meddling with the simplicity of New Testament teaching. Just at this present time there are a number of Cyprians among those who are wanting to get back to the simplicity and purity of New Testament teaching. Such men are disposed to meddle in the private affairs of the congregations.

I have not been able to appreciate any given reason for the publication of the "Nichol-Whiteside Review of R. H. Boll." and neither do I understand why it was necessary for those who claim to be leaders in the plea for gospel purity to publish their unqualified indorsement of this review. There are numbers among us, and many of them going out as preachers, who do not understand the meaning of our plea for the gospel without additions or subtractions, and consequently do not understand our plea for unity upon the basis of that gospel. The circulation of Brother Boll's booklets and the publication of reviews of such teachings as being matters of vital importance simply cause endless confusion among uninformed brethren and divert the understanding of the people from the essentials of the plea that we are making for the faith which alone can secure the unity for which our Savior prayed. There are even preachers of prominence among us who will enter into debate over issues that have no vital connection with the gospel that saves, and which have no bearing upon matters pertaining to Christian worship and conduct; and some of these debaters contend for points of teaching apparently for the purpose of broadening the lines of partisan distinctions.

As a matter of fact, there is nothing new in the things that Brother Boll is so sedulously advocating. A Methodist preacher with whom I am acquainted holds practically the same ideas, and the published denominational literature in all of its denominational phases, in one form or another, is honeycombed with these speculative teachings concerning the ultimate fulfillment of the prophecies. In talking with this Methodist friend, I have often tried to lead him into the knowledge of gospel truth and to induce him to become a Christian only, but no time has been wasted in trying to get him to give up his ideas of the millennium and the future renovation of the earth as the final home of the saints. If he could be induced to obey the gospel and become a devoted Christian, he could carry these matters of personal belief to his grave, and it would do no harm, provided he made no effort to induce others to accept them as part of the gospel, nor allowed them to interfere with the performance of his Christian duties. If Brother Boll is pressing his notions as essential matters of the gospel, or if he is causing divisions and wranglings in congregations by his persistent contention for things as matters of common belief, then he is in serious need of discipline by the congregation where he holds membership. And every preacher should be identified with some congregation to which he could be made amenable for discipline, for there is no general church of Christ vested with authority to appoint a commission of preachers to do the disciplining. The Catholic Church, the Episcopalian Church, or the Methodist Church may be vested with a humanly constituted authority to do that sort of work, but the New Testament countenances no general church of Christ as vested with any such prerogatives of authority.

In the constant and diligent study of the Scriptures men may learn many things that others do not know, and may hold these things as matters of either personal belief or opinion, and yet such matters of belief are really no part of the gospel truth that saves from the ruin of sin. These things may be true, and plausible scripture reasons may be given in defense of these beliefs or opinions; and yet they should not be pressed upon others for acceptance, for they are no part of the gospel of Christ and have nothing to do in the way of promoting godliness. When a Bible student has to resort to conclusions drawn from inferences, or has to invoke especial acuteness in reasoning powers to sustain his proposition, it necessarily arouses a suspicion as to its being a matter of gospel truth. Even in the New Testament there are some things apparently taught, which, if they were essential matters of gospel faith, the Holy Spirit would have guided the apostles into stating them more clearly and definitely. This is true of all matters pertaining to the faith in Christ, and true of all statements of Christian duties.

It is desirable that conditions among those pleading for the return to New Testament simplicity and purity should be such that publications like those of Brother Boll would excite but a passing interest and receive no comment, and that reviews of such nonessential beliefs and opinions would die a natural death, just as thousands of other such publications have died. Our plea for the gospel in its purity does not need these publications, and it is not necessary to give attention to these things as a means of an edification that will increase our interest in consecrated worship and devotion to godly living.

I have written frankly, as I was requested to do, and I hope that what I have said will be received in the same spirit of kindly feeling in which it is written.

COMMENTARY ON FIRST CORINTHIANS. No. 26.

BY C. E. W. DORRIS.

Chapter V.

HEINOUS OFFENDERS NOT TO BE RECOGNIZED IN THE CHURCH. (Verses 9-12.)

Verse 9. I wrote unto you in an epistle, etc. As to what epistle this was, there are three theories. (1) That it is the epistle the apostle is now writing, and that he here speaks of some general directions which is given in the foregoing part of it, but which he had now in some measure changed and greatly strengthened it, as is seen from verse 11. (2) That it is a former letter not preserved. (3) That it is a letter Paul had written, but not sent; for, on receiving further information from Stephanas, Fortunatus, and Achaicus, relative to the state of the church at Corinth, he suppressed that and wrote this, in which he considers the subject much more at large. Not to company with fornicators. Not to contract any intimacy or acquaintance with them, any more than is absolutely necessary.

10. Yet not altogether with the fornicators of this world, etc. In the above-mentioned former letter, Paul, in speaking of this matter, meant that the fornicator must be shunned as an outcast. The practice of the church should be in harmony with the discipline. He did not mean for them to withdraw their company entirely from the fornicators of the world—that is, those who are not members of the church; for in that case they could not expect to convert and lead them to Christ. For then must ye needs go out of the world. As the whole heathen world was addicted to the vice here named, Paul did not mean for the church to refrain altogether from conversing with the heathen; for in that case all civil commerce must cease, and there would be no chance to convert them to Christ.

11. But now I have written unto you not to keep company, etc. He now explains what he meant in his former letter. Christians should not have social intercourse with persons whose fellowship is withdrawn from for the sins here named. Called a brother. That is, professes to be a follower of Christ. Be a fornicator. One practicing any unlawful cohabiting. Covetous. One who wants more of a thing than he ought to have; one who is greedy of money or of sensual pleasure. Idolater. One who worships idols or false gods. (Acts 17: 16; 1 Cor. 10: 7.) This may include the making of any image or likeness of God or any creature for a religious end (Deut. 5: 8; Gal. 5: 20); all human inventions thrust into the worship of God (Deut. 12: 32); the setting of the heart inordinately upon any creature (Phil. 3: 19); an inordinate love of, and distrustful care for, the things of the world (Col. 3: 5). A railer. One who rails, or reviles. A drunkard. One given to habitual intemperance. Extortioner. One who collects unlawful gain from others. Unlawful interest for money or for anything else is extortion. No not to eat. Christians should not eat with one professing to be a follower of Christ who is either "a fornicator, or covetous, or an idolater, or a railer, or a drunkard, or an extortioner." This is the lowest degree of familiarity. Some think that a Christian should not eat with such characters either at the Lord's table or at a friendly meal. I am inclined to think that Paul meant for Christians not to associate or participate with one who is "called a brother," guilty of either of the above sins of long standing, in the service of God or in worldly affairs, in a way that would cause him or the world to think that he is recognized as a brother in good standing. Let the offender have this extra mark of your abhorrence of all sin, that the world may see that the church of God does not tolerate iniquity. An everlasting and safe rule is that a conscientious Christian should choose, as far as possible, the company, intercourse, and familiarity of good men, and such as fear God; and avoid, as far as his necessary affairs will permit, the conversation and fellowship of such as Paul here describes. He does not forbid Christians from eating a social meal or transacting worldly affairs with a person that does not know God and makes no pretensions to Christianity, whatever his moral character may be. The command is limited to "any man that is called a brother." The apostle tells the Corinthians that he had written to them in this or some other epistle, before he was fully informed of their affairs, not to company with fornicators—that is, to shun all irtimacy and familiarity with infidels or unbelievers; but that he did not mean or intend that they should have no converse or commerce with them, because they lived among unbelievers and could not go out of the world. But now, since he had been fully informed of the evil of this incestuous person, who was certainly a member of the church, he warns them to avoid all brotherly intimacy and familiarity with scandalous Christians, lest the church be thought to favor such. Encourage no such to come to your own table, much less to Christ's. Observe: (1) That all unnecessary society and intimate familiarity with scandalous Christians ought to be avoided, that the religion of Christ may not be thought to favor them and the church may not suffer by them. (2) That, as the church ought to purge out such and separate them from her fellowship, so is it every private Christian's duty to avoid that familiarity with them which is in their power, even that which lieth in friendly eating with them. (3) If civil eating with scandalous Christians be forbidden at our own table, much less ought any church to encourage them at the Lord's table, which was never spread for such guests.

12. For what have I to do to judge them also that are without? The term "without" includes only those who are not members of the church. Another thought explaining his former letter. It was not Paul's object, and it should not be ours, to judge those out of the church, and therefore the rule just given is not one to regulate our intercourse with the world. It regulates our intercourse with those who have taken upon themselves the name of Christ. Do not ye judge them that are within? The term "within" means only those in the church. The jurisdiction of the church is over those who are members of it. It has no jurisdiction over the state. Christians have made a mistake in trying to mix church and state.

A NEW TRACT.

We have long realized the great results to be obtained through use of tracts. With very little cost every congregation could scatter them freely over their respective communities. The Adventists and others demonstrate what can be done through the use of tracts printed in quantities for free distribution.

We have just issued a small, eight-page leaflet, entitled "Importance of Being Right Religiously," by James A. Allen. Prices: 100 for $2.25; 500 for $8.50; or 1,000 for $15.

Congregations can do much good by ordering five hundred or one thousand of these leaflets and having their members distribute them over their neighborhoods. In addition to the great good that will be done in reaching outsiders, work of this kind will do great good in increasing activity among the members.

Send us an order for these leaflets and distribute them freely. Address all communications to the Gospel Advocate, 110 Seventh Avenue, North, Nashville, Tenn.

A RECONCILIATION.

We are glad to be able to state that the two congregations of our colored brethren, known as the Jackson Street and Jefferson Street churches of Christ, of Nashville, have settled their differences and will henceforth be as they were before the division occurred.

Representatives of the two congregations met with the South Hill congregation, of this city, having invited the undersigned to meet with and assist them in the settlement of their troubles.

Brethren M. Keeble and G. P. Bowser, two of our ablest colored preachers, had drawn up a document in which they had settled the personal differences between themselves, and in which, also, they submitted a proposition to the two congregations on which, in their judgment, they should come together and be as they were before the division.

Brother F. W. Smith was made chairman of the meeting, and after the reading of said document and a free discussion of it by a number of visiting preachers from congregations out of the city, as well as leaders from the Jackson Street and Jefferson Street congregations, the terms of the document were accepted by both sides and the "hatchet buried."

The discussion throughout was characterized by a splendid spirit, and many white congregations would do well, in the settlement of difficulties, to follow the same spirit manifested by these colored brethren.

The Jefferson Street congregation is to return to Jackson Street as the place for the worship of all, and at a future time, if deemed advisable, Jackson Street will select a suitable location for a new congregation and build a house in which those who may desire to worship in the new place may do so with mutual agreement and the full fellowship and cooperation of those who remain at Jackson Street.

ATTENTION, BROTHER PREACHERS!

There will be a preachers' meeting at Bartlseville, Okla., in February. All preachers, elders, and song leaders are invited. Watch for further announcements. The exact date will be given later. Begin now to make preparations to attend.

Santa Fe Avenue Church of Christ,

Will W. Slater, Minister.

Brother Slater is an able gospel preacher and is a great and good man. But we wish to say that to have a "preachers' meeting" is a step in the wrong direction. Any meeting that is larger than the meeting of a local congregation is sinful. We recognize that visitors may attend the meetings of a congregation. We also recognize that in some senses there is nothing wrong in a company of preachers getting together and enjoying one another's company. But popery started with that small a beginning, and it is dangerous. Brethren, stop it!

Remember, after all, that a man's reputation is only what men think him to be; his character, what God knows him to be.—Carmack.

SERMON OUTLINES

NEW AND ENLARGED EDITION

A Book of Three Hundred New Sermon Outlines

BY A. J. BACHMAN.

Just the book for preachers, elders, deacons, Bibleclass teachers, and others that take public part in church services.

The book has three hundred sermon outlines and a helpful supplement containing funeral texts, marriage ceremonies, forms for church letters, and Hedge's "Rules" for debate.

A good book to use in your Lord's-day services, prayer meetings, and young people's meetings. Let the leader announce the subject, hand slips of paper containing different sections of the outline to the members who are to take part in the next meeting, requesting them to make a talk or read the scriptural references on that section of the outline. Or, let the leader put the outline on the blackboard, omitting the scriptural references, then ask the congregation to supply the correct scriptural references at the next meeting, and give reasons why they selected these references.

SEEING THE INVISIBLE.

BY JAMES E. CHESSOR.

"BY FAITH, NOT BY SIGHT."

"I hear beyond the range of sound, I see beyond the range of sight."

These exuberant lines of Thoreau grew out of his "transcendental" philosophy. He taught that there are forces and realities which the senses do not perceive. I am not interested in the almost forgotten theory of the so-called "transcendentalists." It serves to remind me only that in the Christian life the realities—the eternal things—are invisible. We see—if we have eyes that see—these invisible things by faith, not by sight. These unseen realities are not discovered to the senses, but faith reveals them. And blessed is that disciple who has eyes that see and ears that hear.

What is faith itself but "assurance of things hoped for, a conviction of things not seen?" Let us observe how faith reveals the unseen. The creation of the worlds, or the universe, for example, is among "the things not seen." "By faith we understand that the worlds have been framed by the word of God, so that what is seen hath not been made out of things which appear." Our knowledge of the creation rests upon our faith in the word of God. It is thus that we understand the creation, the origin of the universe and of man. But mockers have come in these last days with mockery. These are the agnostics, infidels, materialists, evolutionists, higher critics. And they "willfully forget, that there were heavens from of old, and an earth compacted out of water and amidst water, by the word of God." "In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth." "And God created man in his own image."

Take the case of Noah, who, "being warned of God concerning things not seen as yet, moved with godly fear, prepared an ark to the saving of his house." This he did "by faith." "By faith Noah, being warned." At that time there was not a solitary sign of a coming deluge. The fixed order of nature continued right on as it was from the beginning. It had never been interrupted. The sun rose and set, days passed, the seasons went on perpetually. The rains fell, the winds blew, and there was seedtime and harvest. Noah could see no indication of a flood; the sinful world saw none. But Noah believed God. and they did not. Hence, in "those days which were before the flood they were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, until the day that Noah entered into the ark, and they knew not until the flood came, and took them all away." But Noah knew, and despite the jeers and gibes of the world, "moved with godly fear, he prepared an ark to the saving of his house; through which he condemned the world." He believed the divine intimation simply upon the word of God. By faith he saw the impending destruction.

There are other examples. What marvelous things faith revealed to Abraham! In the first place, the promised inheritance. "By faith Abraham, when he was called, obeyed to go out unto a place which he was to receive for an inheritance; and he went out, not knowing whither he went." But God gave him "none inheritance in it, no, not so much as to set his foot on." Nevertheless "he promised that he would give it to him in possession, and to his seed after him, when as yet he had no child." And Abraham believed God. "By faith he became a sojourner in the land of promise, as in a land not his own: . . for he looked for the city which hath the foundations, whose builder and maker is God." Thus it was that he desired a better country—that is, a heavenly. Faith revealed it to him. And then, when he offered Isaac, the promised seed, he beheld him, as it were, raised from the dead before he lifted his hand to strike the mortal blow. "By faith Abraham, being tried, offered up Isaac: . . accounting that God is able to raise up, even from the dead; from whence he did also in a figure reveive him back." Moreover, faith revealed to Abraham the coming Messiah, the culmination of the promise. "Your father Abraham," said Jesus to Jewish critics, "rejoiced to see my day; and he saw it, and was glad."

One other example will suffice—Moses. It is said of him that he "endured as seeing him who is invisible." By faith he could see the invisible God. And this caused him to endure the hardness of the wilderness travail. We shall learn more of this presently.

THE INVISIBLE REALITIES.

The deepest things in life are invisible. A boy ran home from school, saying: "The teacher says that tears are just salt and water. I'll not be sorry any more when I make my mother cry!" No-tears are more than that. In the thoughtlessness of childhood you oftentimes made your mother cry. And when you saw her silent tears, the very sight touched you to the quick. What made you steal off to your room and cry as if your own heart would break? Why, you knew that you had wounded her gentle heart. Tears are much more than "salt and water," then. So, also, home is not the walls, the floors, the ceilings, the rugs and pictures, merely. Home is a whole invisible set of relationships reaching back into childhood and living on through all the years to come. An old letter turns up in a dusky trunk, a pressed flower, or a bit of faded dress. What makes one wipe one's eyes and try hard to suppress the lump that rises in one's throat? An invisible world. Just so the deepest passions of humanity are linked with the invisible.

Are not the invisible things the real things, after all? They count for more. Indeed, they are the main things. Paul bade believers "look not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen: for," he adds. significantly, "the things which are seen are temporal; but the things which are not seen are eternal." eternal things, then, are the things of greater value. Do they not, indeed, make our lives what they are? Do they not urge us on, duty bound, submissive, obedient, to whatscever end? Do they not impel us to organize our time, turn everything to the main end, watch our diet and sleep and health, hide in our hearts the word of God, live a life of prayer and service, and order into one the immense complexity of a life in the presence of a chaotic, sinful world? Surely so, if our mind is set on the things that are above, not on the things that are upon the earth. Truth is, the invisible is the wellspring of the Christian life. "For ye died, and your life is hid with Christ in God." Our "citizenship is in heaven," and while sojourning here "we walk by faith, not by sight."

The realities which determine the Christian are invisible. We believe that God is. "No man hath seen God at any time," though we see his manifestations. "For the invisible things of him since the creation of the world are clearly seen, being perceived through the things that are made, even his everlasting power and divinity. He left himself not without witness. Nature in many voices and manifestations testifies to Nature's God. More important still, God hath spoken. In these last days he has spoken unto us through his Son. So we believe in Jesus also. We believe in the reality of the invisible God, in the divinity of his Son. We would see Jesus, and we see him in the selfsame way that we see God. He appeared to Saul on the Damascus road, but he does not so appear now. We see him manifested in his word, in the fruits of Christianity.

Forgiveness also is invisible, and so is the efficacy of the sacrificial blood on which it depends. Many men passed by the cross of our Lord on that tragic but victorious day and saw the blood dropping from his wounds and staining the cross and the ground, yet none saw what it meant. So, too, eternal life is an unseen reality with manifestations that cannot be hid.

THE HIDDEN LIFE.

Paul speaks of the hidden life. "For ye died," he says, "and your life is hid with Christ in God." They died, and yet they live; the wellspring and secret of the new life is unseen—hidden with Christ in God. The world cannot account for this life issuing from hidden sources, from the deep cavern of the converted heart. No marvel, for sinners have had no such experiences. They drink, but thirst again; we drink, and from within a well of living water springs up unto eternal life. They look on the temporal merely; we look on the eternal.

Our life is hidden—and yet it cannot be hid. Its issues are manifest. It is a good tree, and so its fruit is known. It is a candlestick, and so its light shines forth. The secret of such a life is a vital connection with Christ. The branch abides in the Vine, and so bears much fruit.

And the sight of the invisible brings the power of endurance. Moses, we have seen, "endured as seeing him who is invisible." That is how he held out against the awful spiritual loneliness and deadening contacts of the wilderness. That is how he bore up against the obstinacy, fleshliness, ingratitude, and unbelief of those disheartening people. That is how he endured the long labor of forty years, and, having endured every test, laid his life down this side of the thing he had been promised. He endured as seeing Him who is invisible. He saw Him who held him, and held him ever more securely with every added difficulty and every added desertion of friends, and all things else visible and human. And if we see Him who is invisible, we, too, shall hold on. We shall lay hold, seeing that we also are laid hold on by Christ Jesus. We shall endure unto the end.

NOTES FROM WEST TENNESSEE. BY JOHN R. WILLIAMS.

To-morrow (November 11) brings the ever-to-be-remembered "three elevens" when thousands of hearts were made happy and as many eyes filled with tears of joy. The great World War ceased for a while, which will be renewed in years to come unless the people of God work with all their might to spread the gospel to earth's remotest bounds.

The armistice of nations was one of the greatest events of modern or former times. But I see another armistice that is sad indeed. Old soldiers of the cross, men who were once devoted to God and his service, doing all they could by exemplary lives to lead the young people to the Christ. But—alas!—with many of the old veterans the war against Satan has ceased; they have signed the armistice with the enemy of souls. I have in mind some who were once regular in attendance at the worship of God on the first day of the week that now are scarcely ever seen in the assembly of the children of God. They are seen at their places of business till late on Saturday night and early on Monday morning, but are conspicuously absent when the faithful are meeting to worship God.

Sometimes elders of congregations are very irregular in attendance at the worship. By their actions they say to the young members that it is not necessary to meet for worship on the first day of the week; hence, another armistice, this time with the devil. God requires the older to be an example for the young, but an example for good and not for the bad. When an elder is unfaithful to God, how can he expect to have the confidence of the congregation? Naturally they lose confidence in him and have no respect for his pretended Christianity. The headache or some minor ill of a man's wife will hold him hard and fast at home on Lord's day, but that headache can't hold him on Monday morning. You can see him at his place of business bright and early, with a smile from ear to ear, as though his heart were filled with joy over the blessings of the worship and the encouragement he gave to the younger members. A feather is a very small thing, but it indicates the direction the wind is blowing. Man's actions are the feathers that give evidence of the true condition of his heart and the direction he is going. At one time in life I thought more people wanted to be saved in heaven than I do now. Go to any congregation in Lake County or Obion County, and you will see only a few. faithful men and women present. You can see other members out car riding or at home giving special attention to a complaining wife or cross child. He loves them so dearly on Lord's day-can't afford to be out of their sight! How strange that that great love can cool off by Monday morning and let them take care of themselves! Often I hear young members say: "I have no confidence in Brother —." Sad, sad for the church member when his own brethren lose confidence in him! The fight is on, and so few soldiers. "And because iniquity shall be multiplied, the love of the many shall wax cold." This "waxing cold" is in evidence to-day. A man obeyed the gospel (others thought) whose after life was not in accord with the teaching of the Bible. This man has a brother who makes no pretension to Christianity, who was asked how his brother was getting along since he was baptized. He answered: "O, he is doing pretty well; he has quit cussin' in public." After all, I judge he was about right, as many never quit "cussin' in public." They "cuss" on and do any old mean thing they want to, and are not disciplined for it.

Discipline—another armistice, this time between elders and the nemy. If a preacher says or does something considered wrong, then you can hear from them—telling it to the world. Why is it some are so ready to tell to the world the faults of others instead of trying to get the wrongdoer to repent? Certainly such a course is out of line with the teaching of Christ. But in West Tennessee we have all kinds of folks, and among the "all kinds" there are a few who are trying to do their duty to God and their fellow man. Life is short, and death is certain; so let us all do our full duty, and all will be well when the last hour comes, for coming it is to one and all.

- L. D. Cummings, Panhandle, Texas, November 12: "I closed a successful mission meeting at Cheyenne, Okla., with three baptized. We hope to establish a live congregation at that place. Three such meetings have been held in Roger Mills County, and three congregations are the result. All told, there were thirteen baptisms."
- R. V. Cawthon, Mount Juliet, Tenn., November 12: "I recently held my tenth meeting with the church of Christ at Olmstead, Ky., with six baptisms. From there I went to Allensville, Ky., and held an eight-days' meeting, with no additions. On November 15 I am to begin at Zanesville, Ohio, with a small band. This will be my second meeting with them."
- W. R. Pewett, Dickson, Tenn., November 9: "Brother Allen's article in the Gospel Advocate of November 5 is one of the best pieces I have ever read from his gifted pen. I am hoping to see it put in tract form, that I may hand them out to my neighbors. I agree to take two dozen to start with. This piece is certainly to the point and just what is needed."

Price Billingsley, Summit, Ga., November 9: "The meeting at Charlotte Avenue, Nashville, Tenn., closed with more than a hundred added to the congregation—more than seventy by baptism, the others being restored or taking membership. Throughout we had deep interest and fine attendance. The church seemed in perfect readiness for a meeting and all had 'a mind to work.' I am now in a meeting in South Georgia, with a fair start and an encouraging outlook."

R. A. Craig, Winchester, Ky., November 12: "We are planning to hold a month's meeting at Frankfort, Ky., beginning sometime in April. We will make a great effort to establish a church there. We have secured C. R. Nichol and A. J. Veteto to assist us. We will need some money to finance this work, and I feel sure we will have a ready response from brethren elsewhere. I have spent the greater part of my preaching life in this section, and feel that there is no place that needs the primitive message of our Lord more than this one. The 'digressives' are very strong here, but we have a number of good brethren who stand foursquare for the truth. Had we been as active and awake as the 'digressives,' many of our church houses would not have been taken away from us, and the school at Lexington would not have been taken over by the evolutionists. I will send in some subscribers to the Gospel Advocate soon."

- R. D. Smith, Bonham, Texas, November 13: "I shall try to stir up the folks I meet to renew or subscribe for the Gospel Advocate. I am glad to do this in the interest of so good a cause. My 'weakness' for the Advocate is very great, for my father read it in my first recollections, and I have now been a reader of the paper for more than twenty years. May the Lord bless you in your efforts to give us the very best paper it is possible to put out. If I may be of service to you at any time, please command me.
- L. W. Hinson, Hohenwald, Tenn., November 11: "I love the Gospel Advocate because it sounds true to the Book that I love and the cause for which I am giving my life, and I can hardly wait for the time to roll around for the Advocate to come. May the Lord bless the men at the head of the Advocate staff. I am using what little talent I have to the very best of my ability. I have had better meetings this year than ever before. I have more calls than I can fill. I have never met Brother Allen, but I love him for the bold stand he is making for the truth of God. I never tire reading his articles in the Advocate."
- F. O. Howell, Jackson, Tenn., November 2: "I will begin a four-days' debate with John R. Clark (Missionary Baptist), of Martin, Tenn., at Clover Port, between Toone, Tenn., on the Illinois Central Railroad, and Hatchie, Tenn., on the Nashville, Chattanooga and St. Louis Railway, November 24. The general church question will be discussed, each of us affirming two days. Those attending from a distance and coming over the Illinois Central Railroad should write T. E. Anderson, Bolivar, Tenn.; those coming over the Nashville, Chattanooga and St. Louis Railway should write Joe Crews, Mercer, Tenn."
- W. A. Sisco, Hohenwald, Tenn., November 12: "I have been able to conduct only four meetings this year, resulting in thirty-two baptisms and fifteen restorations. I broke down in my last meeting and am back at Lawrenceburg again under treatment. The doctor says I will have to quit the pulpit for a time, probably all winter. I need treatment all winter and probably longer, but see no way now to meet expenses. It is grievous to have to give up preaching, but I pray the Lord to safely lead me through this dark valley and land me safely on the other shore in a condition that I can yet do the greatest work of my life. Success to the Gospel Advocate. I am so thankful to see its pages so clean, clear of wrangles and hobbies."

Robert E. Wright, Bradentown, Fla., November 9: "The work here is doing well. The house was filled yesterday, and there was one addition to the church. The Sunday before we had two baptisms at the morning service. The Sunday before that we had one confession at Cortez, Fla., at night, and baptized the young lady on Monday following. B. C. Goodpasture, of Atlanta, Ga., and Elam Derryberry, of Portland, Tenn., will begin a meeting with the church here on November 29. We will use the Palace Theater on Sundays during the meeting and the church house at night through the week. The church at Bradentown is now having plans drawn for a new church building, which we hope to begin near the first of next year."

- H. J. Stafford and wife, 76 Corneal Street, Ludlow, Ky., November 13: "It will be remembered by many readers of the Gospel Advocate that some months ago we, through the Advocate, requested prayers for our daughter, Pauline Stafford, who was then in very poor health, and from that notice she received many sweet and comforting letters from Christians everywhere, assuring her of their prayers. It would now be impossible for us to answer all of these letters, but this note is to say to all that God did not see fit to spare her, but permitted her departure to the world unseen, and, we fully believe, to a perfect rest. Our hearts are torn and bleeding, but we bow to the will of God, and now ask Christians everywhere to pray for us who loved her so."
- J. E. Wainwright, Shreveport, La., November 11: "The Newport meeting was a profound success. The 'digressives' have been growing fat at the expense of our folks. People moving to Newport from neighboring congregations, not being taught nor warned, drifted into the wrong pew.' I was instrumental in making a great inroad on them. I left about fifty-five or sixty to proceed 'as it is written.' I preached one night at Brinkley and baptized one young lady. Despite heavy rains and impassable roads, the Brashear meeting was well attended. Digression was thoroughly exposed. J. W. Ferrill, of Fort Worth, directed the singing in an excellent manner. The Shreveport work grows in every righteous way. I recently appealed for one hundred mission meetings in Louisiana during 1926. Four gospel preachers have offered their services. I want members in various parts of the State to write me quickly, and I will arrange a meeting. I am to begin at Kosse on November 17."

Conducted for a half century by D. Lipscomb, E. G. Sewell, F. D. Srygley, and J. C. McQuiddy.

EDITORIAL

A WRONG CLASSIFICATION.

BY F. W. SMITH.

Much of the misunderstanding and consequent confusion and strife results from a "wrong classification" of things taught in the religious world. For instance, those who use instrumental music in the worship of God class such music with hymnbooks, meetinghouses, benches, carpets, tuning forks, etc., when there is the width of the universe between the use of such music and the things with which it is classed.

Now, those disciples who oppose such music in the worship of God are quick to detect and successfully expose the wrong classification above mentioned? What, then? Why, some of these very disciples make the same blunder of "wrong classification" as do those who use instrumental music in the worship. In what way, do you ask, are they guilty of the same mistake?

Well, in The Living Message, Brother J. N. Armstrong's paper, August 27, 1925, is an article from one of the regular contributors, J. F. Smith, in which he makes the mistake of a wrong classification. He is either trying to defend or to apologize for the doctrine that "Jesus Christ is not and never has been on David's throne, and that he is coming back to establish the kingdom prophesied by Daniel (2: 44, 45), set up a world power with headquarters in Jerusalem."

In order to make his apology plausible, he brings forward J. W. McGarvey, T. W. Brents, J. L. Martin, J. P. Martin, B. W. Johnson, Ashley S. Johnson, George Douglass, and J. A. Harding as differing on certain subjects, and perhaps guilty of speculation to some degree.

As a sample of the brother's classification, note the following:

J. W. McGarvey believed and taught that certain prophecies teach beyond question that the Jews will re-turn to Jerusalem and accept Christ and be blessed by Christianity at some future date. Dr. T. W. Brents took a square stand against this idea, openly declared he could see no such idea in the prophecies referred to. the dangerous speculator of these two great men in this matter of the return of the Jews to Jerusalem?

Once more:

Are the great, good men who have drawn different conclusions and advanced different theories as to the millennium—Martins, J. L. and P. J., the Johnsons, B. W. and Ashley S., George Douglass, T. W. Brents, J. A. Harding—all dangerous speculators? Or were they all safe teachers with their various conflicting theories, while the man who dares to speak nowadays on either side of any of the proposed solutions or theories, or to speak different from the forefathers, is a dangerous speculator? God save us from such factionalism! I am fully aware that faithful, good men, who have blessed and are blessing the world, who have lived and are living the Christian life beautifully, see the millennial question (as well as other questions) differently from me. God forbid that I manifest a factional spirit toward them.

REMARKS ON THE ABOVE.

- 1. To be charitable toward the author, we must attribute his wrong classification in aligning the brethren whose names he mentions with those who teach that "Christ is not on David's throne" to a lack of informa-
- 2. Not one of the men he mentions ever dreamed of teaching such doctrine; but if they had, a protest as loud as thunder would have been heard throughout the length and breadth of the land.

Long before I was born, in 1834, one John Thomas, a Christian preacher, a man well educated and an exceedingly forceful writer, espoused the doctrine that "there is no kingdom till he appears; for he appears, as the God of heaven, to set up the kingdom, and in so doing to break in pieces and consume all the kingdoms of the Gentiles (Dan. 2: 44)." (Italics mine.) (The Herald 1858.)

Again, this same man Thomas wrote:

A King who is to come from heaven, even Jesus the Anointed of Jehovah, who is to be the Supreme Ruler upon earth, and the fountain of all glory and honor. He is to sit upon his father David's throne, and to hold his court in Jerusalem, where he is to reign amid his Ancients gloriously; hence, it is termed the city of the Great King. The head of this government is the King of kings and the Lord of lords, and is so styled because all who will share Lord of lords, and is so styled because all who will share with him in the administration of the kingdom are themselves kings and lords, or rulers, associate with him. He is the King Immortal, whose dominion will not be transferred to a successor. Such is the head of the government of the world, whose palace will be on Mount Zion, the ancient site of his father David's throne. (Herald, Volume X., No. 8.)

This man was promptly and vigorously opposed by the leading brethren of that age. To what extent he was opposed can be seen by the following:

Dear Doctor: For several years past I have seen the sneers of Alexander Campbell and others in reference to you and your doctrine. I have frequently inquired of various brethren concerning your whereabouts and what you believed, but no one would or could tell me. I have also inquired of various publishers for your works, that I might ascertain for myself what you believed, but none could tell me. Well, I thought it strange that all our leading men should be everlastingly talking about your doctrine, etc.. and yet none of them tell me where I could get your writings, to see for myself what you did teach.

But. as we say, a good old Baptist brother, a minister, stayed at my house several days ago, and he told me that you were a destructionist, and also that he thought you lived at Richmond. Va., and that you published a paper advocating those views. Well, if such is the case, I say "Amen" to it; for I firmly believe it to be God's truth, and so I teach every Lord's day, though as yet I am acceland so I teach every Lord's day, though as yet I am nearly alone in my belief on that subject.

During the last three months I have had some four discussions on that subject with various preachers, which have made quite a stir here, and have convinced one of my opponents of the truth. But my brethren are trying to put me down (I belong to what are nicknamed the "Campbellites"). Well, I can put them down by arguments. But the devil's method of refuting an opponent I can't approbate; so I suppose they will turn me out of their synagogue, like they did you.

Please let me know what works you publish, and the price by mail. I remain your brother in Christ,
W. S. KNIGHT, M.D.

Fountain County, Ind., March 8, 1858.

Tolbert Fanning, through the columns of the Gospel Advocate, vigorously opposed the doctrine of Mr. Thomas, who, commenting on Acts 1: 6, "Lord, dost thou at this time restore the kingdom to Israel?" said: "The kingdom of David restored constituted 'the hope of Israel,' and the hope of the promise made of God to the fathers, to which the twelve tribes, instantly serving day and night, hope to come." No wonder Campbell, Fanning, and a host of other able men opposed such doctrine, that would have Jesus Christ "restoring" a kingdom born in rebellion against God-"And Jehovah said unto Samuel, Hearken unto the voice of the people in all that they say unto thee; for they have not rejected thee, but they have rejected me, that I should not be king over them" (1 Sam. 8: 7)—and destroyed by him—"Where now is thy king, that he may save thee in all thy cities? and thy judges, of whom thou saidst, Give me a king and princes? I have given thee a king in mine anger, and have taken him away in my wrath" (Hos. 13: 10, 11).

The kingdom of Israel was a carnal institution, one that engaged in blood and slaughter, and yet we are asked to believe or tolerate such doctrine!

Mr. Thomas' false doctrine resulted in the formation of a sect he called "the church of Christ," and he drew away a number of disciples with him. He founded a religious magazine through which to propagate his doctrine. What we are contending against now is the same doctrine opposed by Campbell and his colaborers. They had no fellowship with men teaching that doctrine, and neither do I.

3. No one has ever raised any issue with those teaching the things mentioned by J. F. Smith, further than to say there is nothing practical in such speculation. What we have opposed is the dethroning of the Lord Jesus Christ by saying he "is not and never has been on David's throne," and this we will continue to oppose, although our good brother, J. N. Armstrong, terms such teaching "harmless speculation." If Peter preached the truth on Pentecost, Christ is on David's throne (Acts 2: 25-36), and any doctrine to the contrary dethrones the Son of God. I unhesitatingly say that no one can become a Christian, a child of God, and believe the doctrine that Jesus Christ same class with the unbelieving Jews, for it is a rejection is not on David's throne. He who so believes is in the of the teaching of the Holy Spirit.

WHAT IS TEACHING THE BIBLE? BY E. A. ELAM.

A request has come for a reproduction of an article on teaching the Bible which appeared some time ago, but I cannot recall just what points were stressed in the article or just when it appeared. I can make an attempt at writing another.

It is very important both to study and to teach the Bible. The Bible is a revolution of both God himself and of the will of God to men. No one can know who God is and what God is without an earnest study of the Bible, and certainly no one can learn his will except from the Bible. As important, then, as it is to know God and to do his will, it is just that important to study the Bible.

But the question of this article is, What is it to teach the Bible to others? All should realize the duty to teach it to others. Parents are commanded to teach it diligently to their children (Deut. 6: 4-9; Eph. 6: 4; 2 Tim. 3: 15; 2 Tim. 1: 5), and all in the church should become able and are expected by the Lord to teach it to others (Acts 8: 4; Rom. 15: 14; 2 Tim. 2: 2; Heb. 5: 11-14). Study these passages.

Being able to impart instruction to others is very necessary in order to be a teacher. This is no small accomplishment. As the Bible is so much greater than all other books, it is that much more necessary to be able to impart instruction from it. One who cannot impart instruction from the Bible cannot teach the Bible; such a one is not a teacher of the Bible. Really, there is very little teaching of the Bible done. There is much talking done before a class or congregation, but very little teaching. Sometimes the less one really knows of the facts, truths, and principles of the Bible and of the mercy and justice of God's dealings with men, the louder and the more one talks to a class or an entire congregation. Then, one's ability to teach the Bible or anything else cannot be measured by the amount of talking one does. I repeat, if one does not impart instruction from the Bible, one does not teach it.

It should be understood, furthermore, that arguing about some things in the Bible and spending much time in contending against the theories, notions, and errors of others and "picking up" somebody on some question is not necessarily teaching the Bible, but may be far from it. Teaching something about the Bible is not teaching the Bible. Teaching some things about the Bible may prove helpful to a better understanding of some things in the Bible, but that alone is not teaching the Bible. Telling pretty stories about the Bible is not teaching the Bible.

Teaching the Bible is causing others to know the Bible as the will of God and impressing them with the very great importance of obeying that will. No one has taught the Bible who has not caused others to know the will of God and who has not impressed the supreme duty of practicing it as it relates to all conditions and circumstances of life regarding both men and God. In this respect the Bible is different from and superior to all other books in the world. One may study law or learn astronomy whether or not one practices law or uses astronomy; but not so with the Bible. It must be obeyed. The one great end to be accomplished by both studying and teaching it is obedience to it. No one is fit to teach it who loses sight of this end.

Studying and teaching the Bible, then, is far more than studying and teaching literature, history, biography, philosophy, etc. There is such a thing as "holding a form of godliness, but having denied the power thereof;" of "ever learning, and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth." (2 Tim. 3: 5, 7.) This should not be done, but it will be done unless great care is taken and much earnestness is manifested in practicing what is learned.

For instance, no preacher of the gospel or teacher of the whole counsel of God can confine his study of the Scriptures to a few sermons he may preach with fluency; but he must study the whole Bible in order to present himself "approved unto God [not unto men], a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, handling aright the word of truth." (2 Tim. 2: 15.) Every teacher, as well as every preacher, must study to know "all things that pertain unto life and godliness," which God has granted unto all "through the knowledge of him that called us by his own glory and virtue." (2 Pet. 1: 2-4.) This cannot be done through the knowledge of anything else.

Very great responsibility rests upon teachers and preachers in the church—teachers of the young and old. The light and indifferent way, the careless and unprepared way in which very many go at this most important work shows that they feel but little, if any, responsibility.

To teach means to cause to know. One has not taught a person anything until one has caused that person to know that thing. A teacher has not taught his class grammar or arithmetic until he has caused his class to know grammar or arithmetic. That the class has not learned these things may be the teacher's fault; he may not be competent to impart the instruction. Some who are called "teachers" are not teachers. That the class has not learned these things, on the other hand, may be the class' fault. In either case, the teacher has not taught the class grammar or arithmetic. The best mathematician in the world cannot teach higher arithmetic, algebra, geometry, astronomy, etc., to the kindergarten class, simply for the reason that that class cannot yet comprehend these studies. Just so, one has not taught the Bible to others until one has caused others to know the Bible and to feel the responsibility of obedience to it. Also, it is true that one who does not know the Bible certainly cannot teach it. On the other hand, one may not be able to teach it because others will not learn it.

For this people's heart is waxed gross, and their ears are dull of hearing, and their eyes they have closed; lest haply they should perceive with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and understand with their heart, and should turn again, and I should heal them. (Matt. 13: 15.)

Let it be repeated, that one who does not study and who does not know the Bible cannot teach it to others. On the other hand, however much one studies and however well one understands the Bible, one cannot teach the lessons which are called "solid food," which are adapted to the full-grown in the church, to children, or babes in Christ, to whom the lessons called "spiritual milk" are adapted. As has just been quoted, Paul instructs Timothy to give diligence to present himself "approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, handling aright the word of truth," or properly applying the word of God. We now should receive and should follow the same instruction. We are not wiser than the Lord. We should study the Bible, and in teaching it should give diligence "to give each his portion in due season"-that is, to adapt the teaching of the word of God to the understanding or comprehension of the ones we seek to teach, telling children that which God says to them (and telling it in so simple a manner that they can understand it), and telling the full-grown that which God says to them. This will be causing young and old to understand the will of God.

It appears ridiculous for a brother who has not studied the chapter or the lesson which he proposes to teach to object to the ones who are competent to teach children and the ones who are competent to teach grown people classifying all and teaching all according to ability to learn. In fact, that alone is teaching. Hence, children become tired and restless during a long sermon, and the babies cry. Neither they nor their mothers can be blamed. In no school or college in the land would a man be tolerated as a teacher who does not understand the subject he undertakes to teach, or who would undertake to teach the same subject at the same time in the same manner to all pupils—in other words, who does not classify his pupils according to ability to learn. Again, no teacher would be tolerated who stands before his classes and talks and talks all the time away, and that, too, about something foreign to the subject. Some call this "teaching the Bible" or "preaching the gospel."

Teaching the Bible is implanting the word of God, as the good seed, with all the meaning and life of the word of God, in the hearts of others, or inducing others to so receive it. This great truth is impressed in different ways in the Bible.

BROTHER JACKSON'S "APPEAL TO THE CANDID." BY F. B. SRYGLEY.

The reader is requested to read carefully the article of Brother Lee Jackson, on page 1107 of this paper, before reading what I here say.

It will be noted that Brother Jackson refers to Dr. Wood's booklet as a "carefully prepared pamphlet, written in defense of Brother R. H. Boll." I do not know whether Brother Jackson was trying to name Dr. Wood's booklet or not when he called it a "defense of Brother R. H. Boll." But why should Brother Boll need any defense? The effort of Dr. Wood and Brother Jackson to make this a personal matter is gratuitous. The things taught by Boll and his associates should be examined on their merits without any regard for any one who may hold to them. We should all put the truth above any man and not try to stir up prejudice either for or against Brother Boll. He does not need any defense if he is right, and I am sure he does not if he is wrong; so why write a book in his defense, or why write an article for the paper to defend any of these brethren? Brethren Wood and Jackson could easily employ their time better. Little personal matters and unkind things are needless, I admit, but it is the truth on the teaching of the Bible that this world needs. What difference does it make whether Boll is pious and kind, so far as what he teaches on the kingdom is concerned? It is an evidence of a weak cause when brethren begin to play upon the passions of themselves and others over some one who they think has been mistreated, and in that way lose sight of the question at

For some cause Brother Jackson expressed fear that his article would not be acceptable to the Advocate in these words: "This booklet is accompanied by a personal request for me to read it and then express my views of its subject-matter candidly and impartially. With this request before me, I am writing this, not knowing whether it will be acceptable to the managers of the Advocate or not." I would suppose that Dr. Wood expected Brother Jackson to write him a personal letter and not a review of his book for the Advocate. My reasons for this opinion are: (1) On its face the request has that appearance to me. (2) In the Doctor's book, on page 6, he says: "In private conversation with Brother Boll about the brethren who are saying so many unkind things about him personally, he refers to them in kindly and brotherly terms, which is unquestionably characteristic of a Christian. And yet you say that Boll does the disfellowshiping? Are you not wrong? If you are not yet convinced that you are wrong, suppose you just write a note to some of our papers and mildly suggest that Boll may be 'worthy of our respect and love, after all,' and see what sort of treatment you will receive! Try, my brother, just try it." Brother Jackson's course in sending his communication to the Advocate looks very much like he was not quite convinced that he is wrong and is trying out the Doctor's suggestion. If that is the idea, it looks like I have "spoiled the Doctor's playhouse" by publishing Brother Jackson's communication in its entirety. If Brother Jackson was not quite convinced that he was wrong and it takes a refusal to publish his mild suggestion that Boll may be worthy of our fellowship, then both Jackson and Wood are doomed to disappointment; for I have published his suggestion, and I expect to treat him right by pointing out his errors.

In the beginning Brother Jackson says: "In most respects, considering what others have busied themselves in writing, it is timely." "In most respects!" I wish he had told us in what respect it is not timely. Why not go to the bottom of this thing and say, if Brother Boll had not written his worthless theory, there never would have been reason for the "Whiteside-Nichol Review," because there would have been nothing to review, and then in all respects the needless book of Dr. Wood could never have been timely?

Brother Jackson assumes that Boll has the right to write these books; that, according to his own statement, "there is nothing in it that can be claimed as essential matter of gospel teaching." It is timely to write that kind of nonessential stuff because some others "have injudiciously and overzealously drawn attention to Boll's teaching." I suppose it is perfectly judicious for Boll to preach his worthless theory and call all the attention he can to it, but for any one to call attention to the plain teaching of the Bible is very injudicious and overzealous! I went to school with Lee Jackson, but I confess he surprises me with his reasoning. The brother must "have it in" for some one, but I confess it is neither Boll nor Dr. Eugene Wood.

Brother Jackson gets in his hobby that "there is no general or catholic church." No wonder he is easy on "hobby riders." I do not know about a "general or catholic church," but I do know that Jesus said: "Upon this rock I will build my church; and the gates of Hades shall not prevail against it." And I do not see how he could have meant a local church, either. "So the church throughout all Judea and Galilee and Samaria had peace." (Acts 9: 31.) This may not have been a "general or catholic church," but it was certainly something larger than any local congregation. Brother Jackson adds, "which needs a self-constituted board of directors to tell it what must be believed." I indorse that part of the statement with great pleasure. I do not even need Brother Jackson as "a self-constituted board" to tell me what to believe; but I certainly have the same right to teach as he has, and he and I can both do our best to teach every one we can, without any insinuation from him or Dr. Wood that we are "a self-constituted board." Be quiet, brethren; no one wants you to be governed by a "board," but we do want all to be governed by the plain word of God and stop foolish speculations which causes division and strife and does no good. There may be a number of Cyprians at this present time; but if I am one, Brother Jackson is not far behind, for he is doing just what I am, only he is trying to make excuse for error, while I am trying to encourage the teaching of the Bible.

The brother further says: "I have not been able to appreciate any given reason for the publication of the 'Whiteside-Nichol Review of R. H. Boll.'" I am glad to help you in this weakness, Brother Jackson. The reason for the "Whiteside-Nichol Review" is the three books which they reviewed. Now, since I have given him the reason for the review, will he be so kind as to give me the reason for the three booklets of Boll of which this is a review? The brother works at the wrong end of the proposition all the time. I reckon, with Jackson, Boll does not need a reason for what he does. He must be a privileged character that can act without a reason.

I guess the brother is right when he says: "There are numbers among us, and many of them are going out as preachers, who do not understand the meaning of our plea for the gospel without additions or subtractions, and consequently do not understand our plea for unity upon the basis of that gospel." I do not care so much about "our plea," but I do believe in unity upon the gospel. But will the belief of this doctrine help "our plea," whatever that is? And if not, should Brother Jackson offer only a mild objection to the doctrine, while he criticizes those who stand for the truth? Is Brother Jackson ignorant of the fact that this same speculation broke out in the days of Alexander Campbell under the name of "Thomasism?" One Dr. Thomas, as I have it in my mind, took this very same position about David's throne and that Christ will rule on the hill of Zion over temporal Israel. The leaders of this restoration did not temporize with this doctrine that attacks the preaching of Peter on the day of Pentecost when he said: "Being therefore a prophet, and knowing that God had sworn with an oath to him, that of the fruit of his loins he would set one upon his throne; he foreseeing this spoke of the resurrection of the Christ." (Acts 2: 30, 31.) This is a small matter with Brother Jackson; but those engaged in this restoration thought differently about it, for they drove them out to themselves and allowed the thing to die for want or support.

Brother Jackson can take his own course when I get through with him, but I could never recommend as a sound gospel preacher any man who becomes obsessed with this doctrine. It has already caused trouble in several churches, and it is not taught in the word of God. If these brethren believe these things, let them preach it to their heart's content; but by all means let the churches know that the doctrine is false and can do no one any good, but will do harm wherever it gets a foothold. Of course, Brother Jackson will never convert his Methodist neighbor while he is obsessed with this doctrine, for that is about all that some men can see when they think they see that. It has never prepared any one for the truth, but it did seem to prepare Martin and McHenry for the Adventists. These were two missionaries who were prepared to go to a foreign field by being loaded up with this doctrine, and, behold, the Adventists got them, and these good, pious souls that have so enlisted the sympathy of Brother Jackson continued to send the brethren's money to them for two months after they knew they had gone to the Adventists. I am sorry for these poor fellows, but I shall not allow my sympathy for them to cause me to fail to teach the word of God on the rule of Christ on the earth.

I think these things are altogether timely, and as long as I have the ability to teach them I shall continue to do so, Lee Jackson to the contrary notwithstanding.

WORD AWAY FROM WASHINGTON.

BY T. B. LARIMORE.

About 9:35 Monday, November 2, 1925, we—Mrs. Larimore, Misses Hilda and Louise Barnes, and I—said good-by to Washington City and the many friends who had braved the rain to bid us farewell and Godspeed on our westward journey. We said good-by reluctantly, yet hopefully—reluctant to leave the beautiful city we had learned to love and the friends we love still more, but looking forward hopefully to the joys we believed were ahead of us, along the way and in the Golden West toward which our faces were turned.

The first lap of our journey took us to New Orleans, which we reached Wednesday morning, finding it bright with sunshine and flowers. We laid aside our wraps and walked and walked that day, along the river docks, through the French Quarter of that strangely interesting city, crossed the Mississippi many times on a ferryboat, and saw many things strange and interesting. But I cannot tell you in detail now all we saw there, but will, when time and opportunity offer, go more fully into our visit to the Crescent City. "Word Away from Washington" must necessarily be brief while we are on the wing.

We left New Orleans Friday at 1:15 P.M., and after a pleasant night on the train, which served as a rather strenuous cradle, we reached Dallas, Texas, nearly two hours late and somewhat anxious about catching a train for Sherman, our destination that day. Fortunately for us, the train to Sherman was also late, and we had just time to board that train and keep our appointment with friends in Sherman.

It seemed to me very much like old times and good times to see the friends who met us at the train, and we were in a little while ensconced in comfortable quarters in the pleasant home of Brother G. C. Brewer, the well-beloved minister of the Sherman church of Christ. This home lacks nothing, so far as I can see, except the presence of its mistress. Sister Brewer is in a Dallas hospital, sick, and Brother Brewer and their little daughter, Elizabeth, are in charge of the household. While we miss the gentle mistress of the home and regret that she is not with us, we have the very best of care and attention, and lack for no good thing. We are hoping and praying that Sister Brewer may continue to improve, as she is now doing, and will soon be able to return to home and friends and loved ones.

Brother Brewer is truly a wonderful man. He plays the part of both host and hostess to our party of four, visits the sick, performs marriage ceremonies, preaches funerals—he has had a funeral and two marriages, one of which he passed on to me, since we came Saturday, and this is Monday; and besides all that, he has the cares that come upon him daily as the minister of a large congregation, and he does, and does well, all these duties.

I am enjoying greatly this sojourn in Sherman. Sherman has a peculiar hold on me, and I have a peculiar hold on Sherman. Thirty-one years ago I held here the longest series of meetings I have ever held—five full months—twenty-two weeks—preaching twice each week day and three times every Sunday. Many of the brethren and sisters who were here then were here yesterday, to welcome me, and many of the children and grandchildren of those who were members of the church here then are members of the present congregation. I am glad to be in Sherman and preach to the saints and faithful here a few days. I should be glad to stay six months and preach to them every day, but we must hasten on our way. We expect to say good-by to our friends here Wednesday and start for Los Angeles, our next stopping place, where we shall be next Sunday, November 15.

QUERY DEPARTMENT

BY H. LEO BOLES

Do Matt. 13: 55, 56; Mark 6: 3; John 2: 12; and Gal. 1: 19 have reference to the Savior's fleshly or spiritual brethren?—W. H. DOWNEY.

The scriptures referred to are as follows: "Is not this the carpenter's son? is not his mother called Mary? and his brethren, James, and Joseph, and Simon, and Judas? And his sisters, are they not all with us? Whence then hath this man all these things?" (Matt. 13: 55, 56.) "Is not this the carpenter, the son of Mary, and brother of James, and Joses, and Judas, and Simon? and are not his sisters here with us?" (Mark 6: 3.) "After this he went down to Capernaum, he and his mother, and his brethren, and his disciples; and there they abode not many days." (John 2: 12.) "But other of the apostles saw I none, save James the Lord's brother." (Gal. 1: 19.) All these scriptures seem to refer to the fleshly family and relationship of Jesus.

Please give scriptural authority for congregational singing. Jesus and his disciples sang a hymn (Mark 14: 26), but the church was not established. Paul and Silas sang. (Acts 16: 25.) That was the church in a sense, but they had not come together to worship God. I might mention Eph. 5: 19; Col. 3: 16, 17; Heb. 2: 12; Rom. 5: 9. Why not have solos, duets, etc.? Paul says: "What is it then, brethren? When ye come together, each one hath a psalm," etc. (1 Cor. 14: 26.) We are told to speak one to another in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs." (Eph. 5: 19.) We are exhorted to teach and admonish "one another with psalms and hymns and spiritual songs." (Col. 3: 16.) One preaches the gospel; why can't one sing the gospel?—J. H. HINES, Montgomery, Ala.

There is the same "scriptural authority for congregational singing" as there is for congregational praying. The church was not established when the Lord's Supper was given and when they sang a hymn, yet we have the Lord's Supper in the church. The church was not established when Jesus gave the instruction as recorded in Matt. 18: 15-20, in which Jesus says: "And if he refuse to hear them, tell it unto the church: and if he refuse to hear the church also, let him be unto thee as the Gentile and the publican." The church had not been established when this was spoken; it looked forward to the establishment of the church. So with many other things.

When the church assembles for worship, all should engage in the worship. The assembling is for the mutual edification and development of the entire assembly. All things should be done decently and in order. If an exhortation is given, all should share in the exhortation; if prayer is engaged in, all should pray; if praise is offered, all should join in the praise service; if teaching or instruction is offered, all should be edified. Nothing should be done merely for entertainment. "Let all things be done unto edifying," says Paul. Usually solos and duets are merely for entertainment and display. The very nature of a solo forbids others' praising God at that time.

The scriptures which bear upon the question of congregational singing are referred to by Brother Hines. "Speaking one to another in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing and making melody with your heart to the Lord." (Eph. 5: 19.) "Let the word of Christ dwell in you richly; in all wisdom teaching and admonisling one another with psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing with grace in your hearts unto God." (Col. 3: 16.) These scriptures are general in their application; they apply to all. They do not mean for one to sing and entertain the others, or for one to sing and the others to listen; all are to do what is required in these scriptures. I do not understand that one can praise God by proxy. Solos, quartets, and choirs entertain and attempt to worship God as by proxy. God accepts no substitute.

One can preach the gospel, and one may sing the gospel. In fact, all who preach should preach the gospel, and all who sing should sing the gospel—that is, they should sing the truth, true sentiment. No one should preach anything else but the gospel; neither should any one sing anything else but the truth. It is as important to sing the truth as it is to preach the truth. But the analogy is not true which is suggested by the querist. From the very nature of teaching, only one can teach at a time; all can sing at the same time.

I notice that Brother Boles, writing in the Query Department of the Gospel Advocate, says that "the word the' used by Jesus when he gave the cup to his disciples does not mean that they should use only one," and that any one teaching that it does is presuming to legislate where God has not, and that it is dangerous to legislate where God has not done so. But I maintain that if the word "the" as used by Jesus to designate the cup does not mean one, and only one, then the same word used by him to designate himself as the "way" when he said, "I am the way, the truth, and the life," does not mean that he is the only way. If, after the way Jesus designates the cup, it can safely be multiplied any number of times, then the "way" may also be multiplied any number of times to suit the world. Jesus also said that he was "the" true vine and his Father was the husbandman. Does he mean that he is the only true vine, or that there are as many true vines as may be desired? And does the word "the" designate the Father as the only husbandman, or are there many of them? If the word "the" designates Christ as the only way, as the only true vine, and the Father as the only husbandman of the vine, then it also designates the cup as only one. If not, why not?—John B. MORLEY, Trenton, Ky.

It has frequently been stated that this is not the place to argue a question. I am not opposed to arguing any question if good can be done by it, but insist that this department should not be burdened with controversy. It should not be cumbered with long-drawn-out arguments. In the first place, I have never stated that which Brother Mobley attributes to me. I have never stated that the word "the" used by Jesus when he gave the cup to his disciples does not mean that they should use only one. My point was that the fact that Jesus used only one cup in instituting the Lord's Supper was not given as a command that only one cup should be used by disciples to-day, any more than the fact that the Supper was given or instituted at night commands us to eat the Lord's Supper only at night. Furthermore, the Revised Version, which is the best version that we now have, does not use the word "the" before cup. In Matthew, Mark, and Luke, the Revised Version says "a cup"—that is, that Jesus took "a cup" and not "the cup." Hence, the Revised Version completely nullifies Brother Mobley's argument on the word "the" before cup.

Please explain 1 Cor. 11: 25, 26. Does this bear on close communion? A Missionary Baptist preacher said it did. Is close communion or open communion in the Bible? (2) To whom did Peter deny Christ? Was it a man or a woman? (3) Was Judas at the Lord's Supper? (4) Is it wrong for a Christian to go to plays, parties, and dances, if he doesn't play or dance?—WILLIE S. Hoops, Beaver Dam. Kv.

- 1. There is no such thing taught in the Bible as "close communion" or "open communion." The Lord's Supper is for the Lord's people. No one has a right to invite or debar a child of God. The Lord has invited his people. We have this instruction: "But let a man prove himself, and so let him eat of the bread, and drink of the cup." (1 Cor. 11: 28.)
- 2. Peter denied the Lord to "a maid," also "before them all." He denied his Lord to all who accused him of being his disciple. "Now Peter was sitting without in the court: and a maid came unto him, saying, Thou also wast with Jesus, the Galilean. But he denied before them all, saying, I know not what thou sayest. And when he was gone out into the porch, another maid saw him, and saith unto them that were there, This man also was with Jesus of Nazareth. And again he denied with an oath, I know not the man. And after a little while they that stood by came and said to Peter, Of a truth thou also art one of them; for thy speech maketh thee known. Then began he to curse and to swear, I know not the man. And straightway the cock crew. And Peter remembered the word which Jesus had said, Before the cock crow, thou shalt deny me thrice. And he went out, and wept bitterly." (Matt. 26: 69-75; see Mark 14: 66-72; Luke 22: 55-62; John 18: 25-27.)
  - 3. Yes. See John 13: 1-30.

4. Yes. "Prove all things; hold fast that which is good; abstain from every form of evil." (1 Thess. 5: 21, 22.) We are commanded to keep ourselves from the works of the flesh. The works of the flesh are mentioned in Gal. 5: 19-21. Paul here mentions fifteen different sins which are called "the works of the flesh." After mentioning them, he adds "and such like." He says further: "I forewarn you, even as I did forewarn you, that they who practice such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God." No Christian can gain anything by being present and encouraging anything that is wrong. It is wise to abstain from the very appearance of evil. Christians should learn to abhor the evil and cleave to that which is good, to cultivate all good inclinations and to suppress any works of the flesh.

PITHY PARAGRAPHS.

BY J. G. ALLEN.

The greatest mistake a human being ever made is to imagine that God does not mean what he says when he speaks to man, be he saint or sinner. The devil was the first one that ever did that, but now the idea has become very popular even with some professed gospel preachers. (See Gen. 3: 4, 5.)

***** * *

Jesus said: "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father who is in heaven." But there is a spirit abroad in the land to-day that says: "Nay, verily, he did not mean it." So we had better not take any chances, but do as Jesus says.

* * *

It is one of the easiest things in the world for the average man or woman to see the defects in others, but to see one's own defects is a different proposition altogether. It is truly a full-grown man's job (spiritually) to detect one's own defects, but a baby can see the shortcomings of others; and just think how many babies spiritually there are in the church!

**$ $ $

This accommodating spirit that manifests itself in so many preachers to-day is the spirit that led King Jeroboam to pervert God's law in his day, which caused the downfall and death of all that followed him. It produces a pleasing sensation within us to be called "broadminded," but it is better to be called an "old fogy" or "mossback" than to pervert the word of God. (See 1 Kings 12: 26.)

***** * *

It causes parents to feel sad if one of their children fails to grow to manhood or womanhood. Even so with our Heavenly Father. He wants all his children to become full-grown, and he has made ample provision to accomplish the desired end. His word is the food (1 Pet. 2: 1, 2), the Spirit of Christ is the drink (Rom. 8: 9), and to use his word as he directs is exercise that all who grow must take (Heb. 5: 12-14).

*** * ***

The reason why some Christians can't see any good in some other Christian is because their own life is so ungodly that they imagine the other fellow has the same kind of heart they have. Tit. 1: 15, 16 explains better than any man can. Yea, but some people's vision is very badly impaired. So I would recommend to all who are thus troubled to get some eyesalve of the Lord and anoint their eyes, then take a good look at themselves. (2 Cor. 13: 5; Rev. 3: 18.)

**$ $ $

The Bible tells us that John the Baptist baptized many people before his death, after which it states that Jesus made and baptized more disciples than John; but when the time came for them to be in Jerusalem, only about one hundred and twenty were present. Now, what do you think of that? How is it with you, brother, when duty calls? Are you at your post, or are you a "slacker?" God was with the one hundred and twenty. So will he be with us, if we are faithful.

[&]quot;Forget it" is a motto good and wise when applied to the "slight" you received in your church, as well as to many others.—Exchange.

BIBLE CROSS WORD PUZZLE

A GOOD deal of white space makes this puzzle fairly difficult But each section leads into the next one so that there is not much chance of getting "stuck in a corner." We suggest that you start at the center, where four sixletter words cross, and work out.

How to Solve a Cross Word Puzzle

To work out this puzzle the white spaces must be filled with letters forming words answering to the various horizontal and vertical definitions given below. The horizontal and vertical words are not the same, but each gives a clue to the other. The first letter of each word is indicated by a number which refers to the definitions listed below. It is advisable to first fill in, in both directions, those words which you know to be correct. These will furnish hints to those words which you do not know or had merely guessed at. When the puzzle is solved correctly, the letters in the white spaces will spell words both horizontally and vertically. The black spaces are the blind spots of the puzzle and merely form the pattern incidentally designating the ends and beginnings of the words contained in the puzzle.

From the Brethren

Fresno, Cal., November 2.—Brother Porter Norris has been with the Nevada Street congregation for about five months, and has proven himself to be a very spiritual man and an efficient teacher of no mean ability, and we all love him and his family. He has recently held a two-weeks' meeting for us. While there were meeting for us. While there were only three baptisms, yet I am sure that his powerful gospel sermons strengthened many indifferent members and that many who are yet babes were helped and strengthened very much. Brother Norris is to begin a meeting at a mission point, Selma, November 9.—George H. Byars.

Memphis, Tenn., November 12.—My song leading for this year has been Memphis, Tenn., November 12.—My song leading for this year has been with the following preachers and congregations: Slayden, South Parkway, Memphis, Tenn.; Bell, Covington, Tenn.; Freed, Huntingdon, Tenn.; Pittman, Lexington, Tenn.; Overby, near Jackson, Tenn.; Smith (E. P.), Sedalia, Ky.; Douthitt, Springfield, Tenn.; Pullias, Woodbury, Tenn.; Netherland, Gainesboro, Tenn.; Nichol, Haldeman Avenue, Louisville, Ky. Some one said to me the other day: "Who's the biggest preacher?" I could not answer the question. But out of these ten preachers, if some one were wise enough to point out to me the one who preaches the greatest amount of gospel and lives the purest life, I suspect I would say, "That's the man." May the Lord help us to grow more and more like him.—A. J. Veteto.

Colorado Springs, Col., November 3.

—I am thankful to my Heavenly Father that I am yet spared and am permitted to labor in his vineyard. As the close of another year draws near I realize that with the falling of au-tumn leaves many who are afflicted in body as I am are passing to the great beyond. This wonderful climate, with its beautiful sunshine and mountain breezes, is doing much toward restoring my health, for which I thank my Heavenly Father. I am also very grateful to him for having, in a measure, given us success in the work of trying to build up the cause at this place. With God's blessings and the help of those here who have a mind to work, we now have a good average attendance and interest in the work. We can look back over conditions here and see much growth, for which we praise and thank God. We take courage and labor on. By receiving forty dollars from the church at Dickson, Tenn., and five dollars from a sister at Johnson City, Tenn., we were enabled to keep up the monthly payments on our church house last winter. By the help and blessings of our Father, we hope to be out of debt some day and be able to do much more for the cause. Brethren, pray that, if it be God's will, my life may be spared many years yet to tell poor benighted souls in this neglected field what to do to be saved. I am grateful indeed to all who have a part in supporting me and my family while we fight for the cause of Christ and for health.—S. M. Spears.

Sinde Mission, Livingstone, South Africa.—The women folks had gone to no little trouble to prepare medi--The women folks had gone cine and food for a three-weeks' journey among foreign villages, the inhabitants of which, in many instances, had not heard the gospel. No, they had never been visited by a white visited by a white missionary before, if we are to hear their testimony. Brother Short and I had been trying to shape our affairs at home so that we might make this tour before the rainy season begins. There were the two buildings which must be well into the last stages of completion, the dormitory for boys, and the mule barn and ma-chine shed under the same roof. Two plows were started. After a while they both had to stop. Even the ten-inch plow pulled by eight oxen could not be held in the ground. We worked mules to the other one. planted a few potatoes and some garden seed, hoping to catch the first rains. As usual we had to leave some jobs unfinished. The people fifty jobs unfinished. The people nity miles away had been calling for a teacher a long time. Brother Short had promised them that he would help them as soon as possible. We felt that we must make an effort to keep that promise. We must explain to them the wages of sin and the plan of salvation. They had never heard. What a contrast is this people with that of the "States!" How often do we hear about people calling for the gospel at home? A few isolated gospel at home? A few isolated Christians are calling for help. Yes, that is true. And they should get it. But how many who are not Christians would walk fifty or a hundred miles to plead for a teacher to be sent into their locality? I will let you answer the question, dear brethren. Is God a respecter of persons, race, or color? We were busy Monday getting the loads weighed up for the carriers. Brother Short tries to even up the loads according to each man's physical strength. Some of our men can carry seventy or eighty-pound loads easier than others can carry fifty. Monday night we had two more confessions. Everybody seemed to feel fit for hard work except Jim, the stonemason and bricklayer. We hated to leave him sick. Then, too, he was the only one to whom we could trust the mules in case some of our home folks get sick. He could drive them to the railway. With one of the young mules we had an awful time breaking her to carry a load for our company. To the wagon she drives well, but under the pack saddle she is a wicked performer. We finally got two hundred pounds of corn meal strapped to the saddle and our fifteen carriers were our fifteen carriers were ready to leave. All were heavily loaded. We made about eight miles the first day. The boys are pretty tired, as they are a little overloaded, but there is little complaint made. I preached to an interesting crowd of natives late that night.—Ray Lawyer.

CHRISTIANITY.

BY J. E. BLACK.

It is much talked, extensively discussed, but little known from the viewpoint of personal application and experience.

Christianity sounds no trumpets, makes no outcry, her voice is not heard in the streets, does not go with painted face, neither does she wear long wearing apparel to indicate great internal piety. Christianity is not and cannot be seen at the feast of banqueting, in the halls of revelry, or at the counter of lust with wanton eyes and itching ears. But, to the contrary, her personal charms consist of lowliness of heart, humbleness of life, richness of heart culture, refinement of manners, words of encouragement, tears of sympathy, and hands of helpfulness.

Christianity is constantly looking on the things of others, lifting her eyes and viewing the fields and catching a vision of the actual needs of humankind on the journey of life to the silent tomb. The innermost thought of her heart is: "Thy will be done in all things, not mine."

Christianity carries the highest form of intelligence and is directed by the greatest wisdom. Its spirit is both that of teaching and persuasion. It does not browbeat, tease, tantalize. or coerce, but enters only through the avenue of teaching. Christianity does not mix with the world. It has ever remained separate and distinct. It joins no leagues, enters no compacts, agrees to no cessation of hostilities, but demands an unconditional surrender of life, heart, and service. Christianity scarcely ever enters the palace of a king or prince. "Not many mighty, not many noble, are called." Neither is Christianity found in temples, costly edifices with stained glass. magnificent chandeliers, and imposing spiral domes. When finery and pride come in at the front door, Christianity usually goes out at the back door. It knows but "one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all, who is above all, and through all, and in you all." Christianity's only temple is the individual whose heart and life are purified by faith and obedience to the gospel of Christ. Insults, rebuffs, persecution, imprisonment, burning at the stake, and death in its most horrible and revolting forms do not deter or make her afraid to teach, live, dare, do, spend and be spent in blessing and saving the world.

