Gainesboro, Tenn., June 5.—I drove ten miles to a destitute place last Lord's day and preached at 11 A.M. to a large crowd. On my way home, four miles down the road, I preached to a houseful of people in the afternoon. I left them with their thearts filled with joy and resigning the afternoon. I left them with their hearts filled with joy and rejoicing. I arrived at home at 6:30 P.M., somewhat wearied. I know that my public work is nearing its close, but I rejoice to think of such boys as Willie Hunter and B. C. Goodpasture, who sat under the sound of my voice when quite young. To-day they are men that I am proud of. Brother Hunter is giving a part of his time to the country where I have preached for forty-five years, and is doing a great work. Brother Goodpasture is doing a great work. Brother Goodpasture is doing a great work in Atlanta, Ga. May the Lord bless them and their families with such blessings as will enable lies with such blessings as will enable them to continue in the great work they are engaged in, and may lasting good be the result of their labors. Success to the Gospel Advocate.— Marion Harris.

Nashville, Tenn., June 4.—I began a meeting at Greenville, S. C., on May 3 and remained nearly three weeks. Brother G. F. Gibbs (white) arranged for this meeting among my arranged for this meeting among my race. He is one man that wants all nations to hear the gospel, and he and the congregation he labors with did all in their power to encourage me while there. Brother Gibbs and several other white brethren led in the song service. The sectarian the song service. The sectarian reachers did all they could to keep the song service. The sectarian preachers did all they could to keep the people from coming to the meeting, but the meeting grew in interest and resulted in twelve precious souls obeying the gospel. Also several white people were converted and had Brother Gibbs to baptize them. Brother A. M. Burton's financial support in this meeting was highly appreciated. This makes two destitute fields he has sent me to this year, and at each place a new congregation was started. I have, by the help of God, started three new congregations to work according to the New Testament this year.—M. Keeble.

Beulah, New Mexico, June 6.—I am sending herewith a small sum for Brother Srygley's evangelizing trip. I wish I were able to bring him to New Mexico for a whole month. Las Vegas is a town of eight or ten thousand, with no true church there. Just now the sects are having what they call a "union meeting," and the "digressives" are hobnobbing with them as usual; but they have a padlock on their mouth and would not be allowed to tell an earnest inquirer what to do to be saved. The Gospel Advocate has always been good, but for several weeks it has been exceptionally good; and as I am isolated (the only member of the church here), it serves to keep me in touch with the brotherhood, and its many cheering articles serve in a great measure to satisfy the soul's longings. It doubtless will be of interest to some to know that here in the mountains of New Mexico we have a climate noted for relief and cure of asthma and all lung troubles. Asthmatics obtain immediate relief, and many with tuberculosis are cured. Now, I am not a land agent, neither do I keep a boarding house, so have no personal interest in having people come here. I pray that the Advocate staff may continue its good work. My wife has been dead two years, but I still have the Advocate come in her name. She loved it so much.—S. L. Barker.

Henry, Tenn., June 5.—Brother Charlie Taylor has just closed a wonderful meeting at Paris. This is the first meeting we have had in our recently acquired church house, and it measured up to our fondest hopes in every way. Unprecedented crowds attended throughout, and they all went away fully realizing that the pure and simple gospel had been preached to them. Forcefully and fearlessly Brother Taylor held up the banner of truth and right, striking crushing blows against sectarianism and ungodliness. We have had a long and severe struggle in Paris, but the clouds are rapidly passing and brighter days are ahead. There were fifteen accessions to the church during this meeting—fourteen by baptism and one by statement. We went into our own house, purchased from the Methodist people in Paris, about October 1, 1924. We were able to purchase this house at a great bargain. It is a commodious brick building in a splendid state of preservation, containing an auditorium as large as that of any church house in Paris, together with a number of classrooms. It has sufficient room to supply the growing needs of the church for several years. It cost us the sum of ten thousand five hundred dollars, and we got immediate possession, with three years in which to pay for it. With the sacrifices of the church in Paris and the coöperation of the brethren on the outside, we have been able to meet every payment so far. From all sources there have been twenty-five additions to the church since moving into our new quarters. We are all hopeful of the future and our hearts are glad and joyful. Brother F. B. Srygley began this work about nine years ago, and it has gone steadily forward until now. Any visiting brethren are urged to meet with us at the east end of Ruff Street.—Fred W. Chunn.

BOSWELL-HARDEMAN DISCUSSION ON INSTRU-MENTAL MUSIC IN THE WORSHIP

Price, postpaid______$1.50

The Boswell-Hardeman discussion on instrumental music in the worship is now ready for distribution. If you have not already given us your order for the discussion, you should do so at once. The subject is a live one and the interest in it is growing. So many who have built on the silence of the Bible have espoused "open membership" and have denied the inspiration of the Scriptures and the deity of Christ that the people are realizing as never before that it is dangerous to build on the silence of the Bible.

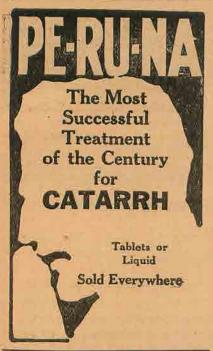

This discussion was conducted in a good spirit throughout, each speaker showing marked consideration and courtesy for his opponent. Ira M. Boswell did as well as any one can do who undertakes to prove that instrumental music in the worship is scriptural. Any failure that he made was not on account of his lack of ability, but was due to the weakness of his position. N. B. Hardeman presented the truth in a forceful and convincing way.

Buy the book and circulate it among those who use instrumental music in the worship.

church, and a great inspiration to the small band of Christians meeting from house to house each Lord's day for work and worship. Her memory will ever live in the hearts of those who knew her and the influence of her life will be felt by all. She was devoted to her husband and loved her home. After a short service by the writer for the benefit of her many friends on Martin's Creek, her body was carried to the home of her parents, where another funeral service was carried to the home of her parents, where another funeral service was held by Brother C. M. Gleaves, after which she (with her dear little babe in her arms) was laid to rest in the family cemetery near Fosterville, Tenn. She leaves a husband, father, mother, six brothers, three sisters, and a host of relatives and friends, to mourn her passing. To those who and a host of relatives and ments, to mourn her passing. To those who are left with bleeding hearts I would say: "Weep not, as others who have no hope." She "is not dead, but sleepeth." "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord."

W. M. OAKLEY.

STUBBLEFIELD.

Our beloved sister in Christ, Sarah Campbell Stubblefield, departed this life in the early hours of Lord's-day night, February 1, 1925. She was born according to the flesh on July 21, 1862, showing the days of her earthly pilgrimage to have been about earthly pilgrimage to have been about sixty-two and one-half years. She was "born again" into the family of God early in life. She was the dearly beloved and faithful companion of our esteemed brother, J. R. Stubblefield, of the home congregation at Viola, Tenn. They were married on December 31, 1890. Their home was blessed with five good children—four sons and one daughter. In our association with five good children—four sons and one daughter. In our association with her in the walks of this life, comparing her earthly life with the admonitions and commandments of the Holy Scriptures, we believe that her spirit has been joyously received in the land of continued joys and eternal rest. Her children delighted to "call her blessed; her husband also, and he praiseth her." She literally fulfilled the admonition of the Holy Spirit in giving her body "a living sacrifice," that she might the more perfectly do her Master's will, as mother to her children and companion to her husband. She faithfully ministered to every necessity for comfort and ease of body of the very aged mother of her husband, who is now in her ninety-fifth year. All of now in her ninety-fifth year. All of her children have obeyed the gospel and are living faithful to their Christian obligations.

MEETINGHOUSE NEEDED AT TUPELO.

BY W. H. OWEN.

Of the many congregations that receive help from others in the matter of building houses of worship, none is more worthy or justifiable in asking for aid than the faithful little band at Tupelo, Miss. Because I am so thoroughly familiar with the situation there and know of their zeal, their needs, and their sacrifices in the past, I feel impelled to attempt to present their wants to the great brotherhood of disciples of our Lord, believing that there are many congregations and individuals that delight in rendering assistance in just such places. I preached there for a long time and am thoroughly familiar with conditions.

Tupelo is one of the best towns in Northern Mississippi and should be a center for New Testament Christianity in that part of the country. The church there is doing its best to make it that. When I first went there, about eleven years ago, I found a congregation under the control of the State Board, using instrumental music and other innovations in the worship. The membership might be considered in three groups: first, those who were so firmly joined to their idols that they would see the body of Christ torn asunder rather than give up certain things admitted to be nonessential; second, a number of honest, sincere people who took instrumental music as a matter of course, supposing it had always been a part of church worship, and not knowing there had ever been any widespread or serious opposition to it; and third, a few loyal souls who had been grounded in the faith under the influence of some of the godly pioneers of the past, and whose hearts yearned for a place where they could worship God "as it is written" in the Book. When I preached the gospel to them to the best of my ability, those of the third group took courage, those of the second group gladly received the truth, and those of the first group branded me as a breeder of strife and a divider of churches nad became bitter in their opposition. The result was that a number of good people established regular worship at the courthouse, where I continued to labor with them for about four years. For several years they have been paying on a nice lot, well located. They have it paid for, and now they are undertaking to build a neat, comfortable, modest house of worship. The building is brick veneer and is nearing completion. They are to pay fifteen hundred dollars when it is finished and the balance in installments. It has been a struggle for them to pay for the lot, and they are three or four hundred dollars short on the cash payment on the house. I know that these brethren have sacrificed heavily, and this call is a worthy one. Besides paying for their lot, they have been liberal to the extent of their ability in doing missionary work and responding to calls similar to this in other fields. They have helped as they were able to build houses in other places. They have proven their zeal for building up the cause of Christ.

Brethren, let us help them. A small contribution from each one who reads this would be a mighty factor in promoting New Testament Christianity in one of our great Southern States. Mississippi is ripe unto the harvest, but the laborers are few and congregations are scattering. Send contributions to T. D. Long, Tupelo, Miss.

JESUS CHRIST, THE FOUNDA-TION.

BY H. C. FLEMING.

In laying the foundation for any building, the first thing to do is to find a suitable stone for a corner stone. When this has been found and placed in proper position, the next point is to find other stones to conform to the corner stone; and these must be placed upon a firm basis in order to bear the weight of the building and to stand the test of wind, hail, etc., that may come against it. (See Matt. 7: 24-27.)

When Christ asked the disciples, "Whom say ye that I am?" Peter said: "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." Christ replied: "Thou art Peter Ia stone, not the corner stonel, and upon this rock I will build my church," (See Matt. 16: 15-18.) This rock was surely not Peter, because he was too weak and feeble for the chief corner stone, but was, and is, "the Christ, the Son of the living God."

The above conforms to the statement by Moses: "I will raise them up a Prophet from among their brethren, like unto thee, and will put my words in his mouth; and he shall speak unto them all that I shall command him. And it shall come to pass, that whosoever will not hearken unto my words which he shall speak in my name, I will require it of him." (Deut. 18: 18, 19.) This indicates that all must obey the words of that Prophet (Christ) or be condemned.

Isaiah says: "Therefore thus saith the Lord God, Behold, I lay in Zion for a foundation a stone, a tried stone, a precious corner stone, a sure foundation: he that believeth shall not make haste. Judgment also will I lay to the line, and righteousness to the plummet: and the hail shall sweep away the refuge of lies, and the waters shall overflow the hiding place." (Isa. 28: 16, 17.) This is a very important matter in the foundation of the Christian's hope. "Now therefore ye are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow citizens with the saints, and of the household of God; and are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone." (Eph. 2: 19, 20.)

The prophets of the Old Testament pointed forward to the coming of Christ. The New Testament apostles and prophets point to the time when he did come. Each one of these is a stone in the foundation of the church of Christ, but neither Peter nor any other one is the chief corner stone. "For other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ." (1 Cor. 3: 11.)

away: and who shall declare his generation? for his life is taken from the earth." (See, also, Isa. 53: 7.) This does not refer to Peter or any one of the apostles, because not one of them has yet been raised from the dead. Philip applies it to Christ. He "began at the same scripture, and preached unto him [the eunuch] Jesus."

Here are Christ's own words in Rev. 1: 18: "I am he that liveth, and was dead; and, behold, I am alive forevermore. Amen; and have the keys of hell and of death."

He conquered; the gates of hell did not prevail against him. "Wherefore he is able also to save them to the uttermost that come unto God by him, seeing he ever liveth to make intercession for them." (Heb. 7: 25.)

COMMENDATIONS OF BIBLE LESSON HELPS

- "I am delighted with your Lesson Helps, and regard them as the best I have examined." (C. W. Thompson.)
- "We have been using the Lesson Helps for fifteen years or more. I noticed the change, and, in my humble judgment, think it good." (W. G. Harrison.)
- "I have received sample copies of your Lesson Helps and examined them. I pronounce them as good, so far as I can think, as can be made," (Ira C. Moore.)
- "We are using your Sunday-school Lesson Helps at Fairfax church of Christ, this city, and think they are good. We have no criticism to offer." (M. P. Lowry.)
- "I am glad to commend the Bible Lesson Helps issued by the Gospel Advocats Company. They cannot fall of being helpful to any church using them." (C. A. Norred.)
- "The Quarterlies are fine. They should be a great help to the Bible student. I would be glad if Bible classes that do not now have them would take up their use." (R. P. Cuff.)
- "Your Quarterlies received and briefly examined. They show that much time and care have been exercised in their preparation. They are clear, scriptural, and to the point." (E. L. Whitaker.)
- (E. L. Whitaker.)

 "I think the Quarterlies very instructive and helpful in the study of the Scriptures both in the home and in the public assembly, and it will give me pleasure to commend them to all the faithful workers in my field of labor." (J. D. Jones.)
- "The Sunday-school literature that is published by the Gospel Advocate Company I can heartly recommend to any one who is in search for good helps on our Sunday-school lessons." (Robert E. Wright.)
- "A complete assortment of the Sunday-school literature published by the Gospei Advocate Company was sent me recently. Having examined it carefully, I am glad to say I consider it excellent, and gladly commend it to congregations, teachers, and classes." (T. B. Larimore.)
- "As a whole, I think your Lesson Helps far surpass other literature of its kind. Here in this great mission field (Louisiana) where we have placed them, many comparisons have been made between them and both the denominational and our society brethren's literature, and at no time have your Lesson Helps come off second best." (C. C. McQuiddy.)
- "It is a pleasure to write a word of commendation of Brother Ellam's Notes on Bible School Lessons. They are the product of one who has given the greater part of his life to the study and teaching of God's Word. They are true to the Bible, comprehensive, and scholarly. If you love the truth, you will be delighted to study with him these wonderful lessons." (A. G. Freed.)
- "Brother E. A. Elam's Notes, as published annually, is, in my judgment, sortptural and the best thing of its kind I have ever seen or that is published to-day Everybody ought to have a copy and preserve it for study and reference. Brother Elam's twenty-five years' work, if every year should be bound in a separate volume, the twenty-five volumes would be a great addition to any library. (C. M. Pullias.)
- "At the Central church of Christ in Fort Worth we have been using in our Bible school Elam's Notes and other literature of his. For a great number of years the writer of this has felt that Brother Elam was one of the best-prepared men in the brotherhood for the preparation of such literature. His Notes, in our best judgment, represent, or reflect, the best efforts he has ever made. Both as an elder of the congregation and as a teacher in our Bible School, I have very great pleasure in indorsing his Notes. To the extent that an expression of our views is of value, I assure you we are very pleased to give it." (J. G. Wilkinson.)
- "I have used Elam's Quarterlies for years. They are superior to any that I have seen. Elam's Notes on Bible School Lessons are much fuller than they. They give the historical setting as to time and place that is needed and valuable. They give so many scriptural citations and references—Scriptural citations and references—Scriptural that introduce the text or corroborate the text—that the average student may know the geography, the history, and the full meaning of the lesson. They give so many lessons, deducted from the copious citations of Scriptures, that the student may know more perfectly God's will. For years I have used Peloubet's Select Notes. I compare them weekly, I do not hesitate to say that Elam's Notes are infinitely superior, if you want to know the Bible." (C. F. Holt.)

CURRENT COMMENT

By JAMES A. ALLEN

Russell E. Stout, Broken Arrow, Okla., sends us a copy of an editorial in the Tulsa Tribune, entitled "Tennessee Puts Itself on Trial," and says: "I would like for you to expose it through the Gospel Advocate, the best Christian paper I ever saw." The editorial begins with a plea for "religious freedom," and says:

Religious freedom is the corner stone of American life. What is religion? Religion is an accepted formula of thought or action, designed to connect us with the eternal life which passeth our understanding. Religious life is conduct that conforms to our accepted code of that which is good or godly. There are many religions, just as there are many peoples. There are many classes and sects and groupings of people who are of a common kind. Yet there is not a minister who are yet as Cod who does not acknowled. groupings of people who are of a common kind. Yet there is not a minister who prays to a God who does not acknowledge that we are all children of the common Father, a thing we should never forget when, in the heat of sectarian differences, one class of believers is condemning to eternal munishment another class. punishment another class.

It was this thought, that we are children of a common Father, that, however differently we worship, we worship the same God, that compelled the builders of America to dedicate this land to religious liberty and to affirm that no dedicate this land to religious liberty and to affirm that no American law would ever be made which would limit or prohibit the teaching of any faith. Tennessee has defied this basic American principle, and Tennessee goes to trial. There was but one Christ. But there are many creeds and conflicting thoughts of God and godliness among those who profess to be disciples of Christ. They have quarreled over the dogma differences that he never created. Since the beginning of America our country has been cordial to all creeds, however much at variance. No one has been told he could not believe as he chose to believe. Religious freedom has been the pillar and pride of our national life.

There is something confessedly week in any creed that

There is something confessedly weak in any creed that has to legislate itself up, that has to prop itself up with law crutches, making it unlawful for any but its creed to be taught.

Without intending any personal reflection on the writer of this editorial or on any one else, we wish to point out that such pleas for "religious freedom" are deceptive and hypocritical. It is a fact that the authors of the Constitution guaranteed "religious freedom" to every citizen, and that any law that interferes with the "religion" of any person is unconstitutional. But to teach the false theory of evolution, instead of being an exercise of "religious freedom," guaranteed by the Constitution, is an act of irreligion and anarchy that would destroy the Constitution and lead to the disintegration of the nation. No man has a constitutional right to do anything that would eventually overthrow the Constitution.

We agree with the writer of this infidel editorial that "there is something confessedly weak in any creed that has to legislate itself up, that has to prop itself up with law crutches, making it unlawful for any but its creed to be taught." The man who, with an air of injured innocence, sings such a swan song certainly has failed to grasp the point under consideration. It is a sad comment on the depravity of human nature that there must be laws on the statute books to prevent a man from taking the life of his brother or to restrain him from lifting his hand to the injury of his neighbor. But is it "confessedly weak" to "legislate" against murder, to "make it unlawful for any" man to wash his hands in the blood of his brother? Such an idea is absurd and preposterous. And did the authors of the American Constitution, in granting religious freedom to every citizen, intend to permit a man to do as he pleases, whether what he pleases to do is for the public good or not? Recognition of such a fallacy would be a public calamity.

Teaching the false theory of evolution does not come under the head of "religious freedom." There is nothing 'religious" about it. It denies "religion," contradicts the facts upon which "religion" is based, and breeds anarchy by opposing the very thing that makes good government possible. Darwinites cannot hypocritically hide behind the claim "that the builders of America dedicated this land to religious liberty and affirmed that no American law would ever be made which would limit or prohibit the teaching of any faith" as they seek to overthrow "religion" and as they scorn and ridicule the statements of facts in the Bible upon which faith is based. Any government that permits infidels to teach things in its schools that will ultimately undermine and destroy it commits national suicide and lays the foundation for its own ruin and destruction. The fruit of Darwinism is vice, wickedness, and irreligion, and such things are incompatible with good citizenship. It is un-American and unconstitutional to teach such things in the schools of a nation that stamps upon its dollars the motto, "In God we trust."

We invite our readers to consider the following:

Charles Darwin was a biologist. If the law that is now being tested in Tennessee is to prevail, you must stop teaching all biology, all geology, chemistry, zoölogy, and astronomy, because they all deal with facts that are in conflict with the beautiful and spiritual poetry of the book of

All who want to take the book of Genesis literally, and not as an inspired poetical story, should have the right to do so; but those who want to believe in the science as the microscope, the telescope, and the test tube reveal it should have the right under the law to so believe. He is most un-American in spirit as well as most irreligious who would deny by law all recognition of reciprocity, generosity, and fair play, who would make all minds submissive slaves to their dominating will.

In the time of Christ all people thought the world was flat. Doubtless Christ thought so. His geographic opinions are not recorded. But even if he and his disciples will be in the fact. Now did believe the world was flat, it did not alter the fact. did Columbus' discovery subtract one iota of the beauty or inspirational power from the poets and philosophers of ancient times who, with the wisdom they possessed, accounted for the wonders of the universe as they could and wove into their documents and declarations enduring lessons as to how to live in obedience to a high moral law and a righteous ethical standard, and made their religion and a righteous ethical standard, and made their religion not a perfunctory profession, but an actual conduct in life. He who says that religion and reason are not compatible with the scientific knowledge of good conduct and godliness exposes infinitely more of his own mental limitation than the spiritual and religious integrities of those who at all times declare: "And ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."

We are not willing to admit that "Charles Darwin was a biologist." We would not call a man a "physician" whose work in the profession killed instead of cured. And no man whose biological theories and guesses are so contrary to the known facts of biology as were those of Charles Darwin has a legitimate claim to such a title. Pert and egotistical professors in our schools who think it is smart and an indication of great learning to teach our children that their forefathers were monkeys should be unceremoniously fired for ignorance and general incompetency, to say nothing of the immorality of the thing. "Science" is "classified knowledge;" and every biological fact that is actually known is in perfect agreement with facts stated in the Bible. Darwin admitted that he was teaching a theory, that he did not actually know it to be true. Had he taught something that he had actually discovered to be a fact, he could not have made such an admission. The Bible is the mother of science. There is nc science where the Bible has not gone. One of the strongest evidences of the divine origin of the Bible is that though it is the oldest book in the world, every really known fact actually discovered by modern scientists is in perfect harmony with it. No pretended scientist actually knows anything that contradicts the facts of the Bible. It is absurd to admit assertions without proof and things that are confessedly theories, and that will never be anything else, as evidence against the incontrovertible facts recorded in the Bible. The theory that man evolved from the monkey, or from any lower and diverse kind of life, is wholly unproven and utterly groundless.

In the creation, as recorded by Moses. God gave the law that all things should produce "after their kind." (See Gen. 1.) Since the earliest records of history, no fact has ever been recorded where anything ever produced a diverse kind. Every living thing is in its own sphere and has never been known to get out of it. There is a line, a chasm, separating every living thing from every other living thing, and it would be as impossible for any living thing to cross the line that separates it from a diverse kind as it would be for the mighty waters of the ocean to violate the command of their Creator: "Hitherto shalt thou come, but no further; and here shall thy prond waves be stayed." Confusion may be, and has been, brought about between various kinds, in both the animal and vegetable worlds, but this furnishes additional proof that the line between diverse kinds cannot be eliminated and that a dog will be a dog, and a monkey a monkey, "even unto the end of the world."

We submit that it is a falsehood, not to use a shorter word, to intimate that "the microscope, the telescope, and the test tube" reveal any fact contrary to Bible facts. We very assuredly wish to affirm that every real truth in nature that has actually been discovered by "the microscope, the telescope, and the test tube" corroborates the truths of the Bible and that the real scientist is the firmest believer in the great cardinal fact that the Author of nature is the Author of revelation.

But the writer of this wicked editorial under review inadvertently reveals where the trouble lies. It is not that scientists have actually discovered any fact in nature that contradicts the Bible, for no such fact has ever been discovered, as, indeed, the very opposite is true, and every new fact discovered has added to the evidences of the divine origin of the Bible. But the trouble lies, as may be seen in this editorial, in the infidelity of those who ardently wish that Darwinism were more than a theory. It is infidelity to talk of Christ, nineteen hundred years ago, "doubtlessly thinking that the world was flat" or to speak contemptuously of "all who want to take the book of Genesis literally." If Christ thought "the world was flat," then he was a mere man; and if he was a mere man, when he claimed to be the Son of God, he was the greatest impostor the world has ever known.

The whole question, in its last analysis, rests upon the divinity of Christ. The origin of species is only a secondary matter. Jesus quoted from and indorsed Moses and the prophets, constituting the Old Testament, and eight of his apostles and evangelists wrote the twentyseven books of the New Testament. The whole Volume is a history of the advent of Jesus, there being not a sentence in the entire Book, from Genesis to Revelation, that is not connected with, and a part of, the development of the scheme of redemption through the mission of Eve's Son of Blessing. "The testimony of Jesus," said a divine oracle, "is the spirit of prophecy;" and as the history of the Bible is its fulfilled prophecy, the testimony of Jesus is the spirit of the entire Volume. Jesus is the Alpha and the Omega of the Bible. The divine inspiration of Moses or the divine origin of any single book in the Bible is but a secondary matter. It is not primarily a question of whether Moses told the truth when he said that "God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him." Jesus indorsed Moses, and the truthfulness of the statement rests primarily upon Jesus. If Jesus was, and is, the Christ, the Son of God, all that he indorsed is true.

Evidences of every variety and kind, to which we cannot now advert, make it impossible for an honest and candid mind to entertain a doubt that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God. The miracles, wonders, and signs performed by Jesus in proof of his divinity are historical facts, and are susceptible of the same kind of proof as other historical occurrences. They are not fictions, but are things that really happened, concerning which we have the indisputable testimony of both eyewitnesses and earwitnesses. The climax of the evidences, and the one underlying all, is the resurrection of Jesus from the dead; and the resurrection of Jesus from the new tomb of the Arimathean senator is the best-proved historical fact in the annals of the world. Before our so-called "scholars" are able to prove that man is an evolution from a monkey, they would have to prove that Jesus did not rise from the dead. And greater men than any living to-day have utterly failed to produce an icta of countertestimony or to bring forward a single competent witness. It is not smart to kick against the goads.

Concerning Mr. Bryan the writer says:

Mr. William Jennings Bryan has been a good and useful man. He has a heart that intuitively loves mankind and is always impatient to help the under dog in the economic struggle of the world; but he repudiates all he has ever done, all he has ever stood for, and the basic principles of American progress and constitutional liberty, when he sets out to insist that no man shall be permitted to teach a dogma that differs from his.

We very much admire the stand Mr. Bryan has taken in this matter, as well as the courage and the great ability he has exhibited. From the time that my father took me to hear Bryan my personal opinion has been that he is one of the greatest men of the age. And while we wish to very heartily commend his great defense of the Bible, we beg to suggest that he is in a position to call the attention of the religious world to the cause of all this infidelity.

Christianity has been injured more by Christians than it has by infidels. Like its great Founder, it has been "wounded in the house of its friends." The religious world itself has set the example of not accepting the Bible for what it says and of repudiating various statements and passages of scripture. Not long ago a so-called "minister of the gospel" ridiculed as "Campbellite classics" passages of scripture that tell sinners what the Holy Spirit, through inspired men, commands them to do to be saved. Many preachers are deeply disturbed over the fact that a few college professors have attempted to get in the spot-light by repudiating the statement of Moses that "God created man in his own image" or the statement of Luke that Jesus was born of a virgin, and yet they themselves repudiate other passages of scripture that command penitent believers to be immersed.

Mr. Bryan would do a great service to the nation and to the world if he would suggest that it is no greater infidelity to deny one passage of scripture than it is to deny another. "Go ye into all the world," said Jesus to his apostles, "and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is immersed shall be saved; but he that disbelieveth shall be condemned." in preaching the first gospel sermon, in obedience to this command from his Lord, on the birthday of the church, Peter answered the inquiry, "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" by saying: "Repent ye, and be immersed every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of your sins; and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit." Every convert to Christianity in New Testament times was an immersed believer, and there were no unimmersed persons in the primitive church. Immersion was the universal practice of the religious world until the thirteenth century of the Christian era. The preacher who refuses to tell sinners that Jesus commands them, upon faith and repentance, to be immersed. is a greater infidel than the professor who teaches children that their forefathers were monkeys.

Mr. Bryan is a good man, and we believe that he can see the inconsistency of blue-penciling the passages of scripture that tell sinners what to do to be saved, and yet contending with the infidels for blue-penciling the passages that tell of the creation of man and of the virgin birth.

Let us accept the whole Bible as it is and as it reads. In no other way can Christian union, that is so necessary to the conversion of the world, ever be brought about or can we do the will of God on earth as it is done in heaven.

OUR CONTRIBUTORS

OUR PROPOSAL TO THE DENOMINATIONS.

BY PRICE BILLINGSLEY.

Brother Lipscomb's oft-expressed conviction that the denominations do not understand our efforts at reëstablishing undenominational Christianity recurs to me these days with increasing force and frequency. The fogs of the partisan spirit by which they are dominated becloud their minds; they see us as one like themselves, actuated in our pleading that they come and help us only by the selfish motives of one party seeking to thrive at the expense of another; and he urged that we should use every possible means of enlightening them upon this issue, making them know that in our pressing only the gospel and urging everybody to be content with its fruit, the New Testament church is not at all what they themselves aim at in their partisan pleas and organizations. The article below is in substance a declaration I cause to be published as widely as may be in the places where I hold meetings, with striking help in getting the gospel before the public. It is subjoined here in the hope that it will incite others to make more serious and consistent efforts at helping sectarians understand us that they may be led to the truth.

To the Religious Public of This City—Greeting: Now in the midst of a revival in your city with the church of Christ, I take this means of saying a kindly word to you, and of submitting a declaration of our purposes and aims for your sympathetic consideration. It must be that many of our religious neighbors do not understand us, and I speak frankly that all misunderstanding may be cleared away.

First, let it be remembered that Christ, in giving the commission to his Spirit-filled apostles, sent them to every creature of the world with precisely the same instructions to all alike, offering the same blessings to all upon identically the same conditions; all were commanded to do the same things, and were pointedly warned against going beyond what was written in anything whatsoever. Thus, under the leadership of inspired men, all the obedient entered that blood-bought church named by the Lord himself and were all of the same mind, of one accord. As nothing but an oak tree can grow from an acorn, so nothing but an oak tree can grow from an acorn, so nothing but a Christian can come from the seed of the kingdom, the word of God. All those people in New Testament times were simply Christians, members of the body of Christ, the church. I presume that no man to-day who studies and reveres the word of the Lord would say that those people were Methodists, Baptists, Presbyterians, or Campbellites. Any such hybrid growth can result only from sowing the doctrines and commandments of men, and these are to be hated and opposed because they destroy the soul.

I specially call the attention of the preachers of the city to this statement. Every denomination teaches some truth and does some good, which is to be commended. But let it be added that every denomination also both preaches and practices many things for which there is not one scintilla cf divine authority, which, though the life depended upon it, could not be read of in the Bible. I ask, if it be right to respect and follow the Bible in some things, why not follow it implicitly in everything? Besides, the New Testament church was not a denomination, but included and consisted of all Christians; whereas denominations of the present divide the professed followers of Christ into opposing factional institutions and war with the very genius and spirit of Christianity. Let men pause and reflect upon this.

But the point which I press here for your sincerest consideration is that with all our souls we seek to return to and restore that divine order established by Christ and his inspired men. We do not say we are all right and everybody else all wrong. Far from it! We are not the standard. What we do devoutly believe and affirm is that what the Lord says is all right, and in his work and worship it is wrong to do anything but this. We ourselves freely declare our desire to walk by the very rule imposed upon all; we invoke the Lord's rule upon everybody alike. Wherein we fail to measure up to this inspired standard, let us be corrected. Right gladly will we yield every item of our faith and practice not plainly specified in the New Testament. And let us be believed when we here declare ourselves ready to meet with any and all in any place of worship upon the sole condition that we shall do simply and only that which the Lord in his own words specifically and positively commands. Before an open Bible and in the fear of Jehovah, I plead that we all may be willing to do this.

MORE MISSIONARIES FOR FOREIGN SERVICE.

BY ROBERT S. KING.

The church at Morrillton, Ark., announces that four of its members have volunteered for service in China.

The church at Waverly-Belmont, Nashville, Tenn., will send a young couple to Japan; and the church at Abilene, Texas, has just announced that George K. Dasha and wife go out as missionaries for service in India.

We rejoice that these splendid young Christians are willing to make the sacrifice of leaving home and loved ones, fathers and mothers, brothers and sisters, and this good land where we can worship God without fear of being molested and where there are none to make us afraid. We rejoice to know that they are glad of the opportunity of serving their Master where no one else desires to serve him, and they will not think it hard if they fare as well as the Master. Our prayers go up for them as they make preparations for the long journey before them, and for those who are to have fellowship with them in the great work.

Those going out from the church at Morrillton, Ark., are Brother and Sister John Dow Merritt, Miss Sallie Ellis Hockaday and Brother George Benson.

Brother Benson entered Harper College in 1921 and remained two years. While in Harper he became interested in missions and decided to cast his lot for China, and selected it for his future field of labor. He took his B.S. degree at the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical College in 1924, coming back to Harper College as a member of the faculty, 1924-25. Brother Benson has been preaching the gospel for a number of years; and during his work at Harper he taught a weekly mission class, which will bear fruit to God's glory for years to come.

Brother John Dow Merritt is a brother of C. C. Merritt, editor of the Living Message, and has done extensive work among the brotherhood in a number of States and Canada. He entered Western Bible College in 1908, and became a Christian that winter. Later he spent a year in Cordell Christian College, then entered the Navy Hospital Division and became a trained nurse, and held the position of head of the division for some time. He having had this training, with other splendid qualities, makes him especially qualified for the China work.

Mrs. Alice Cook Merritt became a Christian in 1904, and came to the Western Bible and Literary College in 1911, where she remained four years. She later spent a year each in Monea College, Rector, Ark., and Harper College.

Both Brother and Sister Merritt were reared in Christian homes and are thoroughly fitted for the work which they now undertake.

Miss Sallie Ellis Hockaday is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. D. Hockaday, of Granite, Okla., and a sister of W. Don Hockaday, a faithful gospel preacher well known in the South. She was baptized in 1904 by W. W. Brewer; attended Cordell Christian College, and was a member of the faculty in 1921-23. She also taught in Abilene Christian College in 1920. While at Cordell she became interested in foreign missions, and has selected China as the field in which she desires to spend her time and talent for the Lord.

The engagement of Brother Benson and Miss Hockaday was announced on May 12, and they are to be married at the home of her parents in Granite, Okla., on July 2, 1925. Indeed, they have planned a large life, and may God bless them "exceeding abundantly" and above all they ask or think. The church at Morrillton is sponsoring this work, but is unable to finance it among themselves, they being already burdened with other mission work. It will require about two hundred and fifty dollars each month for these missionaries, and two thousand dollars must be had for railroad and steamship passage for their more than tenthousand-mile journey. Make contributions for this work to C. C. Merritt, care of Living Message, Morrillton, Ark.

Brother B. D. Moorehead, who is being put forward by the Nashville brethren, attended David Lipscomb College for five years, graduating in 1924, after which he taught school one year. During his last two years at David Lipscomb College he worked for the educational fund and spent his vacations soliciting for this cause. He succeeded in building up the fund so that hundreds of young men will be enabled to get a Christian education. He has given much thought to mission work and is fitted spiritually, mentally, and morally for the work he now desires to undertake.

Sister Nellie Marie Moorehead has been a consecrated Christian for several years, and has had some experience in mission and settlement work and house-to-house teaching. She has taught a Bible class of children in the Christian Home and a Sunday-school class at the Tennessee Industrial School for the past two years, besides teaching a class at the home congregation. She also attended David Lipscomb College for three years and is well equipped in literary attainments for the great work she has in mind to do, and I know of no couple who are better suited for work of this kind than Brother and Sister Moorehead. They are well rooted and grounded in the truth and are of sound mind and body. They are making a great personal sacrifice in taking up this neglected field: but they are not afraid of hard work, nor do they consider it a sacrifice, but a great privilege and an opportunity to serve Christ.

These missionaries are all booked to sail on August 18 on the Steamer Siberia out from San Francisco.

All who wish fellowship in this work will send their checks to Frank Jones, No. 6 Arcade, Nashville, Tenn.

THE REFUGE OF THE CONIES.

BY JAMES E. CHESSOR.

"The conies are but a feeble folk, yet make they their houses in the rocks." (Read Prov. 30: 24-28.) "The rocks are a refuge for the conies." (Ps. 104: 18.) The lesson of the cony is that of a sure refuge. It is a lesson of value, and I shall give it a spiritual application. The Palestine cony is defined as a gregarious animal which lives in the caves and the clefts of the rocks. It is scarcely the size of the domestic cat and resembles in some degree the rabbit. It is found in the mountains of Lebanon and in the valleys of the Jordan and the Dead Sea.

Our Southern bluff rabbit, when hunted, flees precipitately to bluff and makes itself safe in crevice or cavity. The species would soon become extinct if instinct did not lead the animal to hide in the rocks. Utterly helpless and defenseless, like the rabbit, the cony is represented as making the strength of the rocks its own. The cliff dwellers of the Southwest, like the conies, had their homes in the rocks, where, sheltered in their canyon fastnesses, they were almost inaccessible to their enemies. Civilized people as well appreciate the strength and security of rock in time of storm or war. Indeed, nature has not provided a safer refuge than cleft rock.

The Bible delights to dwell upon the strength and firmness of rock and the term abounds in figurative passages. Rock is represented as a sure foundation for the builder. whether for time or eternity. It is the part of wisdom, Jesus taught, to build upon the rock, the height of foolishness to build upon the sand. The house founded upon the rock shall stand when the floods come and the storm breaks; but the house built on the sand shall fall, and great will be the fall of it. Jehovah is called the Rock of our refuge, and Jesus is indeed the Rock of Ages. "Behold, I lay in Zion for a foundation a stone, a tried stone, a precious corner stone of sure foundation." "He [Christ] is the stone which was set at naught of you the builders, which was made the head of the corner." "Built upon the foundation of the apostles" and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone." "Upon this rock I will build my church." Christians are "living stones" in this temple. All of which pays tribute to the security, firmness, and strength of rock and the wisdom of the cony in fleeing to the rocks for refuge.

We, too, like the conies, are feeble folk. We are utterly helpless in and of ourselves. "O Jehovah, I know that the way of man is not in himself; it is not in man that walketh to direct his steps." The cony away from its crevice is not more exposed and vulnerable than is man away from his appointed refuge. Destruction awaits cony and man alike if they hide not themselves in the crevice God has provided. What is man in the world without God? The answer is: "Without hope." He is impotent to effect his salvation, to direct his steps. Therefore, those who despise the counsel of God and choose their own devices shall bring upon themselves swift destruction. "But ye have set at naught all my counsel, and would none of my reproof: I also will laugh in the day of your calamity; I will mock when your fear cometh."

What were the Israelites in the wilderness without their God? Without his manna, his springs of water, his pillar of cloud by day and pillar of fire by night, and without his mighty hand and outstretched arm, Israel would have perished many times over on the journey to Canaan. God was their refuge in time of trouble. He saved them out of Egypt when they were cruelly oppressed; he led them through the wilderness forty years as a nursing father; he fought their battles in Canaan and destroyed their enemies, giving them the inheritance. Only when they rejected him did they suffer; only when they made him their refuge did they prosper and eat the fat of the land. Jehovah was their rock of refuge.

And what were the Hebrews in Babylon when forsaken by their God? A heartbroken nation of exiles weeping by the rivers of Babylon, their harps hanging on drooping willows, their thoughts far away in Zion. In Babylon they came to themselves and knew that they were far from God, and they shuddered to think how feeble they were. They had not the heart to sing the songs of Zion in a foreign land, and they conjured up the holy city with its desolate temple with pangs of self-reproach. Sacred history presents few pictures more touching and pitiful than that of these heartbroken exiles. They had forsaken God as their refuge, and so this calamity had come upon them.

And what are we to-day without Christ? Utterly help-less, hopeless, miserable, doomed to sorrow and to death! He is our one and only refuge, the rock of our salvation. Let us not, therefore, make "lies our refuge," nor hide ourselves "under falsehood." There is no refuge for us, save Christ. To reject Christ is to choose death.

Trust not your own wisdom and devices; King Saul presumed to do that, with terrific consequences to himself and his house. Put not your trust in riches; the rich fool did that, and his soul was required, stripped clean of all that commended him to the world. Trust not men as guides, nor human institutions, nor human philosophies and devices, nor science falsely so-called; millions have found such impotent to save or to comfort. But trust in Jesus; believe that he is God's own and only Son, the Savior of the world. Flee to him as your Rock; hide yourself in him and be secure. Act upon the wisdom of the cony.

"Rock of Ages, cleft for me, Let me hide myself in thee."

COMMENCEMENT OF BROTHER SRYGYEY'S WORK.

By the time this reaches our readers Brother F. B. Srygley will have entered on the missionary work that he has planned to do in the West. Brother Srygley leaves to-day (Thursday) at noon, on his way to Des Moines, New Mexico, to begin the first meeting of the series of meetings that he intends to hold.

These points will furnish a field for missionary effort that will result in the accomplishment of much good.

Since last report the following contributions have been received: From the church of Christ at Leiper's Fork, Tenn., by Albert Beasley, $19.62; "A Sister," $5; church of Christ at Corinth, Ark., by W. T. Power, $17.20; Mrs. E. S. Long, Birmingham, Ala., $5; Mrs. E. P. Smith, Mrs. G. W. Hall, Mrs. L. G. McMillan, Mrs. D. W. Scales, and Mrs. C. E. Bowden, Martin, Tenn., $10; Mrs. Albert J. Little, Valdosta, Ga., $4; Tolbert Mobley, Tullahoma, Tenn., $1.

Brother Srygley is being sustained in these missionary meetings by voluntary contributions from readers of the Gospel Advocate. Any reader or any congregation desiring to have fellowship in this great work may communicate with James A. Allen, Gospel Advocate Company, 110 Seventh Avenue, North, Nashville, Tenn.

State evangelists would fain have gathered all the churches of the various States, as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, but they would not. Therefore, State evangelists and their "official organs" have to hustle to prevent a deficit.

THE FAILURE OF DENOMINATIONALISM. BY J. W. BRENTS.

There is perhaps more infidelity in our country to-day than has ever been known. It is sweeping over our land like a besom of destruction. It is crying aloud from pulpits where, a few years ago, the Bible was at least regarded as of divine origin, even though it was not adhered to in strict obedience. This very thing-not adhering tenaciously to the word of God-has given rise to talk that "Christianity has failed." They tell us "it has been in the world two thousand years, and even a casual observer cannot but conclude that it has signally failed." They insist that they want a "satisfying religion." Apparently much of this adverse criticism is just-not that Christianity has failed, but the thing that men call Christianity has failed-viz., denominationalism. It is not the first-century Christianity at all, but an admixture of everything else but the original. It is a sham, a whitewash. It has assumed the garb of "holier than thou," and has fashioned itself after the "rulers of the Gentiles." "Ye know that they who are accounted to rule over the Gentiles lord it over them; and their great ones exercise authority over them. But it is not so among you: but whoscever would become great among you, shall be your minister; and whosoever would be first among you, shall be servant of all. For the Son of man also came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many." (Mark 10: 42-45.) The so-called Christianity of to-day is following the apostate church, following the lead of those who "fell away" from the primitive faith. Losing all spirituality, building fine church edifices became the fad. Even though the poor are in rags and children may cry for bread under the very shadow of their buildings, yet millions must be raised to build temples "made by human hands" to satisfy the vanity of a proud, pleasure-loving, worldly denomination. Many times this is done for no other purpose than to outstrip "a sister denomination." With their aids, their societies, their drives, their movements and banquet-gorged committees, "they have taken away my Lord," and many know not where to find him.

Not only so; but how much of the gospel is being preached by their preachers of to-day? Scripture textsmay be taken, but they are forgotten long before the sermon is concluded. One might attend every service of a modern-day revival, and he would learn but precious little of the Bible and nothing of the plan of salvation. I once heard a denominational preacher use the following for a text: "Go near, and join thyself to this chariot." Sinners, hundreds of them, were there; but this plainest case of all the conversions was wholly ignored and sinners were called to an altar of prayer and told to agonize and they would "come through"—a thing for which we have no scriptural example, unless it be the prophets of Baal, crying aloud and agonizing themselves; "but there was no voice, nor any to answer, nor any that regarded." Such is denominationalism, with not only these evils attached, but a great load of other forms of worldliness, such as the "movies," card playing, and dancing.

With those who make no pretensions to Christianity and who have never made a close study of the Scriptures, looking upon these evils as they really are, and which represent themselves to be products of Christianity, how can they be censured for discrediting the whole thing? If the Bible sanctions all the things men call Christianity to-day, with their conflicting creeds, no one had better take it, but shun it as we would some deadly poison. A sad picture indeed! But such is denominationalism; and its immediate consequences are a general unbelief in the verbal inspiration of the Bible. Denominationalism must answer at the judgment bar of God for this widespread, deadening curse of infidelity.

This tampering with and blue-penciling the commands of God, taking what suits and classing that which does not please in the catalogue of nonessentials, will lead any people away from God. Israel tried it time and again, and each time found them either in bondage or in grievous disfavor with Jehovah. Those who bow themselves down before pagan altars to-day might have been worshiping the true God had their ancestors adhered to the light they had. "Knowing God, they glorified him not as God, neither gave thanks; but became vain in their reasonings, and their senseless heart was darkened. Professing themselves to be wise, they became fools, and changed the glory of the incorruptible God for the likeness of an image of corruptible man, and of birds, and four-footed beasts, and creeping things. Wherefore God gave them up in the lusts of their hearts unto uncleanness." (Rom. 1: 21-24.)

The germ and pith of the plea of the Campbells was: "Where the Scriptures speak, we speak; where the Bible is silent, we are silent." It was the guiding star of our fathers. A half century ago Brother J. B. Briney wrote: "It was the watchword of those noble old veterans as, weak in numbers, but strong in faith, they bared their bosoms to the darts of popery and rushed forward to rescue the ordinances of Jesus Christ from oblivion's embrace." Again, he said: "So long as we adhere to this principle we may march forward with heads erect and banners streaming; but the moment we abandon it we will be at sea without compass or rudder, and our ship will be driven by the merciless blasts of the headwinds of sectarianism in the direction of the port of Rome." Brother Briney has lived to see this plea abandoned. He has seen a people "without compass or rudder, driven by the merciless winds of sectarianism." What meaneth all these denominational shibboleths-"our church," "our denomination," "our pastor?" Headed toward the port of Rome! Yes. It is a fact known to all that accepting the pious unimmersed has become very common in many of their churches. Women preachers are common. And last, but not least, Brother Riggs reports that a Christian Church in Arizona recently stepped over on the side of Rome, open and above board, and celebrated a supper, which they called the "Lord's Supper," on Friday night before Easter Sunday. Rome indeed! Fifty years have seen these departures. What will our transgressive brethren reveal to us within the next fifty years? How long will it be before they will be burning incense and kissing the Pope's big toe? Going at the same rate they have in the past, it will not be long before they, too, will be bowing down before stocks and stones.

If the Bible is rescued from the destructive wave of infidelity, it will be by those who have not become tainted by sectarianism, just as Alexander Campbell met and defeated the champion of infidelity, Robert Owen, nearly one hundred years ago. No denominationalist can ever do it; his creed would ruin him.

COMMENTARY ON FIRST CORINTHIANS. No. 21.

BY C. E. W. DORRIS.

PAUL THEIR FATHER. (Verses 14-17.)

Verse 14. I write not these things to shame you, etc. It is not by way of finding fault with you for not providing me with the necessaries of life that I write this, but I do it to warn you to act differently in the future; and be not so ready to be drawn aside by every pretender to teaching, to the neglect of him to whom, under God, you owe your salvation. Paul did not contrast the pride and glory of the Corinthians with his humiliation to shame them, but to warn them as a father warns a son. The object of the criticism was to raise them up on a higher plane. The reproof was to warn them of their duty, not to reproach them for their crimes. A true minister of God takes far greater pleasure in exhorting people to be good than in complaining of their badness.

15. Though ye have ten thousand instructors in Christ. An indefinite multitude of leaders—myriads of teachers. It seems that many at Corinth offered their services to instruct the people there, and who were not well affected toward the apostles. They might have many tutors who sought to train them as God's children. Yet have ye not many fathers, in the gospel. Paul converted them to Christ; hence, in this sense, he was their father in the gospel. The false teachers might offer to instruct you, but they have no parental feeling for you, because you are not their spiritual children. You stand in this relation to me alone. For in Christ Jesus I have begotten you through the gospel. That is, I was instrumental in bringing you into a state of salvation, so that you have been regenerated. Hence, I am your father in the gospel. Paul was the instrument, the gospel, the means, and God the cause, of their spiritual begetting. We are begotten by the gospel. (James 1: 18.)

16. Be ye followers of me. "Imitators of me." (A. R. V.) As children should imitate their parents in preference to all others, when the parent is walking uprightly, so Paul asks the Corinthians to imitate him, as he claimed them for his children. He lived for God and eternity, seeking not his own glory or ease. The planters of strife among them were actuated by different motives. Follow and imitate me, as I follow and imitate Christ. Do not imitate them, who, from their worldly pursuits, show themselves to be actuated with a worldly spirit. Paul was their father in the gospel and walked uprightly before God, and the Corinthians should have followed him instead of their false teachers. He had begotten them "in-Christ Jesus." That is, by his authority I have turned you from idols to serve God. Persons may, and ought to, have a great value for, and bear a tender respect toward, the ones whom God has honored by making them instruments of their conversion and bringing homé to Christ. It is as dangerous to mislead by example as by doctrine.

17. For this cause. That you may imitate me and know in what this consists. I sent unto you Timotheus. One of his most intimate friends, and whom he had been the means of leading to Christ. He was to put them in remembrance of Paul's ways in Christ. The sending of Timothy into Macedonia is mentioned in Acts 19: 22. But from this passage it is evident that he was ordered to go on to Corinth, if he found it convenient. The great success with which the apostle preached at Ephesus, after he heard of the dissensions in Corinth, having induced him to remain a while longer at Ephesus (1 Cor. 16: 8, 9), he judged it proper to send Timothy and Erastus into Macedonia to learn how matters stood at Corinth; and if, on the information they received, they should judge their presence would be of use in composing the dissensions among the Corinthians, they were to go forward and attempt it by putting them in remembrance of the apostle's doctrine and practice. He was not sure Timothy reached them, for he says: "If Timotheus come," etc. (1 Cor. 16: 10.) My beloved son, in the gospel. Of my ways which be in Christ. He will revive you of my life, conduct, and teaching. He will inform you of the manner in which I regulate all the congregations, and show you that what I required of you is the same I required of all the congregations which I have formed, as I follow the same plan of discipline in every place. No sooner had the church been planted in Corinth by Paul, but, by the envy and malice of Satan, most notorious disorders and scandalous abuses were cast into it. To remove this great and growing mischief, he writes them this letter. But lest this method should prove ineffectual, because writing at a distance is not so moving as conferring face to face, he sends Timothy unto them, to persuade them to their duty by bringing to their remembrance his ways which were in Christ, both what he had formerly taught and did yet continue to teach in every church. The messenger sent to them is described by name—Timotheus (or Timothy). He is described by relation—"my beloved son"—that is, my son in the faith. He is further described by his zeal and diligence in the work of the Lord-"faithful in the Lord "-that is, faithful in the work of the Lord. A noble character of a gospel minister is faithfulness. He should be faithful to both God and man-faithful in his intentions; faithful in his endeavors and all the administrations of the house of God; faithful and affectionate toward the poor, remembering that all souls are rated at one value in his Master's mind; faithful in both public and private preaching. Happy should be the people who have such faithful persons for their spiritual instructors. The message and errand Timothy was sent upon was to acquaint the Corinthians with Paul's teaching and practice and to persuade them to their duty by bringing his ways to their remembrance. Note that Paul had led so holy and unblamable a conversation in every place where he had labored that he is neither afraid nor ashamed that his course of life would be discovered and made known to all the world. A great example for our imitation, to walk before God and man with such care and caution, with such heedfulness and circumspection, that we need not blush when either our teaching or practice is published before all the congregations of Christ.

NELSON - COMPLETE CONCORDANCE

To the

American Standard Bible

By M. C. HAZARD, Ph.D.

A concordance is a word-finder—an index to the words in the Bible designed to increase your knowledge of what the Bible contains by enabling you to find easily any word, verse, or subject in the Bible.

This new Concordance, by Dr. M. C. Hazard, is the first Complete Concordance ever issued to the American Standard Version of the Bible—the most accurate version of the Holy Scriptures in the English language.

Five years have been occupied in its completion, during which time the editor and publishers have had constantly in mind the problems of the Bible student. Comparisons have been made with other concordances and numerous improvements have been introduced to make a work so accurate, so full, and so convenient that it will be an indispensable working tool in handling aright the word of truth.

I have time for two more meetings while in the East. Please address me in care of the Gospel Advocate."

Wanted—One thousand persons to send one dollar each to help finish paying for the repair work on the Potter Orphan Home. The plasterers will finish their work this week. The carpenters are about done. The city water has been installed. We are now installing the electric lights. When the work is completed, the bills will be due. In order to pay every dollar and push the work forward, I am asking the one thousand persons to send the one dollar by the Fourth of July and have a part in putting the finishing touch on the children's home. Send to H. C. Shoulders, Route 4, Bowling Green, Ky.

J. L. Hines, Mount Olivet, Ky., June 18: "I closed at Carlisle, Ky., June 15, with large crowds. We are certain to establish a New Testament church there. I am to return next year. I began here on Tuesday. A Chautauqua began at the same time. Two were present the first night and about thirty-eight the second night. However, we are not discouraged; for, if we continue to increase, it won't be long until the courthouse will be filled. J. D. Derry seat of Robertson County, and the pure gospel was never before proclaimed here. There is something very fascinating about mission work, but it is a little hard on one's pocketbook. I have the following dates open for meetings: July 10-19; September 26 to October 3; and from October 15 on. Also, if the brethren at any place want a preacher to locate, I am in a position to consider it."

It is amusing to hear a professional pastor who seldom ever goes out of town to preach a sermon talk about "taking the world for Christ."

Married, at the residence of James A. Allen, 900-B Sixteenth Avenue, South, Nashville, Tenn., Wednesday, June 17, Harry P. Moyers and Thelma Reed, James A. Allen officiating.

E. G. Creacy, Indianapolis, Ind., June 17: "The meeting here with the East Side congregation started off in 'high gear.' Services are well attended and interest is good. Brother Spivy is doing his part well."

R. C. Bell, Morrillton, Ark., June 19: "With R. C. Bell as preacher, and A. J. Veteto, of Memphis, Tenn., as song leader, the church at Covington, Tenn., is in the beginning of what promises to be an interesting meeting. Three young men were baptized the second day of the meeting. Covington is the boyhood home of A. B. Barret."

David Thompson, Mayfield, Ky., June 15: "Yesterday I filled my regular appointment with the Spring Creek congregation, preaching to an attentive audience. In the afternoon I was at a schoolhouse in mission territory, having more than a houseful. On June 30 I am to begin a four-days' discussion with J. M. Hooker, Missionary Baptist, at Pilot Oak. Baptism and apostasy are the subjects to be discussed."

Lee Jackson sends the following clipping from a daily paper: "On Sunday afternoon, June 7, at the home of Lee Jackson, in Oakland, Miss., Mr. Edwin L. Dinkins, of Senatobia, Miss., and Miss Cloye Mai Brown, of Enid, Miss., were married in the presence of a few relatives and friends. Lee Jackson performed the ceremony that made this prominent and popular young couple husband and wife." Brother Jackson says: "Sister Cloye Mai Brown, whose marriage to Mr. Dinkins is here mentioned, is a member of our Enid congregation, and a cultured, noble young woman. Edwin L. Dinkins is a son of ex-Circuit Judge Edwin D. Dinkins and Mrs. Lena Cayce Dinkins, thus being a nephew of our lamented Matthew Cayee, who lived in Nashville and who died suddenly in Columbus, Miss., a few years since."

TWO MORE MISSIONARIES FOR JAPAN.

BY ROBERT S. KING.

The Waverly-Belmont church of Christ announces that Brother and Sister Moorehead will be ready to sail for Japan about September 1, 1925. They will probably leave Nashville about July 1, and work two months with Brother Ishiguro in the Japanese mission at Los Angeles, Cal., thus gaining some knowledge of the language and customs of the people among whom they intend to work.

Brother and Sister Moorehead are graduates of David Lipscomb College of the class of 1924. They are well rooted and grounded in the truth and are tried and true. Besides being spiritually fit for the work which they are undertaking, they are fit physically, mentally, and morally, having recently undergone a rigid physical examination which proved satisfactory in every way.

The Waverly-Belmont Church is responsible for the support of these young people, but is asking others to coöperate. Passage money should be in their hands at an early date in order that passage may be secured. Mail your checks to Frank Jones, treasurer, 6 Arcade, Nashville, Tenn.

The Gospel Advocate is rejoiced to know that Brother and Sister Moorehead find it in their hearts to go to Japan. They are both faithful and zealous Christians, and we are glad to commend them. They will be a very valuable addition to the forces of Christ in that great missionary field. We hope the churches will show their missionary zeal by communicating immediately with Brother Frank Jones, of the Waverly-Belmont congregation. J. A. A.

EDITORIAL

IS THE ANSWER SCRIPTURAL?

BY F. B. SRYGLEY.

Brother S. S. Lappin, of Bedford, Ind., has a page in the Christian Standard almost every week which he calls "Local Church Life," said to be a department for training in congregational efficiency and in Christian leadership. Recently the following question was asked and answered in this department:

THE ORGAN AND OPEN MEMBERSHIP.

A veteran disciple has trouble in his mind concerning the use of instrumental music in worship and his apparent indorsement of what to him is distasteful should he be present when such is made use of:

"I came into activity about the time the American Chris tian Review was waging a relentless warfare against all innovations, the use of the organ in the worship in particuinnovations, the use of the organ in the worship in particular. Like Brother McGarvey, I never could see that it was right to use the thing. I know this was not stubbornness on my part, because, if it is right, I would 'give my kingdom' to see it that way. But what worries me is, what ought I do when I am thrown where they use it? Should I stifle my conscience and join in? I have no prejudice against the organ, and I like to sing and enjoy good music, but I feel guilty when I sit in where they use the thing. From your viewpoint, what ought I to do? From my viewpoint, I think they ought to keep the thing out of the worship—that service when we come together to break bread. It is either suffer in silence or leave. To me this is a more serious matter than the 'open-membership' heresy. In this case there is no noise about it, and it affects no one only the misguided soul that seeks membership. We try to help him see the right; but the organ forces a brother to stifle his conscience or leave the assembly.—D. J. Poynter, Albion, Neb."

Albion, Neb."

I have known a number of cases like this. In one of them the congregation agreed not to use the organ at all when "Uncle William" was present. He was old and could not attend regularly. Knowing it to be distasteful to him, the younger ones were willing to forego for his sake. So the presence of "Uncle William" was signal for a departure from that which he himself would not forbid on grounds of principle or Scripture, and for a variation decided on the part of fifty or a hundred people.

It was a gracious concession to age for the sake of congregational good will. But I have often wondered how "Uncle William" must have felt to be the occasion of such disarrangement and to sit there feeling that he was having his way in the face of fifty others as wise and as good as he, when it was no longer anything but a whim on his part.

Is it not true that we have to take ourselves across our knee once in a while for critical examination to discover whether we are being guided by conscience or contrariness? If absent from the Lord's table, can we make excuse that we were kept away by the organ or by any other such obstacle? Was Jesus (and is he) such a one as could sympathize with that sort of interference with a sacred duty?

I do not know Brother Poynter, but it seems to me that he asked a fair question, and it should have had a fair, scriptural answer. The brother says: "Like Brother Mc-Garvey, I never could see that it was right to use the thing." Brother Lappin says: "I have known a number of cases like this." Then Brother Lappin is under the greater obligation to answer the question correctly, as not only Brother Poynter's conscience is involved, but a number of others that are known to Brother Lappin, besides, no doubt, a host of still others who are not known to him.

The brother further says: "I know this was not stubbornness on my part, because, if it is right, I would 'give my kingdom' to see it that way." This settles the matter, if the brother tells the truth (and I see no reason to doubt it), that he is conscientious in his opposition to it. Now the question is: Under these conditions, what advice could Brother Lappin give and be in harmony with the teaching of the New Testament?

The brother asks further: "Should I stifle my conscience and join in?" Brother Lappin does not say he should do this, but he implies that he should by what he says about "Uncle William," unless the congregation would graciously respect his conscience; but from the implied criticism of "Uncle William" for demanding such a concession he almost suggests that they ought not to do it. He says: "But I have often wondered how 'Uncle William' must have felt to be the occasion of such a disarrangement and to sit there feeling that he was having his way in the face of fifty others as wise and as good as he, when it was no longer anything but a whim on his part." Brother Poynter removed that claim of Brother Lappin's in the statement that he was conscientious and that he knew it was not stubbornness on his part. Brother Lappin does not accuse his querist of falsifying, but in his answer he treats him as though he had by calling "Uncle William's" objection to the organ a "whim" and an effort on his part to have his own way.

But Brother Poynter says: "I like to sing and enjoy good music, but I feel guilty when I sit in where they use the thing." What is this feeling of guilt except the condemnation of the heart? Why did not Brother Lappin quote this passage to Brother Poynter: "Hereby shall we know that we are of the truth, and shall assure our heart before him: because if our heart condemn us, God is greater than our heart, and knoweth all things." (1 John 3: 19, 20.) It occurs to me that this bears more directly on the case in hand than "Uncle William's" and "Brother Lappin's "gracious" brethren. What had these "gracious" brethren given up for "Uncle William" even from Brother Lappin's standpoint? It could not have been a command of God, for certainly Brother Lappin could not advise a congregation to give up a command of God even for all the "Uncle Williams" in the world. If it is not a command of God, it ought never to have been in the worship even if there were no "Uncle William." It certainly could not be a command when "Uncle William" is not present, if it is not one when he is. I do not know Brother Poynter; but if he can be satisfied with such an answer as this, I must say he is easily satisfied. Will Brother Poynter turn to the passages where songs and praise are mentioned and see if the organ is in the record? And if not, then I say that Brother Lappin and his "Uncle William" and all his "gracious" brethren should stand aside and let the Holy Spirit talk. "Through him then let us offer up a sacrifice of praise continually, that is, the fruit of lips which make confession to his name." 13: 15.) Why did not Brother Lappin give this scripture to his honest inquiring friend and also to his "gracious" brethren who could move out the organ when "Uncle William" came? This shows that the praise of God is the fruit of lips and not the fruit of a mechanical instrument. Or this passage would have helped to clarify the situation: "Speaking one to another in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing and making melody with your heart to the Lord." (Eph. 5: 19.) This passage shows that the melody is made by speaking and singing, and not upon a mechanical instrument. Why is not this passage applicable to the case in hand? And if it is, why did not Brother Lappin give this instead of telling the story of "Uncle William?" True, this does not show his brethren up in the "gracious" light that his story did, but they would be like the New Testament, which is better than to be so "gracious" to "Uncle William" when he was present and so ungracious to God when "Uncle William" could not get to the worship. Brother Lappin certainly does recommend his brethren highly for having more respect for "Uncle William" than they do for the word of Brother Lappin then asks this question: "Is it not true that we have to take ourselves across our knee once in a while for critical examination to discover whether we are being guided by conscience or contrariness?" It seems that Brother Poynter had already had himself across his knee and had decided that he knew in his case that it was not stubbornness nor prejudice on his part. It occurs to me that Brother Lappin would like to have Brother Poynter across his own knee. He seems to think he could make him see that it is contrariness and not conscience at all. When Brother Lappin has himself across his knee, I wonder what motive he thinks he has in wanting to use the organ in worship? It cannot be his conscience, because he can give it up when "Uncle William" comes. Then what can be his motive? It cannot be contrariness, because he indicates that when he gets himself across his knee he whips that out of himself. Then, if he is not guided by contrariness or the commands of God, what can be his motive? Is it to be like the nations around him, or just plainly to show the Lord that he can have his own way in the little matter of worshiping God?

Brother Lappin then asks: "If absent from the Lord's table, can we make the excuse that we were kept away by the organ or by any other such obstacle? I think not. But why do we have to go to the Lord's table where the worship is corrupted by the use of the unauthorized organ? Does any one believe it would be impossible for Brother Poynter to find one disciple who would meet him on the Lord's day and take with him the Supper without the instrument? If he could find such a disciple, they could meet each other and the Lord, since the Lord said: "For where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them." (Matt. 18: 20.) Two can worship God on the Lord's day, and can do all that Jesus ever commanded a church to do. In this way Brother Poynter need not interfere with a sacred duty. I will never believe that Brother Poynter is satisfied with this answer till I hear something from him on the subject.

"ARE MARRIAGES MADE IN HEAVEN?"

Quoting from the Nashville Banner of Monday evening, June 8, attention is called to the following:

Answering his own question, "Are Marriages Made in Heaven?" Dr. W. F. Powell, of the First Baptist Church, declared last night that "marriages are made in heaven and should not be marred in Nashville."

Setting forth some of the contributing causes toward the breaking down of the sanctity of the marriage institution and the home, Dr. Powell named infidelity on the part of both husbands and wives and unchastity on the part of girls as well as boys, free love, a modified marriage contract, unwholesome amusements, and a general lowering of moral standards all along the line.

We heartily agree with Dr. Powell that "infidelity on the part of both husbands and wives," "unchastity on the part of girls as well as boys," "free love," "a modified marriage contract," and "a general lowering of moral standards all along the line" are breaking down the sanctity of marriage and destroying the purity and peace of the home.

There is not that general love for home as existed some years ago. That dear old song, "Home, Sweet Home,' does not stir hearts and move to tears as it once did. Home to thousands now is not sweet and dear. It is not considered true now by many, at least, that, "Be it ever so humble, there is no place like home," because, judging by what one sees, most wives and daughters despise quiet and humble homes; and with many husbands and wives, "love in a cottage" is a thing of the past. God's model housewife set forth in Prov. 31: 10-31 is no longer the ideal of the majority of wives. They are no longer "workers at home" and home builders, as God says they should be in Tit. 2: 4, 5. God's teaching concerning modest apparel, humility, sobriety, and chaste manner of life, coupled with fear, does not appeal to them or make any impression upon them. And, strange to say, many such women are called "church workers." They figure in all sorts of public meetings and places and aspire to run the church and politics.

Wishing that as many as possible may see the plain and necessary teaching in the sermon mentioned, we give all the Banner quotes of it and has to say concerning it:

Here are some of the pastor's observations during his discussion of the subject, this sermon being the first of a series of four Sunday-evening messages to be given during June on "The Wedding Ring."

"If marriages are made in heaven and God had a great purpose in ordaining the institution of marriage, then we are in a very serious business when we tamper with marriage.

"Preachers are frequently too timid to speak out on matters of morality. We have a lot of preachers who are a whole lot more interested in the study of biology than they are in preventing bootlegging, and are a lot more concerned in where their people came from than in where they are going.

"We have a lot of prodigal sons to-day, but a lot of prodigal daughters, too, and probably more prodigal husbands and wives than we have sons and daughters.

"God himself established the institution of marriage and came down from heaven to the garden of Eden and solemnized and sanctified the first marriage ceremony. In God's sight marriage is a holy institution, the foundation of a pure home, which in turn is the foundation of all society.

"One man plus one wife means one flesh, and the curse of God has always rested upon polygamy. No polygamist or man or woman with low moral standards was saved from the flood with Noah and his family. David's suprement grief and Solomon's apostasy were due to their polygamous practices.

"Marriages are guarded, or are intended to be guarded, by God through the seventh commandment, 'Thou shalt not commit adultery,' and the violation of the seventh com-not commit adultery,' and the violation of the seventh commandment is the one primal sin that has undermined every nation that has fallen into decay from the beginning until the present day, and it will undermine these United States as surely as it is persisted in.

"No girl in Nashville or elsewhere can keep unclean company and remain pure, and no boy can go with impure girls and keep clean. But what encouragement have the boys and girls of Nashville to keep clean to-day when every duck pond in Davidson County is turned into a swimming hole in the summertime and many of our thousands of automobiles are simply hell on wheels?"

Dr. Powell made an earnest plea for the reëstablishment

Dr. Powell made an earnest plea for the reëstablishment of the old-fashioned home where marriage vows are kept involate and where young people are given a right example by their parents and encouraged and helped by their parents to live innocent, wholesome, but happy lives. This can be done only with the aid of religion, he said, and he pleaded for the reinstatement of God in every home.

God made marriages in heaven when he ordained this, the closest and most sacred relationship, and said: "What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder." Marriages are not the institution of the State or any human government or power; hence, no government—kingdom, republic, or State—can dissolve the union of husband and wife. God alone can give the cause of separation, and he does give it. The State is presuming to act as God when it tampers with dissolving marriages. The law making power is the only power that can repeal, change, or modify the law.

God declares that it is not good for man to be alone, and gives this as his reason for making woman. He says, too: "Therefore shall a man leave his father and mother, and shall cleave unto his wife: and they shall be one flesh."

Even so ought husbands also to love their own wives as their own bodies. He that loveth his own wife loveth himself: for no man ever hated his own flesh; but nourisheth and cherisheth it, even as Christ also the church.

. . Nevertheless do ye also severally love each one his own wife even as himself; and let the wife see that she fear her husband. (Eph. 5: 28-33.)

Husbands are commanded to love their wives, "even as Christ also loved the church, and gave himself up for it."

On the subject of becoming one flesh, see the following:

Know ye not that your bodies are members of Christ? shall I then take away the members of Christ, and make them members of a harlot? God forbid. Or know ye not that he that is joined to a harlot is one body? for, The twain, saith he, shall become one flesh. But he that is joined unto the Lord is one spirit. Flee fornication. Every sin that a man doeth is without the body; but he that committeth fornication sinneth against his own body. (1 Cor. 6: 15-18.)

In order to avoid fornication, and, therefore, to be clean and pure, God's rule is:

But, because of fornications, let each man have his own wife, and let each woman have her own husband. Let the husband render unto the wife her due: and likewise also the wife unto the husband. The wife hath not power over her own body, but the husband: and likewise also the husband hath not power over his own body, but the wife. Defraud ye not one the other, except it be by consent for a season, that ye may give yourselves unto prayer, and may be together again, that Satan tempt you not because of your incontinency. But this I say by way of concession, not of commandment. Yet I would that all men were even as I myself. Howbeit each man hath his own gift from God, one after this manner, and another after that. (1 Cor. 7: 2-7.)

Since all cannot control themselves so well as Paul did, then those who cannot, because of the fearfulness and terrible consequences of the sin of fornication, should marry, and husbands and wives should treat one another as their Father in heaven, for their happiness here and salvation in heaven, directs.

All passages in the Bible on marriage, divorce, how husbands and wives should treat one another, the home life, the necessity and blessings of clean and pure homes, against adultery and fornication, and on the duties of parents and children, must be studied and obeyed.

As Dr. Powell says, not a few preachers are timid. But not only so; they are cowards and infidels. They trim and creep, shun and shirk, make merchandise of the church, seek to please men, to be popular and to hold their place. They do not stand in God's counsel and cause the people to hear his words that they may turn them from their evil way and their evil doings. They do not cry aloud and spare not and show God's people their sins.

The only way to check the wave of immodesty, immorality, sin, and corruption in general, now spreading its foul waters like a flood over the home, the schools, the church, and society, is for the whole church in the strength of Israel's God to arise and demand such teaching and such purity of life as God requires, to cleanse the pulpit of all false teaching and false living, and require that "the whole counsel of God" on "all things that pertain unto life and godliness" be taught in simplicity and power; for all homes to be rebuilt after God's model of industry and purity; for all parents to feel their responsibility to their children and control their education and life far better than is now being done; for the schoolrooms to be cleansed of all teachers who feel no moral obligation to teach the young of God and duty, and who treat children and young men and young women as so much property of the State, and, therefore, intellectual machinery and educated animals.

BY T. B. LARIMORE.

Notwithstanding there are many rooms in the Capitol in Washington, it does not contain space enough for carrying on the work that devolves upon Senators and Representatives; hence, two large buildings have been erected to provide additional working space for them—the Senate Office building, northeast of the Senate end of the Capitol, and the House Office building, southeast of the House end of the Capitol. These two buildings are outside the Capitol grounds, but not far away, and are connected with it by underground passageways; and a little monorail carrun by electricity gives rapid transit between the Senate Office building and the Capitol.

The Senate Office building extends along three sides of a square, with an open court in the center, affording abundance of light and ventilation. The House Office building is a solid structure, occupying an entire square. The two are apparently the same size, both being four stories above ground; but the House building extends two stories below ground, the Senate only one; the latter has an open court in the center, while the former is solid; hence, there are more than five hundred rooms in the House Office building, and only two hundred in the Senate building. Both are beautiful buildings, both inside and out, with wide halls and corridors, marble columns and stairways. Neither building is set in extensive grounds, but each is across a street from the eastern part of the Capitol grounds, and that forms an attractive adjunct to these buildings.

Each Senator has a suite of rooms and each Representative at least a room, and in those rooms the secretaries, clerks, and stenographers are busy with the routine work pertaining to the duties of Congressmen. The Hall of Representatives and the Senate Chamber are the public arenas where political battles are concluded, but much of the real work and settling of political problems is done in the business offices of the members.

Uncle Sam has expended a considerable amount of meney on the Capitol group of buildings and the grounds belonging to them, this group including the Capitol and its grounds, the Senate Office building, the House Office building, and the Library of Congress, with its grounds. The Capitol represents a value of about $26,000,000; the two office buildings, about $4,500,000 each; and the Library of Congress, $7,000,000. Of course, the upkeep of these buildings and grounds is enormous. For instance, the cost of winding and regulating the clocks of a household is too small to be even mentioned in the list of household expenses; but it requires much of the time of two men to wind and regulate the more than three hundred clocks in the Capitol unit, that must be wound and regulated by hand, and many clocks in that group of buildings are electrically wound and regulated. The power plant, five blocks away, that furnishes power for the Capitol unit, runs forty-nine elevators, lights 49,750 electric bulbs, runs a dish-washing machine, operates potato peelers, reduces ice-box temperatures, and even runs pencil sharpeners.

The Senate Chamber and the Hall of Representatives, in the Capitol building, being surrounded by corridors, have no windows, of course; and as there are no electric lights, radiators, or registers visible, it is puzzling to know how they are heated, lighted, and ventilated; and that is an interesting point. Beneath the floor of the Hall of Representatives is an air chamber from three to five feet deep; so the Representatives and the active boys who run their errands—the pages—are actually treading on air when in that great hall. Above the glass-paneled ceiling is another air chamber, six feet high in the center, under the peak of the roof, and in that space thousands of electric bulbs shed a soft, but bright, light into the hall below.

Streams of fresh air come into the Capitol building through ducts from the western terrace, and great motors operate metal fans, twelve feet in diameter, which drive this fresh air through ten thousand feet of steam coils, thus providing heat for the hall in winter. This steamheated air passes through a duct wide enough for two men to walk abreast in it, and in many places twelve feet high, a condenser maintains the proper degree of humidity, and on its way the air passes an ozonator, electrical discharges from which have an effect on the air similar to that of lightning in a summer shower. This duct leads to the air chamber under the floor of the Hall, and the fresh air passes into the hall through scores of vents in the uprights of the tiers of seats and through brackets close to the floor along the walls of the room, and thus the Hall is heated.

The glass panels in the ceiling, apparently set solid in the framework, are really raised about three inches above the frames, and through the vents thus formed the heated air escapes into the air chamber above, and metal fans propelled by great motors pump it out as it rises.

Streams of pure air, heated in cold weather to about seventy degrees, are continually flowing into the Hall, and vitiated air is constantly escaping through the vents overhead. This process can be accelerated when the Hall is crowded, but no sight or sound of the mechanism that accomplishes all this can be detected in the Hall. The pumping goes on in summer as in winter, to supply ventilation, and the constant motion of the air makes the summer temperature pleasant. The Senate Chamber is lighted, heated, and ventilated in practically the same way, as are also committee rooms and other offices. The engineer down in the sub-basement, who regulates all this process, can ascertain the temperature of any part of the building and regulate it by means of a device originally invented for ascertaining temperatures in deep-sea soundings.

The Capitol, in the days of the Civil War, was a citadel. The extensions had been completed a few years before that bloody period began, and much of the space in the halls and committee rooms was used as barracks for soldiers, the outer doors were barricaded with barrels of cement between the pillars, its basement galleries were converted into storerooms for army provisions, and the casematelike apartments under the western terraces were used as bakeries, where sixteen thousand loaves of bread were baked every day for many months. Those strenuous days are past and gone, and the former "bakeries" are now used as clerks' offices and congressional committee rooms.

Notwithstanding this article is not devoted to the Capitol, I have added to it a few facts concerning that great building of ours, thinking they may be interesting to some readers of the Gospel Advocate; but to me nothing connected with the Capitol is more interesting than the following quotation from Daniel Webster, inscribed on a memorial tablet deposited beneath the corner stone of the extensions laid July 4, 1851:

"If therefore, it shall be hereafter the will of God that this structure shall fall from its base, that its foundations be upturned and this deposit brought to the eyes of men, be it known that on this day the Union of the United States of America stands firm; that their Constitution still exists unimpaired, and with all its original usefulness and glory, growing every day stronger and stronger in the affections of the great body of the American people, and attracting more and more the admiration of the world. And all here assembled, whether belonging to public life or to private life, with hearts devoutly thankful to Almighty God for the preservation of the liberty and happiness of the country, unite in sincere and fervent prayers that this deposit, and the walls and arches, the domes and towers, the columns and entablatures, now to be erected over it, may endure forever! God save the United States of America!"

DESIGN OF BAPTISM.

(David Lipscomb, in "Salvation from Sin.")

The question in dispute is: "Is the believer who is not baptized pardoned?" About this the Bible says not a word. It is exactly the same question as: "Will faith alone save a man?" The Bible says nothing about faith alone saving a man. It says faith will save him. It says the faith saves him by leading him to be baptized into Christ, so putting him on. Every believer spoken of after the ordinance of baptism was established as saved, or pardoned, was a baptized believer. No unbaptized believer after the establishment of the church of God is recognized as saved, or pardoned. Then none doubt that those whom the Bible declares shall be saved are saved. The dispute is concerning those of whom the Bible says nothing. The Bible speaks only once directly of faith alone, then to condemn it. (See James 2.) It gives some illustrations of it. Some believed on him, but would not confess him for fear of the Jews. There is no misunderstanding or disagreeing as to the salvation of those whom the Bible declares are saved. The diversity is in reference to those of whom the Bible does not predicate salvation. Then people do understand the Bible alike on this subject. The theories of men they doubt and dispute.

Even on the popular, but unfair, statement of the question, "baptism for the remission of sins," the agreement is much nearer among critics and candid men of all countries and ages than many suppose. For the first four hundred years, not one voice dissenting, the church believed that baptism was for the remission of sins. The Romish Church so believes; the Greek Church holds to the same theory—both in an extreme sense. Every creed of Protestant Christendom known to me so teaches.

I have gone through these as the common points of difference in the current discussions of religion at this day. I think it clearly evident that in these cases presented there is but little difference in the understanding of men as to what is taught in the Scriptures. The differences on these questions are in relation to things not taught in the Bible. Men understand the Bible alike on these points. They differ on questions not taught in the Scriptures. It is not a difference in understanding the Bible, but a difference of opinion in reference to questions which have not been embodied in Christian faith as revealed in the Bible.

[&]quot;Fear not to build thine eyrie in the heights
Where golden splendors lay;
And trust thyself unto thine inmost soul,
In simple faith alway;
And God will make divinely real,
The highest forms of thine ideal."

FAIR DEALING.

BY F. W. SMITH.

So long as men dwell upon the earth there will, of necessity, be social and business contact, and dealings with each other in the exchange of commodities, the products of the soil, mines, factories, and all things essential to the development and maintenance of the race.

The social and business intercourse among mankind has existed from the beginning of the human race, and it has grown to mammoth proportions, assuming not only national, but international, relationships. Nations trade with each other as if they were individuals of the same community, and the expression, "balance of trade," is a part of common speech.

Nations become indebted to each other just as individuals do, and the same obligations to discharge this indebtedness rests upon nations as upon the individual. There is not one law for the individual and another for the nation, with loopholes through which to squeeze out of honest obligations.

THE ONE AND ONLY LAW.

This is a divine law, and is thus expressed: "A false balance is an abomination to Jehovah; but a just weight is his delight." (Prov. 11: 1.) Again: "Take thought for things honorable in the sight of all men." (Rom. 12: 17.) The former passage employs commercial terms, "weight" and "balance," in the matter of buying and selling, while the latter passage denotes the whole scope of social and business relations.

"A false balance" is a synonym for any crooked or dishonest methods in business, and "a just weight" stands for fair and honorable dealing even to the smallest detail. In this age of "graft" and haste to get rich it requires a sensitive conscience to conform to the divine law governing business or commercial relations between men, and because of the wholesale violation of God's law on the subject the world of mankind has become distrustful of each other. Honorable dealings between men and nations are at a high premium, and this feeling of distrust is widespread.

THE CURSE OF ILL-GOTTEN GAIN.

It matters not, in so far as the results are concerned, as to whether such gain is accumulated by the individual or the nation, for the curse is bound to come. God has ordained it, and it is in his program of the government of the world. Just so surely as fire will burn will the curse of ill-gotten wealth fall upon him who so accumulates it. "Come now, ye rich, weep and howl for your miseries that are coming upon you." (James 5: 2.) The "miseries" here are the curses that will come upon a certain class of rich men whom James describes, and he proceeds to state the reason for the punishment to be inflicted—namely: "Your riches are corrupted, and your garments are mothenten. Your gold and your silver are rusted: and their rust shall be for a testimony against you, and shall eat your flesh as fire." (James 5: 3.)

These are, of course, figurative expressions, for gold and silver literally do not corrupt or rust; but the way these accumulated their wealth and the use they made of it rendered it as useless to help them in the judgment as if it actually corrupted or rusted. Instead of being "treasure laid up in heaven," it appeared as a testimony against them.

WHAT MADE THEIR WEALTH CORRUPT.

We often hear the expression, "tainted money," by which is meant money obtained by illegal methods in which men swindle and defraud their fellow beings. Now, James tells us why the wealth of the rich men with whom he deals was corrupted and rusted, and why it would become a testimony against them in the day of judgment—viz.: "Behold, the hire of the laborers who moved your fields, which is of you kept back by fraud, crieth out: and the cries of them that reaped have entered into the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth." (James 5: 4.)

Men may cover up and hide from their fellow men their dishonest methods of getting gain, but, like the wicked Ahab, who had Naboth murdered in order to get his vineyard, will be met either in time or eternity with the accusing voice of God. "And the word of Jehovah came to Elijah the Tishbite, saying, Arise, go down to meet Ahab king of Israel, who dwelleth in Samaria: behold, he is in the vineyard of Naboth, whither he is gone down to take possession of it. And thou shalt speak unto him, saying, Hast thou killed, and also taken possession?" (1 Kings 21: 17-19.)

As an example of discharging the duties of a high official position for almost a lifetime, a position in which the official could have greatly enriched himself by fraud and unfair dealing, and yet he came through it all with clean hands, Samuel stands out as a notable example. He judged the nation of Israel up to the time of their rebellion in asking for a king, and on his retirement from office placed the nation on the witness stand to testify as to his administration.

SAMUEL'S CHALLENGE.

"Here I am: witness against me before Jehovah, and before his anointed: whose ox have I taken? or whose ass have I taken? or whom have I defrauded? whom have I oppressed? or of whose hand have I taken a ransom to blind mine eyes therewith? and I will restore it you." Now, this was a broad challenge, covering a long period of dealing with the affairs of others, and the nation was given all the latitude possible in which to find maladministration of its interests.

But what was the unanimous verdict? Hear it: "And they said, Thou hast not defrauded us, nor oppressed us, neither hast thou taken aught of any man's hand. And he said unto them, Jehovah is witness against you, and his anointed is witness this day, that ye have not found aught in my hand. And they said, He is witness." (1 Sam. 12: 3-5.) What a record, and what an example of fair and honorable dealing has been left to the world by the prophet and judge of Israel!

THE MAN GOD APPROVES.

"He hath showed thee, O man, what is good; and what doth Jehovah require of thee, but to do justly, and to love kindness, and to walk humbly with thy God?" (Mic. 6: 8.) No one with the stain of ill-gotten gain upon his hands need lift them toward heaven, for God will not hear prayers for mercy from any such, so long as such riches are retained. Restitution and the washing of such hands in penitential tears must take place before God will hear.

In the light of God's word on the subject of "fair dealing," men should cultivate an exceedingly sensitive conscience in all the business and social relations of life. One can be misrepresented and injured by the tongue or pen of another, as well as to be defrauded of his property. Hence, "fair dealing" does not only apply to a matter of dollars and cents, but also to the matter of reputation, or the slandering of one's character. Those who will abide in God's tabernacle must speak the truth in their hearts. "Jehovah, who shall sojourn in thy tabernacle? who shall dwell in thy holy hill? He that walketh uprightly, and worketh righteousness, and speaketh truth in his heart; he that slandereth not with his tongue, nor doeth evil to his friend, nor taketh up a reproach against his neighbor." (Ps. 15: 1-3.)

Happy is the patient camel, happy is the humble saint; they kneel when the day is done, and their burden is lifted from them.

QUERY DEPARTMENT

BY H. LEO BOLES

Please explain, through the Gospel Advocate, 1 Cor. 14: 34; also, 1 Tim. 2: 12.—Mrs. L. B. WILSON, Florence, Ark.

The scriptures referred to are as follows: "As in all the churches of the saints, let the women keep silence in the churches: for it is not permitted unto them to speak; but let them be in subjection, as also saith the law. And if they would learn anything, let them ask their own husbands at home: for it is shameful for a woman to speak in the church." (1 Cor. 14: 34, 35.) Again: "Let a woman learn in quietness with all subjection. But I permit not a woman to teach, nor to have dominion over a man, but to be in quietness." (1 Tim. 2: 11, 12.) These scriptures are regulating the woman's position and work in the public assembly of the church. Man is to take the lead in the public teaching, and woman is not to usurp the authority over man in this respect. She is to learn in quietness and do her work in quietness.

I do not think that these scriptures forbid any woman who is capable of teaching in a modest, quiet way. We find that Priscilla assisted Aquila in expounding unto Apollos "the way of God more accurately." "They took him unto them," or aside, and taught him. (See Acts 18: 26.) Euodia and Syntyche labored with Paul in the gospel. (See Phil. 4: 2, 3.) There is a great work that may be done by our sisters in teaching the word of the Lord, and they should be encouraged in doing so.

2. The scripture referred to reads as follows: "But Peter, standing up with the eleven, lifted up his voice, and spake forth unto them, saying, Ye men of Judea, and all ye that dwell at Jerusalem, be this known unto you, and give ear unto my words." (Acts 2: 14.) This means that there were the twelve apostles and that Peter becomes the spokesman for the company. "Standing up with the eleven" in this verse means the same as "he was numbered with the eleven apostles" in Acts 1: 26. We know that Matthias "was numbered with the eleven apostles," which made twelve in all; so when Peter stood "up with the eleven," it means that Peter, added to the eleven, makes the twelve.

3. Paul, in writing to the Corinthians, says: "And that he appeared to Cephas; then to the twelve." (1. Cor. 15: 5.) This was before Matthias was chosen, and in reality there were but eleven apostles, as Judas had hanged himself. "The twelve" was an official name for the apostles. Though there were only eleven of them at this time, they were still called "the twelve" because of the original number, which was twelve. "The twelve" is used like "the triumviri" or "the decemviri." These titles were used by the Romans and did not necessarily mean that an exact number were present or were referred to when these official titles were used. Paul seems to have used "the twelve" in a similar way.

4. The scripture referred to here is as follows: "And the wall of the city had twelve foundations, and on them twelve names of the twelve apostles of the Lamb." (Rev. 21: 14.) I do not know what names were inscribed on these foundations. No one could state with assurance that the apostle Paul's name was one of them; it might have been, but we have no way of knowing. "Three," "five," "seven," and "twelve" have been called sacred numbers. We have the "twelve" sons of Jacob, the "twelve tsibes," the "twelve stones" from the river Jordan, the "twelve apostles," the "twelve gates," the "twelve foundations," and the "the twelve angels." Revelation abounds in figurative language, and the number "twelve" is used frequently in this book of the New Testament. I do not understand that in "the holy city," or heaven, there are literal walls with literal foundations, but that these are expressions used by the writer in a figurative sense.

5. Yes, Barnabas is spoken of as an apostle in Acts 14: 14. He was not an apostle in the same sense that Peter and John or even Paul were apostles. The word "apostle" comes from the Greek compound, "apo-stello," which means one sent out. Barnabas was sent out by the church at Antioch, and in this sense he was an apostle.

Some of the sisters of the church of Christ here are meeting one day in the week to study the Bible, using as a help "Smith's Outlines of Bible Study." We have made a practice, or custom, of opening our meetings with a song and prayer by one of the sisters, there being no brethren present. Some of the members of the church object to our having songs and prayers and do not meet with us on that account. Please tell us whether or not we are doing wrong. We are conscientious about the matter and want you to give us a definite answer.—A SISTER IN CHRIST.

The earnest desire to please God on the part of these sisters to be commended. No one should do anything as service to God without seeking to do it in such a way as will be pleasing to the Lord. Certainly no wrong is done by these sisters' praising God in song and earnestly and humbly asking God to bless and help them in studying his word. No one should attempt to study the Bible without prayer. We should always approach the study of the word of the Lord with prayer. It would be wrong for these sisters to attempt to study the word of God without prayer. Since no brother meets with them to lead the prayer, it is right for one of the sisters to do so, or a few moments in silent prayer by all would be commended.