There is no way of ridding the world of Christianity. If it were to seek to leave the earth and return to heaven, it could not. It cannot be consigned to hell. If it were to seek death, it could not find it, for it was not born to die. It has no mortality, but only immortality; hence, it cannot die. It remains in the transfigured state. Its place of residence is on earth with men, in all the world, transforming and blessing men into the likeness of Him who said: "And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me."

Her light, influence, and sweetness are as constant as the sun. Her going and coming are as certain as the seasons. Her truths and principles are as lasting as time. The plan of salvation therein contained is as high as heaven, as deep as hell, and as expansive as the universe. Christianity has made us what we are, and will lead us into altitudes sublimely high.

WHICH WAY ARE YOU PITCH-ING YOUR TENT?

BY W. S. LONG, JR.

The Bible contains many solemn warnings. In Gen. 13: 12 we have this language: "Abram dwelled in the land of Canaan, and Lot dwelled in the cities of the plain, and pitched his tent toward Sodom." Following this statement we have the tragic life and failure of Lot and his family. Out of this Bible history of Sodom and the disgrace of Lot's family comes this question: "Which way are you pitching your tent?"

Lot was grasping and anxious to get rich. He could lead his little children into the great city when they were young and innocent; but when they became fascinated with the charm of that wicked city and a worldly life, he could not lead them out of sin. He found a good place to get rich, but a very poor place to train his precious little ones, who were worth more to him than all the wealth of earth.

Is not the sad story of Lot being repeated by thousands of people today, and are not many of them professed Christians? Turn your eyes back a few years, and you see a great number of young couples who started life together in a quiet country home. There they could walk to church every Lord's-day morning, and lead their little ones with them. The call of the great city offered big wages, and they, like Lot, took their little ones and all they had and pitched their tent toward the city. In a few years five or six little children became grown men and women, living without God.

Lot's children were tender and pure when he started toward that city; but when God's angels came to make him a visit, they found those same little children scoffers. It was easy to lead them into sin, but it was not easy to lead them out of sin,

It is no crime to live in the city. You may live in the city and remain faithful to God, but how many do remain steadfast? The city needs good men to save it from corruption, and you can be a blessing to the people of your town or city if you will only be true to God and his word. But just as soon as you begin to fall in with the sects about you, your tent will soon be in Sodom. The great trouble with Lot's children was that they were subjected to so many tempta-Worldliness led them away That is our trouble tofrom God. day. In Detroit there are more than a million people. Many of them were good members of the church when they came here, and in the little home town they went to church and Bible study every Lord's day. Since coming to the city they have let the charms of Satan lead them step by step away from God, until to-day they are worse then they were before they entered the church. Some have become infidels; some live the fast life like Samson; while others are not so wicked, as they think, but have forsaken God's law, and are worship ing their own hearts. Some sleep on the Lord's day and live no better than the beast of the field. My brother, read Rev. 3: 15-20, and see if God 1s not talking to you.

It was a terrible hour when God rained fire upon that city and destroyed it and every soul but five. Neither Lot nor any one else was prepared when the hour came. But there is a more solemn day coming for the souls of Sodom and for all of mankind. Listen at the words of Jesus in Matt. 11: 24: "But I say unto you, That it shall be more tolerable for the land of Sodom in the day of judgment, than for thee."

Parents, where are your sons and daughters to-day? Have you left them in the great cities? Those of you who have sons and daughters in the great cities, write them and put them in touch with the church, and use your best influence to keep them in the path of righteousness. If you cannot live a Christian in the city, then get out of the city. "What shall it profit a man if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul?"

If there are members of the church in Detroit who are not attending the worship regularly, we would urge them to start in at once and be faithful. All will find a welcome at the Vinewood church of Christ, corner of Vinewood and Dix Avenues.

GRATON IS USING THE NEW BUILDING.

The Pacific Christian Academy at Graton, Cal., began using its new science room and sanitary laboratories this week (October 20). This gives us more room and better physical surroundings.

Less than a year ago real agitation for a new building began. Eventually plans were drawn by one of the patrons of the school. A financial campaign (in the face of a short crop) secured enough money to do the work already accomplished. The money paid for the material and the brethren donated the work.

The plans call for an auditorium, which will be the second story of the building already in use. But our short crops prevent us from doing more this year, unless some unexpected donation comes our way.

Nearly all the money raised came as a result of a contest among the classes in the elementary school and high school.

JESUS IN THE GOSPELS.

BY CARL BARNETT.

The word of God is given to us by many writers.

The four Gospels is that part of the word of God that I wish now to comment upon. They record the divine being, human ancestry, birth, crucifixion, resurrection, and ascension of Jesus Christ, the Son of God. They record a selection from the incidents of his life's words and works, and John in his narrative of those incidents tells why they were written: "Many other signs truly did Jesus in the presence of his disciples, which are not written in this book: but these are written, that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God: and that believing ye might have life through his name." Taken together, the Gospels set forth a personality-God in human flesh.

There is, therefore, in the four Gospels a complete personality of Jesus, but not a complete biography. Through these narratives we clearly see and know Him whom they reveal. God's intent was not to give a human biography of the Son, but to respect that which was divine.

As John says, the Gospels do not reveal all that Jesus did. Yet in them we find a perfect divine revelation. Through them we are shown the Doer instead of what he did. In the four Gospels we do not find a description of Jesus; they do not tell what they thought of him, but they let him act and speak for himself. His portrait was not given, but he says: "The words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life."

Each writer bears a distinctive part in presenting the living Christ by their separate introductions; yet we may well suggest that the Old Testament is a divinely provided introduction to the New Testament, and he who comes to the New Testament with a knowledge of the Old Testament foreview of the Christ, his person, work, and purpose in coming to the earth, his kingdom and its glories, will find them open books and readily understood.

The four Gospels are a network of Old Testament quotations. In the New Testament the first verse turns the mind back to the Old Testament in "the book of the generation of Jesus Christ, the son of David, the son of Abraham."

The mission of Jesus as set forth by Matthew and John was primarily to the Jews. When the twelve were sent out, they were not to go to the Gentiles or Samaritans, but to "the lost sheep of the house of Israel." "I am not sent but unto the lost sheep of the house of Israel." "He came unto his own, and his own received him not."

Paul says that Jesus was "made under the law," and that he "was a minister of the circumcision for the truth of God, to confirm the promises made unto the fathers." His adherence, legally, was to Jewish law. Matthew and Paul set forth this fact in, "I am not come to destroy, but to fulfill."

The Gospels present the Christ as Prophet, Priest, and King.

As a Prophet, he does not differ from those of the Old Testament. The only difference is that God of old time spoke through the prophets, but "hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son." The old prophet was a voice from God; the Son is God himself. "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God. and the Word was God. . . . And the Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us."

As a King, his autocratic voice is law. "Therefore we ought to give the more earnest heed to the things which we have heard." Neither shall man add to or take from the words of the Prophet. "See that ve refuse not him that speaketh. For if they escaped not who refused him [Moses] that spake on earth, much more shall not we escape, if we turn away from him that speaketh from heaven."

As a Priest, he is complimented in his prophetic office. Melchisedec was a priest after the order of Abel. Aaron and his descendants were priests under the law. Abel made an offering for himself; Melchisedec, for the people in his day as a whole, which was a type of the priesthood of Jesus. Aaron and the descendants of Levi made offerings for the children of Israel only, and this Aaronic priest died. But Jesus, who was made "a priest after the order of Melchisedec," was made "a surety of a better testament" and "hath an unchangeable priesthood." "Wherefore he is able also to save them to the uttermost that come unto God by him, seeing he ever liveth to make intercession for them."

In the four Gospels is found a united testimony, as well as that all scriptures testify to themselves. In all alike is revealed the one unique personality of Christ. He is both King, servant, man, and God. Their pens represent him in different incidents, sometimes in a different character; but the fact is clearly seen that the books are divinely inspired, for in them he is always seen as the same Christ.

In the Gospels the Master comes to the poor, the weak, the blind, the lame, those who sorrow, and those who are degraded in sin. He says, "Believe on me;" "Go, sin no more;" "Give to the poor;" and, above all, the egotist and the selfish are reproved above

"A SOUND PREACHER OF THE WHOLE TRUTH."

BY J. E. GREEN.

The subject of this article is a "Rev." Roud Shaw who recently came to Scottsville, Ky., to hold a meeting at the courthouse for the First Christian Church. Among the advertising matter, I noticed that he was highly recommended by sectarians. The following words are taken from a paragraph: "'He is a scholarly and sound preacher of the whole truth and his methods are above reproach.' (Dr. Edgar S. Forrester, pastor First Baptist Church, Trenton, Ky.)"

When I read this, I thought it very strange that a Baptist preacher would say such of a man who claims to be nothing but a "Christian" and to preach the word of God without addition or subtraction. But after hearing him a few times I could easily understand why he was so highly recommended by Methodist and Baptist preachers: because instead of 'preaching the word" he gave religious lectures, and at the close invited the unsaved to "accept Christ and then unite with the church in which they could serve the Lord best." This is what a man must preach to be popular with the religious world and to be counted sound in teaching. But the devil never taught anything that was more false. Such an idea is absolutely unknown to the word of God. Jesus said: "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." (Mark 16: 16.) Peter, on Pentecost, commanded people to repent and be baptized for the remission of sins (Acts 2: 38). and verse 47 says: "And the Lord added to the church daily such as should be saved." Out of the three thousand that were added that day, not one was told to join any church. What, then? Simply this: the same things that they were to do for the remission of sins made them members of the church of the New Testament.

But when a man preaches this, people say he is narrow, call him a "Campbellite," and say that is dangerous teaching, which is about equal to what they said about it in the days of the apostles. (See Acts 16: 19-21.)

But again, it is clear to my mind that a person cannot serve the Lord in unscriptural organizations which the "Rev." Shaw invited people to join, because, in the parable of Matt. 20: 1-16, Jesus teaches that only those who labor in the Lord's vineyard will be rewarded; and denominations were planted, not by the Lord, but by men. Hence, they are not the Lord's vineyard, and people can no more serve the Lord by working in them than a man can serve a certain man by working in another man's vineyard.

Listen to this sound preacher further. He said: "I didn't come here to get people out of the other churches. I am no sheep thief. I would not take all the people out of all the other churches and put them in the one that I am in if I could." I don't blame him, for how much better off would they be, led out of one bundle of errors into another?

So far as I know, no one accused him of being a thief of any kind, but I accuse him of sacrificing the truth. He is not the kind of preacher that Paul was, for Paul persuaded all men to be both "almost and altogether" such as he was-nothing but a "Christian." (See Acts 26: 28, 29.) Again, Paul, in his preaching, sought to open the people's eyes, and to "turn them from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God," that they might "receive forgiveness of sins, and inheritance among them which are sanctified." (Acts 26: 18.) But Brother Shaw would not open the eyes of the people to the errors of denominations, nor turn them from this darkness to the light of God's eternal truth, that they might receive forgiveness of sins and inheritance over there, for that would make him a "sheep thief." Brother Shaw, was Paul a "sheep thief?"

Again, the brother doesn't care for that unity which God meant to exist among the believers in him and for which Jesus prayed (see John 17); for in telling people to join the church of their choice he upholds divisions. Furthermore, he said: "I would not take all the people out of all the other churches and put them in the one that I am in if I could." Hence, he would not establish unity if he could. Why would he not do that? Is it not because he realizes that it would be as bad for them to be united on error as to be divided as they are?

If Brother Shaw is a sound preacher of the whole truth, the apostle Paul was not; for Paul condemned divisions among Christians (see 1 Cor. 3: 1-3), and taught them to "speak the same thing," and to "be perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment" (1 Cor. 1: 10), "endeavoring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace" (Eph. 4: 3). Why? Because "there is one body, and one Spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your call-(Eph. 4: 3, 4.) Now, if Paul was a sound preacher, then Brother Shaw is some other kind; and I am fully persuaded that Brother Shaw is not a sound preacher of the whole truth, Dr. Forrester to the contrary notwithstanding.

Brother Shaw had a number of similar recommendations from Methodists and Baptists and some from men who said they were not members of any church. Not one word did he have from a man who stands foursquare with the word of God. Then it seems to me that the brother seeks above all else to be popular with the sectarian world. "Ye adulterers and adulteresses, know ye not that the friendship of the world is enmity with God? whosoever therefore will be a friend to the world is the enemy of God." (James 4: 4.) May God speed the day when these "transgressive" brethren will turn from their errors, cease to teach and practice those things that are not authorized in the word of the Lord and contrary to his will, stop seeking the friendship of the world, and take their stand for the truth and preach it as it is. Will you do it, brethren?

No gospel preacher will be recommended by those who repudiate the gospel. The "transgressives" are more in harmony with sectarians than they are with us. If they had their way, the plea for primitive Christianity, as it was preached and practiced by the apostles, would disappear from the earth. They are no longer "of us," as they have "gone out from us." They are a separate and distinct denomination among their sister denominations. J.A.A.

A STATEMENT.

Our readers have observed that we have cut out of the Gospel Advocate the advertisements of patent medicines. We do this as a matter of conviction. However, we consider it right to advertise anything worthy and staple and beneficial to mankind.

But in cutting out these patent-medicine advertisements we have suffered a considerable financial loss. We trust that our friends and patrons duly appreciate this and will not only remit past dues for the Advocate, but will also increase their patronage in every way. At this time this will prove a great help to us. Thus the matter of help-fulness will become mutual. Anything done in the way of securing new subscribers, the sale of any good books of any kind which we have on hand, or the securing of any work in the printing business will be heartily appreciated.

Let it be understood that we are not seeking patronage for doing right. This we do conscientiously and at any cost. But inasmuch as we should all work together for the cause of Christ, this mutual helpfulness will be sincerely appreciated.

GOSPEL ADVOCATE COMPANY.

A NEW TRACT.

We have long realized the great results to be obtained through use of tracts. With very little cost every congregation could scatter them freely over their respective communities. The Adventists and others demonstrate what can be done through the use of tracts printed in quantities for free distribution.

We have just issued a small, eight-page leaflet, entitled "Importance of Being Right Religiously," by James A. Allen. Prices: 100 for $2.25; 500 for $8.50; or 1,000 for $15.

Congregations can do much good by ordering five hundred or one thousand of these leaflets and having their members distribute them over their neighborhoods. In addition to the great good that will be done in reaching outsiders, work of this kind will do great good in increasing activity among the members.

Send us an order for these leaflets and distribute them freely. Address all communications to the Gospel Advocate, 110 Seventh Avenue, North, Nashville, Tenn.

CURRENT COMMENT

By JAMES A. ALLEN

The Front Rank is still on the Back Seat when it comes to telling sinners what the apostles of Jesus Christ command them to do to be saved. An "official organ" of a Missionary Trust ought to do that. We have before us its issue of November 22. I have glanced over it, without carefully reading every line of it, and if there is as much as a single paragraph of such information in the whole paper, it is conspicuous for its lack of prominence.

**$ $ $

One of the greatest tragedies of the age is that the preachers refuse to preach. It is startling, enough to cause a shiver to run through the very soul, to know that only a few, an alarmingly few, of the preachers in this or in any other city are willing to tell sinners what to do to be saved. Indeed, popular "pastors" are running riot in the delivery of great addresses and fancy sermons. Snappy speeches on catchy subjects are the order of the day. Such subjects as "Red-Blooded Men," "My Experience in the Trenches," or "The First Three Minutes After Death" are billboarded and headlined. The whole thing is a farce. There is no gospel in it. And few, if any, of the men who are doing this sort of preaching have any scriptural right to even claim to be Christians. There were no unimmersed Christians in New Testan int times, and there are none to-day.

Before me lies a stack of exchanges, papers and journals of various types from a number of religious denominations. Some of these papers are handsomely printed, mechanically almost perfect. The one I am looking at now is $4 per year—"to the clergy, $3.50." Do these papers tell sinners what to do to be saved, or do they tell Christians how to live the Christian life? Not by the width of the heavens! They won't print anything that does!

As I go through these papers, here and there, once in a long time, is a paper, published by a Christian, that does tell those who are lost what the Savior commands them to do to be saved. They are very few and far between, and most, if not all, of them bear evidences of being somewhat weak financially. Preaching the gospel and obtaining popularity and money are so far apart that the man who does the one cannot do the other. If a preacher is in good circumstances, he had better give away enough to be poor again. Uniting a big salary with preaching the gospel is like trying to mix oil and water or blend things that are antipodal. Preaching the gospel is not on a financial basis. Jesus did not have a penny, and advised others to sell all that they had and to give to the poor. A fine, luxurious church house is a hindrance instead of a help to the advancement of the Cause. I think I have read somewhere that Brother David Lipscomb said it would be a blessing if they would catch fire and burn up. When a preacher's idea of preaching the gospel or getting people to live the Christian life is to build a fine house, he is a liability, not an asset. As long as he is fired with such ideas, the most good that he can do is to sit right still and do nothing.

The Christian Sun, Richmond, Va., makes an appropriate and telling point thus:

We fully believe this is the day when the devil is making his last grand stand, and one of the very effective ways he has of nullifying the work of the gospel is to get some of us to compromise the truth and others to go to sleep on the job. Our children and loved ones and neighbors are unsaved, and we feel like they need to be spoken to come to Christ; but we would rather some one else would speak to them, and we let them go on and be lost.

We are not able to tell how many more "stands" the devil is going to endeavor to make, but we do know that he has already made a telling "stand" against those whom he has persuaded "to compromise the truth" or "to go to sleep on the job." "To compromise the truth" is one of the most heinous and traitorous ways in which to deny Christ. It is bad when men commit sins through the weakness of the flesh; but it is infinitely worse when they willfully and deliberately "compromise the truth."

What God thinks about things is different from what the world thinks. The world thinks that if a man will refrain from drunkenness, adultery, etc., that he may willfully and deliberately set aside and ignore any commands of God that his own wisdom does not approve and still be a good man. While God condemns drunkenness, adultery, etc., in thunderous tones, he declares that the worst form of wickedness possible is for a man to presumptuously and willfully set aside his commandments.

This even most of the preachers, all of the popular "pastors," members of the Nashville Pastors' Association, are continually and repeatedly doing. The general public does not know what Christ commands them to do to be saved, because most of the disciples of Christ, who should tell them, have gone "to sleep on the job." If they really believed that men and women were going down to hell, the members of every congregation, especially the elders of the congregation, would go "from house to house," up and down the streets of their neighborhoods, admonishing "every one night and day with tears." Paul's language in his speech to the elders of Ephesus shows that it is no child's play. The souls of men and women in a dread eternity are at stake.

Brethren will spend thousands of dollars to build a new house that stands idle most of the time, or to build several Sunday-school rooms to be used only once a week, but they will not spend a few dollars to buy enough space in a daily paper to tell sinners what to do to be saved or to send a preacher to hold a two-weeks' meeting in a town that has never heard the gospel. I think there are not less than a thousand congregations in Tennessee, and I do not think there is a one of them, however weak or poor, but what could buy a column in a daily paper or send a preacher to hold a meeting in a place like New York, Philadelphia, or Chicago. Send a preacher and one or two helpers to these cities. They do not have to have a house to preach in. Let them preach out of doors, in private houses, anywhere. A fine house is about the last thing needed in work of this kind.

Oliver Cromwell was once lodging in Knaresborough. A young maiden of the house was ordered to take a pan of coals and air his bed. When she went out, she stopped and peeped through the keyhole, having a natural curiosity to see what so great a man would do. She saw him rise from his seat, advance toward the bed, and fall on his knees, in which attitude he remained some time. After a while she went away, but again returned, finding him in the same position. How many of us could stand the keyhole test?—Selected.

THE WORD OF GOD.

BY PRICE BILLINGSLEY.

The Bible is the first and oldest book, by its character and claims set apart from and infinitely above all others, as fresh and appealing to-day as the hour it came from God's hand, and so modern and forward-looking that it inspires and leads all progress. It speaks in supremest authority to command and dominate the human heart, to great and small alike. Everybody must hear and obey, the only alternative being utter destruction. A woeful picture and prospect is drawn of all who have it not. Jehovah makes or breaks nations and individuals alike according to whether they hold it in obedient respect. Whether we know or will it, the Book probes to the core of our being, pitilessly laying bare everything about us. For what the Word means to us, what we daily do with it, whether we read and ponder it, how often and with what motive—this is so fundamental as to indicate unerringly our entire moral and spiritual status, and whether others shall hope or despair of our future. It is the one angle from which our full-length likeness is made.

It is exclusively the property of no race or class. It appeals to universal emotions and impulses. God makes this historic record the medium for portraying to the world his principles, disclosing our origin, duty, and destiny; and with such fidelity does he delineate the characters of the past, though they are far removed in time and place, we yet recognize them as verily like ourselves in the living present. Verily the Book is Heaven's beacon light flashed upon this errant human course, showing the way to happiness and honor here and life which may fruit out into bliss eternal. It is the miracle of time, the marvel of the ages, solving the otherwise inexplicable riddle of existence. This living word rings with truth so eternally meaningful that it were better we had not been born than that we do not know and heed it.

BIBLE STUDY RULES.

1. Right Heart Conditions. This before all, else the Book remains sealed, regardless of the reader's aids or effort. Emphatically, not everybody can understand the Bible! (Ex. 7: 23; Mal. 2: 2; Matt. 13: 13; John 9: 39.) The heart must supremely desire to know God's will to do it (John 7: 17; Ez. 7: 10), having a place for the word (John 8: 37), root, deepness of earth, moisture (Matt. 13: 6; Mark 4: 6; Luke 8: 6), or the seed of the kingdom cannot lodge there to bear fruit (Luke 8: 15). Word must be revered as God's. He who would know God must accept the Word with all readiness of mind (Acts 17: 11), choosing it above all else, neither rejecting a word of it nor craving or seeking anything else. One with a willing and obedient heart accepts the Word as the right and natural thing, which comes to weave itself through all his speech. He gains the sweets and secrets of the Word. (Job 28: 28; Ps. 25: 14.) But the man who lacks this heart, the irreverent and disobedient, even though he possess a great mind and seek knowledge, cannot learn of God. (Prov. 14: 6; 17: 16; James 1: 22.) This God withholds from those who refuse him due homage and allegiance. If we learn of him at all, we first must feel ourselves weak and unworthy before him and in the most urgent need of divine guidance (Jer. 10: 23), and come and ask him. In no other spirit may we be led of God.

2. Jehovah Doing All the Leading. In this giving the law we were not consulted. The Lord proposes to see for us, saying plainly we are fools. (Isa. 2: 22; 55: 8; 1 Cor. 3: 18; 8: 2.) Nor may we have the full light of his pleasure and wisdom so long as in the interest of our thoughts and ways we have designs upon his Word. Even the wisest and best of earth's mortals are possessed of an all but incurable tendency to stray from the right. Day by day they must over and over again be corrected and put back upon the Lord's good way. Without this constant watch and care, even with no ill intent, the life lapses into error. The true heart never seeks its own way and pleasure, and certainly never tries to make the Word say anthing to fit or support what he sees and desires. (Num. 16: 28; 1 Kings 14: 8; 18: 36; John 8: 29; 2 Cor. 3: 5.) Rather, he accepts every word as Jehovah's own inerrant utterance, making it the supreme standard of his life, and wills to do exactly what God says, regardless of cost. (Ps. 5: 8; 25: 14; 119: 18; 143: 8; Prov. 8: 34; Job 37: 19.) A deadly popular deception, urged even in many pulpits, is that one may have his choice in matters religious. This lie is responsible for divers damning consequences to humanity, not the least being a general disregard for, and ignorance of, just what the Lord says. The one fatal man is he who refuses to think. It is sinful slavery to refuse to search for the truth, regardless of its effect upon accepted positions. Interest in the theory impairs the vision, nor will he learn the truth till healed of the malady. For green goggles over the eyes no more prevent one from discovering true colors than does the partisan spirit withhold one from learning unmixed truth. Thus the man who is partial with the Word of God, taking only what appeals to him and doctoring the other to make it serve his designs, takes the road to delusion.

3. Avoidance of All Speculation. Of all the books in the world, the Bible is the most practical. Man's duty is here set to the fore as the one divine purpose, immediate, simple, and imperative, couched in the most lucid and explicit terms possible. So that there is no call whatever for involved reasoning and far-fetched inferences, no time for idle meanderings onto questions academic and conjectural. Jehovah does not cater to the idly curious or settle every whim they may conjure up. Those who dream or glory in phantoms are duly sent upon their way. Our opinions must be held in absolute privacy, and the unrevealed left to God and the future. (Deut. 29: 29; Acts 1: 7; Rom. 14: 22.) There is design in every word of Holy Writ, even in omissions, and it is sinful to be figuring upon, interpreting, drawing our thumb-nail deductions upon what the Lord must have meant here and there, presuming upon his silences and generally trying to make out the case for him. This needs no tinkering at our hands. O let us rather be content to know and do our full duty, and know that when we do all we are plainly told our hands will be full.

4. Intimate Acquaintance with the Text. Nothing can take the place of this. By absorbed and continuous reading of the Book, through long hours of reverent and concentrated research, poring over and pondering it word by word, steeping the conscience in it, it comes to be meat and drink, and, like iron dissolving into the blood, it grows to be a part of our living organism. This is tedious and painful at first, requiring a will which stops at nothing. Yet through persistence a taste for it is gained; yea, a longing hunger which no other word can satisfy. Plow deep and intensively cultivate this soil; there will come a sure and bountiful harvest. hearted and disjointed effort fully explains why so many would-be Bible readers find little pleasure and profit therein. Pity this wondrously rich soil should lie fallow, or be merely poked at after a fashion which if farmers followed they would starve. There needs to be long-continued periods of more or less painful struggle guided by a right heart. Full light comes from duty performed. So that he who will not start till all duty is clear withholds the light from his own path. Let one properly court the Word; it will free him from ills. Reverent, obedient touch with it leads increasingly to power and pleasure and heals and cures wrongs. (Josh. 1: 7, 8; Ps. 1: 2; 112: 1; 1 Chron. 28: 8; James 1: 25.)

5. The Whole Book Studied Together. Into these words divine are packed things deep and wonderful-not a line to be spared or improved upon, not so much as one needless letter or fact. The parts are interdependent, each serving in the scheme divine; all must be taken together. Freighted with mighty significance is every fraction thereof. How wonderful and beautiful that each part should fit into, supplement, and support all the others! Through every fact and recorded event there runs one continuous purpose, every word big with meaning, taken together comprising the most stupendous whole which mortals ever beheld. We begin upon simple lines unmeasured distances calling in every direction. Our petty measurements fail, and we are taken aback to behold boundless deeps and areas and heights and positively limitless resources to be worked upon. How much yet remains to be mastered! Great care must be exercised that nothing be overlooked, every question studied in the light of every word the Lord spoke bearing upon it, point by point weighed before the mind is made up and a safe deduction drawn. Passages limit and qualify each other, but never contradict. Help is gained from related passakes; woven together, light breaks upon our souls. We must not rush at conclusions. Full amplification of the argument cannot be got by the casual or haphazard reader. Remaining in lawful contact with it releases latent energies of the mind and soul, wings the fancy, enlarges and ennobles the spiritual vision, and lifts the entire being to holy impulses, effecting fundamental changes. The planting these divine facts and principles in the heart and brain works untold wonders and brings ten thousand several blessings.

NOTES FROM WEST TENNESSEE. BY JOHN R. WILLIAMS.

I read several religious papers, and receive much benefit from each one. Not one of the papers ever comes to my desk that I do not see several calls for money to help in different things-schools, orphan homes, church buildings, aged and worn-out preachers, sick and disabled members; besides the circular letters that come almost daily. Naturally, I want to help each and every needy call (I suppose all are needy), but have not the means to do so. Then, what am I to do? The calls for help that come to me that I do not give to will render me stingy or a "tight wad" in the eyes of those whose calls are not heeded. Is it possible that we have lost sight of the fact that the gospel is God's power unto salvation and have made money that power? Oftentimes the same mail brings to me two calls for help from the same place. I never question the need asked for; but when I look at my old, lean pocketbook and place it alongside of these calls, then a feeling of sadness creeps over me as I view the call and the lean pocketbook. To take all of my income and divide it equally among the calls, I would be eashamed to send a small amount. I would be classed with some church members that I am acquainted with-a "penny giver." To give all to one place seems to me to be wrong. So, now, will some one tell me just what to do and at the same time not do wrong? Brother J. D. Tant says we are drifting, and he is certainly right, for I can plainly see a drift in many directions. It occurs to me down here in the lake hills that there is a craze to raise money in order to accomplish something wonderful that will stand out before the world as evidence of our liberality and lofty achievements with our money. For some time past I have made the comparison; and where I have received one call to preach, I have received twenty-five for money to help some worthy cause.

To us poor people on the lake it seems that the church has lost sight of the salvation of souls and turned into a begging machine—drive after drive for money! Before the drive starts there is an assessment made out that each member should pay in order to raise the required amount needed for certain purposes. In this they exceed the limitations of the Bible. The divine principle is one of honor according to the prosperity of the individual member. If I do not give according to this principle, I sin against God. I believe and teach that it is just as necessary to give as it is to pray, sing, and preach.

As a matter of change, I suggest that we make a united drive for the salvation of souls, a complete and thorough exposition of all kinds of error, false teaching, false religion, false churches, and all kinds of wrongdoing, and see what can be done along these lines. Let the preachers hunt for destitute places and go to them.

But just at this juncture we are confronted with another difficulty-a lack of preachers who have degreeshandles to their names. I know of some instances where good, godly preachers were rejected on account of not being "well enough educated to preach for our congregation." When I put all these things together and try to balance them up, it seems that the time will soon come when none but the degree preacher will be called, and by virtue of his superior qualifications he cannot afford to go to any places but those that can pay well. Too smart-knows too much to go among the poor, ignorant class. Old as I am, I wish I were educated well enough to go to some places I have heard of; but such cannot be now. So I shall content myself to go in a little "Ford" roadster to the poor congregations that know but little and have but little and are satisfied with a little preacher.

From a Reelfoot Lake viewpoint, it seems that centralization is now the main object. The country doctor is now a thing of the past, the country school-teachers are going on the shelf, and the country preachers, with the country doctors and teachers, will soon be "has-beens," to live only in the memory of some of the old men and women. Yes, Brother Tant, we are drifting fast.

WORK IN MUSKOGEE, OKLA.

BY J. G. ALLEN.

I write this report of the church on C and Kankakee Streets because I consider that it is due many that have contributed to this work through me to know what progress has been made to plant New Testament Christianity in this city. I have been here almost nine years, and have been busy ever since I came. With the help of brethren outside of this city, together with brethren here, we bought a lot and built a nice house that is well furnished on C and Kankakee Streets, which is almost paid for. The money received from outside brethren went into this building, together with what we raised here. We made arrangements to pay balance monthly, until now we owe about three hundred and fifty dollars on the property, which, when paid for, will be worth about four thousand dollars. I have labored with the church at my own charges from the beginning until last year, when I was incapacitated for working at my trade as machinist by blood poisoning, so I could no longer contribute money to the work, but am engaged in preaching now all the time. In addition to preaching here free of charge, I have given more than one thousand dollars to the work. I am now strong and enjoying the best health of my life, and feel like I am better able to preach now than ever before. I am truly thankful to our Heavenly Father for permitting me to engage in this work until now. We are almost where we are self-supporting.

I take this occasion to humbly thank, in Jesus' name, all who have contributed in any way to this work, and pray God's blessing upon them. We are still in need of financial help here, and believe if it is best for us to receive it, God will put it into the hearts of the faithful to respond; so we truly say, God's will be done. Yesterday (November 15) we had the largest number in our Sunday school that has been present since the beginning, also large audiences at both preaching services; but the climax of the day was reached at half past two o'clock in the afternoon. At that hour we organized a new Sunday school in Midland Valley Addition. We have been preaching in that community every Wednesday night for about one year, and now we have about twenty members there. We rented an old storehouse and fitted it up for services, and will have Sunday school each Sunday afternoon, also preaching on Wednesday night. We have a nice lot near by that is paid for, and purpose building a house as soon as we are able.

In conclusion, I wish to state that, in my judgment, this is one of the best mission fields I know of anywhere, and the people will respond to the truth when they hear it. I can testify truly that the greatest opposition to New Testament Christianity that I have met with here comes from those that claim to be its friends, but live such ungodly lives that their influence, instead of being a help to Christianity, is a very great menace; but, thank God, that tribe is becoming smaller every year in this city, and my prayer to God is that the day may hasten when it will cease altogether, and that every one who has named the name of Christ will understand that he can no longer be guilty of living and backbiting and committing adultery, with other evil works, but must live a pure, consecrated life and above reproach, if he would please God. I do not want to close this without mentioning some of my coworkers. We have several brethren who have developed into splendid leaders-namely: C. L. Hanon, C. Maynard, W. R. Hather, and others.

Modesty forbids that I should say much in regard to the great work my father has done in Oklahoma for nearly nine years, and of the great work he did in Tennessee before going to Oklahoma. He spent a part of the past summer in Tennessee and Kentucky holding meetings.

As stated, besides giving more than a thousand dollars in money, he preached in Muskogee at his own charges until recently. He can find more places to preach and do more good from house to house than any man known to me.

He is devoting his whole time to preaching and to laboring for the advancement and upbuilding of the Cause. If any congregation wishes to assist in preaching the gospel in destitute places in Oklahoma and in establishing new congregations, they may write him at 1412 Baltimore Avenue, Muskogee, Okla.

CONCERNING THE HALDEMAN AVENUE CHURCH.

BY C. R. NICHOL.

Recently I assisted the Haldeman Avenue church of Christ, Louisville, Ky., in a series of meetings. This congregation till about three years ago was known as the Campbell Street church of Christ. The splendid house in which this congregation now worships is in a better location than the old building, and I think they have shown wisdom in the selection of the new location.

For a time this congregation was associated in the State work in Kentucky in doing mission work; but when that association assumed the form of an ecclesiastical body, they severed their relationship with them, and since that time, nearly fifty years ago, they have been doing mission work under the direct supervision of the congregation. I took some pains to inquire into the missionary activities of this congregation. I think I have never labored with a congregation which has done and is now doing more missionary work.

For nearly forty years Brother M. C. Kurfees has been laboring with this congregation. He has been a leading factor in the work of the congregation, but it would be an injustice to the congregation to overlook the fact that through all these years, and now, he has ever had the full confidence and hearty support of the congregation. There is no other thought with the congregation than that Brother Kurfees is to labor with them till his earthly labors have ended and he passes to the reward of the faithful

To mention the many members of this congregation by name is too much in this connection, but I do wish to mention that wonderful mother in Israel, Sister Tatum, whose praise is on the lips of the entire congregation and whose presence is a benediction. One cannot associate with her without becoming a better man.

I have never labored with a congregation where a more cordial welcome is extended strangers.

For the cause of Christ the church which worships on Haldeman Avenue and M. C. Kurfees have been positive factors in battling against false doctrine, and many have been saved from the departures taught by the "progressives," as well as from the vagaries of Jewish materialism as taught by R. H. Boll.

For years I have loved M. C. Kurfees for his splendid work as a preacher and his contributions to Christian literature, and, in addition thereto, I now love him for his lovable character revealed by personal association with him. He is one of God's noblemen, with a heart tender, yet a courage for truth and right which knows no compromise. I have never met a more lovable character or more considerate man than M. C. Kurfees.

BIBLE AND TESTAMENT FUND.

BY S. F. MORROW.

We are very glad to let all who are taking so much interest in the Bible and Testament Fund, all who are working for the extension of the kingdom of our Lord and Master, know if we are well pleasing to Jesus our King and Ruler. We must work in and through his precious word. For he has said if we keep his commandments we are his disciples indeed. Jesus further says: "If ye love me, keep my commandments." How can elders, preachers, and teachers keep and teach the commandments of our Lord and Master if we fail to daily and prayerfully study his word? How can we all speak the same thing and all be of one mind, perfectly joined together in love, endeavoring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace, without a knowledge of the life of Him who spoke as never man spoke? I am fully persuaded, if we all would try and follow the example of Christ while here on earth, we would indeed and in truth be a peculiar people, as the Lord has ordained we should be. When John the Baptist was cast into prison, he sent his disciples to Jesus to ask if he was the one that should come, or should they look for another? Jesus said: "Go your way, and tell John that the dead are raised, the deaf hear, the lepers are cleansed, and the poor have the gospel preached to them." O, how the poor, little, struggling congregations are being neglected to-day! We say in the language of Isaiah the prophet: "Turn ye, O Israel; for why will ye die?" Let each one of us examine himself in the light of God's holy word and see if we are following in the footprints of Jesus.

We now come to our subject, the Bible and Testament work. In August we received twelve hundred Testaments—two hundred large ones. We find that about all our small ones are gone, and almost daily orders are coming for more. We realized that more Testaments should be ordered at once; so we inquired of the head bookkeeper, Mr. Jones, to know if we had money on hand to pay for two thousand more books. He said we did, and ordered them at once. As I am now in Tampa, Fla., he sent five hundred here. May we all do all we can to get the word of life into the hands and hearts of all the world as quickly as possible.

WANTED-"ELAM'S NOTES" FOR 1922-23-24.

We are receiving calls for back numbers of "Elam's Notes" from brethren who wish to have a complete set. But the issues of 1922, 1923, and 1924 have been exhausted and are out of print. We should be glad to have about twenty-five copies of "Elam's Notes" for these years, for which we will exchange the same number of copies of "Elam's Notes" for 1925 or 1926. If any person wishes to exchange his book for either of the three years mentioned for one of 1925 or 1926, or if any congregation wishes to exchange any number up to twenty-five, we shall be glad to make this exchange. Books exchanged must be in good condition.

VISION.

Lord, open thou mine eyes, that I may straightway see The host of chariots and horsemen sent by thee To terrify my foes, and win the fight for me!

The mountains standing round about me, Lord, I know, Are all aflame with sudden fire; I feel its glow—Lord, open thou mine eyes, that I may see it so!

For seeing is believing, as Saint Thomas said:
To him thou didst uncover feet, side, hands, and head—
Forgive me, Lord! I, too, the doubter's pathway tread!

I hear the noise of horses, chariots, and men;
I smell the dust and smoke of battle down the glen—
Lord, open thou mine eyes! Let me have faith again!

RESPECT FOR THE TRUTH. BY A. B. LIPSCOMB.

The object of all teaching and preaching, and, for that matter, the object of all inquiry and research and investigation, should be to gain the truth; and whenever we make this the supreme object of our efforts, we honor our blessed Lord, because he said of his own work: "For this purpose have I been born into the world, and for this purpose am I come into the world, to bear witness to the truth."

But what is the truth that we need most of all to learn? And what is the truth that we need most of all to preach? That question brings forth the remark that there are many kinds of truths. There are philosophic truths, there are the truths of nature, there are the historic truths, there are scientific truths, and there are religious truths. And just let me add this: that whenever and wherever we find the truth, in any department of human life or endeavor, or in any realm of human knowledge, that truth is entitled to our respect, if not to our investigation.

I was reading a little story last week, written by Archie Roosevelt, in one of the magazines. It was an account of a hunting trip in Africa, and I was glad to note that this young man followed the manner and style of his illustrious father. Instead of trying to exhibit his own prowess as a hunter, he spent most of the space in that article in telling the truth—little accuracies about the birds and the insects and the animals in that country. Mr. Roosevelt had an abhorrence for that class of people he called "nature fakers," and he insisted that people who talked even about animals and insects always tell the exact truth and give them their proper names and classification; and if a man did not do that, he called him a "nature faker." He insisted that people tell the truth even about a tadpole. No "nature faker" would pass with him.

Now, all of that is interesting, of course; but what is the great truth that we need to learn over and above every other truth in the world? We might afford to miss many of the truths of philosophy; we might afford to miss many of the truths of science; but there is a truth that all men should recognize and receive and obey. That is the truth that the great Teacher had in mind when he said: "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." He said, too: "When he, the Spirit of truth, is come, he shall guide you into all the truth." again, in that wonderful prayer in the seventeenth chapter of John, he prayed: "Sanctify them in the truth." Then he added the enlightening statement: "Thy word is truth." Such passages make it plain that it is the truth of God's word that we need to learn and receive and obey and treasure above all the truths that we may gain in this world.

Old things have a particular fascination for some folks. There are devotees of old homes and old furniture and old paintings, and I have known some folks who thought a great deal of old clubs and old organizations of one kind and another. I suppose that everybody will agree with me when I say that old friends are best. We may build us more stately habitations, we may fill them with silver and with gold and with bric-a-brac of every description, but we cannot buy with gold the old, old memories. Just so there are folks who feel that way about the truth. They have the thought that all truth is old. They presuppose a certain vitality that belongs to truth because it has endured through all the changes of the years. As the poet put it:

"Truth crushed to earth will rise again, The eternal years of God are hers."

But if old age and long life are the only qualifications to be considered, it is well that we remember that error is almost as old as truth, and that error often flourishes after the truth has departed, just as we find that the weeds and the thorns are left when the roses fade away.

The point I wish to make just here and emphasize is this: that we must not love a thing simply because it is old or new, but that the truth, whether old or new, whether you have known it all of your life or whether you are just hearing it now, if it is a truth, deserves your attention, your respect, and your reverence. Even the loss of a little truth, some one has said, often entails dangerous consequences; but the loss of a divine truth, a great fundamental truth of the Bible, one that is necessary for the salvation of the soul, is like losing a diamond from a ring, it is like losing a jewel from our Mediator's crown; and we should not, therefore, for the sake of a mere sentimentality, miss any of God's truth.

We sometimes meet people who seem to be rather proud and haughty over their religious affiliation. For example, some man tells me that he is an old "blue-stocking" Presbyterian. "That is the kind of Presbyterian I am!" Not merely a Presbyterian, but an old "blue-stocking" Presbyterian. A man told me once that he was one of the old-time "Hard-shell Baptists." Another friend was foolish enough to say: "Well, now, I am just a 'dved-inthe-wool' Campbellite." And they all speak in such a manner and tone as to leave the impression that when God made such brands of religion-because they think he made them-he just threw away the mold and you can never improve upon those old-time systems. I do know this to be true, that I have preached the gospel in a great many places, and there were folks present who undoubtedly saw the simple truth as it is in Christ Jesus, but they did not obey it. Some of them were just frank enough to tell me: "Well, I just can't afford to go back on my mother's religion. I love her memory too much to do it." They are just clinging to some error, even though they realize it is not God's truth, because they look upon it as a kind of religious heirloom in the family.

Now, common sense teaches us that we cannot afford to hold on to error, even though our ancestors for generations have clung to it. If we find that it is not the truth, it behooves us, for the sake of our souls, to give it up, because error does not save; error deceives, ruins, disappoints, and error will drag us down in the end. It is only the truth that can save, and we must meet and hear and recognize and obey the truth, whatever may be the cost.

THE WAYS OF CAIN AND ABEL. BY S. H. HALL.

Perhaps two of the most beautiful statements in the Bible, if you were to take these sentences away from the context, are these: "And Abel was a keeper of sheep, but Cain was a tiller of the ground. And in process of time it came to pass, that Cain brought of the fruit of the ground an offering unto the Lord. And Abel, he also brought of the firstlings of his flock and of the fat thereof." (Gen. 4: 2-4.)

We understand that this scene is just outside of the garden of Eden. Man had fallen. God has instituted a law of worship for the purpose of lifting man from his fallen state. Here are two brothers in the flesh, members of the first family on earth, who have been taught all about their father and mother's expulsion from their once happy Eden home, and that they have been given the remedy for their fallen state. They are taught to honor the altar that has been established in their home by bringing, at the appointed time, an offering unto God. In the bleeding victim that Jehovah had called for, the promised Redeemer was looked forward to. Can you think of anything more beautiful than a home in which the children are brought up in the fear of God and are taught that we owe our God the adoration of our hearts? These two sons had been so taught.

But would you not be surprised if Satan should remain inactive and not try, in some way, to corrupt the worship and thus make it rebellion against God instead of true worship? And so he did. We come more than four thousand years this side of Cain and Abel's day, and we find these words: "Woe unto them! for they have gone in the way of Cain." (Jude 11.) What is the matter with Cain's way? Did he not bring his offering before the same God and to the same altar? In Heb. 11: 4 it is said: "By faith Abel offered unto God a more excellent sacrifice than Cain, by which he obtained witness that he was righteous, God testifying of his gifts: and by it he being dead yet speaketh." What was the difference in the two brothers? Some may say it was the fact that Cain was a murderer that made the difference. But here they are mistaken; for Cain's sin came before the murder was committed, and his sin was the thing that led to it. Read 1 John 3: 11, 12, where we have these words: "For this is the message that ye heard from the beginning, that we should love one another. Not as Cain, who was of that wicked one, and slew his brother. And wherefore slew he him? Because his own works were evil, and his brother's righteous." What were Cain's works? It says: "And in process of time it came to pass, that Cain brought of the fruit of the ground an offering unto the Lord." How could this be evil? Here we have the first religious difference that ever arose, and it comes in the first family and between two brothers in the flesh, and was so heated that the brother in the wrong put the other to death. Here we have a difference, too, between two men who believed in the existence of the same God and who worshiped the same God, and worshiped him at the same altar. What is the trouble? The devil has got his hand in with its God-dishonoring and destructive work. It was the devil who got man to fall, and after getting man down he wants to keep him down by corrupting or changing God's plan to lift man up and redeem him.

The one great lesson that Jehovah taught man after his fall was that "it is not in man that walketh to direct his steps" when it comes to worshiping God. (See Jer. 10: 23.) Man was forever warned not to do things just because it seemed "right in his own eyes." (Deut. 12: 8.) We are taught that man's thoughts and God's thoughts and ways differ, and that we must turn our backs on our own thoughts and surrender to Jehovah's way of worship. (See Isa. 55: 8, 9.) Or to come directly to the trouble, God taught man that true worship consists in worshiping the right object, God only, and that this worship must be done in the way God designates and not after our own thoughts. Abel stood for this way. Satan taught Cain to worship God, the right object of worship, but that the way was immaterial, just so he was prompt and sincere in that worship. In Prov. 14: 12 the writer says: "There is a way which seemeth right unto a man, but the end thereof are the ways of death." It does seem right unto every man that if we worship no God except the true and living God, and are sincere in this worship, the how should be immaterial. But man is wrong in his thoughts here. This throws down the floodgate to a multiplicity of ways of worshiping this Godjust as many ways as we have likes and dislikes among us in our own personal natures. God is the one that must be pleased in our worship. He is the one to be served, the one that must govern and control, and man must not be self-directed when it comes to worship.

The second lie the devil ever told to man is that just so you worship the right object, the living God, that any way will do. This is the most popular doctrine in existence to-day. The way of Cain still lives, and will continue to live till our Lord destroys it with "the brightness of his coming" in his second advent. (Read 2 Thess.

2: 7, 8.) In Matt. 15: 9 our Lord says: "But in vain they do worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men." These people here referred to were worshiping the same God that Cain and Abel worshiped, but they worshiped him in their own way. In Rom. 10: 1-3 we find a people who had a zeal for God, but not according to knowledge, and instead of their worshiping God in his way, they were going about to establish their own ways.

But that you may know this was the difference between Cain and Abel, let me ask that you read with me again Heb. 11: 4. Here it is said that God testified of Abel's gift-that is, Abel brought that gift God testified of or said bring; hence, it was a gift of faith. Cain brought an offering of his own choosing, one that God had said nothing about; hence, God rejected it. It says the difference was a difference of faith; but their faith did not differ in that one believed that God is and that he ought to be worshiped, for they both had common faith here. Their difference was in the how they worshiped. Abel believed he should offer only the gift God testified of, or that true worship is to be enjoyed by worshiping the right object, but the worship must be done in the way Jehovah says worship him. Cain believed he should worship the right object, but that he could choose his own way. The sacrifice that atoned for sin and pointed to the Lamb of God had to be a bleeding victim. Satan got Cain to believe that this was not so essential; hence, got him to change the offering from the bleeding victim to the fruit of his field.

Why will we not take warning from this lesson and be more careful in our worship to-day? Sixty-six years after our Lord had been born into the world, and more than four thousand years after Cain's day, we find Cain's ideas still alive and people walking in them. Paul, in writing to the church at Corinth, says: "I fear, lest by any means, as the serpent beguiled Eve through his subtlety, so your minds should be corrupted from the simplicity that is in Christ." How timely the warning of the apostle Peter: "Be sober, be vigilant; because your adversary the devil, as a roaring lion, walketh about, seeking whom he may devour: whom resist steadfast in the faith." (1 Pet. 5: 8, 9.) The devil is always busy trying to get men and women to turn aside from the "good and right way" into ways of their own.

COMMENDS "THE BIBLE VERSUS THEORIES OF EVOLUTION."

Chattanooga, Tenn., November 16, 1925.—Mr. E. A. Elam, care of David Lipscomb College, Nashville, Tenn.—Dear Brother Elam: On a recent trip I carried your book, "The Bible versus Theories of Evolution," and read it through. It is the most timely and instructive teaching I have seen on the subject.

I was especially impressed by the intense interest manifested in the book by fellow travelers who chanced to see its title, inquiries being made concerning where it could be purchased, etc. This prompts me to write you, thinking it of interest to you and in the interest of truth.

Because of the wide, even international, interest in the subject, intensified by the Dayton trial, now is the psychological time to sell the book; and if nationally advertised, I believe the book would make a great seller, and thus the hypothetical reasoning of would-be scientists might be overruled for good because of the occasion thus furnished for focusing thought upon the truths contained in the book.

Your brother in Christ,

P. W. STONESTREET.

The soul must be filled before it can overflow to others. It must seek God and receive from him if it is not to remain empty or shallow.—Selected.

- J. F. Tomson, Lecanto, Fla., November 14: "The work of enlarging our church house is going on at a rapid rate under the supervision of Lee Allen, and soon we will have more room to accommodate our fast-growing audiences. Recently Brethren Nance and Mosley, of the congregation at Brewer, Miss., have located here with their families."

The Gospel Advocate is the best paper in the world."

John F. Crews, Pensacola, Fla., November 16: "The congregation in West Hill was made to rejoice yesterday when a family was united spiritually. Our church treasurer's wife, who had been a Baptist, decided that she wanted to be just a Christian and throw off all worldly names, and united with us at the morning service. I. A. Douthitt, Sedalia, Ky., November 20: "On Tuesday night, November 17, I closed a meeting at Chapel Avenue, Nashville, Tenn. Four were baptized, two took membership, and one came from the Vine Street Christian Church. This meeting was well attended. One of the most encouraging things about it was the attendance of our preachers. More than thirty-five preachers came to the meeting during the ten days. I find Nashville unlike any other city I have ever visited—more brethren and doing more for the Lord than any place I have ever seen. I shall begin at Brookport, Ill., next Sunday."

- J. W. Grant preached at Charlotte Avenue, this city, last Lord's day.
- M. G. McAlister reports that J. R. Hovious preached at Pilcher Avenue, this city, last Lord's day, morning and night.

My brother, Charley Nichols, lives there, and is making some real sacrifices to get the gospel before the people."

- S. L. Weaks, Springfield, Ohio, November 21: "Please ask the Gospel Advocate readers to let me know of any loyal Christian living in Springfield, Ohio. - J. L. Hines, Mount Juliet, Tenn., November 17: "Not-withstanding the rain and snow, we had a good tendays' meeting at Wysox, Ky., closing on November 1. Four were baptized. I preached at Adams, Tenn., Sunday, November 15. The brethren there are laying the foundation for their meetinghouse."
- L. E. Carpenter, Houston, Texas, November 15: "The work with the Central congregation, this city, is encouraging. Our Bible-study attendance has more than doubled since the first of September, and we have not missed a single Sunday having new pupils to enroll in our classes. The attendance and interest to-day were very fine. One young woman was baptized."
- K. C. Moser, Oklahoma City, Okla., November 16: "Our meeting, with S. H. Hall as preacher, closed with twelve baptisms, several restorations, and several to become identified with the congregation by statement. The church received some very fine teaching and was fitted to do better work. Greater audiences attended the meeting than at any other time since I have been working with the church."
- Emmett G. Creacy, Horse Cave, Ky., November 18: "Our meeting in Turkeyneck Bend closed last night. Four were baptized and three were restored. Willie Miller directed the singing. Brother Miller and I will begin a meeting at Burkesville, Ky., December 8, the Lord willing. This is a digressive stronghold, but prospects are favorable for establishing a congregation that will work and worship 'as it is written.' The meeting will be held in the courthouse."
- O. F. Shearer, Monticello, Ky., November 20: "A. B. Barret closed a meeting here on Friday night, November 6. The attendance was fairly good, considering the weather. Song service was ably led by J. V. A. Traylor. The visible results were two additions, both men of mature age and heads of families, and the church built up in 'the faith which was once for all delivered unto the saints.' Brother Barret delivered some very strong lectures against higher criticism and evolution."
- C. R. Nichol, Clifton, Texas, November 6, to E. A. Elam: "Let me thank you for your article in the Gospel Advocate of October 22, 'Making Too Much of Differences' (No. 5). I think the article timely. Surely it will have some effect on some people who have been attempting to use the quotations to which you make reference in an effort to justify themselves in their course. I trust all goes well with you and your work, and that you will command me whenever I can serve you."
- Will J. Cullum, Hartsville, Tenn., November 16: "I was at Lafayette yesterday, where I met a fine body of people. I preached at eleven o'clock and baptized a sick woman in the afternoon. J. J. Harlan assisted me in this service, as the woman was not able to walk. The meeting here continues, with the interest good, and the preaching logical, forceful, and plain. No man of to-day can, to my mind, present the truth more plainly than does H. M. Phillips. The meeting will continue through this week."

- Price Billingsley, Brinson, Ga., November 23: "I spoke to some four hundred people last night in the Summit tent meeting, and there have been several confessions. Also, their new church building starts this week. I begin a meeting in Brinson this week."
- Will M. Thompson, Helena, Okla., November 17: "I am here in a meeting that began on Sunday. Prospects good. This is the home of J. W. Ballard, who is held in high esteem by his home people. This is my final meeting for the year. Correspondents will please note that my home address is Box 296, Roff, Okla."
- U. R. Beeson, Wesson, Ark., November 16: "John W. Hedge and I are now at Wesson in a meeting which promises a good interest and attendance. We have no organized church at this place. The meeting at Bearden, Ark., was practically a mission meeting. The few disciples there and here strive hard to establish congregations."
- C. C. McQuiddy, Alma, Ark., November 19: "I was at Slate Hill, Ark., November 4-11. It rained us out two nights. I preached directly to the church. About sixty inactive, indifferent members confessed their wrongs, and renewed covenant relations with Christ. I preached the last night to aliens. Two confessed Christ and were baptized into the one body. This closed my protracted-meeting work for this year. The total results for the year were two hundred and twenty-six to line up for service under King Immanuel. I would like to spend some time next year in Middle Tennessee, if I can arrange some meetings."
- T. E. Anderson, Bolivar, Tenn., November 19: "A small band of Christians, about seventeen in number, met in the courthouse here last Lord's day and organized a congregation proposing to worship 'as it is written.' We have here in Bolivar some thirty members of the one body, and we are going to try to build up the cause here." We have made arrangements with G. A. Dunn, Sr., to hold a meeting for us next June, and we will need a large tent. We need one that will seat one thousand people to use in that meeting. If there is a congregation anywhere who has such a tent and will either lend it or rent it, we will be glad to hear from them. Best wishes to the Gospel Advocate."
- S. C. Garner, principal of County Line Bible School, Bakersfield, Mo., November 17: "We began the eleventh term of the County Line Bible School yesterday and have had two good days. The outlook now is that we are to have the best term in the history of this school in attendance, interest, and work. We are becoming crowded in the dormitory and need more dormitory supplies; so we ask the sisters to help us in this part of the work. A quilt, sheet, blanket, comfort, pillow, pillowcase, towel, or anything else that we can use will be greatly appreciated. The faculty of this school is supported entirely by freewill offerings. This school is free to all who attend. We will appreciate the fellowship of all friends of this work."
- J. S. Newman, San Antonio, Texas, October 21: "The churches of Christ in San Antonio take pleasure in commending the faithful efforts of T. W. Phillips, who has been preaching for the Beacon Hill church of Christ, and regret that conditions have become such that he deems it necessary to leave his work in San Antonio. Brother Phillips established the Beacon Hill Church more than three years ago, and has labored with it constantly since that time. Brother Phillips is leaving San Antonio on account of the health of his wife. We hope and pray that she may improve in a more northerly climate. We bespeak for Brother Phillips the strongest coöperation that can be given him wherever he may go, and shall at all times be ready to extend the helping hand to him and his."
- Mrs. W. A. Sisco, Hohenwald, Tenn., November 18: "I have been studying over our last Lord's-day's lesson, Paul's letter to Philemon. I remembered that James E. Chessor wrote on it sometime past. So I began looking through my Gospel Advocates, and found it in the issue of September 25, 1924. It certainly is grand, as are all of Brother Chessor's writings. I think that article alone worth the price of the paper. I wish the Advocate went to every home in Hohenwald. I love the dear old Advocate. My father took it when it was first published, and it is still a weekly visitor to our home. There is another article in the Advocate of September 11, 1924, by L. D. Perkins, on the home life of Mrs. L. D. Perkins. I wish every woman would read it and try to live the same kind of a life she lived and train her children as she did. Success to the Gospel Advocate! May its editors and contributors live long to fight the good fight."

EDITORIAL

PEACE.

BY E. A. ELAM.

Blessed are the peacemakers: for they shall be called the children of God.

Behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the children of God; and such we are.

But we are not, and cannot be, children of God without complying with the conditions necessary in order to become children of God. These conditions God makes; we dc not.

One of these conditions is becoming peacemakers. Without becoming peacemakers we cannot become children of God. Peacebreakers are not the children of God.

All know that "except one be born anew [or, "from above"], he cannot see the kingdom of God"—that is, one cannot enter into and enjoy that kingdom. That is a spiritual kingdom; its life and blessings are spiritual; it is not of the flesh and of the earth, or of this world. "Except one be born of water and the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." Being "born anew," or of God, is not a matter of theory. To be born of God is to become like God, whose child one is; is to become and to remain a new creature in Christ Jesus; "the old things are passed away; behold, they are become new." One is in a new creation, or new state or kingdom. Hence, one has a new King; is under new and spiritual laws by which to be governed; is filled with a new spirit; has a new and happy life to live; has a new hope, bright and sure and steadfast; and has a new home on earth and a beautiful one in joyous anticipation in heaven. Being "born anew" is not simply an outward and physical act; it is a change of heart and state and life. This leads to or produces outward acts, but outward acts do not produce this. "Beloved, let us love one another: for love is of God; and every one that loveth is begotten of God, and knoweth God. He that loveth not knoweth not God; for God is love." (1 John 4: 7, 8.) Since God is love, all who are begotten of God are love; they are children of love, and live the life of love. Again: "God is love; and he that abideth in love abideth in God, and God abideth in him." (Verse 16.) Abides in love! Love is the atmosphere which one "born anew" breathes, the realm in which one "born anew" lives, and the law by which one "born anew" is governed. One "born anew" abides in three Persons, and three Persons abide in the one "born anew" -God, Christ, and the Holy Spirit.

Does it not seem at times that some other person abides in some who claim to be God's children?

"But if any man hath not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his." "Have this mind in you, which was also in Christ Jesus." This mind must be cultivated. It can be seen in Phil. 2: 1-11. God's children "have put off the old man with his doings, and have put on the new man, that is being renewed unto knowledge after the image of him that created him" (Col. 3: 9, 10); they have been made new creatures to live and to grow in the spiritual life; they are God's workmanship, "created in Christ Jesus for good works, which God afore prepared that we should walk in them."

All know, or should know, that to love God is to keep his commandments (John 14: 15, 21, 23, 24; 1 John 5: 3), and that to love men-brethren, neighbors, and enemies—is to treat them as God directs (1 John 3: 2; 1 John 3: 13-24; Rom. 12: 17-21; 13: 7-10).

Love is not cold and mechanical, neither is it an animal passion; it is not mere logic and argumentation. child of God never has more logic than love. Love must be unfeigned, or without hypocrisy, fervent and from the heart. "In love of the brethren be tenderly affectioned one toward another."

Returning to the very important subject of peace, let us ask, What is the kingdom of heaven which one enters when "born anew?" It is not some human organization, founded upon some human creed, or theory, or speculations. One may accept all the creeds, theories, speculations, and commandments of men and never be "born anew," or "born of God," but will remain the same old contentious and worldly creature. "The kingdom of God is not eating and drinking," or worshiping idols of any sort, or gratifying the flesh in any way; "but [it is] righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Spirit." (Rom. 14: 17.)

It is the peace of this kingdom which this article seeks to emphasize and which every true child of God is grievously distressed to see so often broken and trampled under foot. Paul says:

Let no corrupt speech proceed out of your mouth, but such as is good for edifying as the need may be, that it may give grace to them that hear. And grieve not the Holy Spirit of God, in whom ye were sealed unto the day of redemption. Let all bitterness, and wrath, and anger, and clamor, and railing, be put away from you, with all malice: and be ye kind one to another, tender-hearted, forgiving each other, even as God also in Christ forgave you. (Eph. 4: 29-32.)

Let us note that between verse 29 on one side and verses 31 and 32 on the other side Paul says: "And grieve not the Holy Spirit of God." Then the Holy Spirit may be grieved; and "corrupt speech," "bitterness, " "wrath," "anger," "clamor," "railing," and "malice" used and manifested by brethren do this. It must follow, therefore, that every true child of God is grieved at such speech and conduct on the part of brethren, for every true child of God has the Spirit of God. He who has not this Spirit is not God's child. Indeed, this is grievous, and every true child of God in tears will raise his voice in solemn protest against all such speech and conduct, and will repeat in all earnestness the Lord's solemn admonition to put all such away and to be kind, tender-hearted, and forgiving.

One of the seven things which God hates is "sowing discord among brethren." The other six are: "haughty eyes," "a lying tongue," shedding "innocent blood" (murder), devising "wicked purposes," feet "swift in running to mischief," and "a false witness." Some cause mischief and stir up strife and keep up agitations when they really seem to think they are doing good and are proving their loyalty to the truth.

How full of meaning and how wonderfully beautiful are the following expressions:

And the peace of God, which passeth all understanding, shall guard your hearts and your thoughts in Christ Jesus!

Peace I leave with you; my peace I give unto you; not as the world giveth give I unto you!

And the God of peace shall be with you!

How often are the expressions, "the God of peace" and "the peace of God," used in the New Testament! How often does Paul pray "the peace of God" upon Christians!

Does it not seem that the demon of strife, and not "the God of peace," is with a great many? Speaking to brethren, James says:

But if ye have bitter jealousy and faction in your heart, glory not and lie not against the truth. . . . For where jealousy and faction are, there is confusion and every vile deed.

Instead of abiding in "the peace of God," do not some brethren with jealousy and faction in their hearts "glory and lie against the truth" and produce "confusion and every vile deed?" There are such evil things.

Amid all the factions, bitterness, hard speeches, confusion, divisions, and vile deeds in numerous congregations throughout the land, I have never met but two or three men who would confess that they were the cause of strife and division in a congregation. On the contrary, as a rule, every one seeks to justify himself. Brethren are not willing to confess that they are envious, jealous, factious, or that they have produced strife and caused divisions among the people of God. Some few may admit some wrong in connection with such evil, but not one will attribute the cause of it to his own spirit and conduct. Judas never admitted that he had betrayed innocent blood until too late.

Jesus is the Prince of Peace, the Lord of Peace, over whose birth the angels sang the glorious song of peace, which all can repeat; Jesus came "to guide our feet into the way of peace;" the gospel is the gospel of peace; and God preached this gospel of peace by Jesus Christ (Acts 10: 36). Christians are commanded to be at peace among themselves (1 Thess. 5: 13); to follow after things which make for peace (Rom. 14: 19); to "follow after peace with all men, and the sanctification without which no man shall see the Lord" (Heb. 12: 14); to seek peace and pursue it (1 Pet. 3: 11); if it be possible, as much as in them lies—that is, so far as their hearts and conduct are concerned—to be at peace with all men (Rom. 12: 18); and to be peacemakers.

Since God is the God of peace, one cannot be born of God without becoming a child of peace. Neither can one preach the gospel of peace without preaching peace on earth and good will to men; without teaching all congregations to live in peace; and without endeavoring to make peace among all individuals with whom they come in contact, who are not at peace.

But no man can preach peace—peace with God and men—who has not the spirit of peace, who does not love and have peace in his heart, and who does not endeavor to follow it in his life.

It is strange and sad that so many church members, including not a few preachers, seem to pay no regard whatever to the teaching of the New Testament on peace. In a partisan spirit, it seems, they are very exacting in regard to some things, but pay no attention to their own course in regard to the teaching of God on peace. In fact, they seem to prefer contention and strife; to feed upon them and to desire to feed others upon them; and to be on the hunt for heresy. The honey bee scents from afar the clover blossoms and flower gardens and fruit orchards and gathers the sweets. What can be more pleasant and refreshing and beautiful than clover fields, orange groves, peach orchards and apple orchards, in full bloom, all covered with dew, and filling the air with delicious odors! What can be more repulsive than the foul stench arising from decaying dead animals! The buzzard soon discovers the latter. It sails over every honeysuckle and rose garden and sweet-scented field and pounces upon the rotten carcass of every dead rat or sheep or cow, etc., in the land. This foul bird may serve the purpose of ridding the country of filth, but there is a theory that it spreads the germ of hog cholera. It is true, one can have choice between bee and buzzard. There is enough error taught and practiced and enough trouble in congregations without hunting and causing more. The wise thing to do is to starve out as much of all such as possible; let them die.

For lack of wood the fire goeth out; and where there is no whisperer, contention ceaseth.

The more some things are stirred, the worse they become—that is, too, the worse some people become.

The work of Christians is to help people out of wrong and away from trouble, and to "so fulfill the law of Christ." (See Gal. 6: 1-3; James 5: 19, 20.) Would it not be far better and more in keeping with peace to do more of this kind of work and less of faultfinding and of condemning others?

We can learn and quote all the passages in the Bible on peace, but that is not enough; we ourselves must practice them. To keep the whole law, and yet to fail [to refuse to obey God] in one point is to be guilty of all. To hear the words of Jesus and to do them not is to build on the sand. To "say, and do not," is Pharisaism.

Peace, gentle but powerful, must govern the whole life.

And let the peace of Christ rule in your hearts, to which also ye were called in one body; and be ye thankful.

BLESSED ARE THE PEACEMAKERS: FOR THEY SHALL BE CALLED THE SONS OF GOD.

FAILURE OF WEALTH.

BY T. B. LARIMORE.

There is a widespread impression that wealth can give happiness; that wealth can give the peace for which we sigh; hence, from the rivers to the ends of the earth there is a ceaseless struggle—people trying to gather, to hoard up, wealth. Men will turn from their loved ones; cross rivers, mountains, plains, and seas; and practically bury themselves alive, in their efforts to gain wealth, as was illustrated especially back in the early fifties in this land, when there was a vast army marching from the older States to the Pacific States to hunt gold in those golden sands. There are hundreds, if not thousands, of lonely graves marking forever the paths that were followed by men in quest of gold; and people are doing that now. Not many months ago, just after the train left Louisville, I noticed that a man on the seat near me was very restless. Directly he said something to me and we gct into a conversation. He briefly told me his story, and I learned from him that he was then forty-four years old: that he had left his old Kentucky home when he was about twenty-two; that he had gone to the mining district of Mexico, and had spent twenty-two years there. He was returning home then, with two bullets in his body and about twenty thousand dollars in gold in the bank in Louisville for safe-keeping. He asked the conductor repeatedly about what time he would get to a certain station. The conductor could hardly pass without his asking some question. He said to me: "I am going back home. I am expecting my brother to meet me there.

left, my father has died, my mother has died, and my sister also. My brother is still living, and I expect him to meet me." I said to him: "Now it is all over and you have given your twenty-two years of life for twenty thousand dollars in gold, do you think it pays?" He thought seriously for a second, and he said: "No, it has not paid. I have money enough, if I will be careful of it, to last me the remainder of my days; but things about the old home have changed, so that as I go back now with the twenty thousand dollars in Louisville to my credit, I cannot be happy." The train stopped. He got off within three miles of his country home. The train simply stopped to let him get off, and started on again. I looked back, and the last I saw of him he was in the embrace of a man. I noticed standing near them a boy whom I took to be a nephew. As I went on I thought of the son, that wanderer, going back with his gold, meeting his brother who was left at the old home. He could not ask him: "How is mother? and how is father? and how is sister?" He knew all about that. But he could go back with his brother, and when he got home there was no father to meet him at the gate; there was no mother to come with her arms thrown out to receive him in her fond embrace, to kiss him and sob and weep and thank God for his return; no sister in the home, keeping the house neat and tidy, and making it a paradise, if possible, because brother was coming home. He could go into the house and see the vacant seats of the absent loved ones; he could go out in the orchard back of it and see the graves of father, mother, and sister, and then remember that he robbed home of the joy and sunshine and gladness with which he might have filled it for twentytwo years. He had left father without a stay and support, mother without his sympathy, and sister without his care, until all had died and he had returned too late to tell them about his fortune and divide his gold with them. As I thought, I did not wonder that the man said, with a sigh: "No, it did not pay." I felt if I had been that man, and had that gold in two packages and could have lifted and thrown them, I would have felt like throwing it all into the depths of the sea. I could not bear to look upon it and think what I had lost and what I had deprived others of in my thirst and search for gold. This is the history of the world. People have been doing this through all the ages, and there are men who will live like paupers for forty years in order to die rich.