There are a number of examples in the New Testament of women praying. When Paul and Silas first went to Philippi, they "went forth without the gate by a riverside, where we supposed there was a place of prayer; and we sat down, and spake unto the women that were come together." (Acts 16: 13.) These women were accustomed to meeting here for prayer. Of course, this was before they had learned of Christ. Paul, in writing to Titus, gives this instruction to women: "That aged women likewise be reverent in demeanor, not slanderers nor enslaved to much wine, teachers of that which is good; that they may train the young women to love their husbands, to love their children, to be sober-minded, chaste, workers at home, kind, being in subjection to their own husbands, that the word of God be not blasphemed." (Tit. 2: 3-5.) The aged women are commanded here to be teachers of that which is good, and surely they ought to accompany all of their teaching with prayer. Again, Paul, in speaking of women praying, says: "But every woman praying or prophesying with her head unveiled dishonoreth her head." (1 Cor. 11: 5.) Again, in writing to Timothy about widows who were to be taken as church charges, he describes her as follows: "Now she that is a widow indeed, and desolate, hath her hope set on God, and continueth in supplications and prayers night and day." (1 Tim. 5: 5.) These and other scriptures show that women should pray; and if no brother is present, she may lead in the prayer.

Please explain Rom. 4: 8: "Blessed is the man to whom the Lord will not reckon sin." Is there any one to whom the Lord does not reckon sin?—N. W. DEACON.

The scripture referred to reads as follows: "Blessed is the man to whom the Lord will not reckon sin." This is quoted from Ps. 32: 2. The Lord does not reckon sin to the one who has obeyed the gospel from the heart. All past sins are forgiven, and, hence, are not imputed or reckoned against one. The child of God who sins and confesses that sin and in penitence turns from it and does all that he can do to make amends for it, to that one sin is not reckoned.

OUR CONTRIBUTORS

THE FAITH THAT SAVES AND CONQUERS.

BY S. H. HALL.

In this issue of the Gospel Advocate "The Faith That Saves and Conquers" is introduced for study. I would be glad to be followed, closely, by those who love the truth, with the idea of having submitted suggestions that will strengthen the arguments and bring the subject out where it can be unmistakably seen and felt. I know perfectly well what must be done to do this—viz., stay absolutely with what God says and teaches on the subject. I ask no soul to help me make the subject plain and strong, for God has already done this. The only help that I (or any other preacher) ever need to make things plain, simple, tangible, and powerful, is for others to help me stay one hundred per cent with the "Book of books."

There is an emphasis in Paul's charge to Timothy in behalf of the simplicity and power of God's truth that is terrific, if we would only recognize it. "Every scripture inspired of God is also profitable for teaching, for reproof, for correction, for instruction which is in right-eousness: that the man of God may be complete, furnished completely unto every good work. I charge thee in the sight of God, and of Christ Jesus, who shall judge the living and the dead, and by his appearing and his kingdem: preach the word."

No scripture can be profitable for teaching unless it teaches, and it most certainly cannot teach unless it can be seen and felt. The same can be said of "reproof" and "correction." Only that which we can sure enough see, feel, and understand can teach, reprove, and correct us. And I think it is correct to say that all the teaching, reproving, and correction, religiously speaking, that we need, the Bible abundantly furnishes. Hence, how full and complete is the charge to every God-called, God-approved, and God-sent minister: "Preach the word!" I ask for no soul to help me explain the word, elucidate the word, for it needs no such; but others may be of help to me in my efforts to stay with the word and depend wholly on the word of God for simplicity and power in preaching and teaching. A man can be "mighty in the Scriptures," but not so when he is out of the Scriptures. Hence, we should ever gladly look and listen for those suggestions and that help that keep us "in the Scriptures," where power and simplicity abound.

Our Lord said much when he declared: "All things are possible to him that believeth." (Mark 9: 23.) And John said quite as much when he declared: "And this is the victory that hath overcome the world, even our faith." (1 John 5: 4.) And the writer of the Hebrew letter says much in the way of emphasizing the importance of faith when he, after enumerating quite a number of men of note from the standpoint of faith, concludes by saying: "And what shall I more say? for the time will fail me if I tell of Gideon, Barak, Samson, Jephthah; of David and Samuel and the prophets: who through faith subdued kingdoms, wrought righteousness, obtained promises, stopped the mouths of lions, quenched the power of fire, escaped the edge of the sword, from weakness were made strong, waxed mighty in war, turned to flight armies of aliens. Women received their dead by a resurrection: and others were tortured, not accepting their deliverance; that they might obtain a better resurrection: and others had trial of mockings and scourgings, yea, moreover of bonds and imprisonment: they were stoned, they were sawn asunder, they were tempted, they were slain with the sword: they went about in sheepskins, in goatskins; being destitute, afflicted, ill-treated (of whom the world was not worthy), wandering in deserts and mountains and caves, and the holes of the earth." (Heb. 11: 32-38.)

Do you think a question like this cannot be studied with profit? Is it possible to know it and understand it and possess it too well? We may have among us those who covet the faith that subdues kingdoms, stops the mouths of lions, and quenches the power of the fire, but are not so much concerned about the faith that takes them through trials of mockings and scourgings, bonds and imprisonment, or the temptation to recant or be stoned to death or thrown among the hungry lions. We love "to be in the swim," so to speak; to be lauded as mighty preachers, mighty workers, and fancy when we are so sailing that we have the "faith of Abraham" and can talk well about God's special providence. But how about our feelings and faith when adversity comes our way, when the crowds are against us, when we are being mocked and jeered at, when we are in perils from our own countrymen and false brethren? The faith that "saves and conquers" is a faith that gives us victories in adversity as well as in prosperity, and I have my serious doubts whether God has one thing to do with what the world calls "victorious faith" unless that same soul can be just as loyal and faithful to God in adversity and unpopularity as he does, seemingly, in what seems to be success. Much that the world calls "success" is a colossal failure, and much that they call "defeat" and "failure" are glorious successes. Let us learn true, victorious, conquering faith in all stations and conditions of life. Let us get into that state or condition that we have more than the mere knowledge that the Spirit declares, but that experimental knowledge that confirms, "that to them that love God all things work together for good." "For himself hath said, I will in no wise fail thee, neither will I in any wise forsake thee. So that with good courage we say, The Lord is my helper; I will not fear: what shall man do unto me?"

Join me in the study, and let us learn well the lesson.

THE LAW OF MINE AND THINE. BY DAVID LIPSCOMB.

This is also in the code called the law of meum et tuum and law of property rights. It protects, or is supposed to protect, an owner of property, real or personal, from depredation. That it is broken, as are all laws, human and divine, can be seen by any issue of the daily press. From oil-land leasing and embezzlement of trust funds to plundering of orchards and watermelon fields, stealing goes merrily on. Some thefts are made subjects of jokes, and, therefore, looked on with much complacency even by older people. Thus the younger ones are encouraged to raid their neighbors' fields and take therefrom what pleases them. Because dad used to hook melons is ample excuse for son to do the same. Because mother wants to pluck flowers or break off limbs of flowering shrubs that are the pride of the country owner certainly encourages daughter to continue the spoliation. If a country person should pull the roses in a city dooryard, what howls of protest and threats of arrest by police would be raised! The "country Jake" must suffer in silence or be called a "mean cuss' if he objects to having his dogwoods, honeysuckles, or other shrubs or vines stripped by the haughty automobilists from the city, who usually throw away the branches, which wither quickly, before they reach their homes.

But there is another form of stealing, and there is no softer word that fits it. People in the South used to say that "niggers" steal; white people only take what does not belong to them. But does the color of the integument make any difference in the act? On the contrary, the poor, as a rule, steal only to satisfy their hunger; and Solomon said that men do not despise the poor, who steals because he is perishing. Our jails are peopled largely by those guilty of petty larceny, while larger thefts go unpunished.

But the kind of dishonesty that does not benefit the one guilty thereof is less venial by far than the theft of food. This dishonesty consists in wantonly defacing, marring, or actually destroying property. What happiness can come to a boy to knock out the lights of a deserted house? How much satisfaction is there to man or boy to cut his initials or full name on Andrew Jackson's tomb, or on any other tomb, or on a natural wonder like Mammoth Cave or Lookout Mountain? Does any gain accrue to a cigarette smoker who scratches the beautiful stones or walls of buildings, public or semipublic? Would the same person scratch the stone mantels or the walls of his own home?

Now, to the young folks who are guilty of the same forms of dishonesty; to those who attend schools, both public an dprivate: Do you think anything is added to your reputation as an honest person if you write upon the seats or desks, or carve your name thereon; or do you feel glorious and self-satisfied because you have wantonly whittled the railing or written upon the plaster of the walls of your school or college? If you have such feelings, you are not honest; you have the heart of a thief. And that is not putting it too srongly.

Here is he story of a senator ("Tabor" was his name) from the State of Nevada. His wealth made him senator. He remained silent in his seat in the senate chamber, when he was present at all, for the full six years. Some one twitted him for never having made a speech. To this jeer he made no reply at first. Then, taking the magnificent diamond from his finger, he drew its sharp, cutting edge across the polished surface of his desk, and, looking at his fellow senator, said: "If I have not made speeches, I have made my mark." Well, there are marks and marks. Which are the more honorable and honest?

Is it right to deface or destroy property not your own? The same boys and girls, men and women, so ready to scratch and tear and write upon school or public buildings do not write upon the walls of their own owned homes. They do not kick the plaster off or break out the window lights. Yet they or their parents own these, and may not a person do what he pleases with his own property? No, because it costs money to repair. Is that the feeling that prompts them to spoil the property of others? It is a dishonest feeling, the feeling of a vandal, the feeling that he will not be punished for doing these things. Even borrowed books do not always come home; and even when henest enough to find their way back, they come sometimes with pencil notations on the margin or scribblings on blank leaves.

There are two buildings in or near Nashville that have suffered more than most others. If rocks or walls could cry out, these two would cry to heaven over man's inhumanity to them. One of these is the Galloway Hospital, on Second Avenue, South. It was built at great expense, has never been used, and is being rapidly demolished, at no cost to the people who subscribed the money to erect it, by the hoodlums of South Nashville. It is pitiful to pass by and note day by day the decay caused, not by the tooth of time, but by dishonesty and thoughtlessness of idle boys. The other building or buildings referred to are the dormitories and schoolrooms of the David Lipscomb College. The heart grows sick to see the pencil, nail, and knife marks made by the students, past and present, of this school, founded by one whom many profess to revere, but whose monument they shamelessly deface.

TRUSTEES OF THE CHRISTIAN HOME.

Two weeks ago we called attention to the great work some of the Nashville brethren are doing in endeavoring to erect a home for needy old people. Brother Norman N. Davidson calls attention to the fact that additional trustees have been selected. The corrected list is as follows: Lytton Alley, W. S. Moody, L. Bennett Corley, J. C. Tuley, J. E. Acuff, Paul Miller, T. B. Simpkins, John Winkler, Brantley Boyd, W. D. Perry, W. S. Dennison, Gregg Baker, S. H. Hall, R. W. Comer, W. H. Sewell, Dr. J. S. Ward, G. S. Davis, R. S. King, F. L. Williams, Roy F. Williams, M. N. Young, Dr. J. S. Cayce, J. C. Lawson, Neely Porch, Harvey Herbert, N. N. Davidson, Harvey Ray, Everett Woodroof, T. J. Warden.

It is commendable in these brethren to desire to provide a home for these old people. In their old age they should be tenderly and lovingly provided for. It seems horrible that many Christian old people have been thrown out upon the world, put in Catholic or other institutions or left to shift for themselves. Brother Davidson and those associated with him are proposing to do a much-needed work.

MEETINGHOUSE AT QUEBECK, TENN.

Sister J. Claude Martin reports the following additional contributions to assist in building the meetinghouse at Quebeck, Tenn.: From the Waverly-Belmont Church, Nashville, Tenn., by Brother Frank Jones, treasurer, $25; Sister C. C. Johnston, Nashville, $2; Sister Daisy Booth, Nashville, $10; W. V. Davidson, Nashville, $25.

We are glad to assist Sister Martin in this good work. A meetinghouse at Quebeck is much needed and would be a great advantage in firmly establishing the cause in that community. All who wish to assist in this good work may address Sister Martin at 2314 West End Avenue, Nashville, Tenn.

BROTHER SHEPHERD'S STATEMENT VERIFIED.

It was announced in the papers of April 21 that "Dr. Fred Cowin," of Detroit, Mich., would preach Sunday morning for the Vine Street congregation and Sunday evening for the Woodland Street congregation. These congregations, as all know, use instrumental music in the worship and work through missionary societies. They are very prominent in this work. They put their force behind recent debates in favor of using instrumental music in the worship.

We make this note simply in justification of Brother J. W. Shepherd, then preacher of the Vinewood congregation, and some other brethren in Detroit, in their charge a year or two ago that Brother Cowin stood on this side of the question. Those acquainted with the facts know through what a trial Brother Shepherd had to pass on account of his making the statement that he did not think Brother Cowin was a sound Bible teacher.

That a woman o'er burdened with grief
Expected from you; 'twould have given relief,
For her heart ached sore the while;
But weary and cheerless she went away,
Because, as it happened, that very day
You were 'out of touch' with your Lord."

"Only a day—yes, only a day!
But O! can you guess, my friend,
Where the influence reaches and where it will end
Of the hours that you frittered away?
The Master's command is, 'Abide with me,'
And fruitless and vain will your service be
If 'out of touch' with your Lord."

SAN FRANCISCO NOTES.

BY W. HALLIDAY TRICE.

On Saturday evening, May 30, Brother William Green, of Altadena, near Los Angeles, called me by telephone and asked me to conduct the funeral of his wife. That I might reach my destination in time, I called in my appointment in Berkeley for Sunday night and took the train for Los Angeles. Brother S. E. Witty met me in Los Angeles and took me to the home of Brother Green. The funeral was held at three o'clock on Monday afternoon, June 1, in Alhambra, and was attended by a large crowd, including the following preachers: G. W. Riggs, S. E. Witty, D. W. Nay, E. C. Fuqua, C. C. Condra, J. H. Moore, and possibly others. Brother Condra led the prayer, and I read some scriptures and made the talk at the undertaking parlor, and Brother Witty read a selection of Scripture and offered the closing prayer at the grave. On my first visit to San Francisco in August, 1916, I met Sister Green (then Lou Mallory) and her sister, Amy Mallory. About two years later I spoke the words that united her in marriage to Brother Green. I feel keenly the loss of Sister Green, and my sincere sympathy goes out to Brother Green and Sister Amy. Sister Green obeyed the gospel when quite young, and I am sure she was one of the most faithful Christians I ever knew. She suffered from tuberculosis for four or five years, but she bore her affliction with Christian fortitude, and now she rests from her labors. "We sorrow not as those who have no hope."

While in Southern California I was entertained overnight in the home of Brother and Sister Witty. We had lunch in the home of Brother and Sister Riggs, and, in company with the following persons, I was the guest of Brother and Sister J. C. Estes for lunch: F. L. Rowe, E. C. Fuqua, S. E. Witty, and Sister Witty. Brother Rowe was in San Francisco just before going South; but as I was in Fresno that week, I missed him. I was glad to meet him in Pasadena.

The work moves along very nicely in San Francisco. We meet in Richland Hall, Fourth Avenue and Clement Street. My address is 1281 Sixth Avenue.

NEARER TO GOD.

BY MARIE M'CONNELL.

In Job 28: 24 we find the following words: "He [God] looketh to the ends of the earth, and seeth under the whole heaven." Preceding this announcement, Job speaks of the metals hidden under the earth and which man cannot see because of the darkness. But as for the Lord, "his eye seeth every precious thing." He is near every one of us.

Paul tells us just how near we are to God when he says: "In him we live, and move, and have our being." True it is that "we who once were afar off are made nigh by the blood of Christ."

There are times when God seems far from us. Would that those times were fewer! It is always our fault when we lose the sense of the Father's nearness. God says: "Draw nigh to me, and I will draw nigh to you." Get close to God, and he will get .close to you. We are under his observation every minute; and when our hearts are in the right condition, we can feel his presence. Our one prayer should be: "Draw us nearer to thee, precious Lord."

There is much consolation in being close to God. In sorrow he gives us comfort and hope. Sorrow links us closer to him, and he delights in easing our burdens.

Unless we are near to Jehovah, we cannot pray acceptably to him. If we doubt his ability to hear our petitions, our prayers are useless. God can hear the whispered prayer as easily as the one spoken in loud words. Our God is not as Baal, to whose followers Elijah said: "Cry aloud: for he is a god; either he is talking, or he is pursuing, or he is in a journey, or peradventure he sleepeth, and must be awaked." (1 Kings 18: 27.) "The Lord is nigh unto all them that call upon him." 145: 18.)

The nearer we are to the Father, the more godly we will be. Association breeds likeness. Those near to God have like interests. Their lives reflect his righteousness. They are more perfect images of his goodness, more godlike than those who do not feel his nearness.

It is evident that many disciples would live differently if they did not forget that God sees everything they do. Would they go to the same places and say the same things they now say if they were sure that they were "in God's presence?" Well, every Christian should have faith enough to believe the Bible when it says that God sees everything. Then they should have strength enough to live accordingly, to live in such a way as not to grieve God.

The great need in the church today is nearness to God. When we live close to him, when we are conscious of his companionship, we will be drawn closer to the brethren also. Nearer to God, nearer to the Savior, nearer to each other, would be a good aim for each of us to have. Why? Because, when we attain that, there will be such unity and peace among us as to make the angels rejoice.

BOSWELL-HARDEMAN DISCUSSION ON INSTRU-MENTAL MUSIC IN THE WORSHIP

Price, postpaid_____

The Boswell-Hardeman discussion on instrumental music in the worship is now ready for distribution. If you have not already given us your order for the discussion, you should do so at once. The subject is a live one and the interest in it is growing. So many who have built on the silence of the Bible have espoused "open membership" and have denied the inspiration of the Scriptures and the deity of Christ that the people are realizing as never before that it is dangerous to build on the silence of the Bible.

This discussion was conducted in a good spirit throughout, each speaker showing marked consideration and courtesy for his opponent. Ira M. Boswell did as well as any one can do who undertakes to prove that instrumental music in the worship is scriptural. Any failure that he made was not on account of his lack of ability, but was due to the weakness of his position. N. B. Hardeman presented the truth in a forceful and convincing way.

Buy the book and circulate it among those who use instrumental music in the worship.

From the Brethren

Bardwell, Ky., June 10.—On the fifth Lord's day in May I filled my annual appointment at Oak Grove, near Fulton, Ky. I have been visiting and preaching for them thirty-five years. They have asked me to preach for them once a year as long as I live. I came into Fulton at night, and by request preached to a large as I live. I came into Fulton at night, and by request preached to a large crowd. I am in fine health and preach somewhere every Sunday. I have time for protracted-meeting work not taken. Brethren, if you need me, send for me. I would be glad to be busy till I lay my armor down.—Joe Parteliffe Ratcliffe.

We got our new church building up, roofed, floored, and all finished, except a few finishing touches, and had services on Sunday morning, conducted by Brother Henry Geer, of Bridgeport, Ala., who came here looking for a new field. He preached a Bridgeport, Ala., who came here looking for a new field. He preached a fine gospel sermon, the first one we had heard in West Palm Beach in over a year and a half, and we will retain him here to help us build up the cause. We are very thankful for the help received from Cookeville and Sparta, Tenn., and believe now we have a bright future. I have received many letters from friends and Christians over the country that had Christians over the country that had seen what we wrote sometime ago in the Gospel Advocate. The lot and all building material and labor are paid for .- Harry C. Johnson.

Detroit, Mich., June 11.—In a recent letter from Brother Hall L. Calhoun, of Bethany College, W. Va., he says: "I have recently read 'The Spirit of Christ,' by Long and Rice, and it has my hearty commendation." The book could not have a stronger indorsement than one signed by Brother Calhoun. The authors appreciate what he says. Brother Calhoun was my teacher in 1900-1901 at Henderson, Tenn., in what is now the Freed-Hardeman College. I have never been under a more thorough teacher. It gives me great joy to know that he is to be copresident with Brother Hardeman in this college for years to come. Young people who take advantage of this college course will find it a blessing to them in leading them to a life of success. May there be many to so rejoice. Those desiring a copy of "The Spirit of Christ" may address me at 1445 Clark Avenue, Detroit, Mich.—W. S. Long, Jr.

Silver Point, Tenn., June 15.—On the first Lord's day in June it was my pleasure to visit Silver Point again after an absence of nearly nine years. Many of my old acquaintances have moved away and some have died, but still there is a remnant left to worship God in spirit and in truth. The services were held under a big shade tree in the open air. Brother H. Clay, of Nashville, and Brother Gilbert Johnson, of Cookeville, spoke at the morning session, and made plain the grand old story of the cross. An old-fashioned basket dinner was served by the sisters, and the afterserved by the sisters, and the afternoon was spent in singing. On two nights of the same week the young people met and had a singing school.

I look forward to a great future for these young people, if they will cultivate the gift that is within them. The Gospel Advocate has friends in Silver Point and others were made while I was there. A contribution was taken for the Nashville Christian Institute, and many kindnesses were shown me which I shall not forget soon.—A. C. Tuggle.

Albuquerque, New Mexico, June 12.

—There were two fine services here last Lord's day. There have been a few additions since last report. We are ready for our annual meeting, which will continue from Sunday, June 14, to June 28, and is to be held in the Armory, a large brick building in the heart of Albuquerque which will accommodate some three thousand people. G. A. Dunn, Jr., is to do the preaching. From May 22 to May 31, J. G. Hufstedler, an efficient singer, and the writer conducted a fine meeting with the church at Kress, Texas, with fourteen by commendation, two by restoration, and three by baptism. On the last day of the meeting Brother C. M. Stubblefield and Brother R. M. Peace preached in the afternoon. A good contribution was taken for the purpose of helping support Brother Hufstedler in a meeting at Las Cruces, N. M., which is to be held by him and the writer, from July 1 to July 12. I have other meetings booked as follows: The latter half of July, Lexington, Okla.; first half of August, Era, Texas; last three Lord's days in August, Idalou, Texas; first half of September, Amherst, Texas. Beginning on July 1, our permanent address will be Abilene, Texas, as we move there for the school and that I may have a central location for general evangelistic work. Brethren anywhere who want a meeting from the middle of September on may address me there.—O. M. Reynolds.

Carlisle, Ky., June 12.—The tent meeting which began here on June 2 is progressing nicely. Our only regret is that we are unable to accommodate all who come. Many sit on the grass outside and scores stand in and near the tent; while others, unable to get in good hearing distance, go back home. I am doing the hardest preaching of my life. Every divisive doctrine has been touched upon, Christ as Head and Lawgiver exalted, the Bible story contended for, and Christian unity pleaded for. I find that the people are yearning for truth and unity, but are slow to accept anything different from what they have. It is distressing and heart-rending to see people so unsettled, yet unable to get them to accept the only remedy for such a malady. However, I shall try to be content with leaving the results with God. The townsmen treat me kindly, and the Christian Church has dismissed one service in our favor. I pointed out to them that at one time there was a New Testament church here, but for some reason they saw fit to "go beyond what is written," and said: "Even now, if you will remove the instruments of music, I will join heart and hand with you." To this I received only a faint response: "We will see." However, they made an attempt to kill my influence by flattery and high-sounding praise of my ability and the power of my messages on the fundamentals. My next meeting will be at Mount Olivet, Ky.—J. L. Hines.

THE DAYBREAK OF THE GOS-PEL WITH THE INDIANS.

BY NOEL B. CUFF.

In November, 1646, John Eliot and other's made a second trip to the Indian wigwam of "Waawbon."

"He that preached to them set forth God unto them by familiar descriptions, in his glorious power, goodness, and greatness, . . . thus continuing to preach the space of an hour. We desired them to propound some questions.

"The first question was suddenly propounded by an old man then present, who, hearing faith and repentance preached upon them to find salvation by Jesus Christ, he asked whether it was not too late for such an old man as he, who was near death, to repent or seek after God.

"This question affected us not a little with compassion, and we held forth to him the Bible and told him what God said in it concerning such as are hired at the eleventh hour of the day. We told him, also, that if a father had a son that had been disobedient many years, yet, if at last that son fall down upon his knees and weep and desire his father to love him, his father is so merciful that he will readily forgive him and love him. So we said: 'God is more merciful . . . than any father can be to his rebellious child whom he hath begot;' . . . and that, therefore, if now they did repent it was not too late as the old man feared; but if they did not come when they were thus called, God would be greatly angry with them, especially considering that now they must sin against knowledge, whereas before we came to them they knew not anything of God at all."

An idler may ease his conscience by thinking that he will enter the Lord's vineyard at the eleventh hour of his life and then receive as much pay as those who bear "the burden and heat of the day." But the narrative in Matt. 20: 7 is speaking of those who had had no opportunity to work. It does not contain a promise for willful idleness. The lesson was likely intended to show that the Gentiles, though called later, would enjoy equal privileges with the Jews. Its application to-day would apply to characters similar to the Indian in the preceding discussion, and not to those who repeatedly hear and refuse to accept the gospel until they see death approaching.

Sullivan, Ind., June 10.—I have been engaged in some house-to-house work among the members at Liberty-ville, New Goshen, and Sullivan for the last few days. On Saturday night and on Lord's day I listened to three fine sermons and a memorial address by Brother Daniel Mathis, a true and noble preacher of the word. The church house at Libertyville was well filled, and all were attentive listeners. I shall go to Berea to-day and preach two nights.—Andrew Perry.

Lawrenceburg, Tenn., June 10.—I am open for engagements to lead the singing in meetings this year, and would be glad to communicate with any preacher or congregation needing a singer for meetings. I have engagements for the latter part of August and first of September. I sang last year with J. T. Harris, Lawrenceburg, Tenn.; Flavil Hall, Trion, Ga.; and J. Porter Sanders, Jackson, Miss. For reference, write either of them; J. E. Thornberry or E. O. Coffman, Lawrenceburg, Tenn.; or Frank Baker, Berry, Ala. Write me either at Vernon, Ala., or at Lawrenceburg, Tenn.—M. L. Johnson.

Clovis, New Mexico, June 10.—While we have a few congregations dotted here and there over the State of New Mexico, this State is largely a destitute field. As I wrote sometime ago, we have but few preachers here. We need more workers. Who will help keep a man or men in this field? I am the only preacher devoting all his time to the ministry within a radius of fifty miles of Clovis. Brother Barnhill is living near Portales, but is not giving all his time to the work, no doubt because he has had to do so much at his own charges. At several points where we have no church and but one or two members

I have been urged to come and hold a meeting. I have a missionary spirit and want to preach in mission fields, but must have help to do it. I have just delivered a few lectures against evolution at Floyd, some twenty miles west of Portales; and I found three members there, and all are anxious to have a meeting. Brother A. J. Hunt lives at Floyd, having just moved there from Oklahoma, and he is anxious to have the meeting. Brethren, if you will help me hold a meeting there, send your contributions to him at Floyd, New Mexico; or just send to me, at Box 57, Clovis, New Mexico, and say it is for the Floyd meeting. I aim to hold the meeting, anyway, but I really think the brethren should help.—D. S. Ligon.

- "Your Quarterlies received and briefly examined. They show that much time and care have been exercised in their preparation. They are clear, scriptural, and to the point." (E. L. Whitaker.)
- "I think the Quarterlies very instructive and helpful in the study of the Scriptures both in the home and in the public assembly, and it will give me pleasure to commend them to all the faithful workers in my field of labor." (J. D. Jones.)
- "The Sunday-school literature that is published by the Gospel Advocate Company I can heartily recommend to any one who is in search for good helps on our Sunday-school lessons." (Robert E. Wright.)
- "A complete assortment of the Sundayschool literature published by the Gospei Advocate Company was sent me recently. Having examined it carefully, I am glad to say I consider it excellent, and gladly commend it to congregations, teachers, and classes." (T. B. Larimore.)

"As a whole, I think your Leseon Helps far surpass other literature of its kind. Here in this great mission field (Louisiana) where we have placed them, many comparisons have been made between them and both the denominational and our society brethren's literature, and at no time have your Lesson Helps come off second best." (C. C. McQuiddy.)

- "It is a pleasure to write a word of commendation of Brother Elam's Notes on Bible School Lessons. They are the product of one who has given the greater part of his life to the study and teaching of God's Word. They are true to the Bible, comprehensive, and scholarly. If you love the truth, you will be delighted to study with him these wonderful lessons." (A. G. Freed.)
- "Brother E. A. Elam's Notes, as published annually, is, in my judgment, sortputural and the best thing of its kind I have ever seen or that is published to-day. Everybody ought to have a copy and preserve it for study and reference. Brother Elam's twenty-five years' work, if every year should be bound in a separate volume, the twenty-five volumes would be a great addition to any library. (C. M. Pullias.)
- "At the Central church of Christ in Fort Worth we have been using in our Bible school Elam's Notes and other literature of his. For a great number of years the writer of this has felt that Brother Blam was one of the best-prepared men in the brotherhood for the preparation of such literature. His Notes, in our best judgment, represent, or reflect, the best efforts he has ever made. Both as an elder of the congregation and as a teacher in our Bible School, I have very great pleasure in indorsing his Notes. To the extent that an expression of our views is of value, I assure you we are very pleased to give it." (J. G. Wilkinson.)
- pleased to give it." (J. G. Wilkinson.)

 "I have used Elam's Quarterlies for years. They are superior to any that I have seen. They are superior to any that I have seen. Elam's Notes on Bible School Lessons are much fuller than they. They give the historical setting as to time and place that is needed and valuable. They give so many scriptural citations and references—Scriptural citations and references—Scriptural that introduce the text or corroborate the text—that the average student may know the geography, the history, and the full meaning of the lesson. They give so many lessons, deducted from the copious citations of Scriptures, that the student may know more perfectly God's will. For years I have used Peloubet's Seleot Notes. I compare them weekly. I do not hesitate to say that Elam's Notes are infinitely superior, if you want to know the Bible." (C. F. Holt.)

By JAMES A. ALLEN

The Christian Advocate, Birmingham, England, speaking of the consolidation of the Methodist, Presbyterian, and Congregational churches in Canada, "under the name of the United Church of Canada," says:

When the question was decided in the General Assembly, the voting was by churches, and the many small churches of the West were mostly in favor of union. But in the larger churches of the cities, especially in such centers as Toronto and Montreal; there has all through the long period of negotiation been a large opposition section, and this appears to have grown since the final decision. A plebiscite of the members of the Presbyterian Church has been taken, and, when the latest figures were received, in a vote of about two hundred thousand, there was a majority of approximately five thousand against union.

It is a mistake for men to give more thought and attention to unity between one another than they do to unity between themselves and God. The main thing is for a man to bring himself into unity with God. All who become united to God, by the same act become united to all of God's children. It is impossible to be united to God and divided from any of God's children. The same thing that makes a man a child of God makes him a brother to all other children of God. All of God's children are members of God's family. God has no children that are not in, his family. The family of God is the church of God, and the church of God is the body of Christ, of which every Christian is a member. "And he is the head of the body, the church." (Col. 1: 18.) "And gave him to be head over all things to the church, which is his body, the fullness of him that filleth all in all." (Eph. 1: '22, 23.) The same thing that makes a man a Christian makes him a member of the church.

It is also a mistake to think that Christian union is a merger of denominations. "The unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace" cannot be established by a vote on either side of any question. The kind of unity taught and required by the Spirit is a kind of unity that does not admit either majorities or minorities, but that embraces all on the same side of every question, making impossible the taking of a vote on any article of faith or doctrine. "Now I beseech you, brethren, through the name of our Lord Josus Christ, that ye all speak the same thing, and that there be no divisions among you; but that ye be perfected together in the same mind and in the same judgment." (1 Cor. 1: 10.)

Unity of faith necessarily consists of believing, teaching, and practicing what the word of God authorizes and requires. In no other way can "ye all speak the same thing" and "be perfected together in the same mind and in the same judgment," except by conforming to the divine injunction: "If any man speak, let him speak as the oracles of God." (1 Pet. 4: 11.) All the division and trouble that now exists, or that has ever existed, in the religious world, has been brought about by a violation of this rule. All can accept and practice the things authorized and required in the Bible, and upon such things can heartily "keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace" without either majorities or minorities. All cannot conscientiously come to any other ground.

The religious world is divided, torn, and distracted over things not once mentioned in the Bible, as well as over the elimination of things that the Bible clearly commands and requires. Such things as the substitution of sprinkling for baptism, a refusal to tell sinners what the Bible teaches them to do to be saved, the organization of religious institutions other than the church, the introduction of instrumental music, and various other things not once mentioned or authorized in the Bible, are the things that are causing the trouble and that are disturbing the peace and happiness, as well as retarding the usefulness, of the people of God? Why can't all come to the Bible? Why can't all teach what it teaches and practice what it requires? In this way strife and division would automatically vanish; and "the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace," in which all would "stand fast in one spirit, with one soul striving for the faith of the gospel," would instantaneously become a blessed reality the moment all candidly and honestly decided to come to the Bible.

Speaking along another line, the Christian Advocate further says:

further says:

Under the title, "What Others Say of Us," the Baptist Times has the following quotations: "Everywhere in the New Testament the baptism of such as had become believers is presupposed, and the New Testament knows nothing at all of any other baptism." (Professor Kaftan, of Berlin, in "Dogmatic Theology.") "Christian baptism is not to be received, any more than faith, by inheritance... This is the great reason why we cannot believe that it was administered in the apostolic age to little children." (Dr. E. de Pressencé, in "The Apostolic Age.") "There can be no question that the original form of baptism—the very meaning of the word—was complete immersion in the deep baptismal waters." (Dean Stanley, in "History of the Eastern Church.")

There can be no doubt that Jesus commands all be-

There can be no doubt that Jesus commands all believers to be baptized. "Go ye therefore, and make disciples of all the nations, baptizing them into the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit." (Matt. 28: 19.) "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to the whole creation. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that disbelieveth shall be condemned." (Mark 16: 15, 16.) "Repent ye, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ unto the remission of your sins; and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit. . . . They then that received his word were baptized." (Acts 2: 38-41.)

Babies were not sprinkled in New Testament times. Infant sprinkling was not taught by inspired men. Jesus commanded that believers be baptized, and no apostle or evangelist ever baptized any person before "they spoke the word of the Lord unto him" (Acts 16: 32), that he might have faith which "cometh by hearing" (Rom. 10: 17). No one not mature enough in mind to have faith can be a proper subject of baptism. "Without faith it is impossible to please" God. (Heb. 11: 6.) In New Testament times only believers were baptized. The Bible does not authorize the baptism of others.

The Christian Advocate is also right in indorsing the statement of Dean Stanley, in "History of the Eastern Church," that "there can be no question that the original form of baptism—the very meaning of the word—was complete immersion in the baptismal waters." Baptizo can be translated into English only by such words as dip, plunge, submerge, immerse. In no sense, and under no circumstances, can the word be translated by sprinkle or pour. But, for the sake of those unacquainted with the Greek Testament, we may say that the meaning of baptizo may be easily determined from the act that was performed when inspired men commanded baptism. "They came unto a certain water" (Acts 8: 36), "much water" (John 3: 23), "they both went down into the water" (Acts 8: 38), and after the baptism "they came up out of the water" (Acts 8: 39). Baptism is referred to as a birth (John 3: 5) and as a burial and resurrection (Rom. 6: 4; Col. 2: 12). All concur in testifying that immersion was the universal practice of New Testament times and that there were no unimmersed persons in the primitive church. Since Christ instituted the ordinance of baptism, every believer spoken of as saved, or pardoned, was an immersed believer. After the establishment of the church upon the day of Pentecost and the preaching of the first gospel sermon, no immersed person was recognized by inspired men as saved, or pardoned. No unimmersed person can now be regarded, in the light of the Scriptures, as a member of the true, primitive, and apostolic church of Christ:

And not only are penitent believers to be immersed, but the design of such an act is presented with equal force and clearness in the Bible.

THE LOCUSTS AND THE SPIDER.

BY JAMES E. CHESSOR.

"The locusts have no king, yet they go forth all of them by bands." (Read Prov. 30: 24-28.) The lesson of the locust is that of unity. They unite their efforts, go forth "by bands." By banding together they have accomplished wonders.

The locust is a well-known insect of the grasshopper family which commits grievous ravages on vegetation in the countries which it visits. Jehovah wrought one of the plagues in Egypt by bringing great swarms of locusts upon the land. The description is graphic. "And the locusts went up over all the land of Egypt, and rested in all the borders of Egypt; very grievous they were; before them there were no such locusts as they, neither after them shall be such. For they covered the face of the whole earth, so that the land was darkened; and they did eat every herb of the land, and all the fruit of the trees which the hail had left: and there remained not any green thing, either tree or herb of the field, through all the land of Egypt." By going forth "all of them by bands," Pharaoh found in the locusts an enemy against which he and his people were powerless. Locusts still plague some parts of Arabia and Persia.

Since the locusts have no king or leader, they band themselves together. In unity they find strength. Divided and scattered, they can effect no plague; but they make up for their individual weakness by mutual coöperation. From the locusts, then, we get the lesson of united effort, concert of action, unity and harmony. This is a needful lesson.

Nations can profit by it, and the smallest units of society can profit by it also. Communities and churches can benefit especially by application of the principle. The pioneers knew something of unity, and had they not known it they should not have been "empire builders." An illustration is in point. How were those huge blockhouses erected on the banks of the Cumberland when Nashville was founded? Eight stockades were reared up by a handful of men in an incredibly short interval. It was accomplished by united effort. The pioneers laid hold as one man, and shoulder to shoulder they rolled the logs into position; and shoulder to shoulder they defended those forts when swarms of red savages assailed them. And how did a newcomer clear his ground for corn? The older readers will know. They had a logrolling. Uniting their strength, they rolled the logs together in great heaps and cleared the ground. In the same way they reared the cabin. They were neighbors indeed.

Abe Lincoln was a pioneer, a "po' white," of Kentucky. He emigrated to Illinois, split rails, rolled logs, learned things, and became the sixteenth President. And it was he who spoke of unity in a notable speech. "A house divided against itself cannot stand," he said, alluding prophetically to the impending division over slavery. But Jesus had said this eighteen centuries before. Jesus stressed unity. He prayed that his followers might be one: "Holy Father, keep them in thy name which thou hast given me, that they may be one, even as we are one." Why all this division? Why are there faction and troublemaking even in congregations of the church of Christ? Because people are heedless to the spirit of the prayer for unity. Riven into factions, jealous, envious, warring among themselves, we certainly need to learn the lesson of unity to-day. Truth should unite Christians, and love should cement the tie.

"The spider taketh hold with her hands, and is in kings' palaces." The lesson of the spider is that of perseverance. The word translated "spider" here is rendered "lizard" in the American Revision. The lesson is the same whether taught by spider or by lizard. There are many species of spider in Palestine, some of which spin webs, like the common garden spider. "The spider taketh hold with her hands," which shows that she is not afraid to essay the task. She takes advantage of her very insignificance and creeps unobserved into the palace of the king. If she were timid and afraid, she would not enter the king's house to weave her web. The slothful fellow to whom one talent was vouchsafed was "afraid," he said, and went and hid his lord's money. But the spider has the courage of effort; if she fails once, or twice, or many times, she is not a whit discouraged.

The little story of Bruce and the spider is beautiful and impressive. Having lost six battles in his struggle against England, Bruce, king of Scotland, became discouraged, retired to his hut, and threw himself on a bed of heather. He spent a sleepless night worrying about his throne and Scotland's future. But when the morning sun broke through the thatch, Bruce saw a spider trying to fling a thread from one beam to another. The spider tried once, and failed; twice, and failed; thrice, and failed. Nothing daunted, the doughty insect kept on doggedly. Bruce became interested. The spider made the fourth effort, and failed; the fifth, and failed; the sixth, and failed. But the patient insect, six times foiled, prepared for the seventh effort. Bruce now watched with bated breath the Would the insect fail again? seventh effort.

"One effort more, his seventh and last!
The hero hailed the sign!
And on the wished-for beam hung fast
The slender, silken line.
Slight as it was, his spirit caught
The more than omen, for his thought
The lesson well could trace,
Which even 'he who runs may read'—
That perseverance gains the mead,
And patience wins the race,"

Bruce renewed the struggle against the invader and ultimately set Scotland free and made his throne secure. He had learned the needed lesson of perseverance from the spider. The lesson of perseverance recurs numerous times in the Bible. It is stressed especially in the Pauline Epistles. "And let us not be weary in well-doing," Paul wrote the Galatians: "for in due season we shall reap, if we faint not." "Therefore let us also, seeing we are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses," he wrote to the Hebrews, "lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus the author and perfecter of our faith."

"There are four things which are little upon the earth, but they are exceeding wise." Then Solomon shows wherein they are wise: the ants, by providing their food in the summer; the conies, by making their houses in the rocks; the locusts, by going forth all of them by bands; the spider, by taking hold with her hands. The practicability of the lesson taught by each is clearly seen. The four little creatures are so wise that Solomon speaks of each as having human attributes. The ants are a "people not strong," he says; the conies are but a "feeble folk; the locusts "have no king;" and the spider "taketh hold with her hands." They are God's wise little people, and Solomon, the writer of many proverbs, commends their wisdom to us.

WHAT SHOULD BE DONE WITH DISORDERLY MEMBERS?

BY W. T. BEASLEY.

When we are asked this question, being members of the body of Christ, the household of faith, the family of God, having studied our Father's book, the Bible, as we should, we very well know that "all scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness: that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works." (2 Tim. 3: 16, 17.)

God being a loving, tender Father, ever watching over his family for their good, we can always bear in mind that his rule of action toward his children is exactly what it ought to be. To the sinner God has made known certain conditions that we find recorded in his Book—faith, repentance, and baptism—to all of which every loyal member in the body of Christ will agree; to the faithful, active members, other duties, such as virtue, knowledge, temperance, etc., which we will not deny.

"The body is one, and hath many members." (1 Cor. 12: 12.) It is a lamentable fact with the church, as with all other public institutions, that bad material is contained therein. Such should not be the case with the church. If we people that accept the Bible as our only rule of faith, doctrine, and practice would act according to our Father's teaching, we would not be troubled with the unruly or disorderly members very long.

But some would like to know what it is to be disorderly and what must be done with such. To be disorderly is to be unruly, not walking according to rule or law, thereby showing a disrespect for the Ruler and his law. This can be done by omission and by commission. A person claiming to be a Christian, who has sinned either by omission or commission, yet refuses to be governed by a "Thus saith the Lord" in making amendment for such conduct, is disorderly.

Paul says: "Now we exhort you, brethren, warn them that are unruly." (1 Thess. 5: 14.) We have many unruly members that should be warned or exhorted. (Heb. 3: 13.) Those who are guilty of "adultery, fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness, idolatry, witchcraft, hatred, variance, emulations, wrath, strife, seditions, heresies, envyings, murders, drunkenness, revelings, and such like" (Gal. 5: 19-21), those who refuse to work (2 Thess. 3: 10-15), brethren which cause "divisions" (Rom. 16: 17), and those that are "idle, wandering from house to house," and are "tattlers" (1 Tim. 5: 11-15), being warned by faithful brethren and refusing to reform, should be withdrawn from; or, as our Savior said: "But if the salt have lost his savor, wherewith shall it be salted? it is thenceforth good for nothing, but to be cast out, and to be trodden under foot of men" (Matt. 5: 13). Paul says: "Your glorying is not good. Know ye not that a little leaven leaveneth the whole lump? Purge out therefore the old leaven, that ye may be a new lump, as ye are unleavened." (1 Cor. 5: 6, 7.) The foregoing passages teach us that we should cast out those that have lost their influence for good, and that we would be a new lump, but unleavened (an old lump) as long as we allow such to remain among us.

Again, Paul says: "Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you, and will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, suith the Lord Almighty." (2 Cor. 6: 17, 18.) Paul teaches us that unless we separate ourselves from the unclean or disorderly we cannot call God our Father, nor will he recognize us as his children.

Again, Paul says: "Brethren, if a man be overtaken in a fault, ye which are spiritual, restore such a one in the spirit of weakness; considering thyself, lest thou also be tempted." (Gal. 6: 1.) When we do everything reasonable and right to restore the disorderly and fail, the only course left for us to pursue is to separate ourselves from the unruly by casting them out or withdrawing from them. (2 Thess. 3: 6.)

Remember, brethren, that we have been commanded to withdraw "from every brother [without respect of person] that walketh disorderly." I know of members who are walking disorderly that are being retained in the church on account of being good to pay, and others on account of being members of families in high society. Such should not be tolerated for a moment. Brethren, God is holding us responsible for our conduct toward the brethren. "But now I have written unto you not to keep company, if any man that is called a brother be a fornicator, or covetous, or an idolater, or a railer, or a drunkard, or an extortioner; with such a one no not to eat." (1 Cor. 5: 11.) After reading this plain statement, brethren will eat, drink, and keep the company of such characters, both at home and abroad. I am glad to say that the brethren at Corinth had conducted themselves toward the disorderly brother in such a way that Paul, in speaking to them, said: "For behold this selfsame thing, that ye sorrowed after a godly sort, what carefulness it wrought in you, yea, what clearing of yourselves, yea, what indignation, yea, what fear, yea, what vehement desire, yea, what zeal, yea, what revenge! In all things ye have approved yourselves to be clear in this matter." (2 Cor. 7: 11.) Brethren, can it, will it, be said of us in the great day of accounts that we are "clear in this matter?"

When you know of many who are walking disorderly that have not been warned, have not been withdrawn from, what do you say, brethren? Let us have a clean membership. The church is suffering along this line.

COMMENTARY ON FIRST CORINTHIANS. No. 22.

BY C: E. W. DORRIS.

PAUL PROMISES TO VISIT THEM. (Verses 18-21.)