Now, then, the race needed some one upon the stage of action for the purpose of presenting this to the human race, to tell us the result before it was too late; for if that man could have looked down the stream of time to the morning when we met for the first and, perhaps, for the last time-could have seen the difference between then and now in his old Kentucky home-he would not have gone to Mexico; he would have stayed at home. The race needed some one to present these things, that we might learn without such bitter experience. While thinking thus, we notice that the curtain has rolled up, and we see the same actor. He has retained his knowledge, his wisdom, his experience, but he is just glittering with radiant gems and jewels rare and with flashing diamonds. As he turns in the light, he is perfectly dazzling. look around him; we see nothing that is less precious than gold-gold and pearls and diamonds-things of wondrous commercial value. We look up the great stage. In the background it seems that the wealth of the universe has been gathered and heaped. And why? Solomon is the richest of the earth. Men experienced along that line, who have made estimates, tell us that Solomon's wealth was such that Crœsus, whose name has been a synonym for wealth, was practically a homeless wanderer, a penniless pauper, in comparison with him. In Solomon's days the surrounding nations poured their glittering, golden treasures into Palestine, and Solomon had charge of these treasures. Gold and silver were as rocks for abundance about Jerusalem at that time. He realized that his wealth was almost boundless; that it was practically impossible for him, by reckless extravagance, to diminish the wonders of his wealth. Was he happy with all this wealth, with all these streams flowing in perpetually—the streams of glittering gold—dwelling in a palace that caught the rays of the rising sun upon a golden roof? If wealth can make a man happy, Solomon is happy. But he has sense enough to know that he can use but little of this wealth. He can dwell in but one golden palace at a time; he can sleep upon but one couch, wear only one suit of clothes, eat but one meal at a time. He can in a lifetime use very little of his wealth, and he is grieved and burdened and perplexed because of his anxieties with reference to the great surplus he has. He has sense enough to know that he can never use it, and beyond what he can use it cannot practically bless-just as if a man were thirsty, and the Pacific Ocean were the best of water to drink, and he owned it and had it hedged about so that no bird or man or mouse could drink of it. He could drink but a little of it at a time, and all the rest would be practically valueless to him. Then the thought ought to come to him: "It is cruel to have all this ocean when I can drink but a little, and let teeming millions die of thirst in agony." Then Solomon remembered that he knew not whose these things would be when he departed, whether this wondrous wealth would belong to a wise man or a fool. He did not know whether friends or foes would own it then. He did not know but that the sons for whom he was hoarding up would butcher each other, and stain with blood the very treasures he had spent a lifetime in gathering together. He remembers that if he had owned the whole earth, and owned it until he died, there would be but one breath between the millionaire and the pauper; that the hour was coming when he would die, and one moment after he breathed his last breath he would be as poor as the poorest beggar in the land; that his body would sleep in the bosom of the earth, and that would be all of earth to him; and he turns away in deepest sadness, and writes over that pool-the glittering, golden pool of wealth-" Vanity and vexation of spirit," thus saying to the human race: "If you expect wealth to make you happy, you might as well stop now, for at the end of your race it is all varity and vexation of spirit." The curtain drops, the scene ends, but the lesson is ours.

OBEDIENCE TO LAW. BY F. W. SMITH.

The term "law" as here used is to be understood in its broadest sense—that is, to include both divine and human law.

That man is under obligation to obey both the law of God and the law of man has been made plain by the teaching of Jesus Christ and his apostles.

Then went the Pharisees, and took counsel how they might entangle him in his talk. And they sent out unto him their disciples with the Herodians, saying, Master, we know that thou art true, and teachest the way of God in truth, neither carest thou for any man: for thou regardest not the person of men. Tell us therefore, What thinkest thou? Is it lawful to give tribute unto Cæsar, or not? But Jesus perceived their wickedness, and said, Why tempt ye me, ye hypocrites? Show me the tribute money. And they brought unto him a penny. And he saith unto them, Whose is this image and superscription? They say unto him, Cæsar's. Then saith he unto them, Render therefore unto Cæsar the things which are Cæsar's; and unto God the things that are God's." (Matt. 22: 15-21.)

SEEKING TO ENTRAP JESUS.

This was a most skillful and adroitly laid scheme to either involve Jesus with the Roman government or to array him against the law of Moses and thus discredit and injure his influence and teaching with the Jews.

The Pharisees—that is, the leaders among that Jewish sect—were classed with the most bitter and persistent enemies of Jesus. They were either too cowardly or fearful of being detected in their scheme to go in person to Jesus with the above question; hence, they send their willing disciples in company with representatives of the political party called "Herodians."

The trap was set to catch Jesus, no matter, as they thought, how he might answer their question. If Jesus had answered them with either a "yes" or "no," they would have gained their point. To have said "yes" unqualifiedly would have arrayed Jesus against the law of Moses as the Jews interpreted the following:

When thou art come unto the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee, and shalt possess it, and shalt dwell therein, and shalt say, I will set a king over me, like as all the nations that are about me; thou shalt in any wise set him king over thee, whom the Lord thy God shall choose: one from among thy brethren shalt thou set king over thee: thou mayest not set a stranger over thee, which is not thy brother. (Deut. 17: 14, 15.)

At the time this question was propounded the Jews had no king of their own nation, but were under the Roman empire. Hence, if Jesus, who was a Jew, had said without qualification "yes" to their question, the representatives of the Pharisees would have spread abroad among the Jews that Jesus was teaching the people to disregard the law of Moses. But if he had answered "no" unqualifiedly, the representatives of Herod, a Roman ruler, would have reported that Jesus was teaching the people not to obey the law of Cæsar, and thus the Romans would have killed Jesus.

Human ingenuity never, in all recorded history of the race, concocted a shrewder scheme to entrap a victim, and the manner of introducing their question shows consummate skill.

Their Hypocritical Address.

They introduced their mission with fulsome flattery—viz.: "Master, we know that thou art true, and teachest the way of God in truth, neither carest thou for any man: for thou regardest not the person of men." Now, this was literally true; but it was a truth stated in order to deceive, for those who uttered it believed not one word of what they said. It was, therefore, a misuse of the truth, and placed those who uttered it in the attitude of falsifiers, for they had it in their hearts to hide their real purpose.

THE MASK TORN OFF.

Jesus saw through their corrupt scheme, because he could read their hypocritical hearts, and saw clearly their wicked intentions. Hence, he said to them: "Why tempt ye me, ye hypocrites?" This must have been a stunning blow to those wicked messengers. After all of the cunning counsels of the Pharisees and politicians of King Herod, to have their hopes blasted by the first words from the Master was enough to show their defeat. "Why tempt ye me. ye hypocrites?" How did Jesus know they were putting him to trial, seeking to entrap him? How did Jesus know they were insincere? Had some one heard? Had their secret leaked out? No. They stood before the One through whom the worlds were made (John 1: 3) and knew their every thought and move.

THE QUESTION ANSWERED.

Had Jesus remained silent, without answering their question, they would have returned with the report that he either could not or would not answer, in which event his enemies would have made capital out of it and used it against him. Thereupon, Jesus said: "Show me the tribute money"—that is, the coin used in paying tribute or taxes to the Roman government. This done, Jesus propounds a question to his enemies—viz.: "Whose is this image and superscription?"

The tables have now turned, and they themselves are on trial, and the very answer they are compelled to give irvolves the answer to their own question framed and sent by the Pharisees and Herodians. "They say unto him, Cæsar's." This was an acknowledgment that the Jews were under the political sovereignty of Cæsar and that, therefore, it was right to render unto Cæsar that which was his. Hence, Jesus said: "Render therefore unto Cæsar the things which are Cæsar's." The Jews were using Roman coin, the only medium of commerce in all other matters of exchange, thus showing their subjection to Roman authority, and now why not in the matter of taxes?

The statute from the law of Moses (Deut. 17: 14, 15) on which the enemies of Christ based their hope of success in convicting Jesus did not apply in the case before them. lt had no reference to an enforced tribute, but simply they were not to set a king over themselves other than one of their own nation. They had, by their disobedience, lost their nationality and kingdom, and were brought by the will of God under the Romans. But Jesus continued: "And unto God the things that are God's." Thus the duty of obedience to both divine and human law is clearly taught by Jesus Christ. But we must not overlook the fact that since God is greater than man and all his laws are perfect, that when human law conflicts with or in any way contravenes divine law, we are to obey God rather than men; and that in such a case, where either the divine or the human must be disobeyed, let it always be the human law set aside. This an inspired apostle clearly announces-viz.: "Whether it be right in the sight of God to hearken unto you more than unto God, judge ye." (Acts 4: 19.) There can be but one answer to Peter's question here in the light of the fact that God is the Supreme Ruler of the universe and the Creator of man. The thirteenth chapter of the book of Romans is a clear treatise on man's duty to the laws of man and should be carefully studied by every one.

CONCLUSION.

From all the facts in the case we can but conclude that when man violates a law of the human government not in conflict with some law of God, that he commits a sin against both God and man, for God commands man to be in subjection to the powers that be. It, therefore, becomes a dangerous thing to rail against dominion and dignities (Jude 8), and yet professed Christians seem to take a delight in actually abusing civil governments because of what they require at their hands. More than that, they seem unwilling to pay taxes, and in some instances are reported as covering up and hiding property from tax assessors. Notes, mortgages, and other properties that can be concealed are so arranged that the government cannot collect taxes on them. On the other hand, the government should not be so exorbitant in its taxation of the people. It is freely granted that the rate of taxation in this country is nothing short of the outrageous, but what is the remedy? Certainly not a refusal to pay taxes, unless it can be shown that such exorbitant rates are in violation of the law of God. If it comes under the head of "oppression" and "extortion," that would certainly be a violation of the divine law, for a government has no more right to practice such things than does an individual. But it is not the taxpayer committing the wrong, and the Bible teaches Christians to suffer wrong rather than to do wrong. The only relief from such heavy and outrageous burdens is through legislation in reduced taxation. But as to whether such legislation reduces or increases taxation is to be seen, without sufficient grounds for hope.

A FEW QUESTIONS ANSWERED.

BY F. B. SRYGLEY.

Bardwell, Ky., October 25, 1925.—Dear Brother Srygley: Please answer the following question through the Gospel Advocate. We learn from Mark 1: 4 that John baptized unto repentance for the remission of sins. Did these people that John baptized have to be baptized again to become members of the New Testament church?

Your brother, C. N. PIPER.

It does not appear that they did. There is no account of the a postles' having to be baptized to get into the church. To me it appears that the twelve apostles and the one hundred and twenty that were with them on the day of Pentecost were the charter members of the church and that they had been baptized by John the Baptist. There may have been others who heard Peter's sermon on that day that were also baptized by John and were added simply by believing on Christ. There is no indication in the Bible that John's baptism was not all right when submitted to while it was in force, but we are taught that it was not baptism at all after it had been superseded by the baptism of the commission. The New Testament teaches one baptism, and while John's ministry lasted his baptism was the one baptism; but when his ministry ended and the great commission had gone into effect, then John's baptism ceased to be baptism at all. While it was in force it was the baptism recognized by Heaven. Jesus taught this clearly when he asked the chief priests and the elders the question: "The baptism of John, whence was it? from heaven or from men?" (Matt. 21: 25.) It was a part of "the counsel of God," for Jesus said: "I say unto you, Among them that are born of women there is none greater than John: yet he that is but little in the kingdom of God is greater than he. And all the people when they heard, and the publicans, justified God, being baptized with the baptism of John. But the Pharisees and the lawyers rejected for themselves the counsel of God, being not baptized of him." (Luke 7: 28-30.) Then to reject the baptism of John was to reject the counsel of God. It was therefore from heaven, and was a part of God's counsel; but when the great commission went into effect, the baptism of John gave place to the baptism of the commission, which was "in the name of Jesus Christ" (Acts 2: 38) and "into the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit" (Matt. 28: 19). "Now a certain Jew named Apollos, an Alexandrian by race, an eloquent man, came to Ephesus; and he was mighty in the scriptures. This man had been instructed in the way of the Lord; and being fervent in spirit, he spoke and taught accurately the things concerning Jesus, knowing only the baptism of John: and he began to speak boldly in the synagogue. But when Priscilla and Aquila heard him, they took him unto them, and expounded unto him the way of God more accurately." (Acts 18: 24-26.) Apollos was all right. except that he knew only the baptism of John. While John's baptism was from God and was at one time a part of his counsel, it was not true when Apollos was preaching, and because he did not know this he did not know the way of God accurately. Apollos had made disciples, or learners, by his teaching, yet they had not been accurately instructed on the question of baptism. When Paul came to Ephesus and found these disciples, "he said unto them, Did ye receive the Holy Spirit when ye believed? And they said unto him, Nay, we did not so much as hear whether the Holy Spirit was given." (Acts 19: 2.) "Given" is italicized, which shows that it was supplied by the translators. Since they had not heard that the Holy Spirit was, or was given, Paul knew there was something wrong with their baptism; for they could not have been baptized with the baptism of the commission and not hear of the Holy Spirit, for that baptism was into the name of the Holy Spirit. So "he said, Into what then were ye baptized? And they said, Into John's baptism. And Paul said, John baptized with the baptism of repentance, saying unto the people that they should believe on him that should come after him, that is, on Jesus. And when they heard this, they were baptized into the name of the Lord Jesus." (Verses 3-5.) John's baptism was not into the name of the Lord Jesus, neither was it in the name of Christ. "Hitherto have ye asked nothing in my name." (John 16: 24.) John came to prepare a people for the Lord, and those who accepted his teaching and were baptized by him had only to believe on Christ when he came; but when John's baptism gave place to the baptism of the commission, it was no longer a part of "the counsel of God."

I am asked another question by a good woman, and I will do my best to answer that also:

Memphis, Tenn., November 9, 1925.—Dear Brother Srygley: I am asking for a little of your time this morning, and hope I am not interfering with a more important matter. I want to ask you an old question, and one which you may think every one who knows anything about the Bible should understand; but I want you to discuss a little different phase of it, if you please. It is on the work of women in the church. In 1 Cor. 14: 35, Paul says: "If they would learn anything, let them ask their own husbands at home." We know there are many women to-day who would never learn anything, for their husbands are not able to teach them. Is it wrong for a woman to ask and answer questions and discuss a subject in a mixed class? I know a brother who says he would not ask a woman a question in a mixed class. I am merely seeking information, and I think there are others who would appreciate a discussion of this in the Gospel Advocate. I cannot harmonize this scripture with Acts 21: 9, where it is stated that Philip "had four virgin daughters, who prophesied."

The good sister seems to think it will be useless for some women to try to obey Paul, since she says: "We know there are many women to-day who would never learn anything, for their husbands are not able to teach them." Perhaps I am too late to give advice now to those who are already tied; but if they had asked me sooner, I would have advised against yoking themselves up with these old numskulls, but now they will have to do the best they can. If these good women would follow the apostle's advice herein mentioned, they might wake some of these old fellows up. Sometimes a weak man might help a smart woman in her study of the Bible. The Bible is for every one, and sometimes the ignorant man might get the truth, while the smart woman has been overshooting it. By all means, propound a few questions to the old gentleman, as it may help him and can do the smart sister no harm. But I think that the passage means for the woman to seek her information in a private way and not be pitching in on the sacred worship of God. "Is it wrong for a woman to ask and answer questions and discuss a subject in a mixed class?" I think not, unless it be while the worship of God is in progress. I think the brother you know, who "would not ask a woman a question in a mixed class," is extreme in his position, unless it is when the whole church is come together to worship God. I do not know whether Apollos asked Priscilla any questions or not, but I do know that Priscilla and Aquila "took him unto them, and expounded unto him the way of God more accurately." (Acts 18: 26.) This must have been a mixed class of two men and one woman. If I can teach my boys and girls, with a few of my neighbors' boys and girls, the word of God by asking and answering questions at home, I certainly can do so in the meetinghouse on Sunday morning before the regular worship begins. I have the same right to ask a woman a question in teaching the Bible on Sunday morning before the church assembles for worship that I have to teach them by asking them a question in the schoolhouse on Monday morning. If not, why not? The house in which the teaching is done certainly can make no difference. Whatever the word "church" means in 1 Cor. 14, it cannot mean the meetinghouse. It seems to me to mean the worshiping assembly. Every Christian is under command to teach the Bible; and if Jesus could teach by asking and answering questions, I see no reason why we may not do the same.

Living epistles are the epistles of the apostles read into us, and then, through us, "read of all men." Dead Christians are dead letters.—Selected.

From the Brethren

Wellington, Texas, November 9. Two large crowds were present yesterday, with new faces at both hours. One of the members made a nice talk here on the first Lord's day, and one became identified with the congrega-tion by statement. I preached at Hollis, Okla., on the first Lord's day. There were five additions to the congregation at that time.—Ira Lee Sanders.

Munfordville, Ky., November 9.— I preached at Summit, Ky., yesterday morning and at Big Clifty in the evening. Two were baptized at Summit—one, an old gentleman seventy years of age, who had to be carried to the water. Brother Shannon D. Baker held meetings at the above places this summer. I enjoy the Gospel Advocate immensely.—Samuel H. Austin.

Tuscumbia, Ala., November 14.—About one year ago the meetinghouse of the church of Christ in Tuscumbia was destroyed by fire, but a new edifice is now in its place. The first service in the new building marked the beginning of a protracted meeting which closed on the night of November 12, with Brother G. A. Dunn, Jr., of Dallas, Texas, doing the preaching, and Brother Marion Davis, of Hillsboro, Tenn., directing the hymnal services. There were thirty-three to come forward, thirty of whom were baptized .- X.

Cleveland, Tenn., November 5.—I held a meeting at Brownsboro, Ala., August 3-16, with four added and one restored; at Limrock, Ala., August 3.—1. Au 16-23, five added, one restored; moderated for Flavil Hall in a debate with erated for Flavil Hall in a debate with W. M. It is indeed a high-class collection of real songs, suited for children, the most beautiful melodies, supported by rich harmonies, which are characteristic of Mr. Charles H. ## BIBLE CROSS WORD

DO you notice one unusual thing about this 13-square puzzle? There is not one two-letter word in the entire diagram. There are plenty of six-letter ones, though; in fact, it is so arranged that an unusual proportion are in the six-space class.

This puzzle interlocks so cleverly that one section leads you right into the next one, and you can start anywhere, because you will have to go all around the square in the end.

How to Solve a Cross Word Puzzle

To work out this puzzle, the white spaces must be filled with letters forming words answering to the various horizontal and vertical definitions given below. The horizontal and vertical words are not the same, but each gives a clue to the other. The first letter of each word is indicated by a number which refers to the definitions listed below.

It is advisable to first fill in, in both directions, those words which you know to be correct. These will furnish hints to those words which you do not know or had merely guessed at. When the puzzle is solved correctly, the letters in the white spaces will spell words both horizontally and vertically. The black spaces are the blind spots of the puzzle and merely form the pattern, incidentally designating the ends and beginnings of the words contained in the puzzle

FROM THE BRETHREN.

Little Rock, Ark., November 16.— Since coming here I have endeavored to learn what I can of the conditions in and around Little Rock. this a great missionary field. There is one congregation here in the city, a city of nearly one hundred thousand inhabitants, and the nearest worshiping congregation to this is thirty miles array. Surely the tenth thirty miles away. Surely the truth should be preached in these parts. I went to Pine Bluff and met with the little band of disciples one Lord's day since I have been here. I was out in the country yesterday, and met with the Blakemore congregation, some thirty miles from here. The Lord willing, I will be at Conway next Lord's day and at night, and at Blakemore again on the fifth Lord's day. I also want to look up some other places where I am told we have had the work started. I hope to be able to assist in impressing the necessity of regular Lord's-day meetings. Brother A. S. Bell, one of the teachers of Harding College, preaches for the congregation here every Lord's day. The congregation now meets at Twelfth and Thayer Streets, but will soon be located in new quarters on Fourth and State Streets, in an up-town district. I am always glad to get the Gospel Advocate, for it is a very welcome visitor.—J. L. Hill.

WORD FROM JAPAN.

BY B. D. MOREHEAD.

Recently I preached for the Japanese brethren working at Kamatomizoka, Tokyo. Brother Hiratsuka was my interpreter. I teach the Bible to a class of university students, who understand a little English, on Sunday evenings. They come to our home to be taught. Mrs. Morehead teaches a man English on Wednesday evenings. Miss Kennedy, Miss Cypert, Mrs. Morehead, and I all meet with Brother McCaleb on Saturday morning, in his study, to study together the Sunday-school lesson for the next day.

Miss Kennedy, Mrs. Morehead, and I are in a language school five days a week, learning to talk again. We are doing light housekeeping in Brother McCaleb's large, comfortable home.

May God bless all of our dear brethren and sisters in Christ in the home land.

THORP SPRING CHRISTIAN COLLEGE.

BY A. R. HOLTON.

The school is enjoying what many of us think to be our best year. We have this year, without doubt, the best faculty ever assembled by a Junior College in the State of Texas. Our student body is represented by every section of Texas and by three other States and one foreign country.

The industrial feature of our school is gaining favor with all the people. All we need is better equipment. We believe that if the brethren will provide equipment for industrial work that we can be within a few years practically independent. This is what we hope to do, at least.

Brother Klingman is doing the finest work possible with the church and his classes in school. It is certainly a pleasure to have his wonderful spiritual influence pervade the institution. His sermons to our young people have the unmistakable ring of the old-time gospel. Our young people are led into an appreciation of the simple New Testament plan of work and worship.

Plans are already on foot for the enlargement of the summer encampment, which begins on the first Sunday in August. We will be able to take care of more visitors than ever before, if our plans carry for the enlargement of our facilities.

THE NEED AT THE PRESENT. BY WILL J. CULLUM.

Much needs to be done in the work of the Lord, but, to my mind, the greatest need of the present is loyal, fearless, God-fearing gospel preachers who will not only preach the plan of salvation, but who will condemn error as well. The Savior said to his opponents that they would not go into the kingdom themselves and that they prevented others from entering. Can you imagine him calling upon such a character to lead a prayer? Will some one who believes in calling upon sectarian preachers to lead in prayer or pronounce the benediction, when he knows that they are not in the kingdom, please explain the difference in those preachers and the characters of whom the Savior speaks? Now, do not say that these preachers believe in Christ and those others did not. Let us see. In John 15: 14, Christ says: "Ye are my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you." Again, in John 14: 21, he says: "He that hath my commandments, and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me." Then. in 1 John 2: 4, we have this: "He that saith, I know him, and keepeth not his commandments, is a liar, and the truth is not in him."

Now. I insist that a man who has only been sprinkled has not obeyed the commandment of the Lord in becoming a Christian; and if not, he neither loves nor knows the Lord, is not a friend of the Lord, is not a Christian, cannot worship in spirit and truth, and, hence, his prayer is not acceptable, and he who calls upon him to take part in worship is saying by so doing that he is a Christian. A man cannot be a Christian out of Christ: and if not a child of God, he is a child of the devil, and should not be asked to offer a mock worship. I believe that oftentimes brethren call upon sectarian preachers in order to be polite, thinking that it will have good effect upon them and their friends: hence, they are trying to please men and not God. In Gal. 1: 10 the Holy Spirit declares that we cannot please God if we seek to please Wingo, Ky., November 11.—I have just returned from Dixon Springs, Ill., where I moderated for Brother W. A. Record and Jim Hooker (Bap-W. A. Record and Jim Hooker (Baptist) in a debate which resulted in a great victory for the truth. Hooker is a good debater for the Baptist people, but he could not stand up under the hammer of truth in Brother Record's hands. It was to have been a four-days' debate, but Hooker wanted to close on the second day. However, we succeeded in holding him for the third day, and then he left us. I believe I am safe in saying that every argument produced by Brother Record stood the test and that every argument produced by Hooker was turned against duced by Hooker was turned against him. I am to meet Hooker in a debate at Pryorsburg, Ky., beginning on December 15 and continuing four days .-- J. S. Jones.

Gainesboro, Tenn., November 9.—After being out since the middle of July in meetings, I am now at home with the church here. I would like to report at length the several meetings held, but time and space forbid. The meetings were uniformly good, and the cause is prospering reasona-bly well in most of the places where I have labored. In our work here at Gainesboro we are steadily advancing. Our ladies' Bible class, meeting once a week from house to house, is second to none, we think. The young once a week from house to house, is second to none, we think. The young people's Bible study will begin studying the life of Christ, meeting each Thursday evening. The cause for the future depends on the young people of to-day, and the prospect is not so good, but this should be a cause for increased activity in teaching the young. Not many young people read young. Not many young people read religious papers or the Bible. We must come in personal contact with them to train them for Christianity and church work.—H. A. Brown.

Portales, New Mexico, Box 512, November 14.—I certainly feel like begging pardon for not making a report of my work in this State in so long a time. But, brethren, while I am doing my best in the Lord's servam doing my best in the Lord's service, I am so greatly burdened over the condition of our sick soldier boy that I can hardly hold myself together; and if you knew the conditions, you would weep with me instead of saying, "Brother Ligon has quit the field." I am here yet and doing all I can for the cause I have done my best to stand by all these years. I am not giving any of my time to the church at Clovis, and hence am not receiving any support thence am not receiving any support from the church there. I am anxious to do a lot of mission work here in this destitute field, but must have some support from the churches of some support from the churches of Christ in other States in order to be able to do this needed work. I have preached a time or two at Portales, where we have a good little band of disciples, and also have preached over at Floyd, where I held a meeting some time back and baptized a lady into Christ, and where I found several others interested in learning the truth. I have received only fifteen dollars in something near two months. How long shall I suffer this dollars in something near two months. How long shall I suffer this loss, or, rather, bear this expense? As to myself and loyalty to the Word, I refer any and all to the elders of the church of Christ at Denton, Texas, where I have lived for years, and also to W. A. Of the fifteen dollars received, one brother (I do not have his name by me, but acknowledged his support) sent me seven dollars to help me. Now I want it distinctly understood I am not making a nor understood, I am not making a personal appeal—God forbid—but I am sonal appeal—God forbid—but I am asking the churches to help me stay here and preach the gospel of Christ to these people. Henderson, Tenn., November 16.—Since entering the evangelistic field the first of July, I have held meetings at the following places: Summitville, Tenn.; Oneonta, Ala.; Stayton, Tenn.; Baldwyn, Miss.; Knoxville, Tenn.; Bridgeport, Ala.; and Paragould, Ark. There were quite a number of additions to the church and a number restored. All in all, I feel very much pleased with the results. I shall repleased with the results. I shall return to a number of these places next year. My experience in these meetings has convinced me that I can best serve the Lord doing the work of an evangelist. I find since returning from the West the same zeal and loyalty in the churches in the South which has characterized them all which has characterized them all these years. I find little disposition upon their part to go after the tradi-tions of men. Neither are they af-flicted with the various hobbies, such as wrangling about the use of literature, Sunday schools, individual communion sets, etc. In fact, as I see it, the churches of the South owe much to the Gospel Advocate, and the brunt of the battle will be borne by them.—J. W. Brents.

Rome, Ga., November 9.—I held meetings at the following places: Brown's Chapel, in Dickson County, Tenn., beginning on Monday night after the fourth Sunday in July and continuing till Saturday, with two baptisms; the first Sunday in August, at Bellview, in Dickson County, with two baptisms: the third Sunday gust, at Bellview, in Dickson County, with two baptisms; the third Sunday in August, at Rome, Ga., no additions; the fourth Sunday in October, at Bogart, Ga., no additions. At Bogart I found six loyal members of the church of Christ. They rented the Prophytosian members for the Presbyterian meetinghouse the meeting. I succeeded in getting them organized. The Presbyterians proposed to sell the house, and the brethren bought it. So now we have a church of Christ at Bogart that is a church of Christ at Bogart that is meeting every Lord's day. Help from any of the strong churches would be appreciated. The restrictive clause will be in the deed. Send donations to J. S. Holland, Bogart, Ga., or to me, West Tenth Street, Rome, Ga. I am giving all my time to the church in Rome.—Charles Tidwell.

Amite, La., November 13.—Our meeting here starts with good interest. It is five days old, with two baptized to date. Brother C. M. Sitman has spent two years and his vacations while in school laboring in this part of the State, but is going to leave here the first of the year.—F. O. Howell.

THE WORK IN NEW YORK CITY.

BY JOHN ALLEN HUDSON.

In a former article I informed the readers of the Gospel Advocate of my acceptance of the call of the New York City church. I gave no details -just a statement that I expect to begin work with the faithful little band in New York City on January 1. This past summer I made a trip to New York City and talked with the brethren. Shortly after my return I informed the Union Avenue Church, in Memphis, of my intention to labor with the brethren in New York City after the first of the year. As mere incidents in my contact with different people and in my correspondence with others, I have received a great deal of favorable comment concerning the plan I wish to carry out in New York. Brethren have uniformly expressed themselves as believing that I shall be able to accomplish something or to aid the brethren in accomplishing something. We shall certainly do the very best we can; no doubt about that. This belief on the part of the brethren I appreciate. From Jacksonville, Fla.; San Antonio, Texas; Oklahoma City, Okla.; Nashville, Tenn.; Sellersburg, Ind.; Covington, Tenn.; Wewoka, Okla., and other points come words that strengthen my heart for the hardest work I have yet undertaken.

In the South there is a background for achievement that we shall not enjoy in New York City. I wish the brethren who may be looking toward New York City to remember this. In the South the church is strong. All the centers get numbers and numbers of believers from villages and towns all over the country. There is a great sympathetic audience to draw from always. Churches in the Southern centers will grow with but little effort because of the prepared background. That background has been cultivated by preachers of the gospel for the last sixty years with great assiduity. Thousands of communities have heard the word. But in the North this: Some of the great Northern centers are entirely without churches of Christ. Those cities that do have congregations have mere handfuls, with but few exceptions. The villages and towns and rural communities of the North are proportionately destitute of the pure gospel. This condition gives a different background. Progress is going to be slower. I am fully aware of this and have prepared to accept the condition and face the facts.

Recently, in talking with a doctor of Memphis who did some postgraduate work in New York City, I was informed by him that the Tennessee Club in New York City boasts of a thousand members. From Oklahoma City I had a letter a few days ago telling me of a couple of that place who are going to New York City to live. They are members of the church. I mention these things to show that I anticipate finding Southerners who are members of the church all along. No doubt there are numbers of them. Finding them is going to be no little task. We must depend upon the members of the entire country to help us do this. So, while the background is not the same, it differs in degree, and New York is going to be hard. It is so accounted by the denomina-Some of their reports are tions. awakening.

THE BETTER WAY.

The little sharp vexations,
And the briers that catch and fret—
Why not take all to the Helper
Who has never failed us yet?

Tell Him about the heartache,
And tell Him the longings, too;
Tell Him the baffled purpose
When we scarce know what to do.

Then, leaving all our weakness
With the One divinely strong,
Forget that we bore the burden,
And carry away the song.

GEMS OF THOUGHT.

That load becomes light which is cheerfully borne.

Not every one that saith, "Brother, brother," but he that liveth for another.

Let us use our past mistakes and failures as building material for future success.

Here is another man who never makes a mistake—the man who never does anything; but this is one of the greatest mistakes.

Adversity is sometimes hard upon a man; but for one man who can stand prosperity there are a hundred that will stand adversity.

The reason why we do not feel the power of evil is partly because we are not resisting it—we are sailing a good deal with the stream; and partly because it is like the pressure of the atmosphere—it presses equally in every direction; it is inside of us as well as outside, and the pressures seem to neutralize one another.

POTTER ORPHAN HOME.

BY H. C. SHOULDERS.

The brethren and friends of the Home will remember that I made a call for five hundred dollars to be raised on the second Sunday in October. I am glad to report that the amount came and the repair bill was paid in due time. The friends of the Home have always responded when called upon. Now, that the repair bill has been paid, we should not get the impression that the expense has ceased. There are monthly expenses connected with the Home that must be met. This kind of work has been neglected by us as a people, but I am glad to say that we are awakening to

We now have thirty-seven children in the Home and have calls for others to be admitted. This is a great work. and can be even greater when the support is sufficient to double the number of children. We have eleven congregations giving monthly to the work. We ought to have at least one hundred congregations giving monthly contributions. There is no greater work we can do than to help feed and clothe the helpless children of the country. The person who needs help is the one who is helpless. The Savior helped us (the human family) when we were helpless, lost. He came and gave his life to redeem us from sin. This was the help we needed, and it came at the very time when we could not help ourselves. The orphan children are helpless to a great extent, and that is the time they need help. So we are asking the congregations to assist us in this great work of caring for the helpless children by volunteering and sending monthly contributions to the Potter Orphan Home.

There are some other repairs that must be done. Just now, too, we are building a poultry house that will house one hundred and fifty hens. This will give lots of eggs for the children, and will be a great aid toward the support of the children from time to time, and we believe the eggs will be much better for them than the meat. I am also trying to establish a colony of bees on the farm. I already have the promise of four hives to be delivered the latter part of the winter in time for the next year's crop of honey. I would like to hear from any and all brethren who will donate one hive with bees and an extra super to go with the hive. I would like to start out next spring with from twenty-five to fifty hives. I want the hives delivered to me at Bowling Green, Ky., from the middle to the last of next March.

Now, that we may pay for the poultry house, finish the repairs, and have something for running expense, I am asking that congregations and friends of the Home set apart the fifth Sunday in November as Potter Orphan Home Day and send a contribution to the Home, that we may close the year 1925 with a good, clean record.

THE JACKSON-BRADLEY DEBATE.

RY A. H. SMITH.

This debate between Elder R. L. Jackson (Adventist), of West Virginia, and Brother I. B. Bradley (Christian), of Dickson, Tenn., was held at Old Union church house, in Carroll County, Miss., beginning on Monday night, October 26, and continuing for eight nights. Two subjects were debated—the state of the dead and the punishment of the wicked. Each speaker affirmed two propositions.

Jackson affirmed (1) that man is wholly mortal and unconscious between death and the resurrection, and (2) that the wicked will suffer complete extinction of being after the resurrection. Bradley affirmed (1) that man is more than mortal, is conscious after death, and (2) that the wicked will be punished with conscious, painful suffering, eternal in duration.

While Elder Jackson is a pleasant gentleman, a fluent speaker, and an artful dodger, it was plainly evident that he was no match for Brother Bradley in point of scholarship and biblical knowledge. On the meaning of the words "destruction," "everlasting," "eternal," and "forever," when applied to the punishment of the wicked after the resurrection, Elder Jackson stood in opposition to the scholarship of the world. He admitted he was not a scholar, but denied what the scholars say. He seemed to know but little about the rules governing honorable controversy.

Owing to unfavorable weather, the debate was not so well attended as it otherwise would have been, but we feel sure that great good will result.

The following Christian preachers were present: W. M. Gammill, J. Roy Vaughn, H. D. Jeffcoat, J. Porter Sanders, and the writer. We were all delighted with Brother Bradley's defense of the truth.

We witness a sad sight when we see men mutilating the Bible and mocking it without any sensitiveness and shock of conscience. Even a decent infidel will at least respect the Bible, and open irreverence toward it is a symptom of deep depravity.

The social nature of man makes it needful that, if the redemptive work of Christ is to be made effective for all, it must be done by the creation of a Christian society enveloping the individual like the air he breathes, and leaving no part of him untouched by this atmosphere.—Figgis.

Christianity does not consist in a proud priesthood, a costly church, an imposing ritual, a fashionable throng, a pealing organ, loud responses to the creed and reiterated expressions of reverence for the name of Christ, the spirit of filial trust in God, and ardent, impartial, overflowing love to man.

CURRENT COMMENT

By JAMES A. ALLEN

The Baptist Standard quotes Dr. J. D. Jones in the British Weekly thus:

The first thing we need for a recovery of prosperity is a revival of faith in the social and distinctive things for which we stand. The church, as we think of it, is composed solely of Christian people; it is a company of forgiven and regenerated folks; it is the society of the redeemed.

The church is not a company of amiable and wellmeaning people; it is not an ethical society; the church is the real "Society of Jesus." It consists of men and women who are "in Christ," who know him by direct and personal experience and have yielded themselves entirely to him. tirely to him.

We indorse the above only with the explanation that no man can "know him [Christ] by direct and personal experience" who refuses to do what he commands "every creature" in all nations to do. Those who refuse to obey Christ do not "know" him at all, and in the last judgment he will declare that he "knows them not."

F. L. Paisley, Chicago, Ill., sends us the following from a Chicago daily paper:

Rev. Dr. Burris A. Jenkins, former newspaper man and now paster of the Linwood Boulevard Christian Church, Kansas City, Mo., startled the ministers yesterday at the Hotel La Salle by saying that if "Christ were here to-day he would either be head of a great newspaper or would have control of some great moving-picture concern, or be the head of the biggest radio broadcasting station in the country."

Dr. Jenkins was making the point that Christ always went where the common people were, and knew how to reach the masses in his ministry.

It was the seventh annual conference on church publicity, and the sessions were crowded with ministers and laymen eager to hear how to increase their audiences by newspaper advertising and publicity.

"Newspapers are increasingly open to-day to the use of news from the churches and religious matters," said

Dr. Jenkins. "But you must prepare news so that it is acceptable to the papers."

"The motion picture is a great aid to the minister," he said. Radio also is going to be a great agency for the dissemination of the gospel.

We cordially agree with "Rev. Dr." Jenkins "that Christ always went where the common people were, and knew how to reach the masses in his ministry;" and this is the reason we do not believe that Christ would have attended "the seventh annual conference on church publicity." Such an affair is not the thing for "common people" to attend; and such affairs are always run by men who are so far away from the "common people" that there is no sympathy between them. The very fact that such men hold "annual conferences" on "how to reach the masses" is a confession that there is a chasm between themselves and the masses. Christ "knew how to reach the masses," and he himself was one of them; but these men of the clerical cloth admit that there is a vast gulf between themselves and "the masses" and that "annual conferences" must be held to devise ways to bridge it.

Instead of this "seventh annual conference of church publicity" trying to devise plans by which to "reach the masses," it would have been much more appropriate for them to have given a little thought on "how to reach" Christ. It is fitting and proper for these gentlemen of the "reverend" profession to try to get back to "the masses;" but as they are farther away from Christ than they are from "the masses," the most important thing for them to do is to reach Christ; and as Christ is among "the masses," when they reach Christ, their problem of "how to reach the masses" will be solved.

"Rev. Dr." Jenkins showed how little he knows about Christ when he said "if Christ were here to-day, he would either be the head of a great newspaper or would have control of some great moving-picture concern, or be the head of the biggest radio broadcasting station in the country." In the first place, such talk, even though coming from a "Reverend Doctor," is sacrilegious and sinful: and in the next place, it is so contrary to the facts that even professional clergymen, who are separated from the masses, ought to know better. "Great newspapers," "moving-picture concerns," and "radio broadcasting stations" that refuse to publish the words that Christ used when he was upon earth would not permit him to control them if he were upon earth in person now.

I know of no "great newspaper" that will publish what Christ commissioned his apostles to command sinners to do to be saved. If some moral pervert embezzles a fortune and breaks a bank, or if some sensual and licentious debauchee violates his neighbor's wife or rapes his daughter, these "great newspapers" play it up in unlimited space on the front page; but if some good and worthy man writes an article telling those who are lost and in their sins what to do to be saved, the quickest way it goes to the wastebasket is too slow. I have had experience in these matters. Some time ago, knowing that many thousands of the good citizens of Nashville were living and dying in disobedience to the command of Jesus Christ to believe and be baptized, I proposed to publish an article in the Nashville Banner on the subject, "Sprinkling Not Baptism." The Banner would not publish it unless it was paid for at advertising rates. Several Nashville churches contributed and the article was published. If an infidel denies the divine origin of the Bible and blasphemes Christ, the "great newspapers" are liberal with their space in publishing what he says; if some professional "pastor" gives out an interview suggesting that to have a few drops of water sprinkled on a person is just as good as that person's obeying the command of Christ to be baptized, the "great newspapers" have plenty of room; but if some Bible-believing preacher, who really preaches the gospel, wants to tell sinners what Christ commands them to do to be saved, the only way he can gain admittance to the columns of these "great newspapers" is by regular advertising rates.

It seems amazingly strange that the editors and owners of these "great newspapers" will print column after column, page after page, of the veriest trash, stuff that is silly, sensual, and hurtful, and yet refuse to print an article telling what Peter said on the day of Pentecost, or what Christ commands a sinner to do to be saved.

There is some merit in the science of moving pictures, if used by Christian men and women in the right way. But as it is, in the hands of sensual, adulterous, and wicked men and women, showing any abominable thing that will make money, it is one of the most outrageous and damnable curses under which the world groans to-day. If Jesus Christ were on earth to-day, he would not have anything to do with it until he first unceremoniously drove from the business the adulterers, adulteresses, and money sharks who now have it in charge.

The "Rev. Dr." Jenkins' talk about the radio is equally as absurd. Broadcasting stations extend every courtesy to the "nighthawks" or "jayhawks" to send ungodly jazz over the air. Popular "pastors," who refuse to tell sinners what Christ commands them to do to be saved, are permitted to broadcast catchy and snappy sermons that have no gospel in them. But if a real preacher of the gospel wants to tell the world what Peter said on the day of Pentecost, he finds the list of entrées already crowded. Unless "the great newspapers," "the great moving-picture concerns," and "the great radio broadcasting stations" repent and become willing to publish the word of God as it reads in God's Book, they will land at the same horrible destination toward which the popular "pastors" are so rapidly traveling.

"THE BIBLE VERSUS THEORIES OF EVOLUTION" COMMENDED.

Fort Worth, Texas, November 14. Dear Brother Elam: While in Nashville I received a copy of your new book, "The Bible versus Theories of Evolution," and read it carefully on my way home, and was delighted with every article. I am convinced that it comes to the public at a psychological time, when all minds are considering these very things; and as it is prepared by a number of able and devoted men, it will even be more far-reaching. It is calculated to serve as an important contribution to the literature of the day, and would make an excellent gift to all the boys and girls in their school age, a splendid contribution to the young preacher's library, and a wonderful help to all thoughtful people who are coming in contact with these problems daily.

I hope that this book, which is so well edited and so timely, may have a wide circulation and be read by thousands and do much good in turning the minds of men back to the saner, safer, purer, and more righteous ways of life.

Hoping for you the continued use of your wonderful faculties in the kingdom of the Lord, T am,

Your brother in Christ, HORACE W. BUSBY.

THE CHOSEN FEW. BY JAMES E. CHESSOR.

I.

Jesus said once and again: "Many are called, but few chosen." (See Matt. 20: 16, Authorized Version; also, Matt. 22: 14; Matt. 19: 30.)

This apparently mysterious utterance seems to sum up two parables, that of the laborers in the vineyard and that of the marriage feast. It comes at the end of each parable. The parable of the marriage feast is embraced in Matt. 22: 1-14, and the last verse reads: "For many are called, but few chosen." The parable of the laborers in the vineyard is found in Matt. 20: 1-16, and verse 16 reads: "So the last shall be first, and the first last: for many be called, but few chosen." Then the last verse —the thirtieth—of the nineteenth chapter contains these words: "But many shall be last that are first; and first that are last." These three passages have a special bearing upon the incident or the parable which each one follows. The words, "many be called, but few chosen," are omitted from Matt. 20: 16 in some of the oldest manuscripts, and they do not appear in the American Revision. The utterance, nevertheless, is a beautiful ending to a beautiful parable.

It will be noticed that the narrative of the laborers in the vineyard stands between this extraordinary remark, twice uttered. We all know the story and its surprise. A householder hired laborers, some at 6 A.M., some at 9 A.M., some at 12 M., some at 3 P.M., and some at 5 P.M. When payment was made, however, at 6 P.M., every man received the same wage, one shilling. This may puzzle us, as it puzzled them; but "shall not the Judge of all the earth do right?" The householder was clearly within his rights. It is lawful for a good man to do what he will with his own, for he will not do the wrong thing.

II.

But what is the story designed to teach? Why, indeed, was it told at all? A young ruler, rich, good, and of high position, comes to our Lord eagerly seeking the highest things. (See Matt. 19: 16-30.) He is a fine type of man -rich, yet not spoiled by his riches; for he was pure, humble, modest, dissatisfied with himself, and so eagerly reaching out to higher things that he asks advice of the Master. He would be first in the true nobleness of life, as he was, doubtless, first in the esteem of men. He comes running. Humbly kneeling before our Lord, he asks: "Teacher, what good thing shall I do, that I may have eternal life?" "And Jesus looking upon him loved him." The Master reads the secrets of his heart. One thing he lacked. He wanted eternal life, to be perfect in all his relations to God and man. "If thou wouldest be perfect," said Jesus, "go, sell that which thou hast; . . . and come, follow me."

But he would not; he went away sorrowful, for he had great possessions; and our Lord, who loved him, was sorrowful, too.

And then, as the Master went on to warn his disciples against the peril of riches, Simon Peter breaks in upon his wistful reverie with words breathing a boastful and selfish and bargaining spirit: "Lo, we have left all, and followed thee; what then shall we have?" But Jesus loved Peter as much as he loved the young ruler. With infinite patience and with exquisite kindness and grace, he promises Simon Peter and the other disciples a hundredfold return now, and a seat on his throne of glory hereafter—the eternal life the rich young ruler sought, yet refused. But because he loved Peter and the others, he also added a word of warning: "But many shall be last that are first; and first that are last."

Then our Lord tells them the parable of the laborers in the vineyard. Let us first note the complaint of the grumblers. Those who were first engaged may have spent some time in bargaining. They probably stood out for a shilling, demanding that and nothing less than that. They hired. "And when he had agreed with the laborers for a shilling a day, he sent them into his vineyard." The men engaged later were all quite content with the employer's promise: "Whatsoever is right I will give you." It seems quite fair to believe that the first taken on were more intent on their wage than on their work. When "every man" received a shilling, they murmured and complained, and kept on murmuring. They begrudged their lucky rivals the good fortune that had befallen them; they depreciated their own shilling just because others received a like amount for much less work. The wrong spirit, which had all the time been lying latent, becomes patent. They must have known that the late arrivals had a need just as great as their own. It was not their fault that they came into the vineyard so late. They hired at the first opportunity. But the bargainers become grumblers, as is usually the case. Yet no man is blessed at the expense of another. One man's good never means another's ill.

III.

Now three lessons stand out clearly. The first is, the kingdom of heaven is not founded on rules of barter. Our reward, our "wages," is all of grace. It is by grace, even, that we are called at all. Moreover, all questions of arithmetic are banished from Christian work. Wages and work are not coextensive. In Christ's vineyard there are many seeming inequalities. What comparison is there in believing on Jesus Christ (accepting him as Savior) and eternal life? As with sainthood, so with sin. It is not a question of so much sin, so much punishment. "The wages of sin is death." The wages of sin for twelve hours, or for one hour, is death; time is not a factor. There is no comparison between a few years of sinful pleasure and an eternity of shame and loss. God does not pay his children wages, but he provides gifts for all their wants. "The free gift of God is eternal life." It is all of grace. There is no arithmetic in the immeasurable return for a cup of cold water given by one disciple of his to another.

Salvation is not a commercial commodity. It is "not of works, lest any man should boast." "By grace are ye saved." "But when the kindness of God our Savior, and his love toward man, appeared, not by works done in right-eousness, which we did ourselves, but according to his mercy he saved us, through the washing of regeneration and renewing of the Holy Spirit." Thus we work without reference to reward. God is good and can only give "whatsoever is right." Acceptance depends upon self-surrender, not self-seeking. It depends upon the "baptism" we are baptized with. Ours is to trust him, not to bargain or to murmur, if we would be "perfect," if we would be his "chosen" ones.

Then, second, we learn that, although the pay may be equal, the reward may be unequal. They all received a shilling, yet the late comers received much more; for they valued it more, and undoubtedly they found greater joy in both their work and their pay. We shall not be far wrong in our judgment if we infer that the shilling-a-day bargainers, being sure of their wage, were not so zealous in the performance of their task. They were timeservers merely, rendering eyeservice. But those men who patiently and perseveringly waited all day long for a chance to hire must have put their heart into their work. It was a positive joy to them. Then came the crowning joy and great surprise of receiving a shilling—as much as those who had "borne the burden of the day and the scorching heat."

The nobility of these last comers is that they found joy in their work and were pleased with their reward; and with us to-day, surely service for God is itself great reward. Is there not joy and lasting satisfaction in being allowed to be fellow workers with God?

A murmuring spirit mars any work, and a bargaining spirit belittles any reward. It was because of the joy set before him—the joy of saving you and me, and the calling of us into his vineyard—that Christ endured the cross, despising the shame; and this joy of serving others is set before all Christian workers. We are rewarded in our work, and not merely at the end of the day, when we shall stand before his presence with exceeding joy.

In the third place, there is the great reversal of judgment." The parable ends, as it began: "So the last shall be first, and the first last." But then our Lord adds: "For many be called, but few chosen." There will be reversals, says Jesus. As a sequel to the pathethic story of the rich young ruler, Jesus points out that riches will not avail anything. Those rich on earth, poor hereafter; those high in station, degraded hereafter; the lowly on earth, exalted hereafter.

Indeed, one day there will be startling reversal of human judgment. "They received every man a shilling." That does not mean that in the last day the noble army of martyrs will receive the same reward as the little child who died in its mother's arms before it had encountered any trial or opposition. It does not mean that the lazy, useless Christian in the vineyard, yet as idle as men outside in the marketplace, will get the same reward as the heroic veteran missionary toiling amid the privations and perils and hardships of Africa or China or India. Yet the "shilling" will be so boundless in its value as to make the rewards to the saved seem to be equal.

IV.

A word as to the restricted meaning of our text. "Many are called," says Jesus, "but few chosen." A special lesson, first, to the Jews. They had been called first, but the Gentiles, who were also to hear the call, should soon enjoy equal privileges. They would even be first in the kingdom, because of their greater readiness to receive the gospel.

But the principle holds good for all time. To-day many are called, but few chosen. The "many called" include all who hear the gospel, Jew or Gentile; the "chosen" few are those who choose to accept. And thus shall it ever be.

We may be of that elect number, if we will. We may heed the call, enter the vineyard, labor faithfully, joyfully, till eventide. Then the shilling—a hundredfold—yes, eternal life—shall be ours. For he is faithful that promised. And great will be our reward, great our surprise, great our joy.

A NEW TRACT.

We have long realized the great results to be obtained through use of tracts. With very little cost every congregation could scatter them freely over their respective communities. The Adventists and others demonstrate what can be done through the use of tracts printed in quantities for free distribution.

We have just issued a small, eight-page leaflet, entitled "Importance of Being Right Religiously," by James A. Allen. Prices: 100 for $2.25; 500 for $8,50; or 1,000 for $15.

Congregations can do much good by ordering five hundred or one thousand of these leaflets and having their members distribute them over their neighborhoods. In addition to the great good that will be done in reaching outsiders, work of this kind will do great good in increasing activity among the members.

Send us an order for these leaflets and distribute them freely. Address all communications to the Gospel Advocate, 110 Seventh Avenue, North, Nashville, Tenn.

IN MEMORY OF D. HARRY JACKSON. BY E. A. ELAM.

David Harry Jackson was born in England forty-six years ago. He was called "Harry" in a familiar way by those who knew him and loved him. When a boy, tender and young, he came to that section of Ontario where he spent much of his life. He worked on a farm with the owner, attended school, developed in body and mind, came into the church early, and in young manhood attended the Nashville (Tenn.) Bible School (now David Lipscomb College). Feeling more and more his responsibilities, he grew into active service in the church. He became a song leader, and, helping congregations in their work otherwise, he became a preacher of "the word." After his return to Ontario, he devoted his whole life to persuading people to become Christians and to building up congregations in love in "the unity of the faith." Up to the last six or eight years of his life, which he spent in Toronto in the same good work, he lived and preached either in or near Jordan, where he grew up. This fact, above all, proves his true worth and that he had the confidence of his neighbors and the church there. Thus he grew in favor with God and men. He was an all-round, useful man.

He married Miss Lottie Walker, of Beamsville, Ontario, of which union four children—two boys and two girls—were born. He died on November 9, 1925. His wife and children survive him.

This notice is not intended as a biography of Brother Jackson, but only as a loving mention of his useful life and as an expression of grief over his death and of heartfelt sympathy for his good wife and dear children.

I knew him from his school days in the Nashville Bible School. I loved him for his faithfulness as a friend, his real merit, his work's sake, and his loyalty to the Lord. I worked with him in different congregations in different towns in Ontario and during different visits to that section of Canada. His home, graced and enriched by the loving service of his dutiful wife and beautified by the rosy presence of his cheerful children, was my stopping place on different occasions-at one time during an entire meeting and longer, when one of my daughters was with me; at another time, the other daughter being with me, when we spent a most pleasant day in this hospitable home. These enjoyable associations and this Christian fellowship are embalmed in our grateful memory. I was close to Brother Jackson and his family. I knew much of his trials and struggles and triumphs. He suffered at times for conscience' sake, endured hardness as a good soldier, and rejoiced always in the Lord. He was devoted to the truth, conscientious in all he did, loved the sacred peace and spiritual prosperity of the church of God, and labored for the advancement of the cause of Christ. To him, as Paul declares, the kingdom of God was "righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Spirit."

While I rejoice in the fact that there are other conscientious, God-fearing, and most useful men and preachers of the gospel in Ontario, I feel that in the death of Brother Jackson the church there has suffered a great loss.

As heat and light come constantly from the sun, the Bible is radiant with the exceeding great and precious promises of our Heavenly Father to Christians both here and hereafter.

"A father of the fatherless, and a judge of the widows, is God in his holy habitation." "He upholdeth the fatherless and widow."

In this connection I wish to say, too, that in the passing of Brother Sam Whitfield, of that province, I think the church lost another true and faithful worker. I take this opportunity to express my high appreciation of him and his work and my sympathy for his family. I counted it one of the pleasures of visiting Ontario to meet with Brother Whitfield.

But while he rests from his labors, his influence will never die. May the peace and blessings of God abide with his good wife and children!

But the Lord's great work is in his own almighty hand. He will raise up other workers; he will send forth other laborers into his harvest, and his glorious ends will be accomplished.

HARMONY AND CO-OPERATION AMONG THE CHURCHES.

BY G. W. FARMER.

Churches of Christ—and I use the term, as Paul used it, to denote the congregations of Christ's disciples—should be established for the purpose of meeting the needs and conveniences of disciples in particular localities, and also to be a leavening factor to influence and make Christians of the non-Christian element of those communities. Paul told Timothy that the "church is the pillar and ground of the truth" (1 Tim. 3: 15), and he taught the church at Philippi that they were to "shine as lights in the world, holding forth the word of life" (Phil. 2: 15, 16). Then, with these two purposes in view, the needs and conveniences of the brethren and sisters in any community and the salvation of the unsaved, should congregations be established.

It is a regrettable condition to-day that in many of our great centers of population there are too few congregations. In some of our cities in the United States there are no congregations after the New Testament order, to say nothing of the great centers of population of other countries. In many cities and large towns there is only one congregation, and in others only two or three weak congregations, and these do not begin to meet the needs, because the congregations are the vehicles by which the gospel is carried to the people.

Lovers of God and lovers of humanity should never be satisfied and should never stop praying and working till congregations of God's people are established in all the wide, wide world wherever sons and daughters are born unto men. Putting these congregations into existence is the fruit of the missionary spirit, which is one of the component parts of the religion of Christ.

It is one of the most mysterious and incomprehensible things to me that a man or woman claiming to be a child of God, or a congregation claiming to be a church of Christ, would be satisfied to sit down, fold their hands, and be so little interested and so unconcerned about the salvation of the lost world. Surely such may seem to be religious, but they are evidently wanting in one of the most essential things to be well pleasing in the sight of God. This brings us to another thing in the church that needs to be stressed, and stressed good and strong, and that is work in the church.

God has his people for a work, and he wants them to work, and they must work if they please him. No brother or sister is of any consequence in the kingdom who does not work. No church is filling its place in the world without doing the work of the Lord. We have the good old songs, "Work, for the night is coming," and "I want to be a worker for the Lord," songs true to the spirit of the teaching of the Master, but yet we have nonworking members and nonworking churches.

There are, perhaps, in almost every congregation, the workers and the nonworkers. We must remember that there is something for each one to do, and the doing of those things develops within the doer those elements of character that are so pleasing and honoring to God.

The beehive becomes too heavily stocked with bees. They must swarm and go to work to build up a new hive. The more hives, the more work; the more work, the more honey. And the fewer hives, the less work; the less work, the less honey. The curse of some congregations is, they are too large, too many members together; they need to swarm, go to work and build up new congregations so as to give all an opportunity to work, that they may be able to do the greatest amount of good in the world.

How foolish some people act, and how much out of harmony with the true spirit of the religion of Christ! Here is a congregation in a certain part of a city or town that is strong numerically and financially, and there is another congregation in another part of the city, or perhaps in a rural district, that is weak numerically and financially. They need succor and working force-a good opportunity to work for the Lord. But the most unreasonable thing about it is that an element of members pull off from this weak congregation, thereby making it weaker, and cast their lots with the strong congregation. What do they do when they do so? Nine times out of ten they bury their talents and die a spiritual death besides. There is no working room where they are. Thus churches and more churches should be established in the centers of population to meet the needs and conveniences of God's people there and to reach out and save the lost of that locality.

When a child is born into the fleshly family, the father, mother, and all the other children of that family are glad and rejoice because of the advent of the newborn babe into this happy family circle. Love, care, and caressing are lavished upon the little one. As those children get grown and begin to marry off, go to themselves to build homes of their own, establish a little kingdom over which they are to rule and reign, they go with the well-wishes and most sanguine desires and expectations of father, mother, and brothers and sisters for their success, happiness, and well-being in life. When a man or woman, boy or girl, is born anew, born from above, born into the spiritual family, the household of faith, a soul has been redeemed, God and Christ are honored, and the angels that vie around the throne of God rejoice because of the newborn soul added to the family of heaven. Every member of this family in heaven and upon earth should rejoice with joy unspeakable because of this newborn babe, and especially the congregation into which he comes.

After a while this one and others find it necessary for their own convenience and needs, and for the salvation of other friends in some other community, to go to work to build them a new congregation and a new church home. This is the divine order, and should receive recognition and the well-wishes and encouragement of all other congregations. They should have the prayers and mutual helpfulness of all other congregations, and there should be harmony and coöperation between them and others.

Brother A. Campbell laid down two fundamental propositions, as follows: (1) "Nothing is essential to the conversion of the world but the union and coöperation of Christians." (2) "Nothing is essential to the union of Christians but the apostles' teaching or testimony." These propositions should be considered seriously and prayerfully worked to by every child of God. Among the different congregations there must be the spirit of harmony and coöperation. There must be no rivalry nor strife. Nothing must be done through strife or vainglory. They must believe the same thing, speak the same thing, and there must be the spirit of congeniality; otherwise they bring the cause into disrepute and heap reproach and shame upon the holy name of Christ.

I have never read nor heard a philosophic, rational, logical argument against Christianity; nor have I ever seen or heard a rational, philosophic, or logical argument in favor of any form of skepticism or infidelity. Jesus Christ was, and is, a Person—not a thing, not a doctrine, not a theory. Infidelity is not a person, not a thing, not a theory. There may be a theory of it, but it is not a theory. It is a state of mind, an intellectual or a moral imbecility. It is a spiritual jaundice, sometimes green and sometimes black. They cannot be philosophically, logically, rationally compared. They are neither logical nor literal contrasts. The infidel is but the incarnation of a negative idea. He is absolutely but a mere negation. He stands to Christianity as darkness stands to light. Is darkness anything? Is blindness anything but the loss of sight? Is unbelief anything but the repudiation of evidence? One might as rationally load a cannon to fight against darkness as to dispatch a syllogism against a chimera.

Jesus Christ was a real Person, and had personal, positive attributes. He had a real and positive character, unique, original, transcendent. It was as fixed, as positive, and as radiating as the sun in heaven. The originality and unity of his character is all-sufficient, in the eye of educated reason, to claim for a him a cordial welcome into our world and to hail him as the supreme benefactor of our race.—A. Campbell.

In all the history of the world there is no picture such as that on Golgotha—the patient, upturned face of the Sufferer destined to change the world; the Roman soldiers at the foot of the cross gambling for his scanty garments; the rabble hooting; the thieves on either side denouncing him because the miracle they hoped for did not come; the faithful women, Mary Clopas, Mary of Magdala, Joanna, wife of Chuza, and Mary, the mother of Jesus, watching patiently until death should come and give his body back to them. Many are the wonderful scenes of heroism and self-sacrifice painted in history by men willing to die for the truth; but there is nothing to compare with that one great picture, the crucifixion, and the last words of Christ: "Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do."—Arthur Brisbane.

MY WORK WITH THE UNION AVENUE CHURCH.

There is not the least desire in my heart to relate any There is not the least desire in my heart to relate anything in this little article except the facts, and I shall relate the facts with candor and without a feeling of egotism. Terminating my work with the Union Avenue Church, I now simply make a report to the church at large, and place my achievements with the Union Avenue Church before the tribunal of the reading public to pass on them as they will. I anticipate a direct, unfacetious study of achievements. Also, if there is anything that will serve as an example to inspire others, my report may be profitable. be profitable.

In the month of June of the year 1922 I made a visit to Memphis from Oklahoma City, where I then lived. On the occasion of my visit here, Brother C. A. Norred, my immediate predecessor in the work here, preached for the Tenth Street Church in Oklahoma City, of which I was then minister. I responded to a unanimous call to the old Harbert Avenue Church (now Union Avenue) and began work here on the first of September of that year.

When I first came to Memphis I had an objective—the building of a commodious house of worship adequate to every need and the making of the church stronger in every way possible. And my efforts I can boldly commend to this church, including my manner of life, as did the apostle Paul to the elders of the church at Ephesus. I took the membership list of the church here and divided it into districts, according to convenience, and set about took the membership list of the church here and divided it into districts, according to convenience, and set about getting acquainted with the members and their attitude toward the Master's work. I systematically and indefatigably agitated the building of a new church home in every home that I entered. It has been said that a thought is the most powerful thing in the world. The thought of a new building, of its entire feasibility of accomplishment, was sown and then cultivated. The result is known in a measure to the hydrherhood before the appropriate of this measure to the brotherhood before the appearance of this article.

It will not be thought by the just for a moment that I claim that all done here was directly attributable to my efforts. There are many elements—the history of the church, the labors of all the preachers who have labored with the church, the membership, and its courage in taking hold of a larger program. I simply relate in this article a measure of my part in the things done.

Next. after the systematic agritation in every home (and

Next, after the systematic agitation in every home (and I averaged a thousand visits a year each year here), I began to take a half day now and then to talk plans and possibilities, arguing out of need, with the leading brethren. I went from one to another. Then, after getting sufficient interest raised, I asked for a special meeting. Twenty of us met in the old building on Harbert Avenue on a Friday evening in June one year after my first visit to Memphis. We subscribed thirteen thousand dollars toward a new church home. The old one was poorly located on a fifty-foot lot in the middle of a block. It was entirely inadequate. But I said "subscribed." The amount was to be paid over a period of five years. Others subscribed. The plan worked well enough for this church to get the first money ahead it had ever had. The actual money grew to be about twelve thousand dollars. A part of this money put in the bank we took and paid off the five hundred dollars the brethren owed on the old building when I came. But this was only a start. Our lot cost that much.

I had been in Memphis two years before we actually Next, after the systematic agitation in every home (and lot cost that much.

I had been in Memphis two years before we actually began the construction of our beautiful new church home. Many times it looked like the task was too great. It took nearly another year to complete the building. The first part of the contract let called only for the basement. We financed the plant as it progressed. We did it to the amazement of our religious neighbors. There was no city-wide campaign, no smoke—just work. The building went up from the naked earth.

The tremendous thing we had to do was to start with-

The tremendous thing we had to do was to start without a cent, even in debt, without a lot to build on, agitate to action, build, and move the congregation in a body to action, build, and move the congregation in a body (which is never a little task) a distance of some eight blocks. A number of people had bought homes about the old building to be near church. We had to consider that. There were many obstacles.

There were many obstacles.

Our building and grounds are worth one hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars. After we had completed it, we sold the old building on Harbert Avenue, which was rotting down over our heads, for two thousand dollars. But when I came we owed five hundred of that. So much for the material side, which, after all, is unimportant. This was but a medium of expression of the spiritual.

The first year I was here there were ninety-four additions; the second year there were one hundred and sixteen; the third year, one hundred and seventy-five. I am staying one-third of the fourth year. During a part of it there have already been enough to make four hundred in all, and we have a month and a half to go yet. A young lady who keeps records (a church secretary without name and without pay) said recently that there have been more additions since I came than in the entire history of the church.

The Bible-school work has progressed gradually. In fact, it could not progress until it had a chance to grow. We have enough space for it to grow. By December 1 our goal is five hundred. We lack only a few of the number, and we shall easily get it.

The finances of the congregation are in good condition. At the present the contributions run approximately twenty thousand dollars per year—an increase of about fifteen thousand.

thousand.

I have not undertaken the writing of the part of the brethren in this article. My intention was to relate something of the growth of the church since I came. Mine was but a part. I must praise the brethren for the coöperation they gave me from first to last. They are a great body of the Lord's faithful. And that God whose servant I am has been wonderfully kind and good.

If the Lord will, I shall begin work with the faithful little band in New York City the first of January. There we have much to do and but little to do it with. But I expect to write some articles about that post of duty before long.

JOHN ALLEN HUDSON.

Brother Hudson is to be greatly commended for his diligence and zeal in the service of Christ. He is an able and talented preacher, is sound in the faith, and lives an exemplary, clean life.

What we want to say does not apply to Brother Hudson personally any more than it does to all others. But his article, as printed above, gives us an opportunity to say some things that badly need to be said.

Brother Hudson's account of his labors with the Harbert Avenue (now Union Avenue) Church in Memphis shows the rapid and dangerous progress that many of our preachers are making back to the habits of the professional "pastor." It is scriptural and proper for a preacher to give his whole time to preaching to one church, under the jurisdiction and direction of the elders of that church; but any man whom the elders ask to preach to the congregation transcends the scriptural limits of his work when he takes the lead in the congregation. God put the elders in the lead, and they should remain there. The management of things is in their hands, not in the hands of any man they may engage to preach. is as scriptural for a preacher to preach every Lord's day to the same congregation as it is for him to preach to four congregations once a month, yet, if the elders are dependent on the preacher, they cease to be elders and become mere figureheads. The churches are suffering from a failure to exalt the elders and to decrease the undue and unscriptural prominence that is given to the "minister."

Jesus was born in a stable. He selected to be his apos-tles men who were penniless. In the age when the church grew most rapidly most of its members were common laboring people; and while some few of its members were men of wealth, they were taught to preserve their wealth by giving it away. They were taught to give to two objects-viz., to help the poor and to have the gospel preached. Money is dissipated, thrown away, when given to the thousand and one fads and fancies suggested by professional promoters.

A meetinghouse that has one hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars tied up in it is a satire on the spirit and genius of Christianity. Such a thing is a sin that cries to heaven and will continue to so cry until it is sold and that huge amount of money given to the poor or used to have the gospel preached to those who are lost. Some may contend that such a house will assist in having the gospel preached. But this is not the case. In addition to the fact that it is a hindrance instead of a help, such a house and such surroundings breed a spirit of worldliness that is incompatible with the true worship and service of God. A Christian meetinghouse ought to be humble, suitable, and commodious, but free from all the luxury of this vain and sinful world. Everything in a Christian congregation ought to correspond with the Christian calling. Anything that is incompatible with humility, spirituality, and poverty of spirit is out of place. Our meetinghouses ought not to indicate a spirit repugnant to our profession. Anything that ministers to the pride of life cannot abide in the hearts of those who worship Him who has promised to dwell with "him that is poor and of a contrite spirit, and that trembleth at my word."

Things that are not a part of either the worship or service, God leaves to the common sense of his people. Whether the congregation meets at eleven o'clock, at three o'clock in the afternoon, or at some other hour of the first day of the week, is left to the judgment of the elders of the congregation. Whether the congregation has a meetinghouse at all or not is a matter of the same kind. The success of the work is not dependent upon building a fine meetinghouse. A meetinghouse is a great convenience; but when a congregation provides such a convenience, it should see to it that it agrees with the spirit and teaching of the Christian religion. Such a house should be neat and clean, not bearing any evidence of stinginess or slothfulness, and yet entirely free from anything that would either excite or gratify the lusts of the flesh.

Brother Hudson does not point out that the ghost of a frightful sixty-five-thousand-dollar debt is hanging like a pall over these Memphis brethren. We cannot agree that "the finances of the congregation are in good condition" when it is confronted with a debt like that. Should a congregation grow large enough to handle a thing of that kind, it is too large for one congregation and, like the bees, should swarm. God has put his stamp of disapproval upon the centralization of wealth and power, upon monopolies of every kind, upon big businesses and big churches. "They therefore that were scattered abroad went about preaching the word." (Acts 2: 4.)

A meetinghouse is not a "church home," nor is it a church workshop. This is the language of Ashdod.

We heartily commend Brother Hudson's diligence and industry in seeking new members, in leading souls to Christ. None should be counted as "additions" except those who are baptized. While baptizing four hundred in three and one-third years is a great work, if by "additions" Brother Hudson means that that many were baptized, still, if a man of his great industry and talent had spent the time on soul saving that he spent on building the one-hundred-and-twenty-five-thousand-dollar house, he would have baptized that many in less than a year. Souls have perished on account of the time and money spent on that house that ought to have been spent in preaching the gospel to them. Christians cannot rejoice over it.

Brother Hudson's industry and diligence make him the very man for the New York work, if he will not try to duplicate his Memphis house. J. A. A.

MANNERS MAKE THE WOMAN. BY HALL L. CALHOUN.

Manners mean customary mode of action, habit, or way of doing things. Good manners mean courteous behavior toward others and proper reverence for God. Besides Christianity and morality, nothing contributes more to the making of beautiful characters than do gracious manners. Genuine courtesy is admired by all, even by those who themselves do not possess it. Indeed, Christianity and morality in their highest types are accompanied always by good manners. These three agree in one. A person who is both Christian and moral, but boorish and ill-mannered, may be respected, but pever admired nor loved. By good manners is not meant the extreme finickiness or prudery practiced by some, nor the easy carelessness of the slouch, but that same deportment which renders to all their dues in a spirit of graciousness which adds to an act what the perfume adds to the flower.

In the Bible, courtesy is enjoined upon all. It cannot be neglected without serious loss to the one neglecting it. Good manners are the charm of lovely characters. They furnish the key that opens the door to success in almost all careers. Good manners, like charity, should begin at home. Proper self-respect holds one above the doing of those things which lower him in his own eyes. One who does not respect himself will not have respect for others. Proper self-respect keeps one from doing little spiteful or unbecoming things. It makes one cultivate a kindly and gracious spirit, looking for and appropriating only the good and noble. It keeps him from being, on the one hand, an egotist, or, on the other hand, a mere groveler.

In our conduct toward others, manners show themselves most plainly. Proper courtesy toward others will protect them from the coarse familiarity which breeds contempt, and also from the icy coldness that grows out of selfishness, or too great self-esteem. No young lady who makes herself common by allowing cheap liberties to young men will ever keep either her own or their respect. An air of sacredness forbidding familiarity goes along with every well-bred girl. There is no other quality or trait of character quite so much admired by men as that modest reserve which every well-trained young woman has. Nothing else cheapens a young woman quite so quickly as that careless looseness of putting herself down on an equality with men and boys and allowing them to treat her in a cheap and familiar way. Her very person should be too sacred to allow common contact with any part of her body, even her hands. Men usually value a woman as she values herself. If she holds herself cheap, they will hold her so, too. It is a great privilege for a girl to be trained where ladylike deportment is the practice of all. In no other way can she acquire that air of womanliness which is her greatest charm. Much of the ill manners one sees is caused by ignorance of what is really proper. Ignorant people like loud colors and noisy conduct. Cultured people are never flashy in dress nor loud in conduct. It is hard to estimate in money the value to a girl of associating with really cultured people until she herself becomes so habituated to that type of conduct that it becomes natural to her. Such a girl is worth more than her weight in gold, and she will be a thing of beauty and a joy forever to those about her. There is no finer work than that of training the future wives and mothers of our country to be moral, Christian, and courteous.

I closed a twelve-days' discussion with A. M. Baker, a Mormon elder, on November 24. This discussion was held near Kennet, Mo. I shall begin a series of meetings their meanings and search of the consight with our home forces at Senath, Mo. I wish I could find words to adequately express my appreciation of the great work the Gospel Advocate force is doing, and of the fine spirit and firm, yet kindly, reasoning of all the brethren in exposing error."

Price Hillingsley, Brinson, Ca., Wovember 23, to James A. Allen: "I have occasionally adversely criticized you, and shall doubtlees do it again, seeing that you and the rest of us poor mortals need such almost every day of our lives (Prov. 28: 23), yet in this week's Gospel Advocate you have said such fine things I cannot longer withhold appreciation of it. What you said on the front page in appreciation of it. What you said on the front page in appreciation of it. What wou said on the front page in the second column against that unholy preachers' alliance is about the bravest and most timely and most effective thing. I have seen in the papers in several blue moons. Thank you! And again I say, thank you, and God bless you!"

James E. Chessor, Spencer, Tenn., November 28; "In a letter dated November 25, H. C. Denson, Mount Juliet, Tenn., has this to say with reference to a worthy brother there of the same of the congregations, his brethren doubtless will esteem of the congregations, his brethren doubtless will esteem it a privilege to contribute something to his succor."

T. W. Phillips, Wewoka, Okla., Movember 15: "My work at Wewoka starts off nicely. I baptized a man and bis wife last night. Correspondents will please note change of my address from San Antonio, Texas, to Wewoka, Okla."

The editorial department of the Gospel Advocate thinks zero of a writer that sends us a carbon copy. Whenever a writer sends us a mere duplicate of an article he is sending to every other paper he can get to take it, he should be frank enough to inform us of the fact.

A. B. Barret preached at Waverly-Belmont, this city, last Lord's day, and will be with them again on the second Lord's day in December. Brother Barret lectured to a large audience at Charlotte Avenue in the afternoon on evolution, and he will preach for this congregation on gunday, December 6.

Ben Weat, Stephenville, Texas, November 23: "House filled at both services yesterday. One very fine man was restored to fellowship at the morning service and one woman baptized at night. The singers and workers are to accompany the minister next Sunday afternoon to Liberty, twenty miles distant, for a service."

U. R. Beeson, Waldo, Ark., November 24: "The meeting at Wesson, Ark., conducted by John W. Hedge and me closed on Sunday night, with three baptized, two restored, and a congregation of thirty-two men and women in Christ set to work regularly Best wishes to the Gospel Advocate, and may greater things for our Lord be done in 1926."

C. A. Buchanan, Venus, Texas, Movember 23; "The church work at Venus goes forward. We are now adding to our church building some more rooms for classes in Bible study. We have doubled our membership twice in the last two years. We have the unusual here, in that we have larger crowds than the denominational churches."

J. G. Allen, 1412 Baltimore Avenue, Muskogee, Okla, November 23; "We had a busy day yesterday at the C and Kankakee Church. We had the largest enrollment at Sunday school that we have ever had, with splendid audiences at both preaching services. Then our mission in Midland Valley in the afternoon was an overflow meeting.

congregation there has recently acquired a spiendid piece of church property, and the meeting was one of the best of church property, and the meeting there in October last year. We were at Millport last night, and have just arrived at Berry ready to begin to-night, to continue over two such work as I am called to do during winter and spring, and work as I am called to do during winter and spring. My home address is 2018 Cullen Street, Dallas, Texas," C. E. Wooldridge, Berry, Ala., November 20; "M. L. Johnson (singer) and I closed a thirteen-days' meeting at Vernon, Ala., on last Wednesday night. The small congregation there has recently acquired a splendid piece son the contract of the present one of the pest.

James A. Allen preached at Lindsley Avenue, this city, last Lord's day, morning and night, and at the Tennessee State Reformatory in the afternoon.

Tract for the use of congregations in free distribution, "Importance of Being Right Religiously," by James A. Allen. Price: 100 for $2.25; 500 for $8.50, and 1,000 for $15. Order from the Gospel Advocate Company.

E. S. Jelley, Texarkana, Ark., November 24: "J. D. Tant's meeting at College Hill is progressing satisfactorily, with additions being made. I preached for Brother Tant last night. I am on my way to Oklahoma."

Glenn E. Green, Holdenville, Okla., November 21: "I have given up the work with the Park Hill congregation of Fort Smith, Ark., in order to work here. This is voluntary on my part, as the brethren insisted that we remain in Fort Smith. We feel that we can accomplish more here, under the favorable conditions that surround us, than at Park Hill."

J. A. Taylor, Paragould, Ark., November 26: "I returned home this morning from Gainesville, Ark., where I conducted a meeting of two weeks' duration. The interest was good from the beginning till the close of the meeting. Nine were baptized, eight made confession of their faults and promised to live more faithful in time to come, and the church seemed to be strengthened greatly. We hope for a more rapid growth in the future."

W. P. Sims, Hillsboro, Tenn., November 25: "I wish to say to W. N. Ridge, Fort Lauderdale, Fla., that I expect to start, the Lord willing, to his place about December 3, and will be glad to worship with the congregation he speaks of in last week's Gospel Advocate. My address will be 212 Northwest Fourth Street. There is not a single writer on the Advocate now that was on it when I subscribed for it about fifty-three years ago. I will soon number my fourscore years. I continue to preach the gospel."

J. H. Lawson, Tulsa, Okla., November 17: "I am with the church at Tulsa, trying to help them build up the cause here. We have recently had a number of additions, and our audiences have grown and the interest increased. Our young people are doing some splendid work, and our Bible classes have greatly increased, with new members each Lord's day. The students as a whole read more than two thousand chapters in the Bible last week. We have a splendid training class, in which the men of the congregation are taught to do things in the public services of the church. I regard this kind of work as very important. We certainly need many trained men for the successful work of a congregation."

The man who is truly godly never advertises it to people,

J. C. Hollis, Ardmore, Okla., November 23: "There was a large audience for each service yesterday, and the interest was fine. At the close of the evening service a man who had been a Methodist for several years came forward and made the good confession and was 'baptized the same hour of the night.' This makes fifteen additions that we have had since the first of July. We thank God for what is being done through his people at this place."

T. H. Bass, Lufkin, Texas, November 27: "The cause of the Lord here moves steadily on, with good attendance and interest. There have been some additions to the local body all along, while we lose some by their moving to other places. I shall begin a mission meeting on Friday night before the first Sunday in December. There is a great need of much work of this nature in this part of the State. We plan more of this kind of work for the future."

G. B. Lambright, Haskell, Texas, November 24: "I preached on the third Lord's day in this month for the faithful that meet at the clubhouse in Slaton. They are poor in worldly goods, but rich in faith. I preached here last Lord's day, morning and night, to large audiences. I go next to Wichita Falls. My work has been hard, but pleasant, during part of this year, and I trust much good has been done. I have traveled one thousand miles and have held some very good meetings."

Will J. Cullum, Hartsville, Tenn., November 26: "One of the best meetings that it has ever been my privilege to attend came to a close at this place on last Sunday night, H. M. Phillips doing the preaching. While there were only three baptized and one to take membership, the church was much strengthened, and we feel that a bright outlook is before us for a good work. I know of no better preacher than Brother Phillips, and it is conceded by the congregation that this was one of the best meetings in the history of the church at Hartsville."

J. E. Black, Memphis, Tenn., November 25: "The work in the Highland Heights congregation is moving along splendidly, with good crowds at all the services and the interest fine. We have so many capable men, and the young men seem specially fitted for some place and work. Coöperation and Christian spirit are in evidence at all times. God is blessing the work beyond our expectation. I am arranging a big year's evangelistic campaign for 1926. Those desiring my services in meetings may address me at 1921 Vinton Avenue, Memphis, Tenn."

Willie Hunter, Tompkinsville, Ky., November 23: "I have just closed a seven-days' meeting at Ebenezer, four miles out from town. We had preaching only at night through the week. We had marked attention and very good crowds. One was baptized. The brethren there have a nice, small house and are moving on very well with the Lord's work, considering the hard opposition they have from the sects. I closed the meeting on Sunday by preaching three times, baptizing one, and walking four miles. I am to preach next Sunday near Murfreesboro, Tenn."

F. D. Srygley, in the Gospel Advocate of June 21, 1900, said: "There is nothing wrong about 'the pastor system,' so far as I can see, except that it is not in the New Testament. Anything else that is not in the New Testament is as bad as 'the pastor' or 'the pastor system.' If people deliberately decide that they will not follow the New Testament in religion, I do not know that it makes any difference where they go or what they do. It is rebellion against God to determine not to follow the New Testament, and there is nothing worse than that Unless the effort to follow the New Testament is entirely abandoned, there will be serious trouble in many unexpected places within the next few years."

unexpected places within the next few years."

S. C. Garner, Bakersfield, Mo., November 22: "One week of the eleventh term of the County Line Bible School is now in the past, and we had a good week. We have a good enrollment, and are hopeful of having more in school this year than ever before. We study nothing but the Bible and how to teach it to others. Why not many brethren come and spend the winter days with us in studying God's word? Write for a catalogue. I have decided to sell part of my land to brethren, but will not sell to any one else. I am anxious that brethren locate with us and help us build up the cause of Christ, and also help us with the Bible school by boarding our students and otherwise. We have a good free school, good roads, good water, mild climate, and a healthy location. Brethren may write to us. We had a good sermon this evening. W. B. Ragsdale, my associate teacher, preached."

"PEACE, PEACE, WHEN THERE IS NO PEACE."

BY E. A. ELAM.

They have healed also the hurt of my people slightly, saying, Peace, peace; when there is no peace. Were they ashamed when they had committed abomination? nay, they were not at all ashamed, neither could they blush: therefore they shall fall among them that fall; at the time that I visit them they shall be cast down, saith Jehovah. (Jer. 15, 14, 15) 6: 14, 15.)

Read the sixth chapter of Jeremiah.

Jerusalem was godless-prophets, priests, and people alike. Its overthrow was threatened. But if the people would receive instruction and repent, the desolation would be stayed. But their ears had become uncircumcised and the word of God had become unto them a reproach; they had no delight in it. Jeremiah had become full of the wrath of Jehovah; he became weary with holding it, and had to pour it out upon the people. Verses 12, 19, 22-26 show what this wrath or fury would be. Other verses name the sins of which the people were guilty.

From the least of them even unto the greatest of them every one is given to covetousness; and from the prophet even unto the priest every one dealeth falsely.

Prophets and priests, in the face of God's threatened and impending destruction by the war of the enemies "from the north country," "a great nation" (the Chaldeans), preached prosperity and peace, saying, "Peace, peace;" but in this rebellious and sinful state there could be no peace and prosperity. The prophets and priests and people were not ashamed of the abominations which they had committed, neither could they blush. This was a most deplorable condition! Let us note, first, that the prophets and priests were the leaders in this rebellion and in all these sins. They should have been faithful examples in practicing and then in teaching the will of God, but they were not.

Just so to-day, because men are preachers it does not follow necessarily that they are free from sin and rebellion against God. It is a plain and admitted fact that some are leaders in contentions, strife, factions, and divisions. Like the prophets and priests in Judah, they preach, "Peace, peace," when there can be no peace in disobedience to God. Stirring up strife, keeping up disturbing agitations, and being governed by a partisan spirit is altogether contrary to the will of God.

There is a wrong spirit-a partisan and envious spiritin which the gospel is sometimes preached, or in which one may contend for "the faith." Paul says: "Some indeed preach Christ even of envy and strife; and some also of good will." Some are moved by love to preach the gospel; others "proclaim Christ of faction, not sincerely." (See Phil. 1: 15-18.) Then, it is clear that the truth may be preached in love, as should always be done, or it may be preached in strife, envy, and a partisan spirit, as is often done. We can rejoice with Paul "that in every way, whether in pretense or in truth, Christ is proclaimed," or that the truth is preached; but woe to those who preach it in pretense and in bitterness, vituperation, and misrepresentation of others! The man who misrepresents another in any way, or denounces a brother, or in any way uses bitter or even unbecoming language, because a brother may differ from him or even err in some points of teaching, lacks just that much of teaching the truth, or of preaching the gospel; certainly he lacks the spirit of Christ. The Bible shows how all this is to be done-" forbearing one another in love," " restoring such a one in a spirit of gentleness; looking to thyself, lest thou also be tempted."

When the word of Jehovah on gentleness, forbearance, kindness, love, and against envy, jealousy, bitterness, and self-righteousness, becomes a reproach, as Jeremiah says, to some brethren, and they with an air of almost infallibility trample it under foot, and when others seem to be trying to make more out of differences of opinions of some good men than these good men themselves made, and seem to try to justify the pressing of opinions upon others, regardless of God's condemnation of this, I confess I see no way of unity and peace. Such brethren make the impression that they do not want peace-real unity and peace.

Somebody will have to account for all this strife and contention and division in the judgment, in whatever way they have been brought about or in whatever way they have been perpetuated.

All know and can preach all that God says on seeking and pursuing peace, following after the things which make for peace, being peacemakers, and "giving diligence to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace," etc.; and all can preach the only God-ordained conditions on which peace can come and be maintained, and just how only all can be one, even as Christ and God are one; but that is not enough. Something more is necessary. There can be no peace so long as all or any of these holy principles-God's will-are being continually violated.

Christ says that members of the same family will be at variance with one another so long as some in faith, humility, and self-denial implicitly obey God and others do not. In this way a man's foes are those of his own household. There can be no peace between such parties. It matters not in what way some disobey God, while others obey him, variance and division follow.

This being true, does it not seem that some do not want peace and good will? If all wanted harmony and peace, would not all comply with the God-appointed conditions and follow the God-ordained means of unity and peace? Is it not an abomination in the sight of God to go over the country preaching to the denominations of the land that all God's people should be one, even as he and Christ are one, and stressing the only God-ordained conditions of unity and peace, and yet being forever in contention, strife, and a war of words? Are such teachers now not ashamed? But, as Jeremiah says, such seem not to be ashamed, or able to blush, even. The contentions, strife, partisan spirit, divisions, and bitter speech which are seen and heard in not a few places among those who claim to be preachers of the gospel of peace and preservers of unity in Christ are enough to make all parties thereto blush and hang their heads in shame.

But what is to be done?

GIVE THE PEOPLE SOMETHING BETTER.

About forty years ago I heard a good lecture, delivered by a Baptist minister of fine ability to a graduating class of young preachers. With other good things, he advised them not to go up and down the land lecturing against Ingersollism. "But suppose," said he, "you should ask what to do to stop it, should you discover that some of your members were reading Ingersoll." His reply was: "Give them something better." Criticism and abuse of Ingersoll would only spread his name further abroad and beget a sympathy for him and a desire to learn what he does teach. He gave this illustration: A small boy, living in the country near him, was addicted to eating dirt. As he said, the boy was a "dirt eater." This boy was sallow and was making poor development. His mother called in a physician, and after an examination the physician pronounced him a "dirt eater." With some indignation the mother resented this, saying that other mothers' sons may eat dirt, but not hers. The physician took the boy to himself, gained his confidence, and asked for the truth, when the boy confessed that he did eat dirt. The mother then became distressed, wrung her hands, and asked what could be done. "O, do not be alarmed, madam," said the physician, "your son will get away from this. Simply make him some new trousers with two big pockets and a new jacket with two more big pockets, fill all these pockets with sugar, and your son will eat sugar instead of dirt." "The application is plain," the lecturer said. "Give your congregation the sugar of the gospel and they will not feed on the dirt of Ingersoll."

Let us make an application: Quit feeding people on the dirt of faultfinding and bickering and criticism of every ism in the world, and give them the spiritual milk and solid food of the gospel, the water of life and the bread of heaven. Paul found some not able to take solid food because they were carnal, and they were carnal because of the "jealousy and strife" among them. (1 Cor. 3: 1-4.) All now who walk "after the manner of men," who claim to follow different preachers and are full of jealousy and strife, are carnal and have no relish for the solid food of the gospel. To all such a man is not "sound in the faith," or preaching the gospel, unless he is attacking some false doctrine, tearing to pieces some one's theory, or is in some other contention. The sincere milk of the word and solid food-the real meat-of the gospel are not relished by them. Their appetite is abnormal. But I ask, who is to blame for much of this?

Next week, the Lord willing, let us consider the "most excellent way."

THE EXCHEQUER DEPLETED.

BY F. W. SMITH.

Not a great while ago two or three of the largest denominations, including the Baptists, made what they called a drive for millions of money to further the interests of their respective denominations.

The Baptists set the mark at seventy-five millions, and under "whip and lash" procured many pledges from Baptist churches throughout the land. But the Christian Index, chief organ of the Baptists in Georgia, publishes the following wail:

Our Baptist work in Georgia is getting in a bad fix now, so far as our coöperative work is concerned. Reports from all over the State show an appalling falling off in receipts for missions, education, and benevolences. We are facing a financial situation at Savannah the like of which we have not had in years. We all see it.

The condition is not due to hard times. The figures show that it is the same all over the State, in the prosperous sections the same as in drought-stricken sections. It is due to the indisposition of the people to give. They have money and plenty for everything else they want—for new automobiles, fine clothes, amusements, and luxuries of every sort, to say nothing of money for their ordinary family needs. Money is being subscribed for nondenominational enterprises and for secular drives in amounts never seen before. Lack of money is not the reason.

The trouble is that our people have not the missionary and benevolent spirit which impels them to give.

For the last five years the great exhortation to the people from the pulpit was to pay their seventy-five-million pledges.

The work that was fundamental, that of inculcating in the people the missionary spirit, the obligation to lost souls, and the love of God, was neglected. The pledges were taken with great enthusiasm and under the impulse of a great campaign. The needs of our work at home and abroad, of our schools and colleges, of our expanding work, and the cry of a lost world were all laid before us in a most telling and effective manner. Then the subscriptions were taken. And then after that we went into a missionary dies non for five years. The result was that in most cases the payment of the pledges became irksome, and a sigh of relief came when the last payment was made. It was considered a great riddance. Since then they have been taking a great rest.

The Index only partially diagnoses the case, leaving the taproot of the disease untouched. The Baptists made the fatal mistake of choosing the "money basis" for evangelizing the world. Money became the all in all, and it gave to their denomination the spirit of commercialism, placing the salvation of souls on a money basis, like dealing in the commodities of the world by what is called "big business." The reaction has come, and the "bigbusiness" spirit has about died in the Baptist denomination, leaving a depleted treasury, into which the managers of the "big business" look with great disappointment and trembling forebodings for the future success of the mammoth enterprise.

If the Baptists and all other religionists will read the New Testament, they will discover no such centralization of money by the Lord's disciples for the evangelization of the world, nor for any other purpose. Neither will they find any directions given for such enterprises. Such a centralization of money destroys genuine spirituality and displaces it with worldly pride and ambition. The spirit of politics animates the management and control of such huge financial enterprises in religion, as well as in what is termed "secular business."

The early days of the Christian era witnessed the greatest missionary activities of any period of the church's history, and yet the disciples of Christ were what might be termed "poverty-stricken." They possessed something far more valuable for the evangelization of the world than millions of money. They were imbued with a personal consecration, earnestness, and zeal for the salvation of souls that impelled them to preach the word, money or no money. The material things of this life were of the least concern to them. They had faith in God instead of faith in money, and this faith in God led them to endure hardness as good soldiers of Jesus Christ.

The "drive" for "seventy-five millions" by the Baptists, while successful in raking in the shekels for the time, has about killed the Baptist geese that laid the golden eggs. Hence, the Index attributes the depleted treasury to an indisposition to give. Hear the Index: "It is due to the indisposition of the people to give." They were subjected to a powerful stimulant to pledge that seventy-five millions, and the effect of that stimulant has passed away, leaving the people exhausted, and they refuse to take another dose of such treatment.

It was under exceedingly high pressure that those pledges were made, and that was the reason, in the language of the Index, "the result was that in most cases the payment of the pledges became irksome." They were not exactly freewill offerings, such as God demands, but were made in moments of excitement and in a spirit of rivalry, a kind of feeling not to be outdone by the other fellow. Under such religious enterprises preachers become mercenary and the ministry is pitched upon a professional and commercial plane. To all such preachers the fat places become havens of rest to which they look and for which they anxiously long. Of course, preachers should be well supported, but any preacher who will not preach without such support is not fit to preach.

If the Baptist Church in Georgia, or anywhere else, as to that matter, has the love of souls at heart, why should the Index say, "Our Baptist work in Georgia is getting in a bad fix now, so far as our cooperative work is concerned?" If this is not basing the success of religion on money, then language can mean nothing at all. Suppose the New Testament had contained a report like this, issued by the apostles at Jerusalem. Would it not have sapped the very life out of Christianity? And can we imagine that under such a condition the gospel would have gone, as it did, to the ends of the world? What all the professed followers of Christ need is a spirit of thorough consecration to his service and a genuine zeal for the salvation of souls.

A COMMUNICATION FROM CALIFORNIA. BY F. B. SRYGLEY.

Several weeks ago I referred to the fact that Brother E. C. Love was inconsistent in indorsing two cups in the worship and opposing twenty or more. My contention was, if when it is said, as translated by the Authorized Version, "And he took the cup," it is thus proved that only one cup could be used by all, then to have two cups would be wrong. Brother Love replied that two cups were "technically wrong," but the spirit was all right, and, therefore, God would accept two cups, but he would not accept the individual cup. I am not quoting his exact words, but this was about his contention. He then challenged me to debate the individual-cup question with him. But I had never raised that issue with him, but had contradicted his position on "technically wrong, but scripturally right." As I had been challenged for a debate and as this was the issue I had raised, I very promptly drew up a proposition setting forth this issue, and I told the brother that if he would sign that proposition I would either meet him in discussion or furnish him a man worthy of his steel. I have not heard from him on the question, but I have a communication from a man who seems anxious to defend Brother Love, but who is careful not to try to defend the issue which Brother Love himself raised. The brother that seems anxious to get into the fray is T. C. Hawley, of Madera, Cal. While I do not like to debate with a substitute, if Brother Hawley will affirm the proposition which I offered Brother Love, I might try him one time. In the communication which I have from him he says nothing about the issue which I raised with Brother Love, but tries to raise a new one in these words:

SOME MISREPRESENTATIONS.

In the Gospel Advocate of October 15, 1925, Brother F. B. Srygley has this to say: "Brother E. C. Love has gone back to California and taken up his paper again, and now he seems to think he must lead a faction in order to suche seems to think he must lead a faction in order to succeed." I am well acquainted with Brother Love, and I believe this statement to be untrue and to be judging Brother Love's motives contrary to Rom. 2: 1. By what rule does Brother Srygley judge those opposed to individual cups to be a faction? A faction is a party opposed to the existing government or order. Now, are the individual cups established as the existing order? No! The common cup has been used by the church since the time of Christ until recently, and the individual cups have been lately introduced into only a comparatively few congrega-tions; so who is the faction in this case?

Again, he says: "He appears to be making every effort that he can command to divide the churches on the individual-cup question." Another untrue statement, and one that he does not try to prove. The situation is like this: The church has used one or more common cups on the Lord's table since the establishment of the church until very recently. Now some are advocating the introduction of individual cups. Brother Love objects, and gives his reasons for his objection. He has never advocated division nor threatened to disfellowship any one who does not agree with him. Now, if Brother Srygley and those who agree with him do not intend to introduce the individual cups in spite of any objection, there is no danger of division over this matter; but I fear they intend to insist on this new hobby, no matter what the results may be. If this is not so, why do they not drop the agitation for the little cups and thus avoid the danger of division, as there can be no danger unless they intend to put them in in spite of any and all opposition?

The above is only about one-fourth of his article. In the balance of the article he is trying to help Brother Love in his fight with Brother Fuqua, and I decline to open the Gospel Advocate for any such purpose. Perhaps it is more than could be expected that I should allow him to say all that he wanted to say about me, since he is trying to get off of the issue that I raised. The brother quotes from me the statement that Brother Love was trying to "lead a faction." I meant by that statement that he was trying to lead off a faction or to create a faction in order to be its leader. I do not know that he has succeeded in creating a faction, as no church has divided over the question, so far as I know, in this country; and I do not see how they can, for most of them had from two to eight cups already, and I am unable to see how any man can indorse eight cups and oppose eighty. If Jesus meant one cup, then it is unscriptural to have two. Early in the game Brother Love referred to the fact that the Ninth and Russell Streets Church, of this city, had never bowed to the mother of harlots by introducing the individual cup. I called his attention to the fact that the church referred to had six, but I now think they had eight then, and I believe they have twelve at this time. I told Brother Love if Jesus authorized only one, they had five (and now it is eleven) that they must have got from the old lady or some one else.

The brother asks: "By what rule does Brother Srygley judge those who are opposed to the individual cups to be a faction?" I do not judge them to be a faction; but I do think if Brother Hawley and Brother Love can succeed. they will lead out a faction over this question.

The brother refers to the "common cup" which has been used by the church since the time of Christ. This might indicate that the church had never had but one cup since the time of Christ. I judge if this were so it would be quite common by now. I reckon they had this common cup in Corinth when the whole church came together to eat the Lord's Supper. If they did, it must have been a very large "common" cup, as some of them were drunken. They were quite easily made drunk in those days if they only had one cup, but Brother Hawley is certain it has been the "common cup" which the church has used since the time of Christ till now. If Brother Love selected Brother Hawley to assist him in this controversy, he is a poor judge of help.

The brother then asks: "Who is the faction in this case?" No one in this part of the country, because there has been no faction led off as yet.

The brother quotes me again: "He appears to be making every effort that he can command to divide the churches on the individual-cup question." It has appeared that way to me; but the brother knocks me out on that in short order in these words: "Another untrue statement, and one which he does not try to prove." That is cool. How does he know that it is untrue? How does he know how anything appears to me, only by what I say? And I said that is the way it appears. Of course, I was only speaking of the way it appeared to me; but the brother coolly dismisses me with the statement that it is untrue. If Love selected :his Brother Hawley for my opponent, I want him to get a man that can be nicer than this one; and if he did not select him, I want Hawley to learn good manners before he appoints himself to another position. No, I offered no proof for the statement, because I did not believe that Love would require proof. In fact, no man can prove what appears true to another, only by the word of the other, and the brother had my word for it. If the brother had asked me what made that impression on my mind, I could have told him; but, instead of doing that, he brands the statement as untrue; and now I will ask him to either prove that it did not appear that way to me or take it back. Come on, now, Brother Hawley, with your proof, or take it back with due apology. I would remind the brother of Paul's statement: "For who among men knoweth the things of a man, save the spirit of the man, which is in him?" (1 Cor. 2: 11.) Brother Hawley may suit Love for a prop, but I prefer to lean on a stouter stick.

The brother says: "Now some are advocating the introduction of the individual cups." Granted, but I am not one of the "some." I do think, though, that the communion is an individual matter; and when I drink of the fruit of the vine, I never use but one cup. I would not use but one if they had fifty, neither would I use but one if the church had two, and I could use but one if the church used only one. Now, I do not ask Brother Hawley to pass on my spirit, but on my conduct. Have I disobeyed the Savior, if he means only one cup, when I use only one? No, I do not "intend to introduce the individual cups in spite of any objection." I do not like the word "spite," and I do not think that Brother Hawley makes any improvement by putting it with another word and making it "in spite." I shall not introduce the individual cups at all, neither will I undertake to oppose the individual cups and favor two or more "common cups," notwithstanding my brother says they have been in the church since Christ's day.

But I am here reminded that the proposition which I agreed to discuss with Brother Love was: "A thing can be technically wrong and at the same-time scripturally right." Now, this is the work for his substitute; and unless Hawley is willing to defend the affirmative of this proposition, I cannot allow him to substitute for E. C. Love.

SHOULD CHRISTIANS JOIN FRATERNAL ORDERS?

(D. Lipscomb, in "Queries and Answers.")

It depends very much on the kind of a Christian a man proposes to be whether it is wrong for him to join the fraternal orders or not. If he intends to make an earnest, faithful, devoted Christian, he has no time, taste, or service for anything, save the church of Christ; if he intends to live the Christian life and make himself a follower of Christ and fit himself in character for heaven, he will give his talent, means, time, and love to the church of Christ, with none to bestow on any other association or brotherhood; but if he only intends to profess to be a Christian, not to make a strict member, and live a life of ease and pleasure and trust to church membership to save him, without a godly and holy life, he had as well join these brotherhoods and divide his time and means with these as to take any other course of life that will not develop the Christian character. A prominent Mason, not a Christian, once told me that while he was a Mason himself and thought Masonry did good in a temporal way and in various ways, he did not see how a preacher or member of the church of God-which is claimed to be the perfect organization, able to bestow all good and entitled to all the service, time, and means of a person-could join another institution and divide with it his time, means, and affections. He said it in speaking of the death of one of the most prominent preachers that ever lived in Nashville, who died and was buried with Masonic honors. He clearly intimated that his respect for that man was lowered by his joining a human society while claiming to be a leader and teacher in a divine one. Preachers and others often join organizations of this character thinking it will give them influence, but it seems to me it declares to the world that they do not find their religion and their church as good as they claim to believe it, else they would not divide their time, service, and means with other institutions, seeking the little good they give. It seems to me that an elder or a preacher who does this weakens his religious influence and character in so doing with all who know the claims of Christ and his church. Teachers that do this certainly do not love the Lord with all the strength and the mind and the soul, else they would have no time to devote to these worldly institutions, and in this fail to set the example Jesus requires of his teachers, as such lack the essential qualifications of elders and teachers. The best way is to teach them better. Show them the example of earnest fidelity and singleness of purpose to serve the Lord. Perhaps you show a failure to hold the church of God and his religion in high esteem in some other way as displeasing as this. Let us try the healing and saving process rather than the destroying one. But Christians should do all they do in the name of Christ and as members of his body, not as members of other bodies. Christ provides for all good to his servants in his church.

TO-DAY AND TO-MORROW.

Part of to-day belongs to to-morrow, as the seed belongs to the shoot, as the foundation belongs to the building. So to-day owes its best to to-morrow, for not to do right to-day may ruin to-morrow; but the reverse is not true. To-morrow cannot ruin to-day. Time's wheel does not run backward. Banish, then, foreboding and anxious forecast, and fill to-day with faithful work, with kindness and courage and hope; and so you will keep to-morrow from becoming a marplot, and make it a good, honest to-day when it comes.—Maltbie D. Babcock.

Apparently we have forgotten a few of the erstwhile simple things of life. A backward look will reveal them as the big things. Get the habit of happiness. Utilize your enthusiasms. The world is hungry for faith. The young man is the future incarnate. Let every failure teach you the game. Public confidence is the young man's best asset. Get down to earth; that is where the people live. The world is not down on you; it is just busy, that's all. A man who won't get up when he is knocked down is of no use. These are all workable problems. Try them out.—Texas Christian Advocate.

QUERY DEPARTMENT

BY H. LEO BOLES

There are some brethren who meet us only once a year, in the protracted meeting, to take the bread and wine. Please give us full directions how to proceed with them. We do not want to make any mistake.—W. VANTREASE, Norene, Tenn.

It may be that these brethren need teaching. They should be taught their duty and should be encouraged to do it. Some way ought to be sought to get them to be more interested in spiritual things. They should be taught that loyalty to the church demands that they be regular and punctual in attending the weekly meetings of the church. They should know that the social intercourse with brethren and sisters at least weekly is necessary for their spiritual welfare. They should know that the exhortation and public worship are appointed of our Father for the mutual development of the Christian life. One way to get them interested is to put them to work. If the eldership of a congregation is as wise and tactful as it ought to be, it will put every member to work. There is something that each can do, and each should be encouraged to do what he can, and by doing some work in the name of the Lord interest may be created. There cannot be any growth along spiritual lines unless there is activity along these lines. Again, these brethren should be impressed with the fearfulness of their example of indifference toward the church. Presumably some of them, at least, are fathers, and they are having a great influence on their children and their neighbors' children. It is a fearful thing to be an example of carelessness and indifference before our children. We endanger the salvation of our own souls and the souls of others. If they could be encouraged to read the Bible, they would soon see the fearfulness of the mistake that they are making.

Golconda, Ill., Route 3, August 13, 1925.—Because of ignorance of the Scriptures and the looseness of the civil law relative to divorce and remarriage, I find here and at almost every place I go many people tangled up in this evil, and am frank to say that ironing the wrinkles out of divorce cases is no little task. I have some questions deduced from the case at Huckabay, Texas, mentioned in the "Query Department" of the Gospel Advocate of August 6. (1) During the six or eight months that the man was living in adultery with his second wife, did not his first wife have a scriptural cause to put away her adulterous husband and marry some other man? (2) Since his second wife has been abandoned and divorced by the man in the case, could she marry some other man and not become an adulteress, and would the man to whom she is married be an adulterer? (3) While I heartily concur with you on the duty of the church toward the parties concerned, yet we have so many similar cases, and, too, where the public is liable not to understand the nature of the case. Do you think a church should appoint such men as elders or deacons or make public teachers and leaders of them?—W. A. Record, Golconda, Ill.

1. The case referred to in this query was as follows: A brother and his wife separated without having the scriptural cause for separation. After obtaining a divorce, the man married another woman. He lived with her for six or eight months and then obtained a divorce from her. After obtaining this divorce, he married again his first wife. The question was asked: Are the man and wife now living in adultery? The answer given was that neither party was now living in adultery because of the uniting in marriage the husband to his first wife. Some think that the first wife was entirely free to marry again while her husband was living in adultery. Others think that there ought never to be a marriage while both parties are living; that, it matters not what may be the cause of separation, it is best to remain unmarried and run no risk. It seems that it was best in the case referred to above, as there was an opportunity for reconciliation with the first wife. Of course, if she had married another man, the case would have been complicated so that it would have been almost impossible for a reconciliation.

2. Yes, I think that the second wife in the case mentioned could marry and not be guilty of adultery. She was living in adultery the six or eight months that she lived with the husband referred to. She was not scripturally married to him, though legally so. Since she was not scripturally married, she had only to quit the sin and seek forgiveness in God's way to be cleansed of it, and then when cleansed she was free to marry whomsoever she will, if a Christian, only in the Lord. And if she could be scripturally married, then neither she nor her husband would be living in adultery.

3. No. A church should not think of selecting such men as elders or deacons. I think that I can do no better than to quote what Brother David Lipscomb said on this question in answer to a similar question that was asked him some years ago. In order that the reader may get the full import of Brother Lipscomb's answer, I quote the question and his answer to it. It is as follows:

"Dear Brother Lipscomb: If a brother, elder or preacher, is guilty of adultery, or has seduced a young girl, does he forfeit his right to any claim he had to the ministry, or could he be retained in the fellowship as an elder or preacher in the church of God? (M. Currie, Brownsville, Tenn.)"

A man guilty of adultery cannot be an elder or preacher. Such positions are to be occupied only by men whose characters are above reproach. The Scriptures give the characters of those who are to be rulers and teachers. When a man has been put forward as elder or teacher, and he proves by his acts unfit in character for the place, he at once ought to retire or be retired from the position. One guilty of such sin ought not to be thought of for such position. It would be difficult for one guilty of such crime ever to restore a character that would fit him for it. If he is truly penitent, he is anxious to be forgiven, that he may live a humble, quiet life and be saved. If he appreciates his crime, he does not wish to be put forward to occupy prominent and active positions. If he seeks these, he has not in truth repented. True repentance leads to humility and contrition, and is willing to be humble and retiring, that he may bring no reproach or shame on the church of God. There was never a more hypocritical farce than Breckinridge making his repentance a ground for asking public honors. What is true of him is true of all who seek high places through repentance. It seems to me the times demand a thorough conformity to the will of God. A man who is an adulterer, that defrauds his fellow man, that will not pay his debts, that cannot be depended on to tell the truth, that will not swear aye to his own hurt and change not, that does not enjoy the confidence of his fellow men, should not be put forward as teacher or ruler in the church of Christ. To do it is to bring shame and reproach upon the cause of God. Men who do wrong and repent ought to be forgiven, but they ought to work in humble positions until their character is proved. (Gospel Advocate, May 31, 1894, page 337.)

How Christian men and women can be willing to sustain a bad man as a teacher is one of the incomprehensible though frequent manifestations of church life. It fre-

How Christian men and women can be willing to sustain a bad man as a teacher is one of the incomprehensible though frequent manifestations of church life. It frequently seems that a man with a stain on his character is more popular than one who has lived an upright life. While we recognize that a man's having been a sinner and guilty of even heinous wrongs ought not to be a hindrance to usefulness after earnest repentance, still, when a man is guilty of frequent crimes and seeks to conceal them, and is guilty of immoralities, after claiming to be a Christian, no matter what his ability as a speaker, he should not be put forward as a preacher. . . . How often do we see churches encouraging and sustaining a preacher they know to be lacking in truthfulness, in integrity and true honesty, because they know they are fascinating speakers! How often do we find them willing to condone adulteries, hide lascivious conduct, and maintain them as preachers because they are popular speakers! While this is done the morals of the church will be at a low ebb and its influence crippled. (Gospel Advocate, 1886, page 215.)

FROM HOUSE TO HOUSE.

BY JOSEPH A. SHIRES.

In these days of attraction and counter attraction by the world and worldly things, it seems to me that something should be done to offset the great opposition.

I wonder why we could not have a house-to-house visitation by personal workers to preach the word of God to the people. I should like to see a campaign of this kind sweep the entire country.

Personal workers should be sent out in companies of two after the method of Jesus. When entering a house, if the house is friendly to it, they should, if there are sinners, engage in prayer for their conversion. If there be saints and they are disposed to pray, the visitors should pray with them, if they could persuade the saints to pray. It would be no uncommon thing to find religious folks not accustomed to prayer.

These visitors and personal workers should endeavor by the grace of God to convert sinners, edify saints, get negligent disciples to bring out their church letters and take membership in the churches; they should try to get other persons, whether sinners or saints, to attend the meetings of the church, and also get the children interested in Bible study.

As far back as my memory goes I used to hear Brother Larimore preach at old Lasea, on the line of Maury and Marshall counties, Tenn. I wonder if Brother Elam remembers the night at this place when some one exploded bombshells just outside the door? A copy of the Gospel Advocate of about forty years ago tells of the incident; in fact, it contains quite a write-up on the whole meeting. Gas was discovered while boring a well for water at the door of the church. We did not know much about gas in those days; so we pulled the drill and plugged the hole.

HE NEEDED THE MONEY.

A naval officer says that on one occasion during his destroyer's visit to the Philippine Islands the sailors were lounging along the rail, throwing pennies into the water for a crowd of dusky, naked youngsters in the harbor to dive for. It was a lively scene. No sooner was a penny thrown into the water than a native boy dived and brought it to the surface. Many times a penny did not reach the bottom before a boy caught it.

On the wharf the native mayor, surrounded by his fellow townsmen in full regalia, was awaiting the arrival of the American naval officers to whom he was going to tender a grand reception. He watched the diving boys with keen interest.

A reckless sailor lad began throwing quarters and then half dollars into the water. Then some one threw overboard, one after another, a number of big, glistening, silver American dollars. What a scrambling! It seemed as if every boy in the entire town was either in the air or in the water.

Suddenly an American resident came dashing breathlessly down the wharf and shouted to the group of sailors: "If you want this ceremony to go on, for goodness' sake stop throwing those dollars. The chief of police has already kicked off his shoes and the mayor is just starting to take off his coat."—Selected.

BIBLE CROSS WORD PUZZLE

FOUR flying wedges pointed towards the center of this diagram indicate the two nine-letter words that cross there. Otherwise, the words are short, simple and familiar. So familiar are most of them, in fact, that even though references are given in some cases, an adept puzzle-solver could conquer this one without the aid of a reference book at all.

How to Solve a Cross Word Puzzle

To work out this puzzle, the white spaces must be filled with letters forming words answering to the various horizontal and vertical definitions given below. The horizontal and vertical words are not the same, but each gives a clue to the other. The first letter of each word is indicated by a number which refers to the definitions listed below.

It is advisable to first fill in, in both directions, those words which you know to be correct. These will furnish hints to those words which you do not know or had merely guessed at. When the puzzle is solved correctly, the letters in the white spaces will spell words both horizontally and vertically. The black spaces are the blind spots of the puzzle and merely form the pattern, incidentally designating the ends and beginnings of the words contained in the puzzle.

THE DUTY OF CHRISTIAN FATHERS.

Paul solemnly enjoins it upon Christian fathers to nurture their children "in the chastening and admonition of the Lord," but the nurture of children by fathers in our day is a most unusual business. The guidance of the children is relegated to the mothers (too often to be farmed out to maids or helpers), and later to a committee consisting of the Bible-school teacher, the public-school teacher, and perhaps the preacher. The fathers have more important business than the nurture and training of children. They are occupied with getting money, driving the automobile, or explaining politics to the community.

The maternal element in child culture is a necessary and priceless one, but God regards the paternal as at least as important a factor. It is plainly seen that often the care of earnest, faithful mothers meets with disappointment because of the indifference, or even contrary influence, of fathers. The failures and breakdowns in characters formed without the paternal influence are to-day shocking even the more "blaze" circles of society. These breakdowns are so numerous of late, and in such high social and political places, as to cause general alarm. They constitute an imperative call for the most conscientious paternal effort in training the coming generation in citizenship.

In view of all this, the Christian father who neglects the personal training of his children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord-that is, in virtue and true righteousness-is a traitor to the highest interests of both church and State.

Christian fathers will generally admit all this, and many of them must confess, to their shame, that they have made but slight effort to discharge this solemn, God-enjoined duty. Business must be attended to, of course; but the hours of self-indulgence, even in this age of sham hurry, are still sufficient to permit any father to spend a considerable portion of his time with his children.

Of course there is a shirking on the part of many fathers from the religious training and spiritual nurture of their children because of a genuine consciousness of their unfitness for such work. In the case of Christian fathers, such a condition but adds to their shame and disgrace. If Christian fathers would honestly prepare themselves for Christian living, they would be sufficiently prepared to start little feet in the straight path. Conversely, in preparing themselves to help their own children, what an improvement would come over their own lives, and how much nearer and sweeter would be their joy in their homes!

Christian father, lovest thou Jesus? Then feed those tender lambs which he has placed in thine own family! -Christian Standard.

PETTIGREW-PHILLIPS DISCUSSION.

BY R. E. L. TAYLOR.

There was a discussion between W. M. Pettigrew (Saint) and W. C. Phillips (Christian) at Rossville, Ga., Sunday, November 15, afternoon and night. The following subjects were discussed: (1) "The Scriptures teach that the Christian should and can live without committing sin in this life." (2) "The Scriptures teach that the penitent believer is saved, or receives the forgiveness of sins, in and only in the act of water baptism." Pettigrew affirmed the former and Brother Phillips the latter.

Pettigrew is the man that Brother Flavil Hall had a discussion with a few weeks back, and Brother Phillips was Brother's Hall's moderator. Pettigrew gave out a challenge, and Brother Phillips accepted it. Brother Phillips was too strong for Pettigrew. Pettigrew's first speech was fair, but he never could get up to it any more. He weakened more every speech he made. Brother Phillips is the strongest one of the brethren I have ever heard.

Brother Phillips asked Pettigrew sixteen pertinent questions, but he did not notice even one of them. He also presented some syllogisms in the discussion of the latter subject, but Pettigrew failed to notice them. Pettigrew's people failed to show up at the last round at night. Even his moderator was not on hand. Without a question of doubt, the discussion was a victory for the truth. Mr. Pettigrew seems to be a very fair man. I was led to believe that he was almost persuaded to obey the gospel. Large crowds were present both afternoon and night. Brother Graham moderated for Brother Phillips in the afternoon; the writer was moderator at night.

LUNDY.

Sister Lura A. Lundy died in Akron, Ohio, Sunday evening, November 22, 1925, and her body was sent back to her Tennessee home, north of Cookeville, at Zion Church, for interment. She was born and reared in the Zion neighborhood, and it was her wish that she be buried at old Zion. She leaves a husband and three small girls—seven, four, and an eight-days' old baby. I tried to speak words of consolation at the Billows funeral parlors on Tuesday evening

BILLS.

William Clifford Bills, Jr., passed away on October 10, 1925. He was born on July 31, 1918. He was the only son of Brother and Sister W. C. only son of Brother and Sister W. C. Bills. He leaves father, mother, and two sisters to mourn their loss. Brother Bills had carried his little son to Hobart, Okla., to a surgeon, and had his tonsils removed. The doctor insisted that Brother Bills take the child back home as soon as he was operated on. The child had several hemorrhages while on the way and was dead by the time they got home. Our hearts go out in sympathy with Brother and Sister Bills.

BREWER.

On September 23, 1925, at 4 P.M., the angel of death entered the home of Brother and Sister W. H. Brewer, of Wymburg, Tenn., and called their little daughter, Rose Ellen, who was thirteen years old. During a meeting conducted by the writer at Burrus Chapel in August, Rose Ellen was baptized into Christ. Only a few days after she was baptized she became ill and was a continual sufferer came ill and was a continual sufferer till the summons came. It is difficult till the summons came. It is difficult to comprehend the circumstances of life and the providences of God, but we rejoice to believe that God does all things well and that "all things work together for good to them that love God." A great number gathered at the funeral services, which were conducted by Brother John R. Williams.

WHITEFIELD.

J. P. Whitefield was born on December 9, 1846, and died, at Sinton, Texas, on October 11, 1925. He was married to Martha J. Kirkpatrick on January 20, 1870. To this union twelve children were born, seven of whom are living. Four of the children were with him at his death, the others being too far off to reach his bedside. Brother Whitefield obeyed the gospel when young, and in a few years began preaching. He spent many years as a preacher, but for some time had been too feeble to be active in the work. He was zealous for the "old paths," and met with some opposition because of his loyalty to New Testament standards. He requested a simple, short burial service. We had a couple of songs, and the writer read a few verses of scripthe writer read a few verses of scrip-

We are receiving many commendations of "Elam's Notes," a commentary on the International Bible-school lessons, prepared by Brother E. A. Elam. We here give some expressions from well-known brethren:

J. E. Acuff, Nashville, Tenn., says:

"Elam's Notes' contains thorough, practical, and logical comments on the lessons, presented in an interesting way which attracts and holds the attention of the student."

S. T. Hardison, Lewisburg, Tenn., says:

"I have been using 'Elam's Notes' from the beginning, and I have been gratified to see how completely and elaborately he explains the context. I am sure it is a valuable book for old and young, and if studied carefully it will aid them very much in getting a correct knowledge of the Bible."

B. C. Goodpasture, Atlanta, Ga., says: "I have used four or five of the popular 'Notes' on the Sunday-school lessons, but consider 'Elam's Notes' by far the best."

Batsell Baxter, President of Abilene Chris.

Batsell Baxter, President of Abilene Christian College, Abilene, Texas, says: "I regard 'Elam's Notes' as the best work of the kind available. Brother Elam is one of our foremost Bible teachers, and his ripe experience, splendid judgment, and constant companionship with the Bible have combined to make this one of the finest helps to Bible study to be found anywhere."

In B. Bradley, Dickson, Tenn., says: "I am glad to commend 'Elam's Notes' to the congregations everywhere as the best help obtainable. I have long felt and said that Brother Elam's 'Notes' are the most valuable aid to the study of the Lord's-day studies that has ever come under my notice."

F. C. Sowell, Columbia, Tenn., says: "I can most heartily commend 'Elam's Notes' to any person or church desiring a broader and deeper knowledge of the Bible."

S. H. Hall, Nashville, Tenn., says: "I know of nothing in the way of human helps that will aid the Bible student more in obtaining this knowledge than 'Elam's Notes," published and sold by the Gospel Advocate Company."

william Hall, Gallatin, Tenn., says: "I do not hesitate to say that those who use 'Elam's Notes' in the study of the lesson for each Lord's day get a very much more comprehensive and complete teaching on the lessons studied in connection with these notes than would be possible without them."

PEDIGO.

On Lord's-day evening, September 13, 1925, after patiently enduring for four months the affliction of cancer of the stomach, Brother John C. Pedigo's soul left the earthly tabernacle to take up an abode in "a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens." Having obeyed the gospel at the age of seventeen, he at once began to diligently add those Christian graces recorded in 2 Pet. 1: 5-11. He was a diligent and thinking student of the Bible. He had been a subscriber to the Gospel Advocate for forty-five years. He was very firm in his convictions; an earnest, sincere Chrisyears, He was very firm in his convictions; an earnest, sincere Christian; and was ever ready to contend for the truth. He was born on March 15, 1850. He was married to Sarah Pinckley on February 16, 1873, and there were born to them seven children, of whom three boys and one girl survive him. Sister Pedigo and the four living ones mourn their loss, yet not as others which have no hope. Brother O. L. Carnahan and the writer were called to comfort as best we could the bereaved ones. There were present a large concourse of kindred, friends, and neighbors to pay their last respects to Brother Pedigo and to extend loving sympathy to the and to extend loving sympathy to the sorrowing ones. #### SMITH.

Ella Tipps Smith was born on January 11, 1872, and departed this life on September 15, 1925. She was married to J. R. Smith on February 17, 1892. To this union ten children were born, all now living, and all loving, devoted sons and daughters. Sister Smith possessed traits which readily impressed all who came in her pressure. Smith possessed traits which readily impressed all who came in her presence with her benign influence. Gentle, unassuming, with marked equanimity, firm and unyielding in all that was good and true, courageous and valiant as a Christian soldier, coupled with superior judgment and good intellectuality, she was one of the bestpoised women I have ever known. She was a good wife who looked well to the ways of her household. She was one man's paradise here on earth. His heart did safely trust in her. She shared his joys, comforted him in his sorrows, encouraged and supported him in his material struggles, and stood by and encouraged in time of sorrows, encouraged and supported him in his material struggles, and stood by and encouraged in time of storm. She was kind and courteous to others, slow to anger, and ever mindful of the little unremembered acts of kindness and of love that make life worth living. She united with the Presbyterian Church early in life, but, learning "the way of the Lord more perfectly," she united with the church of Christ, being baptized by L. R. Sewell, twenty-nine years ago. Hence, we sorrow not as others who have no hope; and some day, when our frail barks have crossed life's stormy sea and are safely anchored on the Beautiful Isle of Somewhere, then Christ himself, the Man of sorrows, shall gather all his children home, and with his own hand shall wipe all their tears away.

NASHVILLE, TENN.

THE COOKE-ERVIN DEBATE.
BY JOHN C. TAYLOR.

Brother W. Clarence Cooke, of Lynchburg, Tenn., and Mr. W. S. Ervin, Separate Baptist, of County Line, Tenn., met in a four-days' debate, November 3-6, at County Line, three miles east of Lynchburg.

The following propositions were discussed: (1) "The Scriptures teach that the church of which I, W. S. Ervin, am a member, known as the Baptist Church, was established by Christ himself during his personal ministry." (2) "The Scriptures teach that baptism in water is a condition of pardon of past sins to the alien sinner." (3) "The Scriptures teach that a child of God cannot so apostatize as to be finally lost." (4) "The Scriptures teach that the Holy Spirit operates only through the preached word in the conversion and salvation of alien sinners." Brother Cooke affirmed the second and fourth propositions; Mr. Ervin, the first and third.

Mr. Ervin took the position that Christ established his church when he called the twelve apostles (Luke 6: 13), and in this connection he read 1 Cor. 12: 28. In reply to this, Brother Cooke showed that Christ ordained the apostles while on earth, but that he set them in the church "when he ascended up on high." (Eph. 4: 8-11.) From Zech. 6: 13, Mr. Ervin reasoned that "he shall build the temple," saying that since he did it, he did it while on earth. In reply to this, Brother Cooke showed that Christ saves, and though Christ has "ascended up on high," he saves in person now; and the fact that he "ascended up on high" before he built his church did not keep him from building it. And, too, Zech. 6: 13 says: "And he shall be a priest upon his throne." From this Brother Cooke showed that Christ could not have been on his throne while on earth, for Paul said: "If he were on earth, he should not be a priest." (Heb. 8: 4.)

Brother Cooke, in his first affirmative, showed by "many infallible proofs" that baptism is one of the conditions of pardon to the alien sinner. Mr. Ervin introduced the passages which teach that man is saved by faith. Brother Cooke showed that man is saved or justified by faith, but denied that he is justified by faith only. One passage used by Mr. Ervin was Rom, 5: 1. Paul there says we are justified by faith and have peace with God. To this Brother Cooke replied by showing that the walls of Jericho fell down by faith (Heb, 11: 30), but it was seven days after that faith came-after it (that faith) led them through seven days of obedience to God. So, he reasoned, Paul was justified by faith three days after that faith came—after it (his faith) led him through three days of repentance and the waters of baptism. He showed that Paul had no peace with God during the three days immediately following the appearance of the Lord unto him.

Mr. Ervin, in his affirmative on the impossibility of apostasy, reasoned that since God does all in his power to save his children, none can be lost. To this Brother Cooke replied by showing that God does all in his power to save all men (John 3: 16); and that, if the fact that God does all in his power to save his children proves that none of them will be lost, then the fact that he does all in his power to save all men means that none will be lost, and, hence, all mankind will be saved. Brother Cooke made the argument that little children are borninto the world children of God, because they have a spirit of which God is the Father (Heb. 12: 9); and since all mankind were once infants, all were in a safe state. From this he reasoned that the lost sinner is simply a fallen child of God, and is a servant of the devil only as a result of serving the devil. (Rom. 6: 16.) Since all were once heirs of God and many grow up to manhood and womanhood and enter the "broad way" (Matt. 7: 13), Mr. Ervin's proposition could not be true.

Brother Cooke, in his affirmative on the Holy Spirit, showed that when a sinner reads the word of God, it is an inspired man preaching to him. He showed that the mission of Paul was to open the eyes of them to whom he was sent, and that the only means which he had was the word which the Holy Spirit spoke through him. (Acts 26: 16-18; Rom. 10: 8.)

This was Brother Cooke's first debate, but he did as fine work as I have ever witnessed. He is humble, sincere, and kind; at the same time he is severe, because his work is done in the power of the gospel.

A fine spirit prevailed throughout the discussion. Large crowds attended. Good will come from all debates like this.

The writer moderated for Brother Cooke in this discussion.

From the Brethren

Henderson, Tenn., November 17.— On the third Lord's day in October I On the third Lord's day in October I began a very interesting meeting at Lebanon, Tenn., and although the weather turned very cold, the interest grew at every service. There were three additions and the church was much edified. I am to be with them again next March. On the second Lord's day in November I began a meeting at Decatur, Ala., and four precious souls were added to the church by obeying the gospel. This is a very promising field. Six weeks ago I baptized twenty-eight there, and during my absence Brethren Winkler and Crews (white) preached for them, and two more were added under their preaching. The white church in Albany aided me greatly in this meeting in every way.—M. in this meeting in every way .- M. Keeble.

Camden, Ark., November 20 .- The Master's work in this section moves along with fair interest. Continued rains and correspondingly bad roads have interfered with some meetings I had planned with country congregations or at mission points, but I hope to do some such work yet. The breth-ren at Two Bayou have their meetinghouse almost completed. Brother J. Will Henley was with us here in Camden, November 1-15, preaching every evening (except one) and twice on Lord's days. He preaches the gospel in an impressive way, and the cause of Christ is strengthened among us, though no large audiences were out to hear him. We realize that our growth in a city like this must be "here a little, there a little." Four were added to the congregation by membership. We take courage and press on. Brother E. S. Jelley was with us on November 18 and spoke at the midweek service. Brother Jellev is a deep Bible student and widely read. He knows what it is to serve and sacrifice under the great commission from sixteen years of missionary inghouse almost completed. Brother J. sion from sixteen years of missionary work in India, and he tells the story of Christ and the need of the gospel in a simple, beautiful way. He now wants to give his life to missionary work among the American Indians, for which past experience should peculiarly qualify him, and he must have support. We were glad to have some fellowship with him.-Harvey W. Riggs.

MY RESOLVE.

To live as gentle as I can; To live as gentle as I can;
To be, no matter where, a man;
To take what comes of good or ill
And cling to faith and honor still;
To do my best and let that stand,
The record of my brain and hand,
And then, should failure come to me,
Still work and hope for victory;
To have no secret place wherein To have no secret place wherein I stoop unseen to shame and sin; To be the same when I'm alone
As when my every deed is known;
To live undaunted, unafraid
Of any step that I have made;
To be without pretense or sham, Exactly what men think I am,

By JAMES A. ALLEN

Brother N. E. Hicks, of Knobel, Ark., sends us a clipping from the Arkansas Democrat, entitled, "M. E. Unification Plan Ratified by Conference Vote," and stating in a subheading that the "North Arkansas body accepts proposal by margin of three-fourths of one vote." Concerning whether the Southern Methodist Church would unite with the Northern Methodist Church, the Democrat savs:

The conference cast a total of two hundred and fifteen votes, and Methodist constitutional law requires that threefourths of this number be favorable for adoption. three negative votes were cast and one hundred and sixty-two affirmative. Three-fourths of the total vote cast was one hundred and sixty-one and one-fourth, which gave the proposal a margin of three-fourths of one vote.

It is a good sign when the Methodists see the evils of division. We would that all the religious world could see Then skepticism and infidelity would vanish and the world would accept Jesus as the Sent of God. Methodists say that Baptists, Presbyterians, Episcopalians, etc., are Christians, children of God. Why is it more essential for Southern Methodists to unite with Northern Methodists than it is for both Southern Methodists and Northern Methodists to unite with Baptists and others?

God condemns the worldly union that is brought about by a vote. Such a union is an entirely different thing from "the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace" taught and required in the Scriptures. The unity of which God is the Author is the unity into which his children enter when they become united to him. It is not the prerogative of men to devise ways and grounds by and on which they may be united. To take a vote on such things is to leave God out of it. The important thing is for men to seek to be united with God. When a man is united to God, he is united to all others who are united to God. God is the Center and Source of the union.

But to get up a plan of unification that includes only two divisions of one denomination and have a conference vote on it is a step away from Christian union, not a step toward it. Such a thing merely effects the centralization and consolidation of money and power, to be vested in the hands of a still smaller body of men than they would be before the merger. The men who are doing most to promote this merger in the Methodist Church are the shrewd and far-seeing men who have a weather eye on these places of money and power.

Christians cannot vote on Christian union. They have nothing to do with naming the grounds upon which union exists. God names and specifies and points out these grounds in his word. The only choice man has is as to whether or not he will stand on them. When he takes his stand on the word of God, all others who are united to God are united to him. The same thing that makes a person a child of God puts him or her into the family of God and makes him or her a brother or a sister to all other children of God, members of God's family. God has no children that are not in his family.

The same thing-viz., hearing, believing, repenting, and being baptized-that makes a man a Christian makes him a member of the church. It is as unscriptural and absurd to talk about a man's becoming a Christian and afterwards joining the church as it would be to talk about a child's joining the family after its birth. The church of Christ is the body of Christ. "And he is the head of the body, the church." (Col. 1: 18.) "And gave him to be head over all things to the church, which is his body, the fullness of him that filleth all in all." (Eph. 1: 22, 23.) Christ has but one body, or church. "There is one body, and one Spirit, even as also ye were called in one hope of your calling." (Eph. 4: 4.) "For even as we have many members in one body, and all the members have not the same office: so we, who are many, are one body in Christ, and severally members one of another." (Rom. 12: 4, 5.)

When a man is "born of water and the Spirit," he becomes a child of God, a member of the family of God, a member of the church of Christ, "which is his body," and a brother to all who are identified with those who "were called Christians first in Antioch." (Acts 11: 26.) Being "born of water and of the Spirit will not make a man a Methodist, Episcopalian, Presbyterian, or Baptist. Men were "children of God, through faith, in Christ Jesus," having been "baptized into Christ" (Gal. 3: 26, 27), many centuries before any of these humanly originated denominations were started.

The Democrat, in reporting what occurred at the conference, further says:

Bishop Hay, in his devotional service, stressed discipleship and service, also paying his respects to the "rotten materialism" taught in the divinity schools of Yale, Princeton, Columbia, and other Eastern universities.

"We want an equipped ministry," Bishop Hay said, "but we do not want any half-baked scientists. If you know little or nothing about science, you had better stick to the word of God. We are against education that educates man away from the old-time altars and from the inspiration of God's word. I don't believe our ministers need to go to Yale, Columbia, or Princeton, because we do not need that rotten materialism. The church needs a few scholars, but we do not need many. We are more concerned for a consecrated ministry." scholars, but we do not need many. cerned for a consecrated ministry."

We join with Bishop Hay in regretting that "rotten materialism" is "taught in the divinity schools of Yale, Princeton, Columbia, and other Eastern universities." We regret, in the next place, that these universities have such things as "divinity schools." Men who enter a "divinity school" in order to enter the clerical profession, as an easy way to make a fat living and enjoy big honors with little work, are a dead weight on society and are not worth their standing room. The "clergy" is mainly responsible for the "rotten materialism" and infidelity that now exist.

We heartily concur with Bishop Hay in his opposition to "half-baked scientists." But we want to get this thing straight. Bishop Hay, in declaring that "we do not need that rotten materialism," is very properly condemning the course of those who deny the statement of Moses that "God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him; male and female created he them." (Gen. 1: 27.) But what about the course of Bishop Hay? He repudiates the language of Jesus to his apostles: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to the whole creation. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that disbelieveth shall be condemned." (Mark 16: 15, 16.) Is it any worse infidelity to repudiate the language of Moses than it is to repudiate the language of Jesus Christ? The evolutionists have simply borrowed a plank out of the platform of those who refuse to tell sinners what Christ commands them to do to be saved. If it is "rotten materialism" to repudiate Moses, will the Bishop kindly tell what kind of a horrible thing he thinks it is to repudiate Christ?

The men Bishop Hay calls "half-baked scientists" are not scientists at all. A scientist is a man who knows; who, in his researches, discovers real facts. Advancing a guess, a hypothesis, or a theory is not a work of science. Has any "half-baked scientist" discovered it to be a real fact, susceptible of tangible proof, that man descended from a lower form of animals? Not one of them is bold enough to make such a claim. No true scientist has ever discovered a fact that does not fully and wholly cor roborate the statements of facts contained in the Bible,

The idea that "ministers" are a separate class, separate from and above all other Christians, and that they need a special education in a "divinity school," is as false as Rome itself, and the sooner such ideas are abandoned and abolished, the better it will be for both the church and the world.

An hour of solitude, passed in sincere and earnest prayer in conflict with and conquest over a single passion of subtle bosom sin, will teach us more of thought, will more effectually awaken the faculty and form the habit of reflection than a year's study in the schools without them .- S. T. Coleridge.

"PREACHERS' MEETINGS."

Commenting on an announcement made by Brother W. W. Slater of a meeting for preachers, elders, and singers, Brother Allen says: "But we wish to say that to have a 'preachers' meeting ' is a step in the wrong direction. Any meeting that is larger than the meeting of a local congregation is sinful. We recognize that visitors may attend the meetings of a congregation. We also recognize that in some senses there is nothing wrong in a company of preachers getting together and enjoying one recognize that in some senses there is nothing wrong in a company of preachers getting together and enjoying one another's company. But popery started with that small a beginning, and it is dangerous. Brethren, stop it!"

Now, I do not know with just how much authority Brother Allen commands these "preachers' meetings" to stop, but he does speak "as one having authority." This, to me, savors quite as much of "popery" as a "preachers' meeting." And if I remember history correctly, popery started, not with "preachers' meetings," but with one man's assuming too much authority.

meeting. And it I remember instory correctly, poperly started, not with "preachers' meetings," but with one man's assuming too much authority.

I have been selected by Brother Slater to help arrange a program for this proposed meeting; but if such meetings are really a "step in the wrong direction." I want nothing to do with them. Brother Allen says: "Any meeting that is larger than the meeting of a local congregation is sinful." I suppose, then, that Brother Allen considers those two union meetings held in Nashville a very grievous sin, since all, or nearly all, of the Nashville churches cooperated and attended. But I want to know how a "preachers' meeting," as such, is sinful. What law or principle does it violate? Even Brother Allen admits "that in some senses there is nothing wrong in a company of preachers getting together and enjoying one another's company." Well, the preachers do get together in these meetings, and they all enjoy them. Brother Allen's father attended one of these meetings last year, and he enjoyed it so much he liked to have shouted. He, too, objected to such meetings, as I remember, until he attended one. He went away thoroughly converted to the fact that such meetings are not so bad, after all. Brother fact that such meetings are not so bad, after all. Brother Allen, did you ever attend a "preachers' meeting?" I believe you could be "converted." as well as your father, if you would come down and be with us in one of our meetings.

Brother Allen also says: "We recognize that visitors may attend the meetings of a congregation." Brother Allen, we preachers consider that we can be "visitors" as well in a "preachers' meeting" as in any other meeting.

meeting.

The truth of the matter is, these meetings can be conducted in such a way as to be sinful or helpful. If preachers considered themselves clothed with authority, and, therefore, had the power to legislate, such meetings would be sinful. I have attended many meetings of preachers and elders, but have never heard any intimation from any one that he considered himself clothed with authority. If such an intimation should be heard at a "preachers' meeting," the one making it would doubtless leave "crippled." But let Brother Allen tell in what sense a meeting of preachers and elders is sinful. He has said that they are not sinful in "some senses." K. C. MOSER. a meeting of preachers and elders is sinful. that they are not sinful in "some senses." K

It is unkind in Brother Moser to say that I act popish in urging that efforts to promote a "preachers' meeting" be stopped. It is no more popish in me to urge that such a thing be stopped than it is for Brother Moser to urge

All I see wrong with holding a "preachers' meeting" is that there is no such thing in the New Testament. As long as we go by that Book we will not hold meetings for which it gives us neither precept nor example. The New Testament congregations were given instructions and directions in regard to all meetings that would be for their good, and they were "complete, furnished completely unto every good work." (2 Tim. 3: 17.) largest meeting that is authorized or commanded in the Scriptures is the meeting of the local congregation.

We take it that Brother Moser fully understands that nothing man can do will honor his Maker or prove beneficial to himself, unless God has commanded him to do it. when this was declared unto Saul, he seemingly confessed his sin, and said he went into this transgression because he "feared the people, and obeyed their voice;" and he so importuned Samuel to return to him, that he might worship God, that "Samuel turned again after Saul; and Saul worshiped Jehovah." (See 1 Sam. 15: 24-35.) But when Samuel left him this time, it was forever, until the day of Saul's death, when Samuel was called from the unseen state of the dead at Saul's request.