Verse 18. Some are puffed up, etc. Some thought they were safe in their party strifes, because they supposed Paul would not revisit Corinth and show up their false teaching and practice. Note the advantages which the height and haughtiness of some envious teachers took upon Paul's absence from Corinth. They entertained low and contemptuous thoughts of him, and vaunted that he did not not come before them, nor stand among them.

19. I will come to you shortly, if the Lord will. Paul fully purposed to follow Timothy in a visit to Corinth (1 Cor. 16: 7, 8) and put to test those puffed up. Not the speech of them which are puffed up, but the power. He will not test the speech of the vain boasters by the power of the gospel, but the authority they profess to have, and the evidence of that authority in the works they have performed. That is, I will not try your boasting and envious teachers by their plausible words and fine talk, discovering who has the smoothest tongue, but I will examine the power. That is, first their authority to preach; next, what power and efficacy there is in their preaching; and lastly, what power and influence their preaching has upon their own practice. I will find out what real good they have done among you, after all their ostentatious braggings.

20. For the kingdom of God is not in word, but in power. That is, Christianity does not consist in talking, but in doing; not in vaunting, but in performing great things. By "power," here, may be understood a power of working miracles for confirming and propagating the gospel, which the apostles had, but the false teachers at Corinth had not. To convince men at first of the truth of Christianity, the dead were raised, the devils cast out, and many mighty wonders wrought by the apostles, by which the gospel doctrine was planted, propagated, established, and confirmed. The kingdom of God was not raised at first, or carried on during the apostolic times, by the charms of popular eloquence and rhetorical flourishes, but by a plain way and familiar manner of preaching the doctrine of the gospel, attested by miracles, and accompanied with works of divine efficacy and power. The religion or scheme of redemption established by Christ is not in human eloquence, excellence of speech, but in the power of God manifested through the gospel; and all his true apostles are enabled, on all necessary occasions, to demonstrate the truth of their calling by miracles. It is not words of profession that reign in the kingdom of God, but the power of God in the heart.

21. What will ye? etc. Will the church at Corinth be in a condition so I can use love and gentleness, or will it be necessary to use severe reproof? He alludes to the teacher and father, mentioned in verse 15. Shall I come to you with the authority of a teacher, and use the rod of discipline, or shall I come in the tenderness of a father, and entreat you to do what I have authority to enforce? Shall I come among you to regulate disorders and to rectify abuses? Now choose how I shall come, whether in the milder way of kindness, love, and meekness toward you, or exercising the power God has granted me, and deliver you over to Satan. (1. Tim. 1: 20.) Paul intimates a power which he had in the church-namely, the power of the rod-that is, power to inflict the severest penalties allowed in the church.

"RATHER BE A MISSIONARY."

Under the heading, "Rather Be a Missionary Than United States Ambassador," and a subheading, "B. D. Morehead, Nashville, Will Be Sent to Japan," a Nashville daily paper carries the following:

daily paper carries the following:

"I had rather be a missionary to Japan and save souls for Christ than be United States Minister to any foreign country, because I believe the reward will be far greater," declared B. D. Morehead, recently chosen missionary to Japan by the church of Christ at Waverly-Belmont, when asked why he was sacrificing his possibilities of success in America for the work in foreign fields.

Mr. and Mrs. Morehead are scheduled to leave Nashville the last of the month, spend six weeks in Los Angeles, Cal., studying the Japanese language under a native instructor, and sail for Yokohama, Japan, August 18, in company with missionaries to India and China from Abilene Christian College, Abilene, Texas, and Harding College, of Morrillton, Ark.

Mr. Morehead was born in Illinois, August 2, 1897, and went to Alabama with his parents at the age of five. He united with the church at the age of thirteen, under the preaching of William Derryberry. During a period of service in the World War, in which he was associated with missionaries who had been in China, Mr. Morehead resolved to be a missionary. With this intention, he attended David Lipscomb College for five years, being graduated in 1924. While in this college he met Miss Nellie Hertzka, daughter of M. B. Hertzka, of 2608 Oakland Avenue, who was also interested in missionary work. They were married on May 27, 1924.

Mr. and Mrs. Morehead have been actively engaged in church work for several years, he as a preacher and she as a teacher of a weekly Bible class at the Industrial School and at the church of Christ clinic on Friday afternoons. She specialized in Bible in David Lipscomb College.

Dreams of great things for the people of Japan come to College.

Dreams of great things for the people of Japan come to this newly chosen missionary and his wife. He says they intend to establish a Bible mission church in Ochitu, near which place their home will be upon reaching Japan. Natives are soon to be ushered into service, and Americans are to be induced to join in the mission work.

Brother and Sister Morehead left Nashville last Friday at 7:45 P.M., on the first lap of their long journey to the Orient. They go, via St. Louis, to Los Angeles, from which place they intend to sail, if God wills, on August 18, for Japan. Brother and Sister John Dow Merritt, Miss Sallie Ellis Hockaday, and Brother George Benson, who are being sent from the church at Morrillton, Ark., to labor as missionaries in China, will go on the same ship as far as Yokohama. Sister Hockaday and Brother Benson are to be married at the home of Sister Hockaday's parents, in Granite, Okla., on July 2, and so will go as husband and wife, to consecrate their lives together to the service of our blessed Lord on foreign fields.

The church at Abilene, Texas, is also sending Brother and Sister George K. Dasha as missionaries to India, and thus eight missionaries from churches of Christ will leave the soil of the United States at the same time to labor in the name of the Lord on foreign shores.

Christianity is essentially evangelical. Christians are missionaries and should go "everywhere preaching the word." Congregations should "sound forth the word of the Lord" in "regions beyond" by sending out evangelists, as these churches have done, or by "sending once and again" to the support of those who go.

We hope that the churches will rally to the support of the loyal and courageous brethren and sisters who are willing to give their lives as a sacrifice for others. Any individual or congregation desiring to assist the Merritts of Bensons in China may communicate with C. C. Merritt, Morrillton, Ark.; the Moreheads, in Japan, Frank Jones, No. 6 Arcade, Nashville, Tenn.; or the Dashas, in India, the church at Abilene, Texas, care of J. H. Mead.

THE PASTOR SYSTEM.

(David Lipscomb, in Gospel Advocate, April 19, 1900.)

The word "pastor" is not used in the New Testament: the word "pastors" is used—the plural. I presume those who object to the term "pastor" could have told that its use and application to one man, and he without the scriptural qualifications for teacher or elder, is the chief ground for opposition to the title. The word "pastors," in the plural, is used but one time in the New Testament. Then it is applied to the spiritually gifted persons who were miraculously endowed to do the work of teaching and feeding the flock until the revelation was completed, and until the churches had time to develop the characters suited for elders or bishops. "The pastor" describes one person as the teacher, or ruler, of the church. Neither "pastor" nor "elder," in the singular, is applied to the teachers and rulers of the flock of God. To substitute one man as the teacher or ruler of the flock is contrary to all the precepts and examples of God in either the Old Testament or New Testament, whether you call him "bishop," "elder," or "pastor." The term "elders," when applied to the rulers of the church, is always plural; and while "pastors" is never applied to the uninspired, the chief objection to it is found in its designating the one-man rule and teaching in the congregation. If "elder" or "bishop" were used to designate but one teacher, it would be objectionable, because such a teacher is not found in the Bible. Then the characteristics well set forth in the article of our brother are wholly ignored in the office of paster, as now used. The characteristics of the elders are those that grow out of age, stability of character, and experience. These qualities condemn a man as unfit for the modern pastorate. A young man, pert, flippant, that can create a sensation and entertain the people, is the model sought after.

The possession of age, experience, and the scriptural qualifications of an elder unfits him for "the pastor." Hence, young men are sought as pastors. If our brother will advocate such an eldership as his definitions describe, and such aged, experienced men were teachers and shepherds of the flock, whose characters are formed, and whose relations to the flock are permanent, and not dependent upon the size of the salary, there would be little objection to the term applied to them, although it is better to distinguished the inspired men as "pastors," the uninspired as "elders" or "overseers," as the Scriptures distinguish

But the true character and qualifications are set forth in the definitions given in the foregoing article and should be observed in the selection, whether they be called "elders" or "pastors." The moneyed relation is an improper one to exist between a church and its teacher. I do not mean the teachers and elders that give their time to the service of the church should not be supported, but an elder whose relations to a church depend entirely upon the salary he receives is not a scriptural elder, pastor, or teacher. He comes under the head of a "hireling," as described by the Master, rather than the shepherd of the sheep. I trust our brother will see his own definitions condemn the pastor, the elder, or any one-man power in the church, and that one without the scriptural qualifications.

Is it wrong to ask denominations—Baptists, etc.—for help to build meetinghouses for the church of Christ?—H. J. GARNER, Trenton, Fla.

I do not think there would be any harm in permitting any one to use his money for a good purpose. Cornelius was blessed in the alms he gave before his baptism into Christ. But, generally speaking, there is a life-and-death struggle between all denominations and the church of Christ; and, such being the case, it is hardly probable that the denominations are going to contribute to build houses for a church that is engaged in the work of tearing denominations down. If they so contributed, it would indicate that the ones to whom they contributed are not drawing the line between Christianity and denominationalism as it should be drawn. But it is certainly commendable for members of denominations to so use their money and shows that they rise above denominationalism.

SERMON OUTLINES

NEW AND ENLARGED EDITION

A Book of Three Hundred New Sermon Outlines

BY A. J. BACHMAN.

Just the book for preachers, elders, deacons, Bibleclass teachers, and others that take public part in church services.

The book has three hundred sermon outlines and a helpful supplement containing funeral texts, marriage ceremonies, forms for church letters, and Hedge's "Rules" for debate.

A good book to use in your Lord's-day services, prayer meetings, and young people's meetings. Let the leader announce the subject, hand slips of paper containing different sections of the outline to the members who are to take part in the next meeting, requesting them to make a talk or read the scriptural references on that section of the outline. Or, let the leader put the outline on the blackboard, omitting the scriptural references, then ask the congregation to supply the correct scriptural references at the next meeting, and give reasons why they selected these references.

THE FAITH THAT SAVES AND CONQUERS. BY S. H. HALL.

In addition to what was said last week about the accomplishment of faith, let us note a few more scriptures that teach its indispensability and the blessings that come to man through faith.

In Acts 15: 0 we learn that the heart is purified by faith; in Acts 10: 43 we learn that, through the name of our Lord, the believer obtains remission of his sins; in Acts 26: 18 we are told that we are sanctified by faith in Christ; in Rom. 5: 1, Paul declares that we are justified by faith; in Rom. 14: 23 he also teaches that whatsoever is not of faith is sin; in 2 Cor. 5: 7, that the right kind of walking is done by faith; in Gal. 2: 20, that we have by faith; and in Heb. 11: 6, that without faith it is not possible to please God.

Now, consider again in connection with the above list of statements our Lord's declaration, "All things are possible to him that believeth," and John's statement that "this is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith." No man can read the eleventh chapter of Hebrews through thoughtfully without being powerfully impressed with the great truth that faith is the thing that enables us to overcome and conquer all the problems and difficulties of life.

But the specific question in which we are now most interested is, "the faith that saves and conquers." The Bible speaks of at least two kinds of faith-viz., the living or perfect faith, and dead or imperfect faith; and that the reader may know of a certainty that I am not guessing when I say this, or even depending on a necessary inference, but the plain-as-day declaration of Jehovah, we will now read together the following from James 2: 14-26: "What doth it profit, my brethren, though a man say he hath faith, and have not works? can faith save him? If a brother or sister be naked, and destitute of daily food, and one of you say unto them, Depart in peace, be ye warmed and filled; notwithstanding ye give them not those things which are needful to the body; what doth it profit? Even so faith, if it hath not works, is dead, being alone. Yea, a man may say, Thou hast faith, and I have works: show me thy faith without thy works, and I will show thee my faith by my works. Thou believest that there is one God; thou doest well! the devils also believe, and tremble. But wilt thou know, O vain man, that faith without works is dead? Was not Abraham our father justified by works, when he had offered Isaac his son upon the altar? Seest thou how faith wrought with his works, and by works was faith made perfect? And the scripture was fulfilled which saith, Abraham believed God, and it was imputed unto him for righteousness: and he was called the Friend of God. Ye see then how that by works a man is justified, and not by faith only. Likewise also was not Rahab the harlot justified by works, when she had received the messengers, and had sent them out another way? For as the body without the spirit is dead, so faith without works is dead also."

That scripture needs no comment. The soul that hungers for the truth can see that there is a living faith and a dead faith. The only question now to settle is, which kind of faith is it that purifies, sanctifies, justifies, gives us the victory over the world, and makes all things possible to us? I think you know without further study, for I hardly believe that a soul that thinks could believe that faith only, or the dead faith, can purify, sanctify, save, and conquer.

But it would not be amiss just here to give an example of each kind of faith that James speaks of—viz., the living and the dead.

Turning to John 12: 42, 43, we have an example of dead faith, or faith only. "Nevertheless among the chief rulers also many believed on him; but because of the Pharisees they did not confess him, lest they should be put out of the synagogue: for they loved the praise of men more than the praise of God." Do you think these chief rulers were purified, sanctified, and saved? No sane man can so believe.

Now let us look at an example of the living or obedient faith, found in Acts 6: 7: "And the word of God increased; and the number of disciples multiplied in Jerusalem greatly; and a great company of the priests were obedient to the faith." It is "the obedience of faith" that makes disciples; "faith only" has never yet made one disciple. A disciple means "a learner or a follower of Christ." He condemns, in the strongest words, the idea of merely believing and not doing what he says. "Why call ye me, Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say?" (Luke 6: 46.)

And behold the beautiful harmony between all that has been said and the following statements: "Ye have obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine which was delivered you. Being then made free from sin, ye became the servants of righteousness." (Rom. 6: 17, 18.) "Seeing ye have purified your souls in obeying the truth through the Spirit unto unfeigned loved of the brethren, see that ye love one another with a pure heart fervently: being born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God, which liveth and abideth forever." (1 Pet. 1: 22, 23.)

It is enough to close this study by reference to the fact that the apostles were commissioned to preach "the obedience of faith" among the nations as the faith that saves and sanctifies. "By whom we have received grace and apostleship, for obedience to the faith among all nations." (Rom. 1: 5.) And Paul closes the Roman letter by declaring that the gospel is "made known to all nations for the obedience of faith." (See Rom. 16: 26.)

GIVE THAT PREACHER PRESTIGE.

BY PRICE BILLINGSLEY.

In a recent issue of a religious paper appears an article from a preacher who wrote to commend (as was proper) the efforts made by our Austin brethren to safeguard our young folks in college. But quite incidentally—or was it?—this preacher gave the names of three big institutions which he himself had attended, and he cited the prestige they give. Clearly, prestige was in his heart as a good thing to be sought.

Now, I am perfectly willing for a gospel preacher to have prestige, provided he knows always what to do with it; but it is a good deal like blue blood which some I meet talk so much about and profess to have. I am sorry to be ordinary, made from the same dirt of the everyday humans about me. I am glad when a fellow owns royal blood; but it does provoke my scorn to see some make an ado over and boast to have it who are as scrub stock and can be picked up on any range. They aristocrats? Pooh! Only poor pretenders. And I have noticed that the best-educated and bluest-blooded are the last ones on earth to mention or parade the fact to gain public esteem. Mark it.

Once a sister, a would-be aristocrat, told me she would like to meet with the little band I preached for, only her social standing would not admit of it. I assured her I understood, for the less fame one has, the more sensitive he is about it, and advised that she guard that precious standing lest she lose it. Brethren, a little learning is dangerous; it can go to the head; though if a fellow can go far enough, he will sober up again. One has to learn a lot before he finds out that at best he is only a fool. It is a matter of great regret that some never learn this much. A sister doubtfully asked Brother Tant if he were educated. He said: "No, and I don't know any one that is."

Once I heard one of our alleged "educated preachers"

bemoan the lack of college-bred preachers. "In no time now," he said, "a fellow will have to be a college man or miss being called to the worth-while churches." how some call attention to themselves by a sort of disparagement. He said that he himself was educated really, though inadvertently-or was it?-he at once told the names of the great colleges where he'd got degrees. I walked away from church sad over the thinly veiled attempt of the preacher to blow himself. Presently I jerked out my watch and told how much I paid for it and all its reputed values and wonders. Then I said it was not much of a watch at that, and so dropped it back in my pocket. For a moment my companion looked his mystificacation, but he soon caught on and cried out: "Sure, that's just the way that assinine preacher acted, bragging on himself."

Brother Wallace says if a fellow can get degrees and then put 'em away and forget all about it, he may make it all right. The trouble is, he may not be able to forget; they are in his system so, specially if he be a preacher and does not hate himself, anyway. He's likely to get to thinking about prestige and other such things which the world loves, and directly or indirectly begin throwing bouquets at himself. Well, I'm sorry. But if prestige is on his mind and nothing else will do, I say give it to him. Perhaps the sooner he's blown up and explodes, the better it will be for the church of the living God and that blood-bought way which must forever protest the wisdom and ways of men.

BIBLE AND NEW TESTAMENT FUND.

BY S. F. MORROW.

After an experience of thirty-five years in giving to boys and girls New Testaments, teaching them a proper division of the word, from the results I have seen by their studying the word, I am forced to conclude that this is one of the best ways, if not the best way, to extend the kingdom of our Lord and Master. To enlarge this work, we are asking every one who has a willing heart to join us in this great work. Undenominational, whosoever will may participate in this great and glorious work. We want every congregation of worshipers, regardless of color or name, to keep a stock of plain Bibles and Testaments at their place of worship for distribution, and to see that every poor widow and orphan child has a Bible or Testament, All books are to be furnished at cost.

I have made arrangements with the New York Bible Society to furnish these books. This society gives away millions of Bibles yearly, mostly to foreigners. This society was established in 1809 and incorporated in the year 1866. It exists for the sole purpose of distributing the Bible in sixty-six languages, free to those who cannot pay, and to others at cost or less. The society is maintained by church collections, donations, legacies, and annuity bonds. My object is to start a Bible and New Testament fund, that every boy and girl and every one who is unfortunate may have a Bible or Testament. The Gospel Advocate Company, of Nashville, Tenn., gladly contributes its service to receive all Bibles and Testaments and reship, charging only drayage and wrapping expenses. When a church or any one wants one hundred or more, they should be shipped direct from the factory. It appears to me this is the proper way to handle most of the books and money. I will furnish any information as to ordering.

All the purpose we have in this is to get all to read for themselves. It is sad to see how careless parents are along these lines. I have found homes in Davidson County Bibleless, and counties in Tennessee where not a Bible is kept for sale. No wonder our young people are going to destruction, and we parents certainly will be held responsible. If not, why not?

We have decided to start to raise a fund for this work of fifty thousand dollars, payable as it suits the donors. All who want a part in this work are requested to write to the Gospel Advocate Company, Nashville, Tenn. This company is to handle all money or checks that comes to Nashville. Their books will be audited yearly. They will not handle the funds on any other basis. The Lord willing, we want to make our first order in July, 1925. Let all remember that this is a free work. If any one can suggest a better plan, let us have it.

We feel certain that Tennessee will want or needs two or three thousand dollars' worth of these books yearly; the great State of Texas will want the same or more, we hope; and we also hope that every other State in America will use many books. May the Lord help us to awake to our duty and save America with his Words, the only hope we have.

To raise this fund, Mrs. Morrow and I will give ten thousand dollars—one thousand dollars annually. If the brethren and congregations want to have a part in this work, let us hear from you. If any town in any State wants five hundred dollars' worth of Bibles per year, or any other amount, we will add you to our list. If you prefer, we will put you in touch with the Bible Society, and you can do your own ordering and pay your own money. This is the most economical plan. Jesus said: "Lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through nor steal."

THE CHINA MISSION.

BY R. S. KING.

Our readers have already been informed about the new China mission. The church at Morrillton, Ark., is taking the responsibility of this work, but are not able to take it all upon themselves, as they are now giving seventy-five dollars per month to foreign missions, besides doing work at home. A few churches have been given opportunity to help in this great work in becoming regular monthly contributors, and you can have fellowship with them, if you so desire. The time is short to raise the two thousand dollars necessary for their passage, hence this appeal to the brotherhood. Reservations have been secured for their passage on the Steamer Siberia, leaving dock on August 18, and this money must be in hand before that date. The brethren are asking the willing-hearted to give a certain Lord's-day's contribution, and they have appointed the third Lord's day in July for this purpose.

If you are not interested in missions, perhaps it is because you have put nothing into missions. You cannot get interest from the bank unless you have something there. Why not commence now and put some of your dollars to work for the Lord, also work and pray for missions? The Lord is not willing that any should perish, and he has left it to us to see that all people hear the gospel. Shall we fail him now, or will we do our share?

Send your offerings to C. C. Merritt, treasurer, Morrillton, Ark.

- H. J. Garner, Trenton, Fla.: "The Union church of Christ is asking for help, through the Gospel Advocate, to build a house of worship. We have been meeting in the schoolhouse for about two years. We have almost half enough to build. If any one can help, send to H. J. Garner, Trenton, Fla. The Lord will bless a cheerful giver."

John W. Fry: "The work of caring for orphan and dependent children is admitted by all to be a good work, and the way to increase the good is for more to take part. It is to be hoped that all interested will make liberal contributions to the Tennessee Orphan Home on the first Sunday in July; and if not at that time, then on the following Sunday or any other day most convenient to those who want to take part."

Thomas J. Wagner, Rockwood, Tenn., June 22: "As direct results of our meeting, in which Charles Holder, of Bridgeport, Ala., very ably assisted us by doing the preaching, there were two baptisms, and three came from the 'digressives.' Two others from the 'digressives' just before the meeting. We are slowly, but surely, growing. I preached in the afternoon yesterday at a mission point where Brother Turner and I will go on the second Lord's day in July to begin a protracted meeting under a brush arbor. Long live the Gospel Advocate! It is doing great things."

- R. E. L. Taylor, Decherd, Tenn., June 27: "I closed a good meeting at Greenville, S. C., with thirty-nine additions—thirty-five baptized and the others confessing their wrongs. Among those baptized were ten Baptists, including a Baptist preacher and his wife, and three Methodists. We closed at the water Thursday night, at which time ten were baptized. G. F. Gibbs has done and is doing a good work at Greenville. He did the baptizing, which helped me out much. The time has come when Brother Gibbs needs some one to help him in this work, that the gospel may be preached in other parts of this city. Will some young man go to his assistance and help him in this great work?"
- J. G. Allen, Nashville, Tenn., June 29: "I began an eight-days' meeting in Franklin, Ky., June 21, that I enjoyed very much. The brethren have a new house on the corner of Washington and College Streets, one block north of the Square. W. M. Rutherford, E. M. Tarpley, A. H. Sweat, and Tom Angel are the leaders, and they have the assistance of a splendid band of men and women in the work. It was their wish that I devote my time to Christian duties, which I gladly did. It is indeed a pleasure te labor with brethren that are free from hurtful hobbies that are sapping the life out of so many congregations over the land. I left them feeling that the church of Christ on College Street in Franklin is in good hands and that a bright future awaits them. Preaching brethren need have no fear but what they will be well cared for if they should be invited there, becsuse those brethren know that preachers have financial obligations as well as others. One young lady was baptized during the meeting. Correspondents will please address me in care of the Gospel Advocate."

Morgan H. Carter is in a meeting with the Twentieth Avenue and Avenue K church of Christ, Galveston, Texas.

- E. G. Creacy, Indianapolis, Ind., June 24: "The meeting with the East Side Church continues with unabated interest. Eleven additions to date. Basket dinner on Sunday."
- W. R. Samuels, Friar Point, Miss., June 22: "W. E. Morgan and Jack Meyer closed out a two-weeks' meeting at Clarksdale, and we were successful in finding a few loyal members scattered in and around Clarksdale; hence, we are meeting on the first day of the week in the courthouse."
- J. H. Hines, Milton, Fla., June 24: "I am here in a mission meeting, preaching day and night in the Masonic Temple. There are a few members of the one body here, but they are not doing anything for the Lord. It is my desire to establish a church after the New Testament order. My next meeting will be at Coopertown, Tenn."

On page 631 will be found an offer, by S. F. Morrow, of Nashville, Tenn., to start a Bible and New Testament fund. Distributing Bibles and Testaments is a great and grand work. The Gospel Advocate is glad to assist Brother Morrow in any way possible. Address all communications to the Gospel Advocate Company, 110 Seventh Avenue, North, Nashville, Tenn.

- A. B. Lipscomb preached to two large audiences at Charlotte Avenue, this city, Sunday. The morning services were of special importance, being the first in the history of the church with the title clear to the new meeting-house. The treasurer, Jesse Cullom, announced that the church debt had been paid in full, and he held up before the congregation the canceled mortgage.
- J. H. Childress, Nocona, Texas, June 24: "J. Early Arceneaux closed a protracted meeting at this place last night. As a result of our effort, three were added to the one body by baptism; one returned, confessing his sins; and one lady placed her membership with the local congregation. The song service was unusually good. R. M. Morgan, of Floydada, Texas, was the leader."
- S. H. Biggerstaff, Mocksville, N. C., June 27: "I am conducting a meeting at Jericho, five miles west of this place. The interest by the world is about as good as could be expected, but the interest by the church is somewhat below par at present. If we can only get the members of the church to stop devoting their time to lodges and things of that kind and consecrate their efforts more in the vineyard of the Lord, we shall have a very successful meeting."
- Mrs. W. J. Hogan, Speigner, Alai, June 18: "Our meeting closed on Friday night, June 12, with a crowded house and interest at its best. D. E. Mason did the preaching. Seven were added—four from the Baptists and three from the world. We feel very much encouraged over the results and ask the prayers of the brotherhood for us in our efforts. We are still being persecuted in many ways, but we know that 'all things work together for good to them that love the Lord.'"
- S. E. Templeton, Spearman, Texas, June 20: "On last Sunday night G. C. Brewer closed a very fine meeting in Amarillo with the Tenth Street church of Christ. There were thirteen baptisms, six restorations, six additions by relation, and three from the 'Christian Church,' making twenty-eight accessions in all. Last Wednesday night I began a meeting at this place, to continue through Sunday night, June 28. This is a mission point, with but few scattered disciples of Christ."
- L. S. White, Wichita Falls, Texas, June 25: "We have recently had a fine meeting at this place, conducted by home forces. The meeting continued over three Lord's days. The audiences were large and much good was done. There were twenty additions, some of these from the denominations. The work is doing well in Wichita Falls. Since I came here last October there have been one hundred and thirty-four additions. I am now conducting a meeting in a schoolhouse out in the country. Interest fine."

From the Kerrville (Texas) Mountain Sun, June 18: "The Christian revival meeting, conducted by Evangelist H. F. Oliver, of Austin, at the Union churchyard, will be continued over next Sunday night. The meeting so far has been a success. There were five converts baptized last Sunday. A congregation of forty members with elders and deacons has been set in order. The members of this newly organized church of Christ will use the Union church house as a place of worship until they can construct a building of their own, which they are now planning to do."

- John W. Hedge, Kosse, Texas, June 23: "Record attendance in the mission meeting at Bearden, Ark., May 22 to June 5. I am to return to reap the harvest next fall. Homer Ferguson, of Kingsville, Texas, led the singing and I did the preaching in a fourteen-days' meeting at McGehee, Ark., June 5-19. Four confessed Christ."
- J. C. Mosley, Moore, S. C., June 25: "We were locked out of the schoolhouse last Lord's day, but we have another place to meet we like much better. We have a church house at Moore, but not at Stone Station. We have been giving away copies of the Gospel Advocate; other papers, letters, tracts, books, etc., till we have the adversary getting busy to do something, which is good encouragement."

Leslie G. Thomas, Indian Mound, Tenn., June 22: "Our meeting continues. Hundreds are hearing the gospel. Last night every available seat was occupied, extra seats were provided, and the platform was completely surrounded, and that almost entirely by grown people. Scores were unable to get into the building. The brethren here have a new house, and they are encouraged. In the afternoon I preached at Legate, a few miles from here."

Thomas E. Milholland, Bartlett, Texas, June 16: "Just why a man as poor as I have been, who was bereft of a father early in life, being left with an invalid mother and two brothers, going to school at night trying to get an education, almost without clothes (even wore trousers I made of a sugar sack)—how such a man has been so wonderfully blessed is all unexplainable to me. Now I have calls from eight different places to locate with them. Calls for more July and August work than time on the calendar. Brethren, God can save folks when it frosts, even in a freeze. Call some cooler dates."

Bynum Black, McAlester, Okla., June 23: "I am holding a mission meeting this week at Crossroads, halfway between Stigler and Kanima, Okla. The brethren at both towns are attending and coöperating in the good work. It is a Baptist community. There are many nice people here. Two or three Baptist preachers are attending. We are having large crowds each night. Farmers are very busy, but still they find time to hear the great messages of salvation. I go next, if the Lord wills, to Okmulgee, Okla., and preach over the fourth Lord's day. From Okmulgee I go to Myrtle Springs, Texas, for a meeting, July 4-12."

- A. D. Barber, Surgoinsville, Tenn., June 24: "I inclose check for renewal for another year, as I cannot do without the Gospel Advocate in this part of Tennessee, where there is so much denominational teaching and no Bible teaching. I would be glad if you could send a good gospel preacher to this (Hawkins) county, as there is a great work to be done here. This part of Tennessee is a great mission field. Some of the preachers are announcing that they are evolutionists, and to prove it they say the Bible does not mean what it says in many places. So I think that this is a great mission field for some one." We suggest that some of our preaching brethren kindly write to Brother Barber.
- H. D. Jeffcoat, Ackerman, Miss., Route 4, June 23: "I was with the church at Old Union on the fifth Lord's day in May. We have turned Mr. R. L. Jackson (the Adventist that has been wanting a debate) over to I. B. Bradley; so we are looking for a real lively time some time this fall. On Monday I ran down to Berclair and baptized two fine young persons. They had been attending the worship kept up in the home of Will Jeffcoat, near there, and wanted to obey the Lord. Be faithful, brethren; God gives the increase. The work is great in Mississippi, and Mississippi is one of the greatest States in the South. Three were baptized at Sebastopol. Large crowds are attending the Hale and Vaughn meeting at Sturgis. I am to begin at Tilden, July 11."
- E. Gasten Collins, Meaford, Ontario, Canada, June 23: "We closed a good meeting last Sunday night, of eight days' duration, at Griersville, five miles south of Meaford. The brethren thought the attendance for Griersville was good. The last day we had two good audiences. One splendid young man was baptized. The brethren decided to begin the Bible classes before the worship. We shall hold another meeting there, probably this fall. I shall preach here next Sunday, also on July 5, at which time we will begin a short meeting. George Klingman, of Toronto, will come on July 6 and preach daily at night for us. Brother Klingman is soon to leave Canada, which we regret. We are enjoying our work here. The church was already doing good work. I hope to help them and not hinder them, as one Texas preacher said."

Conducted for a half century by D. Lipscomb, E. G. Sewell, F. D. Srygley, and J. C. McQuiddy.

EDITORIAL

"CHRISTIAN GIVING." No. 1.

BY E. A. ELAM.

A request has been made for an article or two on "Christian giving."

Everything called "Christian" is not Christian.

All giving is not "Christian giving."

Doing "righteousness before men, to be seen of them," is not Christian. Doing alms with a blast of trumpets and in synagogues to receive glory of men (Matt. 6: 12) is not "Christian giving." Giving all one's goods to feed the poor without love is nothing. (1 Cor. 13: 1-7.) All this is seeking the praise and glory of men. All who give from such motives, even if they give all their goods to feed the poor, receive no reward from God. They receive the reward which they seek-namely, the glory of men. This is all they will receive. To think they will receive a reward from God is to be deceived; or to give from such motives, hoping to deceive others, is to play the hypocrite.

In modesty, humility, and without show, real Christians shun all kinds of display of charity and benevolence; they do not let the left hand know what the right hand does: their alms are done in secret. So it is with them in praying, fasting, and all righteousness. They pray in secret, they fast in secret, and they do no righteousness in order to be seen of men.

Christian giving is -uch giving only as Christ teachesgiving which springs only from the motives and is done for the purposes which he teaches. That which he teaches -motive, purpose, and spirit-is found only in the New Testament. Whatever is done in the way of giving, or whatever else is done, "in word or in deed," must be done in the name of Christ-that is, by his direction, to his honor and glory, and through love for him. (Col.

Prompted by the only true motive, led by the only true purpose, and filled only with the spirit of Christ, there are two main things to be accomplished by givingnamely, helping in all the ways specified in the New Testament the various poor in many different circumstances of life, and extending the kingdom of God by supporting "those who labor in the word and in teaching" and in making all necessary arrangements for teaching the truth and worshiping God.

According to Christ's declaration, the poor-widows and orphans, the aged and infirm, and other variously afflicted ones-will always be here, and whensoever the people of God are willing to do so, they can do them good; and when they become unwilling and fail to do so, they cut themselves off from the blessing of eternal life.

"The church of the living God"-God's children on earth, the disciples of Christ, Christians—is "the pillar and ground of the truth." (1 Tim. 3: 15.) This means, of course, that the church is not only the financial support of the truth, but, including this, is such in all Christian living. Without living the Christian life every day, giving money is either self-deception or mere pretense. To think that by liberal giving, without being strictly honest and every way upright, without a pure heart and clean hands, without righteousness and godliness, one is acceptable to God, is to think God can be bribed with money. God himself pronounces a curse upon any one who accepts a bribe, and cannot himself be bribed. One cannot obtain money by any sort of deception, fraud, dishonesty, unfair means, or any shady transaction, and hope to be saved by giving liberally of such unrighteous gains to any worthy cause whatever. The only way to salvation is to repent, give back that which has been got in dishonest ways, and obey God in all things from the heart.

With the land filled with the distress of widows and orphans, the wants of the aged and infirm, and the call of other poor and afflicted ones, and with the Macedonian cry coming from almost every quarter of our homeland and from foreign fields and islands of the seas, all should study earnestly and heed abundantly Christ's teaching on the subject of giving.

Since one robs God by withholding that portion of one's earnings and prosperity which is due the poor and the cause of Christ otherwise, all should be afraid not to give regularly and freely as Christ teaches.

It is as necessary to give—to give time, money, and other means, and to give with the motive, for the purpose, and in the spirit which Christ teaches—as it is to do the will of God in all other ways. Every one who knows anything at all of the teaching of Christ knows that to hear all he says on the subject of giving and to do it not is to build on the sand and to have no promise of entrance into the kingdom of heaven.

All depends, then, upon being willing to hear and to do the teaching of Christ. Every one who purposes in his soul and wills strongly to do the will of God-not the teaching and theories of men—has the assurance of Christ of being able to learn what that will is. (John 7: 16, 17.) All, then, who will to know in what motive and spirit to give, for what purpose to give, when to give, how much to give, to whom and to what to give, and through what institution to give, can learn from the teaching of Christ.

Christ teaches:

That each one should give according to the prosperity of the Lord. According to this, each one should give as each one in self-examination should eat the Lord's Supper, pray, and do everything else God has commanded.

That the gift is acceptable "according as a man hath, not according as he hath not." The poor widow who cast into the treasury her two mites cast in more in her want than all others.

That there must be a willingness and readiness to give, "for God loveth a cheerful giver."

That giving must not be a matter of extortion or must not be done grudgingly, as one cannot be driven into doing anything God commands.

That giving to the poor—feeding the hungry, clothing the naked, relieving the distressed, visiting the fatherless and widows in their affliction, entertaining strangers, going unto those in prison for righteousness' sake, etc.—is doing the same unto Him.

That to refuse to do this is to refuse to feed, clothe, visit in prison, and entertain Him; hence, a failure to enter heaven.

That all should give so regularly and liberally as to be "rich toward God."

That the rich should not "be high-minded, nor have their hope set on the uncertainty of riches, but on God, who giveth us richly all things to enjoy; that they [should] do good, that they [should] be rich in good works, that they [should] be ready to distribute [what they have in order to help others], willing to communicate [to the necessities of the saints]; laying up for themselves a good foundation against the time to come, that they may lay hold on the life which is life indeed." (1 Tim. 6: 17-19.)

That as Christians have opportunity they should "work that which is good toward all men, and especially toward them that are of the household of the faith." This with other obedience to God is sowing unto the spirit, and the fruit is eternal life. (Gal. 6: 6-10.)

That Christians must give, not of their superfluity that only which they "can spare" with no inconvenience to themselves, but in self-denial that which costs them something. David spurned the idea of making an offering to the Lord of that which cost him nothing.

That Christians, according to physical and mental ability, should follow some honest occupation in order, while supplying their own necessary wants (Tit. 3: 8, 14—margin), making themselves useful, and walking "becomingly toward them that are without" (1 Thess. 4: 10-12), to make something to help the weak and to give to the needy (Acts 20: 35; Eph. 4: 28—study these passages).

That "it is more blessed to give than to receive."

These passages with others, which all should study, set forth the teaching of Christ on the subject of giving.

The greatest example of giving is Christ himself. He gave up his equality with God, his home in heaven and his associations there, for the poverty of earth, and his life on the cross in order to save us.

This, too, is the greatest incentive to giving which God in his wisdom and grace can place before us. "For ye know the grace of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, that, though he was rich, yet for your sakes he became poor, that ye through his poverty might become rich."

While I have written this, I realize that I have not written anything which almost all church members do not already know. I would that I knew some way to stir up all to do that which they admit Christ teaches. But all who will not hear Christ in these scriptures would not hear though one rise from the dead.

AN ILLUMINATING PROFESSOR.

BY F. W. SMITH.

In an effort to disprove the alleged statement of Mr. Bryan that "American colleges and universities are 'Godless,'" Dr. Charles A. L. Reed, professor emeritus of the University of Cincinnati, delivered himself on "The Idealism of Modern College and University Life," in part, as follows:

This formal religion—the only kind of religion that Mr. Bryan seems able to comprehend, and he does not seem to comprehend that when it occurs in colleges and universities—does not seem to indicate the godlessness that Mr. Bryan talks about. It is, however, but one and a minor phase of religious expression in those institutions. The more profound and significant expression of religion in the faculties and student bodies of the land is found in a wholesome abandon to the spirit of truth, worshiped in lecture halls and laboratories; to the spirit of reason, worshiped in all interchange of intelligence; to the spirit of law—inherent, natural law—worshiped in the study of all phenomena; to the spirit of love, worshiped in all human centact and in the promotion of fellowship, welfare, and happiness; and, finally, to the spirit of aspiration, worshiped in the cultivation of all exalted human ideals. Of these "spirits" is compounded the "spirituality," the idealism of the colleges and universities of to-day; out of these elements—truth, reason, law, love, aspiration, all of them all-pervading, unified, and imminent—is evolved the newer and more glorious conception of God, a spirituality and a God to which it would seem Mr. Bryan is a stranger. If Mr. Bryan doubts the existence of such a God, he is an agnostic; if he denies such an existence, he is an atheist; if he does either, within the meaning here given to the words, he is intellectually dishonest. In view of these and other facts which I shall present, I here and now denounce Mr. Bryan's declaration that the colleges and universities of America are "godless" as gratuitous, interested, false, and libelous.

Professor Reed, in taking the witness stand against Mr. Bryan's charge regarding the colleges and universities, has proven to be a most valuable witness on the side of Mr. Bryan—an unwilling witness, to be sure, but nevertheless a strong witness in favor of Mr. Bryan's contention.

Mr. Bryan's charge of "Godlessness" against such institutions was not intended to convey the idea that the colleges and universities do not inculcate the worship of some kind of a "god," but that it is not the God of the Bible; hence, are "Godless," but not "godless"—that is, they do not worship the true God.

The Professor's dissertation against Mr. Bryan abundantly sustains the latter's charges. As proof of this, note the compounded "idealism" issuing from the religious laboratories of these institutions as set forth by the Professor: "The more profound and significant expression of religion in the faculties and student bodies of the land is found in a wholesome abandon to the spirit of truth, worshiped in lecture halls and laboratories." There you have it—an "abandon to the spirit of truth!" May we not ask, the spirit of what truth? Does the Professor mean the "truth" revealed in the Bible, the word of God? Not at all. He means the lectures on so-called "scientific research," which are made to contradict the statements of the Bible, and the supposed discoveries in the laboratories that are also made to run counter to biblical history.

But we are treated to more of the ingredients of which this "profound and significant expression of religion" is compounded. Listen: "To the spirit of reason, worshiped in all interchange of intelligence." Exactly so, and thus the "faculties and student bodies of the land" have deified their own reason, making a "god" after their own liking, and rejecting everything in the Bible that does not harmonize with this deified reason.

But again: "To the spirit of law—inherent, natural law—worshiped in the study of all phenomena." Thus the Professor, with the "faculties and student bodies of the land," is bowing down to nature as their "god," but to only so much of it as is approved by the spirit of human reason. With all such worshipers, whatever is discovered in natural phenomena that does not harmonize with their deified reason is rejected on the same ground that they reject the Bible.

More ingredients: "To the spirit of love, worshiped in all human contact and in the promotion of fellowship, welfare, and happiness; and finally, to the spirit of aspiration, worshiped in the cultivation of exalted human ideals." Precisely so. This is exactly what Mr. Bryan has charged—viz.: that, instead of worshiping the God of both nature and the Bible, the "faculties and student bodies of the land," with this professor "emeritus" thrown in for good measure, have created a god of "exalted human ideals," and are bowing down to this god.

This compounded and manufactured "god" receives the finishing touches after this fashion: "Of these 'spirits' is compounded the 'spirituality,' the idealism of the colleges and universities of to-day; out of these elements—truth, reason, law, love, aspiration, all of them all-pervadving, unified, and imminent—is evolved the newer and more glorious conception of God."

Twelfth Avenue Sunday school, church

Now, is not this refreshingly illuminating? Has not this professor "emeritus" shed a volume of light on "the more profound and significant expression of religion in the faculties and student bodies of the land?" What a "newer and more glorious conception of God" has the Professor, with his compounded religion, brought to the world!

But, unfortunately for this "religion" and this "god" the Professor has evolved from the laboratory of human reason, they have not a single ingredient taken from the Bible. The sense in which he uses the terms "truth, love, law, fellowship, and reason," is the width of the heavens from their Bible meanings. God attaches no such meaning to these terms as the Professor seeks to convey. Hence, his "newer and more glorious conception of God" is no conception at all of the God of the Bible, but is a vague, unintelligible, and confused setting forth of the "god" of his own creation.

Any man that would appear before the officials of the office where patents are granted with a machine, who could not explain more clearly his invention than the Professor has explained to us his "newer and more glorious conception of God," would hardly get a patent on his machine. I feel sure the rank and file of the religious world will refuse to grant the Professor a patent on his religion and his god.

Of these new discoveries, he says it is "a spirituality and a God to which it would seem Mr. Bryan is a stranger." For once the Professor correctly represents Mr. Bryan, with the exception of the capital "G" with which he writes his "god." I am sure that in so far as any faith in or fellowship with the god and religion of Professor Reed is concerned, Mr. Bryan is a total stranger to both.

It is entirely useless for Professor Reed to be issuing challenges to Mr. Bryan to prove that the colleges and universities are "godless," for the Professor himself has fully demonstrated the correctness of Mr. Bryan's charge. Why should a man whose own testimony abundantly convicts him of a specific charge demand of others to prove what he has already admitted?

Of course Professor Reed will not see what is here said, and perhaps few, if any, of the "faculties and student bodies," but it may cause some Christian parents to be more cautious as to where they send their children to be educated.

WORD FROM WASHINGTON. .

BY T. B. LARIMORE.

Last week—June 15 to June 20—was graduation week in many Washington schools, as well as many schools elsewhere. Mrs. Larimore and I had the pleasure of attending the commencement exercises of the Eastern High School, one of Washington's three public schools for advanced pupils, and seeing seventy-five girls and fifty boys receive diplomas. The exercises were interesting, especially to those who are or have been teachers. I was especially impressed by the fact that the fairer and gentler sex was very decidedly in the lead in many respects. Even the school band, which interspersed sweet music with the other good things on the program, was led (and well led) by a woman. A woman was selected to be the presiding officer of the occasion; but, owing to her absence, a mere man had that part in the exercises. The Hon. Mabel Walker Willebrandt, Assistant Attorney-General of the United States, delivered the address to the graduating class-a most instructive, inspiring address. Certain honors were awarded to some members of the class, a mere man making the award, and some of those honors went to boys, I am glad to say, but the impressive valedictory address was delivered by a young woman. The invocation fell to a man, it is true; but the ushers were pretty girls, all of them. The women certainly had the lead that evening, but this may have been due in part to the fact that the girls in the class outnumbered the

The same evening there was a spelling bee in Washington; and if we had not been especially interested in a certain young friend, Miss Katherine Gibson, who received a diploma and a medal at Eastern High School that evening, we might have attended the spelling bee. Mrs. Larimore and I, both teachers of a former day, are deeply interested in spelling, spelling books, spelling bees, and spelling boys and girls, as we deplore the latter-day decline in the art of orthography, which proves we are not up to date.