There was something terribly wrong with Saul's heart. He had been lifted up with pride and had come to love the admiration of the people and think more of that than he did of obedience to God. Even when he importuned Samuel to return to him that he might worship God, his words betray his wicked heart. "Then he said, I have sinned: yet honor me now, I pray thee, before the elders of my people, and before Israel, and turn again with me, that I may worship Jehovah thy God." About all the sorrow and regret that some have when their sins are known is that they are lowered in the eyes of the people, and but little, if anything, do they care about what God thinks of the evil of their way. It is dangerous and damnable to get into such a state. "Now the Spirit of Jehovah departed from Saul, and an evil spirit from Jehovah troubled him." (See 1 Sam. 16: 14.) And from this reference just read on connectedly till you come to chapter 28, verse 19, and note the conduct of this man from whom God had withdrawn himself and left him to flounder about with his own evil nature. As you read it, let me ask if his feelings, impulses, words, and conduct remind you of anything you have observed in those who claim to be disciples of our Lord.

First, note his envy and jealousy. When the women sang, "Saul hath slain his thousands, and David his ten thousands," he could not stand it. The devil of envy overpowered him, and twice he tried to thrust his spear through David, but David avoided it. (See 1 Sam. 18: 6-12.) His next effort to destroy David was to get him to go among the Philistines and bring one hundred of their foreskins to him with the promise of Michal, his daughter, for a wife. He hoped the Philistines would destroy David, but David returned with two hundred of their foreskins and not a scar on his person. This and David's ability to avoid the spear when he hurled it at him worried Saul. "And Saul was afraid of David, because Jehovah was with him, and was departed from Saul. . . . And Saul was yet the more afraid of David; and Saul was David's enemy continually." (1 Sam. 18: 12, 29.) Let me ask: What is the difference in Saul and those preachers to-day who just cannot endure the success of others-or any other member of the church, as for that matter, who cannot rejoice in the success of other disciples of our Lord? What is the trouble with people who just cannot do other than be envious and jealous? Has "the Spirit of Jehovah departed from " them and an evil spirit taken possession of them? God forbid that I should judge. How can man know? But is there such a thing as man's getting into the same sad state that Saul was in, go on from bad to worse, and die as did Saul-abandoned wholly by Jehovah?

Second, Saul had his good moments, his good impulses, made good resolutions. Read 1 Sam. 19: 1-7 and see what he had to say when Jonathan kindly reasoned with him about David and the groundlessness of his hatred for him. This caused Saul to swear that he would not harm David, and doubtless he felt that he would not and could not act so foolish any more. But "there was war again: and David went out, and fought with the Philistines, and slew them with a great slaughter; and they fled before him. An evil spirit from Jehovah was upon Saul, as he sat in his house with his spear in his hand. And Saul sought to smite David even to the wall with his spear; but he slipped away out of Saul's presence." (1 Sam.

19: 8-10.) People who are in Saul's condition can stand to live and think of those they do not like, if the objects of their hatred will always be failures and never succeed, but they just cannot endure the thought of those they hate succeeding. Does the same devil live now who lived in Saul's day?

Why, talk about good impulses. Yes, Saul could have Take the two instances when David spared his life in the cave of Engedi and in the wilderness of Ziph. You can read of this in chapters 24 and 26, respectively. Here are the words of Saul when he beheld David's mercy te him at Engedi: "Is this thy voice, my son David? And Saul lifted up his voice, and wept. And he said to David, Thou art more righteous than I; for thou hast rendered unto me good, whereas I have rendered unto thee evil. And thou hast declared this day how that thou hast dwelt well with me, for a smuch as when Jehovah had delivered me up into thy hand, thou killedst me not." But how soon Saul forgot this and was again doing his best to slay David! And when David spared him in the wilderness of Ziph, here are his words: "Then said Saul, I have sinned: return, my son David; for I will no more do thee harm, because my life was precious in thine eyes this day: behold, I have played the fool, and have erred exceedingly." But why did not Saul get away from his undone state? God had withdrawn himself from him. It seems that even a soul in whose heart God's Spirit dwells not can have good impulses, but they are only for a few moments.

Third, even that soul from whom God's Spirit has gone thinks he can see signs of God's providence and presence. "And it was told Saul that David was come to Keilah. And Saul said, God hath delivered him into my hand; for he is shut in, by entering into a town that hath gates and bars." (1 Sam. 23: 7.) This soul that has made the terrible mistake to want to walk in his own way, to stand high in the eyes of the people, and will contend that he has done what Jehovah said do when he knows he has not, just will not cast this devil from his heart and life, but holds to it, hoping to yet win out, to justify himself in the eyes of his fellows, and thus from bad to worse does he go until he even seeks the witch of Endor and wants Samuel called from the dead that he may commune with him. Hear his words to Samuel: "I am sore distressed; for the Philistines make war against me, and God is departed from me, and answereth me no more." (1 Sam. 28: 15.) Can you think of sadder words than these? Samuel reminds him of his rebellion in the case of the destruction of the Amalekites. (See verse 18.)

It is not for me to place my finger on any soul known to me and say that there is a man abandoned by Jehovah as was Saul. I am frank to say that I cannot see how mortal man could know just when a man is in the same state or condition as was Saul. But when we see souls in whose heart hatred for others has grown until they seemingly cannot stand to hear their names called, and a word of praise for them will throw them into a fit, it makes one wonder if that man is not there, or dangerously nearing that state. I would be afraid to say one word to encourage and increase hatred in one child of God for another. "We know that we have passed out of death into life, because we love the brethren. He that loveth not abideth in death. Whosoever [and that gets you] hateth his brother is a murderer: and ye know that no murderer hath eternal life abiding in him." (1 John 3: 13, 14.) "Hereby know we love, because he laid down his life for us: and we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren." (Verse 16.)

It is as wicked as was Saul to hate and to argue and contend that you love. If ever a soul had a right to say hard things about another, David had that right. He could have advertised Saul wherever he went as a very wicked man, but he did not. He could have easily de-

There is no command for any meeting larger than the meeting of the local church. When delegates, representatives, or "preachers," call them what you please, come from various points of the compass, it is without precept or example, and, regardless of how fascinating and enjoyable it is, we may rest assured that harm will come of it. God is the Ruler, and evil will come of man's doing anything on his own wisdom that God has not commanded him to do.

I was already suspicious of "preachers' meetings," but am more so now than ever. If as sound and good a man as I know my father to be could be swept off of his feet, and "enjoyed it so much" that "he liked to have shouted," the only thing left for me to do is to stay as far away from its mesmerizing spell as possible.

It does not follow that, because the Nashville brethren held two union meetings, therefore a "preachers' meeting" is scriptural. Two wrongs do not make a right. The reason the tabernacle meetings at Nashville have never been repeated is that the Nashville brethren saw that in pooling the strength of forty-two congregations they were destroying the individuality of each separate When the first meeting was closed, so congregation. careful were they to avoid all human organization that not a trace of any of the committees that managed the meeting was left behind. All were broken up, dissolved, adjourned sine die. When the time came to make preparations for the second meeting, they decided that it was unscriptural to commit the management of the meeting to committees, and, instead, committed its management to the elders of the Twelfth Avenue congregation. We have since seen that in so doing we but made the elders of Twelfth Avenue a board to manage something bigger than the work that God commands elders to do.

In the Gospel Advocate of January 20, 1910, D. Lipscomb says:

Some of the brethren last week called for a meeting of the preachers and elders in West Tennessee. We do not doubt that these brethren intend only the best for the churches, for themselves and others. But I have been through and under these meetings so much that it surprises me to hear of such meetings. I have been in and through many of them in Middle and West Tennessee, others in Kentucky and Texas. I have seen much evil come out of them to the preachers and the people. I never saw any good come out of them to any one.

F. L. Young, of Denton, Texas, wrote to Brother Lipscomb as follows:

I want to thank you for your words of warning in the Gospel Advocate of January 20. I have attended a few of these "preachers' consultation meetings," where the intention of the majority was to do no harm, but good. They may do no harm the first time, but a self-perpetuating meeting is soon captured by designing men. I may never meet you again in the flesh, so I want to thank you, my brother, for the many good lessons you have taught me from your pen through the Advocate. I shall endeavor to profit by them and then pass them on to another generation. May your last days be as peaceful and radiant as the sun sinking beneath a clear horizon.

To which Brother Lipscomb replied:

I have received quite a number of words of approval of my suggestions about unscriptural meetings. I only desired in their incipiency to call attention to the danger. I had no idea that any brother who joined in the call intended any evil or wrong. But when men get away from the scripture order to engage in unscriptural meetings, they have no rule to guide them, save their own wisdom. "It is not in man that walketh to direct his steps." (Jer. 10: 23.) We are no wiser than others if we cut loose from God's order, I find no meeting of elders and preachers in the Bible, and I do not see what scriptural work an unscriptural meeting can do. Let us study the question and follow the divine order.

We quote from Brother Lipscomb again:

There is not the least difficulty in tracing back the Romish Church to the meetings of delegates from churches in districts to consult for the common good and for the better ordering of the churches and the spread of the gospel. No one can find anything else that sprang up soon after Paul's death. This did. He called it the "man of sin," "the mystery of iniquity," or lawlessness. It set aside God's law in its formation. If the Romish Church is the "man of sin" in its maturity, these organizations for these ends constituted the "man of sin" in its infancy, that was beginning to work while Paul was yet alive. I verily believe all these organizations of a general nature to supervise and supersede the churches of Christ, even if they are faithless, constitute the "man of sin." He had developed himself and thwarted every effort to return to the primitive and divine order since the days of Paul. I press the point, if this was not the "man of sin," in what form did he show himself?

In the Christian Baptist, Volume VI., page 531, A. Campbell said:

But, for my part, I do not love even an image of the Beast. I have no objection to congregations meeting in hundreds, at stated times, to sing God's praise and to unite their prayers and exhortations for the social good. But whenever they form a quorum, and call for the business of the churches, they are a popish calf, or muley, or a hornless stag, or something akin to the old grand Beast with seven heads and ten horns.

We know that Brethren Moser and Slater are good men and desire to adhere to God's order. They mean no harm in calling for a "preachers' meeting." The Gospel Advocate is not a church. It has no jurisdiction over anybody or anything except itself and its own business. But it would be untrue to God and would dishonor itself if it did not urge all to "abstain from every form of evil." It is best to stop the little beginnings of evil. As an individual, the Gospel Advocate claims the same right to be true to its convictions that Brother Moser does as an individual.

THE MAN GOD LET ALONE. BY S. H. HALL.

By the heading, "The Man God Let Alone," I do not want to be misunderstood as taking the position that God "let'him alone" in every sense of the word, for this the devil and all rebels to his government would have him do and be allowed to go unpunished. But God will not do this. He "will by no means clear the guilty" (Ex. 34: 7)—that is, allow them to go unpunished. But it is true that God abandons some souls, so far as redeeming them is concerned. They get into a condition that he can use them only as vessels of dishonor doomed to eternal damnation. Saul, the first king of Israel, became such.

Without raising questions for consideration that perhaps no soul could answer, we look only at the outstanding facts in Saul's case. Saul was once little in his own sight. (See 1 Sam. 10: 22; 15: 17.) He was "God's anointed." Whatever sins he committed that caused God to leave him must, therefore, represent the sins of God's children, and not the sins of the alien. In 1 Sam. 13: 8-14 we see his first sin. It seems that he felt a bit uneasy about Jehovah's protecting care and "forced himself therefore, and offered the burnt offering," which it was not his right to do. It is dangerous for us to go forward in offering sacrifices to God where we have no instructions. But his next sin is recorded in 1 Sam. 15. Read verses 1-23. God gave him a command as plain as day. It was not possible to have misunderstood it. But he allowed it to be changed—seemingly, a very little change. God commanded him: "Now go and smite Amalek, and utterly destroy all that they have, and spare them not; but slay both man and woman, infant and suckling, ox and sheep, camel and ass." But he spared Agag, the king, and the best of the sheep and of the oxen, and he said he meant to offer the sheep and oxen as sacrifices to God in Gilgal. But it repented Jehovah that he had made Saul king over Israel, and he purposed to put another, a man after his own heart, to be prince over his people. But stroyed him with the sword, and the minds of thoughtful men would have approved it, but he did not. There is love toward God's anointed, even when that anointed was a rebel before God. Nowhere did David condone Saul's sins. Nowhere do we find him saying that Saul did right when he had done wrong. But love is outstanding in him. It needs no argument to prove its existence.

It is just as bad to encourage others in their hatred for the brethren as it is to hate them yourself. How often can this be done when you do not so intend it! Get into the habit of rebuking such when you see it, and maybe you will be an instrument in God's hands to save a soul from this most-to-be-dreaded state or condition, and save yourself from any part of the responsibility of a soul's getting into such a state. I cannot see why our knowingly living in rebellion to what our Lord says to us about how we should treat our brother in Christ should not be just as dangerous as Saul's knowingly changing God's plain-as-day command to him. We should hate even the appearance of anything that is contrary to God's will. Never allow yourself to become a party to any man's sin, I care not what that sin may be and how closely you may have lived as an intimate friend to him.

BIBLE AND TRACT FUND.

BY S. F. MORROW.

I here give to the readers of the Gospel Advocate a letter recently received from Brother B. D. Morehead, one of our missionaries to Japan:

Dear Brother Morrow: I have been noticing your noble work of distributing Bibles, through the columns of the Gospel Advocate. I think you have started a very worthy movement. Ninety per cent of Japan are heathens. The Lord said "teach every creature." We fourteen missionaries can teach in person only a small per cent of the untaught. I think, Brother Morrow, you could bring Christ to many of these poor, benighted souls by cooperating with us. If you could supply us with Testaments printed in Japanese, we would make good use of them and sow the seed of the kingdom more readily than we can without them. I think the Lord is pleased with us most while we are spending our time and talent laboring in the ripest harvest. The harvest sure is ripe here. I make the above suggestion for your consideration. Take the matter to God.

I hope to hear from you soon relative to the Testaments.
Your brother in Christ,
B. D. MOREHEAD.

We are thankful that Brother Morehead has the right idea of extending the kingdom of our Lord and Master through the word. With the proper division of the word pasted in the front of each Testament, all who want to know the truth and their duty to God can easily learn it. The New Testament is the plainest book in all the world, it seems to me, when we sincerely want to know what to do to be saved. I feel certain many will be willing to help send the written word to Japan. I want to assure Brother Morehead that I am willing to do all I can to get some New Testaments to him and all his colaborers in Japan as soon as possible. Let all who want to send their help to Japan so state on their checks. We hope that many will respond to this call, as they are doing to the Bible and Testament fund for America. Brethren, do not wait for some one to come in person to see you. Our Lord and Master will in that great day demand an account of each one of us, our time and talent and means. And remember this, dear reader: "There is no creature that is not manifest in his sight: but all things are naked and laid open before the eyes of him with whom we have to do." (Heb. 4: 13.) Make all checks payable to the Gospel Advocate Company, stating for which fund.

We want all elders, preachers, and teachers to join us in putting out more Bibles and Testaments from the Gospel Advocate Company than was ever done at any previous Christmas. What better gift can you give than a Bible or Testament? The Gospel Advocate will make a good gift. I notice that Brother Allen is asking for five thousand new subscribers. Let us give him ten thousand. It can be so easily done if each one will do his or her duty. I received a letter from Mr. Jones, the head bookkeeper, stating that we would need for our Christmas trade many more Bibles and Testaments, for which I feel that all who love the Lord and his precious word will rejoice.

PITHY PARAGRAPHS.

BY J. G. ALLEN.

Some one has said that there are four kinds of church memebrs—the kicker, the slacker, the has-been, and the faithful few. To which class do you belong?

* * *

A good question for each member of the church to ask himself before framing a new resolution is: "What condition would the church be in to-day, if every member had acted toward it just like I have the past twelve months?"

"Work out your own salvation with fear and trembling," says the Lord; but doing nothing is the shortest road to perdition that men can travel. Which road are you on, brother? There are but two.

Solomon says that "there are six things" which the Lord hates—"yea, seven which are an abomination unto him." The seventh is the person that sows discord among brethren. Discord produces division, and the one whose act causes division in the church of Christ is a greater criminal in God's sight than the soldier who thrust a spear into the Savior's side, because he gave his natural body for the church, his spiritual body.

The Bible says that a presumptuous sin is a crime against God, punishable with eternal death; but how few stop long enough to consider its meaning! To presume is to accept a thing as true without any proof, and from a Bible standpoint it means anything a man does as service to God without Bible authority. Then, which side of this question is a man on that will substitute sprinkling and pouring for immersion, or the church member that allows himself to presume that he can remember our Lord just as well without assembling with the saints around the Lord's table on Lord's day as with them?

"The law of the Lord is perfect." David, in presenting another lesson, uses these words: "I have been young, and now am old." Just so I use the same words to stress another point, and can truly say that I, too, was once young, and now am older; but one of the greatest farces that I have ever witnessed is to hear a would-be teacher of God's word take as a text the words at the beginning of this paragraph and then begin a tirade about something that is not one time mentioned in the law of the Lord. Such is not only farcical, but it truly can be classed as a horrible tragedy.

ELEMENTS OF THE LORD'S SUPPER, BY DR. A. J. TRAIL.

I thought I would wait till the answer to my question on the individual cups had appeared in the Gospel Advocate, as they had been before this paper since March, 1925; but some have asked that I answer Brother Boles' question now, that he asked in his answer to my question in the Advocate of September 3, and also give scripture, chapter and verse, for my position on the elements used in the eating of the Lord's Supper, as he asked or granted me the privilege to do so. I believe the Scriptures are as plain on this subject as any subject.

Brother Boles asked if I could give chapter and verse for treating a case of typhoid fever. I will answer this by relating a little circumstance. I was once in conversation with a brother who believed that there was no harm in having instrumental music in the worship if we wanted it. I was pressing him for scripture and reminding him that "the man of God" is "furnished completely unto every good work." He said that there were lots of things that we could do that we could not give scripture for. He said: "Can I not pull off my hat and run down the street if I want to?" Now, I believe Brother Boles could answer this question more readily and to a better advantage than I, on the subject of instrumental music. I believe that the man could pull off his hat and run down the street to his heart's content, and there would be no harm in it; but when he did it as a religious act, I believe he would do wrong; and when he fixed it so all his brethren had to do the same thing, then I would protest.

Brother Boles, in the Advocate of September 3, says: "If our brother knows of a scripture which teaches how a Christian is to prepare the loaf (or bread) used in the Lord's Supper, I shall be glad to have him do so." I verily believe we ought to be able to give scripture, chapter and verse, for everything we do as a religious act of worship. How could we be "always ready to give a reason for the hope that is in us" if we could not do this? "For I received of the Lord that which also I delivered unto you, that the Lord Jesus in the night in which he was betrayed took bread; and when he had given thanks, he brake it, and said, This is my body, which is for you: this do in remembrance of me. In like manner also the cup, after supper, saying, This cup is the new covenant in my blood: this do, as often as ye drink it, in remembrance of me." (1 Cor. 11: 23-25.) Paul here declares that he received something of the Lord Jesus and that he delivered it to the Corinthians. Now, whatever this was that Paul received of the Lord and delivered to the Corinthians has been placed in the New Testament by divine authority. Paul said this thing that he received of the Lord Jesus took place in the night in which Jesus was betrayed, and the especial thing that happened the night in which he was betrayed, referred to by Paul, was, the Lord "took bread," etc., and "also the cup," etc.

Now let us go back to the account of his betrayal and see if we can learn anything about this "bread" and this "cup." "Now on the first day of unleavened bread the disciples came to Jesus, saying, Where wilt thou that we make ready for thee to eat the passover? And he said, Go into the city to such a man, and say unto him, The Teacher saith, My time is at hand; I keep the passover at thy house with my disciples. And the disciples did as Jesus appointed them; and they made ready the passover." (Matt. 26: 17-19.) Now, if we can find what the disciples did when they "made ready the passover," we surely can tell what the Lord Jesus told Paul to tell the Corinthians, because "as they were eating" (this passover) Jesus "took bread," etc., and "the cup," etc. I do not believe the Scriptures leave us in the dark here. "And they shall eat the flesh in that night, roast with fire, and unleavened bread." (Ex. 12: 8.) "Thou shalt eat no leavened bread with it; seven days shalt thou eat unleavened bread therewith. . . . And there shall be no leaven seen with thee in all thy borders seven days." (Deut. 16: 3, 4.)

Now, I believe that Brother Boles believes the Savior kept this law. The Savior said: "Till heaven and earth pass away, one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass away from the law, till all things be accomplished." (Matt. 5: 18.) Now, this is positive proof that the disciples used unleavened bread when they "made ready the passover." Hence, the Savior took unleavened bread when he "took bread," as there was to "be no leaven seen" in all their borders.

Now the question is as to how to make this unleavened bread. I do not believe we are left in the dark here. If we can find a law for making this bread, then we will know just what the disciples used for bread when "they made ready the passover," and, therefore, just what the Savior took when he "took bread," and what he said was his body when he said, "This is my body." "And when thou offerest an oblation of a meal offering baken in the oven, it shall be unleavened cakes of fine flour mingled with oil, or unleavened wafers anointed with oil." (Lev. 2: 4.) "And every oblation of thy meal offering shalt thou season with salt." (Verse 13.) Now, I believe that we are getting near the law for making this unleavened bread. It is to be made of "fine flour mingled with oil" and seasoned " with salt," because "every oblation . . . shalt thou season with salt;" and the passover supper was one of them. But we have a more detailed and a more specific law given as to the making of this bread in Numbers. "And Jehovah spoke unto Moses, saying, Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, When ye are come into the land of your habitations, which I give unto you, and will make an offering by fire unto Jehovah, a burnt offering, or a sacrifice, to accomplish a vow, or as a freewill offering, or in your set feasts, to make a sweet savor unto Jehovah, of the herd, or of the flock; then shall he that offereth his oblation offer unto Jehovah a meal offering of a tenth part of an ephah of fine flour mingled with the fourth part of a hin of oil: and wine for the drink offering, the fourth part of a hin, shalt thou prepare with the burnt offering, or for the sacrifice, for each lamb." (Num. 15: 1-5.) Wherever you find the formula for making this bread to be eaten with one lamb, the formula is the same. One-tenth of an ephah of fine flour equals in English measure one-tenth of one and fourninths bushels, equals nine and eleven-forty-fifths pints, mingled with one-fourth of a hin of oil. A hin in English measure equals six quarts, equals twelve pints; one-fourth of twelve pints equals three pints.

The passover supper was one of their "set feasts," and also a one-lamb feast; therefore, when the disciples "made ready the passover," they had a bread made of a little more than nine parts of fine flour mingled with three parts of oil, seasoned with salt. There is no escaping the conclusion that this is the bread that the Savior took when he "took bread" and said, "This is my body." If anything else is his body, we have no account of it. When we take anything else, we are not walking by faith; we are walking by what some one thinks will do. I will not take any kind of bread except a bread made of oil and fine flour. I would be afraid to do so.

Brother Boles, in answer to my question in the Advocate of September 3, says: "If he knows of a scripture which commands a certain kind of 'wine' or 'the fruit of the vine,' I should like for him to name the scripture." I do not recall but three kinds of wine described in the Bible. (1) "Strong wine." "In the holy place shalt thou cause the strong wine to be poured unto the Lord for a drink offering." (Num. 28: 7, King James Version). (2) "Good wine." (John 2: 10.) (3) "New wine." (Acts 2: 13.) But Peter understood that "new wine" would make drunk. "For these are not drunken, as ye suppose; seeing it is but the third hour of the day.' (Acts 2: 15.) I believe that either of these kinds of wine will be acceptable; but if I were made to say which kind, I would say "strong wine," because that is the kind that was to be used as a drink offering with the feast of one lamb, and the passover feast was a feast of one lamb, and also because the Corinthians, in an effort to carry out Paul's directions when he delivered to them what he had received of the Lord Jesus, got drunk on it. Paul, in correcting this, did not say, as some of our preachers would say to-day, that the Savior said "fruit of the vine," and that means grape juice. Paul's instructions are, "Take a little wine," and, "Not given to much wine." If the Savior ever referred to grape juice as "the fruit of the vine," I do not know where to find it. We know that wine is the "fruit of the vine," because the Savior so called it, because the drink offering they had at that "feast of the passover" "in the night in which he was betrayed" was one-fourth of a hin of wine-three pints. I believe the Savior understood that there were other products of the grape that might be called "the fruit of the vine." believe he took precaution and specified which fruit of the vine. "But I say unto you, I shall not drink henceforth of this fruit of the vine until that day when I drink it new with you in my Father's kingdom." Notice, the Savior said "this fruit of the vine." Which fruit of the vine? The wine they had there according to the law of the passover supper. In view of all this, I cannot take grape juice. I would be afraid to do so.

I think I have given chapter and verse for what I have said. Only a quotation from the Book will correct me, if I am wrong. If I am wrong, I will gladly be corrected.

We had a tent meeting in this county this last summer. I was much interested in it. I went out one Sunday. When the bread came to me, I broke (or rather tore) it. I knew it was not the bread that the Savior referred to when he said, "This is my body." I dropped it; I did not take it. I then noticed on the table, and in place of wine I saw a bottle of Welch's grape juice. I did not take it. I did not want to be a partaker in "adding to" or "taking from" "that which is written." Especially I did not want to help correct a mistake the Savior had made (?) when he told Paul to tell the Corinthians to use wine as their drink offering, or as an emblem of his blood.

PREACHERS AND PREACHING.

BY JOHN T. SMITHSON.

If any one should have the encomiums of others, it is the true preacher. If any message should demand the serious attention of any one, it is the preaching of the true gospel. If any one should be entirely excommunicated, it is a false preacher. If any message should be rejected with all the power of the soul, it is the preaching of the perverted gospel. Faithful preachers and their preaching with reference to salvation are crowned with the glories of heaven, but unfaithful preachers and their preaching with reference to ruin are shrouded with the pall of eternal damnation. Souls are saved and souls are lost by preachers and their preaching. The word of God teaches that he is pleased by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe. (See 1 Cor. 1: 21.) This fact makes the preacher responsible before God for what he preaches. It is a fact also that his preaching is only for the people who are responsible, for no preaching can affect the babies and the crazy people.

Jesus said to his disciples: "Beware of false prophets, who come to you in sheep's clothing, but inwardly are ravening wolves." (Matt. 7: 15.) This is a very vivid picture of false teachers, or preachers. When you think of a false preacher on the one hand, you think of a true preacher on the other hand. False preachers wear sheep's clothing. They come to deceive. They do deceive and beguile many. They are kind and gentle, good in appearance, and fair in speech. They make the impression that they are deeply spiritual-minded. They are very careful not to wound in any way the feelings of any one. They have been with the sheep-the saints of God-long enough to get fleece to hide their own hideous and vicious nature. They go in and out with the saints. By their false teaching, delivered in fair and smooth words, in flights of oratory and high-sounding phrases, flavored and sweetened with beautiful figures of speech, they satisfy their ravenous nature in devouring all the saints they can inoculate with the intoxicants of hell.

After the saints of God by false preachers have been turned against the manna from on high and have been fed from the fleshpots of the world, it is exceedingly difficult to get them to repent and return to their "first love." True and faithful preachers are often persecuted very bitterly by the members of the church who have been led astray by false preachers. The most ungrateful people on earth to-day are false teachers. The greatest persecution that the true preachers receive is from this source. Like Ahab, who accused the true prophet of God of troubling Israel, false preachers accuse true preachers of troubling the flock of God and of breaking the peace of Zion. They, with those whom they may influence, do not hesitate to call those who do not walk with them in the broad way "narrow-minded," "moss-backed," "old fogy," and by many other opprobious and demonic epithets do they rail upon the righteous. They often criticize in the most damaging way every effort for good They do all they can to discourage young preachers, saying they have no sense and that they can never preach.

Many churches have become so false by the teaching of false preachers that they do not want any preacher who will not preach to please them. There would not be a false church on earth to-day, if there were no false preachers. Hence, Jesus said: "Beware of false prophets." If all the children of God would heed this instruction, there would be no trouble in the house of God. All should realize that there is a judgment which is just and eternal, and that in it all must stand or fall. The only qualifications any church should look for in a preacher is whether he preaches the "whole counsel of God" and whether his life is in harmony with it. Beyond this and without this, it smacks of falsity. Whenever a church employs a preacher because he is handsome and dresses stylishly and is a jolly fellow and a good mixer, that church is a false one. Likewise, whenever a preacher preaches to please such a church, he is a false preacher. To any church that wants more than a godly man who preaches the "whole counsel of

We can now supply back volumes of "Elam's Notes" from the beginning—1921-22-23-24. We have put ourselves to some trouble and expense to supply these back numbers, exchanging new books for them; hence, we shall have to sell them so as to cover this expense and postage. These books will cost the ones who desire them one dollar each. Remember, they are secondhand books, but not worn or damaged. There was such a great demand for these back numbers that we put ourselves to this trouble to obtain them for those who want them.

Brown, Summit, Ga., November 29: "Price Billingsley began a tent meeting at this place on Sunday, November 8, and closed it on Monday night, November 26, with five additions to the one body, and many others, some of whom are of the denominations, were almost persuaded to give up error and accept the truth. Brother Billingsley is an earnest and faithful worker for the Master and preaches the truth uncompromisingly. Through Brother Billingsley's untiring efforts the church here has been greatly strengthened and edified. We bought a lot of desirable location some time ago, and this week we begin the erection of our house of worship. Pray for us as we build for the Master."

- M. S. Mason, Springfield, Mo., December 1: "I closed at Edwards Chapel and New Liberty recently without additions, but with fine interest and attention and much good seed sown. I am now at Burkhardt Cemetery, near Racine, Mo., with one addition to date."
- J. D. Boyd, Nashville, Tenn., November 30: "On the fifth Lord's day in November I preached at Bush's Chapel, in Sumner County, the home of our lamented brother, David M. Hamilton, my father in the gospel. The faithful little band standing for truth and right there is among many witnesses to the fact that 'he being dead yet speaketh.'"
- L. R. Wilson, Jackson, Tenn., November 30: "The meeting at the Central church of Christ, this city, resulted in four baptisms and one reclaimed. There were two baptisms at our last prayer-meeting services. All those coming to Jackson are cordially invited to worship with us. Our pretty new house is on Chester and Shannon Streets, only one block west and one south of Court Square."
- Cecil B. Douthitt, Martin, Tenn., December 2: "All phases of the work of the church are now being done by the church at Martin. We believe we are doing more for the cause of Christ than we could do through an organization larger than the local church. At all services audiences are large and attentive. Last Lord's day three young men confessed faith in Christ and were baptized immediately after the night services."
- T. B. Thompson, Lakeland, Fla., December 1: "Our work here in Lakeland moves along splendidly. The contract has been let for our new church home, which will be completed within the next four or five months, possibly. We expect to have a very nice and commodious building. Our meeting this winter will begin on the third Lord's day in January. C. M. Pullias will do the preaching. We have grown in the two years I have been here to a good-sized congregation, with weekly contributions which take care of our current expenses and out of which we hope to pay for our new building."
- J. D. Boyer, St. Louis, Mo., December 1: "We have baptized two at Spring and Blaine, this city, since last report. Brother Taylor, of Paragould, Ark., was with us last Sunday, and gave us some good lessons. We baptized one while he was here. We thank God for the way the church is prospering, and hope for greater efforts in the future. The church in East St. Louis, meeting for worship at the corner of Perdue and Caseyville Streets, has changed the time for meeting. They now meet for Bible study at 10 A.M., preaching at 11 A.M., and preaching at 7:30 P.M. each Lord's day. S. W. Bell, of St. Louis, is now doing the preaching."

Hugo Allmond preached at Jones Chapel last Lord's day. At the night service Mr. Mulford, Adventist, talked thirty minutes on God's promise to Abraham. However, he never quoted the promise and mentioned only the second coming of Christ. Brother Allmond followed, and agreed that Christ was coming again, but preached on our preparation for his coming. He then refuted the idea that the law has never been changed, using Heb. 1: 1-3; 2: 1-4; Matt. 17: 1-8; and various other scriptures. The last ten minutes he spoke on being right religiously, taking the name principally. Brother Allmond, by agreement with Mr. Mulford, was allowed to talk as long as he desired, and talked fifty minutes.

- H. H. Adamson, St. Marys, W. Va., December 2: "We are having a great meeting here. Sister Adamson and I are making our home with Brother and Sister T. Q. Martin. Brother Martin is a wonderful yokefellow. The meeting will likely close on December 6. May Heaven's blessings attend the Gospel Advocate."
- E. D. Martin, Haynesville, La., December 2: "I conducted two services with the Haynesville church last Lord's day, which were well attended. The church has prospects of a gradual and healthful growth, and we are laboring to the end that this congregation may become a radiating center from which the gospel may be sounded out to the destitute regions round about us. This is an oil town characterized by modern fads and fashion. The sects are also strong as to wealth, but the truth will prevail."

Will W. Slater, Bartlesville, Okla., December 1: "We had a good meeting at Douglas, Okla., in many respects. The church is not doing as well as it might. I ran across something new to me. There is only one more church in the town, and it is called 'the Church of Christ in Christian Union.' It is hindering the cause of Christ in Douglas, as I see it. I exchanged appointments with Brother Lawson yesterday. He was with the church here, while I preached in Tulsa. We had fine services. This work in Bartlesville is on the upward trend. Our attendance is slowly increasing, and we hope for greater things in the future. Pray for me."

Mrs. O. L. Massey, Memphis, Tenn., November 12, to E. A. Elam: "I want to tell you how much I appreciated and enjoyed your excellent article on 'What Is Teaching the Bible?' which was published in the Gospel Advocate of November 19. I wish it could be published in tract form and every member of the church could read it, especially the teachers. I have been a teacher for a number of years. I feel the weight of the responsibility resting on me, and am anxious to be able to make the class feel the great responsibility which rests on them also. May you live many years yet to enrich the world with the sound teaching that flows from your pen."

R. E. L. Taylor, Decherd, Tenn., November 30: "I was at Rossville, Ga., on the second and third Lord's days in this month, and preached to a large audience at every service. There was one addition at the last service. The Rossville congregation is getting along well. They are alive spiritually. I was at Antioch, in Coffee County, Tenn., on the fourth Lord's day, and preached to three good audiences. I was at Tullahoma on the sixth Lord's day, and preached at eleven o'clock. There was a large audience present. Everything seems to be moving along well under the leadership of Brethren McQuiddy and Moore. Both are splendid teachers, contending for the New Testament teaching without addition or subtraction. The Bible school was well attended, and all seemed to take much interest in the Bible study."

W. M. Oakley, Cookeville, Tenn., November 27: "At our all-day Thanksgiving services yesterday we had the pleasure of reporting seventy-seven additions and two new congregations in Putnam County this year. Since March, 1923, there have been two hundred and forty additions and six new congregations started in the county. The congregations of the county were invited to be the guests of the Cookeville congregation on Thanksgiving Day, and notwithstanding it was a rainy day, there was a great crowd, many congregations being represented. J. Pettey Ezell, J. D. Jones, Sterling Turner, C. Colman, and the writer made talks. A dinner fit for a king, prepared by the good sisters of Cookeville, was served under the tent near by. There were many informal talks in the afternoon relative to continuing the tent work in the county, etc. This was a great day long to be remembered by all."

J. G. Allen, 1412 Baltimore Avenue, Muskogee, Okla., December 3: "We had a delightful day yesterday at C and Kankakee Church. We had an overflow audience at night to hear a sermon preached by E. M. Borden in the Pearl and Bryan Streets Church in Dallas, Texas. The sermon was not so distinct at times, but the singing was quite distinct and was as good as I ever heard. I trust that many other congregations will put on like programs as did Dallas, so that all will have an opportunity to contrast the Lord's music (vocal) with the Pope's music (instrumental); and I doubt not that only a few will fail to appreciate the superiority of the Lord's and cut loose from the Pope's. I am arranging dates for some protracted-meeting work outside of this city next year. Any congregation that can use me in this kind of work will please write me, and, if possible, we will arrange dates."

MR. CLARK'S QUESTIONS ANSWERED.

BY F. B. SRYGLEY.

I was handed recently a sheet called "A Few Questions from Clark's Campbellite Catcher." Across the margin of this sheet in large letters were these words: "No Campbellite preacher has answered these questions." I do not know whether any Campbellite preacher has ever tried to answer these questions or not, but I am willing (though not a Campbellite preacher) to do my best to answer them, not especially for Mr. Clark's benefit, but for the benefit of any who might desire to be benefited by an answer to them. I do not suppose that Mr. Clark wants them answered or that any answer would benefit him. The questions are not numbered, but there are fifteen of them, and I will number them as I reproduce them here, and then I will at least know when I get through with the job.

1. "Was John's baptism Christian baptism?" No. The Bible nowhere says it was; but it was authorized by Jehovah, and it was, therefore, while in force, God's baptism as well as John's baptism.

2. "Who baptized Christ?" John baptized Jesus before he was called "the Christ."

3. "Did Christ have Christian baptism?" No. He had John's baptism, or God's baptism.

4. "Is Christ the head of the church of which you are a member?" Yes, but he is not the head of the Baptist Church, if it was built before the resurrection of Christ. "Which he wrought in Christ, when he raised him from the dead, and made him to sit at his right hand in the heavenly places, far above all rule, and authority, and power, and dominion, and every name that is named, not only in this world, but also in that which is to come: and he put all things in subjection under his feet, and gave him to be head over all things to the church, which is his body, the fullness of him that filleth all in all." (Eph. 1: 20-23.) Since God gave Christ to be the head of the church after his resurrection and ascension, he could not have been head of the Baptist Church, if it was built before that time.

5. "Has your head received one kind of baptism and your body another?" No. Both have received the baptism that was authorized of God when it was performed.

6. "Has your head received John's baptism and your body Christian baptism?" Both have received the baptism that was divinely authorized.

7. "Did the apostles have Christian baptism?" No, but they received the baptism that God authorized when they were baptized.

8. "Did John the Baptist baptize the apostles?" I understand he did.

9. "If the apostles did not have Christian baptism, how could they administer it to others?" They had the baptism that God authorized when they were baptized, and they taught others to be baptized with the baptism that God through Christ authorized. To show that this question is based upon a fallacy, let me ask a question. If John did not have John's baptism, how could be administer it to others? John was not baptized at all, and yet he baptized many, and it was perfectly acceptable to God in John's day. John certainly was not the same kind of Baptist as those we have now.

10. "Were not the apostles the first set in the church?" Yes, but they were not set in the Baptist Church, for Baptists claim that the Baptist Church was built before Christ ascended to heaven; and the Bible says that he gave some apostles after his ascension. "(Now this, He ascended, what is it but that he also descended into the lower parts of the earth? He that descended is the same also that ascended far above all the heavens, that he might fill all things.) And he gave some to be apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers." (Eph. 4: 9-11.)

11. "Are we not built upon Jesus Christ and the apostles as a church foundation if we are in the church of Christ?" The church was "built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Christ Jesus himself being the chief corner stone." (Eph. 2: 20.) But if this church was built before the death of Judas (and the Baptists teach that it was), then it was founded upon a devil; for Jesus said, "One of you is a devil."

12. " Does not the Bible say that there is 'one Lord, one faith, one baptism?'" Yes, and there is but one.

13. " Has the head, the chief corner stone, the foundation, and the first members set in one kind of baptism and the rest of the church another?" No, they all had the baptism that God authorized when they were baptized.

14. "According to Campbellite doctrine of baptismal salvation, please tell us how God could save Floyd Collins, or any other sinner, in a dry cave. Do you really believe that the all-powerful Christ is powerless to save unless you antiorgan Campbellites have the sinner in the water to help God complete the job?" I am not concerned about Campbellite doctrine or baptismal salvation, but I am concerned about the gospel of Christ. Paul said: "For I am not ashamed of the gospel: for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth; to the Jew first, and also to the Greek." (Rom. 1: 16.) I do not limit the power of Christ to save, but Christ himself has limited his power to save to the gospel. Would Mr. Clark dare promise any man, in a dry cave or out of it, that he could be saved without the gospel? Or would he promise any man that he could be saved without believing the gospel? I think not. Could Floyd Collins believe the gospel without hearing it? Could he hear it in the bottom of a dry cave? But if he were out of a dry cave and Mr. Clark was the chance to preach it to him, I doubt that he would do it. Jesus said to the apostles: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to the whole creation. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that disbelieveth shall be condemned." If Mr. Clark and all his kind would preach the gospel as Christ commissioned the apostles to preach it, fewer men would neglect to obey it till they get in the bottom of a dry cave. I do not have the penitent believer in the water to help God save him, but I go down into the water with him to help him complete his obedience to God.

15. "Can you not see that there is something wrong and rotten with your doctrine and denomination which forces you to consign to hell such noble Christian characters as W. J. Bryan?" I have no denomination, neither do I believe the apostles ever encouraged any, and I do not see anything wrong or rotten with the doctrine taught by Peter when he said: "Repent ye, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ unto the remission of your sins." (Acts 2: 38.) I do not see anything wrong or rotten about the doctrine of Ananias when he said to the believing penitent, Saul: "And now why tarriest thou? arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on his name." (Acts 22: 16.) I see nothing wrong or rotten about Paul's doctrine when he said: "Or are ye ignorant that all we who were baptized into Christ Jesus were baptized into his death? We were buried therefore with him through baptism into death: that like as Christ was raised from the dead through the glory of the Father, so we also might walk in newness of life." 6: 3, 4.) Much as I esteemed Mr. Bryan, God forbid that I should ever try to change God's word or cease to believe and teach it in order to save him. I am sorry for Mr. Bryan or any one else who will not accept and obey the plain commands of the gospel, but I believe God.

Now I have answered all of the gentleman's questions, and I do not see why some Campbellite preacher could not have answered them. He could if he had known how.

WORDS OF ENCOURAGEMENT.

BY F. W. SMITH.

The Gospel Advocate was founded and perpetuated by men whose chief aim was to uphold and propagate the gospel of Jesus Christ unmixed with the doctrines, traditions, and speculations of men. This was no little undertaking in the midst of the popular establishments of sectarianism, upheld and defended by the learned clergy with aged creeds and confessions of faith as human tests of orthodoxy and church fellowship.

The very prime of Alexander Campbell's most eventful life was devoted to a vigorous opposition to "the kingdom of the clergy" and all forms of departures from the simplicity of the gospel. His whole life was spent in a storm of controversy with those contending for the doctrines and traditions of men. Such men as Ben Franklin, Tolbert Fanning, David Lipscomb, E. G. Sewell, and many others took up the fight and carried it on until their tongues and pens were silenced by death.

The Gospel Advocate has always stood foursquare against all forms of departure from the teaching of God's word, and it would be the basest of betrayals upon the part of those now conducting the paper to depart from the policy of its founders. Its former editors were unswervingly committed to the defense of the word of God, regardless of all consequences to themselves or the Gospel Advocate. How they labored to maintain the purity of the gospel and the church in its worship and work is a matter of recorded history; and how they were criticized and many times abused are also matters of recorded history.

Brother David Lipscomb was caricatured as an old woman with a broom trying to sweep back the tides of the ocean. A prominent society man actually expressed the wish for Brother Lipscomb's death in order that a human organization might flourish in Tennessee. The writer heard the speech in which this wish was expressed. But that same society man has lived to repudiate the ecclesiasticism he aided in building up, the very thing against which Brother Lipscomb warned the churches and preachers.

When we receive words of commendation and encouragement by true and able men because of our contention for the lifelong principles and policy of the Gospel Advocate, it gives us heart to continue the work, although it may bring upon us, as it did upon those brave men once at its helm, the censure and criticisms of opposers and enemies to the truth. With this feeling, it gives us genuine pleasure to publish the following indorsement by one of the truest and bravest men that ever lived:

I have just read in this week's Gospel Advocate [November 19] your editorial on "A Wrong Classification," I need not tell you that I enjoyed it. I have told you more than once that I enjoy all that you write. I do not regard the Advocate nor any one of its writers as infallible, nor have I ever heard of any one of its writers even interesting to the deal of the production of the producti intimating a claim to freedom from mistakes. Nor do I enjoy, in the least, the insinuations that its editorial force is a self-constituted court to pass upon what must be believed and taught. I have felt the sting of such insinuations; for they are sometimes made against the paper which I have, in a humble way, tried to help edit for a number of years.

which I have, in a number way, brief to number of years.

But for the hope of doing good, I should never write a line for publication. When I take up my pen to write an editorial, I ask God's blessing upon the effort. My aim is to please God, not men.

I would that all preachers of the gospel and writers for religious papers would learn to hold their opinions as religious papers would learn to hold their opinions as private property and not disturb the brethren by proclaiming opinions.

I remember years ago to have had the lamented Mc-Garvey and Grubbs as guests in our humble home. They ate dinner with us and remained in our home until six ate dinner with us and remained in our home until six o'clock that evening. It was an afternoon long to be remembered by me, Brother McGarvey did most of the talking, and dwelled at length upon the history intervening between the Old and the New Testaments. He had much to say about the Jewish nation. He spoke of the Zionist movement, an effort of the Jews to own Palestine. He gave it as his opinion that the Jews would perhaps again control Palestine and would attempt to reëstablish the temple worship. But, said he: "No Jew now living knows that he is a descendant of the priestly family. They expect God to point out to them the priest. Their being mistaken in this expectation may lead them to see that pect God to point out to them the priest. Their being mistaken in this expectation may lead them to see that they have rejected the great High Priest, to reconsider the teaching of their own Scriptures, to accept Christ, and to become a great force for evangelizing the world." This was his opinion expressed around the fireside; but I never heard him advocate it in his classes, nor did I never heard him teaching it from the pulpit ever hear of his teaching it from the pulpit.

These straightforward words regarding the misrepresentation of our lamented brother, J. W. McGarvey, are from the pen of Brother T. Q. Martin, a man who sat at the feet of Brother McGarvey for years. Not only does Brother Martin defend the gross misrepresentation of Brother McGarvey's teaching regarding the Jews, but he sounds a timely warning against unnecessary and hurtful speculation.

Neither from T. Q. Martin's tongue or pen does any one ever hear speculation regarding unfulfilled prophecies or anything else pertaining to the word of God. He is one of the ablest preachers and most successful soul winners before the people to-day, holding meeting after meeting in the same communities, and yet he always finds plenty of material in the Bible for his sermons without speculating.

So many people are largely animal, giving but a paltry remnant to spiritual things. Their immortal nature is atrophied. Their life is in the fleeting possessions that they imagine they have made their own; but a man's life does not consist in the things which he possesses, for he cannot live by bread alone. It is the part of wisdom to foster the imperishable life and the ever-blest life. Then our life is independent of environment; and it is dependent upon the life of Christ in us, one with him through faith and love. So our life partakes of the everlasting life of the everlasting God and Father of our spirit, who is the same "yesterday, to-day, and forever."-A. William Lewis.

"A MOST EXCELLENT WAY."

BY E. A. ELAM.

Let us continue the consideration of making and maintaining peace.

Let us repeat with all emphasis possible that all who respect the will of God as it should be respected—all who "tremble at his word" (Isa. 66: 5), all who will to do his will (John 7: 17), and all who love the Lord—will make and maintain peace. Where "the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace" does not prevail, there is in some disobedience to God; there some church members prefer contention, strife, and division to unity and peace.

Where the Authorized Version says, "a more excellent way," the Revised Version says, "a most excellent way show I unto thee." This way is above all other ways of making and maintaining peace, because it is God's way. God says: "Follow after love." Love is the way—God's way.

In this way, as in all others, God's thoughts are not our thoughts, neither are our ways his ways. But as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are God's ways in making and maintaining peace, as in everything else, higher than our ways, and his thoughts than our thoughts. (See Isa. 55: 8, 9.) Let us follow this way.

One declaration of God on this subject, as on all other subjects, is worth more and should go further than all the reasoning and conclusions of the wisest men on earth. The reasoning and conclusions of the wisest men on earth contrary to the teaching of God on this subject, as well as on all other subjects, are worse than nothing, because they deceive and lead to destruction.

Just as Isa. 55: 8, 9 is quoted, emphasized, and applied in studying and teaching other subjects in the Bible, it should be quoted and emphasized and applied in studying the great duty of making and preserving peace, of coming to "the unity of the faith," and of keeping "the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace." The church of God should study and apply and teach these lessons. If not, who should?

God's way of peace and unity, even as he and Christ are one, is the only way of reaching this inestimably great consummation,

Not only so, but all who fear God and respect his word, as declared above, will follow this way of love, unity, and peace. Because, "this is the love of God, that we keep his commandments, and his commandments are not grievous." (1 John 5: 3.)

Do not the following passages have any meaning or carry any weight?

And he gave some to be apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers; for the perfecting of the saints, unto the work of ministering, unto the building up of the body of Christ; till we all attain unto the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a full-grown man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ: that we may be no longer children, tossed to and fro and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, in craftiness, after the wiles of error; but speaking truth in love, may grow up in all things into him, who is the head, even Christ; from whom all the body fitly framed and knit together through that which every joint supplieth, according to the working in due measure of each several part, maketh the increase of the body unto the building up of itself in love. (Eph. 4: 11-16.)

This is a most comprehensive passage, and, while we have not space to consider particularly at this time every thought presented in it, we should realize that every thought is the thought of God. We should remember also, from Isa, 55: 8, 9, how much higher God's thoughts are than man's thoughts.

These gifts were bestowed by Christ for the purpose named: "The perfecting of the saints, unto the work of ministering, unto the building up of the body of Christ." These gifts were by inspiration and were to continue until the complete revelation of God's will had been made—that is, "till we all attain unto the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a full-grown man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ." There is no further revelation to be made, no other knowledge of the Son of God to be given, and nothing else to be believed; this brings all to "the unity of the faith," that the church may attain "unto a full-grown man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ." The church can learn no more, can grow no larger, and can do no more work than this revelation of God's will made through these inspired teachers makes known.

What does this revelation accomplish? "That we may be no longer children," but as newborn babes, feeding upon this spiritual food, may grow thereby unto salvation; that we may be steadfast and unmovable in the teaching of Christ, and may not be "tossed to and fro and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, in craftiness, after the wiles of error;" but, on the other hand, according to this revelation of God's will, by "speaking truth in love, may grow up in all things into him, who is the head, even Christ."

The church is this body. All Christians, young or old, weak or strong, are individually, or severally, members of this body. Christ is the head. The head directs the body in every movement. God has set the members in this body, as it has pleased him, not as it pleases man. Man cannot organize this body; God has done that. The whole body is fitly or properly framed and knit together "through that which every joint supplieth." There can be no closer union or greater unity. "Each several part," or individual member, working in due measure, or each member serving in his respective place to the full extent of his capacity, the body makes increase "unto the building up of itself in love."

In studying this question of "the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace" and how to follow and to keep peace, let us note with earnest and devout consideration that the instruction, edification, and peace of all, and not the condemnation of any, must be sought. May we be impressed with such expressions as "speaking truth," not something else; "speaking truth in love," not in some other spirit; "building up" this body, not some other body or organization—building it up, too, "in love;" "attain unto the unity of the faith;" and "the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ." This is the Lord's prescribed way of instructing, edifying, and making increase of the church.

All preachers, elders, and teachers in the church must learn these things, and must learn, too, that they are not prosecuting attorneys or criminal lawyers, appointed by the Lord to hunt up and to prosecute and to condemn to perdition all who make mistakes and who fall short at present of perfect knowledge of the truth.

Yes, indeed, speak the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth ["Thy word is truth"]; declare "the whole counsel of God," "all things that pertain unto life and godliness," and nothing more; but do so in the gentleness, firmness, kindness, and love which God enjoins.

"Love suffereth long, and is kind." It is not moved by envy. It is free from self-esteem or egotism, from vainglory, and from all disposition to boast. It is not puffed up with pride of opinion or with pride of any kind.

The Corinthians were "puffed up for the one against the other." (1 Cor. 4: 6.) Some were for one preacher against another preacher; and where this is the case, there can be no peace. Those among whom jealousy and strife exist are "carnal" and "walk after the manner of men." Such cannot feed upon the meat of the gospel. They cannot digest and assimilate it. They must be fed upon milk, if they take any food at all. (1 Cor. 3: 1-11.)

Love is not wise in its own conceits, but is humble and meek and lowly. It seeks not its own, but is unselfish. It does not allow itself to become provoked, and does not seek to hide its wrath behind its so-called "righteous indignation." It does not hunt up evil in others or keep an account of evil done by others against itself; it overcomes evil with good. It never rejoices over the mistakes and misfortunes and sins of others. Thus it goes on to the end of the list. (1 Cor. 13.)

"Love never faileth." It will never cease to exist; neither will any who love God and men fail to obey God or to treat men—brethren, neighbors, and enemies—as God directs.

Then, to love God and men, to seek the edification of all, to "speak truth in love," and to accomplish all these spiritual ends is not to be forever disputing with one another, to measure sword or to be in a war of words with one another, or to be forever combating the theories of others. This begets, too, a wrong conception of the truth and a wrong spirit in others. Like begets like. I learned that from a story about an echo.

The sun drives back the darkness. It comes with no bluster, blast of trumpets, or braggadocio; but in silence and brightness and beauty it shines with steady power upon the world. "Even let your light shine before men; that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father who is in heaven."

Again, Paul says to Timothy, a true, faithful, strong, heroic, and well-informed young preacher: "The Lord's servant must not strive." Paul did not here mean in mortal combat or carnal warfare; but, as stated in the previous verses, "foolish and ignorant questions," which God has not revealed, produce strife and must be refused. All such questions are refused by all who believe in Christ and implicitly obey God. Over these questions God's servants must not strive. As a rule, all such questions can be dismissed very easily by informing congregations that God has forbidden any contention over them, and, therefore, no time must be wasted on them or the hearts of God's people disturbed over them.

Carnal warfare is forbidden, but not by this passage.

Should it become necessary to deal with such questions and with "them that oppose themselves," the Lord tells how it must be done: not by striving, but by being "gentle toward all, apt [competent] to teach, forbearing, in meekness correcting them that oppose themselves; if peradventure God may give them repentance unto the knowledge of the truth, and they may recover themselves out of the snare of the devil, having been taken captive by him unto his will." (2 Tim. 2: 23-26.)

Some are in strife because of foolish and untaught questions and because of ignorance of the will of God, and they have been taken captive by the devil unto his will. They need instruction, repentance, and to be recovered out of the snare of the devil. The question is, how to deal with such and how to accomplish this good work? Not by abuse and strife, but by gentleness, by proper instruction, forbearance, and meekness.

It requires more knowledge of the truth, more faith, more courage, and more love to be gentle, forbearing, and meek than to be otherwise.

We should be familiar with Paul's solemn charge to Timothy to "preach the word." And he adds: "Be urgent in season, out of season; reprove, rebuke, exhort, with all long-suffering and teaching." In preaching the word, we should not overlook the command to be "urgent in season, out of season." While we "reprove, rebuke, and exhort," we should not fail to do so "with all long-suffering and teaching."

It is a beautiful and great thing to teach all that God says, and to do so in the love and spirit which he prescribes. May the Lord have mercy upon us and help us.

A WORTHY CAUSE—BROTHER J. W. SHEPHERD'S WORK IN RICHMOND, VA.

BY E. A. ELAM.

A good sister, for a small congregation in Mississippi, has sent us a check for twenty-five dollars, to be used in preaching the gospel as our judgment dictates.

In the multitude of affairs I am unable to-day to put my hand upon the letter and, hence, to give the name of the congregation. I use this means of acknowledging the receipt of this money and in commending this worthy deed of this congregation.

Knowing the worthiness and self-sacrifice of Brother Shopherd in his efforts to preach the gospel in Richmon, Va., and to build up the church there, where there are only a dozen or so striving to worship God simply and only "as it is written," and the crying need of the gospel in the surrounding country, we have forwarded this check with pleasure to him. Brother Shepherd is not only self-sacrificing and faithful, but in every way, and especially in his knowledge of the truth, quite able to do this work.

This small and struggling congregation in Richmond is determined to go ahead with their work, having bargained for a church house, which they are now striving to pay for with their own contributions and with what assistance they can induce others in various congregations, whose membership is large, to give. The emphasis is on "give."

We hope in this case a hint to the wise may be sufficient and that many others may follow the example of this congregation in Mississippi.

I trust this sister and this congregation may see this

OUERY DEPARTMENT

BY H. LEO BOLES

Two Sundays in each month I preach at places where there are no congregations of Christians only. Is it wrong under these circumstances to miss partaking of the Lord's Supper?—X.

Yes. No one should violate a principle in trying to do that which is right. It is never right to do wrong in order that good may be done. Paul says that we should not do evil that good may come. His language is as follows: "And why not (as we are slanderously reported, and as some affirm that we say), Let us do evil, that good may come? whose condemnation is just." (Rom. 3: 8.) It would be better to eat the Lord's Supper at the places where the preaching is done. We are to teach by precept and example, and the example of eating the Lord's Supper would help to impress the teaching of God's word on the people. I do not see how a preacher of the gospel could impress very forcibly the teaching of God's word, when at the same time he is violating the word of God himself by neglecting to eat the Lord's Supper on the first day of the week. It is not necessary to have what is usually called an "organized congregation" before you can eat the Lord's Supper. God's children have the privilege of eating at the Lord's table, and they cannot please the Lord when they neglect this.

Please explain (1) Luke 21: 24-26; (2) Ps. 150, especially verse 4.—X.

1. The scripture for which an explanation is asked is as follows: "And they shall fall by the edge of the sword, and shall be led captive into all the nations: and Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled. And there shall be signs in sun and moon and stars; and upon the earth distress of nations, in perplexity for the roaring of the sea and the billows; men fainting for fear, and for expectation of the things which are coming on the world: for the powers of the heavens shall be shaken." (Luke 21: 24-26.) The prophecy of this chapter embraces three chief points. First, the destruction of Jerusalem; second, the period intervening between that; third, the coming of Christ. Verse 24 clearly has reference to the destruction of Jerusalem, which took place about A.D. 70. Verse 25 seems to indicate the second coming of Christ. Josephus enumerates two hundred and fifty-seven thousand six hundred and sixty who were slain during the war against Jerusalem and multitudes that could not be numbered who perished in the siege. He also speaks of ninety-seven thousand Jews who were taken captive into various provinces.

2. The psalm referred to reads as follows: "Praise him with timbrel and dance: praise him with stringed instruments and pipe. Praise him with loud cymbals: praise him with high-sounding cymbals. Let everything that hath breath praise Jehovah. Praise ye Jehovah." (Ps. 150: 4-6.) This psalm describes worship for the praising of God under the law of Moses, or the Jewish dispensation. It has no reference to the Christian's praising God under the law of Christ. It is a perversion of the Scriptures to refer it to the Christian age. Just as well quote the scriptures in the Old Testament which give direction for the burning of incense in the worship under the law of Moses as to quote the scriptures referring to instruments of music and applying them to the Christian age. The burning of incense and the use of instruments of music both were used in the worship under the law of Moses, but neither is to be used under the law of Christ. Christ, the Holy Spirit, and the apostles and early Christians left out both the burning of incense and the use of instruments in worship, and he who brings them into the Christian worship does so without any authority from heaven. It is just as consistent to bring the burning of incense into Christian worship as it is to bring the use of instruments of music into the worship. The Catholics bring both into the worship; but Protestants who use instruments of music in the worship reject the burning of incense. There is as much authority for one as for the other. There is no authority for bringing either one into Christian worship.

Please answer this in the Gospel Advocate, for many of us certainly want to know the reason. Why do you, Brother Srygley, and others now (formerly you did not) talk about your R. V. Bible? Have you not faith in the old Bible? Who said we were clamoring or ready to push about a half commentary on the common people? Every little two-by-four preacher comes out here with his little R. V. now. After preaching the word as written for twenty-five years, as you first found it, why not now?—W. G. BREWER, Walter Hill, Tenn.

Much confusion arises from a lack of knowing the correct use of terms. Our brother should remember that the New Testament was written largely in the Greek language and was translated from the Greek into the Latin and from the Latin into the English and other languages. Many of the translations that we have now were made from the Greek language into the English language. A version is a translation from one of the ancient languages into another language, a modern language.

Versions have relative value. Some are better than others; some express more clearly the thought than others. The King James Version, or Authorized Version, was translated in 1611 from the Greek into the English. The Revised Version was translated in the nineteenth century from the Greek into the English. Any one who understands the English language of to-day and who knows something of the English language four hundred years ago knows that there is some difference in the language which has been brought about by usage. The scholarship of to-day is better than the scholarship of four hundred years ago; the scholars of to-day have access to manuscripts and resources which were not known four hundred years ago. Therefore, the translation or version of today is better in many respects than the version which was made four hundred years ago. The American Revised Version is superior in many respects to the Authorized Version, or King James Version. It is dense ignorance on the part of any one to claim that one is leaving "the old Bible" simply because he quotes from the Revised Version. One is no more giving up "faith in the old Bible" when he quotes from the Revised Version than the one who quotes from the King James Version. It seems to me that loyalty to the truth of God demands that we take the best version of it that we can get.

Is it out of God's wishes, or is it wrong, to take up a collection for the relief of a minister, using the hat? If so, how?—R. W. CRAIG, Duffee, Miss.

No. It is always right to do right in the right way. It matters not how we "take up the collection." It does not matter whether this collection be taken in a hat, pan, basket, or any other receptacle. The important thing is to encourage God's people to be liberal in their help for any worthy cause. God's people should be taught to support the preaching of the gospel and help the poor. "But let him that is taught in the word communicate unto him that teacheth in all good things." (Gal. 6: 6.) It is wrong to quibble over insignificant and foolish questions. The Lord's people should employ their time in more useful things.

HOWELL-CLARK DEBATE. BY ALLEN PHY.

This debate was conducted at Cloverport, in Hardeman County, Tenn., beginning on November 24 and continuing four days, between F. O. Howell (Christian), of Jackson, Tenn., and John R. Clark (Missionary Baptist), of Martin, Tenn. The general church questions were discussed. Clark affirmed the first two days, and Brother Howell was in the affirmative the last two.

The audiences were large, and the attention and demeanor were splendid. Mr. W. A. West was Mr. Clark's moderator, and the writer kept time for Brother Howell.

Mr. Clark utterly failed to prove one point of Baptist doctrine, which was in dispute. His attempt at trying to prove Baptist succession was little more than a gesture. Brother Howell showed that the first Baptist Church of any kind was started at Amsterdam, Holland, in 1608, by John Smyth. His attempt at other points of Baptist doctrine, such as apostasy, close communion, voting on members, baptism because of remission of sins, and total depravity, resulted in an absolute failure on his part. He made his hardest fight on the apostasy question, but was buried under an avalanche of scriptural quotations which ruined his position. Mr. Clark made frequent use of such expressions as "Campbellite." "antiorgan Campbellites," "organ Campbellites," and other expressions of like nature. It must be said to Clark's credit that he has the courage to try to defend his doctrine. Much of his speeches in this discussion were pointless harangues.

Brother Howell ably met his attempts, and proved his proposition to the entire satisfaction of the brethren. He showed by many unanswerable arguments that the church of Christ was established on the day of Pentecost. He also showed the design of baptism in a forceful manner. In fact, the truth was ably sustained on all points discussed. The difference between Christians and Baptists is clearly before the people who heard his debate.

Good will prevailed throughout the discussion, and it is believed much good will be the result.

Love never turns back because it sees a mountain or hears a lion roar. God can use a weak man, but cannot find a place for a lazy one.

BIBLE CROSS WORD PUZZI

THE large cross which dominates the four smaller ones in this seventeen-square diagram breaks it up so that there are few long words, but many of average length and difficulty. Two eight-letter words on each side column are the longest, and none of these is hard to get. But all in all, this is one of the most interesting puzzles in the book and would be an excellent one for a group to work on together.

How to Solve a Cross Word Puzzle ○ 1925 THE J.C.W. CO.

© 1925 The J.C.W. CO. How to Solve a Cross World Puzzle

To work out this puzzle, the white spaces must be filled with letters forming words answering to the various horizontal and vertical definitions given below. The horizontal and vertical words are not the same, but each gives a clue to the other. The first letter of each word is indicated by a number which refers to the definitions listed below.

It is advisable to first fill in, in both directions, those words which you know to be correct. These will furnish hints to those words which you do not know or had merely guessed at. When the puzzle is solved correctly, the letters in the white spaces will spell words both horizontally and vertically. The black spaces are the blind spots of the puzzle and merely form the pattern, incidentally designating the ends and beginnings of the words contained in the puzzle.

FROM THE BRETHREN.

Broken Arrow, Okla., November 30.

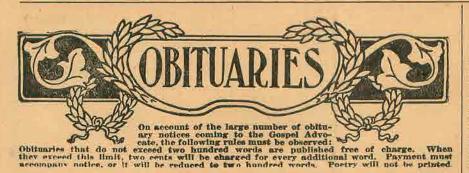

Brother T. W. Croom, of Canadian, Okla., preached for the church here on Saturday night and on Sunday and Sunday night, with good audiences at all three services. One lady was restored to fellowship and the church was greatly strengthened. Brother Croom promised to come back on the fourth Lord's day in December. If any one that has friends or relatives in this country who are members of the church will notify me, I will be glad to hunt them up and encourage them to come to church. We are planning to buy a lot and build a house right away. Any loyal preaching brother passing this way will find a hearty welcome.—Peyton A. Stout.

Rector, Ark., December 3.—I have just returned from Bark Camp, Mo., where I have been attending a debate between Brother A. D. Dies, of Senath, Mo., and A. M. Baker, of Koshkonong, Mo. The discussion continued twelve nights. During the first six nights Brother Dies affirmed: "The church of Christ, of which I, A. D. Dies, am a member, is scriptural in name, origin, doctrine, and practice, and the Scriptures so teach." Then Baker affirmed that "the Reorganized Church of the Latter-day Saints is Baker affirmed that "the Reorganized Church of the Latter-day Saints is the true church of Christ in name, origin, and practice." Brother Dies made a splendid defense of the church of Christ and the Christian religion, refuting every argument of the Latter-day Saints.—R. E. Black.

GAMMILL.

Joseph J. Gammill was born on May 15, 1851, and died on October 24, 1925, at his home, near Millville, Ark. He was married on October 5, 1873, He was married on October 5, 1873, and was the father of seven children, three of them being now dead. His wife, one son, and three daughters are left to mourn his death. Brother Gammill obeyed the gospel in early life and had been an elder of the church at Salem for many years. He was loved and honored by the church and had a host of friends. He was a kind and loving husband and father, a true friend, a most excellent citikind and loving husband and father, a true friend, a most excellent citizen, and a loyal Christian. The congregation at Salem will greatly miss him, yet his influence will continue to be felt. May God bless and comfort his sorrowing family, and may they realize that their loss is his gain. "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints." The writer tried to speak words of consolation to the sorrowing family and warn the world of their impending fate.

JOHN A. COOK.

MILLER.

In the early morning hours of April 29, 1925, the death angel came into our home and claimed for its victim my darling mother, Mrs. Alice Miller. Though her death was expected, it seemed almost more than we could endure; but we sorrow not as those who have no hope. Mother obeyed the gospel when about fourteen years of age, being baptized by Brother C. E. W. Dorris. She leaves to her children a rich legacy more precious than gold a rich legacy more precious than gold from the mines—the memory of a mother who was a faithful servant of God. We miss her sweet presence and God. We miss her sweet presence and the encouragement of her example, but we would not call her back, believing that our loss is her eternal gain. She is freed from her pains and is sleeping that sweet sleep which only those who die in the Lord may enjoy. Funeral services were held at Mount Zion Cemetery by Brother Thurmond, of Steele, Mo., and there her body was lowered to its resting place to await the resurrection morn. She left us behind in sorrow, but it will not be long, at most, until we shall meet her beyond this vale of tears, if we are faithful to the end. beyond this value faithful to the end.

BESSIE FORRESTER.

SIMS.

Lillie Jane Hamilton Sims was born on July 19, 1867. She was married to Brother E. J. Sims, of Sparta, Tenn., on October 19, 1890. She was the mother of six children, three of whom preceded her to the grave. The three surviving children are Frank, Brown, and Chester, all of whom are members of the body of Christ, and all have families of their own. Sister Sims obeyed the gospel at the age of fourteen, and those who knew here best regarded her as a faithful, dilibest regarded her as a faithful, diligent, and devoted member to the day of her death. "A good name is rather to be chosen than great riches, and loving favor rather than silver and gold." While I did not meet and know her in life, yet I learned that she had a good name and loving favor in the community where she lived. She was a devoted and faithful wife, a fond and affectionate mother, and fond and affectionate mother, and loved her husband, her children, and her home. She delighted in ministering to the sick and the distressed, and when she herself became sick, though she suffered much and long, yet she bore it patiently. She was rescued she suffered much and long, yet she bore it patiently. She was rescued form her suffering on April 30, 1925, when she died in the Lord. May the husband and children be ever sustained by the grace of God, and may they so live that they may rejoice in the hope and prospect of a happy reunion beyond the veil.

BOGGESS.

Mary M. Yates was born on March 8, 1841, and died on November 6, 1925. In 1853 she was married to Thornton L. Boggess, at Pruntytown, W. Va. Brother Boggess died several years ago. She leaves one son, Charles Lindsey Boggess, of Louisville, Ky.; one sister, Mrs. M. L. Waller, of Flemington, W. Va.; and five grandchildren, the eldest of which, L. E. Boggess, since his childhood, remained with his grandparents, and his devotion to his grandmother up until the end is not only praiseworthy, until the end is not only praiseworthy, but has earned for him the admiration of the whole community. Boggess was a charter member of the church of Christ in Fairmont, and it church of Christ in Fairmont, and it was largely through her instrumentality and hard work that the greater part of the funds for the upbuilding of the work and for the building of the present church house on Columbia Street was secured. In civic and positive that the chart interest in the state of the litical affairs she took great interest. She enjoyed the fellowship of the church. She suffered much persecution and affliction, but she remained true, a broad-minded, large-hearted, affectionate woman, and many, some old and honored citizens, were present at the funeral who remembered her kindnesses to them in their childhood; and all, old and young, knew her by the kindly name of "Aunt Mary" Boggess. A short, very impressive service was conducted by Evangelist J. H. Pennell.

THE DOUTHITT-RILEY DISCUSSION.

BY DAVID THOMPSON.

This discussion was conducted at the house of worship belonging to the Mount Olivet church of Christ, near Kirksey, Ky., beginning on November 17 and lasting four days. Brother B. L. Douthitt, of Mayfield, Ky., represented the church of Christ, and L. R. Riley, of Arlington, Ky., the Missionary Baptists. Elder Riley affirmed the first day that Missionary Baptist churches were scriptural in origin. He offered in support of this proposition Isa. 2: 2; Dan. 2: 44; Zech. 6: 12; Matt. 16: 18; John 4: 34; John 17: 4. When Brother Douthitt pressed the point that these passages referred to Christ's church and not to a Missionary Baptist church, and called repeatedly for a passage mentioning a Missionary Baptist church. Riley replied that Christ's church baptized and did mission work and was for those reasons a Missionary Baptist church. Brother Douthitt replied that almost every denomination baptized and did mission work, and so had just as much right to call themselves Missionary Baptists as Elder Riley's people, and could come just as near reading authority for their existence from Elder Riley's proof texts as the Baptists. Elder Riley admitted that a person could be saved out of a Baptist Church just as well as in one; but when pressed as to whether one could be saved out of Christ's church or not, he gave no very definite answer.

In affirming the scriptural origin of the church of Christ, Brother Douthitt used Dan. 7: 13, 14; Isa. 28: 15, 16; Zech. 1: 16; 6: 12-15; Mark 9: 1. These passages were presented from a large chart and the fulfillment of each statement on the day of Pentecost clearly shown. He showed from the Bible the name which the New Testament church was called, and affirmed that it was scriptural to wear no other. I have never heard a clearer or more logical affirmation of the church question by any one.

The third day Elder Riley affirmed the salvation of the alien sinner at faith without further acts of obedience, and on the fourth day Brother Douthitt affirmed the possibility of During this discussion apostasv. Elder Riley made several concessions worthy of note. (1) The Bible knows nothing of the Missionary Baptist Church, but does give authority for Missionary Baptist churches. The faith that does not produce work will not save. (3) Sin will not send a man to hell. (4) A man does not have to live a good life to go to heaven. (5) God will write one hundred per cent to the name of every

COMMENDATION OF "ELAM'S NOTES"

We are receiving many commendations of "Elam's Notes," a commentary on the International Bible-school lessons, prepared by Brother E. A. Elam. We here give some expressions from well-known brethren:

J. E. Acuff, Nashville, Tenn., says: "Elam's Notes' contains thorough, practical, and logical comments on the lessons, presented in an interesting way which attracts and holds the attention of the student."

and holds the attention of the student."

S. T. Hardison, Lewisburg, Tenn., says;
"I have been using 'Elam's Notes' from the beginning, and I have been gratified to see how completely and elaborately he explains the context. I am sure it is a valuable book for old and young, and if studied carefully it will aid them very much in getting a correct knowledge of the Bible."

B. C. Goodpasture, Atlanta, Ga., says: "I have used four or five of the popular 'Notes' on the Sunday-school lessons, but consider
'Elam's Notes' by far the best."

Betsell Bayter. President of Abilene Chris-

'Elam's Notes' by far the best."

Batsell Baxter, President of Abilene Christian College, Abilene, Texas, says: "I regard 'Elam's Notes' as the best work of the kind available. Brother Elam is one of our foremost Bible teachers, and his ripe experience, splendid judgment, and constant companionship with the Bible have combined to make this one of the finest helps to Bible study to be found anywhere."

I. B. Bradley, Dickson, Tenn., says: "I am glad to commend 'Elam's Notes' to the congregations everywhere as the best help obtainable. I have long felt and said that Brother Elam's 'Notes' are the most valuable aid to the study of the Lord's-day studies that has ever come under my notice."

F. C. Sowell, Columbia, Tenn., says: "I can most heartily commend 'Elam's Notes' to any person or church destring a broader and deeper knowledge of the Bible."

S. H. Hall, Nashville, Tenn., says: "I know of nothing in the way of human helps that will aid the Bible student more in obtaining this knowledge than 'Elam's Notes," published and sold by the Gospel Advocate Company."

William Hall, Gallatin, Tenn., says: "I do not hesitate to say that those who use 'Elam's Notes' in the study of the lesson for each Lord's day get a very much more comprehensive and complete teaching on the lessons studied in connection with these notes than would be possible without them."

child of God, regardless of the life he lives.

Brother Douthitt ably defended the truth and thoroughly exposed error. Those attending have had a very fine opportunity to see the fallacy of Missionary Baptist doctrine, and eternity alone can tell the good done. The audiences were good from the first, and the last two days were far beyoud the capacity of the house.

Elder J. M. Hooker moderated for Elder Riley, and the writer performed that office for Brother Douthitt

DAVID HENRY JACKSON.

BY E. G. ROCKLIFF.

David Henry Jackson, better known as "Harry" Jackson, of Toronto, Ontario, Canada, finished his earthly course on Monday, November 9, 1925.

Brother Jackson was a preacher of righteousness. A good soldier has fallen in the fight, dying, as a soldier should, with his face to the foe. Even from his sick bed he was preparing for a vigorous attack upon the strongholds of Satan. In the midst of his tireless activities for the kingdom he has been removed.

We little thought he was so near the end of his course, but we always felt that he would die keeping the faith.

To those of us who have taken an interest in his work and have known something of his temptations it seems fitting to say: "Servant of God, well done."

He was six years with the Fern Avenue congregation in Toronto, and at the time of his death was laboring with the church on the East Side.

Gone in the prime of life, for he was but forty-six, and preaching better than ever before. He leaves a widow and four children. He was justly proud of his family, which is partly grown—Jean, seventeen; Gordon, sixteen; Robert, thirteen; and Barbara, I think, is seven. The writer of this tribute was proud to own him as a friend and brother.

The body was carried to his old home at Marion Street, from which he had gone in and out on his ministry of love so often. After a short prayer here, the body was conveyed to the Fern Avenue church house, where a large gathering of friends had assembled.

It was Armistice Day, anniversary of the day that marked the cessation of hostilities in the Great War. Toronto was reverently honoring the dead who had fallen in Flanders' field, and we were honoring a dead Christian soldier here. The sun shone gloriously, and coming in through the windows of the church house, it was transformed (the while we read and talked together of the victor's crown, the Christian's hope) from a house of mourning into a house of praise and glory.

The preachers located in Toronto, Brethren McKerlie, Smith, and Sumner, took part in the service, and it was the writer's pleasure to recount some of the deeds of this comrade and point to the eternal reward for faithfulness.

Brethren from Jordan and Meaford were there, and it was a long procession that followed the casket to the silent city of the dead. At the grave Brother McKerlie officiated.

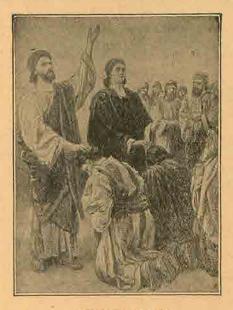

The Walker brothers, Tom and Fred, who are well known throughout the brotherhood, are brothers of the widow.

A STATEMENT.

BY A. A. BUNNER.

I feel that a statement from me is due the church of Christ at Barrackville, W. Va., and they expect it from me. On the fourth Lord's day in August, 1925, I preached for the church that meets there in the old brick meetinghouse where they have always met ever since I first knew them. I have preached there more or less for the last forty years, and I must say in their behalf that they work and worship now just as they always have from the beginning of their existence as a church, and statements that have been sent abroad to their injury that they have gone digressive are wholly without foundation. In fact, they meet and worship just as they always have done ever since I have known them as a congregation. Hence, I know them to be as loyal as the most loyal brethren known to me anywhere; and to brand them as "digressives" is to bear false witness against good brethren. And there is not a better and more loyal preacher among the disciples of Christ than Brother I. M. Poling, the man who is now preaching for them. I have known Brother Poling for many long years, and I know what I am talking about. I make this statement in behalf of him and the church at Barrackville, in view of the fact that when I preached there in August it was circulated all over Taylor and Marion counties, and a part of Preston County, too, that A. A. Bunner had gone digressive and had preached for the digressive Christian Church at Barrackville. Now, in justice to the church of Christ meeting in the old brick church house at Barrackville, I ask Brethren H. C. Shoulders, M. D. Baumer, Prof. Hall L. Calhoun, and J. E. Danks to come out with a statement in vindication of these good brethren. They are expecting a statement from them, also from any other good brethren who are acquainted with the facts in the case.

THE COLLEY-PARKER DEBATE.

This debate was conducted between Brother R. L. Colley and C. F. Parker, near Bradford, Tenn., at Skullbone meetinghouse, beginning on November 24 and continuing four days.

Unconditional salvation and the impossibility of apostasy were affirmed by Mr. Parker; while conditional salvation and the possibility of apostasy were affirmed by Brother Colley.

The discussion was conducted on a high plane throughout. It was demonstrated that neighbors and friends can meet together and discuss their religious differences without hard feelings being engendered. Each disputant contended earnestly for the cause he espoused.

The attendance was good during the entire debate; in fact, the audiences increased as the work continued. Toward the close the house would not accommodate the crowds.

C. F. Parker is far above the average debater. His strongest work is in saying little about an argument, in getting the audience to think he has said much about the issue, in diverting the hearer's mind away from what has been presented, and in asking his opponent such questions as will raise up a barrier between him and the people. In this respect he is unique. However, this is by no means a compliment to his honesty; it only shows a conscious effort on his part to evade the truth.

Brother Colley labored hard to get the truth before the people. He always debates with his hands over the table, and never resorts to traps to ensnare his opponent. It is the truth, first and last, with him. The brethren were well pleased with his work and commended it highly.

It was my part to keep time for Brother Colley. Mr. Parker's father kept time and moderated for him.

CURRENT COMMENT

By JAMES A. ALLEN

We invite especial attention to the following splendid article written by Brother W. L. Karnes, of Nashville, Tenn.:

I enjoyed very much indeed the two articles by Brethren Boles and Srygley in last week's Gospel Advocate (November 12.) They were strictly to the point, and I trust they may be widely read. I am sure they will do a vast amount of good if they are carefully read and studied. I am sorry the church at Sparta has had trouble, but really I believe almost every congregation of disciples of Christ has at least a few members who would do the congregation to which they belong a favor if they would When members of a congregation reach the withdraw. point where they are not satisfied with God, his church, and his ways, but, on the other hand, want to dictate to God, tell him how they choose to worship him, and at the same time burden the other fellow with their yoke of it is high time that some movement should be " isms," If that fellow moves on to himself, I say to the church of God, Rejoice! Just imagine fifty or a hundred members of the body of Christ yoked up with about the same number of people who believe that God established all denominations, who believe that a believer might as well be sprinkled as immersed, and who claim that they can worship God as sincerely with unauthorized instruments as without such!

I noticed in a St. Louis paper a few weeks ago where a convention of the Christian Church was voting as to whether or not they would accept without baptizing people coming from other churches where they had only been sprinkled or poured. I am reliably informed that the evangelist conducting a meeting at the Christian Church at Russellville, Ky., last spring, invited the unsaved to come forward and give him their hand and to join the church of their choice.

As to J. J. Walker's thinking Africa is in such a bad state of affairs is rather strange. I will venture the assertion that Walker and all his cohorts could not convince the blackest negro in all Africa that he is only an improved monkey.

W. L. KARNES.

In a recent issue of the Gospel Advocate Brethren Srygley and Boles referred in detail to the wicked and unchristian work recently done by J. J. Walker in Sparta, Tenn. The Sparta church is not only one of the largest and strongest congregations in the State, but it is also fortunate in having some real elders to watch after and oversee it. They dealt with Walker's effort to divide it on the principle that one of the best ways to expose and condemn sin is to turn the light of publicity on it. Brother J. R. Tubb, one of the elders, stood before the congregation, told them that Walker was coming, and kindly and candidly informed them who Walker was, what he stood for, and what he was coming to Sparta to do. He also informed them that Walker, as president of the Nashville Ministers' Alliance, was one of the men who signed the petition to Governor Peay requesting him to veto the bill that sought to prevent infidel teachers from teaching evolution in our schools. Out of a very large congregation, one lady, herself only a nominal member, whose husband refused to become a member at all, compromised with her husband when he agreed that if she would go to Walker's new church, he would go with her.

Brother Karnes is certainly scriptural and right in taking the position that when men and women so far apostatize as to become unsound in the faith and worldlyminded, they "would do the congregation to which they belong a favor if they would withdraw." It is a great mistake to try to keep such in the congregation. Their continued presence will result in contaminating the whole congregation. Unless they repent, they should be withdrawn from.

No man can grasp an adequate idea of the infinite wisdom of God in laying down things that sift the wheat from the chaff, the dross from the pure gold. The world is filled with people who make loud protestations of love for God, who cry, "Lord, Lord," who are extremely active and zealous in religious circles, who "compass sea and land to make one proselyte." But God could not be God and bestow the blessings he offers in Christ on people who are unworthy of them. God has never bestowed blessings on men before testing them to prove that they are worthy.

The laws of God are both moral and positive. Moral laws cannot serve as a test to show whether men have faith in God, whether or not they will take God at his word. Why? Because man himself can see the sense in moral laws: he himself can see the good coming from laws against adultery, fornication, stealing, lying, etc. The infidel, Ingersoll, preached the moral laws with a marvelous eloquence. Men who do not believe in God accept them because they can see the sense and good in them. These laws cannot show whether or not men have faith in God.

But those who study the Bible know that, before blessing men, God has always commanded them to do something they could not see the sense in nor the reason for. The erection of the brazen serpent, marching around the walls of Jericho, Naaman dipping in the Jordan, etc., are examples of positive commandments. No man can see any reason in a positive commandment, nor any connection between the thing commanded and the blessing to be received. The only thing that will move a man to obey a commandment of this kind is simply that God commands it, not that he himself can see any good in it.

Under the Christian dispensation, baptism is the test that keeps people out of the church who do not have faith in God. They may think they have faith, they may be very active and zealous, but "not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father who is in heaven." The will of the Father is expressed in the word of the Father. In the plainest terms all who believe are commanded to be baptized. Those who have the faith to take God at his word will obey the command. Those who walk in their own wisdom, refusing to do everything their own wisdom does not dictate or that they cannot see the sense in, will refuse to be baptized and ridicule the idea that man cannot be saved without baptism. Baptism is the test that sifts the wheat from the chaff, the dross from the pure gold. It keeps out of the church people who will not take God at his word, who will not do a thing for no other reason than simply that God commands it.

In the church, God lays down the principle that those who would live the Christian life can so do only by doing what he commands them to do. They are not left to walk in their own wisdom in any item of work or worship. The rule God lays down is: "What thing soever I command you, that shall ye observe to do: thou shalt not add thereto, nor diminish from it." (Deut. 12: 32.) "That in us ye might learn not to go beyond the things which are written." (1 Cor. 4: 6.) The command is that all service be done by faith, and that as faith comes by hearing the word of God, no man can do by faith anything that the word of God does not tell him to do. (See Rom. 10: 17; 14: 23.)

When people become worldly-minded and want to walk in ways that appear good to them, no longer recognizing God as the Ruler, this principle cuts them off. The quicker they get out of the congregation, out from among the people of God, the better. Brother Karnes is strictly right in saying they "would do the congregation to which they belong a favor if they would withdraw."

The "digressives" are composed of that class of people who are "not of us" in either principle or fact. They are not willing to recognize God as the Ruler, to abide in what God has commanded, but claim the "liberty" to do things their own wisdom dictates. They constitute the receptacle that catches the chaff that is sifted from among the wheat, the dross that the test of God brings out from the pure gold. While claiming to be the "Christian Church," or the church of Christ, they have no identity with it. They do not stand for the things that the church of Christ stood for in New Testament times. Nor are they identified with the reformatory movement of the nineteenth century. All agree that the early churches sang, that they did not use instrumental music in their worship. Mr. Campbell and the reformers regarded instrumental music as poison and as incompatible with spiritual service or worship.

When men and women in the church become worldlyminded and want to pick their own way to heaven, not desiring to recognize God as the Ruler and to do simply what he commands, if they cannot be brought to repentance, by all means withdraw from them promptly and save the rest of the congregation.

God has many interests to consider, many conflicting forces to deal with, and many issues to provide for. Therefore, different men may have different views, and yet all be in the right. Many purposes may be aimed at in redemption beyond what we can see, and thus many processes which to us look meaningless find their end. The water is not taken over the mill wheel simply that it may find its nearest course to the river, nor is the Christian led over a broken path because that is the nearest way to heaven.—W. F. Adeney.

STICK BY THE PRESENT TRUTH.

BY A. B. LIPSCOMB.

In his second letter the apostle Peter stresses the importance of being "established in the present truth." This is always a timely exhortation. There are some people who look for truth at the wrong time and in the wrong place. I have known those who, in their search for truth, looked backward, far backward, in human history, so far backward that oftentimes they got beyond the pale of human reasoning and thought and investigation. I remember one time I was teaching a class in the Bible in Louisville, and after I had finished the chapter I said: "Now, if any of you here have any questions to ask, I will do my best to answer them. But let them be sensible questions. Try and get them somewhere within this chapter." As soon as I made the suggestion, a lady held up her hand and said: "I have a question." "What is it?" I inquired. "Who made the devil?" she responded. It was not in that chapter, nor did it have any connection with it. Well, she is not alone. A great many folks are all the time raising such questions as, "Who made God?" or, "Who made the devil?" or, "Why did God ever permit Adam and Eve to be tempted in the garden?" or, "Why did God ever allow sin to come into the world?" or, "Why doesn't God kill the devil?" Sometimes I am tempted to answer in the words of a rough-speaking preacher. He said: "The reason why God doesn't kill the devil is because he doesn't want the world filled with orphans."

But, speaking more seriously, there may be a time and place that is proper for raising such questions and talking about them; but when people make such questions the basis of their faith and the main topic of their religious conversation, they only serve to create doubts and confusion in their own minds and in the minds and hearts of other people.

Now, the origin of God will always be a mystery to us. Job put the question with all emphasis and tensity of meaning when he said: "Canst thou by searching find out God?" Can any of us with our finite minds hope to discuss that problem intelligently? I do know this, that many times while we are raising these questions, the very folks who raise them and talk about them are neglecting the present truths of the Bible. Present obligations, present duties, present invitations are forgotten. Now, as it was in the beginning, it is still necessary that people should believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, should turn away from sin, and should confess their Savior. Now, as when the apostles first preached, it is a present duty that people should be buried with their Lord in baptism. But you will find them talking about these extraneous matters. and all the time these present duties and obligations confront them. One thing we can never doubt is that God is; and while the finite mind can never go beyond its limitations, there is no reason why the heart of any man or woman should hesitate in believing that God is, because this great truth is not only revealed in the Bible, but all nature declares it. God is ever present, and this you may see in the fold of the flower, in the leaf of the tree. Then there will always, perhaps, be something deep and dark about sin in the world, about its origin and as to why it came in. Many think they have solved the problem, but there is one thing certain: we know that sin is here, and we know that "the wages of sin is death," and we know that "the gift of God is eternal life."

Why, what would you think of a physician who, if he were called upon to visit somebody suffering with some virulent malady, should come in and, instead of administering immediate relief to that man's pain, should start a searching investigation to find out where the germs came from, and let the man suffer during his investigation? Why, suppose it should develop that they came from the Chinese, or from the Italians, or even from the Germans, what would that matter? It might stimulate the physician to a certain extent, it might satisfy his professional pride to know; but his first duty, we understand, is to administer the well-known restoratives for pain to that man and to bring him back to health again. It makes no difference where the germs came from. So long as wars are waged, so long as we hear rumors of war, so long as tears stain the pale face of humanity, so long as the funeral processions go over our streets and down our country roads, so long as suffering and starvation stalk about in the land, just so long may we know that "the wages of sin is death," and the only hope now for those in sin is the gospel of Jesus Christ, the Son of God. And our great duty, our present obligation, is to preach the gospel and to obey the gospel.

But there is another class of seekers after the truth who look in the other direction. I have mentioned those who look backward. There are those, too, who are looking into the far distant future, or, it may develop, the near future, the unknown future; and they are asking questions, too. They wish to know if the streets of heaven are paved with real gold. They wish to know if hell fire is going to be real—real fire. They wish to know if Jesus Christ is not going to reign here on the earth in person, and some are making the contention that he is going to set up his throne in Jerusalem. They are raising the question of the millennium, and their chief thought and their teaching and preaching are all along the line of such questions.

Even though we could answer such questions promptly and with a reasonable degree of accuracy, the present truth cannot be denied, and the present truth, the great burning truth, is that all of us should get ready and make preparation for the future, for the coming of the Lord Jesus Christ. We know not when he is coming, the angels in heaven do not know, and yet, despite that statement of our Savior, there have been those who have announced the year of the Lord's coming—within the past three-quarters of a century, no less than six different times. Strangely enough, they have had a large following, and in every case they have disappointed the credulous, and many of them have turned away from the Scriptures on account of it.

There is a great temptation for some folks to go off at a tangent in their thought and teaching. I suppose there is a temptation for all of us along that lin, The "Barefoot Black Friars," as they are called, go barefooted because Jesus Christ was poor and they thought he had no shoes. The "Flagellantes" punish themselves, cut and torture their bodies, because they read in the Bible that Jesus Christ was "a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief," and "he was bruised for our iniquities; the chastisement of our peace was upon him." There is a sect who practice foot washing as an ordinance because Jesus Christ washed the disciples' feet-not to give them an ordinance, but as an act of condescension and humility, to teach them that they should have humility in their dealings with one another and with the world. There are those who do not preach except from housetops because Jesus once said: "What you hear in the ear, preach from the housetops." And before the Civil War there were those who kept quoting this passage: "Cursed be Canaan; a servant of servants shall he be." And they used this as their great argument in favor of slavery.

We, too, must avoid the temptation to wrest and misinterpret the teachings of God's word and to attach our own private opinions. Remember, all the time that this is being done, souls are dying, and there is the gospel commission before us: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to the whole creation." May we all see the first great primal duties of life, the main things, the big things—the "present duty," as Simon Peter calls it.

COMMENTARY ON FIRST CORINTHIANS. No. 27. By C. E. W. DORRIS.

Chapter V.

Verse 13. Them that are without God judgeth. God will pass sentence on those who are not members of the church in that way in which he deals with the heathen world. The unconverted are left in the hands of God. He has reserved to himself the right to pass sentence on them without, as well as on them within the church, according to their deeds. The church is not to inflict punishment on them without by shunning them, but should go to them in the love of God and with the power of the gospel and try to lead them to the cross. Therefore put away from among yourselves that wicked person. This work properly belongs to the church. Do your duty in the church by executing discipline upon the offender, and God will look after those without in due time. Paul wrote this and the preceding verse to show the Corinthians the reason why, after commanding them to pass so severe a sentence on the man, he said nothing to them concerning the woman who was guilty with him. The discipline of the church is not to be exercised on persons out of it. The jurisdiction of the church does not extend to the heathen or unbeliever. We have nothing to do with judging and censuring those without the church; but those that are within, our own brethren, who are under the church's jurisdiction, we have both the right and power to judge, leaving the other to the judgment of God. The woman in the case was not a member of the church, hence no advice is given to deal with her. We may judge and excommunicate the evil from our fellowship. shall know them by their fruits." (Matt. 7: 16.) As banishment is a civil excommunication, so excommunication from Christian fellowship is a spiritual banishment. Civil officers must drive malefactors out of civil society, and so must the church withdraw fellowship from enormous offenders. The words, "put away from among yourselves that wicked person," help us to fully understand the expression, "purge out the old leaven," etc., in verse 7. It is not to be interpreted of particular persons purging out their lusts and mortifying their corruptions, though that be a very necessary duty; but it is to be understood to be the duty of churches of Christ to purge out from among them all flagitious and enormous offenders. Excommunication from the fellowship of the church is God's remedy to lead the guilty to repentance and to heaven and to save the church from disgrace and ill repute. The church or individual that refuses to apply God's remedy to save refuses to cooperate with God and thereby dethrones God's purpose to save the guilty. They who refuse to apply Heaven's remedy to save the guilty are not only working against God and their own eternal interest, but are enemies to the guilty and assisting him to eternal ruin. Paul once asked: "Am I therefore become your enemy, because I tell you the truth?" (Gal. 4: 16.) The apostle recognized the fact that he who speaks truth to his neighbor is a friend indeed, and that he who fails to do so is an enemy indeed. No church or individual can encourage the guilty in his wrong by refusing to apply God's remedy or otherwise. morals of to-day is one of the besetting sins of our time, and it is the duty of the faithful to hold God's standard of morality upon the high plane on which Heaven placed it by purging all such from the church. The church will never have the high standing before the world that God intended as long as she refuses to purge herself from the leaven of evil. God's remedy applied is the only means the church has to purge herself of evil influences and to save the guilty. They who fail to apply the spiritual remedy have been far removed from the principles of heaven by refusing to stand for the things ordained of God and sealed by the blood of Christ.

I feel that the comments on this chapter would be incomplete without the following query and Brother D. Lipscomb's reply:

"Dear Brother Lipscomb: If a brother, elder or preacher, is guilty of adultery, or has seduced a young girl, does he forfeit his right to any claim he had to the ministry, or could he be retained in the fellowship as an elder or preacher in the church of God? (M. Currie, Brownsville, Tenn.)"

A man guilty of adultery cannot be an elder or preach. Such positions are to be occupied only by men whose aracters are above reproach. The Scriptures give the characters are above reproach. characters of those who are to be rulers and teachers. When a man has been put forward as elder or teacher, and he proves by his acts unfitted in character for the place, he at once ought to retire or be retired from the One guilty of such sin ought not to be thought of for such position. It would be difficult for one guilty of such crime ever to restore a character that would fit him for it. If he is truly penitent, he is anxious to be forgiven, that he may live a humble, quiet life and be saved. If he appreciates his crime, he does not wish to be put forward to occupy prominent and active positions. If he seeks these, he has not in truth repented. True repentance leads to humility and contrition, and is willing to be humble and retiring, that he may bring no reproach or shame on the church of God. There was never a more hypocritical farce than Breckinridge making his repentance a ground for asking public honors. What is true of him is true of all who seek high places through repentance. It seems to me the times demand a thorough conformity to the will of God. A man who is an adulterent that defrauds his fellow man, that will not pay his debts, that cannot be depended on to tell the truth, that will not swear aye to his own hurt and change not, that does not enjoy the confidence of his fellow men, should not be put forward as teacher or ruler in the church of Christ. do it is to bring shame and reproach upon the cause of God. Men who do wrong and repent ought to be forgiven, but they ought to work in humble positions until their character is proved. (Gospel Advocate, May 31, 1894, page 337.)

How Christian men and women can be willing to sustain a bad man as a teacher is one of the incomprehensible though frequent manifestations of church life. It frequently seems that a man with a stain on his character is more popular than one who has lived an upright life. While we recognize that a man's having been a sinner and guilty of even heinous wrongs ought not to be a hindrance to usefulness after earnest repentance, still, when a man is guilty of frequent crimes and seeks to conceal them, and is guilty of immoralities after claiming to be a Christian, no matter what his ability as a speaker, he should not be put forward as a preacher.

How often do we see churches encouraging and sustaining a preacher they know to be lacking in truthfulness, in integrity and true honesty, because they know they are fascinating speakers! How often do we find them willing to condone adulteries, hide lascivious conduct, and maintain them as preachers because they are popular speakers! While this is done the morals of the church will be at a low ebb and its influence crippled. (Gospel Advocate, 1886, page 215.)

ELEMENTS OF THE LORD'S SUPPER.

Dear Brother Boles: I got your letter stating that you would publish my former letter, together with this letter, giving chapter and verse for making "either the loaf or fruit of the vine." I am very glad to get to do this. I studied this question just to know the truth for myself, that I might know just what to do that my service might be acceptable. "It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God." I believe that we are "furnished completely unto every good work." I believe "it is not in man that walketh to direct his steps." Hence, I believe we can find in the Scriptruse instruction sufficient to guide us into all the truth in regard to our religious work and worship.

All agree, so far as I know (I have never heard it disputed), that the Lord's Supper was taken out of the passover supper. If that is true, and we can find what the passover supper consisted of, then we can surely know what was taken out of it. If we can learn what was taken out of the passover supper and placed in the Lord's Supper, we will surely know what the Lord's Supper consists of, and how to prepare it. If we can learn how to prepare the passover supper, we can surely learn how to prepare the Lord's Supper. If this is not true, I would be glad for you to explain why it is not true. Will you please do so?

"Speak ye unto all the congregation of Israel, saying, In the tenth day of this month they shall take to them every man a lamb." (Ex. 12: 3.) "Your lamb shall be without blemish, a male of the first year." (Verse 5.) "And they shall eat the flesh in that night, roast with fire, and unleavened bread; and with bitter herbs they shall eat it." (Verse 8.) "Seven days shall ye eat unleavened bread; even the first day ye shall put away leaven out of your houses: for whosoever eateth leavened bread from the first day until the seventh day, that soul shall be cut off from Israel." (Verse 15.) "In the first month, on the fourteenth day of the month at even, ye shall eat unleavened bread, until the one and twentieth day of the month at even. Seven days shall there be no leaven found in your houses: for whosoever eateth that which is leavened, even that soul shall be cut off from the congregation of Israel, whether he be a stranger, or born in the land. Ye shall eat nothing leavened; in all your habitations shall ye eat unleavened bread." (Verses 18-20.)

We learn from these scriptures that, in preparing this passover supper, they prepared a lamb, bitter herbs, and unleavened bread. It seems that the one thing emphasized, and repeated over and over again, is that they were to have unleavened bread. There was a severe penalty pronounced on any one who ate anything (kind of bread) except unleavened bread. Why were these directions made so plain and specific about the bread? I do not know, unless it was that Jehovah knew that eventually this bread would be the emblem of the body of the Lord Jesus, and that somebody would try to change it.

There is nothing said here about the way to make this bread, or the drink offering to be used in this passover supper, but we have other scriptures that make both plain. "And if thy oblation [the passover supper was an oblation] be a meat offering baken in a pan, it shall be of fine flour unleavened, mingled with oil." (Lev. 2: 5.) "No meat offering, which ye shall bring unto the Lord, shall be made with leaven." (Verse 11.) "And every oblation of thy meat offering shalt thou season with salt." "And a tenth part of an ephah of flour for (Verse 13.) a meat offering, mingled with the fourth part of a hin of beaten oil. It is a continual burnt offering, which was ordained in Mount Sinai for a sweet savour, a sacrifice made by fire unto the Lord. And the drink offering thereof shall be the fourth part of a hin for the one lamb: in the holy place shalt thou cause the strong wine to be poured unto the Lord for a drink offering." 28: 5-7.)

I have quoted this scripture to show the way to make the unleavened bread and also the drink offering to be used in a one-lamb feast. Wherever you find full directions for making unleavened bread and the drink offering for a one-lamb feast, you will find the direction identical with this. The passover supper was a one-lamb feast,

Now, I think we know for sure what the disciples "made ready" when they "made ready the passover," and what the Savior "took" when he "took bread" and

"the cup." It seems to me that this is too plain for an unprejudiced mind to fail to see.

But you may say that these scriptures are in the Old Testament. True, the most of the quotations are from the Old Testament; but whatever has been transferred from the Old Testament into the New is binding by virtue of its being in the New. I would not claim that bitter herbs or a lamb should be on the Lord's table now, because the Lord purposely left them out. If the record had said that "he took lamb, and said, Take, eat," I would believe we would have to go back to find out how to prepare this lamb. I would not think of getting any kind of lamb except "a male of the first year," "without blemish." I believe we should use the same thought about the bread and the wine. This would look to me like giving "thoughtful attention" and preparing a "suitable bread." I think we have learned positively that this bread was made "of fine flour unleavened, mingled with oil" and "seasoned with salt." Do you say that the Savior was living under the old law and had to use this kind of bread and wine? I believe so, too. But when he told Paul to tell the Corinthians what happened "in the night in which he was betrayed," neither Paul nor the Corinthians were living under the old law, because the Savior had taken it out of the way, nailing it to the cross. Therefore, we know that what the Savior did when he "took bread" and "the cup" has been placed in the New Testament and is binding on us who claim to go by the word of God. We know the kind of the "fruit of the vine" the Savior told Paul to tell the Corinthians to use, because some of them got drunk. It was wine. Cor. 11: 21.)

I have given you scriptures, chapter and verse, for both the "bread" and "fruit of the vine." Now, please publish this with my first letter. If I am wrong, I want to be right. If you are wrong, you ought to want to be right. One of us is wrong. I will not, I cannot, take bread other than that which has been so plainly described in the Scriptures, nor "fruit of the vine" other than wine. I would not know whether I was taking his body or his blood if I took something else. How could I know, when he never said, "This is my body," or "This is my blood," of anything else except unleavened bread and wine? If you know where he has said something else will do, please give me chapter and verse, and I will be very much obliged to you.

EVOLUTION AS IT APPEARS TO ME. BY J. G. ALLEN.

For as much as this question is before men for a decision, and as each must decide for himself, I think I am within my rights to say a few things on the subject as it appears to me, and with no intention of slurring at any man in particular, but the thing itself as presented by different men who advocate it.

To begin with, I think it would be impossible for any man to learn just what evolution is, if he had to depend for its meaning on what its advocates say it is, from the fact that no two agree in every point in defining it; and so that convinces me that some of our learned men are wrong, although they possess ripe scholarship. I am forced to this conclusion from the fact that it is impossible for men to differ so widely on any real question and all be right; all may be wrong, but all cannot be right, because there is but one right way.

A very great objection I have to evolution as it pertains to humanity is that the united effort of all is to present testimony to prove their contention, that is only imaginary; for who can tell what happened millions of years before there was any intelligence present to record what occurred?

Another thing occurs to me that I cannot accept, and that is, they tell us that the six days of creation were not days as they are now, but that a day then meant a period of time without any reference to its length, and that a day then may have been a million years. Now, it occurs to me that any theory that is forced to stretch a day out like that is bound to be wrong. When I read that explanation from a very learned scientist, I began to wonder how he found that out; so I opened my Bible, and read: "And God called the light Day, and the darkness he called Night. And the evening and the morning were the first day." How any unprejudiced mind can read that and in the light of his own experience stretch it out a million years is too much for me. Natural laws have never changed. If the word "day" does not mean something definite when used in the Bible, then we are all in the dark. A day as defined in the dictionary is the time of light and shadow, or twenty-four hours as we count time, in which time the earth makes one revolution on its axis. A month is defined to be the time that it takes the moon to make one revolution, or one-twelfth of a year of three hundred and sixty-five and one-fourth days. A year means the period of time it takes the earth to revolve around the sun, which is three hundred and sixty-five and one-fourth days. Now, every scientist will accept the foregoing definitions as they apply to us now; but in the beginning it was not that way, so they say. But may I ask. Where is there any reliable data that a change has ever taken place? Is it possible that there is not something that man can anchor to that is steadfast and more dependable than any theory that evolutionists can evolve out of their vain imaginations? If it were permissible, we might inject some levity into this subject; but it is a question of too much importance to treat in a light vein, because man's all is involved, and there is nothing-nay, absolutely nothing-offered instead, but misery in this life, with a crushed hope in the world to come. We are told in the eighth chapter of Genesis that when the waters of the flood had abated until the tops of the mountains were visible, "it came to pass at the end of forty days, that Noah opened the window of the ark." Now the question comes up, are the days mentioned in the eighth chapter the same length as the days of creation mentioned in the first chapter? If you say no, then tell when the change was made; and I opine that you will fear to say yes, because you know that there is not a sane man on earth that you can make believe that the forty days mentioned were forty million years long. Still, one has just as much right to claim that it was forty million years before Noah opened the doors of the ark as to claim that the six days of creation differed in length from six days of the present time.

Stick to the Bible, and believe everything it says, because it is founded on facts supported by reliable evidence. It has fought many battles and has gained ground every time; so let its friends stand firm and never falter.

THE CHRIST OF THE AGES.

BY JAMES E. CHESSOR.

THE SUPREMACY OF JESUS.

"Jesus Christ is the same yesterday and to-day, year and forever." (Heb. 13: 8.)

Nearly two millenniums have passed since Jesus ascended to heaven and was crowned King of kings and Lord of lords. During these two millenniums the whole outward fashion of life has changed. In large part Jesus is the responsible cause of this universal alteration. Indeed, the forces he released in his marvelous teachings have effected, directly or indirectly, every beneficent change. We cannot here enter upon a description of these changed conditions, nor of the beneficence of Messiah's reign. Just now we want simply to see the fact of vast change everywhere, and over against it to see the Christ of the ages abiding unchanged, unchangeable.

When Jesus began to reign from on high, the governments of the world were autocratic, science was deductive, books were written by hand and for the few, travel was either on foot or by beast or chariot or boat, the ocean (save for inland seas) was untraveled, and two-thirds of the world was still unknown. To-day governments are democratic, science is chiefly inductive, books are printed on power presses at slight cost and are read by all, travel is by steam or electricity, and the whole ocean, on the surface and above and beneath it, is charted and sailed, and the world is explored from pole to pole. Civilization, westering with the sun, has returned to its beginnings in the east. Everything changes. Time is a great destroyer. The very hills crumble beneath the weight of years. But Christ abides. Wherever his name is known—in the East and in the West and around the world, in India, in China, in Europe, in America, in the wilds of Africa, and in the lonely islands of the sea-Jesus abides unchanged. His glory is undimmed; his sway not only undiminished, but increasing. The ruin of the centuries is great, but it reaches not to him. All thrones and authorities known to his day have fallen, but he abides, the one value that is imperishable, the Christ of the ages, the supreme possession of men.

THE SECRET OF THIS SUPREMACY.

What is the secret of this abiding supremacy of Jesus? I answer in a word scarce welcome to the spirit of our times. The secret lies in his supernaturalness. The abiding Christ—the Christ of the ages—is a supernatural Christ. This is what makes him Savior, almighty, all-powerful, all-conquering, everlasting—the supreme Savior of the world; and this Saviorhood of Christ is what makes him precious to men, the one priceless possession they seek and yearn for. Man is a limited being, and, when he can forget his pride long enough to realize his needs, he will freely admit that his supreme thirst and greatest longing is for a Savior—for a touch, as it were, of the transcendent, the supernatural, to save him from futility and from ruin.

Nothing is more familiar than the cry of humanity against death. It is a cry from of old, and it is everywhere heard. The longing for deliverance lies deeply embedded in the soul. "For indeed we that are in this tabernacle do groan, being burdened; not for that we would be unclothed, but that we would be clothed upon, that what is mortal may be swallowed up of life." "Since then the children are sharers in flesh and blood, he also himself in like manner partook of the same; that through death he might bring to naught him that had the power of death, that is, the devil; and might deliver all them who through fear of death were all their lifetime subject to bondage." Death hovers over life as a pall of ruin. It is impossible, therefore, for us to live and be satisfied in the narrow present, and forget our fears. Soon death will come, perhaps with creeping ruin, perhaps with sudden cataclysm, and in a moment all that has made life seem dear to us will be torn from us. How death limits and buffets our lives! We are ever in the penumbra of its darker meanings, approaching, inevitably, its deepest shade. Only the shallow or the sensual talk disdainfully of death. Let us put it down: a philosophy or religion that does not solve death can interest none but shallow or sensual men. But Jesus solves the problem of death, and, indeed, every problem.

In view of these facts, it is with amazement we note the modern attitude of resentment toward the supernatural. Take, for example, this attitude as it concerns the Christian affirmations about Jesus. They tell us that the virgin birth, the resurrection, and the deeds of power that lie between must all be repudiated, that the modern mind finds them simply incredible. Now the causes for this current hostility to the supernatural are, chiefly, man's love of self-sufficiency and related pride, his overweening interest in temporal betterments and social adjustments, and the influence of the hypothesis of Darwin upon modern thought. But let that go.

Returning, the age-long appeal of Jesus to the hearts of men is supremely just this fact of his supernaturalism. It is this, above all else, that enables him to endure unchanged and with glory undimmed amid the wreckage of the centuries. It is his divine transcendence of us that leads us to seek him, and, when we have found him, to be satisfied. It is because in him dwells all the fullness of the Godhead bodily that he is to us our all-sufficient Savior.

THE SUPERNATURAL CHRIST.

Let us turn now to the wonderful portrait of Jesus in his full supernatural glory as it is given in the New Testament and feel the power that is in it to satisfy our hearts. The wonder of his glory may be briefly outlined in seven principal items.

We contemplate him, first, in the supernatural fulfillment of prophecy and all expectation. In paganism there were dim, confused longings for a deliverer, and in Israel there was the sublime, ever-increasing Messianic hope; and Jesus Christ fulfilled them both. He did not break in upon the world suddenly and unannounced. He dawned upon it as the day brightens in the east, with many a prophetic gleam before its coming. From the most general intimation in Eden (Gen. 3: 15), through the ever-narrowing, ever-brightening prophecies of his advent (as in Gen. 12: 1-3; Deut. 18: 15, 18, 19), until the full portrait of the suffering Messiah is given in the fiftythird chapter of Isaiah, the foreshadowings are heavy with import and suspense. Coming at last in the fullness of the times, he is the fulfillment of every Messianic type, figure, and prophetic utterance, and of the long-cherished Messianic hope. "The testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy.'

And then, second, we see him supernatural in his birth. At his appearing heaven drew strangely near to earth. The Holy Spirit overshadowed his virgin mother. The very presence of God was manifested glory neither mediated by human paternity nor hidden behind the ordinary and familiar order of nature. "Being the son (as was supposed) of Joseph." "She was found with child by the Holy Spirit." "Behold, the virgin shall be with child, and shall bring forth a son, and they shall call his name Immanuel; which is, being interpreted, God with us." "And she brought forth her first-born son; and she wrapped him in swaddling clothes, and laid him in a manger." He came as one of us, and yet not one of us. He came to be like us, and yet also to be even more.

Next, we stand amazed at the supernaturalness of his character. Not only is he good, but he is sinlessly good. There is nothing more supernatural than this moral uniqueness of Jesus. He leads the ages in his comprehension of sin. He shows sin to be a thing of thought and desire and not of outward deed alone (see Matt. 5: 27, 28); and yet he, whose analysis of sin was so penetrating, had no sense of it himself. His challenge was: "Which of you convicteth me of sin?" He said of himself: "I do always the will of my Father." He affirmed that his character was true enough to illustrate the divine, saying: "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father." Such expressions upon the lips of a sinful man would have been presumptuous and blasphemous. The truth is, that the very beauty, the sinlessness, the wholeness, the symmetrical perfection of the life of Jesus can only be preserved against the background of his supernaturalness.

Again, we wonder with the men of his day (who bore witness of him) at the power of his mighty works. He touches bread, and it is multiplied at his touch; water, and it becomes wine. He speaks to the waves, and they are calmed at his word; to the dead, and they live again. Conscious of the power that is in him, he yields his own life to die, affirming: "I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again." On Golgotha he does lay it down. In Joseph's rock-bound sepulcher he does take it again. The earth quakes, the rocks are rent, and Jesus comes forth from the sepulcher with the shout, "All hail!"

Then, we face the question that he proposed to the men of his day: "What think ye of Christ?" We hear the mighty answer of Thomas: "My Lord and my God." Peter confesses him both Lord and Christ, seated at the right hand of the Majesty on high, a Prince and a Savior. John sees him the eternal Word, the Creator of the worlds, made flesh for our redemption. Paul confesses that "in him dwelleth all the fullness of the Godhead bodily." He is, in Pauline phrase, God manifested in the flesh, the eternal Son emptied of his infinite glories, veiled in flesh, humbling himself unto death, even the death of the cross, for our redemption.

Proceeding, we pause to value him in his Saviorhood; and here, too, we see him supernatural. Indeed, if he were not a supernatural Savior, then he would be no Savior at all. But his death has power to redeem, because in his dying God has taken upon him all the mystery of pain, all the penalty a holy judgment wills upon the enormity of sin. On Calvary he bears it all for us, and therefore there is propitiation and release. "He was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities; the chastisement of our peace was upon him; and with his stripes we are healed. . . . Jehovah hath laid on him the iniquity of us all." "Who his own self bare our sins in his body upon the tree." "For it was the good pleasure of the Father that in him should all the fullness dwell; and through him to reconcile all things unto himself, having made peace through the blood of his cross."

Last of all, we see his name as it increases through the centuries—the Name above every name. We see him ever more fully King, his kingdom ever more fully advanced. Ultimate victory over all principalities and powers and dominions will come in the fullness of the ages. At the consummation he will come again in power and great glory, execute judgment, destroy death, establish in might the glory of the everlasting purpose of God. "Then cometh the end, when he shall deliver up the kingdom to God, even the Father; when he shall have abolished all rule and all authority and power. For he must reign, till he hath put all his enemies under his feet. The last enemy that shall be abolished is death." "Then shall come to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory." And: "The kingdom of the world is become the kingdom of our Lord, and of his Christ: and he shall reign forever and ever." Thus shall the end be.

This is the portrait of Jesus the New Testament presents to us. This is the supernatural Messiah of prophecy and revelation. This is the Savior of man's age-long need and of man's age-long desire. This is the Christ of the ages, who cannot be superseded, who is never remote, but who abides, the same yesterday, to-day, and forever. And if man's age-long cry for deliverance is ever to be answered, it cannot be better answered than in him. He satisfies every longing of the human heart, gives the peace that passeth all understanding, the hope, sure and steadfast, of life eternal.

CHRIST, THE ONE SUPREME MIRACLE.

The supernatural Christ. His life is a record of the supernatural, and this supernaturalness is precisely what gives to his life supreme value. It is this that men increasingly desire and long for. Unless, then, we intend to face life with the dogmatic assertion that its problems have no solution, we must accept the almighty Jesus.

In view of all this, no virtuous Christian need be disturbed by the questionings of modern scoffers. No devout soul need be carried away from his own steadfastness by modern unbelief. Christ abides, towering, sublime, supernatural—Savior with mighty power, with all authority—the Christ of the ages. One name is given under heaven whereby we must be saved—the Name exalted above every name—the name Jesus. And that blessed Name will ever be dear to men—ever more fully respected, ever more fully adored, until, finally, every knee shall bow to it, every tongue shall confess it.

Behold the vision: Christ standing there against the background of the centuries, supernatural, transcendent, the one supreme miracle; Christ, the answer for every need, the solution for every problem; Christ, the way, the truth, and the life; Christ, the one sublimity unchanged, unchangeable, the same yesterday, to-day, and forever; Christ, the abiding hope of men—the Christ of the ages!

ONE DAY AT A TIME.

God broke our years to hours and days, That hour by hour, and day by day, Just going on a little way, We might be able all along To keep quite strong.

Should all the weight of life
Be laid across our shoulders, and the future, rife
With woe and struggle, meet us face to face,
At just one place,
We could not go;
Our feet would stop; and so—

God lays a little on us every day,
And never, I believe, on all the way
Will burdens bear so deep,
Or pathways lie so threatening and so steep,
But we can go, if by God's power
We only bear the burden of the hour.
—George Klingle.

T. W. Phillips, Jr., son of our beloved T. W. Phillips, of Texas, preached last Sunday morning at Chapel Avenue, and at night at Highland Avenue. Brother Phillips has agreed to begin regular work at Savannah, Ga., on the first Lord's day in the new year.

Joe Trotter preached for the congregation worshiping at Sixth Avenue and Buchanan Street, this city, last Lord's day, morning and night. There was one confession and one received by statement. Much credit is due Brother and Sister Helton, who took charge of the work sometime ago and built it up to a houseful.

T. D. Willis, Louisville, Ky., December 7: "I visited the church at New Hope, in Grayson County, Ky., on the fifth Lord's day in November at eleven o'clock, and at Summit, in Harden County, at night. There was one addition at New Hope by relation. Your review of J. A. Hudson's work at Memphis, Tenn., is timely."

Lewis W. Kaufman, Dongola, Ill., December 7: "J. S. Jones, of Wingo, Ky., has just closed a meeting at Dongola with four baptisms, two restorations, one from the Missionary Baptists and two from the Lutherans. Brother Jones did his work well. He stayed with the truth and 'hewed to the line,' and we believe that much good has been done."

A. C. Traylor, Athens, Tenn., December 3: "I began regular work with the church at Athens on Sunday, November 19. A good audience, filled with zeal for the work of the Lord, greeted us at the morning and evening services. East Tennessee is truly a mission field, and I hope to accomplish much here by the help of the Lord."

Maude Hunter, Nashville, Tenn., December 7: "Please announce our work at Radnor again. We are making progress. It seems like a revival. We had one addition on November 29 and one restoration on December 6. Our Sunday school is climbing, with an enrollment of eighty-three. Wilburn Scobey will continue to preach for us until the first of the year, and then once a month."

A. B. Lipscomb, Valdosta, Ga., December 7: "Our work here is evidencing a steady growth, and all seem well pleased with the prospects for future development. One of the most gratifying features is found in the midweek prayer-meeting services, which are well attended. In one respect these meetings are one hundred per cent perfect. Every man and boy present takes part in the services. I will preach for the Scottsboro, Ala., church the third Sunday in December."

Mrs. P. R. Cagle, Salisbury, N. C., December 6: "Having been a reader of the Gospel Advocate for eleven years, I must say how much I appreciate its good work, especially the front-page editor's part. After looking through the issue of December 3, I commend especially your review of J. A. Hudson's report. We are expecting Price Billingsley here next summer, through the efforts of Miss Yola Alexander, of Nashville, Tenn."

F. L. Paisley, Chicago, Ill., December 7: "We had fine services at the Capitol Building yesterday. We appreciate the fact that our young folks are so willing to work. Each young man will do public work. Our mission in South Chicago changes to a better location next Lord's day. R. S. King ably preaches there. We have had three 'by letter' and one baptism since last report. Services in hall 309. New members continue to find the place."

F. L. Paisley, Chicago, Ill., December 7: "May I just say that your review of 'Dr. Jenkins' in the Gospel Advocate of December 3 was very timely and caused some favorable comment among brethren here. You said a dozen things I never thought of. Only one thing I would have added. Jenkins wants Christ to be head of the very things he is not or would not be if on earth, but will not allow him to be head of the very thing he is declared to be—'head over all things to the church.' I hope some Kansas City brother who knows Jenkins' address will see that he gets a copy of that issue."

A. O. Colley, Greenville, Texas, December 8: "We had two great services at the church and one at the Boles Orphan Home yesterday. We are having a goodly number to take fellowship with us here. We have recently had two good workers come into the church from the digressive Christian Church. Five others came last Sunday. We believe the church here has a bright future. We have appointed leaders at the Boles Orphan Home Church, and, in addition to something like twenty of the children and matrons, we have a goodly number of brethren and sisters of the community who have placed their names on the list. We expect this church to become a strong tower for good."

D. S. Ligon, Floyd, New Mexico, November 30: "I preached last Saturday night and Sunday in the home of Sister Cowart, the lady I baptized some few weeks ago, some six miles west of Floyd. We had a very good meeting. I received one dollar and eighty cents contribution, and this is more than I have received at any other point for some time. If my brethren do not wish to help me, it is useless for me to think of remaining in this country to preach the gospel, for I just cannot do it at my own expense. A man came to me on Sunday and insisted that I come over into his community and preach a few nights. Brethren, will you help me do this? I am not at Clovis now. Mail will reach me addressed to Box 512, Portales, New Mexico."

C. E. Holt, Florence, Ala., December 7: "I want to commend your article in last week's Gospel Advocate concerning the Memphis affair. We have gone 'hog-wild,' as Brother Srygley used to say, over fine meetinghouses and preachers. Since Brother ——'s death there has been a 'stream' of preachers coming and going. They are applicants for the 'pastorship' of the —— congregation, and one of them put in his application before —— was buried. I received letters from preachers, young fellows, in Texas, Kentucky, and Tennessee, making application for the place. The young fellows, as well as the older ones, want to 'locate.' They want to be modern 'pastors' under the name of 'evangelists!' That is one way of 'whipping the devil around the stump.'"

John R. Williams, Hornbeak, Tenn., December 5: "In a humble and modest way I wish to commend your article on the Memphis one-hundred-and-twenty-five-thousand-dollar house. Few men have the boldness and firmness to condemn things that are so popular with the masses. For quite a while I have contended that fine meetinghouses are a curse rather than a blessing. For twenty-five thousand dollars each, four fine meetinghouses could have been built, and twenty-five thousand dollars left to carry the gospel to the poor who have it not. Another thing about these fine houses—they drive away the poor instead of drawing them. The poor laboring man, clad in his overalls, and his poor wife and children, clad in common calico, would feel miserable if seated in such houses. Only another channel in which we are 'drifting.' I am certainly encouraged at your boldness and strength of faith to condemn such things, and pray that your life on earth may be long and filled with boldness to contend for the right and condemn the wrong Many will criticize you for what you have said, while a few will commend. The Gospel Advocate grows better each week."

A. G. Freed preached at Charlotte Avenue, this city, last Lord's day.

Vernon M. Spivey preached at Buford's Chapel, on the White's Creek pike, last Lord's day.

Clayton L. James filled his regular appointment at Philippi Church, in Maury County, Tenn., last Lord's day.

- G. Mitchell Pullias, Miami, Fla., December 4: "Our work here is doing fine. I will give you a fuller report soon"
- W. M. Speck, Sinton, Texas, December 7: "The work is fine. Many at each service. The outlook for the future is fine."
- Emmett G. Creacy, Burkesville, Ky., December 10: "My meeting here in the courthouse starts off well. Good audiences each evening."
- Ben. J. Elston, Covington, Ind., December 11: "A. Ellmore's spirit took its flight at ten minutes after four o'clock this morning."

Jake Hamilton, Alabama City, Ala., December 7: "We had two good services yesterday, with Aruna Clark, of Chattanooga, Tenn., doing the preaching. Interest and attendance good."

- F. B. Srygley preached at Belmont Avenue, this city, last Lord's day. There was one confession and baptism on Wednesday night of last week. The attendance and interest in the work at Belmont are increasing.
- D. S. Ligon, Portales, New Mexico, December 10: "I was at Floyd on Saturday night and at Melrose on Sunday. The cry comes from all over the country, 'Come over and help us,' and I am doing my best to get up interest in this mission."

We are glad to advise that Sister Maggie McCutchin, who recently underwent an operation at the Protestant Hospital, this city, is rapidly convalescing. Sister McCutchin is the matron of the Tennessee Orphan Home at Columbia, Tenn.

Married, in the parlor of the Grand Hotel, Cincinnati, Ohio, Tuesday evening, December 8, Mary Lucille Stanforth, of Hillsboro, Ohio, and John Valentine Armstrong Traylor, of Louisville, Ky., F. L. Rowe, publisher of the Christian Leader, officiating.

- G. A. Dunn, Jr., Avon Park, Fla., December 3: "My last meeting at Jasper, Ala., with T. W. Phillips, Jr., of Shreveport, La., assisting, resulted in two baptisms and one from the 'digressives,' and, we hope, much other good. This coming Sunday I am to begin at Rock Springs, Texas, which will be my last meeting of the year."
- C. F. Johnson, Bloomington, Ind., December 9: "I have examined 'The Bible vs. Theories of Evolution,' and have decided that each of our children need a copy. You will find enclosed a check for nine dollars, for which you will hustle along one-half dozen copies. I feel that a copy should be in possession of every college student."
- Dr. C. V. Stephenson, of Centerville, Tenn., made a very pleasant visit to the Gospel Advocate office last week. Dr. Stephenson is one of the best-known and most highly respected citizens of Hickman County, and we are glad to have him pay us a visit. Dr. Stephenson has long been a subscriber to the Gospel Advocate, and is one of its best friends.
- B. W. Davis, Nashville, Tenn., December 7: "I preached at Hillsboro, in Williamson County, Tenn., December 6, morning and night, with large attendance and good interest. The Lord willing, I will be with them again the first Lord's day in January. My time is open for the third and fourth Sundays. Any place desiring my services will please write me."

It seems that the Baptists and John R. Clark are anxious for a debate in East Nashville. We have brethren by the baker's dozen that will meet Clark. A. G. Freed has already signed fair propositions that cover the issue and submitted them to the Baptists. If the Baptists do not back out, there will soon be a debate in East Nashville. Brother Srygley says he will be there.

J. N. Armstrong, Morrillton, Ark., December 7: "I regard 'Elam's Notes' the very best of the kind published. Brother Elam's long years of study of the Bible, his consecration to the cause of Christ, and his many years as a teacher of the Bible peculiarly fit him for the writing of these 'Notes.' Then the tenacity with which he clings to the naked teaching of God makes him a safe guide in the study of that teaching. I, therefore, heartily and unreservedly commend 'Elam's Notes' as the best known to me."

- F. A. Dale, Bonham, Texas, November 30: "R. D. Smith closed a very successful series of meetings here yesterday. There were four additions to the church. Good interest was manifested throughout the meeting. Brother Smith is now preaching regularly for the church here, and is doing an excellent work. The church is encouraged and doing more for our Lord than ever before."
- R. E. Shaub, who teaches a splendid class of young ladies and gentlemen on Lord's-day morning in the meetinghouse of the Twelfth Avenue Church, this city, led the Bible school last Lord's day. Brother Shaub had forty-seven on roll, forty-seven present, twelve visitors, two new pupils. Total present, sixty-one. Contribution, seven dollars and ninety-five cents. Chapters read, seven hundred and forty-one.

E. N. Glenn, San Diego, Cal., December 7: "A nice crowd was out yesterday; attendance slim at night. The climate here now is ideal. Brother Jennings, of Indiana, was with us yesterday. At night we had several short talks from the brethren. Concerning our church directory, some of the States are making a good showing, while others are very dilatory. Brethren, let me urge that this matter be prosecuted at once. Several brethren are designating the city or town where the church is located without giving street address. Please give this when possible."

H. Leo Boles preached at Twelfth Avenue, this city, last Lord's day. The Bible study on Lord's-day morning had five hundred and forty-two on roll, with five hundred and thirty-eight present, twenty-seven visitors, thirty-six new pupils, and with a contribution of thirty-seven dollars and eighty-six cents. During the week those in the Bible study read four thousand six hundred and eighty-three chapters in the Bible. There are one hundred and thirteen pupils in the school under four years of age, the youngest being sixteen months old. The oldest scholar is eighty-seven years old. George S. Davis, one of the elders of the church, had the youngest and oldest stand side by side before the school. Two were baptized on Wednesday night of last week, and one was baptized last Lord's-day night. There were also two restorations and one confession at the night services.

J. N. Armstrong, Morrillton, Ark., December 7, to E. A. Elam: "Your book, 'The Bible versus Theories of Evolution,' is a valuable contribution to Christian literature. It is nicely bound and well edited; in every way a nice book. I am glad you conceived the idea of bringing out this book. I could wish I had an article in it. I thank you for the opportunity, and regret that, with all my other responsibilities, I did not take one more. This book is timely and fills a place that was empty. I am sorry we have been so slow in meeting this need. Really the enemy found us unprepared, caught us sleeping. But I am glad we are waking up, and I believe your book will be a great help in stirring all who read it to take a new hold on God and his book. I trust the book may have a good sale and that hundreds may read it and be blessed."

E. S. Kerr, Brookport, Ill., December 10: "Your reply to Brother Moser about preachers' meetings is so good that I feel that I would be doing wrong to you and the cause we love so well to withhold our encouragement from you for the warning you are giving the brotherhood in its departure from the faith in its embryo state. D. Lipscomb, to my mind, was the greatest man that the church has ever had since the days of the apostles, because he at all times taught 'safety first,' and that kept him to the rule, where inspiration spoke, he would speak; and where it was silent, he would be silent. His long life proved this. He never did vary from the truth or safe side of a question, as most of our great men have done; and I want to say that it seems to me that you are following in his footsteps. May God bless you with a long life in his service."

God bless you with a long life in his service."

T. W. Phillips, Wewoka, Okla., December 6: "Since the death of my personal friend and our dear brother in the Lord, J. C. McQuiddy, I have not been in personal contact (in the way of letter writing) with any of the Gospel Advocate force. But your front-page articles have so attracted my attention, and especially the one of December 3, I just must be excused and allowed to congratulate you. I believe in giving flowers to the living, and I doubt I Paul, James, or John, or Abraham, Isaac, or Jacob, ever stood higher in the estimate God places upon his servants in their faithfulness than you now stand before Him who demands loyalty on the part of man. You seem to be bold, and yet you are meek. You seem to be kind, and yet you are positive and firm. Old Sanballat and Geshem tried to get Nehemiah to meet them in some one of the villages of the plain of Ono, that they might bring about a compromise with him. Nehemiah refused. He was true to his God and God's people. So are you. I am proud of you, and may God bless and keep you for that crowning day."

EDITORIAL

TWO CAPTAIN GENERALS.

BY F. W. SMITH.

As a basis for some remarks on the above subject, the following is submitted: "And the king said unto his servants, Know ye not that there is a prince and a great man fallen this day in Israel?" (2 Sam. 3: 38.) The man to whom reference is here made was Abner, who had been most foully and treacherously murdered by Joab, the captain general of King David's army and a man of powerful political prestige, so much so that David suspended the law of execution on that account.

THE HISTORY OF ABNER.

Abner was the son of Ner, brother to Kish, the father of King Saul, the first king of Israel, and consequently first cousin to Saul. Abner accompanied Saul in his excursions seeking to find and take the life of David, and after the death of Saul he advanced as the chief counsel and stay of Saul's family. Later he proclaimed Ishbosheth, the unfortunate son of Saul, king of Israel in opposition to David, to whom God had given the kingdom over all the people of Israel. It was a bold and daring scheme on the part of Abner, and finally cost him his life.

WAR BETWEEN THE TWO KINGS.

With Abner leading the forces of Ishbosheth and Joab leading those of David, a great battle was fought at Gibeon. The battle was lost to Abner; and being pursued by Asahel, the youngest brother of Joab, after repeated warnings from Abner, he was finally slain in selfdefense. This incurred the eternal enmity of Joab, and the spirit of revenge slumbered within his breast, only waiting the opportunity to satiate itself with the blood of Abner.

ISHBOSHETH'S MISSTEP.

Abner contracted a marriage with Rizpah, King Saul's concubine, and this very much displeased Ishbosheth. who severely reproved Abner for the step he had taken. (See 2 Sam. 3: 6-11.) For this lack of political diplomacy, Ishbosheth lost the counsel and generalship of Abner, who became so indignant at the reprimand that he swore he would deliver the kingdom of Ishbosheth over to David.

ABNER'S NEGOTIATIONS.

At once Abner begins the conspiracy to deliver the kingdom to David by dispatching messengers to David and proposing the formation of a league with himself. (2 Sam. 3: 12-15.) But Abner was a shrewd politician, and he knew that he would have to reckon with the elders of Israel in such a move as he had begun. This he did by reminding the elders that in time past they had desired to be the subjects of David (2 Sam. 3: 17), and now was the opportune time to consummate their former wishes.

THE LEAGUE CONSUMMATED.

A meeting was arranged between Abner with twenty of his supporters and King David at Hebron. Here the compact, or league, was ratified, and David honored his guests with a royal feast. (2 Sam. 3: 20.) This was a political bargain that did no credit to either Abner or King David; but such has always been true among the rulers of men.

ABNER GOES TO BRING THE PEOPLE.

Abner had now made a bargain to deliver that which did not belong to him, and he must go to preach rebellion among the subjects of Ishbosheth. (2 Sam. 3: 21.) He goes, too, with David's blessings upon him, and, no doubt, with the feeling and ambition in his heart that when all was consummated he would occupy a very exalted and important position in the cabinet of King David. his own estimation, he would become a mighty man of state before whom the common people would bow and do his bidding. Little did Abner dream of the storm raging in the bosom of Joab, waiting to burst in all its fury upon the victim of his hate. He departs upon an errand of treachery, only to meet in the near future a tragic death under the cover of treachery from another.

JOAB'S HOUR HAS COME.

The long-sought opportunity for the outpouring of Joab's spirit of revenge is in sight. Returning from a military exploit, Joab learns that his old enemy, Abner, had actually been on the ground, and what is now to be done must be done quickly and secretly. Hence, after expressing his surprise that David let Abner escape on the ground that he came to deceive the king, he dispatched messengers after Abner, perhaps in the name of David. and he returned from the well of Sirah (2 Sam. 3: 22-26) to Hebron. Never was a more treacherous, cold-blooded, and unprovoked murder committed than Joab, the great general of David's army, now enacts. Taking Abner aside under the pretense of speaking to him quietly and confidentially, Joab foully takes his life, and stained his soul with the blood of another.

JUSTICE IS THWARTED.

The law of God demanded the life of Joab for the crime he had committed. "Whoso sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed: for in the image of God made he man." (Gen. 9: 6.) This law was incorporated in the Jewish economy. "Moreover ye shall take no ransom for the life of a murderer, that is guilty of death; but he shall surely be put to death." (Num. 35: 31.)

The blood of the murdered cries to God from the ground. "The voice of thy brother's blood crieth unto me from the ground." (Gen. 4: 10.) There is but one way to cleanse the earth of such blood. Hence, God says: "So ye shall not pollute the land wherein ye are: for blood, it polluteth the land; and no expiation can be made for the land for the blood that is shed therein, but by the blood of him that shed it." (Num. 35: 33.) This law was enacted for the protection of society, for the purification of the earth out of which man's body was made, and God has never repealed nor modified this law. Society needs the same protection to-day it has ever needed, and God has ordained the civil ruler and power to execute the law. Speaking of the civil ruler, Paul says: "For he is a minister of God to thee for good. But if thou do that which is evil, be afraid; for he beareth not the sword in vain: for he is a minister of God, an avenger for wrath to him that doeth evil." (Rom. 13: 4.) Joab went unpunished because David was afraid of his power with the people.

CONCLUSIONS.

- 1. The old saying, "All is fair in love and war," is wholly untrue. Abner acted treacherously and played the unprincipled politician. In what sense he was a "prince and a great man" must be considered regarding his military genius and political strategy.
- 2. The wisest of men make egregious blunders, as witnessed in Abner intrusting himself to Joab. His ambition and craving for political honors caused him to die the death of a fool. "And the king lamented for Abner, and said, Should Abner die as a fool dieth? Thy hands were not bound, nor thy feet put into fetters: as a man falleth before the children of iniquity, so didst thou fall." (2 Sam. 3: 33, 34.) Not in battle, not by accident, nor at the hand of justice did Abner die, but because of his own folly his blood flowed.
- 3. In the miscarrying of justice regarding the punishment justly due Joab, we can but be reminded of the condition of these United States. Chief Justice Taft of the United States Supreme Court has recently said: "The administration of the criminal laws of the United States is a disgrace to civilization." One of the outstanding characters of early American history was Samuel Chase, one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence. While he was on the bench as a judge in Baltimore, the following incident is related of him:

A riot over party affairs culminated in the tarring and feathering of two men. Two citizens were arrested by the sheriff, who deemed them so prominent that they would not need to give a bond to make certain they would come to the court session.

"Then," the judge answered, "you must go to jail."
He ordered the sheriff to take the accused men to jail, but the officer demurred. Chase then asked him to summon the posse comitatus to his assistance, but the sheriff explained that he could get no one to serve.

explained that he could get no one to serve.

"Summon me, sir!" Judge Chase exclaimed. "I wil be the posse comitatus. I will take them to jail."

A member of the bar interposed. He advised the judge to let the affair blow over, as the latter's life might be endangered. This suggested pussy-footing did not please the man on the bench

"God forbid," he emphatically replied, "that my countrymen should be guilty of so daring an outrage. Sir, with the blessing of God, I will do my duty. They may destroy my property, they may pull my house down own my head—yea, they may make a widow of my wife and my children fatherless; but, with the blessing of God, I will do my duty, be the consequences what they may. The life of one man is of little consequence compared to the prostration of the laws of the land." (Dearborn Independent.)

If we had more such judges and juries to enfore the laws, regardless of all consequences, we would have a better country in which to rear our sons and daughters. But filthy lucre and politics have such a hold on the body politic that our courts seem to be powerless and helpless. This, however, is not to be understood as having reference to any particular official or court in our country. Frequently our judges, attorney-generals, and other officials are handicapped by the fact that the best class of citizens refuse to coöperate with said officials and seek in every way to escape jury service and appearance before the grand juries to assist in the prosecution of the criminal class.

"RAILING JUDGMENTS."

BY E. A. ELAM.