I have never seen a better spelling book than Webster's Elementary Speller, which we used to call the "Blueback Speller," the book that millions of children studied in years gone by. Many and various spellers have been compiled and published in later years, and the old "blueback" speller has been supplanted in most schools of the land; but none of its successors has equaled it in some respects, I think. It furnished to those who industriously spelled through it, "on the book" first and then "by heart;" as millions did, an important drill in enunciation, articulation, and pronunciation; and the results of that drill were not only good spellers, as a rule, but better, far better, readers than we have now, as a rule. The English language is so beautiful and expressive that it is positively painful to hear its musical syllables mumbled and jumbled and mouthed into a poor semblance of words by a reader who has never had proper drill in articulaof the book, and I have now two copies of it in my desk, and study them occasionally with both pleasure and profit. The old "blueback," like any other old friend, is always welcome and gladly welcomed by me.

Entertaining these views about the importance of spelling and the existing need of more attention to this much-neglected art, I was glad to note that the Louisville Courier-Journal and some other newspapers recently offered prizes to the best four spellers in the various schools of various States, the winners to be selected by means of spelling bees in the schools. More than two million children took part in those contests; and, finally, by a system of "the survival of the fittest," these contestants were reduced to nine, and these nine came to Washington to stand the final test in a spelling bee, which was held in the auditorium of the National Museum here. Six girls and three boys composed the winning nine who were the champion spellers of their respective States and had come to Washington to battle for the prizes.

The spelling bee lasted two hours-from eight o'clock till ten o'clock. The college professor who "gave out" the words began very considerately with moderately easy words, and at the end of the first thirty minutes all the contestants were still on the platform. As the "bee" progressed, however, the words became increasingly difficult, and one by one the spellers dropped out. "Skittish" was the first word missed, and one girl was thereby eliminated; then "comos," proved to be the undoing of another girl; "propeller" sent a boy from the platform; and a few minutes later the most tragic moment of the bee came when little ten-year-old Patrick Kelly "fell down." Patrick is an inmate of an orphan asylum in New Haven, Conn., and was a favorite with the crowd assembled to witness the battle of the spellers. "Blackguard" tripped him, he spelling it as pronounced, "blaggard." Then "statistician" caused the elimination of one of the girls, and "valuing" was the undoing of the next girl. "Moribund" tripped one of the two girls remaining, which left a girl and a boy on the platform-Edna Stover, of Trenton, N. J., and Frank Neuhauser, of Louisville, Ky. The pronouncer "gave out" "gladiolus," defining it as "the name of a flower," placing the accent on the second syllable, "di," as the latest dictionaries give that prorunciation the preference. Edna spelled it with a "y," evidently puzzled by the word, not recognizing it as a familiar friend; and Frank Neuhauser's turn and his triumph as the winner of the national spelling contest came when he spelled the word correctly. Edna broke into tears as she left the plaform-not because she was a bad loser, her mother explained, but because the strain had been too much for her nerves. Frank received a gold medal and $500 in gold; Edna received $250; the winner of the third prize, Helen Fischer, of Akron, Ohio, $100; and the fourth prize winner, Mary Daniel, of Hartford, Conn., $100. The other five had, of course, as consolation and compensation, the trip to Washington, and that was well worth working for. I sympathized with all the losers, and would have been glad for them all to have received first honors, had that been possible; but, having witnessed a series of exercises in which the girls had such a decided advantage—an almost alarming advantage—I must confess I was not sorry that a boy was the victor in the national spelling bee, being considerably interested in the reputation of my own sex.

I hope this spelling bee and the prospect of similar spelling contests that will almost certainly be held in the near future will revive interest in that important subject, and that thus the art of spelling in our schools may show marked improvement.

The father of the eleven-year-old lad who won first honor in the national spelling contest—himself a laborer in a sawmill—said the five hundred dollars would be applied to paying his son's way through college, and I hope the winning of the prize may prove a great blessing to the boy. Though naturally elated over his victory, I am sure he sympathized with his companions who lost the battle, though he may not have exhibited his sympathy as did the little brown-eyed girl in Whittier's poem, "In School Days," one of the few poems I have occasionally quoted in preaching, and which I quote here:

Still sits the schoolhouse by the road,
A ragged beggar, sunning.
Around it still the sumacs grow,
And blackberry vines are running.

Within the master's desk is seen, Deep-scarred by raps official; The warping floor, the battered seats, The jack knife's crude initial.

The charcoal frescoes on the walls,
The door's worn sill betraying
The feet that, creeping slow to school,
Went storming out to playing.

Long years ago a winter's sun Shone over it at setting, Lit up its western windowpanes, Its low eave's icy fretting.

It touched the tangled golden curls
And brown eyes, full of grieving,
Of one who still her footsteps stayed,
Though all the school was leaving.

For near her stood the little boy
Her childish fancy singled,
His cap pulled low upon a face
Where pride and shame were mingled.

Pushing with restless feet the snow To right and left, he lingered, As restlessly her tiny hands The blue-checked apron fingered. He saw her lift her eyes, he felt Her soft hand's light caressing, He heard the quiver of her voice, As if a fault confessing.

"I'm sorry that I spelled the word—
I hate to go above you,
Because"—the brown eyes lower fell—
"Because—because—I love you."

Still memory to a gray-haired man That sweet child-face is showing. Dear girl, the grasses on her grave Have forty years been growing.

He lives to learn, in life's hard school, How few who go above him Lament their triumph and his loss Because, like her, they love him.

DID THE APOSTOLIC REVIEW ALSO FORGET ONE?

BY F. B. SRYGLEY.

In a recent issue of the Apostolic Review I find the following quotation from the Gospel Advocate with the added comment in parenthesis:

FORGOT ONE?

But where God has not specified the means and methods of doing things he has commanded to be done, it is sin to attempt to fasten upon the church one certain way. God has commanded the church—all who are scripturally prepared to do so—to teach the Bible to others; but he has specified no one particular method of teaching. Any method of teaching, then, can be used. Some good people use tracts as a method of teaching; some write books of sermons; some write articles for papers; some prepare comments on given portions of Scripture, and some on the whole Bible; some teach orally from the pulpit, and some privately from house to house. He is presumptuous and foolish who undertakes to destroy all these, except one, and that the one he chooses.—E. A. Elam, in the Gospel Advocate. (And he didn't mention organizing a "Bible college" as a method of teaching our children in the Scriptures. Isn't it scriptural any more?)

No doubt this short comment made by the Review was very satisfying to some of the readers of that paper, but others might have thought, neither did he nor the editor of the Review mention newspapers as a method of teaching children and others the Scriptures, and wondered if the Review is not scriptural any more. I really think Brother Elam's point is well taken, and I doubt whether he had the Review in his mind at all when he wrote what he did; but if the Review did not feel a little guilty, it at least thought that this furnished it an opportunity to engage in its pastime of opposing Bible colleges. If any one says anything about Bible colleges, the Review will jump on him; and if he does not say anything about them, it will jump on him, anyway. The Review reminds me of the old gentleman who said of his wife: "She will faint if I do, and she will faint if I don't." If one says anything about the right of a Christian to teach the Bible in a college, the Review will nearly faint; but if he does not say anything about it, it will nearly faint, anyway. It sees nearly every opportunity to strike at the Bible college, except one, and it appears to get blind to that one, and that is this: a Christian has the same right to teach the Bible in a college founded by man that the Sommers and others have to teach it in the Apostolic Review, founded by Benjamin Franklin. Has the Review forgotten this issue, or has the Review ceased to be "scriptural any more?" I have tried to get this issue before that paper for some time, but it does not try to meet it. I believe that every objection that can be made to teaching the Bible in a college can with equal force be made to teaching it in the Review. Remember, now, brother or sister, as the case may be; we are not discussing the right to organize or found schools or papers, but the right to teach the Bible through them or be taught it by them.

Perhaps Brother Elam forgot the Bible college and Brother or Sister Sommer forgot the Review, but I am reminding him or her of both. Some one said in the Review that these colleges begged money from individual Christians and churches for their support, and I asked if the Review had never asked for money from individuals and churches for its support, and he forgot to say whether it did or not. "Happy is he that condemneth not himself in that thing which he alloweth." Did the Review also forget one? Brother Elam said: "Some good people use tracts as a method of teaching; some write books of sermons; some write articles for papers; some prepare comments on given portions of Scripture, and some on the whole Bible; some teach orally from the pulpit, and some privately from house to house." He might have added that some teach the Bible in Bible readings for six weeks, while others teach it six months in schools. Those who teach it six weeks in what they call "Bible readings" oppose the others the balance of the time for teaching it in the school. I wonder how long it will take a paper to get right that is headed that way? I believe it will have to turn halfway around to do it.

Just a little reading, just a little music, just a little art, just a little dreaming—and life's just a little comfort here and there—just a little better, more decent chance for those who need it most—just a little understanding on everybody's part—and everything runs smoother, surer, and with greater zeal.—Selected.

NELSON COMPLETE CONCORDANCE

To the

American Standard Bible

By M. C. HAZARD, Ph.D.

A concordance is a word-finder—an index to the words in the Bible designed to increase your knowledge of what the Bible contains by enabling you to find easily any word, verse, or subject in the Bible.

This new Concordance, by Dr. M. C. Hazard, is the first Complete Concordance ever issued to the American Standard Version of the Bible—the most accurate version of the Holy Scriptures in the English language.

Five years have been occupied in its completion, during which time the editor and publishers have had constantly in mind the problems of the Bible student. Comparisons have been made with other concordances and numerous improvements have been introduced to make a work so accurate, so full, and so convenient that it will be an indispensable working tool in handling aright the word of truth.

MY PA.

My pa ain't any millyunaire,
But—my!—he's offul smart;
He ain't a carpenter, but he
Can fix a feller's cart.
He ain't a doctor, but somehow
My pa—he allus knows
Just what to do to fix a boy
What's got a bloody nose!

My pa ain't Presidunt—becoz,
He says, he never run;
But he could do it just as well as Any Presidunt has done!
A Presidunt may beat my pa
At pilin' up a vote;
But he can't beat him, I just know,
A-whittlin' out a boat!

My pa ain't rich, but that's becoz He's never tried to be; He's no 'lectrician, but he fixed A telephone for me. My pa ain't never wrote a book, But I know that he could, Becoz the stories what he tells To me are allus good.

My pa knows everything, I guess,
An' I say I don't care
Coz he ain't Presidunt, or rich
As any millyunaire!
Whenever things go wrong, my pa
Kin make 'em right, you see;
An' though he ain't a Presidunt,
Pa's good enough for me!

HE DARED TO TELL THE TRUTH.

Mr. Jones was accounted a hard master. He never kept his boys; they ran away or gave notice they meant to quit. So he was half his time without or in search of a boy. The work was not hard, opening and sweeping out the shop, chopping wood, going on errands, and helping around. At last Sam Fisher went to live with him.

"Sam's a good boy," said his mother.

"I should like to see a boy that had a spark of goodness in him," growled the new master.

It is always bad to begin with a man that has no confidence in you, because, do your best, you are likely to have little credit for it. However, Sam thought he would try. The wages were good, and his mother wanted him to go. Sam had been there but three days when, in sawing a crossgrained stick of wood, he broke the saw. He was a little frightened. He knew he was careful, and he knew he was a pretty good sawyer, too, for a boy of his age; nevertheless, the saw broke in his hands.

"Mr. Jones never makes allowances," said another boy who was in the woodhouse with him.

"Why, of course, I didn't mean it, and accidents will happen to the best of folks," said Sam, looking with a very sorrowful air on the broken saw.

"Mr. Jones never makes allowances," said the other boy.
"I never saw anything like him. And Bill might have stayed, only he jumped into a hen's nest and broke her eggs. He daren't tell of it; but Mr. Jones kept suspecting and suspecting and laid everything out of the way to Bill, whether Bill was to blame or not, till Bill couldn't stand it and wouldn't."

"Did he tell Mr. Jones about the eggs?" asked Sam.

"No," said the boy; "he was afraid. Mr. Jones has got such a temper."

"I think he'd have better owned up at once," said Sam.

"I suspect you'll find it better to preach than to practice," said the boy. "I'd run away before I'd tell him."

And he soon turned on his heel and left poor Sam alone with his broken saw.

The boy did not feel very comfortable or happy. He shut up the woodhouse, walked out in the garden, and went up to his little chamber under the eaves. He wished he could tell Mrs. Jones, but she wasn't sociable.

When Mr. Jones came into the house, the boy heard him. He got up, crept downstairs, and met Mr. Jones in the kitchen.

"Sir," said Sam, "I broke your saw, and I thought I'd come and tell you."

"What did you get up to tell me for?" asked Mr. Jones. "I should think morning would be time enough to tell of your carelessness."

"Because," said Sam, "I was afraid if I put it off I might be tempted to lie about it. I am sorry I broke it."

Mr. Jones looked at the boy from head to foot, then, stretching out his hand, he said heartily: "Sam, give me your hand; shake hands. I'll trust you, Sam. That's right; that's right. Go to bed, boy. Never fear. I'm glad the saw broke; it shows the mettle's in you. Go to bed."

Mr. Jones was fairly won. There never were better friends after that than Sam and he. Sam thinks justice had not been done Mr. Jones. If the boys had treated him honestly and "above board," he would have been a good man to deal with. It was their conduct which soured and made him suspicious. I do not know how that is. I only know that Sam Fisher finds in Mr. Jones a kind master and a faithful friend.—Selected.

TAKE CARE OF THAT ODD BOY.

Do not discourage that boy of yours because he is odd, because he does not get the highest grade, because his card shows he is dull. Why, that may be one of the signs that he is great, but not exactly in the line of the books crammed into his hands for him to cram into his head. Recall that Beecher said that he got more discipline out of inventing excuses why he could not get his lessons in mathematics than he ever did from the books. Longfellow has expressed our thought:

Perhaps there lives some dreamy boy, untaught In schools, some graduate of the field or street, Who shall become a master of the art, An admiral sailing the high seas of thought Fearless and first, and steering with his fleet For lands not yet laid down in any chart.

Do not disparage the boy who seems dull. It may be his way. One of the things of which our colleges boast is one of the things of which they ought to be ashamed—namely, that they will send a student home if his marks on examination are not up to certain percentages. Forsooth! That is something to shame a school. Let the student get what he can assimilate. He will get a lot out of association and effort and encouragement. Why brand him as a dolt because certain studies do not wedge themselves into his brain, just exactly as in the texts? Education should be democratic. Some would gear it simply to the intellectual aristocrats. Moreover, read again those lines of Longfellow. They have often come true.—Selected.

MOTHER LOVE.

There is an endearing tenderness in the love of a mother to son that transcends all other affections of the heart. It is neither to be chilled by selfishness nor daunted by danger nor weakened by worthlessness nor stifled by ingratitude. She will sacrifice every comfort to his convenience; she will surrender every pleasure to his enjoyment; she will glory in his fame and exult in his prosperity; and if adversity overtake him, he will be the dearer to her by misfortune; and if disgrace settle upon his name, she will still love and cherish him; and if all the world besides cast him off, she will be all the world to him,—Washington Irving.

BIBLE CROSS WORD PUZZLE

THESE evenly distributed blocks divide the diagram so that words of three and five letters predominate; in fact, there are no other lengths on the horizontal list. Two- and three-letter words form all the vertical ones, and in all there are more words in this puzzle than in any one so far.

How to Solve a Cross Word Puzzle

It is advisable to first fill in, in both directions, those words which you know to be correct. These will furnish hints to those words which you do not know or had merely guessed at. When the puzzle is solved correctly, the letters in the white spaces will spell words both horizontally and vertically. The black spaces are the blind spots of the puzzle and merely form the pattern, incidentally designating the ends and beginnings of the words contained in the puzzle.

Tioga, Texas, June 16.—I was with the saints at Ethel, Texas, last Lord's day. All seemed to enjoy the work. Brother Tillet S. Teddlie has just closed a fine meeting here. Six were baptized and two came from the Christian Church. This was his second meeting and a good one. The This was his second meeting, and a good one. The cause is prospering in this section. All seem to have a mind to work.— C. H. Smithson.

Mount Pleasant, Texas, June 18.— Owing to unforeseen circumstances, all my work for this summer has been all my work for this summer has been canceled. Any congregation desiring my assistance in a protracted meeting will please write me at once. I will work anywhere in Texas, Louisiana, Arkansas, or Oklahoma. Would like to visit my old home in Mississippi this summer, and would like to hear from some congregations anywhere in North Mississippi or the southern part of Tennessee. I would also like to hold one or two mission meetings this summer.—Ed S. Duncan. can.

Zolfo Springs, Fla., June 17.—I preached here last Sunday morning and again at night. The outlook is pleasing to me. I shall devote my entire time to this place for a while. Only a few members here, and only one other congregation in this county. Truly a mission field. The few brethren and sisters are awake to duty, especially in seeing after the preacher and his family. On June 14 they gave us a shower of provisions, which was greatly appreciated, since they gave us a shower of provisions, which was greatly appreciated, since we had just moved into this country. We would be glad to get in touch with a good barber and a dry-goods merchant, both members of the church, who desire to locate in this part of the State. If interested, write to me or W. C. King, Zolfo Springs, Fla. Brethren, pray for us in the great work here.—Vernon Rozar.

great work here.—Vernon Rozar.

Flint, Mich., June 19.—The work in Flint continues to increase in interest. Recently Brother Claud F. Witty, who preaches for the West Side Central church of Christ, of Detroit, accompanied by his good wife, made us a very pleasant visit. While here he lectured two nights on the subject, "Should Evolution Be Taught in the Public Schools?" Much interest was manifested in the discussion. It was a pleasure to see so many strangers present. Only a short time ago he held three public discussions on that subject with a noted professor, of Detroit, before an audience of more than a thousand each time. To my mind, Brother Witty should have the support and the prayers of the entire brotherhood while carrying on this great work. He is the only man in this part of the country that has had the courage to issue a broadside challenge to the exponents of the Darwinian theory on evolution.—C. B. Thomas. C. B. Thomas.

Albany, Ala., June 23.—The Calhoun-Shaffer meeting came to a close on June 19. In many respects this was the best meeting ever conducted by the church of Christ in Albany. The interest, attention, and attendance the control of the The interest, attention, and attendance were excellent throughout. The preaching was done by Brother Hall L. Calhoun, who just recently came from the Christian Church, and I must say that it was well done. He is a forceful speaker, is wonderfully clear on all points, is unassuming and humble in attitude, and I am sure the will do good anywhere he may he will do good anywhere he may work. No congregation need have any fear in regard to his loyalty, for he is thoroughly disgusted with digression. The singing was led by Gilbert E. Shaffer. There were thirty-nine baptisms and two restorations, and two trusty nine placed membership. and twenty-nine placed membership with the congregation. There is a bright future for this congregation. Our beautiful new church building will be finished in the near future. It will be modern in every sense, and located in the best part of town.—Thornton Crews.

Memphis, Tenn., June 16.—I am at home for two or three days after a trip over East Mississippi and North Alabama in the interest of Harding College. On this trip I visited the congregations at Columbus, Miss., and at Millport, Berry, Oakman, Cordova, Birmingham, Tuscumbia, Sheffield, and Florence, Ala., and other points. In many respects this was a very enjoyable trip. At Birmingham I met some relatives whom I had not seen in many years, and also had the pleasure of hearing two excellent discourses delivered by Brother S. H. Hall, of Nashville, Tenn. At Tuscumbia I met with some of my old classmates in the Southern Tennessee Normal College, which brought to my classmates in the Southern Tennessee Normal College, which brought to my mind many fond recollections. At Sheffield I was royally entertained in the home of my old Mississippi friend, J. Frank Chambers, who is the preacher for the Sheffield congregation. Brother Chambers' son, Smith Chambers, preaches for the church in North Florence, and is doing a great work with that congregation. At Sheffield I had the pleasure of meeting with and hearing Gus Dunn, Jr., another young preacher whose meeting with and hearing Gus Dunn, Jr., another young preacher whose services are in great demand because of his splendid ability. I found many people in Alabama interested in Harding College, and will expect to see many students enrolled from Mississippi and Alabama next year. On my way home I spent one night in Memphis and heard N. B. Hardeman, who was in a meeting with the Union who was in a meeting with the Union Avenue Church.—J. P. Lowrey.

Montgomery, Ala., June 16.—After having been in the hospital for six weeks, where I underwent an operation, I am able to be on the field again. I am very grateful to those who were so mindful of me during my illness. The Jefferson Street congregation, Nashville, Tenn., through Brother P. H. Black, made a special contribution to me each week while in the hospital, and Brother M. Keeble and others also helped me. The following white brethren contributed to my necessity: Brother W. R. Mingle, Bellbuckle, Tenn.; Brother J. C. Shepherd, Berry, Ala.; the South Columbia congregation, Columbia, Tenn.; Brother W. S. Dennison, and Brother A. M. Burton, Nashville, Tenn. These have my hearty thanks and best wishes. For the past four years the most of my labor has been in destitute places and with broken-down congregations. During this time Brother Burton has liberally helped me. On May 17 I began a meeting in Columbia, Tenn., assisted by Brother T. H. Busby. Four were baptized and one young sister was restored to the fold. On the fourth Sunday in May I was with the congregation at Viola, Tenn. One young man made the good confession and was baptized. On June 3 I began a tent meeting in Cordova, Ala., which closed with five baptisms. Of this number, two came from the Missionary Baptists (one had been a Baptist for forty-one years). I am now in a tent meeting here in Montgomery. Brethren, pray for me.—Alonzo Jones.

GREEN.

Ira Green was born in Graves Coun-Ira Green was born in Graves County, Ky., on June 24, 1834, and departed this life on May 31, 1924, at Gamburg, in Ripley County, Mo. He was of a family of ten children, and the last of the family to be called home. He was united in marriage to Miss Sarah Fundaugh (my mother) on January 8, 1857, by Justice of the Peace Shelton, and to this union nine children were born, only four of whom survive; also, sixteen grandchildren and twenty-three great-grandchildren. and twenty-three great-grandchildren, and twenty-three great-grandchildren, besides his widow, numerous other relatives, and a host of friends, are left to mourn his demise. My mother died on May 15, 1893, and in November, 1895, he was married to Mrs. Sallie L. Sewell, of Gamburg, Mo. "Uncle Ira," as he was familiarly called, united with the church of Christ when quite young, and was an elder of his home congregation for elder of his home congregation for more than forty years. His home was the preachers' home, and he will be greatly missed by all. I feel that he could indeed and in truth have uttered the sublime words of the great apostle: "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith: henceforth there is laid up the faith: henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day." Funeral services were conducted by Brother J. G. McDaniel in the presence of a large crowd of relatives and friends.

HIS DAUGHTER.

SALMON.

William Charles Salmon was born on April 3, 1868, near Paris, in Henry County, Tenn., and passed away on May 13, 1925, in Washington, D. C., a few days after returning from a European trip. He gave much of his life to teaching school, and was a great factor in building up the communities in which he taught. With a growing desire to become a lawyer, he gave up his school-teaching and qualified himself to plead for justice and right at the bar, and became one of the leading attorneys in Columbia, of the leading attorneys in Columbia, of the leading attorneys in Columbia, Tenn. With an aspiration to serve his people as Congressman, he ran the race, was elected, and served the term with dignity and ability. But, greatest and best of all, he gave himself in humble submission to the will of the Lord Almighty. Thirty years of his life, as a servant of the Lord, he studied the Bible and grew wonderfully in the knowledge of it, and for many years was one of the leading fully in the knowledge of it, and for many years was one of the leading members of the church at Columbia, contributing generously of his time and means toward the development of the church. He also taught with much satisfaction a large class of young women for many years, for which he was well qualified. He was also a member of the Board of Directors of the Tennessee Orphan Home, and gave valuable assistance in that good work. Brother Salmon had a most pleasant and pleasing disposition and met his fellow man with a greeting that put a good feeling in the soul. Kind, charitable, and uniformly courteous, he easily made friends and seldom forgot acquaintances. Hosts of friends are griefstricken at his passing. The town in which he lived, the church in which he worshiped, and his dear companion, Mrs. Margaret Tucker Salmon, from one of the pioneer families of the church here, and between whom existed such rare devotion as is seldom seen, will greatly miss him. seen, will greatly miss him. EVOLUTION.

BY J. MADISON WRIGHT.

The following communication was addressed to the editor of the Philadelphia Record:

After reading your editorial in the Record of June 8, 1925, the question comes to me, why are the editors of the great daily newspapers throughout the country joining in with Chicago University in its propaganda to force evolution into all the schools and upon a people the majority of which believe the Bible? There is seldom an issue of the Record that does not have something in it in favor of evolution and against the Bible account of creation. Those in favor of evolution being forced by law upon an unwilling people are held up as the true Americans and the upholders of liberty; while those who are in favor of the Bible are spoken of as "new barbarians," "fanatics," "tyrants," etc. And no one who writes or speaks in favor of the Bible account of creation gets into the papers. I ask again, what means all this? Certainly our editors know that when the Pilgrim Fathers came to these shores, they came to found a nation where men could read and follow the Bible according to the dictates of their own conscience; and when the Constitution was framed for such a nation, it made all men free to worship God according to the dictates of their own conscience; and they put it on the coin of the nation, "In God we trust." They must know also that at the present time it has come to such a state in this nation that by law our children must attend school, by law we must pay taxes to support the schools, and by law our children must receive the teaching on evolution in these schools, which teaching destroys their faith in the Bible, in a Creator, and it is against their conscientious convictions. This is done by law, and it is contrary to the Constitution and against the freedom given the people in this nation. Now, when the people assert their rights and through their representatives make laws to prevent these evolutionists from destroying their children's faith in God and the Bible and compelling them against their conscientious convictions to receive such instruction, what object have our editors in branding them "barbarians," "tyrants," and "traitors."

If any religious body wants to teach its peculiar doctrines, it founds and supports schools to teach them. It enjoys this liberty. If evolutionists want to teach evolution, they have the same liberty to found and support schools to teach evolution. But it is a stroke at the very foundation of the liberty of the people of this nation to compel them by law to accept evolution and pay for the teaching of it when they are conscientiously opposed to it.

Why do our editors and the teachers of our children join the evolutionists in such work? It is not because evolution is truth and fact. It has never been proved to be either. It is not because the theories of evolu-

LOS ANGELES NOTES.

BY W. EDGAR MILLER.

The work in Southern California seems to be in a healthy condition and the various congregations are active. The South Side congregation in Santa Ana recently held an all-day meeting; the Sichel Street congregation, Los Angeles, held one the first Sunday in June; and the Walnut Street congregation in Santa Ana will hold one on the fourth Sunday in June. Others are scheduled for later dates, and the time is being well used. On the second Sunday in June the colored brethren at Watts, near Los Angeles, opened their new meetinghouse. This is the first in this part of the State, if not in the entire State, to be owned by the colored brethren. S. R. Cassius is laboring with them, and it is due largely to the efforts of him and his son that this house has been built. They lacked about three hundred dollars of having it paid for, and nearly half of this was con-tributed at the meeting in the after-

The Japanese work continues a steady growth, new pupils being added to the Sunday-school classes from time to time. Sister Hettie Lee Ewing, of Texas, is now with the Japanese mission, helping Brother and Sister Ishiguro with their English, and at the same time learning the Japanese language preparatory to her going to Japan to help our forces there. We are also expecting Brother and Sister Morehead, of Nashville, Tenn., to spend some time with us in July and August, getting what help they can from Ishiguro's work, before sailing the first of September for Japan to relieve Sister Andrews in her overworked condition.

The young men of the Central congregation have been going with their cars on Sunday morning to gather up the children and to take them home after the services, but a move is now on foot to provide Brother Ishiguro with an automobile. Not only will this be a great help to the work on Sunday mornings, but Brother Ishiguro can use it during the week and cover a great deal more ground than he can at present. If any one wants to have fellowship in this work, a contribution toward the purchase of this car would be greatly appreciated. Send to the writer at 376 West Mariposa Street, Altadena, Cal.

COMMENDATIONS OF BIBLE LESSON HELPS

- "I am delighted with your Lesson Helps, and regard them as the best I have examined." (C. W. Thompson.)
- "We have been using the Lesson Helps for fifteen years or more. I noticed the change, and, in my humble judgment, think it good." (W. G. Harrison.)
- "I have received sample copies of your Lesson Helps and examined them. I pro-nounce them as good, so far as I can think, as can be made." (Ira C. Moore.)

- "We are using your Sunday-school Lesson Helps at Fairfax church of Christ, this city, and think they are good. We have no criti-cism to offer." (M. P. Lowry.)
- "I am glad to commend the Bible Lesson Helps issued by the Gospel Advocate Company. They cannot fail of being helpful to any church using them." (C. A. Norred.)

  "The Quarterlies are fine. They should be a great help to the Bible student. I would be alad if Bible classes that do not now have them would take up their use." (R. P. Cuff.)
- "Your Quarterlies received and briefly examined. They show that much time and care have been exercised in their preparation. They are clear, scriptural, and to the point." (E. L. Whitaker.)
- "I think the Quarterlies very instructive and helpful in the study of the Scriptures both in the home and in the public assembly, and it will give me pleasure to commend them to all the faithful workers in my field of labor." (J. D. Jones.)
- "The Sunday-school literature that is published by the Gospel Advocate Company I can heartily recommend to any one who is in search for good helps on our Sunday-school lessons." (Robert E. Wright.)
- "A complete assortment of the Sunday-school literature published by the Gospoi Advocate Company was sent me recently. Having examined it carefully, I am glad to say I consider it excellent, and gladly com-mend it to congregations, teachers, and classes." (T. B. Larimore.)
- "As a whole, I think your Lesson Helps far surpass other literature of its kind. Here in this great mission field (Louisiana) where we have placed them, many comparisons have been made between them and both the denominational and our society brethren's literature, and at no time have your Lesson Helps come off second best." (C. C. McQuiddy.)
- "It is a pleasure to write a word of commendation of Brother Elam's Notes on Bible School Lessons. They are the product of one who has given the greater part of his life to the study and teaching of God's Word. They are true to the Bible, comprehensive, and scholarly. If you love the truth, you will be delighted to study with him these wonderful lessons." (A. G. Freed.)
- "Brother E. A. Elam's Notes, as published annually, is, in my judgment, sorptural and the best thing of its kind I have ever seen or that is published to-day. Everybody ought to have a copy and preserve it for study and reference. Brother Elam's twenty-five years' work, if every year should be bound in a separate volume, the twenty-five volumes would be a great addition to any library. (C. M. Pullias.)
- "At the Central church of Christ in Fort Worth we have been using in our Bible school Elam's Notes and other literature of his. For a great number of years the writer of this has felt that Brother Elam was one of the best-prepared men in the brotherhood for the preparation of such literature. His Notes, in our best judgment, represent, or reflect, the best efforts he has ever made. Both as an elder of the congregation and as a teacher in our Bible School, I have very great pleasure in indorsing his Notes. To the extent that an expression of our views is of value, I assure you we are very pleased to give it." (J. G. Wilkinson.)
- "I have used Elam's Quarterlies for years. They are superior to any that I have seen. Elam's Notes on Bible School Lessons are much fuller than they. They give the historical setting as to time and place that is needed and valueble. They give so many scriptural citations and references—Scriptures that introduce the text or corroborate the text—that the average student may know the geography, the history, and the full meaning of the lesson. They give so many lessons, deducted from the copious citations of Scriptures, that the student may know more perfectly God's will. For years I have used Peloubet's Select Notes. I compare them weekly. I do not hesitate to say that Elam's Notes are infinitely superior, if you want to know the Bible." (C. F. Holt.) "I have used Elam's Quarterlies for years,

Price, postpaid_____$1.50

The Boswell-Hardeman discussion on instrumental music in the worship is now ready for distribution. If you have not already given us your order for the discussion, you should do so at once. The subject is a live one and the interest in it is growing. So many who have built on the silence of the Bible have espoused "open membership" and have denied the inspiration of the Scriptures and the deity of Christ that the people are realizing as never before that it is dangerous to build on the silence of the Bible.

This discussion was conducted in a good spirit throughout, each speaker showing marked consideration and courtesy for his opponent. Ira M. Boswell did as well as any one can do who undertakes to prove that instrumental music in the worship is scriptural. Any failure that he made was not on account of his lack of ability, but was due to the weakness of his position. N. B. Hardeman presented the truth in a forceful and convincing way.

Buy the book and circulate it among those who use instrumental music in the worship.

SOME OF R. H. BOLL'S SPECU-LATIONS.

BY R. L. WHITESIDE.

Brother Boll's theories have been referred to as "speculations about unfulfilled prophecy," and one of my good friends called them "harmless guesses." That did not sound as if his teaching were so bad. Then his three booklets fell into my hands, and I gave them as close study as I ever gave any man's writings. I had no ill will toward Brother Boll to bias my conclusions; in fact, our relations had always been pleasant. But, in studying his writings, it became more and more manifest to me that to refer to his vagaries as "speculations about unfulfilled prophecy" misses the point, and to call them "harmless guesses" shows unfamiliarity with his scheme as a whole.

Take the following as a sample: "The acceptance of the Gentiles into the church-into the favor of God as joint sharers of the blessings of Israel's Christ-was a most terrible perplexity to all believing Jews. It was, in fact, a mystery. It had never been revealed that such a thing would happen. (Eph. 3: 4-6.) That the Gentiles were to be blessed in Messianic days was no mystery; that had been previously revealed. But the observant reader of the prophets will notice that it is always after the national restoration and exaltation of Israel, and always through restored Israel and in subservience to Israel, that the Gentiles were to be so blessed." ("The Kingdom of God," page 63.) Read this on page 38: "These parables are really an announcement of the new and unexpected aspect the kingdom would assume during an anticipated age of the King's rejection and absence from the world."

According to Boll, then, this "church age" is a matter never mentioned by the prophets, and was brought in as a substitute measure on account of the fact that the Jews would not accept Christ and crown him as their king on David's throne in Jerusalem. Is that "speculation about unfulfilled prophecy?" Indeed, no! It is a violent wresting of prophecies from their proper setting and fulfillment to make them do service in some fantastic dream of the future. It is a perversion of prophecies already fulfilled and in the process of fulfillment.

Read this from page 54: "It [the new birth] is the universal requirement of acceptance with God, and characteristic of the new covenant which now in its principle applies to the church, and which the Lord will make with the house of Israel and with the house of Judah 'after those days." It will be news to many folks to hear that the new covenant has not yet been made; that it applies to us now only in principle. If Boll is correct, then Paul erred in thinking the prophecy of Jeremiah (31) had been fulfilled, and we have been wrong all these years in thinking we had a new testament. Does this notion of Boll look like a harmless guess or a speculation about unfulfilled prophecy?

The foregoing are only samples of Boll's vagaries, but they show that his theories are at variance with the whole scheme of redemption as set forth in the New Testament. These matters, together with many other phases of Boll's theory, are discussed in "Christ and His Kingdom," a review of R. H. Boll, by R. L. Whiteside and C. R. Nichol. Price, fifty cents. Mrs. C. R. Nichol, publisher, Clifton, Texas.

THE PASSING OF MOTHER. BY G. W. RIGGS.

Nancy Allen Jordan was born, near Triune, Tenn., on December 28, 1842; was married, to G. W. Riggs, in 1866; and died on May 12, 1924. Her husband died in 1879, leaving her with seven small children—five boys and two girls—all of whom survive but one daughter who died in 1912. Besides these, she is survived by one brother, C. L. Jordan (now in his eighty-fourth or eighty-fifth year), thirty-one grandchildren, and nine great-grandchildren.

Mother was not a superior woman, but she was a good mother, and I have never been able to feel so contented and so much at home as when in her presence in the old home at Riggs Crossroads, where she lived for fiftyseven years of her life. While she was not what the world would call a "great woman," she was in many respects above the average. Possessed of common practicable sense, she was energetic, industrious, and frugal. She carded wool and cotton, spun thread, wove cloth, and made blankets, counterpanes, coverlets, and garments for her household. She could knit a pair of woolen socks in a day, kept the family always supplied, and made many pairs for the soldiers during the Great War. She could not be idle. In addition to her household duties, she found time to work in the garden, manage the farm, and almost to the very end of her life she kept busy. Even when she suffered intense pain she made tatting and such like things for her children and friends.

For some years she was a Methodist, but through the instruction and admonition of one of her sons she was convinced that she should be immersed and be only a Christian. She was baptized some twenty-five or thirty years ago, and ever afterwards tried to live a true, Christian life. Her last illness was of a lingering, painful nature, which gave her much time for reflection and meditation; and when she realized that she could not recover and be of further service on earth, she expressed herself as being ready and anxious to go and be with the Lord. She lived to see all of her children but one (a son) and many grandchildren become members of the body of Christ. My hope and prayer is that all of them may obey the gospel and that all of us may live so as to meet her in the great beyond, where there will be no more sorrowing and no more parting, but an endless day of peace and joy in the heavenly home.

GOSPEL ADVOCATE

The GOSPEL ADVOCATE is the oldest living periodical published in the interest of the church of Christ. It is now in its sixty-seventh volume, and it has a larger list of regular, paid-up subscribers than it has ever had before. Its circulation is increasing rapidly, and it is daily growing in favor with the people. It contains twenty-four pages, and is issued every week. It is printed in large, clear type, on good paper, and is neatly pasted and trimmed. It has by far the largest circulation of any periodical published south of the Mason and Dixon Line in the interest of the church of Christ. It has regular editorial writers, besides a large number of able and regular contributors. It has all of the regular departments of the best religious periodicals.

In editorial policy it stands for individual consecration, against ecclesiastic organizations, as the scriptural and best method of doing missionary work. It recognizes no organization but the church of Christ as a scriptural medium of converting the world and developing the Christian character.

It opposes all human creeds and ecclesiastic councils, and pleads for the right of each individual to study the Scriptures for himself and formulate his own faith, without dictation or hindrance from churchly dignitaries. It opposes all clerical assumption of official authority in the church, and stands for the scriptural doctrine that each Christian has an office to fill, a work to perform—that all are kings and priests unto God.

It stoutly advocates the doctrine of missions, and argues unceasingly that every Christian is a divinely commissioned missionary and every church is a scripturally organized missionary society. The mission of every Christian and the design of every church is to preach the gospel to all the world.

It believes in, and stoutly advocates, congregational singing, as opposed to select choirs and instrumental performances, as the best and most soul-stirring church music. Let all the people sing. Provide a book for everybody in the house, and let us all make a joyful noise unto the Lord. Sample copies mailed free to any address.

CURRENT COMMENT

By JAMES A. ALLEN

The Governor of Tennessee, Hon. Austin Peay, recently had the good sense and the courage to write the following letter:

Hon. Walter White, Dayton, Tenn.—My Dear Mr. White: I purposed to write you before leaving Nashville to your letter, and in the hurry failed to do so. You probably saw in the press what I said in regard to being a witness in your case. Impossible to keep anything from the papers, in that matter especially. As your letter to me had been given out at Dayton, the boys were right there for my reply. I am away for a few days seeking some medical attention.

Of course, I know no fact which could conceivably be useful to either side in that suit as a witness. That case should be tried in an hour. It is about as simple a proposition as could be stated, and the great hurrah about it is unnecessary and unfortunate.

The statute, I have no doubt, is entirely constitutional. We have the right to say through our lawmaking body that the faith and religion of our children shall not be destroyed by teachers who poison their minds with stuff that no science has established and which belongs in no reputable textbook. Tennessee needs no sympathy nor commiseration.

Our State has taken a great and forward position which deserves and will certainly receive in due time the admira-ation and appreciation of the Christian world.

I have a profound contempt for those who are throwing slurs at Tennessee for having this law. In my judgment, any State had better dispense with its schools than with the Bible. We are keeping both.

With very kind regards,

Sincerely,

AUSTIN PEAY.

The State of Tennessee is not prohibiting men from teaching evolution in schools of their own, but is only saying that in State-supported schools the people who pay the salaries have a right to say what shall be taught. When people dispense with the Bible, it is only a matter of time until they will dispense with their schools.

An Associated Press dispatch in a Nashville daily contains the following:

"The Tennessee antievolution law was inspired by religious zealots who believe in the literal inerrancy of the Scriptures," and "its object is to set up the scriptural Scriptures," and "its object is to set up the scriptural story of creation as against the universal teaching of science," said Robert S. Keebler, Memphis lawyer, in an address prepared for delivery before the annual meeting of the State Bar Association to-day, discussing the constitutionality of the act.

"We pass over any ingenious argument to the effect that the evolution theory and the biblical story are not in conflict," Mr. Keebler said. "The Legislature thought there was a conflict, as assuredly there is, unless we choose to give to Genesis a poetical and figurative interpretation for which the liberalists who enacted this law will not stand.

"Manifestly our courts must determine whether the act is patently an obstruction to the progress of science or whether it tends to cherish it," the speaker said.

"By this act the Legislature has set up the Genesis story of creation as scientifically true with respect to the origin of man. How are we to know what is accredited by science except by a study of the treatises and teachings of the accepted masters of science?"

And shall the loose declamation and unproven assertion of "Robert S. Keebler, Memphis lawyer," be accepted as evidence against the position occupied by those "who believe in the literal inerrancy of the Scriptures?" To the honor of the Tennessee State Bar Association, the base attempt of a few infidels to belittle those who repudiate the false theory of evolution was voted down and the silly, illogical, and iniquitous speech of "Robert S. Keebler, Memphis lawyer," was expunged from the record. Which is as it should have been.

Upon what grounds and by what evidence is "the literal inerrancy of the Scriptures" to be denied? Every known fact in the records of mankind corroborates the facts recorded in the Scriptures. No man has any proof that any of the facts recorded in the Scriptures did not occur. On the other hand, unimpeachable and incontrovertible evidence—the testimony of eyewitnesses and of earwitnesses, circumstantial evidence, internal evidences, external evidences, evidences of every character and kind-bears out the statement of Holy Writ that all of these facts actually occurred. But certainly "the evolution theory" and "the biblical story" are in direct and irreconcilable conflict; so much so that if one is true, the other is false. One is a mere theory, an unproven hypothesis, advanced by men who are infidels at heart and immoral in life; the other is a substantiated and corroborated statement of facts made by the purest and holiest men this world has ever known.

But is "the evolution theory" a fact? Its advocates are afraid to make such a claim. They have no proof, absolutely none. They know nothing that conflicts with the Bible. Before they can make out a case they must present facts, not theories-unproven, unnatural, and absurd theories.

And who are these "accepted masters of science?" Who "accepts" them? And what "science" do they preach? Advancing a theory that man is an evolution from a lower form of life is not a "science." It is an absurdity, contradicted by all the known facts discovered by real scientists. What evidence "accredits" the theories of these self-elected and falsely called "masters of science?" Until they present facts and known truths, we do not admit them to be "masters" of anything but wickedness and absurdity. The "Genesis story of creation" states that every seed shall reproduce "after its kind." Some varieties of vegetable life, some races of animals, some races of men, have served their purpose and passed away, become extinct. But let them produce a case where a grape grew on a thorn or a fig on a thistle, or where a monkey ever sired anything but a monkey, and we will admit their "science." Before they repudiate "the Genesis story of creation," let them produce a case where one form of life ever crossed the line and reproduced a diverse kind. They have no example, not one single case, no proof whatever. Their theories are talk-idle, wicked, silly talk-fathered by the wish that they were true. They are infidels, and wish to teach infidelity to our children. God be thanked for "this act of the Legislature."

If Genesis is to be given "a poetical and figurative interpretation," which is but a polite way of saying that it is a piece of fiction, then all of the Bible is false and Jesus Christ is an impostor. The whole of the Bible stands or falls together; and all of it rests upon Jesus Christ. Jesus quoted from and indorsed "Moses and the prophets." If Jesus indorsed a piece of fiction as being the word of God, then he was a mere man and the greatest deceiver the world has ever known. It will not do; it cannot do. The facts are to the contrary. The Tennessee State Bar Association did itself an honor when it put its hand over the mouth of "Robert S. Keebler, Memphis lawyer," and all his kind. Expunging such a speech from the record frees it from an infamy that would have been eternal.

We also take the following from a daily paper:

Mr. Malone said he is a Christian holding much the same views on questions of Christian creed as those held by Mr.

"I dare say that I am just as strong a believer in Christianity, the virgin birth, the holy Trinity, and the resurrection as Mr. Bryan," said the attorney.

Mr. Malone says he comes to Tennessee to do what he can in the defense of Professor Scopes, "because he believes the statute is undemocratic, un-American, and a matter which affects the entire nation."

But what right has any man to say that he "is a Christian" when he repudiates or disobeys things taught by Christ? No man is "a believer in Christianity" who repudiates a part of it. Jesus indorsed the statement of Moses that "God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him; male and female created he them;" and yet Mr. Malone goes to Dayton to tell the court that man is an evolution from a lower and diverse form of life, Moses to the contrary notwithstanding. What does Mr. Malone think it takes to make a Christian?

Realizing that the public will not stand for outspoken infidelity, he caters to popular favor by daring to "say that I am just as strong a believer in Christianity, the virgin birth, the holy Trinity, and the resurrection as Mr. Bryan." But if Jesus was born of a virgin and was raised from the dead, as Mr. Malone professes to believe, then he was, and is, the Christ, the Son of God. And such being true, the indorsement of Moses by Jesus certifies the Genesis account of the creation of man to be true. Mr. Malone is strangely confused. A lawyer ought to be more careful. Does he think a divine Person would indorse a falsehood?