But Michael the archangel, when contending with the devil he disputed about the body of Moses, durst not bring against him a railing judgment, but said, The Lord rebuke thee. But these rail at whatsoever things they know not: and what they understand naturally, like the creatures without reason, in these things are they destroyed. (Jude 9, 10.)

Jude refers to the characters mentioned previous to and following these verses. They are despicable.

I do not know when this contention and dispute between Michael and the devil over the body of Moses took place. It may have been when Moses was buried; but who knows? I know what some writers say about this. But we all know it occurred, and only the lesson God teaches from it concerns us. Speculation concerning it can do no good and may do much harm.

The point emphasized is that Michael, "the archangel," called, in Dan. 10: 13, "one of the chief princes," and in Dan. 12: 1, "the great prince," did not bring against the devil even "a railing judgment," or, as in the Authorized Version, "a railing accusation." One so pure and holy and mighty as Michael did not bring against one so low and wicked as the devil such an accusation or judgment, but calmly said: "The Lord rebuke thee." Then, cannot brethren, who are in no way comparable to Michael, but who are full of mistakes and blunders and sin, who are altogether fallible, and who lack also very much indeed of knowing all they might yet learn of the revealed will of God, treat others who are by no means as vile as Satan-can they not, at least, treat one another as well as Michael treated the devil? Can they not say to brethren, "The Lord rebuke thee," if this much were necessary? Or is this too mild?

Some one, as quoted by Macknight, says Michael would "not offend God in doing a thing so much beneath the dignity andp erfection of his nature. . . . a thing to which angels have no disposition, so I believe they have no talent, no faculty at it; the cool consideration whereof should make all men, especially those who call themselves divines, and especially in controversies about religion, ashamed and afraid of this manner of disputing."

Railing, slander, detraction, calumny, speech injurious to another's good name, etc., are beneath the dignity and character of all real Christians, whether preachers of the gospel or not. They have no disposition, no spirit, to rail at or to speak reproachfully of others, or to detract from the good name of others; they have no talent or qualification for such work. They are incapable of such language and conduct. They have not cultivated such. It is beneath them. Preachers of the gospel of peace and good will and unity in Christ are commanded by the Lord to prove themselves examples in all that is true and pure and good; if not, they are not faithful preachers of the gospel. Indeed, they are ashamed and afraid of any unbecoming speech and manner and conduct.

The characters described by Jude "rail at whatever things they do not know." Sometimes the less one knows of the truth of God, the less of the spirit of Christ one has, the more one rails, the more abusive of others one becomes. The more one really knows of the word of God, the more one grows in "the grace and knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ," the firmer, the stronger in the faith, the more courageous, the truer and kinder and gentler and more patient and more forbearing one is. These are manifestations of faith and growth and strength.

Let us read 2 Pet. 2 and note well the covetous, unrighteous, lascivious, self-willed, ungodly, etc., characters Peter mentions. They walk after the lust of the flesh, "despise dominion," and "tremble not to rail at dignities." They are "creatures without reason, born mere animals, to be taken and destroyed, railing in matters whereof they are ignorant, etc. But in verse 11 Peter says: "Whereas angels, though greater in might and power, bring not a railing judgment against them before the Lord." Let us note, too, that the ones here who are "ignorant" and "without reason" are the ones who do the railing. Angels, so much "greater in might and power," in sublime dignity and purity and holiness, do not rail against such before the Lord. The Lord will rebuke them.

Thayer, in his Greek-English Lexicon, gives the meaning of the word translated "railing" in Jude and 2 Pet. 2: 11, 12 as, "slander, detraction, speech injurious to another's good name," and cites Matt. 12: 31; 15: 19; Mark 3: 28; 7: 22; Eph. 4: 31; Col. 3: 8; 3: 28; 7: 22; 1 Tim. 6: 4; Jude. In two of these passages he gives the meaning as "blasphemy." In 2 Pet. 2: 11 he says, "a judgment pronounced in reproachful terms." "Specially, impious and reproachful speech injurious to the divine majesty." The verb means, he says, "to speak reproachfully, rail at, revile, calumiate;" "to utter blasphemy; and he cites the passages in which the word occurs. From this we learn that which God condemns in all these passages in which occurs the word which is translated "railing."

Let us not overlook the fact that all sin of every kind, by whomsoever committed, if that is "railing," speaking cvil of others, etc., is condemned by the Lord, and every teacher and preacher of the gospel must not shun to study and teach and preach this condemnation; but this must be done in the language and spirit and purpose of the Lord.

3 John 9, 10 gives the sinful course pursued by Diotrephes and his treatment of John and other good men. He was ruled by a bad and wicked spirit. John speaks very clearly, firmly, and positively concerning this course of Diotrephes and of his own determination to deal with him according to his own just deserts; but he did not abuse him or rail at him.

To speak the plain truth in regard to a wrongdoer and to act faithfully according to the will of God is not abuse or slander or railing; but to do this requires more faith and prayer, grace and courage, than to abuse and bemean, rant and rail.

Paul's treatment of Alexander, the coppersmith, who did him much evil and greatly withstood his words, and against whom he warned Timothy, was becoming the dignity, faith, justice, and strength of an apostle, and, therefore, of a Christian. Alexander was an active opposer of the truth and Paul's enemy. Paul says: "The Lord will render to him according to his works." (See 2 Tim. 4: 14, 15.) This is similar to Michael's declaration to the devil: "The Lord rebuke thee." This is enough, because the rebuke of the Lord and the justice rendered by the Lord according to one's work will be sufficient and will be sure to follow, whatever that work may be.

BROTHER J. J. WALKER HAS LEFT US. BY F. B. SRYGLEY.

Brother J. J. Walker preached his final sermon at Woodland Street Church, this city, on November 29, 1925. He called the sermon "My Benediction."

There was a report of this final meeting in one of the daily papers of the city. Several things were said in praise of Brother Walker's work here. This report says, among other things: "The growth, influence, and membership of the Woodland Street Christian Church during the seven years' pastorate of Mr. Walker speak eloquently of his ability, and the local congregation expects to see a continuation of this ability in his new field. He accepted the pastorate at the Woodland Street Christian Church, January 1, 1919, shortly after the close of the War. At that time the church roll showed one hundred and eighty-one members. Since that time it has increased to a congregation of over five hundred members."

These figures show up well for Pastor Walker. They show an increase of over three hundred and nineteen in the seven years. The report does not tell from what source this respectable increase came. It will be noted that the report says "the church roll showed one hundred and eighty-one members." That may have been the fault of the roll, and, therefore, quite a large part of the increase was brought about by a revision of the "church roll." I have not heard of any great ingathering by baptism.

I must confess that one hundred and eighty-one was quite a short roll for a church that had been standing as long as the Woodland Street Church. The older people of that part of the city know that the Woodland Street Church was established and built up by the labors of Brethren Lipscomb and Sewell before Brother Walker was born. Their first house was built largely with money that came through the hands of David Lipscomb, and the congregation was built up largely by the preaching of E. G. Sewell. It was the first congregation of Christians only that was established in East Nashville.

Some forty years ago the Woodland Street Church became dissatisfied with the plain word of God that had been preached so faithfully by the lamented E. G. Sewell and insisted that if they had the missionary societies and other aids to the church, they could accomplish wonders. They continued to agitate these things till they got their unauthorized human organizations and drove Brother Sewell and others out of the congregation.

The only missionary convention I ever visited in Tennessee was held in the old Woodland Street Church. The visiting brethren who go to such things were here in great numbers, and they were free to point out the mistakes of those "old fogies" who were in the way of the progress of "our plea" and "our growth." I was a visitor at that convention for one day, and heard one of those fellows make what he doubtless thought was a fine speech on "Men, Money, and Method." Of course they liad the men, as the speaker himself was a living witness to that fact: the money they could easily raise with their many unscriptural ways of raising money; and, therefore, they only lacked method. At the climax of this great (?) speech the speaker exclaimed: "Would to God we had the method of the Methodists!" Though the Woodland Street Church had full sway at all the method they desired, yet when Brother Walker came to Woodland Street Church to be its pastor "the church roll showed [only] one hundred and eighty-one members." Thirty years of the "method of the Methodists," yet the roll showed only one hundred and eighty-one members! I would guess that they had that many when they drove Brother Sewell and others out by their "method of the Methodists."

This report further says of Brother Walker: "He was born in Plantersville, Ala., in 1888, and began his first school and college work at Highland Home College in Southern Alabama." I do not know where Brother Walker learned his "method of the Methodists" in his religion, but I am sure he never learned it at Highland Home, as that school was established and run for many years by the late J. M. Barnes.

In giving the many things that Brother Walker belonged to, the report says: "He has been prominently identified in other activities, as a member of the Y. M. C. A. board of directors; of the Ex-Convict Relief Association; member of the Davidson County Anti-Tuberculosis Association; member of the board of directors of the Tennessee Anti-Saloon League; president of the Ministers' Alliance of Nashville, 1924-25. He was also the regular monthly pastor of the Florence Crittenton Home. Mr.

Walker is a member of both the Pythian and Masonic orders. He never learned all these things from Brother Barnes of Highland Home. My first recollection of reading after J. M. Barnes was in the Gospel Advocate when he wrote over the pen name of "The Little Man." He convinced me then that a Christian could do all that God requires him to do simply as a Christian in the church of the New Testament. Brother Walker seemed to have joined everything that came his way.

As a climax to the many great things Brother Walker did, this report closes with the following: "A few months ago Mr. Walker, always interested in evangelistic work, founded his sixth church since entering the ministry. This work was completed in the town of Sparta, Tenn., after a meeting of only ten days. There was not a Disciples of Christ Church in the city at the beginning of the meeting, nor was there a membership. After a tendays' tent meeting, however, he reported upon his return to the Woodland Street Christian Church that a congregation of thirty-four members had been started, a five-thousand-dollar church lot secured, and a fund of thirty-five hundred dollars in the treasury."

The brother could not leave us without referring to his work in the needy field of Sparta. He "founded his sixth church since entering the ministry." This work was completed in the town of Sparta, Tenn. This is the same work the brother reported a few weeks ago in his church paper when he said: "Religiously, neither Africa nor India presents a greater need. Prejudice and hate are the order of the day. It is nothing less than pitiful, inasmuch as it takes one back to the spirit of barbarous days." If what the brother said in that paper was true, it certainly was time to found a church there.

In the report here under consideration the brother says: "There was not a Disciples of Christ Church in the city at the beginning of the meeting, nor was there a membership." The paper that published this, of course, knew nothing about it; but Walker, who furnished the information, had every reason to know that there are more disciples of Christ in Sparta according to population than there are in Nashville or Memphis. True, the church there never called itself the "Disciples of Christ Church," neither is it called that in the Bible. The church there calls itself "the church of Christ," or "the church of God," or "the church," and the members are individually disciples of Christ, or Christians. It will be noted that this quotation says that there was not a "Disciples of Christ Church" in Sparta till Walker founded one, and that when he came back to Nashville he reported his work to the "Woodland Street Christian Church." I wonder if he did slip off up to Sparta and found a different church to the one he was pastor of at Woodland Street? He knew there were disciples in Sparta, and Christians also, but to make out a case of founding a church he got up a new name for it-"Disciples of Christ Church."

But Brother Walker has gone to Memphis. I am sorry to give him up. I wanted to keep in touch with him and try to teach him not to divide the church over the use of an organ in the worship. He says the word means "with or without," but he will divide the church in order to have it with. Good-by, Brother Walker. I do wish you could be contented to worship "as it is written."

"THE OTHER FELLOW'S SIDE." BY MRS. E. A. ELAM.

I clipped the following little poem for my own use, but I think it so good that I want to share it with the readers of the Gospel Advocate. It applies in the home, in the congregation—everywhere.

Years since I found that it was not the part of wisdom and justice to condemn the actions of others too quickly.

We should stop and ask ourselves the question, could we do as well as others have done under similar circumstances? Asking this question will prevent our making the remark so often heard that, if we were they, we would do this or that. This is an easy thing to say and a difficult thing to do. Would it not be wiser and better to say, we do not know under similar circumstances what we would do, but that we would try to do the best we know.

If we would look at "the other fellow's side," we would, at least, be more charitable and express judgment less harsh.

Jesus puts "the other fellow's side" in the most forceful way when he says: "All things therefore whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, even so do ye also unto them; for this is the law and the prophets."

THE OTHER FELLOW'S SIDE.

When you're forming your opinions,
Do it carefully—go slow;
Hasty judgments oft are followed
By regretting—that I know;
And in argument be careful
Not too quickly to deride—
Try to look upon the subject
From the other fellow's side.

Ah, if we would use but caution,
And a little less of self;
Think a little more of kindness,
And a little less of pelf;
Try to help the other fellow,
Not to hurt him—don't you see
How much fairer, brighter, better,
This old world of ours would be?

O'er and often I've discovered
That the other fellow knew
Lots of things about some subjects
Which I didn't think were true;
And I'd still be groping vainly,
In my flick'ring light and dim,
If I hadn't hesitated
And hearkened unto him.

Keep the path your mind would travel
Broad and open all the way;
Walk with Wisdom's comrade, Caution,
Heeding all he has to say;
And no matter what arises,
Ere against it you have cried,
Try to look upon the subject
From the other fellow's side.

QUERY DEPARTMENT

BY H. LEO BOLES

- (1) Does a sister who has separated from her husband for cruelty, and obtained a divorce on those grounds, have a scriptural right to marry again? (2) Does the word "fornication," as used in Matt. 19: 9, have a "broad meaning?" Does it include other causes for divorce or separation than adultery?—A SISTER IN CHRIST.
- 1. No. Jesus said: "It was said also, Whosoever shall put away his wife, let him give her a writing of divorcement: but I say unto you, that every one that putteth away his wife, saving for the cause of fornication, maketh her an adulteress: and whosoever shall marry her when she is put away committeth adultery." (Matt. 5: 31, 32.) Again, Jesus said: "Have ye not read, that he who made them from the beginning made them male and female, and said, For this cause shall a man leave his father and mother, and shall cleave to his wife; and the two shall become one flesh? So that they are no more two, but one flesh. What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder. They say unto him, Why then did Moses command to give a bill of divorcement, and to put her away? He saith unto them, Moses for your hardness of heart suffered you to put away your wives: but from the beginning it hath not been so. And I say unto you, Whosoever shall put away his wife, except for fornication, and shall marry another, committeth adultery: and he that marrieth her when she is put away committeth This expresses what is (Matt. 19: 4-9.) adultery." usually called "the scriptural cause for divorce."
- 2. The word "fornication" as used here does not have a "broad meaning." Its meaning is very specific and easily understood. It comes from the Greek word "porneia," and means, according to Thayer, fornication, prostitution. It means "an illicit sexual intercourse in general." The verb means "to prostitute one's body to the lust of another." This word does not include other causes for divorce or separation than adultery.

A preacher after serving the church here for about eleven months satisfactorily accepted a call to El Paso, Texas. Before leaving, he bought a car on the installment plan. He got an elder and another brother on his notes as security for over two hundred dollars. The notes fell due and the securities paid the debt. They complained to the preacher, and he replied with insulting letters. They threatened to expose him, and he unwillingly paid all except forty-five dollars, which he still dowes. He also left unpaid a grocer's bill of over thirty dollars, and to one of his own brethren also a milk bill of eight dollars. These things, being known, have greatly damaged the cause and several have quit attending church. Nothing has been done by the church about the matter. Now, what is the duty of this church to that preacher, and what is that preacher's duty toward this church?—An Elder.

Our brother presents in the above a very serious case and one that is all too common. There are two questions involved in this.

First, what is the duty of the church toward this preacher? It is the duty of the church to pay or give to that preacher all that it promised him. The church should meet its financial obligations to the preacher and to every one else. Churches frequently make arrangements for a preacher to come and work with them and promise a certain amount. After a time, when the newness of the preacher has worn off, the church begins to fail in meeting its obligations to the preacher. Such is not right. I do not know anything about the case mentioned above, except what is stated. It may be that the church has met fully and promptly its obligations to the preacher. It is also the duty of the church to admonish the preacher and encourage him to pay his debts and "take thought for things honorable in the sight of all (Rom. 12: 17.) If the preacher does not meet his obligations, and will not when he can, and leaves the congregation and goes to work with another church, then the church which he leaves should report his conduct to the elders of the church where he has gone to labor. The elders of the church to which the preacher goes should encourage and admonish the preacher to go to the former church, or members of same, and pay his just debts. No elders of the church should employ a dishonest preacher, and no preacher is honest who can and yet will not pay his debts.

The second question raised is, what is the duty of the preacher toward the church? It is the duty of the preacher to be fair and honest with all. He should be an example in promptly meeting his obligations to other members of the church. He cannot effectually teach others to be honest and upright, when at the same time he is dishonest in meeting his own obligations. preacher must meet his obligations whether others meet their obligations to him or not. A failure on the part of others to pay him may make it hard on him to meet his financial obligations to others. But a failure on the part of others to meet their obligations to him does not in any sense release him from his obligations. He must do right whether others do right or not; he must be honest whether others are honest with him or not; he must pay his debts whether others pay their debts or not. It is the duty of the preacher, like all others who have done wrong, to repent of that wrong and acknowledge it and ask for forgiveness. There are many preachers who are traversing the country, wearing fine clothes, enjoying the hospitality of Christian homes, and having the confidence of good people, who are dishonest and will not pay their debts. Such preachers ought to be exposed and brought to repentance. They should be denied the confidence and fellowship of churches and Christian homes until they have truly repented and brought forth fruits meet for repentance. No church should encourage a preacher who has a list of debts wherever he has lived; neither should any church encourage a preacher who owes every brother that was kind enough to trust him for money.

Please answer the following through the columns of the Gospel Advocate: (1) I heard a preacher say in his pulpit that God said that Abraham sinned and that Abraham lied. Does the Bible say he did? (2) The same preacher said if any one were to say he lived without sin, you could truthfully tell him he had lied.—W. F. SANDERS, Friendship, Tenn.

- 1. Abraham was human. Upon two occasions he deceived. Gen. 12: 10-20 gives a record of his deceiving Pharaoh. He represented Sarah, his wife, as being his sister. Again, he deceived Abimelech, telling him that Sarah was his sister. (See Gen. 20: 1-17.)
- 2. "If we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us. . . . If we say that we have not sinned, we make him a liar, and his word is not in us." (1 John 1: 8-10.) "He that saith, I know him, and keepeth not his commandments, is a liar, and the truth is not in him." (John 2: 4.) "There is none righteous, no, not one." (Rom. 3: 10.) "Who can say, I have made my heart clean, I am pure from my sin?" (Prov. 20: 9.) Many other scriptures could be quoted on the above question, but these are sufficient to show that none are entirely free from sin.

THE MYSTERY OF MISSING GIRLS.

What about the one hundred thousand girls who leave their homes each year and are listed as "missing?" More than one-third of them never return and are not found. If this year is like preceding years, there will be an increase in the number of young people who go away from their home surroundings and drop from sight.

The summer time affects young people and awakens in them the wanderlust for new sights and new sounds. It is the summer months that are the dangerous months. Girls do surprising things on warm spring days. They suddenly decide that home is an irksome place, that the youth of the neighborhood are tiresome, and that over in the big city there are happy times and excitement and new things.

It is generally to the big cities that they go. New York is the focal point for thousands of them; Washington, the capital, is another; and other cities have their attractions. Los Angeles, because it is the motion-picture center of the world, is a great magnet for many girls who hope to attract some attention for a moving-picture career.

Wandering daughters do not generally comprehend the agony that they are subjecting their parents to. Sometimes a quarrel with father or mother, and a thoughtless girl disappears, thinking to punish her parents. But the punishment is out of all proportion to the impatience the parents may have shown. There is no terror quite so undoing and painful as the fear and apprehension of a mother whose daughter has disappeared. Hardly any girl in her right mind would want to make her mother suffer the imaginary terrors that accompany the suspense when day after day goes by and no word comes.

But youth is thoughtless. It intends no great wrong. It is seeking. It wants to know for itself. It wants experience.

To glance over the letters that come to the police departments of the large cities tears at the heartstrings. In New York recently there came in one day letters from mothers as far west as Oregon and as far south as Florida. There was a pitiful appeal of a Missouri school-teacher for her missing sister who had fled from their boarding school one romantic spring evening with a traveling salesman.

There was a letter from an old soldier from Virginia who could not tell why his granddaughter did not return from a visit to Northern friends, and still another from a New England mill-town mother who had spent her life savings searching Boston for her sixteen-year-old daughter who had fled one night from home after a family quarrel.

I talked with Mrs. Grace Humiston, of the police department of New York, whose duty it is to try to find these missing girls. She told of the recent case of a young girl from Southern New Jersey, who, she says, is typical of a large class of girls. This girl was walking one Saturday afternoon on the main street of her little town, when she happened to see on the railroad bulletin board the announcement of a special excursion to New York, starting at Philadelphia.

The girl had been discontented for a long time, and on that particular Saturday afternoon she was unusually lonely. She had her week's wages in her bag, eleven dollars. On the impulse of the moment she, like thousands of other girls, decided to go to New York at once. The railroad advertisement had fired her imagination. She stole into the house, hastily packed a bag, and took the trolley to Philadelphia. That same evening she arrived in New York, an ignorant, innocent mite in the midst of sophisticated millions. By the merest accident she happened to fall into the hands of a young man who took her to Mrs. Humiston. The chance happening caught her just before she wandered into one of the worst ganginfested neighborhoods of the great city.

Mrs. Humiston from her years of experience specified that such was not unusual. She said: "I have dealt with a thousand girls who have, like the girl from Southern New Jersey, come to New York without settled purpose or plans for their future. And experience has taught me that it is this very aimlessness of the average missing girl that exposes her to such grave danger. They trust almost everybody who speaks to them."

She told of finding thirty-nine girls who had been marked as "Missing" when working on a murder case. These were restored to their parents in various parts of the nation. But most of them would not stay at home.

She asks: "Do not think that all these girls are necessarily happy in their homes. The chances are that a large number of them run away again. I have known girls who have run away as many as five times in a year, and until the real cause of their desire to get away from home is discovered and dealt with there will be no stopping them."

The last sentence, "there will be no stopping them," is enough to cause every parent to pause and look at the home life and see if it is a contributory cause for the unrest of their own young people. To say that there must be an understanding home is to utter a truism. But how many homes are understanding of youthful motives, intentions, and desires?

Surveying the problem from the testimony of parents and missing daughters and police workers and social welfare workers, there are many contributory causes for girls to feel unhappy at home.

Citing the leading reasons given by the girls themselves, there is first the parents who wish to control the associates of their daughters. Parents should have something to say of their children's companions, but it is the way they say it that counts. There was the case of a daughter who had to accept the attentions of a man whom her parents had chosen for her future husband. She stood it as long as she could and then fled.

There are thousands of homes where father and mother judge their daughters by what they remembered of their youth. It is continually: "When I was a girl, I did thus and so." They fail to appreciate that daughters may resemble their tenth great-grandmother or grandfather more than their own mother. Inherited tendencies leap generations. Then, too, even the best of mothers forget and seek to set a standard that their children resent.

There are the children of foreign parents who seek to rear their children as they were reared in other lands, forgetting that their daughters are products of a new nation with new liberties pressed upon them.

There are homes, thousands of them, that are homes only in name. There are the thoughtless, ignorant mothers who neglect their children, keep a slatternly home, show lack of patience and understanding with their children, and thus reap a reward of thoughtlessness from their own flesh and blood.

What can be done for the solving of the mystery of our missing daughters? The answer is not in larger police forces and more social workers and closer supervision of traveling agencies. The answer rests with the parents. It lies in the homes,

Let there be happy homes where there is a spirit of comradeship between father and daughter and between mother and daughter, and from that home will go no frantic message when the room is found empty.

But understanding homes cannot be achieved in a day. They cannot be resolved into being. They must be the product of consideration, of unselfishness, of appreciation of youth, and of an ability to study the problems from the other side.

One great help, one supreme help, is religion. A police officer who had made a special study of missing young people said: "In the absence of wisdom in a mother's head religion sometimes serves its place, and a foolish mother bringing up her children religiously may escape the shipwreck of her hopes by religion saving the girls when they have inherited little else. The home without religion is generally predestined to misery somewhere along its career."

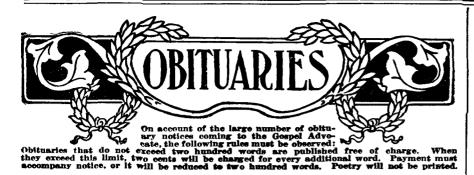

God-fearing parents who strive to understand impetuous youth will be able to come closer to making a happy home than merely wise parents. Children who have the influence of Sunday school with devoted teachers and enthusiastic classmates will be less lonely and will be tied closer.

To found a home where happy, intelligent children will grow up to be a credit to their parents and the community is as great an undertaking for a mother or father as the founding of a State. The possibilities of success are stupendous when we consider that the babies born into it and shaped there are to carry on life, civilization, and culture, and pass them down the ages, influencing the future at all times and all peoples in a more or less decided way. The chances of failure are just as great. The mistake made by a mother in carelessly bringing up her daughter has countless times wrecked the happiness of unborn generations and steeped the world in misery.

The time to keep a girl from running away from home begins from her birth and before. It goes all through the period of childhood and dawning intelligence. Love, patience, sympathy, understanding, and motherly sacrifice are the steel bars that tie growing girls to their homes.

The influence of sensational books, sensational newspapers, and the dance halls in inducing wrong ambitions and false views of life fall flat in the face of a patient, loving, self-respecting, and understanding mother and father. To so live that our daughters will love and respect their homes is the triumph of love.—Uthai Vincent Wilcox, in Exchange.

Each high achievement is a sign and token of the whole nature's possibility. What a piece of the man was for that shining moment, it is the duty of the whole man to be always.

LUTTRELL.

Rachel Luttrell, wife of Brother Henry Luttrell, of Winchester, Tenn., was born on January 9, 1854. She was over seventy-one years of age, was over seventy-one years of age, and had been a Christian for more than forty years. She died on October 27, 1925. She was the mother of six children, and is survived by a husband and four children. Burial services were conducted by the writer, and her body was laid away at Lexie. Thank God for the Christian's hope! May the Lord bless and comfort the bereaved ones. JAMES J. REYNOLDS.

ENTREKIN.

Miss Lillian Entrekin, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Garfield Entrekin, died at the home of her parents, October 23, 1925, at the tender age of thirteen years, five months, and twenty-six days. Lillian obeyed the gospel just one month and four days before the died under the preaching of the she died, under the preaching of the writer. Funeral services were conwriter. Funeral services were conducted by T. C. King, with burial at Shady Grove. She leaves a father, Shady Grove. She leaves a father, mother, four sisters, and four brothers to mourn her death. Her beautiful, sweet life will still live in the hearts and lives of those who knew her best and loved her most. While quite young she gave her heart to the Lord and obeyed from this believing heart the gospel of Christ. To the loved ones I would say: "Be thou faithful unto death," and there will he a happy meeting over there, where be a happy meeting over there, where loved ones will not be separated any more. T. C. KING.

BAKER.

Brother W. D. Baker was born on November 20, 1849, and died on October 30, 1925. He had lived nearly all of his life near Marcella Falls, Tenn. He became a Christian about fifty years ago. He lived faithfully until his death. He was influential as a citizen in his community and a very citizen in his community and a very useful member of the congregation where he worshiped. He reared a large family. The children as they became old enough came into the church. All of them have become useful men and women in the community and in the church. One of the boys, Brother Charley Baker, is a good preacher. I have held several meetings for Brother Baker's home congregation. I made his home my home during the meetings. I have seldom seen a man who took more interest in church work than Brother Baker. He leaves behind him a monument that men will read and by which they will be influenced for good. Like Abel, though dead, he yet speaks. We extend our sympathy to his family in their bereavement.

BUTLER.

On February 5, 1840, Ellen Catherine Daugherty came into this world to remain eighty-five years, more than the allotted time for man to live on this earth. She was married to Calvin G. Butler on October 12, 1857, and to this union eleven children were born. In August, 1897, under the ministry of Elder E. A. Elam, at Cedar Dell, in Marshall County, Tenn., she heard and obeyed the gospel, being baptized by John Ring, who was called "John the Baptist" at that time and place. On October 10, 1925, she left this world for the unknown, from whence no traveler ever returns. Her husband and six children pre-ceded her. For more than fifteen years she made her home with her daughter, Eliza, who was very kind and patient and did all she could for her comfort, and who will miss her most since she is gone. While on a visit to her daughter in Nashville the end came. The remains were laid to rest beneath the sod in beautiful Mount Olivet to await the resurrec-She leaves twelve grandchildren, six great-grandchildren, and one great-great-grandchild, also three sons and two daughters. The first monition that was given was on Satmonition that was given was on Saturday, when Sister Neal came near collapsing, but within a short time revived. The second attack came on Sunday, and this time there could be no mistake. One side was paralyzed and her condition became very serious. On Monday a third stroke was visited upon Sister Neal, and she was com-pletely paralyzed, helpless and un-conscious till Tuesday evening, when her spirit was borne into that sinless land for which we yearn. Sister Neal was born on October 9, 1874, in Trezevant, where she made her home during the entire span of her earthly She became obedient to the gospel at the age of twelve; but for fear she did not fully understand the teachings of the Scriptures on the primary principles of obedience to Christ, she was later immersed again. She was married to T. L. Neal on October 27, 1896. To this union were October 27, 1896. To this union were born three children—Roy, Bob, and Thelma, respectively—all of whom were at her bedside when death came. Brother Neal and the children are faithful members of the church at Trezevant. Sister Neal was one of the most faithful and beloved members of the church in Trezevant. Her faithfulness was shown in the family she reared. The house was inadequate to accommodate her many friends who came to pay their last respects. The writer tried to speak words of comfort to the husband, children, three sisters, and other near kindred and friends. May God comfort and lead them all till they meet her in the "land of fadeless beauty."

THE LORD'S DAY. BY W. N. ABERNATHY.

The first day of the week, evidently known in the New Testament as the "Lord's Day," is set apart as a day of religious devotion It is sad to know that its observance is often entirely disregarded and more often perverted, but it is still sadder to know that such conditions are growing worse. We would not contend for the rigid rules of our Puritan forefathers, who regarded this day as a Sabbath, but insist that it should not be regarded as a day of revelry, visiting, etc. The term "Lord's Day" implies that the day belongs to the Lord, and not a part of it. It should be a day set apart for religious devotion, and nothing should be allowed to mar the sacredness of the order. We have heard the story of the old man who told his son to fill his basket with chips and then told him to fill it with apples at the same time. Often we see people trying to fill the Lord's day with business or pleasure, while they wedge in a few minutes of service to the Lord. Such people do not grow very rapidly "in grace and the knowledge of the truth."

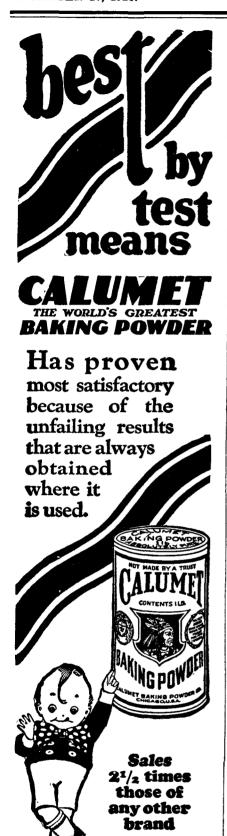

The formation of large business corporations is causing much more secular labor to be performed on Lord's day and thus leading away from its observance. If those who compose these organizations were all devout Christians, they would have a wonderful opportunity to exert a good influence by closing their business as far as possible on that day. Those who work in shops should be given opportunity for visiting and other pleasures during the week, and there would not be so much temptation to forsake the church for such purposes.

This is Sunday afternoon, and I hear a continual roar of dynamite blasting on the new highway a few miles from my home. Such is an insult to the Christian people of the surrounding community, and should not be allowed.

DO YOU KNOW ABOUT BROTHER BECK?

BY PRICE BILLINGSLEY.

During my first meeting in Sparta, Tenn., in the fall of 1908, there stood up a gallant lad and made the good confession and was baptized, who gave immediate promise of making a true, gospel preacher. This was J. Bedford Beck, son of Brother and Sister W. B. Beck, now of Spencer, Tenn.; and Bedford more than fulfilled the high hopes of those who loved him. Boy and man, he has ever been pure and consecrated; and as soon as possible he went away to one of our colleges the better to prepare himself to preach. Then, just as he was beginning to preach, the awful World War enveloped the world. It was the greatest grief the Beck family ever knew that this beloved young man was made to go to war. But before sailing for France he vowed to his mother that he would remain pure and true, would obey the government as far as possible without violating his allegiance to God: and he returned unscathed, his hands never having been dipped in human blood. Then opened to him a great field in South Georgia, and he went to work with a will. I am now in meetings in the very field where he gave his life. I have been with him here in several meetings. His labors have been crowned with marvelous success. and he was instrumental in establishing several congregations in this territory; and it was a wonderful name he made for himself here personally. also. The entire population loves and honors his memory.

But do you know anything of him recently? I dare say not. Through exposure during the war and in the strenuous labors incident to successful work down here his lungs became infected, and he had to give up preaching. He is now in the Government Hospital in Johnson City, Tenn., struggling to regain his shattered health and enter the gospel field again. His wife and baby returned to her people, but all are hopeful of his recovery. Does he complain? Not Bedford! Humble and cheerful, prayerful and devout, he waits and hopes for his release when he can return to his beloved life calling. But since God commands us to remember those in bonds as bound with them, I just wonder if we, his brethren, think upon and properly sympathize with him in this his hour of suffering and thwarted life work? Do we pray for him and assure him and his family of our interest in him? When he and his family were asked what they desired I should say to the brotherhood about him, I was told they wanted nothing said, or it was left to me to say what I pleased. This is said to show he is not soured or resentful. He only waits on, hoping the Lord will enable him to return to the gospel field. I say these things that those who know and love him may not forget him, but, instead, help him where possible. He is worthy of our love and honor. God honors those who honor him.

A PLEA FOR CONSISTENCY.

BY JAMES C. DIXON.

Many articles are appearing in the leading publications of to-day which are of a religious nature. Apparently there is a great deal of difference between the two extremes; however, when one considers the question seriously, there is not as much difference as there seems to be.

The modernist is frank to tell you that he cannot accept all the Bible as being literally true. One will tell you that he cannot believe the story of Eden; another does not understand how the world could have been covered with water within forty days; while still another doubts the sufferings of Job. Many believe that it was never intended for men and women to believe that a fish swallowed Jonah. Quite a few doubt the virgin birth of the Son of man, his resurrection and ascension. Those who publicly announce their belief in part or whole of the above are severely censured by the fundamentalists.

fundamentalists broadcast The "from the housetops" their belief in the Bible as the inspired word of God; that from a religious standpoint it is all-sufficient. But let us consider just a moment. How much of it does he believe? Mr. Fundamentalist, of what church are you a member? He mentions one of the two hundred in the United States. Now, in what book and chapter of the Bible is that church described? O, that particular name is not mentioned in the Bible. Well, now, that is absolutely correct. Of the number of outstanding fundamentalists, how many of them are members of a religious institution of which you can read in the Bible? Brother, "think on these things."

Mr. Fundamentalist, if you believe, as you say, that the Bible is sufficient for all things religious, why be a member of a religious institution of which you cannot read in the Bible?

Again, when we ask him of his creed, he mentions one of the some seventeen hundred in the United States, which is not exactly as the Bible. Paul teaches us that the Scriptures are "profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness." Why not take the Bible as your creed? But you say, "Mine is just as good." If it contains less than the Bible, it may be too little; if it contains more, it may be too much. I remember what the Bible says in Deut. 4: 2; 12: 32; Rev. 22: 18, 19.) If your creed contains just the Bible, why two books?

For the sake of consistency, has not the modernist as much right to remove the first eleven chapters of the book of Genesis as the fundamentalist has to remove Mark 16: 15, 16? Cannot one cut out the story of Jonah as well as another can cut out Acts 2: 38 or Acts 20: 7? What hinders me from removing the story of the virgin birth, when you remove the name of the institution for which Christ died? The principle is one and the same.

There can never be any headway made against the theories which undermine the Bible until those who attempt to defend it agree within themselves to take the Bible, and the Bible alone, to call Bible things by Bible names, to speak where it speaks and to remain silent where it is silent. Mr. Fundamentalist, why not be consistent?

A GOSPEL SONG WORK.

BY A. J. YETETO.

Some of the young people of the churches of Christ in Memphis, Tenn., are asking for a series of song drills; and as I have promised to assist them in such a work, I thought it good to broadcast the announcement, so that others not living in the city might come in and enjoy the work with us. We are to begin the first week in January and run two evenings each week for three months, or twenty-four lessons in all, which may be finished in one month by those out of the city who might come in solely for this school. While theory as a foundation will be taught, this is preëminently a school of gospel song-what to sing, when to sing, and how, both to the leader and the led.

For further information, address C. C. Doggett, 666 Sandier Street, Memphis, Tenn.

MEETINGS HELD THIS YEAR. BY I. A. DOUTHITT.

At this writing I am in my last meeting for this year. This has, in many ways, been the best year of my life. In January I began my work in Florida and have held meetings at the following places: Zolfo Springs, Fla.; Junction City, Tenn.; Riverside, Tenn.; Scottsville, Ky.; Springfield, Tenn.; Louisville, Ky.; Lyles and Lavergne, Tenn.; Benton, Ky.; Centerville, Tenn.; Lynn Grove, Ky.; Latham, Henry, Memphis, Lebanon, Antioch (near Dresden), and Hohenwald, Tenn.: Bethel, Ky.; Nashville, Tenn.: Brookport, Ill. At present I am at Christopher, Ill., with good interest. From this place I shall go home to spend Christmas with my family. I have been out forty-five weeks and held twenty-one meetings. Practically all of them have been well attended. During this time many have been baptized, not a few have confessed their wrongs and returned to the work, and several have come out of the denominations claiming scriptural obedience and announcing their desire to stand upon the Bible

BRADLEY-HARGROVE DEBATE.
BY R. B. HENRY.

The debate between Brother I. B. Bradley, of the church of Christ, and W. O. Hargrove, of the Missionary Baptist Church, which began on November 30, came to a close on December 4. The general church proposition was discussed, each affirming two and one-half days. This debate was held at Poplar Springs, in Stewart County, Tenn., in a Baptist settlement, and was well attended. I am sure that much and lasting good was done. I consider Brother Bradley one of the strongest men we have in the brotherhood in defense of the truth. His arguments are clear and conclusive, and there is not a Baptist under the shining stars that can answer them. Hargrove did not even try, but would bellow out, "Campbellite," "Campbellism," etc. Brother Bradley held himself upon a high plane, coming back with God's eternal truth, and presenting it in such a way that all could see God's plan. I kept time for Brother Bradley, Joe Johnson for Hargrove.

MESSAGE FROM JAPAN.

BY ORVILLE D. BIXLER.

We do not know who is responsible for our receiving the Gospel Advocate, but we are mighty glad to get it, and we want to thank our benefactor. We have received three copies. Some of the articles have been especially helpful, and the reports and discussions of the brotherhood papers help and encourage us. To read these messages makes us feel as though we have had a short visit. The only sacrifice we feel that we make is the loss of associating with our Christian brethren who are able to instruct us in spiritual things. Christian fellowship is a foretaste of heaven, and we feel it when we miss it. Thanks to God, there are a goodly number of missionaries here now, and Japanese brethren, too, whom we love as brethren.

The rural work in Japan is new and slow in yielding fruit, but we are not going to give up so long as we feel that we are pleasing to the Lord in our efforts. The winter season is the farmers' rest time, hence our busy time. We hope to do a good deal of evangelistic work this year in tent and from house to house. It is cold, but the people do not seem to mind the cold. They have only charcoal fires in their own homes; so a tent is not much worse.

Please remember us in your prayers. Pray especially for Sister Andrews. We hope the Lord is healing her.

Greenville, Miss., December 1.—I have just closed my last meeting for this year with the College Hill church of Christ, Texarkana, Ark., with twenty baptized. I now hasten home to pick ten or fifteen bales of cotton that I still have in the field, after which I expect to move. I find that which I expect to move. I find that Brother J. W. Chism, who is now preaching for the Pine Street church of Christ, and Brother J. E. Wainwright have done a fine work at Texarkana, and much of my success was the result of their work. During this year I have been hindered much in my preaching by working on the farm. I have traded off my cotton farm and seventeen thousand dollars of my debt. I will soon move to West Plains, Mo., up in the beautiful Ozarks, where I have traded for a farm, and what time I am not working on the farm for a support for my family and to pay on debts I have been owing so long I will be out preaching the gospel.—J. # MERRY CHRISTMAS AND HAPPY NEW YEAR!

E wish all of our readers a Merry Christmas and a Prosperous New Year.

In the spirit of peace and good will and of universal love, inculcated by the Savior of the world, we wish for all an abundance of happiness and prosperity. We recognize that there should be no religious significance attached to Christmas, as the Scriptures do not reveal the birthday of Christ nor command us observance.

We wish to cordially and gratefully extend our most sincere thanks to our many readers and friends for their liberal patronage through the year. We are exceedingly happy to advise our readers that all of our publications have enjoyed a very substantial increase during the year that is drawing to a close. Many new subscribers have been added to the subscription lists of the Gospel Advocate; our Bible-study helps and Lord's-day school supplies, "Choice Gospel Hymns," and our general book business have enjoyed a prosperity for which we are thankful. We rejoice over the great number of Bibles sold during the year.

We have spared no care nor expense in our efforts to give our great brotherhood and the public in general the very best service at our command. We expect, the Lord being our helper, to put forth still greater energy and to redouble our efforts during 1926. We realize the great good that may be done through circulating good books and by putting the Gospel Advocate into the homes of the people.

There is a feeling of solemn sadness in the passing of the old year. We rapidly approach the eternal world. Nothing that we may say or do can stop the onrush of time nor check the flight of the rapidly passing years. "Your fathers, where are they? and the prophets, do they live forever?" In the struggle for the advancement of pure Christianity, unmixed with the precepts and commandments of men, many great names have appeared upon the stage and performed a part in the great drama. The Gospel Advocate, as it looks back over its sixty-seven years, is inestimably happy in its glorious heritage. We can still hear the sound of war and of the mighty conflict as David Lipscomb, E. G. Sewell, F. D. Srygley, and J. C. McQuiddy, its old-time editors, engaged in the awful struggle to emancipate the people from the dominion of human authority in matters of religion and to restore the primitive doctrine and practice of the apostolic age. The storm still continues and the winds of doctrine still rage upon the great sea; but we are firmly planted upon the Rock of Ages, the Word of God, and we fear no violence or harm.

The Gospel Advocate stands to-day upon the same position upon which it has always stood. It is unalterably committed to the policy of "speaking where the Scriptures speak, and of being silent where the Scriptures are silent." We have no dogmas nor opinions of our own or of others to press upon the attention of the public. We contend that no man should preach or practice anything for which he cannot produce either a direct precept or an approved example in the Bible. None of the controversy in which the Gospel Advocate has been so strenuously engaged for over half a century has been with any man or men who speak "as the oracles of God." We submit that no man can have the love of God in his heart, nor seek the good of his fellow men, without contending "earnestly for the faith which was once for all delivered unto the saints."

Because of the fact that there are fifty-three Thursdays in 1925, there will be no issue of the Gospel Advocate next week. Some papers bring out no edition for one week of every year, generally during the hot summer months; but the Gospel Advocate, as has always been its practice, issues an edition for every week of every year, except those years, occurring now and then, that have fifty-three Thursdays.

We again thank our readers, one and all, for their patronage in the past; and again assuring them of our redoubled efforts to serve them in the future, we wish, not only for every home into which the Gospel Advocate goes, but for all mankind, a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year.

CURRENT COMMENT

By JAMES A. ALLEN

An extract from a piece of propaganda issued by the "Federal Council of the Churches of Christ," whatever that is, divulges the following wonderful information:

Calling upon Christians of America to join them in dedicating themselves to achieve a warless world, Welsh churches have sent a memorial to the Federal Council of Churches.

Making an appeal for the United States to join the League of Nations, the memorial was presented by the Rev. Dr. Gwilym Davies, of Wales, at the annual meeting of the Executive Committee of the Federal Council tonight. It expresses gratification at the part played by the American churches in bringing about the Washington Conference on Limitation of Armament and at the almost unanimous approval of the Permanent Court of International Justice by the churches.

The memorial is on parchment bound in leather. It will be preserved in the archives of the Federal Council. An exact replica has been placed for safe-keeping in the National Library of Wales. The document is signed by officials of the Welsh communions.

The foregoing most momentous event, in the estimation of the great officials of the "Federal Council of Churches," seems to have been worked up especially for the occasion, as a catchy piece of advertising propaganda, by the same class of professional promoters who have created a new pay roll by establishing the "Federal Council" to take over the work of the churches. Notwithstanding the fact that the Founder of the Christian religion, in the judgment hall of the Roman governor, declared, "My kingdom is not of this world," still these great officials of "the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ" seem to be as much at home in politics as in religion.

The "Welsh churches" were out of order in calling on the United States "to join the League of Nations." Not that we condemn the League of Nations. We neither approve nor condemn. But churches degrade themselves and step down from the high position they occupy when they descend into politics, one way or the other. world does not owe its advancement, in any legitimate line of human endeavor, to politics or to politicians. Those who hold office, as well as those who seek office, have their ear to the ground and are governed by the turn of the straws that reveal which way the wind is blowing with the careless and thoughtless public. They are not willing to sacrifice place, power, and popularity, nor to incur the denunciation and criticism that gathers around the heads of those who preach repentance and reformation. And no political measure will make the world better. The only thing that elevates society and benefits the country is the gospel of Jesus Christ. The humblest preacher of the gospel, in the farthest corner of the backwoods, is doing more for the country than its President, and contributes more toward creating the sentiment that demands good laws than lies within the province of any politician.

The following newspaper clipping is both interesting and significant:

Dr. Roger T. Nooe, the new minister of Vine Street Christian Church, and Dr. H. A. Webb, of Peabody College, were guests of honor last night at a largely attended social gathering of the men of the First Presbyterian Church.

In a short address Dr. Nooe dealt with the place of the layman in the work of the church and the kingdom. showed how the world had come to discover that religion is a seven-day-a-week affair, and that greater emphasis is being laid on the relation of religion to business and the everyday affairs of life.

Dr. Webb kept his audience interested and amused with a clever dissertation on some of the solved and unsolved problems of science, finding comfort in the promise that in the end, in every field of human thought, truth is conducting a week's meeting in Winchester, Ky., was also

Dr. Nooe spoke on "the place of the layman in the work of the church and the kingdom," but he did not tell his unbaptized auditors, composed of "the men of the First Presbyterian Church," that the word of God requires penitent believers in Christ to be baptized "for the remission of sins." He declared that "the world had come to discover that religion is a seven-day-a-week affair," but he did not help them to discover that sprinkling is not baptism. He dwelt eloquently on the fact "that greater emphasis is being laid on the relation of religion to business and the everyday affairs of life," but he did' not put any emphasis at all on what Jesus Christ commands "every creature" to do to be saved. "Dr. Webb kept his audience interested and amused" with a lot of things, but he did not dampen the mirth nor quell the laughter by warning them that it is dangerous to live and die in disobedience to God. Clearly his plan is to let men laugh here and do their "weeping and gnashing of teeth" hereafter.

"Dr. Vance, pastor of the church," "was also present," and by his presence indicated approval of Dr. Nooe and his sort of preaching. Those who are sound in the faith will realize that the fact that Dr. Nooe and Dr. Vance are joined hand in hand shows that there is something wrong with Dr. Nooe. Of course, not personally, as both Dr. Vance and Dr. Nooe are citizens of the highest type, and, in addition to their moral standing and worth, are men of great talents and learning. But, doctrinally, both of them repudiate some of the plainest language in the Bible; and while one of them refuses outright to tell sinners what Christ commands them to do to be saved, the other refuses to tell those that have been saved how to live the Christian life. We are not taking undue advantage of either Dr. Vance or Dr. Nooe in publishing this statement. The columns of the Gospel Advocate are open to either one or both of them. If either of them can show that we are in error in making this assertion, we will confess it and retract it. Either one or both of them may have line for line, column for column, page for page.

Dr. Vance has been listed as one of "the ten greatest clergymen in America;" but, great preacher that he is, he much prefers to tell of "My Experience in the Trenches" than to tell what Paul and Silas told the Philippian jailer when he inquired, "Sirs, what must I do to be saved?" It is a tragedy that the preachers refuse to preach. Souls are going down to death eternal in hopeless despair because men in the pulpit refuse to tell them what a loving Savior directs them to do to be saved. We are aware that it is popular, it is fashionable, and it will bring fame and fortune to deliver "perfumed sermons bound up in baby ribbon," but it will never lead a soul to Christ nor tell sinners what to do to be saved.

The greatest and most momentous question that confronts any man is the question concerning his own salvation. Unless he is saved, all that he may accomplish is lost, and his life is a dismal and eternal failure. Jesus said: "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." (Mark 16: 15, 16.) Peter said: "Repent ye, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ unto the remission of your sins." (Acts 2: 38.) a man is saved, receives the remission of his sins, all that he may do, his greatest religious activities, so far as any hope of reward in heaven is concerned, is but "vanity and a striving after wind." Unless he has that love that will obey all that Christ commands, even though he bestow all his "goods to feed the poor" or give his "body to be burned," "it profiteth" him "nothing."

"THE WEIGHTIER MATTERS OF THE LAW."

BY S. H. HALL.

In Matt. 23: 23 we have the following words of our Lord: "Alas for you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites, for you pay the tithe on mint, dill, and cummin, while you have neglected the weightier requirements of the law—just judgment, mercy, and faithful dealing. These things you ought to have done, and yet you ought not to have left the others undone. You blind guides, straining out the gnat while you gulp down the camel!" (Weymouth's Translation—italics mine.)

There is one thing that we should live daily conscious of-viz.: That men we can deceive; but Jehovah, never! "And there is no creature that is not manifest in his sight: but all things are naked and laid open before the (Heb. 4: 13.) eyes of him with whom we have to do." He knows us perfectly and completely and continuously; and he is the One that is to judge us by "the things done in the body, . . . whether it be good or bad." Cor. 5: 10.) It seems that there is no truth more vital, more fundamental, than this. Friends indeed are we to our associates when we stamp indelibly this teaching of our Lord upon their hearts. The day is coming when men will want to change their inconsistent and hypocritical ways, and it will be forever too late. Teach them now while there is hope.

Upon the quotation at the heading of this article I want to make the following comments:

First, our Lord wants a balanced conduct. He speaks of some things being the "weightier requirements of the law," but he does not encourage the idea of these being taught exclusively of the smaller requirements. "These things"—the smaller things—"you ought to have done, and yet you ought not to have left the others undone." Do all that you know Jehovah has commanded is the doctrine of Christ in this verse; and well may we say that when we do only a part and knowingly leave a part undone, he gives us credit for nothing we have done. "Partial obedience is tantamount to disobedience." Read again 1 Sam. 15 and learn this lesson afresh from the conduct of Saul, the first king of Israel. And, too, we should remember that our Lord wants us to swallow neither the gnats nor the camels.

Second, it is plainly stated just what the "weightier matters of the law" are—viz., (1) just judgment, (2) mercy, (3) faithful dealing. How important are these things, and how sad to see those who claim to be disciples of our Lord continually trample them underfoot! Mic. 6: 8 we have these words: "He hath showed thee, O man, what is good; and what doth Jehovah require of thee, but to do justly, and to love kindness, and to walk humbly with thy God?" And the following words are in point here: "Run ye to and fro through the streets of Jerusalem, and see now, and know, and seek in the broad places thereof, if ye can find a man, if there be any that doeth justly, that seeketh truth; and I will pardon her." (Jer. 5: 1.) From this statement you would judge that real men were scarce in Israel at that time, and so they were when our Lord uttered the words to the scribes and Pharisees in Matt. 23. Justice and mercy and love for the truth had gone entirely out of their hearts; hence, nothing but the malediction of even a merciful Lord could rest upon them. And I feel sure the last one of them committed what our Lord called "an eternal sin." (Mark 3: 29, 30,) These men, doubtless, were wholly unconscious of their hardness of heart, lack of mercy, justice, and love for the truth. A sadder condition no soul can get in. Remember "the man God let alone" in the article that came before this. We need not plead ignorant as to what it takes to constitute justice. Justice is ever in harmony with all truth and facts in the case. Deal with every soul according to the eternal truths and never-to-bedestroyed facts in the case, and you will not miss justice very far. The man that loves the truth "sweareth to his own hurt, and changeth not." (Ps. 15: 4.) He has no schemes. He is not trying to cover up anything. He is never magnifying the faults even of his enemies. He lives inside out before all people. He goes not about wagging the double tongue, talking to his associates to their face one way and to their backs another. And Jehovah says this is what it takes to make real men out of us all. You can put your finger on him. You know where he is "at." He does not appear one thing outwardly, when inwardly he is decidedly different. And the secret of it all is the fact that this man sure-enough believes that God is, that his eyes are ever on him, and every thought, imagination, word, and act of his life are all "naked" before Him with whom we have to do and by whom we must be judged. I do not believe souls can have undying faith in what the Bible says about the existence and value of the soul, and that the soul will spend one of two eternities with God or the devil after it leaves the body, and be careless in the way he lives.

Third, it is not for me to say to-day what the little things and the weightier commands in the law of Christ are. There is a sense in which every command becomes "the weightier matters" in the doctrine of Christ. I believe those commands that we are neglecting, failing to appreciate and do, become the most timely lessons to us to-day. But I have thought of some souls so punctilious to meet on Lord's-day morning and eat the Lord's Supper, taking but little if any part in the other meetings of the church, dropping in a nickel or dime, or at most a quarter; and when this is told, all is told as to their church activities. They live almost any way through the week, go to places of amusement and spend their money freely when it comes to obtaining the desires of the flesh, and ready any day for an argument that you must meet on "the first day of the week" to "break bread." Then I have thought of those who will contend so earnestly for all the teaching of our Lord to the alien and for the purity of the congregational worship, so far as keeping the doctrines of men out is concerned, yet who will give nothing and do nothing that is worthy of mention to have this doctrine preached from the rivers to the ends of the earth. Then I have seen men who, seemingly, would die before they would let one jot or tittle be taken from our Lord's teaching to aliens as to what to do for the remission of sins, yet have no regard whatever for what the same Lord says when it comes to dealing justly with their brethren, loving kindness and mercy—that is, not merely loving for others to be kind and merciful to them, but love to so be to every soul with whom they have to do. To love the truth means much. We love it because it is truth, and will love it and hold on to it when it is against us and makes us turn wholly around in the road and take another course than that we have been traveling.

May God help those who claim to be his to get these great lessons in their hearts, and by them live, that the doctrine of our Lord—the best that has ever been placed before man—may by us be adorned, and the world see the joy it brings to our souls and embrace it themselves and live.

The social nature of man makes it needful that, if the redemptive work of Christ is to be made effective for all, it must be done by the creation of a Christian society enveloping the individual like the air he breathes, and leaving no part of him untouched by this atmosphere.—Figgis.

THE SPIRIT OF THANKSGIVING.

BY A. B. LIPSCOMB.

The Bible is full of the thanksgiving spirit. Such a spirit glistens on many a page; it shines in the lives of its greatest characters. We may truly say that no man has the spirit of the Christ who has not the spirit of Thankfulness was one of his cardinal thanksgiving. virtues. Take, for example, the matter of returning thanks at the table. He could turn stones into bread and water into wine; he could feed a great multitude with five loaves and two fishes; yet Jesus never sat down to a meal, it mattered not how frugal, but what he thanked God for it. If we catch the spirit of the New Testament, we will be "abounding in thanksgiving" and will practice "giving thanks always for all things in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ."

Our forefathers acted wisely in setting apart a certain day in the year to be observed by the nation as a day of meditation, reflection, and thankfulness. It should be borne in mind, however, that this is a civil institution and not a religious ordinance. The spirit of thanksgiving as taught in the New Testament is that which encourages men and women to express thanks "always"-every day in the year. Some one has said: "He is best prepared to face the new year who has kept faith with the old." The same thought is applicable to the observance of Thanksgiving Day. I do not see how any man can make any great success of returning thanks who has not learned this lesson. You cannot pump up very much of a thankful sentiment from a heart that has been unresponsive for fifty-one weeks. That is why some folks' thanks are lame and halting; they have not been expressed for a whole year. Thankfulness is not a virtue to be saved up for one day. The truly grateful heart must be born and bred in us. It is born out of love, and bred in sunshine and in shadow, in prosperity and in adversity.

The spirit of thanksgiving is that which recognizes God's hand and God's blessing in everything that we receive, even in the common mercies of life.

"Back of the loaf is the snowy flour,
And back of the flour, the mill;
Back of the mill are the wheat and the sheaves,
And the sun and the Father's will."

Ours is an age of comparisons. Men are prone to think more of the things they do not possess than of those things that come into their keeping. There is a great temptation to become covetous. Much is being said about hurtful inequalities in our social life and the shocking contrasts our industrial order creates and perpetuates. Men write eloquent books showing the partiality with which they claim the good things of life have been distributed. Our eyes and our ears are kept familiar with a tale of woe that has a tendency to quench the spirit of thankfulness which ought to grow stronger in us every day. But, after all has been said about the inequitable division of this world's goods, the fact remains that Heaven's choicest gifts are more fairly distributed than we are ready to True enough, gold and silver and diaacknowledge. monds are not evenly parceled out. But the best and highest gifts are meted out with a generosity worthy of the Giver of every good and perfect gift. For example, health is the greatest wealth. Is it not worth more than diamonds? Yet the poorest man among us may have it in great abundance. A good appetite is a wonderful blessing. Some one once congratulated a Baltimore millionaire on account of his vast fortune, whereupon the rich man replied: "I would give it all to eat and enjoy one piece of pie." Sleep is not quoted in the markets, but it is more valuable than all the commodities of the earth. Rubies and gold fall into the hands of few, but God giveth his beloved sleep to millions. Consider the eye, the ear, the intellect. They are common mercies, but they reflect the wideness and goodness of the Father's love. When we think of them all, shall we not say with David: "Bless the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all his benefits?"

The spirit of thankfulness rises to the highest point in our lives when we are ready to return thanks for the cross we bear. Peter and the other apostles gave this old world a noble lesson when, after a false arrest and a cruel beating, they departed from the presence of the council, "rejoicing that they were counted worthy to suffer shame for his name." We are often encouraged to count our blessings, to "name them one by one," but this can never be accurately done. The number of them makes it a physical impossibility. Some of them we do not know; some of them we think are curses. But we may trust God implicity and believe that all he sends is good.

"Whatever the gifts the hours bestow, Either great or small, I would not measure, As worth a certain price of praise, But take them all, And use them all With simple heartfelt pleasure."

LOS ANGELES NOTES.

BY W. EDGAR MILLER.

The Central congregation, worshiping at 1044 South Hope Street, Los Angeles, Cal., is looking forward eagerly to a protracted meeting to be held, beginning on the first Lord's day in January, 1926, and conducted by Brother F. W. Smith, of Nashville, Tenn. This will mark the beginning of the fifth year of this congregation, which now has a membership of over four hundred, and we hope and expect to make this next year the best one of the five, in that we hope to accomplish more good in it than we have in any other one.

The Japanese mission work, under Brother Ishiguro, is now nearing the close of its third year. There is at present a membership of fourteen, with others in prospect, and a Sunday-school enrollment of about sixty, with an average attendance of about fifty. This is about all that the present quarters will accommodate with any kind of comfort. Brother and Sister Ishiguro use their house for a meeting place; and when you crowd forty or fifty children into one small house, there is not much room left. The demands are constantly increasing, and in order to care for them something is going to have to be done. All that is needed to increase the Sunday school to one hundred is more room and another car to help gather up the children and take them home. Other churches are building meetinghouses and trying to teach these people their errors, and shall the church of Christ, "the pillar and ground of the truth," drift idly along and make no effort to teach them the word of God as "it is written?" They will learn if taught. They are not numskulls by any means. I was teaching a class of young folks at the mission the other Sunday, and our lesson included the temptations of Jesus. Coming to where Jesus said, "It is written," I asked one Japanese young man what he understood by that statement. He answered in two words, and I do not believe any American can put more into a dozen words than he did in the two. He said: "God said."

This work ought to be put into a home of its own and cn a permanent basis. We have people working in this mission who have given their hearts to the work and are spending their lives for it. Sisters Belle Ragsdale and Vivian Cox are there every Sunday with their classes, and Sister Hettie Lee Ewing, who is on her way to Japan, but is spending this year in the work here in order to learn something of the Japanese manners and customs, is busy every day with the Ishiguros, visiting and teaching. These good people want to establish mission points in various places in the Japanese districts in Los Angeles and have regular days to go there and teach. If they will give their lives, their all, to this great work, will you not give a dollar—or ten? What do you think ought to be done, anyway? Drop me a line and tell me what you think of it and how much. Address me at 376 West Mariposa Street, Altadena, Cal.

THE WRONG SPIRIT AND MANNER OF CONTROVERSY.

BY E. A. ELAM.

Hoping that the following card may prove a means of accomplishing some good, we print it.

Brother Elam: It is reported in our county that you said it was no more harm for women to shingle and bob the hair than it was for them to club it. Your words have brought hard feelings about this saying with Christians. By what divine authority do you say this? Have you the religious courage to answer this in the Gospel Advocate?

So far as I am concerned individually, I care nothing about this report, and if that were all, it would go to the wastebasket; but from it we may see the evil which results from taking up false reports. This brother says it has caused hard feelings among "Christians." Those alone who have circulated this report have done this.

This is another case of accusing the innocent of what the guilty have done.

Thus on and on evil reports go until whole congregations are disturbed over nothing and over worse than nothing—over that which is false. "Behold, how much wood [a great forest] is kindled by how small a fire."

But were I accused of stealing a horse, of robbing a bank, or of perjuring myself, the accusation would not disturb me, because I would know it is not true. It is the truth that hurts, and at which the guilty become angry and spiteful.

I could reply in bitter language, denouncing this, but that would only do more harm. I prefer to think it an honest mistake and that the ones who started and have helped to circulate the report believe it true, but will do all in their power to correct it. This all Christians do in all such cases; they will go further and put themselves to far more expense to correct such evils than to circulate them. All who are so particular and so anxious that the whole truth be taught, even to the way in which women dress their hair, must be just as particular and exacting themselves in practicing the truth, even to the letter, by way of correcting false rumors and untrue accusations and in repairing wrongs they themselves have done.

But this brother is following the wrong way and manifesting the wrong spirit of controversy. In the first place, he assumes that this report is true before ever investigating, and upon this assumption bases what he says. Furthermore, he not only assumes that it is true that I said this and accuses me of causing hard feelings, but challenges my moral courage and intimates that I have not sufficient courage to reply to him in this paper. This way and spirit are far too prevalent. Such a brother as this one may have imbibed this spirit and may be inclined to follow this way from the examples of others.

There is too much gossip and too many reports which cannot be substantiated. We should not circulate any report which we do not absolutely know to be true, and not then until we know that repeating them will do good.

Before receiving this card I had prepared a series of articles on woman's dress, including the dressing of her hair, with which this card has had nothing to do. These articles will begin to appear the first of next year.

No other musical instrument has persisted through the ages like the harp. Prehistoric of origin, it was popular at the court of King Solomon the Wise, and long before his day was played before the Pharaohs of ancient Egypt.—Selected.

A CORRECTION.

Brother John T. Lewis, of Birmingham, Ala., writes to Brother F. B. Srygley, December 11: "I have just read your 'editorial' in this week's Gospel Advocate, 'Mr. Clark's Questions Answered.' You let your pen slip on question two. Read Luke 2: 11. It might be well for you to correct this before Mr. Clark takes the advantage of it. The rest of your. 'editorial' is fine, I think. I think you, Brother Smith, and Brother Elam are doing the best work of your lives now." To this Brother Srygley replies: "The criticism is just and the compliment delightful."

JUST OFF THE PRESS!

"Short Bible Stories," by James E. Chessor, is now on sale. This book of Bible stories, adapted to all ages, but especially to the young, will make an ideal Christmas present. Eighty-five select Bible stories, each complete in itself and faithful to the Sacred Text, are retold in simple language and are interpretative of great Bible events and characters. The book is handsomely bound and is profusely illustrated.

Brother Chessor has filled a long-felt want in providing Bible stories that are faithful to the text of the Bible. Parents realize the eagerness with which children read Bible story books and the influence these books have on their lives. The world is flooded with Bible story books, in various forms, most of which were written by sectarians, and absolutely faithfless to the Sacred Text. This book, written by Brother Chessor, who is a teacher in Burritt College, and brought out by the Gospel Advocate Company, is certainly a unique diversion in that it presents Bible stories that are Bible stories.

Fathers and mothers should order "Short Bible Stories" for their children. Older people will find it surpassingly interesting. Price, $2. Address all orders to the Gospel Advocate Company, 110 Seventh Avenue, North, Nashville, Tenn.

COMMENDS "ELAM'S NOTES."

For years I have taught a class of young men in the Bible school, and in the preparation for the work have had before me many volumes on the Sunday-school lessons, and without reservation I pronounce "Elam's Notes" the very best. I most heartily commend it to all Bible students.

J. W. SHEPHERD.

NOTES FROM WEST TENNESSEE. BY JOHN R. WILLIAMS.

We are now in the last month of 1925. November and December are months that bring to my memory at least three important events. On the seventh day of November wife and I had been married fifty-four years, on the seventeenth day of November she was seventy years old, and on the thirtieth day of December I will be seventy-four years old.

I have been preaching forty and a half years, and never for one time have I advertised for work. My work for the year has been the same it has been for quite a while-Lake and Obion counties. There have not been so many additions this year as last; but notwithstanding the falling off in the way of additions, I have been called to labor for the same congregations-Jones Chapel, in Lake County; Hawkins Schoolhouse, in Madrid Bend, Ky.; Oak Ridge and Hornbeak, in Obion County. Since the beginning of the Jones Chapel congregation, fourteen years ago, I have preached there every year and held their meetings. They have called me to continue for another year, which I have agreed to do, as evidence of my appreciation of the The congregation in Hornbeak, where I have labored, not regularly, but most of the time, for forty years -my vocabulary fails me in words to express my appreciation of this call, for the reason that they know me better than any other congregation, from the fact that this has been my home all these years. Oak Ridge is only five miles from my home; so they have a right to know me

I notice that a great many preachers advertise for work. This may be right, but I have always thought, and do yet, that the best advertising a preacher can do is to live right and preach the gospel of God's dear Son truly and faithfully. I have known some young preachers to start out with bright prospects for the future, who soon failed and turned to some other calling. The reason for their failure was that they wanted to start in where the old ones quit off. Some of them I have known that would not go into new fields, destitute places, and try to build up a congregation, but would seek for work with old, established congregations that had been built up by God-fearing, faithful preachers who were preaching for the salvation of souls rather than the salary.

There seems to be a tendency upon the part of some young preachers to become pastors of old congregations, and this tendency is in evidence among some young members of the congregations. When the congregations fall for the young pastors and rule of the young members, they had just as well fold tent and go out of business. This tendency is entirely unscriptural and is to be feared and dreaded by all. Never in life have I known what I was to receive for a meeting or for monthly preaching. Never in life have I turned down a congregation, for I know how it hurts; for I have been turned down many times, and I know what it means.

With the passing of Brethren Lipscomb and Sewell some thought the Gospel Advocate would not retain its original standard of fidelity to the word of God, but now I hear no such complaint. Under the present management it makes no uncertain sound, neither does it leave room for a doubt as to its faithfulness to the word of God. Brethren Allen, Elam, Smith, and Srygley are all to be commended for so earnestly contending for "the faith which was once delivered unto the saints." there are other good, strong, faithful contributors that are to be commended also. At this distance from the office of the Advocate some of us do not realize the diverse winds of doctrine with which the Advocate has to contend, and we should not accuse it of bitterness and hairsplitting when it speaks out plainly. We are not to be the judges. Now, to the editors, contributors, and readers of the Advocate, I wish and hope for one and all a merry Christmas and a happy New Year, and that our dear Heavenly Father may spare you all many more years on earth to fight all kinds of error and to faithfully contend for that which is right. I read everything in each issue of the Advocate, and have received so much help, information, and encouragement that I wish to thank one and all. If permitted to live, let us start in the new year with an increase of zeal and determination to do more and to be better Christians. To one and all, I bid you a kindly, loving adieu for 1925.

AN OPEN-LETTER REPLY.

BY A. M'GARY.

A brother whom I esteem highly for his clean life and many "good works" in "the vineyard" has highly complimented me in asking me to assist him to "make preparation for a debate" he is expecting to have with a Baptist debater; for I regard it as a high compliment to be asked by a brother of his ability to assist him to make such "preparation." But instead of complying with his request in the way he asks me to—by private letter—I have decided to do so in this public way, so that, if there shall be anything helpful to him in what I say, it may also be as helpful to some others. I know the brother reads the Gospel Advocate.

He says: "If the debate materializes, he is to affirm the Baptist idea of salvation by faith only. Of course, you know that I know all the old arguments of our brethren against that glaring error. But what I wish you to do for me is to formulate what you consider the shortest and most concise way to meet that error; for I think our brethren, in debating the question with them, clutter the issue up too much in using too many proof texts. But I am finding it difficult to formulate a line of argument satisfactory to my own mind without following the old beaten track, which includes more proof texts than I think I should use, in order to give me time to thoroughly argue out the strongest ones. So, please, my dear brother, do your best in the way of suggestions to me. I don't think the debate will materialize before May or June, if ever. So you will have plenty of time to think the question over and help me, if you will; for I know you can."

I fully agree with the brother that our brethren use too many proof texts in discussing that question, and other questions, to leave themselves ample time to drive home and clinch a few of the strongest nails. It's the clinching that holds the argument together and carries conviction home.

If I had to debate the question referred to, to-day, with the ablest sectarian that cloven-foots terra firma, I would use five proof texts, no more and no less, though I know others than these five are in abundance and are strong.

- 1. I would begin with John 1: 12 and therefrom make it clear that those who "believed on his [Christ's] name" were given the privilege "to become the sons of God."
- 2. I would turn to John 8: 31, 32, and show from this that Christ told "those Jews which believed on him" that "if ye [believing Jews] continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." (Italics mine.) I would show that the Lord here puts the same width between mere "belief on him" and "freedom," or salvation, that he puts between "believeth" and "salvation" in Mark 16: 16.
- 3. I would then take up John 12: 42, and from this I would show that those chief rulers, in "believing on Christ," had the "privilege of becoming the sons of God," but did not exercise that "privilege," and, therefore, though they "believed on Christ," they did not "continue in his word;" hence, they were not his "disciples indeed," and were not "made free." I would show that when one "believes on Christ," if he will "continue in Christ's word," that it will lead him to "repentance," and from repentance on to "confession of Christ with his mouth," and on from confession to baptism for the remission of sins, or "freedom from sins."

- 4. I would next turn to Rom. 16: 26 and clearly unfold its irresistible force against the skeptical and sacrilegious proposition of "salvation by faith only."
  - 5. And last, but not least, I would use James 2: 24.

If I could not utterly rout such an opponent, horse, foot, and dragoon, with what I could develop from the five passages to which I have directed attention, I would consider myself a lame duck—too lame to risk myself in a debate.

THE LORD'S SUPPER.

BY H. LEO BOLES.

Brethren Trail and Adcock make the same argument and present the same scriptures. A reply to one will answer as a reply to the other. This short controversy was provoked by a query and my answer to it in the "Query Department." Before any good can be done in arguing a question, the real point at issue must be clearly set forth. What is the point at issue?

We are all agreed that the Lord's Supper was given by our Savior on the night of his betrayal, at the eating of the passover. The passover supper was one thing and the Lord's Supper, first given at the passover supper, is another thing. These two should not be confused. The Lord's Supper was not given to take the place of the passover supper. Any one makes a mistake who attempts to make the Lord's Supper take the place of the passover supper.

Again, we are agreed that the elements of the Lord's Supper were taken from the elements used in the passover supper. Unleavened bread was used in the eating of the passover supper. There is a very strong probability that unleavened bread was used by the Savior in giving the Lord's Supper, as no leavened bread was to be found in their houses at the time of eating the paschal supper. There is no statement in the word of God that such bread was used, but we are willing to grant the brethren all that they claim and assume that unleavened bread was used by the Savior when he gave the Supper that night. But this is not the point at issue. We are not discussing whether or not the Savior used unleavened bread in inaugurating the Lord's Supper.

The exact point at issue is: Must unleavened bread be used by Christians to-day, or else the Supper is not acceptable to the Lord? Brother Trail says: "We had a tent meeting in this county this last summer. I was much interested in it. I went out one Sunday. When the bread came to me, I broke (or rather tore) it. I knew it was not the bread that the Savior referred to when he said, 'This is my body.' I dropped it; I did not take it. I then noticed on the table, and in place of wine I saw a bottle of Welch's grape juice. I did not take it. I did not want to be a partaker in 'adding to' or 'taking from' 'that which is written.'" Brother Trail draws the issue to a fine point. He says in substance that if the bread is not unleavened bread, it is not the Lord's Supper; that we cannot have the Supper without unleavened bread. Brother Adcock, who lives in the same community with Brother Trail, says: "I will not, I cannot, take bread other than that which has been so plainly described in the Scriptures." He means that unless unleavened bread is used he will not eat the Supper. So the definite point at issue is, unleavened bread is essential to the Lord's Supper.

I have asked each of these brethren to give the scriptures for their contention. The nearest that they can do, or any one else, is to show that unleavened bread was used in the passover supper and that the Savior used it in giving the Lord's Supper. I have called in vain upon them to give me the scriptures which teach that unleavened bread is essential to the Lord's Supper. They have failed to do so. They cannot give scripture for their contention, simply because it is not found anywhere in the New Testament. They may argue that the Savior used unleavened bread and that it is safe to follow his example. All of this we readily agree is safe and will be pleasing to the Lord; but it is not the issue to say that the Savior used unleavened bread, neither is it the issue that it is safe to follow his example. All admit this. The issue is, no other bread will be pleasing to the Lord. If any other bread is used than unleavened bread, then to them it ceases to be the Lord's Supper.

The Lord's Supper is a New Testament ordinance or institution. It belongs to the Lord's people of the present dispensation. It belongs to the New Testament order of worship, and we must find instruction in the New Testament concerning it. I have been unable to find in the New Testament any specific instruction as to how the loaf is to be prepared, or the kind of bread that is to be used on the Lord's table in order to make our eating of it acceptable to the Lord. Surely if unleavened bread is so important that there can be no Lord's Supper without unleavened bread, then we should find some instruction in the New Testament. Such an important monumental institution as the Lord's Supper surely ought to be described in the New Testament so that the Lord's people would make no mistake in the preparation of the Lord's table. It seems to me that the Holy Spirit would have given specific instruction as to the use of unleavened bread in the Lord's Supper, if, indeed, it is so essential as these brethren claim.

He who makes a law where the New Testament is silent, and insists upon this law to the disturbance and even division of the people of God, is guilty of a very grave sin. It is a fearful thing to impose upon God's people our opinions and inferences. One puts himself in the place of inspired teachers when one imposes his opinions upon a congregation. They say that one scripture will convince them if they are in error. Let me suggest that the task of finding a scripture is with them. These brethren are affirming in print, and it is their attitude in practice, that the New Testament teaches that the use of unleavened bread in the Lord's Supper is essential. Brethren, where is your scripture for such affirmation and such practice? I leave the responsibility upon them to give a "Thus saith the Lord" for such a position.

The Lord's Supper was given at night. It was eaten first in an upper chamber or room. The eating of the Supper by the Savior with his disciples at night and in an upper room were incidental. Some few brethren have contended that it is essential to eat the Supper at night, and others have claimed that it is essential to eat it in an upper room. Both these classes make the argument that the Savior and his disciples ate it at night and in an upper room and that we should follow his example. They say that it is right and safe to follow the example of the Savior in this. No one, I suppose, will deny their contention—that is, no one will deny that it is acceptable to the Lord to eat the Supper at night in an upper chamber on the first day of the week. But when these brethren contend that eating the Supper at night and in an upper chamber are essential, we think that they are in error. The eating of it at night and in an upper chamber were incidental; so the use of unleavened bread and the kind of wine used by the Savior were incidental. The argument for the use of unleavened bread is parallel with the argument made for eating it at night and in an upper chamber.

Frank Baker, Berry, Ala., December 14: "I preached last Lord's day at the Gorgas Power Plant to a good hearing."

W. M. Behel, Rogersville, Ala., December 14: "The work here is in reasonably good condition. Our membership is increased by members moving here from other points to the county high school. We had a fine meeting here this year."

Price Billingsley preached at Charlotte Avenue, this city, last Lord's day. There were two great audiences, with one baptism and one restored. Brother Billingsley now goes to Florida for three months of protracted-meeting work.

- N. B. Hardeman preached at Brownsville, Tenn., on the second Lord's day in this month at eleven o'clock, and lectured to a large and appreciative audience in the afternoon.
- H. S. Lipscomb preached twice at Twelfth Avenue, this city, last Lord's day. The Bible study had the largest attendance in its history, there being five hundred and forty-nine present. J. T. Harris, of Lawrenceburg, Tenn., will preach next Lord's day.

Thomas E. Milholland, Vernon, Texas, December 13: "The Lord is good to us. Wonderfully has he blessed our labors here. Seven were added to the congregation last Sunday and two to-day. Vernon is a beautiful and busy town of nine thousand people."

Oscar Parham, Pinewood, Tenn., December 14: "I preached at Leiper's Fork yesterday to a good-sized audience. During the fall I have been preaching on Sundays and Sunday nights at Pinewood, where I am teaching school. Success to the Gospel Advocate."

- D. F. Draper, Fort Worth, Texas, to E. A. Elam: "I have just finished reading your new book on evolution. That book should be in every home. It is worth its weight in gold. The issue is clear-cut, the articles are pointed and powerful. Reader, get this book and read it, and you will be profited thereby."
- Y. Hiratsuka, 15 Kamitomizaka, Koishikawa-ku, Tokyo, Japan, November 27: "I thank you for the Gospel Advocate, which you send me so kindly every week. I read it with very great interest, and learn many good things. We have had twenty-one baptisms this year in our Kamitomizaka church, and we are serving the Lord very cheerfully."
- J. Emmett Wainwright, Shreveport, La., December 14: "Four baptized and three identified at Hope, Ark. Frank Grammer, of Mena, Ark., directed the singing. J. T. McDaniel, of Franklin, Texas, directed the singing at Kosse, Texas. Brother Hedge continued the meeting and baptized one of the finest men in Kosse. I am to be at Selma, La., December 29-31."
- S. F. Morrow, Tampa, Fla., December 14: "All persons who have friends coming to Tampa or living here are requested to give me their friends' addresses that I may look them up. We have three loyal congregations here, and by all means they should meet with one of these congregations. Visitors will find a hearty welcome at any of them. Address me at Tampa, Fla., Grand Central 2003."
- R. O. Kenley, Wichita Falls, Texas, December 10: "Notwithstanding cures of cancer for the body are announced frequently, yet medical science pronounces them all fakes, the surgeon's knife applied in the early stage of the discase being the only cure. This is likewise true of spiritual cancer, and James A. Allen is unquestionably the dean of such surgery. Such operations as he performs will save the church from apostasy."
- E. D. Martin, Haynesville, La., December 17: "I was with the Homer congregation, fourteen miles distant from Haynesville, last Lord's day, and preached twice for them. I am scheduled to serve them the second Lord's day in each month. I preached to an excellent audience while visiting the Union Grove congregation the first Lord's day in December. This is the mother congregation of the church in this section of the State."
- F. B. Shepherd, Abilene, Texas, December 8: "The meeting closed here last night with the College Church, Horace W. Busby doing the preaching. One hundred and thirty-three responded to the invitation, fifty-five of the number making the good confession and fifty-five others to be restored. We have experienced a general revival of spiritual fervor among the students. The local church plans a call for an expenditure of four thousand dollars for evangelistic work outside of its immediate locality, besides our local activities, charities, and benevolences."

Horace W. Busby, Fort Worth, Texas, December 8: "The meeting with the Abilene Christian College congregation closed last night with a packed auditorium and fine interest, which were the rule throughout the week. About fifty-four were baptized, and from all sources one hundred and twenty-five or thirty responded to the invitations. F. B. Shepherd is a great helper in a gospel campaign. The school and church are in a prosperous condition, and the spiritual atmosphere is invigorating to the soul. About seventeen were added to the North Side congregation while there, making a total of about one hundred and forty-five or fifty responses from all sources during the two meetings, which included three Lord's days."

- A. B. Barret, by invitation of the brethren, preached at the courthouse at Columbia, Tenn., last Lord's day, morning and evening. The courtroom was well filled. From forty-five to sixty members have decided to meet in the courthouse for worship until further arrangements can be made, as they have no other place in which to worship. Bible study Lord's-day morning at 9:30. Preaching and worship at 11 A.M. and 7:30 P.M.
- E. Gaston Collins, Meaford, Ontario, Canada, December 1: "Although it was cold here last Sunday, we had two good meetings. There was a well-filled house at night, with new ones present. Please send me a sample copy of your new tract, 'Importance of Being Right Religiously.' We plan a short meeting in a near-by town the last of December. If the tract is suitable, we may use some. It is a timely subject."

Tim Walker, Haleyville, Ala., December 17: "I filled my regular appointment with the church at Jasper, Ala., preaching to a good crowd at eleven o'clock. In the afternoon I held services in the home of a brother who is confined to his bed with tuberculosis. He confessed Christ as Lord, and we carried him to the Christian Church and rolled him on a wheel bed to the baptistery, and I baptized him. The church at Jasper is moving along fine."

- C. E. Holt, Florence, Ala., December 15: "Your article in the Gospel Advocate of December 10, in reply to K. C. Moser on the subject of 'preachers' meetings,' is sensible and sound. I never have been able to see a single good, sound reason why a bunch of preachers should get together at any place simply to have what some are pleased to term 'a good time.' I have noticed that in such meetings were a few preachers, most conspicuous among whom was the 'pastor,' under the title of the 'local evangelist,' who would be the chief attraction. They claim no authority, and yet they assume the right or authority to call such meetings and ask the congregations where such meetings are held to provide for all the preachers who attend. Such meetings have no more scriptural warrant or precedent than have the conventions held by the digressives.' That is a poor way to convert the world. It is a good way to build an ecclesiastical court, which in time would dominate the churches."
- W. N. Short, Sinde Mission, Livingstone, North Rhodesia, Africa, November 5: "Brother Lawyer and I had two weeks' going among the villages, teaching and preaching all we could. We saw many people who had never heard the gospel before. A great many people were interested in the work and called for teachers. We walked over seventy miles and rode the mule the rest of the way. After a week at home looking after things, we had a week's tramping in the other direction. This time we visited the other mission station where the native teacher is in charge, where Brother Lawyer baptized eleven souls into Christ. A little over a week after we returned home we had another baptismal service, when eleven more persons were immersed into the one body. This made fifty-two for the year thus far. We are in hopes of still more before the year is finished. Much interest is manifested, and we have good crowds at almost every meeting. To be sure, some are as seed sown among stones or in thorns, and we lose a few—two this year. Not bad, is it, for people who come out of darkness, superstition, immorality, and sin of all descriptions? Pray that the Lord's cause may be extended."

Price Billingsley, Bainbridge, Ga., December 6: "Tonight I close here and entrain for home. This meeting was held at the urging of a lone sister—a great-grand-daughter of 'Raccoon' John Smith. I have succeeded in baptizing her husband and adding ten others into a pretty definite organization, about the finest little band of saints I ever met, who will now keep house for the Lord. The Moultrie (Ga.) congregation offers to stand by them till they get well on their feet, and we expect great things of their future. This is one of the bitterest fights with the world, the flesh, and the devil I ever took part in. The Christian Church, upon discovering that they could neither buy nor compromise me into winking at their departures, offered the stubbornest opposition to our work. What a wonderful field this is for New Testament Christianity, and as yet scarcely worked in at all! Young preacher, do you seek a place, first making sure of a support? Why not follow examples of inspired men? If you will come here and work in the gospel, you may soon put the cause upon a sure and self-supporting basis. Come here and stand upon the promises of the Lord and build for eternity; the Lord and his saints will not let you suffer. Consider what John T. Lewis has accomplished in Birmingham, Ala., and do not say it cannot be done."

- O. M. Reynolds, Abilene, Texas, December 14: "I am preaching on the first two Lord's days in each month for the church at Anson, Texas, and the brethren as a whole seem to be awakening from a long slumber, and several have become identified with the congregation."
- Samuel H. Austin, Munfordville, Ky., December 14: "I have closed my year's work with the church of Christ at Summit, Ky. The association has been pleasant and the brethren have been encouraged and built up in the most holy faith. They have requested me to continue to visit them in 1926."
- A. J. Bachman, Huntington, W. Va., December 18: "Our meeting in this city closed last Sunday night, with twenty-three to come forward—fourteen for baptism, three to become identified with the congregation, and six to confess their faults. For several weeks I have been preaching twice a week at the noon hour at the Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad shops. Success to the Gospel Advocate. I enjoy reading its good and helpful articles. May it live long to send forth the truth."

Elders of the Central church of Christ, Nashville, Tenn., by E. H. Cullom: "The Central church of Christ has planned to hold its first service in the new auditorium on Saturday, December 26. N. B. Hardeman will be with us that day, as well as on Sunday and Monday following. There will be two services on Saturday—12:15 P.M. and 7:30 P.M. The Sunday services will begin at 11 A.M., 3 P.M., and 7:30 P.M. On Monday the hours will be 12:15 P.M. and 7:30 P.M."

E. S. Fitzgerald, Weatherford, Texas, December 15: "I recently visited and preached three times at Charlie, Texas. In years past I have conducted four meetings there. I had the privilege of baptizing many of the members of the Charlie church. Some of the young members have developed into splendid leaders, both of song and other public parts. I have time for a meeting the last Sunday in June and the first Sunday in July next year. Write me at 212 Spring Street, Weatherford, Texas."

Emmett G. Creacy, Burkesville, Ky., December 17: "The meeting here continues with unabated interest. The 'digressive' pastor challenged me for a debate on the music question. The time was set to begin, a large crowd assembled, but the pastor did not come; hence, I preached on the subject, and many favorable comments are coming from members of the Christian Church. Prospects are favorable for establishing a congregation here that will work and worship as 'it is written.' The town and community are stirred."

Charles Taylor, Paducah, Ky., December 9: "On December 5 I closed a meeting in Cleveland, Ohio, with the church located on the corner of Penobscot and One Hundred and Thirty-first Street, with six additions—three by baptism and three by statement. C. O. Hannahs, of Wheeling, W. Va., led the song service. I am now at home with the church at Paducah. Our building is located at Nineteenth and Broadway. The brethren coming to our city will take the Guthrie Avenue car and get off at Nineteenth Street in front of the church building. Visitors are invited to worship with us."

E. Gaston Collins, Meaford, Ontario, Canada, December 14: "I visit Collingwood once a month. We have there about eight brethren and sisters. It is a bit singular, but just about the time the Gospel Advocate of December 3 came out, in which you refer to your experience with the Banner, I was having a similar experience with one of the 'big dailies' of Toronto. This paper (the Globe) has a good editorial page, and carries a section called 'Voice of the People,' letters from different ones. One fellow had a letter in, in which he criticized a certain 'D.D.' for preaching that if one 'believed what was reasonable' he was all right. This critic said God had a plan of salvation, which was easily understood—that is, hear and believe. I thought the critic needed criticizing the 'D.D.,' but suggested to him that there was a difference in faith and obedience. I quoted a few passages, such as 'preach the word,' adding that those who 'obey not the gospel' will be judged, and asked him to tell me the difference between faith and obedience. Well, they held my letter about a week, then sent it back to me, regretting they did not have space for it. I think I will try them again. How true are some of your remarks about 'great newspapers!' I think your articles ring true; and I wish you health, happiness, and length of days to keep up the work. Our work here is pleasant and right encouraging. Good crowds yesterday."

PEACE AND GOOD WILL.

BY E. A. ELAM.

I have no special inclination to write a Christmas article, but my heart throbs in unison with the song of the angels over the birth of Jesus: "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace among men in whom he is well pleased."

The Lord has appointed no day and no service for the celebration of the birth of Jesus. No man knows the birthday of Jesus. We can celebrate his birth and life and teaching only by living the life of peace and good will which he places before us.

The gospel may be preached, or anything else that is scriptural for Christians to do may be done, on December 25, as well as on any other day of the year; but it is not known that this is the birthday of Jesus. If God had desired the birth of Jesus or the day of his birth celebrated, he would have stated in the Bible this day and how to celebrate it. But, according to the beautiful custom, presents may be exchanged on December 25, and on this day all may study, if they choose, the subject of peace and rejoice in the thought of good will among men. All of this, let it be repeated, comes through Christ.

Recently I received a thoughtful and earnest letter from a member of a congregation, which is now and has been for some time in more or less strife and trouble.

Hoping that it may accomplish some good, the reply to this letter is given in substance here. The thought of thus giving it did not occur to me until after it had been written. The main features of it, as stated, are given.

Dear Sister: Your very kind and appreciated letter of recent date came duly to hand and has been seriously considered.

As you say, in days gone by your congregation was in harmony and peace. This was true of not a few other congregations,

> "When each could feel his brother's sigh And with him bear a part; When sorrow flowed from eye to eye, And joy from heart to heart,' which are now filled with contention, confusion, and strife. All of this has come through sin of some kind.

When we contrast that love and peace then with the division and bitterness now in many places, the heart is filled with sadness and overflows with grief.

It is useless to read to brethren who have caused trouble and continue the strife: "And grieve not the Holy Spirit of God, in whom ye were sealed unto the day of redemption." It seems not to occur to such brethren that God takes cognizance of their contentions, strife, charges against one another, and abuses of one another; or that they will ever have to give an account of their actions, words, and thoughts, even, to him. It seems that they do not take the judgment of God into consideration.

The cause of all this is a failure to love the Lord and to respect his teaching. There can be no strife, bitterness, and division where all love God and regard his word. There can be no doubt about this.

It matters not what two persons, or how many persons, are parties to a difference, or a division, there exists in the one, or in both parties, disregard for the teaching of the Bible on the subject and a lack of the love of God. So long as this is the case, there can be no harmony, unity, or peace. One party to the difficulty is most assuredly wrong, and both may be; so the statement is true that in such case there exists in some a lack of love for God and respect for his word.

The difference may exist between two individuals only; but it is still true that there is in one, or in both, a lack of love for God and respect for his word.

It matters not how "loyal" one or both parties may claim to be, it is still true that in one party, or in both, there is a lack of love for God and respect for his word.

Bitterness, rough and hard speeches, vituperation, etc., cannot exist in hearts filled with love for God and regard for his truth; because to love God is to obey him, and such language and conduct is disobedience to him.

In considering "loyalty," some seem far more loyal to themselves than to God, and to their own opinions and ways than to the will of God. Faithfulness to God alone at all times and in all things is loyalty to him.

Is not the conclusion, then, forced upon us that some love controversy and contention more than they love the truth, peace of God, and obedience to his will? They seem to feast upon contention themselves and to feed others upon it. It is contention upon contention, controversy upon controversy, not for "the faith which was once for all delivered unto the saints," but over opinions, personal matters, personal preferences, prejudices, etc.

Like begets like—that is, everything brings forth fruit after its kind; and a faultfinding, bickering, contentious spirit begets the same in others. I pray the Lord to deliver us from, and to raise us above, all such.

I was glad to hear from you, and especially to learn just how you feel about such unholy things, it matters not in whom manifested.

There are hundreds of hungry hearts yearning for unity and peace and the real edification of the church—the building up of itself in love—if only their leaders and teachers and preachers would give to them such spiritual food, allow them to make such growth, and to abide undisturbed in the love and peace of God.

The Lord requires all to "contend earnestly for the faith which was once for all delivered unto the saints;" but this is quite different, indeed, from neglecting the jaith and contending for theories, opinions, innovations, preferences, prejudices, or judgments of one's own or of those of other men.

I trust your congregation is on the road to harmony and good fellowship. After a storm comes a calm; and may the calm be in sight, and may the peace of God which passes all understanding "guard your hearts and your thoughts in Christ Jesus."

For truth and right I remain always the same,

YOUR BROTHER IN CHRIST.

KEEPING AND BREAKING COVENANTS.

BY F. W. SMITH.

A covenant is an agreement, or contract, between two or more parties, with stipulated conditions of its binding force. Among human beings, all the elements of a covenant may be proposed by one or all of the parties concerned, but most certainly the covenant must be ratified or sanctioned by all parties involved to make it of binding force. But when it comes to covenants between God and man, God proposes all the conditions or stipulations of the covenant, and man has nothing to do but to either accept or reject the conditions embodied in it.

GOD'S COVENANTS WITH MAN.

God has made many covenants with man since the beginning of the race, and has always reserved the right to stipulate the conditions of the covenants. But he has made two great covenants, one embracing the "fleshly" descendants of Abraham, and one embracing the "spiritual" seed of Abraham. The first covenant, with a landed estate, was fully developed in the Old Testament, and the second great covenant, with spiritual promises looking to the heavenly Canaan, is fully developed in the New Testament.

THE DOUBLE PROMISE.

"And I will make of thee a great nation, and I will bless thee, and make thy name great; and be thou a blessing: and I will bless them that bless thee, and him that curseth thee will I curse; and in thee shall all the families of the earth be blessed." (Gen. 12: 2, 3.)

These are the two great promises out of which grew the commonwealth of Israel, with the landed estate of Palestine, and the gospel of Jesus Christ, with the church and hope of eternal life. The fulfillment of the promises connected with these covenants depended upon the compliance with the conditions imposed by the Lord. The reason the children of Abraham were cast out of the land of Canaan is because they did not comply with the conditions of remaining in it. They were to hearken unto God's commandments and obey his voice.

"For finding fault with them, he saith, Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel and with the house of Judah; not according to the covenant that I made with their fathers in the day that I took them by the hand to lead them forth out of the land of Egypt; for they continued not in my covenant, and I regarded them not, saith the Lord." (Heb. 8: 8, 9.)

Thus Israel became a covenant breaker, in consequence of which they lost their inheritance of the land of Palestine, and there is not the slightest promise in either the Old Testament or the New Testament of ever being restored to its possession. They continued not in their part of the contract, and God has disregarded them in so far as any restoration to the ownership of Palestine is concerned. If it were possible to crowd the fifteen or sixteen millions of Jews in the world into Palestine, that within itself would be no proof of the fulfillment of a divine promise, for God has made no such promise.

THE NEW AND BETTER COVENANT.

"For this is the covenant that I will make with the house of Israel after those days, saith the Lord; I will put my laws into their mind, and on their heart also will I write them: and I will be to them a God, and they shall be to me a people; and they shall not teach every man his fellow citizen, and every man his brother, saying, Know the Lord: for all shall know me, from the least to the greatest of them. For I will be merciful to their iniquities, and their sins will I remember no more. In that he saith, A new covenant, he hath made the first old. But that which is becoming old and waxeth aged is nigh unto vanishing away." (Heb. 8: 10-13.)

This is the new and better covenant, based upon better promises, ratified and sealed with the blood of Jesus.

"But now hath he obtained a ministry the more excellent, by so much as he is also the mediator of a better covenant, which hath been enacted upon better promises. For if that first covenant had been faultless, then would no place have been sought for a second." (Heb. 8: 6, 7.)

The old covenant had for its constitution the "Ten Commandments," by which no one could be justified, because no one could keep the law inviolate. To break one principle of the moral law was equivalent to breaking all in so far as justification was concerned.

The new covenant has for its constitution the great commission—viz.:

"And Jesus came to them and spoke unto them, saying, All authority hath been given unto me in heaven and on earth. Go ye therefore, and make disciples of all the nations, baptizing them into the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I commanded you: and lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world." (Matt. 28: 18-20.)

Mark records the same commission thus:

"And he said unto them, Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to the whole creation. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that disbelieveth shall be condemned." (Mark 16: 15, 16.)

As the decalogue, or Ten Commandments, contained the basic principles out of which all subsequent legislation for the commonwealth of Israel came, and with which such legislation had to agree, so "the great commission" embodies the basic principles out of which and in harmony with which all subsequent legislation in the New Testament came. Any religious teaching that does not harmonize with the commission Christ gave to his apostles is absolutely unconstitutional.

COVENANTS BETWEEN MEN.

There are many relations in this life existing between mankind, and the matter of covenant making is very common. In fact, none of the business and social relations of life can exist without covenants. When men form partnerships, they do so by covenant.

The marriage relation is but a contract, agreement, or covenant, and it is the most sacred of all human relationships. Notwithstanding this fact, it is more flagrantly disregarded in these United States than, perhaps, any other covenant between human beings.

Divorce, or breaking of the marriage covenant, is as common almost as any everyday affair. A few years since there were more divorces in Nashville and Davidson County, Tenn., than there were marriage licenses issued.

Men are constantly, in all the walks and business relations of life, breaking solemn covenants, or compacts, with each other. Regarding such as break compacts and covenants, God classes them among vile characters thus:

"And even as they refused to have God in their knowledge, God gave them up unto a reprobate mind, to do those things which are not fitting; being filled with all unright-eousness, wickedness, covetousness, maliciousness; full of envy, murder, strife, deceit, malignity; whisperers, back-biters, hateful to God, insolent, haughty, boastful, inventors of evil things, disobedient to parents, without understanding, covenant breakers, without natural affection, unmerciful: who, knowing the ordinance of God, that they that practice such things are worthy of death, not only do the same, but also consent with them that practice them." (Rom. 1: 28-32.)

No matter what the cost may be, so long as a covenant made between men does not violate any principle of truth and righteousness, men cannot be guiltless if it is within their power to discharge the obligations they have assumed.

One of the conditions of abiding in the tabernacle of God is: "He that sweareth to his own hurt, and changeth not." (Ps. 15: 4.) The obligation assumed may in its performance cost pain, time, and money, but it must be paid. Men must not vow to do that which is right and then change from it.

TECHNICAL DISOBEDIENCE.

BY F. B. SRYGLEY.

I notice that Brother E. C. Love is worrying some over his position that a thing may be "technically wrong and scripturally right" at the same time. This is not exactly his language, but the language of the proposition which I asked him to affirm after he challenged me for a debate. Brother Love says the issue is the individual cup in communion; but the brother is wrong on this point, so far as I am concerned, as I never raised this issue with him.

Brother Love is after Brother Fuqua, but he puts my name into his reply to Brother Fuqua. I do not propose to get into his debate with Brother Fuqua; but when he brings me in. I have the right to look into the matter. The first time he mentions my name in his reply to Fuqua, it is as follows: "He [Fuqua] says among other things: 'Brother Love is older than I am, I think.' Well, that is wrong to begin with, if Brother Srygley gave his age correctly in the Gospel Advocate." I do not remember what I said about Brother Fuqua's age in the Gospel Advocate; but whatever it was, I thought it was true when I wrote it. Without looking it up, I now say that if I made the impression on the readers of the Advocate that Love is older than Fugua, I must have had his size in mind instead of his age; for, unless he has changed a lot since I saw him, he is much larger than Fuqua. I do not think a few months' difference in age will amount to anything, so far as this controversy is concerned.

But Brother Love says: "He starts in wrong, and keeps it up through his article." If the brother made no worse mistake than to miss Brother Love's age a few months, especially since his age has nothing to do with the question at issue, I am ready right now to vote.

The brother says of Brother Fuqua: "He is wrought up over the fact that I said two cups, four cups, six cups, etc., mars the Lord's Supper to some extent, but not to the same extent that individual cups do. He can't see that point." I do not know whether Brother Fuqua can see that point or not, being "wrought up," but I can see what the brother says there; but I cannot understand how Brother Love knows that God will accept the Lord's Supper marred to some extent, and refuse to accept it marred to some other extent.

Brother Love says: "Now, in the first place, two or more cups are not my suggestion, and they are never put in except over my protest. Whatever argument he makes against them is even stronger against individual cups, but it does not hit me. My attitude toward them is merely one of tolerating them for the sake of the peace of the brotherhood." I see, Brother Love has never put in two or more cups; but they are in many of the churches, and Brother Love says: "My attitude toward them is merely one of tolerating them for the sake of the peace of the brotherhood." If God teaches only one cup, I do not see how the brother can tolerate two or more; and if he can tolerate two or more, what is the reason he cannot tolerate all the brethren want "for the sake of the peace of the brotherhood?" Is it possible that the brother will tolerate two or more cups just because it has been the custom to have two or more in the locality where he has been, and opposes the individual cups because it has not been the custom to have them? Come, now, Brother Love, you are old enough to know there is no argument in that, if you do lack a few months of being as old as Brother Fuqua.

The brother says again: "Whatever argument he makes against them [two or more cups] is even stronger against individual cups, but it does not hit me." Well, maybe not, but this hits him: he can tolerate two or more cups "for the sake of the peace of the brotherhood," but he cannot tolerate the individual cup for anything; and yet, according to his own position, there is as much authority for the individual cups as there is for "two or more." That does not hit me, but it seems to me that it hits Love's position.

Brother Love makes the following statement: "Just here let me say this: This fight is over individual cups and not over two, four, six, etc." I have not kept up with "the fight," as he calls it, between Love and Fuqua; but, so far as I am concerned, I have raised no issue with Brother Love over the individual cup, but I have raised this issue: Brother Love is wrong when he argues that the Bible teaches only one cup, and still he will tolerate two or more, but will not tolerate one cup for each communicant. This is the issue between us, and this shall be the issue. Any argument that will prove that it is right to have two or more cups cannot prove that it is wrong to have twenty or more.

The brother tries to put me in an ugly light in these words: "If Fuqua and Srygley and others had not already bowed the knee to the god of this world in its effort to pervert the worship of the Lord by the introduction of individual cups, then there would be no fight. The fight is strictly over individual cups. Let the brethren note that." I have never bowed the knee to the god of this world. The brother has changed his position. When I first began this controversy with him, he said that the Russell Street Church, of this city, had not bowed to the old mother of harlots or any of her daughters by introducing the individual cup, but now it is "the god of this Was the brother wrong when he said that the world." individual cup came from the "old mother of harlots?" I thought he meant the Roman Catholic Church, but now it is "the god of this world." The worst thing in the Roman Catholic Church is the idea that the Pope can decide for God what is right and what is wrong, the thing that Brother Love undertook to do when he said that two cups are wrong, but that God would accept the worship with two cups because it was only "technically wrong." No wonder he has changed from the "old mother of harlots" to "the god of this world." But I will ask Brother Love where he got the authority to use two cups if the God of the Bible only authorized one. The same God that gives him the authority to tolerate two cups will give him authority for twenty.

The brother further says:

One other point. Both Srygley and Fuqua show their ignorance or disrespect for the word of God by insinuating that nothing can be tolerated that is not exactly right in every respect. By that standard they would condemn the God of heaven. Are they ignorant of the fact that God, through his prophet, solemnly protested against the choosing of a king to rule Israel, and after the people insisted upon a king and refused to heed his warnings he selected the king himself and had him anointed with the holy anointing oil? Let the reader turn to 1 Sam. 8: 1-22. Hear the voice of God: "Now therefore hearken unto their voice: howbeit thou shalt protest solemnly unto them, and shalt show them the manner of the king that shall reign over them." (Verse 9.) The whole burden of Brother Fuqua's argument is that a thing must be fought viciously or embraced completely, one or the other. Whereas, God himself discouraged the choosing of a king and protested solemnly against it, but did not utterly cast off the people when they chose a king. I wonder if it would be a good idea to take up a collection and send these brethren to a Bible school where they might form acquaintance with some of the great facts of the Bible. It is certainly embarrassing for them to launch out so confidently in a tirade against me and then be shown that my conduct was based on an act of God himself.

It will be noted that the brother says: "Both Srygley and Fuqua show their ignorance or disrespect for the word of God by insinuating that nothing can be tolerated that is not exactly right in every respect." Now, Brother Fuqua, I reckon you know where you get off. Brother Love said that Brother Fugua was "wrought up." I am wondering what is the matter with Love, to charge his opponent thus. This is breaking the rules of honorable controversy. No, I am not "ignorant of the fact that God, through his prophet, solemnly protested against the choosing of a king to rule Israel, and after the people insisted upon a king and refused to heed his warnings he selected the king himself and had him anointed with the holy anointing oil." But is Love God, that he can decide what he can tolerate in the worship of God? I wonder "upon what meat this our Cæsar hath fed, that he hath grown so great" that he can step in the place of God himself and decide how much error he will tolerate and how much he will not? But, my dear brother, look at this: If because God tolerated a king of Israel proves that he will tolerate two or more cups, will not the same fact prove that he will tolerate the individual cup? If not, why not? I may be ignorant, but I am not dense enough to fail to see that fact.

He wonders if it would not be a good idea to take up a collection to send Fuqua and me to a Bible school. It certainly would be a bad idea to send either of us to a Bible school to learn anything, if E. C. Love is a fair sample of the logicians they make.

"It is certainly embarrassing for them to launch out so confidently in a tirade against me and then be shown that my conduct was based on an act of God." The brother had better base his conduct, when it comes to the worship of God, upon what God teaches, rather than on his acts. If because God tolerated a king under the old covenant proves that Brother Love should tolerate two cups when God taught only one, why will not the same fact prove that Love should tolerate sprinkling for baptism, though the Bible teaches immersion? Speaking about embarrassment, if I were in his condition, I think I would be either embarrassed or ashamed of myself.

Remember, the issue that I have made with him is: "An act of worship may be technically wrong, but scripturally right." When Brother Love is ready to affirm this in a public debate, I am ready to carry out my part.

WORD AWAY FROM WASHINGTON.

BY T. B. LARIMORE.

We, four hopeful pilgrims bound for Berkeley, Cal., left Sherman, Texas, a place almost sacred to me, at 10 A.M., Wednesday, November 11—Armistice Day. We traveled on an interurban to Dallas, where we were to board a west-bound train. There Clarence Cockrill, who, with his wife, mother, and others, had driven sixty-five miles the night before to attend our services in Sherman, was waiting and watching for us, and caught us and kept us as long as he could without interfering with our westward flight, he and his serving us with such a lunch that we may never forget it, our girls declaring it to be the nicest they had ever seen and the best they had ever eaten.

Brother Cockrill took us to the station in good style and due time, where Brother Brewer and other friends and loved ones met us. Regretful good-byes and affectionate farewells were spoken, and our journey was resumed at 1:30 P.M.

Between nine and ten o'clock that night we passed through Abilene, known to many, if not all, of our readers as the seat of Abilene Christian College, and there Batsell Baxter (president of the college), Mrs. Baxter, and many other friends came to the train to see us. Batsell was one of the youngest and smallest of the army of boys I baptized when I was younger than I am now; but as years have come and gone he has developed into a great and useful man, having always been, from the time he was "born again" till now, a consistent Christian, and I have no fears of his ever departing from the faith or bringing reproach upon the church of Christ. Long may he live, and greater and greater may his school grow!

Our train was scheduled to stop four hours at El Paso "The Pass"-but, being an hour behind time, we had only three hours to spend there. The Rio Grande-"the great river "-rolls between Texas and Mexico at El Paso. At that point the grand, or great, river is what would probably be called a creek in Tennessee or Kentucky; but it is important, nevertheless, being an international boundary between the United States of America and Mexico. Before being permitted to pass over the river into Mexico-from the home of the "Gringoes" to the land of the "Greasers," as they call each other-we were politely permitted and required to "perpetrate" some important preliminaries, such as declaring our names, residences, ages, occupations, how much money we had, etc. Even the women had to tell their ages. The "Mexicanos" treated us "Americanos" nicely, however, and we were all in the best of humor when we said "Adios," I think.

The most gruesome reminder of the differences between the Gringoes and the Greasers we saw in Mexico, I believe, was a bullet-battered wall where condemned criminals are shot. The arena where bullfights are enjoyed and the cruel cockpits near by were, to me, mute reminders of the difference in spirit between civilization and barbarism. But when we remembered that we—that is, the city of El Paso and the rest of the United States—furnish the throngs and the money that make such barbarous practices profitable, if not, indeed, possible, we were almost in doubt as to who are the barbarians in this case, the Gringoes or the Greasers. What a change Christianity would make there if accepted and practiced on both sides of the river!

Returning to our side of the river, we went to see our two Sisters Gibbons, mother and daughter, whom we had learned to love in Washington, D. C., and found them both well and pleasantly situated. After a brief visit to them, we returned to the station and resumed our journey westward.

We enjoyed pleasant companionship all the way between Dallas and Los Angeles, being especially interested in two of our traveling companions—two ladies, each of whom was crippled, one of them having to depend on crutches, both bound for Los Angeles; and on that lap of three days and two nights we met other pleasant people and received most careful attention from employees on the train, from conductors to waiters in the dining car.

We reached the "City of the Angels" Friday afternoon about five o'clock, when and where we were met by Mrs. Larimore's nephew, James H. Sewell, his wife and children and nieces, and also by Brother O. B. Curtis, formerly of Washington City, now of Los Angeles, and we went at once to the pleasant home of Brother and Sister Curtis. Brother Curtis worships with the brethren at the Central church of Christ, Los Angeles, and I preached for that congregation on Sunday, November 15, morning and evening.

Brother S. E. Witty is the beloved minister of the Central Church, and he certainly did all he could do to contribute to our comfort and happiness. The Central congregation has had a phenomenal growth and continues to grow. Long may he live, and greater and greater may its power and influence for good grow.

On Monday James Sewell took us around to visit friends—Brother G. W. Riggs and Brother Andrews—and in the afternoon to his home in Santa Ana, thirty-five miles from Los Angeles. "Santa Ana" means Saint Ann, "Santa" meaning a saint of the feminine persuasion, and "San," a saint of the masculine persuasion; hence, "Santa Ana," Saint Ann, and "San Pablo," Saint Paul.

On Tuesday our girls, accompanied by James, enjoyed a trip to Catalina Island. I was constrained to forego that pleasure because of the lasting impression two spasms of seasickness had made on my mind long ago, and Mrs. Larimore did not want to leave me. So we stayed in James' pleasant home, with Eunice, his wife, and their two sweet children, Betty June and Marjorie. The water part of the Catalina trip was made on the Catalina, a million-dollar floating palace built by and belonging to Mr. Wrigley, chewing-gum manufacturer. So you see as "little drops of water and little grains of sand make the mighty ocean and the solid land," so little quids of chewing gum and little children that chew them built the Catalina and made its master rich, if not, indeed, king of the chewing-gum kingdom. Our girls and James genuinely enjoyed the Catalina trip, entirely missing seasickness, but, in that respect, being overwhelmingly in the minority.

The man you assist in keeping the wolf from the door when you chew Wrigley's does not absolutely own Catalina Island. It is owned by a stock company, and he owns a controlling amount of the stock. The boat, the Catalina, cost exactly one million dollars, Mr. Wrigley directing and demanding that everything possible should be done to make its provisions for comfort and convenience perfect, every penny of the million dollars to be put into it. This reminds me of a laborer who went to the store at Hurricane Mills long ago one Saturday night, as he had a habit of doing, to spend his week's wages. He got everything he had thought of getting and had thirty cents left. Failing to think of anything else he needed, he said: "Well, I believe I'll just get thirty cents' worth of chewing gum." And he did. Of such is the kingdom of paupers. But why worry? Paupers are not barred from heaven or the kingdom of heaven, either.

On Wednesday we returned to Brother Curtis' home in Los Angeles. Brother Curtis and his lovable little family are delightfully situated, and are getting on well, Brother Curtis having an important and profitable position. They arranged to have a reception in their home Wednesday evening, which was all they and their friends could have reasonably expected it to be. About one hundred of the Lord's elect filled the home, and all seemed to be happy. I'm sure we were.

On Thursday we said good-by to friends in Los Angeles and took the train for Fresno, our next stopping place. But I must reserve the story of our further journeyings till another time. We did not tire of traveling, but you might tire of my account of our travels, if I should disregard the stop signals; so here I stop.

A good citizen is a man who constantly and consciously accommodates his conduct and his business to the rights of others and to the interest of the community.—Woodrow Wilson.

A RECOMMENDATION OF JOHN T. SMITHSON. BY M. C. KURFEES.

Brother John T. Smithson has been preaching in Louisville, Ky., six years, having begun his labors in this city in November, 1919. He was called to this field by the Haldeman Avenue Church, of Louisville, to conduct its mission work at a point on what was then called F Street, but now Atwood Avenue, near Preston Street. He has done an excellent work in our city and is leaving, not because he is not wanted longer by the church at that point, for it has already extended to him a call for 1926, but he is convinced that he can do more good by changing fields of labor. I publish this voluntary recommendation of him, not merely because he deserves it, but that churches not already acquainted with him may know something of him, and thus to give any assistance within my power to getting him located in some other field where his talents may be profitably utilized and his good work continued.

Brother Smithson is a good man and an excellent preacher of the gospel. He is filled with a knowledge of and reverence for the word of God and has a good education outside of the Bible. I have been intimately associated with him for the past six years and know him well. The church that secures his labors will be fortu-He is not only thoroughly loyal to the word of God, but is a thoroughly conscientious man. He is courteous and kind in his preaching, but is firm and uncompromising, and his hearers soon learn that he is true to Paul's charge to Timothy to "preach the word." He is not funereal in his pulpit utterances, yet he is earnest, sober, and serious, both in and out of the pulpit, and those who hear him are soon impressed that he has a profound and reverent faith in the Bible as the inspired word of God. He is blessed with a very interesting family—a wife and three precious children. Sister Smithson is a model preacher's wife. Like her husband, she has profound faith in the word of God and nobly stands by him in his proclamation of that word. She is a conspicuous example among women of what the New Testament designates as "workers at home," giving all proper attention to household duties, but never, unless hindered by uncontrollable circumstances, failing to attend the meetings of the church for worship and for preaching the word of God.

In this rationalistic and skeptical age, when the battle between so-called "modernism" and "fundamentalism" rages so furiously, it gives me peculiar pleasure to recommend to the churches, whenever I have an opportunity, such men as Brother Smithson. He will give no uncertain sound as to where he stands. Any church that secures him may count on faithful work.

OUERY DEPARTMENT

BY H. LEO BOLES

Please explain John 2: 17: "And his disciples remembered that it was written, The zeal of thine house hath eaten me up."—J. M. KELLER, Route 4, Springfield, Tenn.

This quotation is used with reference to Christ's cleansing the temple. There seems to have been two cleansings of the temple. The first one is recorded in Matt. 21: 12; the second, in John 2: 16, 17. The quotation referred to in this query is found in Ps. 69: 9. Jesus came into the temple, presumably the outer court of the temple, and found that it was being corrupted by making it a house of merchandise. And he says that his Father's house should be a house of prayer and not a market place. He assumes command and cleanses the temple. He stood in the court of his Father's house, which had been reclaimed for the time from the desecration of avarice, and hushed to silence the noise of animals and the boisterousness of traders, so that it could become a place of prayer. His disciples observed the boldness with which he condemned this desecration, and this passage of the Psalms came into their minds and they gazed with astonishment upon the Master during this remarkable scene. Two meanings have been given to the statement, "The zeal of thine house hath eaten me up." The first view is that the boldness with which Jesus attacked those who were desecrating the temple would excite the bitter enmity of the people and they would destroy him. The other view is that Jesus had such zeal that the intensity of it would scon consume his frame, or body—that is, his burning zeal would soon consume his mortal body. I think there is a large element of truth in both of these views. His boldness would excite the intense hatred of his enemies and they would endanger his earthly life, and at the same time the zeal which he had for spiritual and divine things would soon consume his fleshly body. His zeal would both devour his strength by its own fervor and provoke the wrath of his enemies. It must be remembered that the Master lived an intense life; he was never idle. He often spent nights as well as days in earnest prayer. Such a life would soon be consumed or result in premature death physically. ***** * *

There is in the church of Christ at Wysox a man and a woman who were formerly husband and wife, and were when they took membership with this congregation, but who subsequently separated and have both married again. Wife number two requested baptism, and the preacher refused to baptize her. Now, did he do right? What is the duty of the church toward the man and woman?—H. E. Shultz, Prentiss, Ky.

There are two questions involved in this query. Did the preacher do right in refusing to baptize the woman? What is the duty of the church toward the man and woman? They may have had the scriptural cause for separation. I do not know. The query does not make this point clear. If there was a scriptural cause for separation, then the innocent party had a right to marry again and is not living in adultery. If such were the case with the man who married wife number two, then wife number two is not living in adultery and the preacher did wrong in refusing to baptize her. If neither party had the scriptural cause for separation, but separated and married again, then four parties are living in adultery—the man and wife number two are living in adultery, and the woman and husband number two are living in adultery.

I think that if I had been the preacher, I would have baptized her. I would have taught her her duty, would have pointed out her sin, and would have encouraged her to repentance; and if she had responded to the invitation for those who believed in the Lord Jesus Christ and who had repented of their sins to come forward to be baptized, I would have baptized her. It is a fearful thing to hinder or keep any one from obeying the gospel. I do not want to have to answer for such a sin. I have had a few cases like the one described above, and I have baptized the parties and left it with them to bring forth fruit meet for repentance.

The duty of the church in such case is to teach them the will of the Lord and encourage them to obey it. The church cannot compromise with sin; it cannot depart even a hairbreadth from the truth of God. The church should show a deep and abiding interest in the salvation of souls, both with the members of the church and those who are in the world. It should be no respecter of persons in teaching the will of the Lord and encouraging those taught to obey the will. The will of the Lord in the above case is "that all come to repentance" and seek forgiveness in the Lord's appointed way. It is the duty of the church to point out this way to erring members and all others.

It is the duty of the church, when the erring have repented and been forgiven from the Lord, to forgive and encourage the forgiven to live the Christian life. It is the duty of the church to help in Christian fellowship all who are trying to live the Christian life. All formalities and cold indifference should be cast aside and an earnest, prayerful interest taken in all who are trying to live the Christian life.

Do we find any scripture commanding or forbidding women to pray in private or public?—S. E. LOWERY.

Every child of God should pray. I do not see how one could live the Christian life and not pray. The private life should be filled with prayer; it should be lived in the fear of God and holiness There is no distinction to be made between the sexes in the private devotions of life. All scriptures touching upon piety and worship in private life belong to Christian women. The masculine gender may be used in the Scriptures, but it is to be understood that women are included in all private devotions of life. God has seen fit to select or appoint men as leaders of the public worship, and members of the church should develop by earnest effort such traits of character as will enable them to take the lead in public worship. Of course, if there are no men present, then the worship should not be considered as public, but as private worship. If there be objections to some sister's leading the prayer in the assembly of just sisters, then all could pray in silence. No objections could be had to this.

Which is the correct name—"Christian" or "Disciple?"—J. W. A. BAILEY, East St. Louis, Ill.

Both names are scriptural. Jesus, in giving the commission, said: "Go ye therefore and make disciples of all (Matt. 28: 19.) The name "disciple" the nations." means one who is taught or trained; it means a learner. All who are learning of the Lord Jesus Christ and the will of our Father and are being trained in the service of God are entitled to the name "disciple." This word is used more than two hundred and fifty times in the New Testament as applied to the followers of Christ. name "Christian" means one belonging to Christ. It is used only three times in the New Testament. "The disciples were called Christians first in Antioch." (Acts 11: 26.) Again: "Agrippa said unto Paul, With but little persuasion thou wouldest fain make me a Christian." (Acts 26: 28.) And again: "If a man suffer as a Christian, let him not be ashamed; but let him glorify God in this name." (1 Pet. 4: 16.) Some have claimed that the name "Christian" was given to the disciples by their enemies and that we have no divine authority for wearing this name. There is no proof that this name was given by the enemies in derision. There is nothing in the name that is "belittling or contemptuous;" hence, nothing to indicate that it came from the enemy.

BIBLE CROSS WORD PUZZLE

A BIT deceptive is this design, which appears to be well broken-up, but which nevertheless allows for many quite long words. There are many five, six and seven, but the sprinkling of shorter ones will give plenty of clues to the more difficult insertions.

How to Solve a Cross Word Puzzle

To work out this pussle, the white spaces must be filled with letters forming words answering to the various horizontal and vertical definitions given below. The horizontal and vertical words are not the same, but each gives a clue to the other. The first letter of each word is indicated by a number which refers to the definitions listed below.

It is advisable to first fill in, in both directions, those words which you know to be correct. These will furnish hints to those words which you do not know or had merely guessed at. When the pussle is solved correctly, the letters in the white spaces will spell words both horizontally and vertically. The black spaces are the blind spots of the puszle and merely form the pattern, incidentally designating the ends and beginnings of the words contained in the puszle.

From the Brethren

Birmingham, Ala., December 14.-On the third Lord's day in November I met with the church five miles from Henderson, Tenn., and assisted them in raising the last payment on their meetinghouse. They now have a church building that will seat three hundred people, and it is complete. meetinghouse. It is the best meetinghouse in this section among my race, and we are proud of it. This work is only nine years old, and I believe it is the largest colored congregation in the brotherhood. I have always had the sup-port of the white brethren and sisters at this place. When I first came into this country, the sects were real angry; but Brother N. B. Hardeman stood by me, and now some of those who were so opposed to the doctrine have been baptized and are harder fighters than I am. I remained here three days and nights, and preached to a packed house at each service. I spent the rest of the week in town, where we have just completed an-other splendid meetinghouse. We had a fine time here. Many of the stu-dents from the Freed-Hardeman College came each night, and their presence was much appreciated. I wish all the white brethren and sisters knew how much their presence helps in meetings among my people. On the fourth Lord's day in November I the fourth Lord's day in November 1 began a splendid meeting at Caple-ville, Tenn. This church sits right in a hotbed of sectarianism, and much good could be done here if a trouble could be removed that has existed among them for some time. The attendance here was fine and interest increased from start to finish. I am increased from start to finish. I am to labor with them again next year. I am now in Birmingham. I began here for the winter on the fifth Lord's day in November. I preached one day in November. I preached one week in the meetinghouse, and now we are under a tent in a mission field at Fairfield. Interest is high and the people seem eager to learn the perfect way. There were two baptisms yesterday, and three more made the con-fession who desire to be baptized next fession who were fession who were to obey. This makes twenty-one meetings I have conducted this year, and the Lord has richly blessed me in we work. The West End Church began this work among they are proud of the work. Brother Pendergrass, who labors with the West End Church, is a fine man. He wants the colored man taught the pure gospel, and he has encouraged us much. I will close here next Sunday and go home to spend the holidays, but expect to return to spend three or four more weeks in January.—M. Keeble.

STEWARDSHIP.

BY J. V. ARMSTRONG TRAYLOR.

"Let a man so account of us, as of ministers of Christ, and stewards of the mysteries of God." Whereas just being a steward is not sufficient, for Paul declares: "Here, moreover, it is required in stewards, that a man be found faithful." (1 Cor. 4: 1, 2.) The Standard Dictionary gives this definition of a steward: "A person intrusted with the management of estates or affairs not his own; one who manages or disburses for another." Souter, one of England's best Greek scholars, defines the original word from which "steward" is translated as follows: "A superior slave of tried character, who looked after the accounts of a household." Thayer thus defines it: "The manager of a household or of household affairs; a steward, manager, or a superintendent." Not only should we be stewards, but we must be faithful in our stewardship in order to reach the home prepared for the faithful.

The Bible informs us that we own nothing in this world and that we are only possessors This teaching finds its beginning in the Old Testament and reaches its climax in the New Testament. In the face of this teaching, which is seen in Old Testament times, the author of the forty-ninth Psalm declares that some had boasted themselves of having riches and lands. "They call their lands after their own names." (Ps. 49: 11.) Not that God wants his children to give away all they possess, but that he wants them to use their possessions rightly in order that they may be found faithful.

The office of a steward is so full of opportunity, responsibility, and of work that the holder has a good chance to rob the owner and to abuse the trust that lies within him. The evidence that we own nothing is found in the Book of God. The land is not ours. "And the land shall not be sold in perpetuity; for the land is mine: for ye are strangers and sojourners with me." (Lev. 25: 23.) Many are deceived to think that they own the fowls, beasts, and cattle. "For every beast of the forest is mine, and the cattle upon a thousand hills. I know all the birds of the mountains; and the wild beasts of the field are mine." (Ps. 50: 10, 11.) May we not be misled by thinking that the silver and gold are ours? "The silver is mine, and the gold is mine, saith Jehovah of hosts." (Hag. 2: 8.) The Bible will impress upon the reader's mind the largeness and greatness of a steward. Men, by law, purchase land and call it their own, when they only possess it. "For the world is mine, and the fullness thereof." (Ps. 50: 12.) The things of this world are under heaven, but in the following passage we find that God puts a stamp on what belongs to him: "Whatsoever is under the whole heaven is mine." (Job 41: 11.) Some Christians believe in taking vengeance. Furthermore, some believe in taking part with the world in punishing people. "Avenge not yourselves, beloved, but give place unto the wrath of God: for it is written, Vengeance belongeth unto me; I will recompense, saith the Lord." (Rom. 12: 19.) The above passages teach that we are stewards instead of owners. In a sense the owner is absent and has left his property in the hands of stewards. Moreover, he is looking for faithfulness. He is expecting some fruit to be borne. Again, the tree is known by its fruit. Stewards should be just in the usage of things left in their care. The owner should receive the first fruits of the increase. Stewards should not let any of the owner's talents be buried, but should make use of them. God is the owner of our talents. Sometime, somewhere, we must render account of our stewardship. Not every time can a steward go his way, but he must go the way that the owner has commanded. Our owner is God. The steward is a child of the Father-a child of God by adoption.

I shall have more to say in another article on stewardship.

From the Brethren

Munfordville, Ky., December 7.—I closed my third year's work with the church of Christ at Beckton, Ky., yesterday. One was baptized into the one body this morning. They have asked me to preach for them another year.—Samuel H. Austin.

Fancy Farm, Ky., December 9.—On the fourth Lord's day in November I was with the Friendship Church, east of Murray, Ky. Also, since last writing I enjoyed a pleasant preaching visit to the brethren in Wingo, Ky.—J. Fairs Nichols.

Farmersville, Texas, December 7.—I was with the faithful at Climax yesterday. At the morning service an aged man returned to his "first love." It was an hour of great rejoicing. His oldest son was there and made a good talk. The Gospel Advocate is fine. Great subjects are discussed by good men. Keep the work rolling.—R. T. Sisco.

Davenport, Okla., December 12.—I preached on the third Sunday in November at Stroud, Okla.; on the fourth Sunday, at 11 A.M. and 7 P.M. at Bethel, three miles west of Kendrick. On Saturday night before the fifth Sunday and on Sunday at eleven and at night, at Paden. Good audiences at each service. I promised to be at Paden on the third Sunday in December.—J. D. Mathews.

Wellington, Texas, December 9.—Our work here continues to grow. The largest crowd was present last Lord's day that we have had in some time. There was one addition on the fourth Lord's day. I recently closed a short meeting at Dimmitt, Texas. There are only a few members there, but some of them are true to the Book, especially Brother A. O. Gregory and wife, with whom we made our home while there.—Ira Lee Sanders.

Nashville, Tenn., December 10.—
For about three and one-half years I have been laboring almost all the time in Mississippi, trying as best I could to extend the cause of the Master in that much-neglected field. I have reasons to believe that some good has been done. A number of bands of Christians are now meeting regularly for worship and two new church houses have been built, and, I trust, much more good done as a result, in part, of the labor which I did while in this field. Although I have returned to my old field in Middle Tennessee, I shall continue to do what I can in the interest of this field in Southern Mississippi. I would like to get in touch with a young man who would consent to go and continue the work in South Mississippi. There are three or four small congregations in that field that will support a good young preacher quite well. Let any one interested write me at Woodbine Station, Route 9, Nashville, Tenn., or Brother C. T. Netterville, at Wilkinson, Miss. I preached last Sunday, morning and night, at Edenwold, to very good crowds. I shall be glad to arrange for regular monthly work, also for further protracted-meeting work for 1926.—T. C. Fox.

Corinth, Miss., December 11.—In the month of November, the 11th and 12th, we had a get-together meeting between the Jefferson Street and Jackson Street congregations, Nashville, Tenn., when both decided to come back together again. We had present three of the white brethren in the meeting, which made a wonderful influence in uniting the two bodies. three sermons there, with six additions. From Fort Cooper I went to Mars' Hill and preached one sermon there. Then I went to Centerville, Tenn., and preached two sermons, and preached two sermons, and preached two sermons, and the market them went to left them rejoicing. I then went to Florence, Ala., where I found the brethren rejoicing. I would say to the readers of the Gospel Advocate concerning our church-house trouble, there is a balance due of two hundred and fifty-four dollars and interest. I received a statement to-day. The note is past due, and we have not the money to pay it off. We will be thankful to any one who will send us any amount. We do not mean to beg any one at all to help us; but we are only few in number, just three brothers and a small bunch of sisters, and we are doing all we can with the few we Send contributions to me, 1535 Foote Street, Corinth, Miss.-J. I also preached in Ludlow, where they have another hall rented. This church has had a steady growth from twelve members four years ago to about eighty now. They also have a beautiful lot, which is paid for, in the heart of Covington, and some money in the building fund. They also have a tent which is used in that field ev-ery season. Besides all this, they pay about seventy-five dollars per month for evangelistic service. # McQUIDDY'S RUDIMENTS OF MUSIC

Reading music is purely a mechanical problem, and a too liberal use of theory will confuse rather than help in attaining desired results.

Any one may learn to read music accurately and rapidly who will never be able to sing acceptably, for various reasons. Some sing naturally, as do the birds, while others must have long and thorough training before the ability is acquired to sing the Major Diatonic scale correctly; others are unable to sing in "tune," and consequently must have severe drill under a competent instructor before the voice is brought under control. The student will, therefore, understand that neither theoretical technicalities nor voice building will be discussed in this book—merely the art of reading music.

There is no better music composer in this or any other country than is the editor of "McQuiddy's Rudiments of Music." Price, 20 cents, single copy, prepaid; $2.25 per dozen, not prepaid. Address

SIVIA.

Alice Sivia was born on February 20, 1869, and departed this life on October 31, 1925. Sister Sivia was an invalid from her birth, but she seemed to bear her infirmity with great patience. Her brothers and sisters have taken turns in caring for her for many years past, and they are to be commended for this great work of sacrifice and love. Some three or four years ago she confessed her faith in Christ and was baptized by Brother L. E. Jones. After that she attended services as often as she could, and always appeared to enjoy the worship. She was a member of the church of Christ at Christian Chapel, Ill. "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord." (Rev. 14: 13.) There was a large crowd at the funeral, which was conducted by the writer.

R. E. L. TAYLOR.

POWELL.

On November 8, 1925, the death angel visited the little town of Gassaway, Tenn., and claimed for its victim one of our most beloved and influential citizens and a good brother in Christ. Edd Powell was born on February 5, 1881, and was permitted to enjoy forty-four years of this life. On August 1, 1917, he obeyed the gospel under the preaching of C. M. Gleaves, and thenceforward lived a life of unselfish devotion to the cause of Christ. He was married to Eula Melton on July 24, 1904, and was a devoted husband. His passing is greatly deplored by this community, for he was a useful citizen, a Christian gentleman, and a good friend and neighbor. He leaves an aged mother, a loving wife, one brother, and three sisters, besides a host of friends, who mourn his departure and untimely death; but they weep not as those who have no hope, for in view of the promise they expect to meet him in a bright and better world.

HOUSER.

Willie Ermine Houser was born on September 13, 1882, and died on July 11, 1925, following a surgical operation. She had been a member of the church of Christ in Paducah for more than twenty years. She was a devoted Christian, a loving wife and mother. Brother Wheeler Houser, her husband, took sick and was confined to his bed for more than six months, and it looked as though the end had come for him, but his wife's careful nursing brought him through. Under this great strain Sister Houser's health gave down, and, with all that skilled physicians could do, she was taken. She gave her life for his. She leaves her husband and three children, two boys and one girl, together with a host of relatives and friends, to mourn her loss. Funeral services were conducted by the writer in the church building at Nineteenth and Broadway, Paducah, Ky., in the presence of one of the largest crowds ever assembled at a funeral in this city. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord: Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them."

CHARLES TAYLOR.

MEEKS.

On September 19, 1925, Brother J. E. Meeks, of Haynesville, La., laid aside his Christian armor and passed into the great beyond. Thus both the third the great beyond. Thus both the church here and the community sustained a great loss; for Mr. Meeks was a substantial, Christian man and citizen, willing and anxious to do his duty as he saw it in his quiet, unassuming manner. Brother Meeks was born on May 15, 1866. He was mar-ried, in November, 1888, to Miss Sallie Walker, who, together with several brothers and sisters, survives him. Although he suffered intensely for months, he was always cheerful, patient, and brave. Both he and his good wife, herself practically an invalid, were so appreciative of the many kindnesses shown them, especially as the end drew near. Brother Sister Meeks were among the and faithful few who began to meet here regularly for worship in the spring of 1910. While our growth has been slow, it has been steady, and none re-joiced more over every step forward than these two good people, who were always present unless physically hindered. A good man has passed from our midst, but let us not sorrow as those who have no hope; for Christ has gone to prepare a place for us, that where he is, there we may be also.

FLORA TRAVIS.

NORTH.

Ira North, Jr, was born on February 3, 1844, in Bainbridge, Geauga County, Ohio, and entered into rest on October 30, 1925. He was a Union soldier in the Civil War, but voluntered in the crown of the Header teered in the army of the Heavenly King just after coming home, being baptized by Brother James W. Locke, of precious memory. He was married three times. Miss Fannie Locke was his first wife. Her two children both preceded their father in death. Five boys, sons of his second wife, surviva him. Herschol Marshall survive him—Herschel, Marshall, Mark, Luke, and Ova; also two daughters, his last wife's children— Carmie O'Rear and Mazie Alexander. One brother and one sister survive, and four half sisters. His father and mother brought their family to Tennessee in 1849. So he was reared in Tennessee from a little boy. He was always honest, true, and conscientious, and enjoyed the fullest confidence of everybody who knew him. He was a farmer-preacher; and although his education was limited, he was well versed in the word of God and loved it with all his heart. His preaching was so earnest and sincere that it had an influence, for all knew that he was a good man. He had lived in the Ethridge neighborhood ever since the Civil War. He will be greatly missed in the church, for he was so full of zeal and energy that when there was something to be done he was generally in the lead. He was a lover of the Gospel Advocate and the Leader, and they furnished subjects we talked on a great deal when together (the writer is his brother). But our separation will not be long. "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord from henceforth: Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them." Lucas North

IN MEMORY OF MRS. W. L. BOYD.

As I sit and look out on the fastfalling snow, I think of you, dear sister, in the happy days we passed long ago. We all miss your dear, happy, smiling face. We loved so dearly the words of kindness that were so full of grace. They have been ever before our face. The dark cloud that has hung over our home since you went away seems to pass away when we think of meeting you some sweet day. The loving hands that were at our command have vanished. The glory is great that Jesus can release us from our pain. Her last words were: "Let the words of my mouth and the meditation of my heart be acceptable in thy sight, O Lord. Take me home, dear Jesus, and relieve me of my suffering." My brother and children, let us all strive as our dear one did. How sad to have no hope! His glory is great in the salvation of our souls. With obedience to the will of Jesus, we all are blessed with his glory. Let us all strive to meet our dear ones. "The heavens declare the glory of God; and the firmament showeth his handiwork." I often think what I will miss if I miss heaven. God hath spoken to us. We must obey. Power belongeth unto God. In the shadow of thy wings will we rejoice. Obedience to the will of God leads to salvation. We will meet our dear ones through obedience to God. (Mrs.) Cornelia Donovan.

TWIN GIFTS IN CHRIST.

I gave you joy without compare, With joy I filled your very soul; I gave you all My wealth to share My wealth of love entire and whole.

I gave you all My joy to share, And yet a gift remained for you A thousand times more rich and rare-I gave you all My sorrows, too.

I gave you grief beyond compare,
For you I filled the bitter cup; With hope deceived and fierce despair You took it, and you drank it up.

Now one in joy, in sorrow one I am your Master and your Friend; And what we have to-day begun A million ages shall not end. -Cecil Spring-Rice.

WE MAY NEVER KNOW.

I spoke a word,
And no one heard;
I wrote a word,
And no one cared
Or seemed to heed;
But after half a score of years
It blossomed in a fragrant deed.
Preachers and teachers all are we,
Sowers of seeds unconsciously.
Our hearers are beyond our ken,
Yet all we may give may come again
With usury or joy or pain.
We never know
To what one little word may grow.
See to it, then, that all your seeds
Be such as bring forth noble deeds.
—John Oxenham.

CONTENTS OF THE CUP.

Dear Brother Srygley: I read your article to-day, in the Gospel Advocate of December 3, 1925, in answer to Brother Love's about the "one cup." and think it fine. I very often see something in one of our papers about a few of our brethren contending for one cup. Now, I do not see why preachers of the gospel should be confused about such a thing as a cup. We know that Jesus took the cup and gave thanks for-not the cup, but the wine, the fruit of the vine, the contents of the cup. There is just as much authority for one thousand cups as there is for one; but only one wine, the fruit of the vine, for which our Savior gave thanks. If we had two cups, one of wine and one of coffee. we could not give thanks for them on the Lord's table, because we would have two cups, two contents, one of which our Lord did not command. When I obeyed the gospel twenty-five years ago, under your preaching, the church here used four cups, and after a while we added two more. Now we have about two hundred and fifty, but still use only one cup (contents)one wine, the fruit of the vine.

So, brethren, use as many cups (containers) as you please, but only one contents—one wine, or fruit of the vine—as our Savior has commanded, and he has promised to be with us where two or three are come together in his name, to own and bless us. But woe unto you by whom offenses cometh! (See Matt. 18: 7.)

UNIFICATION VS. UNITY.

BY THEO. HAMMER.

The recent effort at unification of the different factions of the Methodist Church simply show the littleness, narrowness, and absurdity of denominationalism. We think if all so-called Christians would cling to the sacred word of God and accept it as their authority in all religious matters, that there would be no divisions, and all Christians could present a united front to the common enemy.

We have often heard it asked: When we get to heaven, will we be one body, or will we be divided into different groups, each group wearing an earthly name and criticizing and finding fault with the others? Such would be a poor heaven. It is absolutely certain that such was not the will of Christ, even on earth, for he prayed earnestly and fervently that the disciples might be one, even as he and the Father are one. And Paul, in his letters to the churches, warned them often in regard to such divisions. It seems absolutely ridiculous, then, that pretended Bible scholars and religious people in general would cater to anything else other than unity and oneness in everything pertaining to our salvation.