But as to Mr. Bryan's being a Christian, we are not able to say. He is a great and good man, but many great and good men are not Christians. He is also an elder in the Presbyterian Church, but to be a Presbyterian and to be a Christian are two separate and distinct things. The Presbyterian Church, founded about the year 1537, and the church of Christ, established upon the day of Pentecost, are two separate and distinct institutions. The Presbyterian Church does not include all Christians, Presbyterians themselves being the judges; but the church that Christ built upon the rock does include all Christians, as the same thing that makes a man a Christian makes him a member of the church.

All Christians are members of the body of Christ. "So we, who are many, are one body in Christ." (Rom. 12: 5.) This "one body" is the church. "And he is the head of the body, the church." (Col. 1: 18.) The only way a man can get into "the body, the church," is to be baptized into it. "For ye are all sons of God, through faith, in Christ Jesus. For as many of you as were baptized into Christ did put on Christ." (Gal. 3: 26, 27.) In New Testament times God "added to the church" those that believed and that showed their faith by obeying the command to be baptized. The name "Christian" is the family name of God's family, and no man has a right to wear the name until he becomes a member of God's family. God's family is the church. If Mr. Bryan is a penitent, immersed believer in Jesus, he is a Christian, a member of the church of Christ. If he has never been "baptized into Christ," notwithstanding the fact that he is an exceedingly good and great man and has done much in the defense of the Bible, still he is not yet a Christian, a member of the primitive, apostolic, and New Testament church that Christ built upon the rock. There were no unimmersed Christians in New Testament times, and there can be none to-day. No man can be a Christian until he is willing to obey all of the commands of Christ.

Who has not found by experience that when we lift another's load we make our own load lighter?

THE FIGHT.

BY J. W. MADDOX.

By studying Paul's letters to the different congregations, we learn that the church at Antioch is not the only congregation in which he found men not satisfied with the plain, simple teaching of the apostles. To the Galatians he wrote: "I marvel that ye are so quickly removing from him that called you in the grace of Christ unto a different gospel." (Gal. 1: 6.) "O foolish Galatians, who did bewitch you, before whose eyes Jesus Christ was openly set forth crucified? . . . Received ye the Spirit by the works of the law, or by the hearing of faith? Are ye so foolish? having begun in the Spirit, are ye now perfected in the flesh?" (Gal. 3: 1-3.) In other scriptures also we find him firm in correcting evil and exhorting the church to live a righteous, godly life. No teacher lives a consistent life if he does not correct the evil as well as praise the good. Neither is he righteous, who sees error creeping into the church, unless he endeavor to correct it against all opposition. Much error in teaching and practice in this day would be kept out of the church if so many teachers were not such cowards. It is better that two or three worship alone, if they worship as "it is written," than that a thousand worship Him according to human ways. Paul was no coward. As well as praise the good, he as strongly decried the evil. He tells us to follow him. "The things which ye both learned and received and heard and saw in me, these things do: and the God of peace shall be with you." (Phil. 4: 9.) His life was so thoroughly in accord with the directions of the Holy Spirit that he repeatedly tells us to follow him, for he followed Christ. If we follow him, we shall not see evil creep into the church without crying against it.

The occurrence at Antioch shows that it may sometimes be quite difficult to convince some members of the church and prevail upon them to follow the plain teaching of the Holy Spirit. It shows that we may have much disputing and even dissension in order to keep some from going according to their own opinions instead of the teaching and practices of the apostles of Jesus under the new covenant. It is also certainly a warning that we should readily and willingly accept the examples of inspired men under the new covenant rather than the opinions of men, that no division be caused. The reply sent back to Antioch by the elders and apostles at Jerusalem shows that we must not accept teaching that has not the stamp of the Holy Spirit upon it. "Certain . . . have troubled you with words, subverting your souls; to whom we gave no commandment. . . . It seemed good to the Holy Spirit, and to us, to lay upon you no greater burden than these necessary things." (Acts 15: 24-28.) should be satisfied with the things the Holy Spirit has laid upon us and should keep those things. The slightest departure from the examples and precepts of the new covevant is an exceedingly dangerous procedure. Those who instruct must correct any error even though the chief men of the congregation rise up against them. Examples and precepts of the new covenant must be followed, no difference what the chief men and women of the congregation may think about it. In no other way is acceptable union possible in the eyes of the Lord.

All divisions and all denominations have come about, not by men trying to follow the teachings of the new covenant, but because men have ceased to walk by faith. They are not satisfied with the easy, simple teaching of the Holy Spirit, and have preached human opinion to the subversion of souls by the thousands. Even some who have been brought up by Christian parents get sidetracked by this smooth, oily speech. Thus it is seen that those of us who accept the new covenant as our only rule of faith and practice have a hard and never-ending fight to make; for "we walk by faith, not by sight" (2 Cor. 5: 7), and it is often difficult to influence others to so walk. Nevertheless, "the righteous shall live by faith" (Gal. 3: 11); and we are told to "walk as children of light, . . . proving what is well pleasing unto the Lord" (Eph. 5: 8-10).

The most difficult part of the fight is to convince people that it takes a proof of what the will of the Lord is concerning a practice before we may indulge in it. Some of the brethren at Antioch would not believe what Paul said, although he was an inspired apostle. We must not become discouraged now if some refuse to accept the reading of the new covenant as proof of the will of the Lord. How can we learn his will by any other means? We have no inspired men now, but we have the inspired examples of the apostles recorded in the New Testament, and we are expressly commanded to follow them. "Brethren, be ye imitators together of me, and mark them that so walk even as ye have us for an ensample." (Phil. 3: 17.) There is no excuse for making a mistake, for Paul said to these same Philippian brethren: "The things which ye both learned and received and heard and saw in me, these things do: and the God of peace shall be with you." (Phil. 4: 9.) Thus the Philippians were not only told to keep what they had learned by hearing Paul teach, but what they saw him do as well. He also says "the God of peace" would be with them when they did these things. Moreover, we should make it our business to take special account of those who so follow the apostles. Those who do not imitate the apostles cannot be depended upon. They are unstable and will lead weaklings astray. They are always quick to condemn those who contend for a strict adherence to the examples of inspired men. They are the ones who invariably cause division in the church. They are willing to dispense with teaching of the New Covenant for the sake of their own convenience. Such men are not found in just one congregation, but they are found in almost every one; and where they have gained prestige among the members an exhortation not to go beyond the things that are written has but little force. In congregations where such men have the preëminence little or nothing is being done toward teaching the gospel to the surrounding community. They do not confine themselves strictly to the teachings of the apostles, and, of course, cannot influence others. The influence of such men must be stopped, even if it causes dissension and dispute. It caused dissension and dispute at Antioch to spoil the teaching of those who would continue the practice of circumcision, but Paul did not pass the subject by lightly on that account. On another occasion he tells us that he withstood Peter to the face. If these inspired men are our examples, why should we not contend for the primitive faith and practice just as they did? Only those who fear their unscriptural practice are opposed to honorable controversy. The lives of the apostles are filled with controversy against evil both in public and in writing. Those who are opposed to the discussion of religious doctrines are opposed to the examples of the inspired men of God. We gain much by fighting much.

SWEET AND BITTER TRUTH.

BY PRICE BILLINGSLEY.

Brother J. Paul Slayden, than whom I know not a more capable or faithful teacher of the word, once said we now need such pointed and uncompromising gospel preaching as will drive from our ranks all those who really belong in the world and the denominations, if we are to stand any show in converting the world. Whereat a big transgressive preacher spoke up and said that "vinegar does not draw flies!" "Exactly so," rejoined Brother Slayden; "but we are not trying to catch flies."

A popular Western preacher of ours, who thinks a meeting is a success in proportion to the number it gets baptized (being a failure otherwise), boasts that he never criticizes anything or anybody; that, if he finds nothing to commend, he simply leaves off all allusions thereto. His whole thought and preaching are bent upon getting numbers—and the more, the better.

But Jehovah does not want numbers at any price. The first six who approached the Master as though to follow him were turned back with rebuffs. Did Jesus love them? Aye, so much as to come to earth and die to win and save them. Then why reject their advances and brusquely turn them away? Forsooth because their grossly erroneous concepts withheld them from being followers of the Lord. To enter his company unconverted would be suicidal to his cause. Undominated by gospel ideals, not prepared to follow Jesus with all their souls, whatever the cost, they would defeat the gospel and bring the Lord's cause into reproach. Clearly, then, it was the mind of the Lord that if any did not come rightly, fully counting the cost and willingly giving up everything else in order to come, it were infinitely better that they should not come at all. Mark it.

And did inspired men never criticize anything or anybody? Did they refuse to mention anything they could not commend? Verily they did not. Truly did they press the gospel home to the hearts of their auditors. But withal did they evermore hold up to fierce public condemnation the errors of the religious world around them, calling names, and in language which no one could misgather they assailed such as deceptions that would damn the soul. Then let me say with all the emphasis I can summon, that he who does not so preach to-day, regardless of what he may plead or profess in doing otherwise, does not fully preach the gospel. Nor is that man a safe leader among us who, intentionally or otherwise, gives the public the impression that he can beat Christ and the apostles preaching the gospel and saving the lost.

Brethren, the gospel is truth both bitter and sweet; nor does any man preach it fully who deals only in that which is sweet, or who, out of regard for people's feelings or his own standing with them, withholds the bitter. He may preach truth, of course, but not the whole truth which saves the soul. He may be right as far as he goes; but -alas!-he stops short of going far enough. He who preaches only sweet and appealing things, leaving off that which stings and would turn back those whose false conceptions would withhold them from truly coming to Christ -this man is filling the church with the unconverted and is heading the church toward evil days. That such a man may draw many and perhaps baptize more than anybody, I freely admit. But just as sure as we are born, brethren, such great numbers menace our safety and will one day turn the church away from God. In love and humility I protest and sound a warning.

IN THE WEST. BY F. B. SRYGLEY.

I arrived at Des Moines, New Mexico, Saturday, June 27, and began a meeting yesterday—Sunday, June 28. We had three sermons—at 11 A.M. and at 2 P.M. and 7:45 P.M. There were two confessions at the close of the first sermon, three at the close of the second, and one at the close of the third, making six confessions for the day. The baptizing is to be to-day at 4 P.M., and preaching again to-night. "The faithful few" are in a better condition than they were last year when I was here, and we are hoping for a good meeting this time. The meeting started off well, with six confessions the first day. We will continue here over next Sunday, with three services again on Sunday.

From Des Moines I go to Clayton, New Mexico, and expect to begin there next Monday night. The few brethren there have secured the use of the "First Christian Church" in which to hold the meeting. I told them that that was all right, provided these erring brethren would not expect me to touch lightly on their errors as part payment for rent on the house, and that if they did expect this they were doomed to a disappointment. They have agreed to pay a money rent for the house, and I must make it plain at the very beginning that we are under no further obligations. Some of these people expressed a desire to hear the exact difference between them and "us," but I shall try to show them the difference between the Bible and everything that differs from it. I am thinking that there is an open door at Clayton if I can enter it in the right spirit. I shall do my best.

From Clayton I am to go to Pueblo, Col., where I understand we are to use a Methodist house for the meeting. I am expecting to reach Pueblo by July 19. If any one who reads this has any friends in Clayton or Pueblo, and will write to me at Clayton, I will look them up and try to get them interested in the meetings.

The Gospel Advocate is rejoiced to learn of the success that is attending the labors of Brother Srygley, one of its senior editors. Readers of the Advocate who contributed to sustain Brother Srygley in this missionary work will also rejoice to learn of the good in which they are having a part.

NOTES FROM WEST TENNESSEE.

BY JOHN R. WILLIAMS.

The love of salvation for others is not dead by any means in Obion County. Under the preaching of Brother Charlie Taylor, the congregation at Union City had a great meeting. The congregation at Obion, under the preaching of Brother L. K. Harding, had a most wonderful meeting. The congregation at Troy will close, in a day or two, a great and wonderful meeting, conducted by Brother Hall Calhoun. On next Lord's day Brother Allen is to begin a meeting at Cloverdale. Later Brother J. Paul Slayden will come to Glass and then to Rives; Brother Hassell, to Rehoboth; Brother Eph Smith, to Hornbeak; Brother J. D. Tant, to Berea. Then Brother W. A. Roster, a home man, will come to Glady Hill and Turnage; Brother Porter Hogan, also a home man, to Minnick. I myself, a home man, have been called for two meetings in Obion County—Mount Zion and Oak Ridge.

This year I have preached monthly for only two congregations in Obion County—Hornbeak (my home congregation) and Oak Ridge. The balance of my time is given to Lake County and Kentucky Bend.

Brother Gardner Hall, of Trion, Ga., is coming to Bethel and Englewood. I have not learned who will hold the meetings for Christian Chapel, Fremont, Harmony, McConnell, Mount Vernon, Polk, Pleasant Hill, and Refuge.

Brother John C. Taylor is again located in Obion. In Obion County there are some congregations not able to pay a man to preach for them, which should be assisted by the congregations that are able to employ a man for half or all his time. Time after time I have called attention to this matter, and so many times the call has been ignored. I have discovered another thing among some of these weak congregations: they want the biggest preacher in the brotherhood or none. As we have only three or four big preachers in West Tennessee, they just can't go to all these places. So some of you weak congregations will have to put up with some of us weak preachers. Many things that amused me occurred while I was going with the tent into these destitute places supported by the congregation at Glass. Oftentimes they would say to me: When we can't get you, we will get Brother Elam, or Smith, Srygley, Freed, or Hardeman." Mind you, I was not costing them a cent. At the time they said that to me they could not have raised money enough to pay the expenses for any one of these brethren to come to Obion County.

This month (July), forty years ago, I began preaching in Obion County. In a short time I began to go into Lake Counyt. The brethren at Burrus Chapel have built a nice stucco meetinghouse and have invited me to preach the first sermon in it on the fourth Lord's day in this month. The congregation at Jones Chapel (only three that own their homes) have bought the Methodist meetinghouse in Tiptonville, where they intend to build a congregation. The drought has hit that section hard. When they built the Jones Chapel meetinghouse, they asked for no help outside of the neighborhood. Also, they have assisted liberally in building meetinghouses at other points. They now need the help of the brethren to pay for the house in Tiptonville in order to plant a congregation there. Surely the great brotherhood will not permit them, under a crop failure, to bear the burden all alone. Brethren, will you help them, or will you withhold your means and let them suffer or lose the house and the opportunity to establish a congregation in Tiptonville? If you will help them, send to J. K. Craig or W. W. Crafton, Tiptonville, Tenn., and I assure you that every cent will go on the payment of the debt.

I think my health is improving a little and shall soon start on the summer's campaign of meetings. Pray for me that I may be able to go through with it.

NOTICE.

In ordering our Sunday-school literature, embracing "Elam's Notes," or the Gospel Advocate, please give full address of the one who does the ordering-that is, the name, plainly written, and the post office, whether town or city. If city, give street and number; if town, give the rural route and number.

This saves confusion and trouble, and is a great help to the one whose business it is to mail out these orders. For instance, an order has just been received for literature which does not give the town or city at all. The one who gave the order and who fails to receive the literature will doubtless complain that his order has not received proper attention. Following these directions will save time, postage, and complaints.

THE PRIMITIVE CHURCH.

The societies, called churches, constituted and set in order by the ministers of the New Testament, were of such as received and acknowledged Jesus as Lord Messiah, the Savior of the world, and had put themselves under his guidance. The only bond of union among them was faith in him and submission to his will. No subscription to abstract propositions, framed by synods; no decrees of councils, sanctioned by kings; no rules of practice, commanded by ecclesiastical courts, were imposed on them as terms of admission into, or of continuance in, this holy brotherhood. In the apostles' doctrine and in the apostles' commandments they steadfastly continued. Their fraternity was a fraternity of love, peace, gratitude, cheerfulness, joy, charity, and universal benevolence. Their religion did not manifest itself in public fasts nor carnivals. They had no festivals, no great and solemn meetings. Their meeting on the first day of the week was at all times alike solemn, joyful, and interesting.

Their religion was not of that elastic and porous kind which at one time is compressed into some cold formalities and at another expanded into prodigious zeal and warmth. No; their piety did not at one time rise to paroxysms and their zeal to effervescence, and, by and by, languish into frigid ceremony and lifeless form. It was the pure, clear, and swelling current of love to God, of love to man, expressed in all the variety of doing good.

The order of their assemblies was uniformly the same. It did not vary with moons and seasons. It did not change as dress nor fluctuate as the manners of the times. Their devotion did not diversify itself into the endless forms of modern times. They had no monthly concerts for prayer; no solemn convocations; no great fasts, nor preparation nor thanksgiving days. Their churches were not fractured into missionary societies, Bible societies, education societies; nor did they dream of organizing such in the world. The head of a believing household was not, in those days, a president or manager of a board of foreign missions; his wife, the president of some female education society; his eldest son, the recording secretary of some domestic Bible society; his eldest daughter, the corresponding secretary of a mite society; his servant maid, the vice president of a rag society; and his little daughter, a tutoress of a Sunday school. They knew nothing of the hobbies of modern times. In their church capacity alone they moved. They neither transformed themselves into any other kind of association, nor did they fracture and sever themselves into divers societies. They viewed the church of Jesus Christ as the scheme of heaven to ameliorate the world; as members of it, they considered themselves bound to do all they could for the glory of God and the good of men. They dare not transfer to a missionary society, or Bible society, or education society, a cent or a prayer, lest, in doing so, they should rob the church of its glory and exalt the inventions of men above the wisdom of God. In their church capacity alone they moved. The church they considered the pillar and ground of the truth; they viewed it as the temple of the Holy Spirit, as the house of the living God. They considered if they did all they could in this capacity they had nothing left for any other object of a religious nature. In this capacity, wide as its sphere extended, they exhibited the truth in word and deed. Their good works, which accompanied salvation, were the labors of love in ministering to the necessities of saints, to the poor of the brotherhood. They did good to all men, but especially to the household of faith. They practiced that pure and undefiled religion which, in overt acts, consists in taking care of orphans and widows in their affliction and keeping oneself unspotted by (the vices of) the world.—A. #### THE VALUE OF A SOUL.

BY ROBERT S. KING.

Recently our hearts were made to throb as we watched, through the daily papers, the race against death on an eight-hundred-mile trail through a blinding blizzard, and we honor the men and even the dogs that carried the remedy to the diphtheria-stricken children of Nome, Alaska.

The world is thrilled by acts of heroism like this—men risking their lives that they may rescue others who might otherwise perish.

Souls are perishing around us every day, and only the gospel can save them. Think of the value of a soul, which God values more than "the whole world," for he says: "What shall it profit a man, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul? Or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?" (Mark 8: 36, 37.) All the wealth of this wonderful world with all its resources is not to be compared with the priceless value of a soul. Yet, with all their priceless value, we see them going down to destruction every day, knowing that the gospel is the only means of saving them, and that Jesus is the only one with "healing in his wings."

Are we going to fail to deliver the message that Christ our Lord commissioned the church to take to all peoples and nations? "Thus it is written, that the Christ should suffer, and rise again from the dead the third day; and that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name unto all the nations, beginning from Jerusalem." (Luke 24: 46.)

The word of the Lord was to go forth from Jerusalem, and then Judea, Samaria, and the uttermost parts of the earth. Like a pebble thrown into a body of water, the little wave circles keep spreading until they reach the shore. This is God's way of spreading the gospel. Every church should be a radiating center from which the word is sounded out. Every church should do its part toward spreading the glad tidings of salvation.

But alas! How few are doing anything toward giving the gospel to their neighbors, and how utterly we have neglected to tell it to our neighbor who happens to be on the other side of the world! Our forefathers were once in heathen darkness, and where would we be to-day if some good Samaritan had not brought them the gospel?

We laud acts of heroism in saving men from death, but how few of us are concerned about the salvation of a soul! Christ said: "Be not afraid of them that kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul: but rather fear him who is able to destroy both soul and body in hell." (Matt. 10: 28.) We honor men who do acts of heroism; but the real hero is the Christian who faces the distances, crosses the seas, and endures the hardships to tell of Jesus and his love. To him is the promise: "Lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world." (Matt. 28: 20.)

O, why are our brethren so backward in mission work? Think of the priceless value of these precious souls going down in darkness every day, and think of the precious promises that we have to sustain us in taking the message to them. Will you not earnestly and fervently pray the Lord of the harvest that he will send forth laborers into his harvest? The harvest is still plenteous, and the laborers are still as few as they were in Christ's day. Millions in India to-day worship the cow. A man rises in the morning; bows down to his cow and worships; gets up and harnesses her to his plow, and works her, beats her, and swears at her all day; puts her back in the stable at night, perhaps with no supper; then bows down and worships again. We sing, "Rescue the perishing, care for the dying," and then we use all our energy on a people that have always believed in God. This will all be changed when we get some of the "O's" in our prayers. When we can pray for souls as we would pray for something for ourselves, God will hear us.

Read some of David's earnest prayers: "O God, thou art my God; earnestly will I seek thee." (Ps. 63: 1.) "Be merciful unto me, O God; for man would swallow me up." (Ps. 56: 1.) "Give ear to my prayer, O God; and hide not thyself from my supplication." (Ps. 55: 1.) "Forsake me not, O Jehovah: O my God, be not far from me. Make haste to help me, O Lord, my salvation." (Ps. 38: 21, 22.)

When we get the love of souls on our hearts and pray sincerely and earnestly for their conversion; when we get to the point where we can say, "I'll go where you want me to go, dear Lord," and when we are willing to say, "O Lord, send me," something is bound to happen.

Some one has said, "Prayer moves the hand that moves the world;" and: "Nothing lies beyond the reach of prayer, except that which lies outside of the will of God." Every one cannot go; but some can go, others can by their work and support "hold the ropes while they go down into the pit," and others can pray, and, all together, we can take the world for Christ.

Our great brotherhood, the church of Christ in America, has five hundred thousand members, with twenty missionaries in the foreign field, or one to each twenty-five thousand; and if each one of those on foreign soil is maintained at a cost of twelve hundred dollars a year, what will it cost each member of the church? Less than five cents each. Brethren, we will never hear those beautiful words, "Well done, good and faithful servant," if we do not wake up to our responsibility and obligations. Of the twenty we have in the foreign field, twelve are in Japan, among a population of fifty-six millions, and the population is increasing seven hundred thousand each year-a great, suffering, bleeding, perishing people who cannot be deprived of the gospel righteously. "And the angel said unto them, Be not afraid; for behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy which shall be to all the people." (Luke 2: 10.) It is said that one person dies each second, sixty each minute, thirty-six hundred each hour, eightysix thousand four hundred each day, and one million thirty-six thousand eight hundred each year. Appalling, isn't it? Think, they die so fast! What are you doing about the many that go down without hope and without God?

Let me end this article with the prayer that it will stir us to greater things for God, and with the hope that this little poem by an unknown writer will cause us to hurry:

HURRY UP.

We're going down to death each day, A hundred thousand strong: Come, bring the light of gospel truth, And stem this awful throng.

In China there are millions still
Who never heard of Him:
Come, bring the light of gospel truth,
Ere your own light grows dim.

From Africa and India, too,
A plaintive wail goes up:
Come, bring the light of gospel truth;
Come, lift your Savior up.

The Japanese have hungry hearts
Salvation's cup to taste:
Come, bring the light of gospel truth;
There is no time to waste.

The islands sob a restless cry
For missionaries, too:
Come, bring the light of gospel truth;
You've sent so very few.

O brother, sister, hear the cry; Let God your ear attune; And send the light of gospel truth— O, send the gospel soon!

The cry reëchoes 'cross the sea,
From hungry, sighing hearts:
Come, bring the light of gospel truth
To these neglected parts.

ABRAHAMIC FAITH—WHAT IS IT, AND HOW MAY WE KNOW WE HAVE IT?

BY S. H. HALL.

Continuing the study of "The Faith That Saves and Conquers," we will consider what is called "the faith of Abraham."

And it should be settled now that it takes Abrahamic faith to save and overcome the difficulties of life. Paul declares that the promise is to those who are "of the faith of Abraham, who is the father of us all." Abraham is the father of those who "walk in the steps of that faith" which he had. (See Rom. 4: 12-16.) Talk as much as you please about the beauty and wonder of Abraham's faith, but keep your mind settled on the fact that it takes this kind and this degree of faith to save us. The promise is to those who are of the faith of Abraham, to those who walk in the steps of that faith which he had.

How important, then, the question: What is Abrahamic faith? We wish to settle this beyond a doubt.

In order to learn what Abrahamic faith is, we must first study the meaning of one of the simplest sentences in the Bible—viz.: "Abraham believed God, and it was reckoned unto him for righteousness." You will find this quotation in Rom. 4: 3. Paul is quoting it from Gen. 15: 6. He is arguing that justification is by faith, not of works, and quotes Gen. 15: 6 as proof. Read the full statement: "What then shall we say that Abraham, our forefather, hath found according to the flesh? For if Abraham was justified by works, he hath whereof to glory; but not toward God. For what saith the scripture? And Abraham believed God, and it was reckoned unto him for righteousness." (Rom. 4: 1-3.)

I say, again, that you cannot frame a more simple sentence than this one we are studying. "Abraham believed God, and it"—his believing God, whatever that is—" was reckoned unto him for righteousness." How important, then, to believe God! I know of nothing more important. Just to believe God one hundred per cent in any and all things that he says unto us is the greatest thing that we can do in this old world. And when this you do as did Abraham, all your troubles in Bible study are ended, and there is no difficulty that ever confronts you along life's way that cannot be surmounted.

But what is it to believe God, and what did Abraham sure-enough believe when he believed God, which "believing God" was imputed unto him for righteousness?

Well, the answer is very simple. Believing God is simply believing what he says. This is absolutely all it means. The statement, "Abraham believed God," has reference to the disposition that Abraham made of the words God had just spoken unto him. God was so well pleased with the disposition Abraham made of a statement he had just uttered to him that he imputed it unto him for righteousness. And what was that disposition Abraham made of Jehovah's statement? He believed it with all the sense he had. I say, again, your troubles are all ended when you learn, as did Abraham, to make no other disposition of a statement of Jehovah.

Wherever and whenever you read in the Bible about Abraham's believing God—or anybody else, as to that matter—you will find God talking to him, and the expression, "and he believed God," meaning absolutely nothing more than the disposition that the human heart made of what God said. Turn to Jon. 3: 4, 5, and you read: "And Jonah began to enter into the city a day's journey, and he cried, and said, Yet forty days, and Nineveh shall be overthrown. And the people of Nineveh believed God." Would it not be an insult to your intelligence for me to now try to make you understand what the Bible means when it says, "And the people of Nineveh believed God?" Turn to Acts 27: 25 and you find Paul saying: "Wherefore, sirs, be of good cheer: for I believe God?" But what did Paul mean when he said, "I believe God?" It means that he believed what God had just said unto him—viz., that the ship would be lost as a result of the storm which had been raging for many days and nights, but not one man would be lost. He himself says what he means by the statement—viz., "that it shall be even as it was told me."

Now, do not let this fact get away from you: "Believing God" always, without any exception, means that you have one hundred per cent confidence in what God has said to you. This expression always has reference to the disposition we make of God's spoken or written word. This faith "cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of Christ." (Rom. 10: 17.) If God had never spoken unto Abraham, never would it have been written of him that he believed God. So, when we turn back to study the chapter in which this scripture is found, we will find God talking to Abraham. The faith that saves is a compound faith. It is a faith that makes cognizance, first, of God's existence-we must believe that God is; second, it has undoubting confidence in everything that God says. When you examine Heb. 11: 6, you find this in it: "He that cometh to God must believe that he is "-and stop here? No. You must just as firmly believe that "he is a rewarder of them that seek after him "-that is, that he always can be depended on to do exactly what he says. Believing that God is, that he sure-enough exists, is not "believing God." "Believing God" refers to your attitude toward his spoken or written word. You can believe that a thing exists without believing that thing. For instance, I believe that certain mountains and rivers that I have never seen are—that they exist. But never have you heard of man's believing mountains and rivers, for the simple reason that they cannot talk nor write and in this way communicate intelligence or thought unto man. We are spoken of as believing no person or thing except that person who has by means of language communicated thought unto us.

But turn to Gen. 15, from which Paul made the quotation that "Abraham believed God," and see if we do not find God talking to Abraham. "After these things the word of Jehovah came unto Abram in a vision, saying, Fear not, Abram: I am thy shield, and thy exceeding great reward. And Abram said, O Lord Jehovah, What wilt thou give me, seeing I go childless, and he that shall be possessor of my house is Eliezer of Damascus? And Abram said, Behold, to me thou hast given no seed; and, lo, one born in my house is mine heir. And, behold, the word of Jehovah came unto him, saying, This man shall not be thine heir; but he that shall come forth out of thine own bowels shall be thine heir. And he brought him forth abroad, and said, Look now toward heaven, and number the stars, if thou be able to number them: and he said unto him, So shall thy seed be. And he believed in Jehovah; and he reckoned it to him for righteousness." (Gen. 15: 1-6.)

I cannot see how any man could have trouble seeing what the Bible means when it says, "Abram believed God." Well, his believing, undoubtingly, what God said to him on the occasion mentioned above is the thing that was reckoned unto him for righteousness.

The next question in order (but you will have to wait till next week for the answer) is: Why did God prize so highly Abraham's faith in what he said above? Why is it that that faith is so sublime and wonderful? When into this we look, you will come to appreciate more "the faith of Abraham" and see why it is that such faith saves us.

THE MOUTH.

The open mouth in a child is an evidence of adenoids and the open mouth in an adult is proof of nasal interference. Both conditions can easily be remedied by a minor operation. But the open mouth of the man or woman who talks too much is beyond the skill of the surgeon, and often baffles the ability of the educator who is supposed to teach wisdom.—Exchange.

- F. M. Scott, McKinney, Texas, July 3: "G. C. Brewer, of Sherman, Texas, and I closed a fine meeting at West, Texas, last evening, with twenty-four added to the congregation from all sources—eighteen by baptism. Brother Brewer will begin at Russellville, Ala., July 5. C. E. Wooldridge and I will begin to-night at Sylvannah, Texas."

Telegram from A. Smith Chambers, Sheffield, Ala., July 3: "Closed at East Florence Thursday evening. Preached thirteen sermons. One hundred and ten additions, ninety-two or three of which were baptisms. Interest fine. Estimated that above two thousand were in attendance on several occasions. Two of those baptized were from the Catholics."

- J. W. Chism, Texarkana, Texas, July 3: "I baptized two grown ladies last Tuesday afternoon. Our Bible-class studies are well attended, and good hearings at every service. Preaching every Sunday at 11 A.M. and at 8 P.M. Interest seems gradually increasing. We are to begin a series of meetings in a tent next Monday night, to continue indefinitely."
- E. Gaston Collins, Meaford, Ontario, Canada, July 3:
  "I would like to know the addresses of Christians in or near Grand Rapids, Mich.; also any information about any meeting of Christians, publicly or privately, there. There are several 'progressive' (?) churches there, I am told. But I want to get in touch with those who have not been 'corrupted from the simplicity and the purity that is toward Christ.' Kindly send any information to me. It will be of interest to the church and to two young Christians, husband and wife, of Meaford, who now live there."
- S. F. Morrow, Nashville, Tenn., July 6: "Our meeting at Cumberland City, Tenn., closed on Tuesday night, June 30, after continuing over three Lord's days. A. S. Landis did the preaching. Two took membership and eight were baptized. This was Brother Landis' third meeting there. He baptized twenty last year. The brethren went to work and now have a nice house to worship in. This was a great work for them in their financial condition. I hope that congregations who know the sacrifice they are making will help them carry their load. We are taught to bear one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ."

Ray Lawyer, Sinde Mission, Livingstone, North Rhodesia, South Africa, May 29: "I have made more than one hundred miles during the last ten days on preaching tours among the natives. Part of the time I rode the mule, and part of the time Brother Short rode him. There is an awakening among this heathen people which, perhaps, has never been seen before. Women are accepting the gospel more freely. Besides, they are allowing their daughters to attend our day school. Every week sees new Gospels going out in the language of the people. They call for them and pay for them. It would not be good policy to distribute them free, if we were able. Twenty-five have been baotized since the first of the year."

R. P. Cuff preached at Greenbrier, Tenn., last Lord's day, with four baptisms. Brother Cuff will preach at Wartrace, Tenn., next Sunday.

Harvey W. Riggs, Hardyville, Ky., Route 3, July 1: "Last night we began here in a tent near the home of E. H. Smith, with splendid interest."

Wanted—A good physician who is a loyal Christian to locate in a good little town of five hundred inhabitants, situated in a thickly settled farming community in Hempstead County, Ark. This is a good place for the right man, as we have only one doctor and there is enough work for two. If interested, write the elders of the church of Christ, Blevins, Ark.

Charles C. Shockney, Nashville, Tenn.: "I closed a very successful three-weeks' meeting at the New Shops church of Christ, this city, with nine baptized and eleven restored. The congregation is working fine and in harmony with the Word. I will be in Chattanooga, the Lord willing, on the second Lord's day in July, at the Ridgedale congregation. On the third Lord's day in July I will begin at Taylortown, Dickson County, Tenn., to continue one week. On the fourth Lord's day I will begin a meeting at the Liberty church of Christ, in Williamson County, Tenn."

- T. C. Little, Fayetteville, Tenn., June 25: "Dr. J. J. Horton is again in the hospital at Fayetteville, Tenn., a very sick man indeed, with a complication of diseases that make his ever being well impossible. He may recover sufficiently to be able to be about some, but evidently his voice as a preacher is stilled. Brother Horton has labored much among the poor without money or price; therefore, he needs and should have help. Especially those who have shared his labors should extend a helping hand in his hour of need, that his faith in his brethren to bear each others' burdens be not shaken 'while his sun is setting.'"
- J. H. Hines, Montgomery, Ala., July 3: "I have just closed a mission meeting in Milton, Fla., the county seat of Santa Rosa County. When I arrived I found a few discouraged Christians and a town packed full of prejudice. We succeeded in breaking down the prejudice, and the people came out to hear the word. The meeting was a success in many ways. One was baptized, one came from the Baptists, and forty-five out of the sixty members in that community renewed their promise to the Master and agreed to meet on the Lord's day and worship him as 'it is written.' Prof. S. A. Draper, the principal of the high school, a man of no mean ability, will lead this young congregation, and some day we hope to see a strong church in Milton."
- church in Milton."

  W. F. Lemmons, Elmdale, Montana, June 23: "The first meeting of my two months' mission work began on June 6 and closed on June 19, with one addition and a church trouble settled. Thus one important part of my mission has been accomplished. I began at Kerns on June 20, but preached only three times. The meeting was rained out. I shall go to Big Horn to begin on June 27, and Brother Golphenee will go to a place thirty miles away. We will join hands again at Buffalo on July 7. We expect to close the two months' work in a meeting at Casper, Wyoming, beginning on July 18. A small congregation was established there last year by Brethren Golphenee and Campbell, and the cry has come to us to 'come over and help' them in that splendid city. Undoubtedly the greatest institution in the world will help us with their prayers and fellowship. I can hold a meeting beginning on the last Lord's day in August and reaching into September."

  Hall L. Calhoun, Troy, Tenn., June 23: "On Sunday.

Hall L. Calhoun, Troy, Tenn., June 23: "On Sunday, June 7, in a tent seating eight hundred people, the meeting at Albany, Ala., began. Thornton Crews, the minister, and the brethren had made excellent preparations for the meeting. Gilbert E. Shaffer, of Lawrenceburg, Tenn., a splendid song leader, was in charge of the singing, and did his part nobly. Any congregation needing a good leader of singing will make no mistake in getting him. Services at 10:30 A.M. and 7:45 P.M. every day. Splendid attendance at all services. There were sixty-six additions to the congregation—thirty-eight baptisms, two restored, twenty-six took membership. There was not a dull moment in the meeting. The people worked hard, listened earnestly, and seemed happy all the time. God will always bless such efforts. They are most excellent people, and I am sure they will continue to grow and prosper. They are building a beautiful new church house, which will be a great convenience to them. They treated both preacher and singer handsomely in every way."

We are moving to Roberts Switch, near Boma, where we will begin on Sunday."

R. N. Moody, Albertville, Ala., June 25: "I have just read your editorial in the last issue of the Gospel Advocate and am writing to thank you for the good things you are saying in connection with the question of evolution. It seems to me that now is an opportune time for us to make a strong plea for the teaching of Christ and the apostles on the plan of salvation; for it is no worse to deny the Bible account of the creation than to set aside the New Testament plan of salvation, and not one of the denominational preachers will preach it as it is. Would it not be a good idea to get out a leaflet giving the commission as Christ gave it and the preaching of the apostles under it, and showing the inconsistency of condemning evolution and then ignoring what Jesus and his apostles taught, have several thousand printed, and have some one distribute them among the people at the Dayton trial? What think you about it?"

CALLAWAY VERSUS THE UNIVERSITY.

BY F. W. SMITH.

In these days of "spineless" men it is indeed refreshing to note the following, addressed by T. W. Callaway to A. A. Brown, president of the Chattanooga University:

Having had two daughters in your university and a third daughter from Central High whom I had intended sending next term, it was with sincere regret that I note your belief in "theistic evolution" as published in the daily papers.

Having expressed my views on the hypothesis of evolution with its modernistic destructive criticism, when approached by my church members relative to sending children to the university, I would defend the school by saying that you were a minister and I did not believe you held to any kind of evolutionary hypothesis that conflicted with the weekel record of creation as given in Genesis. with the verbal record of creation as given in Genesis.

While I am aware there are several kinds of evolution-

While I am aware there are several kinds of evolutionists, yet they all believe the same underlying hypothesis, that "all the organic beings which have ever lived on this earth have descended from some one primordial form into which life was first breathed." (Darwin.) Or, as the evolutionist, Marion D. Shutler, says in his "Applied Evolution:" "The members of the animal kingdom in all its departments were not, each kind, called into being in a moment, and in fixed and definite and unvarying and unchanging species, but that the whole (animal) kingdom began countless ages ago in a shapeless mass of jelly, and has developed from one form to another up to man."

This gives the essential principles of the guesswork of

This gives the essential principles of the guesswork of both the materialistic evolutionist and of the theistic evolutionist. The difference lies only in the theory of origins of life, and not in the hypothesis itself. If I understand the theory of theistic evolution, it is that God planted the germ from which all living things have evolved, overseeing its progress through the millions of years until it has its progress through the millions of years until it has brought us to our present state.

It seems to me that this theory is but a camouflage, side-stepping, and is simply to quiet the animosity which has arisen against this hypothesis in the hearts of the Christian people. This theory ignores the Bible as being entirely trustworthy. Why should we not join the Unitarians and the modern rationalistic critics and say the Bible is not the revelation from God—that God is found only in nature—thus repudiating the Bible and classifying its revelation as medieval dogmatism?

The theistic evolutionist claims that the account of creation as recorded in Genesis is not supposed to be taken as literal, but only in a "figurative" and "allegorical" sense—that God created, but not as the Bible states it. Now, let us see what the Bible says:

Gen. 1: 1: "In the beginning God created the heaven and the count" and the earth."

Gen. 1: 11: "And God said, Let the earth bring forth grass, the herb yielding seed, and the fruit tree yielding fruit after his kind, whose seed is in itself, upon the earth: and it was so.

fruit after his kind, whose seed is in itself, upon the earth: and it was so."

Gen. 1: 24: "And God said, Let the earth bring forth the living creature after his kind, cattle, and creeping thing, and beast of the earth after his kind: and it was so."

Gen. 1: 26, 27: "And God said, Let us make man in our image, after our likeness: and let them have dominion over the fish of the sea. . . . So God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him; male and female created he them."

Gen. 2: 7: "And the Lord formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul."

Also, my dear sir, I would call your attention regarding creation to the following scriptures: John 1: 3; Heb. 11: 3; Acts 4: 24; Col. 1: 16, 17; Rev. 10: 6.

From the standpoint of education and civic pride, as well as holding in high esteem its president, I have always upheld the university among my constituency, but, in justice to them and to my conscience, I do not feel that I can do so longer. Personally, I would rather my children go to their graves without a higher education than to have their faith destroyed in the inspiration, authenticity, and inerrant word of God.

Quoting from another: "This beast-jungle theory of evolution robs a man of his dignity, marriage of its sanc-

Quoting from another: "This beast-jungle theory of evolution robs a man of his dignity, marriage of its sanctity, government of its authority, the church of her power, and Christ of his glory."

The above is "from the shoulder out," and reveals a courage of conviction so badly needed in the world to-day in upholding the word of God against the attacks of the infidel institutions of learning throughout the land.

If all parents who believe God's word would act toward the colleges and universities that inculcate infidel theories, that destroy faith in the Bible, as T. W. Callaway proposes to act toward the University of Chattanooga, what a blessing it would be to the youth of the land!

A very grave and tremendous responsibility rests upon parents in the education and development of their children, and they should see to it that in having them fitted for places of usefulness in the world their faith in God's word shall not be destroyed by infidel schools, colleges, and universities. It by no means helps the infidel theory of evolution to dress it up as "theistic" that is, to let God have some little hand in the production of man. Emphatically, "theistic" evolution is not a whit better than "atheistic" evolution, for both deny the Bible account of man's creation. One theory teaches that man, like all animate and inanimate things, came into existence by chance; while the other theory has God working through countless ages, evolving from some infinitesimal form of life and myriad species of animal organisms, until man became the finished product!

If I did not believe one word of the Bible, I would be ashamed to even imagine that I had a monkey as one of my ancestors. How any man can retain self-respect or maintain the slightest degree of personal pride that believes he sprang from a monkey is strange indeed. If the learned gentry styling themselves as the most modern and up-todate scientists wish to reject and discard the Genesis account of the origin of man, let them do so; but in so doing, let them not imagine that Christian men and women will be led away from the word of God by their patchwork composed of nothing more than "guesses" founded upon what they suppose they have discovered in nature.

The quotation at the close of Mr. Callaway's letter is worthy of serious consideration-viz.: "This beast-jungle theory of evolution robs a man of his dignity, marriage of its sanctity, government of its authority, the church of her power, and Christ of his glory."

THE CONGREGATION IS ALL WE HAVE.

BY F. B. SRYGLEY.

Sometime ago Brother S. S. Lappin said in the Christian Standard:

It is a strange thing that, with all our organizing outside and above the congregation, we have left so little place for the discussion of local church life, and especially does this seem strange when we reflect that the congregation is all we have.

I quoted this in the Gospel Advocate and, among other things, said: "The statement made by Brother Lappin that 'the congregation is all we have' is literally true, when understood to mean that it is all that we have by divine authority. Everything outside of and above the church is unscriptural and antiscriptural. The Lord help us all to see this truth."

I was certain that Brother Lappin could not stand by the statement that "the congregation is all we have" and maintain his present position. It seemed to me if the brother accepted that statement with full force, that he would be compelled to give up all organizations of a religious character except the congregation; but still I knew he was a very resourceful man, and that when a really smart man is determined to defend a thing he will begin to look about for some ground to put his defense upon. Whether on purpose or by accident, he has cut himself off from the Bible as a basis upon which to lay his claim for the right of organizations "outside and above the congregation." I did not mistake the brother's meaning; for, in commenting on my remark, he said in a recent issue of the Christian Standard:

The interpretation given my words by Brother Srygley is fair. That is, my meaning was, "All we have by divine authority," in the way of organization, "is the local church." I have been saying this for a long time, and every now and then some one takes notice and considers the significance of my words. Of course, a thoughtful writer and a loyal preacher, like Srygley, would see it at once.

Now I know I understood him correctly. "'All we have by divine authority,' in the way of organization, 'is the local church." Then any other organization Brother Lappin has is not by divine authority. Still, in the sentence quoted just before this, he speaks of "our organizing outside and above the congregation." If the brother is right in the statement that the local congregation is the only organization in the Bible, and yet he has an organization outside of the local congregation, then he has an organization which is outside of the Bible. But the worst part of the quotation follows this, when he says this organization is above the local church, which is all that we have in the Bible. Then it follows that, according to Lappin, a thing which is outside of the Bible can be above a thing that is inside of it. This may be true with Brother Lappin, but God forbid that I should ever put anything above the Bible.

I really believe the brother wrote this from his heart, and that it, therefore, fairly represents his attitude toward the things that are in the Bible—that is, that other things are above them both in position and in importance. I am inclined to allow the brother to take this statement back, because, the more I look at it, the less I like it.

The brother, having given up all claims to scriptural authority, falls back on the old, hackneyed argument (?) of meetinghouses, pews, stoves, songbooks, etc., in these words:

But I have never said that that is all we have a right to make use of. It is all we have by divine authority and all for which divine authority should be claimed. But just as the congregation makes use of conveniences and equipment of which the Scriptures say nothing—meetinghouses, pews, stoves, songbooks, communion table, and other such things—so it may make use of any organization that seems convenient and economical in administering its affairs.

I would not object to making use of the things here mentioned; but there is a vast difference in making proper use of such things and putting them above the things which are taught in the Bible, as Brother Lappin has done with his human organization.

Brother Lappin, unintentionally, I think, does me an injustice in the following quotation:

Those stanch congregations with which, as I believe, it may fairly be said that Brother Srygley is identified in his thinking have often been practically paralyzed, or at least inactive, because they were afraid to make use of any sort of means to extend the cause. These others, with which, in my ministry, I have been chiefly concerned, have labored in season and out to accumulate funds for the extension of the gospel, and now find the funds in the hands of men some of whom are indifferent to, if not actually at war with, the fundamentals of the faith.

The two types are equally unfortunate, the one because of its misplaced missionary zeal, and the other because of its "omissionary inactivity."

The brother is mistaken when he says that we of this part of the country have been paralyzed because we were "afraid to make use of any sort of means to extend the cause." What we are afraid to do is to organize anything outside of and above the church to do the work that God ordained that the church should do. The church in the days of the apostles was not "paralyzed, or at least inactive," and the apostles never organized anything outside of and above the local church with which to evangelize the world, and they succeeded most admirably with the work. The apostles never "labored in season and out to accumulate funds for the extension of the gospel," and then found these funds "in the hands of men" who were "at war with the fundamentals of the faith," as he says he and the people he is associated with have done. The churches sent "once and again" directly to Paul, the preacher, and therefore the funds could not get into the hands of men who had denied "the fundamentals of the faith." There is a great difference in using the mails through which to transport the funds and organizing a thing outside of and above the church to do the work which

God has committed to his church to do. "The two types are equally unfortunate," says the brother—that is, I am as bad as his crowd because I stick to the Bible and his goes wrong. I am not asking for Erother Lappin's sympathy, because if going by the Bible makes us "omissionary" in his estimation, I am willing to be what he calls "omissionary." I do omit everything in the organization which is outside of and above that which is in the Bible. We got used to that charge down this way about thirty years ago, when a few of Brother Lappin's sort persuaded some in the Vine Street and Woodland Street churches that we were doing nothing, were paralyzed and inactive, and that if we had one of these outside organizations we would do wonders. The leaders of these two congregations took the matter in hand and organized some of these outside organizations over these churches and drove the faithful out of them, and they now have one other congregation in the city, while those paralyzed, inactive ones have about forty. Keep your sympathy, Brother Lappin, for your own company, who are not "paralyzed" nor "inactive." We had rather be paralyzed and inactive in Brother Lappin's estimation and have only what is in the Bible than to have no paralysis and be active in organizations outside of and over the churches, which the brother says is all that we have by divine authority.

Brother Lappin agrees with Brother Briney that "a missionary society is simply a business organization," while he disagrees with Brother Cowden that "a missionary society is the church at work in a practical business way;" while I do not agree with either one of them. The missionary society is simply denominational machinery to control the "brotherhood," which Brother Errett says the faction among them which is in control accuses the Standard of trying to split. Brother Cowden is making every effort he can to keep down the split; while Brother Lappin is throwing chunks in the way by accusing Cowden of being as bad as I am, if not worse. In Cowden's effort to keep down the split, he makes the following statement: "I have regarded the society as the church at work in a practical business way, and open to every member of the church by virtue of his church membership, the conditions of membership being the same as membership in the church." Brother Cowden evidently uses "the church" here in a sectarian sense, because I have been a member of the church, which is the body of Christ, for many years, and never was a member of a missionary society. But Cowden got into the missionary society at the same time and in the same way he got into his church. Brother Lappin says that Cowden "is starting down the same road I have traversed, and it is a long, rough, disappointing road. I went that way, unsuspectingly, in my boyhood ministry, as did many others." I think, in view of the fact that it deceived Lappin and many others and has Cowden yet deceived, that they had better discard that old "business organization," which Brethren Lappin and Briney both admit has deceived them; but if you do discard it, please do not take up another piece of machinery just like it which will go the same way the ones you now work with have gone.

Brother Lappin admits he is a rebel in his church in these words:

For myself, I am in rebellion. Though I stand alone, I will not go to the place from which Brother Cowden has come, nor to that toward which he is now headed. If I must choose for bedfellow a porcupine or an eel, I will sleep in the bathtub or on the floor. The local church must be free and intelligent, or it is gone, and the mightiest reform of a century is thrown from its course by a battery of swivel chairs and roll-top desks.

Brother Lappin seems to be looking for a place to sleep. Paul says: "And that, knowing the time, that now it is high time to awake out of sleep." And again: "Awake thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light." If Brother Lappin will come within the pale of the church of God and discard everything in religion not found in the Bible, he will then be free from all the porcupines, eels, and swivel chairs of societyism, and he will not have to occupy the bathtub or the floor, either, but will have all the fullness and completeness which is in Christ. "And ye are complete in him, which is the head of all principality and power." Why should a man prefer to domicile himself in the bathtub or upon the bare floor, when he can have every blessing within the church? Poor man! I feel sorry for him. But a way is open for his escape from the porcupines and eels, and that way is to add nothing to the church, which the Bible says is complete. Come on, Brother Lappin; but you must come clean and stand with us on the Bible, and the Bible alone.

CHRISTIAN GIVING. No. 2.

BY E. A. ELAM.

As stated last week, Christian giving embraces two leading purposes—namely, helping the poor and the distressed of various kinds, in various circumstances, and in various ways, and extending the kingdom of God to the extent of supporting those who preach the gospel throughout the world, those at home "who labor in the word and in teaching," and in making all necessary preparations for teaching the truth and for the worship of God.

And, as we have seen, all this must be done from the right motive and liberally, "according as a man hath," of a ready mind, cheerfully, freely, in the spirit of Christ, and to the glory of God. All other giving, even of all one's goods to feed the poor and of one's body to be burned, profits nothing. This lesson hundreds of church members seem never to have learned; or if they have ever learned it, worse still, they have never regarded it in other words, they live in this respect in open disobedience to God.

HELPING THE POOR.

In giving to Paul and Barnabas "the right hands of fellowship" that they should preach the gospel to the Gentiles, James, Peter, and John requested them to remember the poor among the Jews, "which very thing," Paul declares, he "was also zealous to do." (Gal. 2: 9, 10.)

This remembering the poor by Paul was not an irregular, haphazard sort of thing—as one happens to have a little change in his pocket when the case of a poor widow, helpless orphan, or some other distressed one is presented to a congregation in places now; but it was a well-laid and divine plan of continued giving until the inspired purpose had been accomplished. This is God's plan, and must be followed.

At the time of writing his letters to the church of God in Corinth, Paul was instructing and urging the churches of Galatia, Macedonia, and Achaia to make a contribution to the poor saints in Jerusalem. (Rom. 15: 26.)

Different things conspired to make these Christian Jews poor. They had suffered before this from the famine fore-told by Agabus, and which came in the days of Claudius Cæsar (Acts 11: 27-30); Christians, as a rule, were from the poorer classes (James 1: 5-7; 5: 1-7), as they are now; they were robbed of their possessions by their persecutors (Heb. 10: 34); and the troubles which disturbed Jerusalem at the time, which was only a few years before its destruction, increased its poverty.

Paul says the Gentiles were debtors to the Jews, and should "minister unto them carnal things" because they had received from the Jews "spiritual things." This is indeed true, "for salvation is from the Jews" (John 4: 22); "whose is the adoption, and the glory, and the covenants, and the giving of the law, and the service of God, and the promises; whose are the fathers, and of whom is Christ as concerning the flesh, who is over all, God blessed forever. Amen." (Rom. 9: 4, 5.) The gospel, embracing "every spiritual blessing in the heavenly places in Christ" (Eph. 1: 3), contains the "spiritual things" which the Gentiles received from the Jews. The "carnal things" are the material things, or means, with which the Gentiles supplied the wants of the Jews.

This is a true and everlasting principle, and, therefore, is always binding. Teaching the Corinthians that God has ordained "that they that proclaim the gospel shall live of the gospel," Paul asks: "If we sowed unto you spiritual things, is it a great matter if we should reap your carnal things?" Those who in faith and zeal proclaim the gospel and teach the truth sow "spiritual things," and the beneficiaries of such inestimable work have done no great thing in supplying their temporal needs of carnal things. As "spiritual things" are as superlatively higher than "carnal things" as the "heavens are higher than the earth, the supply of "carnal things" in return for the reception of "spiritual things" should be gratefully and joyously abundant; but the true and faithful preacher of the gospel and teacher of the truth, in the spirit of Christ and following Paul's example, makes no demand of "carnal things" at all commensurate with the "spiritual things," or makes no demand at all, because, when he does, he begins to commercialize the gospel, to make merchandise of churches, to destroy his influence, and to lose his soul. Since it is his duty and consuming desire to sow the "spiritual things," it must be the burning zeal of the church, or of all who reap "the spiritual things," to abundantly contribute the "carnal things."

But, while the Gentile Christians owed these "carnal things" to the Jewish Christians as a matter of right, there was no way outside of moral and Christian obligation to force them to pay this debt. Neither is there, outside of duty to God and man, any way of forcing congregations now to contribute cheerfully and abundantly to the support of those who faithfully preach the gospel and teach the truth. If the love of God and fear of perdition do not move them to do this, they are lost.

Furthermore, while through these high and holy motives Paul was endeavoring to induce Gentile Christians to freely meet these obligations to their Jewish brethren, he hoped in this way to bring the two closer together.

Let us study the facts.

Be it remembered that by the widespread work of Judaizing teachers at that time there was an increasing difference between the Jews and Gentiles in the church. These teachers insisted that justification was by the works of the law, that the way for the Gentiles into the church was through the door of Judaism-that is, that the Gentiles must first be circumcised and keep the law of Moses in order to become Christians-saying: "Except ye be circumcised after the custom of Moses, ye cannot be saved." (Acts 15: 2, 5, 19-21; Gal. 2: 1-5; 5: 2-4.) Even the churches upon which Paul had bestowed so much workas the Galatians, for example—were being "quickly removed from him . . . unto a different gospel, which is not another gospel" (since there can be no other gospel); but there were some who were perverting (as there are now) the gospel of Christ. (Gal. 1: 6-10; 4: 15-20.)

Paul was greatly distressed over this sad state of affairs. This distress was embraced in the "anxiety" he felt for "all the churches" (1 Cor. 11: 28), and he did all in his power to avert the evil. His was a magnanimous and heroic spirit. He felt that the general contribution from the Gentile churches to the poor of Judea would not only relieve the wants of these saints, but would also demonstrate the obedience of the Gentiles to the gospel of Christ, would produce abundant thanksgiving on the part of the Christian Jews, and would cause them to long after and to make supplication for the Gentiles. (Read carefully 2 Cor. 9: 12-15.)

From these important facts let us learn a few most necessary lessons, applicable to us:

1. If all preachers felt such "anxiety" for "all the churches" as Paul manifested, and did all in their power to avert differences and divisions as he did, then they would succeed as he did, and blessed peace would prevail. Note what a most productive opportunity Satan found for raising a disturbance, causing division, and forming a Gentile church and Jewish church, or a circumcision church and an anticircumcision church; and but for Paul he would have succeeded. Satan succeeds so wonderfully well along such destructive lines now because so many preachers and other church members are such ready tools in his hands for making trouble and causing factions. Not a few preachers and many church members are experts in causing trouble and producing divisions. Like roaring lions, they go about seeking what churches they can devour. If there is any possible way to stir up dissatisfaction, cause strife, and produce division-all under cover of being loyal (!) to Christ-they can surely find it. They seem to seize upon the first pretext for doing this.

2. Paul with other godly men settled the great and wide-spread troubles of his day according to the will of God—that is, in love—real love as taught in the Bible—forbearance, patience, and by teaching and persuading all to be governed entirely by the word of the Lord; but suffering leng, forbearing one another in love, yielding personal preferences and even personal rights, suffering wrong rather than doing wrong, etc., are parts of God's will. Settling the matter of circumcision in patience, conference, studying the Scriptures, and prayer, is an inspired example, which churches should follow now. If congregations would follow this example, their differences would vanish as frost before the warm rising sun. No one in this conference at Jerusalem (Acts 15) threatened or even mentioned division.

3. Paul healed this widening breach, caused by false teachers, between Jewish and Gentile Christians, by love, embracing the liberal contributions of Gentiles to the poor Jews—the divine way. Let all try this now. This is a beautiful and wonderful lesson. This is a thousandfold better than to be forever snapping at all who in any way may differ from one and to denounce as heretics all who do not accept one's peculiar views or crotchets. "And moreover a most excellent way show I unto you."

4. Since this contribution demonstrated the obedience of the Gentiles to the gospel and produced great thanksgiving in the Jews, can our obedience to the gospel be demonstrated without equal contributions to the cause of Christ, as he directs? Certainly not.

Referring further to Paul's work, attention is called to other facts. Paul did not at first intend, these contributions having been made by Gentile churches, to go to Jerusalem in order to carry them, but thought he would send them by whomsoever the churches would approve; and if he should decide it was meet for him to go, they should go with him. (1 Cor. 16: 3, 4.) Finally, however, the importance of the work decided him to go. Let us read just here Rom. 15: 24-28. While Paul hoped, as stated above, this contribution would win the affection of the Jews to the Gentiles, yet he had some fear that the Jews would not accept it, and he requested the Roman Christians to pray that it might be acceptable to the Jewish brethren. (Read Rom. 15: 30-32.)

NOTICE.

We are receiving frequent calls for back volumes of "Elam's Notes." We regret that we cannot supply this demand; but we are glad to say that they have been all taken, so that we have none left over. But for 1925 we have plenty yet to fill all such orders. We suggest, however, that all who want to supply their library with these "Notes" should order them now before our present supply is exhausted, because the year is now half gone, and it is too late to make another run of these "Notes."

Brother Elam has done his best, after twenty-five years' study and experience, to make this a most useful commentary on the lesson, and we are glad that it is proving so popular with the congregations in America, Canada, and some foreign countries.

Let us suggest, then, that you order what you may need before the present supply is exhausted, and thereby save yourself a disappointment.

We are glad to announce that the volume for 1926 is well on the way, will be completed in due time, and will be equal to any of its predecessors.

THE CAUSE AT QUEBECK.

Sister J. Claude Martin wishes to acknowledge the following contributions to assist in building a much-needed meetinghouse at Quebeck, Tenn.: Lindsley Avenue church of Christ, Nashville, Tenn., $277.25; Sister J. L. Smith, Nashville, Tenn., $5; M. E. Derryberry, Nashville, Tenn., $25; John R. Williams, Hornbeak, Tenn., $1.20; J. A. and J. Y. McQuigg, Fort Worth, Texas, $5; J. O. Cheek, Nashville, Tenn., $100.

The few brethren at Quebeck are much in need of this meetinghouse. Sister Martin kindly donated a lot upon which to build, this lot being well located and the restrictive clause being in the deed. But the brethren at Quebeck, being few in number and poor, greatly need help from others in building.

Such a meetinghouse will be an asset to the cause at Quebeck and will be a great assistance in firmly establishing the cause in that community. All who desire to assist in this work may address Mrs. J. Claude Martin, 2814 West End Avenue, Nashville, Tenn.

QUERY DEPARTMENT

BY H. LEO BOLES

Was it the good Spirit or the evil spirit that led Jesus up into the wilderness to be tempted of the devil? (Matt. 4: 1.)—R. D. MARTIN.

It seems that Jesus was led by the Spirit of God, or the good Spirit. Jesus did not voluntarily enter into temptation, but was divinely led into it for a special divine purpose. The Father brought him into close touch with Satan, and in this sense the Holy Spirit led him.

Is it right for a Christian to partake of the bread and wine with those who claim to be Christians, but still they take part in worldly things?—Angus Berryhill.

The scripture referred to by the querist is: "Wherefore whosoever shall eat the bread or drink the cup of the Lord in an unworthy manner, shall be guilty of the body and the blood of the Lord. But let a man prove himself, and so let him eat of the bread, and drink of the cup. For he that eateth and drinketh, eateth and drinketh judgment unto himself, if he discern not the body." (1 Cor. 11: 27-29.) Our eating is with the Lord, as is our communion. Each one is to examine himself and eat; he is not to examine the other ones. Each one has enough to do to examine himself and pass judgment on himself to see if he is eating discerning the Lord's body. If one does not eat as directed, he "eateth and drinketh judgment unto himself "-that is, he brings condemnation upon himself. No one should eat the Lord's Supper in a light, disorderly way or with an unholy frame of mind. The one eating cannot determine whether the others are eating to please the Lord or not. It is none of his business to determine. He should look at his own heart and see that he does not eat "unworthily."

It seems that the Christians at Corinth had corrupted the worship and perverted the meaning of the Lord's Supper. They acted in a way unbecoming the gravity and sacredness of the Supper, and in so doing brought condemnation upon themselves.

Please explain some points with reference to the twelve apostles. (1) Are you sure that the choosing of Matthias in Judas' place was approved of God, or was it authorized by Christ or the Spirit? (2) In Acts 2: 14, does Peter's standing up with the eleven mean eleven others than himself, or himself included? (3) In 1 Cor. 15: 5, Paul refers to them as "the twelve." Was not this after Judas' death and before the choosing of Matthias? How do you account for that? (4) In Rev. 21: 14, John saw in the foundation of the wall of the city the name of the twelve apostles of the Lamb. Do you not think that the apostle Paul's name would have been here inscribed? (5) I note in Acts 14: 14 that Barnabas is also called an apostle. Was he such in the same sense as the other apostles? I know this is not essential to the salvation of any, neither do I approve of speculation, but I am somewhat disturbed over this question and will appreciate very much your help in the matter.—H. J. Stafford, Ludlow, Ky.

1. Matthias was chosen to take the place of Judas. Jesus had ascended to the Father and had told his apostles to remain in Jerusalem until the Holy Spirit should come. It was about a week from the time that Jesus ascended to the Father before the Holy Spirit, came on the day of Pentecost. During this time Matthias was chosen to take Judas' place. Peter took the lead in directing the minds of the apostles in the selection of Matthias. He quotes Ps. 109: 8 as proof that God would select one to take Judas' place. Peter quotes this scripture as authority for what was about to be done in selecting one to take Judas' place. "And they put forward two, Joseph called Barsabbas, who was surnamed Justus, and Matthias. And they prayed, and said, Thou, Lord, who knowest the hearts of all men, show of these two the one whom thou hast chosen, to take the place in this ministry and apostleship from which Judas fell away, that he might go to his own place. And they gave lots for them; and the lot fell upon Matthias; and he was numbered with the eleven apostles." (Acts 1: 23-26.) The whole affair shows that they proceeded by the authority of God and in fulfillment of the prophecy which had been given concerning the selection of another apostle. There is no disapproval of what was done, and it seems to have received the approval of Jehovah.

2. The scripture referred to reads as follows: "But Peter, standing up with the eleven, lifted up his voice, and spake forth unto them, saying, Ye men of Judea, and all ye that dwell at Jerusalem, be this known unto you, and give ear unto my words." (Acts 2: 14.) This means that there were the twelve apostles and that Peter became the spokesman for the company. "Standing up with the eleven" in this verse means the same as "he was numbered with the eleven apostles" in Acts 1: 26. We know that Matthias "was numbered with the eleven apostles," which made twelve in all; so when Peter stood "up with the eleven," it means that Peter, added to the eleven, makes the twelve.

3. Paul, in writing to the Corinthians, says: "And that he appeared to Cephas; then to the twelve." (1 Cor. 15: 5.) This was before Matthias was chosen, and in reality there were but eleven apostles, as Judas had hanged himself. "The twelve" was an official name for the apostles. Though there were only eleven of them at this time, they were still called "the twelve" because of the original number, which was twelve. "The twelve" is used like "the triumviri" or "the decemviri." These titles were used by the Romans and did not necessarily mean that an exact number were present or were referred to when these official titles were used. Paul seems to have used "the twelve" in a similar way.

4. The scripture referred to here is as follows: "And the wall of the city had twelve foundations, and on them twelve names of the twelve apostles of the Lamb." (Rev. 21: 14.) I do not know what names were inscribed on these foundations. No one could state with assurance that the apostle Paul's name was one of them; it might have been, but we have no way of knowing. "Three," "five," "seven," and "twelve" have been called sacred numbers. We have the "twelve" sons of Jacob, the "twelve tribes," the "twelve stones" from the river Jordan, the "twelve apostles," the "twelve gates," the "twelve foundations," and "the twelve angels." Revelation abounds in figurative language, and the number "twelve" is used frequently in this book of the New Testament. I do not understand that in "the holy city," or heaven, there are literal walls with literal foundations, but that these are expressions used by the writer in a figurative sense.

5. Yes, Barnabas is spoken of as an apostle in Acts 14: 14. He was not an apostle in the same sense that Peter and John or even Paul were apostles. The word "apostle" comes from the Greek compound, "apo-stello," which means one sent out. Barnabas was sent out by the church at Antioch, and in this sense he was an apostle.

Please answer the following questions in your query column: (1) Would not 2 John 9-11 keep any true Christian from contributing in any way to the erection of buildings to be used by sectarians? (2) Would not the same passage, as well as others, keep a true Christian from addressing denominational ministers as "Brother So-and-So?" (3) Does the Bible anywhere indicate that there will be either graduated punishment or different degrees of reward in heaven? If not, please explain the passage which says that "some shall be beaten with many stripes?" (4) We know that the days of the ancients began at sundown and were so measured. That being the case, would not our first day of the week (Lord's day), in the sight of God, begin Saturday at sundown and continue until the setting of the sun on Sunday? Jesus seems to have risen before dawn. So, if we count the Lord's day from sunup to sunup, the disciples learned of his resurrection on Monday. The reason for my asking this question is found in the fact that many Christians observe the Lord's Supper on Sunday night. Is that time to be regarded as part of the Lord's day?—J. H. CHILDRESS, Tipton, Okla.

1. The scripture is as follows: "Whosoever goeth onward and abideth not in the teaching of Christ, hath not God; he that abideth in the teaching, the same hath both the Father and the Son. If any one cometh unto you, and bringeth not this teaching, receive him not into your house, and give him no greeting: for he that giveth him greeting partaketh in his evil works." (2 John 9-11.) If any one should come and bring not the teaching of Christ, or should deny Christ and his teaching, this one is to receive no encouragement. This scripture expresses a general principle which should govern all Christians. No Christian should say or do anything that would in any way encourage one in teaching error or in doing wrong. A Christian must be for all that is good and right, giving to whatever is right his full sympathy and encouragement, and must be opposed to all that is wrong. This scripture expresses that general principle. If we encourage and help all that is good and right, we become partakers in that which is good and right; if we give encouragement to any error or wrongdoing, we become partakers to that extent in the error and wrongdoing.

2. I think that it would forbid one's calling a denominational member or preacher "brother," if by so doing one encourages denominational error. But it does not necessarily follow that to call one "brother" gives indersement to whatever errors that one may have. The word "brother" may be used as a polite term or a courteous greeting without bringing one into fellowship with the life or teaching of that one. The spirit of Christ and the teaching of his word impose upon us the duty of common courtesy and politeness toward our fellows. It is no mark of Christian culture to be blunt and discourteous to those who are in error. The scripture above quoted does not give any license to be discourteous or unkind to any one.

3. The following scriptures bear upon the question: "And that servant, who knew his lord's will, and made not ready, nor did according to his will, shall be beaten with many stripes; but he that knew not, and did things worthy of stripes, shall be beaten with few stripes. And to whomsoever much is given, of him shall much be required; and to whom they commit much, of him will they ask the more." (Luke 12: 47, 48.) "Jesus answered him, Thou wouldest have no power against me, except it were given thee from above; therefore, he that delivered me unto thee hath greater sin." (John 19: 11.) scriptures teach that there will be degrees of punishment. Evidently there are degrees of guilt. So there must be degrees of punishment. We recognize this principle every day in dealing with our children and fellows. The deeper the guilt, the more severe the punishment. This principle is recognized by the laws of our country. Some criminals are given longer sentences and heavier fines than others. This is true in this life. Whether degrees of punishment are extended only in this life, I do not know. Nothing is said about different degrees of punishment in hell or in the future life. It may be that the different degrees of punishment belong only to this life. I am not prepared to say that they belong to the future state of man; and as there are no plain declarations of God's word on the question, I refrain from expressing myself.

4. The ancients had different times for beginning the day. The Babylonians reckoned the day from sunrise to sunrise; the Umbrians, from noon to noon; the Romans, from midnight to midnight; the Athenians, from sunset to sunset. The Hebrews adopted the reckoning of the Athenians, or Greeks, and in reading the Old Testament we should bear in mind that the day was from sunset to sunset. (See Lev. 23: 32.) The Jewish Sabbaths were reckoned from sunset to sunset. Sometimes a day means the time from daylight till dark. After the exile the Jews divided the day into twelve hours and the night into twelve hours. (See Matt. 20: 1-12; John 11: 9; Acts 23: 25.) Six A.M. would correspond to the first hour, nine A.M. to the third hour, and twelve M. to the sixth hour. The hours were longer during the longer days and shorter during the shorter days; they always counted twelve hours between sunrise and sunset. I do not think that by any process of reasoning we can contradict the scriptures which say that Jesus arose from the dead early on the first day of the week.

When do people come into contact with the blood of Christ?—LESLIE G. THOMAS.

This is a very important question, since no one can be saved without the blood of Christ. We may not be able to tell how the blood of Christ cleanses from sin, but we should know when we come in contact with it. "But if we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus, his Son, cleanseth us from all sin." (1 John 1: 7.) This scripture, with others of like import, teaches that we are cleansed by the blood of Christ. The church of our Lord has been purchased with his blood; it has been sanctified by his blood. As the tabernacle and all that pertain unto the law governing its worship were sealed and sanctified by the blood of animals, so the church of our Lord and all of its laws and ordinances have been sealed by the blood of Christ. The blood of Christ is not reached by any one until that one comes to the church; and we can come to this blood only by becoming obedient to the commandments of our Lord. By faith in Christ the heart is purified; by repentance we turn from sin: and by baptism we are brought into Christ, into his body, which is the church, where "the blood of Jesus, his Son, cleanseth us from all sin." No one who refuses to obey the commandments of God can come in contact with the blood of Christ; all who obey from the heart the gospel come in contact with his blood. As all of the laws and ordinances of Christ are sanctified by his blood, we come in contact with his blood when we obey these commandments. The Scriptures clearly teach that no man can come to the blood of Christ and enjoy its cleansing power except as he comes to the word of God and walks in the commandments of the Lord. The alien sinner comes in contact with the blood of Christ by obeying the gospel terms of salvation; the erring child of God comes in contact with the blood of Christ by obeying the commandments of God as applicable to him.

Is it right for a woman to pray in public?—Mrs. SARAH FOSTER, Shaw, Ga.

The scriptures which bear upon this question are as follows: "As in all the churches of the saints, let the women keep silence in the churches: for it is not permitted unto them to speak; but let them be in subjection, as also saith the law. And if they would learn anything, let them ask their own husbands at home: for it is shameful for a woman to speak in the church." (1 Cor. 14: 33-35.) "Let a woman learn in quietness with all subjection. But I permit not a woman to teach, nor to have dominion over a man, but to be in quietness." (1 Tim. 2: 11, 12.) I suppose that the querist means to ask if it is scriptural for a woman to lead the prayer in the public assembly. If this is what is meant, then I answer, No; it is not scriptural. Of course, a Christian woman should pray in the public assembly or anywhere else, but should not lead in the prayer. She can pray and should pray as others are leading the prayer.

BIBLE CROSS WORD PUZZLE

FOUR eleven-letter words cross on the outside of this puzzle and there are eight six-letter words which meet at the center. Once you get the long ones you will have many clues to those which lead in to the central cross from the outside.

How to Solve a Cross Word Puzzle

To work out this puzzle, the white spaces must be filled with letters forming words answering to the various horizontal and vertical definitions given below. The horizontal and vertical words are not the same, but each gives a clue to the other. The first letter of each word is indicated by a number which refers to the definitions listed below.

It is advisable to first fill in, in both directions, those words which you know to be correct. These will furnish hints to those words which you do not know or had merely guessed at. When the puzzle is solved correctly, the letters in the white spaces will spell words both borizontally and vertically. The black spaces are the blind spots of the puzzle and merely form the pattern, incidentally designating the ends and beginnings of the words contained in the puzzle.

SHELBY.

William Henry Shelby was born on September 10, 1885; was married in 1912 to Miss Nannie Evans; was baptized in 1913; and died on April 14, 1925. We laid his body away at Mount Zion, near Dotsonville, in Montgomery County. Brother F. P. Taylor married him, baptized him, and helped to conduct his burial services. He is survived by a Christian wife and four children, with a host of friends and relatives, who loved and respected him, and brethren who loved him for his work's sake. He was a successful farmer, and was indeed a husband, a father, and a Christian. Not only will he be missed at home, but he will be missed in the work of the church. May God give us more men and women like him.

PORTER.

Sister Grace Porter, wife of Brother Ross Porter, was born on June 8, 1894, and died on December 8, 1924. All that loved ones, skilled physicians, and the trained nurse could do was done to prolong her life, but all in the country of the leaves to mourn her death done to prolong her life, but all in vain. She leaves, to mourn her death, a devoted husband and four children. Grace obeyed the gospel some years ago and became a member of the church of Christ. She and her husband were both reared in Lawrence County, Tenn., but were living in Georgia at the time of her death. Her husband brought her body back to their childhood home for burial. A large crowd of friends and loved ones assembled at the Belew graveyard to show their love and sympathy for the family. #### BREWER.

On May 3, 1925, at her home on Brush Creek, in Lawrence County, Tenn., the gentle spirit of Mrs. Susan Etta Brewer left its earthly tenement of clay and winged its flight to the pearly gates. She was modest, quiet, and retiring in disposition; loving, kind, and gentle toward all with whom she came in contact. Her beautiful life is more effectual than any sermon or tribute that could be whom she came in contact. Her beautiful life is more effectual than any sermon or tribute that could be spoken or written of her. Her memory will ever live in the hearts of those who knew and loved her best, and the influence of her life will be felt by many. From birth her life was spent in the same neighborhood where she died. She was married to Billie Brewer, and together they lived for thirty-five years. To this union were born eight children—four boys and four girls. Two girls and one boy died in infancy. She leaves a husband, three sons, two daughters, besides brothers and sisters and a host of friends, to mourn her death. To the sorrowing ones I would say: Weep not as those who have no hope; she is not dead, but sleepeth. Sister Brewer was born into the kingdom of God about eight years ago, and ever after she lived a devoted Christian life. May God comfort the sorrowing ones and heal their broken hearts, and may they at last be reunited with those they love in that home where there is no more death, neither sor-row nor crying. The writer conrow nor crying. ducted the funeral services.

KINCAID.

Sister Emma Elizabeth Kincaid, wife of John W. Kincaid and daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Richardson, whe of Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Richardson, was born on January 15, 1877, and died on December 10, 1924, at her home in Ethridge, Tenn. She obeyed the gospel early in life and thus became a member of the church of Christ. She died, as she had lived, in the Lord. She leaves her husband and four children. In her childhood home she leaves father, mother, three brothers, and three sisters to mourn her death. She suffered long and much, but with true Christian patience. She was ready to go, and asked her loved ones to meet her in heaven. Sister Kincaid lived a Christian life devoted to the church, friends, and loved ones. The home seems all broken up since mother has gone away, but the influence of her beautiful life is still with them. After funeral services by the wavereechure beautiful life is still with them. After funeral services by the writer at the church of Christ in Lawrenceburg, the body was laid to rest in Mimosa cemetery. A large number of friends and loved ones were present to show their love for this good woman and sympathy for the bereaved. Beautiful floral designs were placed upon the casket and mound by the hands of those who loved her.

HALL.

Georgia Stephenson Hall was born on February 7, 1879. She grew to wcmanhood and spent most of her early life in Hickman County, Tenn. while yet young she became obedient to the faith, by which she obtained the remission of sins, thus becoming a child of God, and enjoyed the promise of a rich inheritance with the saints "over there." On August 3, 1898, she was married to Arthur C. Hall. Five children were born to them, all of whom, with the father, are still living. She had the pleasure of seeing all of her children, except the youngest (who is only a child), born into the family of God. For the past seventeen years Sister Hall had been a constant sufferer, and much of the time unable to walk, yet she never the time unable to walk, yet she never wavered in faith or failed to take comfort in the promises of God. It was my privilege to speak a few words of consolation and encouragement to the bereaved ones while we were assembled at the Chapel Avenue of the property of the part of the property and the Chapel Avenue of the property and the property of the part of the property and the property of the part of the property and the property of the part of the property of the part of the property of Church to pay a tribute of love and respect before laying the body to rest in Spring Hill Cemetery. ### SULLIVAN.

Brother J. N. Sullivan died in Shelbyville, Tenn., on June 17, 1925. If he had lived till next October, he would have been eighty-seven years old. When I began to preach in Bed-ford County, Brother Sullivan was one of the active members at New Hermon, on Little Flat Creek. He was always faithful in his attendance at the meetings, liberal in his support, and conservative in his advice. He was a man of fine judgment both of people and of facts. Some one said to me one time that he was the best lawyer in the county, though he never studied law a day in his life. His counsel was usually good on all questions that arose in the church or n the community in which he lived. He was a generous man, willing to use his means for anything in which he had faith; and he obeyed that in-junction of the apostle which says: "Use hospitality one to another with-out grudging." He was a prince in entertaining his brethren in his home, and never seemed happier than when a large part of the congregation went home with him for dinner. Brother Sullivan was an industrious man who would always have something to do, and he was found in an unconscious condition in his garden, where he had gone to cultivate his vegetables. On the morning of June 15 he left home and went to the home of a neighbor on business, but on his return he came through his garden and began to pull up the weeds, and there in the back of his garden he fell with a stroke of paralysis, and remained there, unseen by his anxious friends, for the greater part of the day; but in the late afternoon he was found. He never regained consciousness, and passed "over the river" two days later. In life and in death he showed that he was diligent in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord. Brother Sullivan was my friend, and he was the second man to send me and he was found in an unconscious he was the second man to send me money with which to make my trip to the West. I shall expect to see him in that city "whose builder and maker is God." F. B. SRYGLEY.

HOW LONG WILL IT TAKE TO CONVERT THE WORLD AT THE RATE WE ARE GOING?

BY IONE E. SOWELL.

I noticed sometime ago in the Gospel Advocate that a certain young man who had a college degree wanted to get a location in a town where there was a good, live, working congregation.

I wonder and would like to make inquiry through these columns if there could be a worthy man found somewhere with a college degree (which would be necessary to meet the requirements of the State of North Carolina to teach there) who would not like a location in a town where there is no congregation of Christians at all—that is, none who follow the old paths which we believe are right.

Asheville, N. C., is in the land of the sky. The grandeur of the mountains, the highest east of the Rockies; the pure air; the water, clear as crystal, cool and soft, coming from the springs high in the mountains; the beautiful wild flowers—the azalea, the rhododendron, etc.; with the most perfect highways running in every direction from the city—all these make it an ideal spot in which to live.

In this city there are hundreds, perhaps thousands, of physically sick, far from home and friends, alone in the sanitariums and boarding houses, who need some one to visit them, to cheer them, and to let them know they have some one near to look after them, some to really care. There are hundreds, perhaps thousands, of spiritually sick who are in dire need of some one to point them to the Lamb of God and to show them the true and living way; and yet in all these years the Jerusalem church (Tennessee) has not been scattered even two days by rail to this beautiful city to tell the old, old story of Jesus and his love.

Let us show by our actions that we speak where the Bible speaks by doing the things it says and following the manner of those who were "scattered abroad" and who "went forth everywhere preaching the word."

What Asheville needs is not a protracted meeting of two or three weeks—that would be a waste of time and energy—but some man who has faith, zeal, and plenty of courage to live among those people and do what he could for them. Teachers get much better salaries in North Carolina than in Tennessee, and I wonder if some one will not look into this now and see what he can do by fall in the way of locating in Asheville.

It is much more pleasant to be in a place where there is already a good, live, working congregation; but the Master came to seek and to save the lost, and there is a work to be done in the city of Asheville, as well as many other such places, that would add many stars to one's crown.

A good man there is in Asheville, who is called the "Good Samaritan," who goes about doing good, who visits these sick people, and they love him very much; but what a wonderful opportunity the church is losing, and what a splendid chance to preach the gospel! Of course there is no church house of our brethren; but I, for one, would gladly contribute monthly to the rent of some place to meet on Lord's day, and I know there are others who would.

Can something be done for the Master in Asheville?

If we were all busy as busy could be doing some constructive work for the Master, we would not have time for so many church troubles, so much argument and controversy among ourselves. "And they that were scattered abroad went everywhere preaching the word."

"ONLY A WOMAN."

Here is a statistical item from the Schwenkfeldian:

"And Only a Woman!-In the thirty years of my married life I have served 235,425 meals, and made 33,190 loaves of bread, 5,930 cakes, and 7,960 pies. I have canned 1,550 quarts of fruit, raised 7,660 chicks, churned 5,540 pounds of butter, and put in 36,461 hours sweeping, washing, and scrubbing. ### From the Brethren

Russellville, Ark., June 15.—Brother J. W. Chism gave us a treat on Bible evidences, in the courthouse at Russellville, recently, for two evenings, and preached the gospel three nights following at Mill Creek Church. Four additions since that time. The Christian Church and other denominations often tell us how they love us, but their religion would not permit them to lend or rent us a house for a couple of lectures on Bible evidences. "Consistency, thou art a jewel."—C. G. Casey.

Lake City, Fla., June 27.—The meeting at Lake City, which began on the second Sunday in June, closed on Thursday night without any visible results, to the regret of the little band of Christians here; but we were given some of the best spiritual food during this meeting that it has been ours to enjoy in many years, and I am sure that God will bring much good out of these lessons. Brother Frank Baker, of Berry, Ala., did the preaching. We do most heartily indorse Brother Baker and commend him to the brotherhood wherever he may go as one who preaches the truth without fear or favor. He made his home with us while here, and his deportment was that of a Christian gentleman, a true husband, and a faithful and loving father. We need more such preachers and less of the other kind.—J. O. Barnes.

Clovis, New Mexico, June 24.—I am now in a meeting at Melrose, some twenty-seven miles west of Clovis. I delivered two lectures in the high school on Friday and Saturday evenings to large crowds, and began preaching at the little church house on Sunday morning at eleven o'clock. Brethren, there are but few of the one faith here, and the people have failed in crops for three or four years, and it looks like they will fail again this year; but they need the gospel, and I am on the ground preaching. Now, will you not help me? I am not staying at home waiting till the money is made up before I go, but I am here preaching the truth. I wrote about the cry for preaching over at Floyd, west of Portales; and there are a dozen places where the gospel is unknown wanting me to preach. I just cannot do it at my own expense, and the church at Clovis cannot do the work needed over this country without some help. I want to hold a meeting at Endee, New Mexico. I have a daughter living near there with no church privileges at all. Address me at Clovis, N. M., Box 57.—D. S. Ligon.

Sweetwater, Texas, June 24.—On June 2 I went to Rising Star and preached four nights to appreciative crowds. Rising Star is the home of Brother G. A. Lambert, who preaches for the church there half time and at near-by places half time. He is doing a fine work there and in the surrounding territory. He is loved and respected by the people of the town. Our short meeting resulted in one restoration. On Monday night, June 8, I began a meeting with home forces out at the United States Gypsum Plant, three miles from Sweetwater, and continued it over June 15. There were no visible results, but we feel that good will result. Brother John M. Rice visited this meeting in passing through and preached one night for me. On Monday, June 15, a man who lives at Levelland, in passing through on his way home from Big Spring, hunted me up and demanded baptism, and, upon his making the good confession, I baptized him. Brother U. R. Forrest, of Brownwood, was with us on June 17, 18, and gave us two excellent sermons on the line of practical Christianity. The Brownwood church is a good one, and is fortunate in having Brother Forrest to help in the work of the Lord. The work here is fine. Two good services last Sunday, with splendid crowds. Next Sunday closes my first year's work with the Sweetwater church, and it has been pleasant and encouraging. Much good has been accomplished. We are thankful and take courage to press on in the fight. The Lord willing, I will begin another year's work here the first of September. I shall begin my summer's meetings at Big Spring next Monday, to continue over the second Sunday in July. Brother V. T. Smith, of Sweetwater, is to lead the song service. The meeting has been well advertised, and we hope to do much good. Our meeting here, with Brother E. W. McMillan to do the preaching and Brother N. W. Allphin to lead the song service, will begin on July 26 and close on August 9. The meeting will be preceded by a week's song drill, beginning on July 20.—W. D. Black.

MERCY, PEACE, AND LOVE. BY H. C. FLEMING.

"Mercy unto you, and peace, and love, be multiplied." (Jude 2.)

In the above salutation to those who are sanctified by the Father and preserved in Jesus Christ and called, these are three very important things to be multiplied by those who are members of the body of Christ.

First, there is a pleading for God's mercy; and this extends to us in the present age, for all have sinned and come short of complete obedience; therefore, without the mercy of our Heavenly Father, no man, woman, or child of mature age could be saved. But, thank God, he is merciful and long-suffering, not willing that any should perish, but that all come to repentance; therefore, all servants of Christ Jesus should be merciful to all mankind, especially to those of "the household of faith." Be not angry at them, but plead for God's mercy upon them, that it may lead them to repentance.

The next is for peace, and this is necessary among all true disciples and is often repeated. Be at peace among yourselves. Without this peace, there will not be much of a feeling from one to another in reference to mercy; there will be no peace and harmony.

In order to have peace, all must strictly follow the examples and commandments of the Lord Jesus and his apostles, without using harsh expressions or uncalled-for language, belittling the thoughts of the weaker ones, thereby producing hatred instead of peace.

God loved us while we were yet in sin, and his command is often repeated that we should love one another.

The expression in the quotation at the head of this article is that mercy, peace, and love may be multiplied, and anything that is multiplied is increased as many times as there are units in the multiplier; so, then, if each one of us will multiply mercy, peace, and love as many times as there are units of these in the Bible, they will dwell in the body of Christ, and this will bring forth much fruit unto perfection and be counted as many jewels in our crowns of rejoicing at the great judgment day.

Surely, then, we all should exercise mercy, be at peace among ourselves, and love one another with a pure heart fervently.

- "I have received sample copies of your Lesson Helps and examined them. I pronounce them as good, so far as I can think, as can be made." (Ira C. Moore.)
- "We are using your Sunday-school Lesson Helps at Fairfax church of Christ, this oity, and think they are good. We have no criticism to offer." (M. P. Lowry.)
- "I am glad to commend the Bible Lesson Helps issued by the Gospel Advocate Company. They cannot fail of being helpful to any church using them." (C. A. Norred.)
- "The Quarterlies are fine. They should be a great help to the Bible student. I would be glad if Bible classes that do not now have them would take up their use." (R. P. Cuff.)
- "Your Quarterlies received and briefly examined. They show that much time and care have been exercised in their preparation. They are clear, scriptural, and to the point." (E. L. Whitaker.)
- "I think the Quarterlies very instructive and helpful in the study of the Scriptures both in the home and in the public assembly, and it will give me pleasure to commend them to all the faithful workers in my field of labor." (J. D. Jones.)
- "The Sunday-school literature that is published by the Gospel Advocate Company I can heartily recommend to any one who is in search for good helps on our Sunday-school lessons," (Robert E. Wright.)
- "A complete assortment of the Sunday-school literature published by the Gospel Advocate Company was sent me recently. Having examined it carefully, I am glad to say I consider it excellent, and gladly commend it to congregations, teachers, and classes." (T. B. Larimore.)
- "As a whole, I think your Lesson Helps far surpass other literature of its kind. Here in this great mission field (Louisiana) where we have placed them, many comparisons have been made between them and both the denominational and our society brethren's literature, and at no time have your Lesson Helps come off second best." (C. C. McQuiddy.)
- "It is a pleasure to write a word of commendation of Brother Elam's Notes on Bible School Lessons. They are the product of one who has given the greater part of his life to the study and teaching of God's Word. They are true to the Bible, comprehensive, and scholarly. If you love the truth, you will be delighted to study with him these wonderful lessons." (A. G. Freed.)
- "Brother E. A. Elam's Notes, as published annually, is, in my judgment, sortpural and the best thing of its kind I have ever seen or that is published to-day. Everybody ought to have a copy and preserve it for study and reference. Brother Elam's twenty-five years' work, if every year should be bound in a separate volume, the twenty-five volumes would be a great addition to any library. (C. M. Pullias.)
- "At the Central church of Christ in Fort Worth we have been using in our Bible school Elam's Notes and other literature of his. For a great number of years the writer of this has felt that Brother Elam was one of the best-prepared men in the brotherhood for the preparation of such literature. His Notes, in our best judgment, represent, or reflect, the best efforts he has ever made. Both as an elder of the congregation and as a teacher in our Bible School, I have very great pleasure in indorsing his Notes. To the extent that an expression of our views is of value, I assure you we are very pleased to give it." (J. G. Wilkinson.)
- "I have used Elam's Quarterlies for years. They are superior to any that I have seen. Elam's Notes on Bible School Lessons are much fuller than they. They give the historical setting as to time and place that is needed and valuable. They give so many scriptural citations and references—Scriptural citations and references—Scriptural that introduce the text or corroborate the text—that the average student may know the geography, the history, and the full meaning of the lesson. They give so many lessons, deducted from the copious citations of Scriptures, that the student may know more perfectly God's will. For years I have used Peloubet's Select Notes. I compare them weekly. I do not hesitate to say that Elam's Notes are infinitely superior, if you want to know the Bible." (C. F. Holt.)

WHICH WAY ARE YOU PITCH-ING YOUR TENT?

BY W. S. LONG.

In Gen. 13: 12 we have this language: "Abram dwelled in the land of Canaan, and Lot dwelled in the cities of the plain, and pitched his tent toward Sodom."

Following this statement we have the awful destruction of Sodom, the tragic career of Lot and his entire family, and the miserable failure with which his life ended. Out of this story comes the question: Which way are you pitching your tent?

Lot was grasping and anxious to get rich. Like many of this day, he thought more of making money than he did of the care and training of his children. He could lead his children into that great city, but he could not lead them out. They became charmed with the worldliness of that great city and forgot God and a father's advice. Lot found a good place to get rich, but a poor place to rear his children. His children were worth more to him and his future happiness than all the cattle and all the money of a million worlds, but he did not realize this.

Is not the sad story of Lot being repeated by thousands of Christians to-day? Turn your eyes back a few years, and you can see thousands of young couples starting life together in the quiet village or in the country on the farm. Here they could go to the house of worship every Lord's day and worship God as "it is written" in his word, and they did go.

The call of the great city offered big wages, and by and by they gathered all together and went to the city.

In a few years five or six little children became grown men and women, and, like Lot's children, are living in sin-away from God. doubt those children pure and tender and obedient when Lot started toward Sodom: but when the angels made Lot a visit, they found these same children scoffers.

It is no crime to live in the great cities. You may live in the cities and live faithful to God; but-alas!how many are so living! The cities need good men to save souls from sin and corruption, and you could be a blessing to the people of your city if you would make God first. The trouble with Lot's children was, they were not able to withstand worldliness and the many temptations of the city. It is the trouble to-day with thousands of people.

In the city in which I am now writing there are to-day more than a million people. Thousands of young people have come here who were good members of the church in the little home town in Tennessee, Kentucky, Indiana, Illinois, Alabama, or some other State; but when they reached the city they let the charms of Satan lead them step by step into a life of disobedience and corruption. Some have become infidels; some are leading the fast life, like Samson did; others are not so wicked, as they think, but have become so indifferent that they have forsaken God and are worshiping the desires of their own

It was a terrible hour when God rained fire upon that great city and destroyed every soul in it by fire. No one was looking for it, and none would believe the words of the two angels. How will it be with you, my There is coming a day brother? when God shall rain fire upon this earth and we will all stand before his great judgment throne to give an account of the way we have lived here. Brother, where are you to-day? Is your tent nearing Sodom? Parents, where are your children to-day? Have they quit going to the house of worship? Have they become like the people described in Rev. 3: 15, 16? Indifference is one of the worst sins in the world. Let those who have sons or daughters in the great cities write them. Put them in touch with the true church and urge them to be faithful. Send them the Gospel Advocate, or some good reading matter like that, and let them know you are praying for their eternal salvation. Send them the address of the house of worship and put them in touch with the elders of the church.

If you have relatives or friends in Detroit who are members or in whom you are interested, please send me their names. They will find a welcome at the Vinewood church of Christ, corner of Vinewood and Dix (Baker car).

Edited by Charles H. Gabriel. Of this book and its editor, T. B. Mosley, a first-class music composer, says: "It is the best book of the kind I ever examined. It is indeed a high-class collection of real songs, suited for children, the most beautiful melodies, supported by rich harmonies, which are characteristic of Mr. Charles H. # GOSPEL ADVOCATE

The GOSPEL ADVOCATE is the oldest living periodical published in the interest of the church of Christ. It is now in its sixty-seventh volume, and it has a larger list of regular, paid-up subscribers than it has ever had before. Its circulation is increasing rapidly, and it is daily growing in favor with the people. It contains twenty-four pages, and is issued every week. It is printed in large, clear type, on good paper, and is neatly pasted and trimmed. It has by far the largest circulation of any periodical published south of the Mason and Dixon Line in the interest of the church of Christ. It has regular editorial writers, besides a large number of able and regular contributors. It has all of the regular departments of the best religious periodicals.

In editorial policy it stands for individual consecration, against ecclesiastic organizations, as the scriptural and best method of doing missionary work. It recognizes no organization but the church of Christ as a scriptural medium of converting the world and developing the Christian character.

It opposes all human creeds and ecclesiastic councils, and pleads for the right of each individual to study the Scriptures for himself and formulate his own faith, without dictation or hindrance from churchly dignitaries. It opposes all clerical assumption of official authority in the church, and stands for the scriptural doctrine that each Christian has an office to fill, a work to perform—that all are kings and priests unto God.

It stoutly advocates the doctrine of missions, and argues unceasingly that every Christian is a divinely commissioned missionary and every church is a scripturally organized missionary society. The mission of every Christian and the design of every church is to preach the gospel to all the world.

It believes in, and stoutly advocates, congregational singing, as opposed to select choirs and instrumental performances, as the best and most soul-stirring church music. Let all the people sing. Provide a book for everybody in the house, and let us all make a joyful noise unto the Lord.

CURRENT COMMENT

By JAMES A. ALLEN

A letter addressed, "To the Head Church of Christ, Nashville, Tenn.," says:

I am writing to you for information. I want to know if a man can be made to stop preaching that does not preach the true Scripture. He has been preaching some time, and is preaching a false Christ. The brethren have told him to preach the truth, but he gets worse. The brethren have all withdrawn from him, but he is going around to the houses and preaching false doctrine. He is scandalizing the churches of Christ in ——, and the quicker he can be made to stop, the better. Mr. —— in —— is the man. For more proof, write Brethren —— and ——, also Brother —— of ——. I want you to take this matter up at once, and hope to hear soon.

There is no "Head Church of Christ" in Nashville or anywhere else. "The head of every man is Christ." (1 Cor. 11: 3.) "And he is the head of the body, the church." (Col. 1: 18.) "For the husband is the head of the wife, as Christ also is the head of the church, being himself the savior of the body." (Eph. 5: 23.) The Gospel Advocate is not a church and has no jurisdiction over anybody but itself or over anything but its own business. According to the teaching of the New Testament, each congregation of Christians, under its own elders, is a self-edifying and self-governing body, and no outside man or set of men has the slightest jurisdiction over it in any sense of the word.

But a great and sacred responsibility rests upon the elders of the respective congregations. They are commanded," in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ," to teach the congregation, "in which the Holy Spirit hath made you bishops," "that ye withdraw yourselves from every brother that walketh disorderly, and not after the tradition which they received from us." (See Acts 20: 28; 2 Thess. 3: 6.) And any congregation who fellowships or in any way encourages any man or men from whom a sister congregation has withdrawn fellowship, rebels, not against men, but against Christ, and destroys the strict discipline that Christ commands. It will not do to contend that the congregation that withdraws fellowship has not treated the erring brother right. All are human and liable to err; but Christians, and Christian elders especially, are anxious to do the right thing; and if any sister congregation feels that the brother withdrawn from has been mistreated, instead of encouraging him in rebellion against his own congregation, they should go direct to the congregation that exercised the discipline. The elders of such a congregation, if approached in a Christian spirit, will correct any injustice that may have been done.

Still, the very fact that a brother who has been withdrawn from rebels against it shows that he himself is in the wrong whether the congregation is or not. No man who has the proper spirit and the proper humility will suffer himself to be withdrawn from.

We feel a very keen sympathy for our correspondent who so earnestly realizes the importance of stopping the mouth of a man "that does not preach the true Scripture." We have many of the same kind here in Nashville, popular "pastors," who are members of the Ministers' Alliance. Generally, "a man that should be made to stop preaching" works harder at it than a man who is fit to preach. And while the congregation in —— is to be commended for the fact that "the brethren have all withdrawn from him," still those who preach the truth ought to at least be as diligent as those who are "preaching false doctrine" in "going around to the houses" of the people.

It is sinful to give way to false teachers. Satan pursues those who flee from him, but flees from those who resist him. Many of our brethren have suffered themselves to be robbed by "transgressives," when a little boldness and courage would have confounded them. "But Saul increased the more in strength, and confounded the Jews that dwelt at Damascus, proving that this is the Christ." (Acts 9: 22.) "Now we know that what things soever the law saith, it speaketh to them that are under the law; that every mouth may be stopped, and all the world may be brought under the judgment of God." (Rom. 3: 19.) "For there are many unruly men, vain talkers and deceivers, specially they of the circumcision, whose mouths must be stopped; men who overthrow whole houses, teaching things which they ought not, for filthy lucre's sake." (Tit. 1: 10, 11.)

All who have the truth and will stand up for it will easily confound the enemy. False teachers cannot stand before the word of God. What Christian people need is faith, zeal, activity, and diligence in preaching the word of God. Theoretically, we stand upon the same ground that was occupied by the apostles and early Christians. But, practically, they published the gospel to the known world in a single generation—" yea, verily, their sound went out into all the earth, and their words unto the ends of the world:" while our greatest activities are almost negligible. Nashville contains more Christians than any other city in the world; and yet, to be conservative, we submit that out of one hundred and thirty thousand population, fully one hundred thousand have never even heard the gospel. In other places the conditions are much worse. The only way we can explain it is that Christians and congregations must not really believe that men and nations are going down to hell and that unless the gospel reaches them they are lost forever.

What most Christians "lay by in store" "upon the first day of the week" is negligible, and congregations that ought to be keeping three or four evangelists going the year round are having a desperate time keeping up a few running expenses. The churches need somebody to tell them that they are just playing at Christianity, and that, unless they repent, they are headed for destruction.

We are publishing the Gospel Advocate for the good we can do, and we are glad to say that the Advocate is doing well and that it is doing good. But, while this is true, we cannot help but think of the immense possibilities that are before us, and of the great good that we could do if each of our readers would only get one friend to subscribe. A paper, especially a religious paper, is dependent upon its readers. The Advocate has been the means of converting many in the past. Give your unconverted neighbor the Advocate for a year and see that he reads it. The probability is that your congregation will have a new member.

BROTHER E. A. ELAM SURPRISED. BY H. LEO BOLES.

Brother Elam experienced one of the greatest surprises of his life on July 4. At the suggestion of Sister W. C. Arrington, the churches of Christ in Wilson County planned a surprise for Brother Elam by arranging for a great gathering at Brother Elam's home near Lebanon, Tenn. All of the churches were invited, and nearly all of them responded. His friends, neighbors, and brethren and sisters responded cheerfully and brought baskets and boxes filled with good things to eat. Some weeks before those who had it in charge let Sister Elam know their intention, but she was pledged not to let Brother Elam know anything about it, and she faithfully kept her pledge.

Brother O. P. Barry, of Lebanon, was selected as master of ceremonies, and he performed this part well. Committees were selected and everything was systematically and pleasantly arranged. A committee of brethren was stationed at the entrance to the large, beautiful lawn in front of Brother Elam's house, which committee took charge of the baskets and boxes and gave them to a committee of sisters, who arranged the good things to eat on the table. Another committee was stationed at the porch to receive the guests and give directions for parking in the barn lot. Another committee of young ladies kept the register. Chairs and settees were arranged on the porch and under the large shade trees which beautify the lawn. The day was ideal, and friends and acquaintances came from many counties and States. Nearly every church in the county had a large number of representatives. Many churches from adjoining counties were represented. Nashville, Murfreesboro, Hartsville, Gallatin, McMinnville, Portland, Alexandria, etc., had representatives. There were also guests from Georgia, Texas, and Kansas. His neighbors of every creed or faith were present.

In order that the surprise might be as complete as possible, the day before Sister Elam persuaded Brother Elam to go with her to their son's home, a few miles away, Brother Elam thinking that he would stay with his son, Edwin Elam, on the Fourth of July, as it was his son's birthday. He was kept there until after all plans were completed and the crowd had assembled. Suddenly his son and wife, with Sister Elam, decided about eleven o'clock that day that they would go to Brother Elam's house for dinner. Brother Elam thought it was quite a sudden decision on their part and decided, since he would be left alone, without any one to cook dinner, that he would accompany them home, thinking it a little strange that his son would invite him to go to his own home. When he arrived at the gate, he was met by the committee and cordially escorted to a prominent seat on his own cool and spacious veranda. He at once took in the situation and reviewed the very large assembly which filled the house, porches, and large lawn. He was almost overcome with emotion as he beheld the large concourse of neighbors, friends, and brethren and sisters in Christ who had assembled to pay some tribute of honor to him.

Brother Barry made some well-chosen remarks and explained to Brother Elam why such an assembly had gathered. H. Leo Boles was called upon to make an address, and responded, emphasizing that Brother Elam was a distinguished citizen of Wilson County and an eloquent and influential gospel preacher, standing at the head of the list of pulpit orators; that he was an editor as truly famed as a writer as he was as a public speaker; that he was an author of no mean ability, being the author of the "Life of J. M. Kidwill," "Sanctification,"

"Majority Rule Not Scriptural," and of the Sunday-school Quarterlies for more than twenty years, and also the author of "Elam's Notes," the best-edited notes on the International Sunday-school Lessons.

Congregational singing added to the joy of the occasion, and special quartet selections were rendered by splendid male voices. At half past twelve o'clock it was announced that lunch would be served. The assembly was asked to pair off in twos and march to the beautiful and heavy-laden table that had been prepared on the lawn. After thanks were given by Brother C. M. Pullias, picnic plates were served. The committee of ladies had arranged the food on the table in cafeteria fashion. There were stacks of fried chicken; piles of boiled ham, mutton, beef, barbecue, and sandwiches; pickles, salad, pies, cakes, etc. On the lawn were numerous barrels and tubs of ice water and ice tea. All fared sumptuously and enjoyed the lunch.

After lunch there were songs and speeches. Mr. Harrison, a Presbyterian preacher, of Lebanon, made a splendid speech, eulogizing Brother Elam for the great service he had rendered the county and his generation. Brother C. M. Pullias recounted the labors of Brother Elam and emphasized his work as a Bible teacher and his relation to David Lipscomb College. Speeches were made by Brethren Harvey Young, Irby Pullias, S. T. Nix, Dr. J. J. McFarland, and others. All felicitated Brother Elam and verified the oft-repeated adage that it is better to give flowers to one while living rather than wait until after one's death.

Brother Elam was called upon for a few words at the conclusion. He responded eloquently and tenderly. He expressed his appreciation for such a chorus and volume of honor thrust upon him by his neighbors and friends. He emphasized the purpose of life and said that he had never let his business on the farm and at home keep him from responding to every call for a marriage ceremony, funeral service, or preaching the gospel at every invitation. He was truly glad to see the aged men and women present, also the middle-aged, the young, and even the babes.

Many of the audience had been baptized into Christ by Brother Elam. There were his children and grandchildren in the gospel present. All seemed anxious to pay some tribute of respect and honor to him who had been such a large blessing to them in teaching them the truth of God. It was an occasion never to be forgotten by those who attended. According to the register, more than four hundred were present. They came so thick and fast that the young ladies who kept the register could not carry out their original plan in getting the names of every one who attended. It was estimated by some that a thousand people were present.

HARDING COLLEGE.

BY J. N. ARMSTRONG.

About one year ago Harding College came into existence by the consolidation of Harper College and Arkansas Christian College, and I think I have never known a wiser, more potential step to be taken in this school work.

I have never known of such unstinted coöperation and support as the city of Morrillton is giving us. Morrillton is one hundred per cent behind us, and seems as proud of Harding College as a family would be of a new born baby.

I know well the possible danger this unequaled friendship of Morrillton for Harding College might bring. I know it could draw heavily upon the ideals to which our hearts are devoted, for which Harding College lives, and to which we are pledged before God and men. I know friendship calls for reciprocation and love provokes its own response. But we should have no reasons for a separate school from the splendid educational institutions supported by taxation, once we sacrifice our vision of Harding College; and, so far as I count in the management, brethren everywhere may depend upon my standing first for our ideals, our vision, for Harding College.

Perhaps our greatest asset is our student body. It represents sixteen States as far separated as California, Idaho, and Florida, and is a fine body of young people. Though we have worked this year in a building program and spent most of the year in unfinished conditions, our students have been a happy band. In fact, we have hardly had a dissatisfied student. I believe every one, but one, would return next year if it were possible.

Before Christmas our young men were rooming all over town in as good homes as you could find anywhere. They and we were delighted with the happy home life furnished by these good people, but it was not like being in their own building. Since Christmas they have been in their own splendid, steam-heated building. Some wondered how the "boys" would like it "penned up," yet we have hardly heard a complaint.

The girls moved into their new building at the time the boys came into theirs, and they, too, have been a happy company. Altogether we have had a fine and prosperous year. God has been good to us, and we are humbly happy.

I must mention, too, those humble men and women who make our faculty. They are an exceptional crew of workers, so qualified for their work that accrediting agencies have listed Harding College among other four-year colleges, and so that the University of our State receives our college graduates, students having completed four years of college work, on their transcripts, just as it receives the students from other senior colleges in the State. while we appreciate the qualifications of these teachers that give this good recognition to the work done in Harding College by higher institutions of learning, the most valuable qualification an inspector never sees, and if he saw it he would not value it. It is that consecration to God, that loyalty to every word of God, that humble and self-sacrificing spirit that lives in them and that leads them to give themselves to this service at a half salary.

Here I turn aside to pay tribute to him whose name our beloved institution bears. Whatever else may be said respecting the splendid history of this Bible-school effort, James A. Harding stands out preëminently as having filled that first period full of the spirit of faith, selfsacrifice, and devotion to God. No other man has been so able to collect a faculty that would live on bread and water while they served as Brother Harding was. More than this, it is he, who lives though he be dead, who has made it possible for all of our Christian schools through these thirty years to maintain faculties at half salaries. Were the teachers now in our Christian colleges who received directly or indirectly their ideals of life from Brother Harding more than from any other one man whom they touched in their preparatory period to retire from the work, it would not be possible to assemble faculties for our schools in these times of inexorable educational requirements with the money that these schools can command. In selecting teachers, we have had salaries named that would have closed every door of every Christian school in America, had all the teachers in the service demanded those salaries. But, so far as I know, the salaries we have been able to offer have not been in the way of securing teachers from among the students of J. A. Harding. God bless his memory forever! Will our students when asked to teach in such schools name prohibitive salaries?

A good indication of the spiritual condition that prevailed in our student body to the very close of the year is the fact that more than twenty of our students were baptized during the third week from the close, making the confession at the morning chapel service. We observed that things were ripe for this kind of result, but programs and practice for closing entertainments so filled up the nights that our only opportunity was the chapel hour. So we, through that week, gave opportunity to those that desired to confess the Lord. This result came about by our regular daily Bible teaching, Monday-night meetings, our regular Sunday meetings, and a little effort at each chapel service each day through that week.

Write for our new catalogue. It is now ready.

ABRAHAMIC FAITH—WHAT IT IS, AND HOW WE MAY KNOW WE HAVE IT.

BY S. H. HALL.

In the last article we learned that the expression, "Abraham believed God," can mean nothing except Abraham's undoubting confidence in what Jehovah had said to him, and that it—his believing God—was imputed unto him for righteousness. The specific statement of Jehovah that he believed is found in Gen. 15: 1-5. He here tells Abraham that he is going to bless him with a son from Abraham's own loins—bone of his bone and flesh of his flesh—and that this son's descendants will become as the stars in number. Abraham believed this with his whole heart, and God so prized his undoubting confidence in this promise that he imputed it to him for righteousness, and has placed it on record as the faith that saves and brings God's choicest blessing upon its possessor.

But may I now ask: Why was this such great faith? Why did God prize it so highly? There is but one answer-viz., it was because of the circumstances under which Jehovah made the statement. And what were they? Turn to Gen. 17: 17, and you read: "Then Abraham fell upon his face, and laughed, and said in his heart, Shall a child be born unto him that is a hundred years old? and shall Sarah, that is ninety years old, bear?" And it might be added that Sarah was not only ninety years old. but was, by nature, barren. Here is a faith that goes to the highest in sublimity! Here is the faith that Jehovah has chosen as the faith that is tantamount or equivalent to a life of sinlessness, and, hence, is imputed unto the possessor for righteousness. The Bible speaks of "the righteousness of faith" and declares that the promise comes through this righteousness. (Rom. 4: 13.) "The righteousness of faith" is here seen.

But my saying this amounts to nothing unless God says it. So we now turn to Rom. 4: 16-22 and let an inspired apostle take this Old Testament statement and comment upon it and give us the secret: "Therefore it is of faith, that it might be by grace; to the end the promise might be sure to all the seed; not to that only which is of the law, but to that also which is of the faith of Abraham; who is the father of us all, (as it is written, I have made thee a father of many nations,) before him whom he believed, even God, who quickeneth the dead, and calleth those things which be not as though they were. Who against hope believed in hope, that he might become the father of many nations, according to that which was spoken, So shall thy seed be. And being not weak in faith, he considered not his own body now dead, when he was about a hundred years old, neither yet the deadness of Sarah's womb: he staggered not at the promise of God through unbelief; but was strong in faith, giving glory to God; and being fully persuaded that, what he had promised, he was able also to perform. And therefore it was imputed to him for righteousness."

It would be well for you to read this same scripture from the American Revised Version. But could God tell us plainer why he imputed Abraham's faith unto him for righteousness? Is it not made as plain as day that it was because of the circumstances under which Abraham believed Jehovah's promise to him of a son from his own loins, and that that son's descendants should become as the stars in number? Was it not because he could not believe God without having a faith that "against hope believed in hope?" It looked hopeless from a human standpoint. It was contrary to nature's law, so far as we know this law; yet, in spite of it all, Abraham gave glory to God—and how did he do this?—by saying: God has promised this, and he is fully able to perform it. Hence, he believed with all the sense he had that he, a hundred years old, should beget a son, and that Sarah, ninety years old, and whose womb by nature was dead, should bear. There is "righteousness" in such a faith. It lets God be true and every man or circumstance to the contrary be a liar. Abrahamic faith means much. The promise is to those who have it, to those who walk in the steps of that faith that he had.

But we want to look a bit further into Abraham's history. In Gen. 12: 1-4 we have the first recorded dealings of God with Abraham. He was seventy-five years old at that time. God tells him to leave his country and kindred and journey into a strange land, and, on the condition that he did this, he would make of him a great nation-make his name great—and in his seed bless all the nations of the earth. The writer of the Hebrew Epistle comments well on this circumstance, and I here give it: "By faith Abraham, when he was called to go out into a place which he should after receive for an inheritance, obeyed; and he went out, not knowing whither he went. By faith he sojourned in the land of promise, as in a strange country, dwelling in tabernacles with Isaac and Jacob, the heirs with him of the same promise: for he looked for a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God." (Heb. 11: 8-10.)

Abraham's faith here is great; but it was not at this time that it was imputed unto him for righteousness. Jehovah allowed this old soul to go for twenty-five years, wondering how God would bless all nations through his seed when he had none. Abraham was wondering about this very thing when God appeared to him, as he was nearing his hundredth birthday, and explained to him just how he would bless all nations through his seed. (Read it in Gen. 15.) Abraham asked God the direct question as to how all nations could be blessed in his seed when none had been born in his house. Jehovah explained to him, for the first time, how it would be done, and this forever settled it with Abraham.

But we want to look once more at his faith. When Isaac was born into his house, the promise was not fulfilled; it had only begun to be. The promise is that he is to be blessed with a son from his own loins, and then this son's descendants become as the stars in number. So, after the son had been born and had grown to be quite a lad, Jehovah gives him the final test, which, if he stands, he is to confirm his covenant with him with an oath. You find this in the twenty-second chapter of Genesis. The chapter begins with these significant words: "And it came to pass after these things, that God did prove [or test] Abraham." He is commanded to go to the mountain yender and offer Isaac as a burnt offering. You know the story.

Was not this a fine time for him to stagger at the promise? Does it not look like God is going back on the promise? If Isaac is killed and burned to ashes, what becomes of the promise that his descendants should become as the stars in number? And don't you doubt for a moment that Abraham did not think of this very question. I have heard it said that Abraham knew, before stepping out in obedience to Jehovah here, that he would be stopped and not allowed to kill his son. This is wholly false. But you ask, how could he still believe that God would make Isaac's descendants as the stars in number? The Bible says that he felt that Jehovah was abundantly able to raise the child from the dead and take care of his promise. (Read it in Heb. 11: 17-19.)

Yes, this man of faith started out early the next morning to do what God had commanded. The altar was built, the wood placed in order, the son bound, and the cold steel was raised in the father's hands to be sheathed in his darling boy's heart. Then it was that God called out and said: "Abraham, stop! Now I know that you fear me, seeing you have not withheld your son, your only son, from me." And you know it is said that the covenant God made with Abraham was confirmed by an oath, but this is the time of its confirmation. "And the angel of the Lord called unto Abraham out of heaven the second time, and said, By myself have I sworn, saith the Lord, for because thou hast done this thing, and hast not withheld thy son, thine only son: that in blessing I will bless thee, and in multiplying I will multiply thy seed as the stars of the heaven, and as the sand which is upon the seashore; and thy seed shall possess the gate of his enemies; and in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed; because thou hast obeyed my voice." (Gen. 22: 15-18.)

James' comments here are in order: "Was not Abraham our father justified by works, when he had offered Isaac his son upon the altar? Seest thou how faith wrought with his works, and by works was faith made perfect? And the scripture was fulfilled which saith, Abraham believed God, and it was imputed unto him for righteousness: and he was called the Friend of God. Ye see then how that by works a man is justified, and not by faith only." (James 2: 21-24.)

I close this time by saying: Abrahamic faith is the faith that believes anything that God says, regardless of the circumstances, and will try to do anything God says, regardless of the cost.

Please note that in Gen. 22: 18 Jehovah declares that he made Abraham the father of the faithful, and that he would bless all nations in his seed, "because thou hast obeyed my voice." Should we think it strange, then, that you and I cannot become Abraham's children from a standpoint of faith unless we, too, are obedient to his voice, or have that "obedience of faith" brought out in last week's article? Or, to put it in the language of the Scriptures, we must "walk in the steps of that faith that Abraham had."

In next week's issue we will show you how this is done, and that other souls have believed God just as Abraham did

NOTES FROM THE WEST.

BY F. B. SRYGLEY.

I closed the meeting at Des Moines, New Mexico, on Sunday night, July 5, with nine baptized and two reclaimed. The little congregation seemed very much encouraged, and if they can stay free from hobby riders they will succeed. There are a few brethren in the country near Des Moines that ride hobbies as gracefully as any I have seen. The man that led the singing some could not sing an invitation song, because the Bible says "teaching and admonishing one another," and one and the other were both Christians, and therefore we must not teach the outsider in song. He started one invitation song and sung only two verses and quit, and the next time he started the invitation song and quit at the end of the first line. He had done nothing but start it, and he had it so high we could not sing it. So I dispensed with the "starter" and depended on "cranking" myself after that. At the close of the meeting I tried to encourage them to meet every Lord's day and spend a while in studying and teaching the Bible to their children, and before I could get out of the house two of these hobby riders got me and asked me if I would affirm in debate that it is scriptural to divide the people up into classes in order to teach them, and I told them no, but that I would affirm that the people are already divided into different classes, and that I ought to have sense enough to recognize that fact if I expected to succeed very well in teaching them. I told the brethren that they had a little congregation out in a schoolhouse, and if they could teach them some by not dividing them into classes to go ahead and do the best they could, but I would not dignify their hobby by having them send off to Texas to get a man to debate any such an issue. There are too many people in New Mexico that never heard the plain, simple gospel as the apostles preached it for me to stop to worry with two or three hobby riders that would ride something else if they were thrown from that one. I had already preached three times that day and was tired and nervous, and when those boys got on me I felt like I had got a few ants on me. It is a great thing to preach the plain gospel to people who want to hear it, but it is disagreeable to be worried with hobby riders all the time you are trying to do it. I shall make the best fight that I can and leave the results with God.

I am now at Clayton, New Mexico, where we began a meeting last night in the "First Christian Church;" but it is well understood that we do not indorse the things they have which we believe are unscriptural. The few brethren here have hired the house, and I am to do my best to teach the truth on all subjects. I am anxious as to what will be the outcome of the effort.

From here I am to go to Pueblo, Col., where they have secured a Methodist house in which to hold the meeting. The Pueblo meeting is to begin on July 19, and I am expecting to reach the Great Divide by the first Sunday in August.

EVOLUTION THEORY CONDEMNED. BY GORDON H. TURNER.

It might be of interest to readers of the Gospel Advocate to learn that our County Board of Education, of which I am secretary, has recently passed resolutions condemning any theory of evolution contradicting the Bible account of the creation, and has decided not to employ any teacher who does not believe in the Bible as the inspired word of God or in the divinity of Jesus Christ. While there is no trouble here concerning this, the question is agitated so much, now that we desired to make it "as sure as we could."

Several days ago the Nashville Banner carried articles from leading scientists in support of the theory of evolution. They were absurd from a scientific standpoint. I thought one could not be faithful to God and not make some effort to counteract these articles. I asked the editor of the Banner to present the other side in six articles of similar length, which he very kindly consented to do. Immediately I asked fifteen leading scientists, evangelists, and educators for articles. Some of the requests went to leading teachers and preachers of the church of Christ. A complete statement of the thing was given, the titles and authors of the previous articles, nature of articles wanted, etc. Replies were soon at hand from great men, and six articles were published in the Banner, beginning on July 3 and continuing for six days consecutively. But the sad part of it was that only Brother C. R. Nichol of the church of Christ contributed an article. Others failed to send them after urgent request. Every reader of the Advocate should secure copies of these issues of the Banner and read these articles.

Evolution is to-day the most-talked question in the press. It is only another form of rank infidelity. Our preachers should be prepared to meet the crisis. One needs to be able to meet evolutionists on their own grounds and defeat them. One might say that such is not in the Bible, and hence it cannot be of so much importance now. Neither is instrumental music, nor sprinkling for baptism, but show me a loyal preacher that cannot handle these questions. The evolution legislation is now pending in twenty States. Forces are rallying to the cause of the right. In my estimation, there has never been a time in the history of the world when such a concerted and united effort was needed by all loyal Bible believers to work unceasingly for an oldfashioned return to a fundamental belief in and obedience to the word of God.

Some of us in Maury County are planning a discussion, if such may be had, between a champion of evolution and one who yet adheres unconditionally to the Bible. It may be necessary to go outside the church for the man; but if so, we propose to do it. The time is ripe for a glaring exposure of this great unscientific absurdity to the minds of not only the grown-ups of this splendid Middle Tennessee county, but to the thousands of boys and girls who are exposed to it in the schools over the State. If the plans materialize, announcement will be made shortly.

MISSIONARIES NEEDED.

BY J. L. HINES.

The spiritual life of the churches and preachers is missionary activity. Such countries as China, Japan, and India need the gospel, and this no sane person will deny. But there are other countries which need the same saving power; for instance, the central part of Kentucky. To see the conditions as they exist in the blue-grass region is enough to make our hearts bleed. At one time there were hundreds of flourishing congregations there, which were content with the ancient order of things, but to-day there are only a very few struggling churches. All others are corrupted with musical instrument in the worship, evolution, societyism, women preachers, and a number of other unscriptural things. While I was in Carlisle, where there is a digressive church with five hundred members, people were heard to say, "What strange doctrine is this?" and other such things. Shame on a people who claim to be New Testament church, to allow their light to grow so dim that people cannot distinguish it from a sectarian candle!

Brother J. D. Derryberry and I began a meeting in the courthouse at Mount Olivet, Ky., June 16, which continued two weeks. Such-men as Ben Franklin had preached there and succeeded in building up a New Testament church, but to-day, instead of such, there is a large "transgressive" congregation there. Not more than a dozen of these transgressors attended our meeting, but they had the audacity to invite us to their Sunday school. We went at 9:30 A.M. and returned to the courthouse at eleven o'clock for services. We were asked to sing a special song, but declined with scriptural reasons. A man tooted a horn, a woman played the piano, and a woman was called on to pray. However, our meeting was announced; but as they had preaching that night, I am confident that they decided to treat us with silent contempt. But, with a determination to teach them the truth, I went into their places of business, and every time I met one on the street the "sword" was used. Only one man, however, attempted to justify their practice. He is one of their teachers and a very prominent man in the town. I asked: "Is it scriptural to worship God without musical instruments?" He hung his head and said: "I must admit that it is. But," said he, "the Bible does not say not to have them." 1 replied: "Then why don't you people practice infant baptism?" He answered: "The New Testament says to baptize believers." "True," I agreed; "and the New Testament says sing, and on the same ground that you reject infant baptism, etc., we reject instrumental music in the worship-by the law of exclusion." "But," said he, "you said, 'If we can have instruments because David had them, we could practice polygamy; but the New Testament says not to have but one wife." I replied: "Where can I read that?" At this point he hung his head, wheeled, and went away, and from that time to the close of the meeting I never had another chance to talk to this man nor any of his brethren. I then wrote to W. H. Book, of Columbus, Ind., stating that his brethren at Mount Olivet were acting like the sectarians by boycotting our meeting, and pointed out the fact that such tactics were used by people whose position could not be sustained, and invited him to the task of defending it, but he saw fit to decline my courteous While in Mount Olivet we were called invitation. "saints," "Holy Rollers," "Mormons," and some would come to the window and peep in at us as though they thought we were dangerous; but, with all this opposition, the truth found its way to the hearts of some. But be it remembered that the digressive brethren are our worst enemies. The Catholics of Mount Olivet treated us better than did the Christian Church people. We need missionaries in this part of Kentucky, for the people can never know what Christ and the apostles want them to do, if they are to depend upon this apostate church.

I am now at Covington, Ky., in a tent meeting which began on July 1. Very good crowds. The churches of Christ ought to keep two or three men in this field doing evangelistic work. What elder will take this matter up with his local church? Write me.

We regret to have to indorse the statement of Brother Hines that "the digressive brethren are our worst enemies." There is more congeniality between these erring brethren and the denominations than there is between them and us. Yet we stand exactly where they once stood and teach and practice exactly as they once taught and practiced. No one can question that we stand on the same ground occupied by the leaders of the reformatory movement. The great desideratum of the efforts of Campbell, Stone, Scott, and others was to lead the churches back to the things taught and practiced by inspired men in New Testament times and to restore the ancient order of things. This movement was based on the principle that nothing is to be received or practiced for which there is no scriptural authority, either by an express command or an approved precedent.

Any claim that there is either an express command for, or an approved example of, the use of the organ in Christian worship is absurd and wicked. It is wicked to pretend that "psallo" means "with or without" an organ. The use of a word can be determined by what was done when it was used. The apostles and early Christians did not use the organ, but taught and practiced congregational singing. The Pope of Rome introduced the first organ in the seventh century. It is wicked to pretend to prove by the Rible something that everybody knows the Pope started in the seventh century. The leaders of the reformation were emphatically opposed to the use of the organ in Christian worship. Mr. Campbell was so strongly opposed to the use of an organ that he would not even preach where one was used. He said an organ in Christian worship would be so out of place as to be like "a cowbell in a concert."

We deeply regret the horrible position our transgressive brethren are in. The organ is not their trouble. Their trouble is the spirit of the world in their hearts. They care nothing for the sacred bounds of the word of God. With impunity they introduce things for which they admit they can find no authority in the word of God. They "rush in where angels fear to tread." They want "liberty" to dethrone the God of heaven as Lawgiver and Ruler and to set up "whatsoever is right in their own eyes." They are in a worse condition than the denominations. The denominations are coming toward the truth. They were once in the truth and are now going the other way.

It is a pity that a man like Brother Book, whom we believe to be a great and good man, should give his life and influence to further the wickedness of such people. We hope he will come to himself before it is too late.

BIBLE AND NEW TESTAMENT FUND.

BY S. F. MORROW.

On page 631 of the Gospel Advocate of July 2, 1925, is a general statement of our Bible and New Testament Fund. In order that all may fully understand the work we propose, I will give some more specific details of our plan.

No doubt congregations or individuals who are able will be glad to pay cost for Bibles and Testaments to give to those who cannot buy or to those who think they cannot buy. If all of us could and would fully appreciate the preciousness of the word of God, we would read and study it daily and prayerfully and see to it that all others, as far as we could help, enjoy this glorious privilege by giving them a Bible and teaching them the proper division of the word. Paul said to Timothy: "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth."

Second, to congregations which are in debt on their houses of worship, or where we have a few disciples in a new field wanting to begin a congregation and extend the kingdom of our Lord and Master, as every child of God should do, regardless of where located, we will furnish these books free after we make the first order. Write to the Gospel Advocate Company, stating your condition and how many books you need. We feel certain that by the time you have studied these books as you should you will be glad to supply yourselves with more books and help others as you have been helped.

Calls are coming in for the Testaments. The only hope we have to take the world for Christ is through his word. Last year I purchased three hundred Testaments to give to young congregations, and sent seventy-five to Tampa, Fla. When the invitation was given at the morning service, a boy about fourteen came forward while the confession was being taken. I noticed one of the little Testaments was in his pocket. Recently in our meeting at Cumberland City, when the invitation was given at the water, a young lady came forward. I asked one of the sisters who she was. She said: "She is one who has been reading one of those little Testaments you sent us." Now, if you want a part in this soul-saying work, send your check to the Gospel Advocate Company, stating that it is for the Bible fund. Please send your check at once, if possible, so as to get it in our first order. We want to give a Bible or Testament to every poor person who is unable to buy one. Remember, we handle only plain board-back books. If any one wants to buy a nice Bible, the Gospel Advocate Company will be glad to supply such at a reasonable price. We trust that the elders of our congregations will see that these books are purchased at once and that a goodly number will be kept on hand, that all may have a book at any time. It is sad to see how careless fathers and mothers have been in neglecting to give their children a New Testament while they were young. Let it be among the first books the children learn to read. It is the easiest book in the world to understand. May the Lord help us to do our duty to-day; for the night will soon come, when our work will be done.

The Gospel Advocate is glad to assist Brother Morrow in giving away Bibles and Testaments to the poor. It is willing to accept the funds and keep the books free of charge. Brother Morrow desires every congregation to keep a supply of these Bibles and Testaments on hand for free distribution among the poor of their respective communities.

GREAT PLACE TO SPEND VACATION. BY L. L. BRIGANCE.

Nearly every one has some leisure during the summer, except the preacher. Summer is his busy time. You expect to get a week or two off, and you want to enjoy those days to the fullest extent. Why not visit Shiloh Military Park and attend the Hardeman-Derryberry meeting? There isn't a finer place anywhere to take a vacation than on this famous battlefield. Here lie four thousand acres along the winding banks of one of the most beautiful rivers in America, the Tennessee, dedicated to the soldiers that fell in the great battle of Shiloh. This park is as clean as your front yard, covered in beautiful young shade trees, and intersected with thirty-five miles of smooth, graveled pikes. Monuments, tablets, and statuary are to be seen everywhere. It is one of the historic spots of our country. Here Albert Sidney Johnston, gentleman, scholar, soldier, fell. Here were Grant, Garfield, Hayes-three future Presidents of the United States. Bob Ingersoll, America's most famous infidel, and Lew Wallace, the author of Ben Hur, were here. Not only the battlefield, with its historic associations, but some of the finest remains of the ancient mound builders are to be seen here. On a high bluff bank overlooking the Tennessee River is one of the largest mounds in the South, and near by are several others.

This is a great place to camp. It is clean and sanitary. Fine springs of clear, cold water are within a few yards of where the large "tent of meeting" will stand. A clear, sparkling brook runs hard by. There will be a lunch stand only a short distance away; and a new hotel, modern and up to date in every respect, has recently been opened up.

Shiloh is on the Tennessee River, in Hardin County, Tenn., twenty miles from Corinth, Miss., and is reached by good roads from every direction.

The meeting will begin on August 16 and continue about two weeks.

You know the preacher and the singer—Hardeman and Derryberry. "Can you beat it?" You are invited to go. Why not?

We ought to cultivate a love for vocal and congregational music instead of for violins, flutes, organs, and such things.

Otto Fredricks, Teague, Texas, July 1: "O. C. Hartsell, of Emerson, Ark., closed an eight-days' meeting here with five baptisms."

Married, at the Hotel Hermitage, Nashville, Tenn., Thursday, July 9, 1925, Holland F. Fulghum and Clara Lee Ballard, James A. Allen officiating.

The church at Portland, Maine, desires the services of a sound gospel preacher with no hobbies and with a character above reproach. Write direct to L. Scott Brown, West Scarboro, Maine.

F. B. Shepherd, of Abilene, Texas, advises us that N. B. Hardeman began a meeting under a big tent on the corner of Second and Cedar Streets, Abilene, last Lord's day. Brother Freeman is leading the singing.

Coleman Overby, Lexington, Tenn., July 7: "Sister Colley, wife of R. L. Colley, of Union City, Tenn., passed away on Thursday, July 2. She was at the home of her mother in Corinth, Miss., at the time of death. A more extended notice will be given later."

Mrs. W. A. Sisco, Hohenwald, Tenn., July 6: "W. R. Hassell, of Trenton, Tenn., began a meeting here on June 21 and continued it till the night of June 28. The church was much strengthened, if it will only put into practice the good lessons Brother Hassell set for it. I think many times we need subtractions instead of additions, anyway."

W. F. Lemmons, Big Horn, Montana, July 6: "Closed the meeting here last night. No additions. Church small, but divided. Settled the division, and all is peace now. New zeal is manifest. Much interest during the meeting, and some 'almost persuaded.' I leave to-day for Buffalo, and will begin a meeting at Casper, Wyo., July 18. Pray for us."

Emmett G. Creacy, Horse Cave, Ky., July 6: "The meeting with the East Side church of Christ, Indianapolis, Ind., closed last night, with thirty-six additions from all sources. Brother Spivey, who led the singing, is available for such work this summer. He is a good singer and a Christian gentleman. If you need his services, address Vernon M. Spivey, 602 North Second Street, Nashville, Tenn."

Lucas North, Ethridge, Tenn., July 5, to F. W. Smith: "I tell you with all my heart that I love you dearly for the grand fight you are waging with the sublime weapon furnished by the Captain of our salvation, and I pray you Godspeed. While I love and revere the memory and the faithful labors of Lipscomb and Sewell as much as any man living, I do not believe the Gospel Advocate was ever in better hands than it is now. I am eighty-six."

E. E. Shoulders, New York, N. Y., July 6: "Yesterday was a splendid day for us here. The arrival of a number of university students filled the vacancies made by those absent on their vacations. The Columbia University begins its summer session to-day. If readers of the Gospel Advocate have relatives or friends attending the Columbia Normal who do not know the address of the New York church, please write them at once that our place of worship is 226 West One Hundred and Sixty-second Street. It is easily reached by the subways, trolleys, and busses."

J. W. Brents, Henderson, Tenn., July 9: "On June 29 my family and I left Topeka, Kan., for Henderson, Tenn., driving via Kansas City and St. Louis. The trip was pleasant, but sadness came over us when we drove into Henderson to find our home, which we had recently purchased, in ashes. The loss will be considerable. We hope to rebuild. I am now in a promising meeting in Summitville, in sight of the beautiful Cumberland Mountains. My time is all taken till November. Those desiring my services after that time or for next year may write me at Henderson, Tenn."

Trinity Heights church of Christ, Dallas, Texas, July 6: "We commend our beloved brother, U. T. Poisall, as a member of this congregation in good standing and a faithful minister of Christ. Brother Poisall has been preaching for this congregation while working with his hands to supply his needs and those of his family. His work has been effective and has borne fruit continually. Because he is burdened with a love for sinners and has taken to heart the command to preach the gospel to every creature, Brother Poisall desires ever to be about his Master's business. His address is 1131 South Mont Clair Avenue, Dallas, Texas."

Mrs. Jennie W. Douglas, Puryear, Tenn.: "Mr. and Mrs. L. M. Newton, a young bridal couple, leaving this week for Joplin, Mo., to reside, desire to communicate with loyal members of the church of Christ in Joplin. They wish to establish a congregation in Joplin. Mr. Newton is connected with the mercantile firm of Winston & Jones, Joplin. He was formerly connected with the Cranford-Gatlin chain of stores in West Tennessee and Southern Kentucky. He is a song leader, reads and prays in public. Mrs. Newton was a member of the Puryear High School faculty the past term. She is also a language teacher and pianist. She has been teaching a Bible class of young people several years. Both are devoted to the cause of Christ."

Christ."

J. W. Grant, 4705 Nebraska Avenue, Nashville, Tenn., July 9: "On Friday, July 3, I passed the seventieth anniversary of my advent into this life. Many congratulations, felicitations, and good wishes have been given me, verbal and written, for having been permitted to attain the age of 'threescore years and ten,' allotted to man in the Bible. I received written expressions from one hundred and thirty persons, also from one congregation of four hundred members for which I have labored at times in the past, but which I have not been with for considerably more than a year. Their letter was from the church secretary, accredited by the congregation, and was a most enjoyable one. The individual letters and cards were almost entirely from members of the church of Christ, and many of them, perhaps most of them, from readers of the Gospel Advocate. So, as I am not equal to the labor of answering each of them individually, I ask the privilege of thus answering all through the medium of the Advocate, and thanking all, from the depth of my heart, for their kindly remembrance of me and for their expressions of good feeling toard me. It touches me deeply to be thus assured of appreciation of my life's labors in my Master's cause; for I am sure—and many so assured me—that it is because of my work for Him that they so kindly thus remember me."

Leslie G. Thomas preached for the Green Street church of Christ, this city, last Lord's day.

C. E. Holt, Roby, Texas, July 6: "The Roby meeting is growing in interest. Crowds large. Two baptisms. We are just starting."

Gus Nichols, Cordova, Ala., July 6: "Last night we closed a twelve-days' meeting at Millport, with two baptized and one restored."

Claud F. Witty, Detroit, Mich., July 7: "Many visitors at the West Side Central Church, Grand River and Fourteenth Avenues, last Sunday, with one addition."

J. Fairs Nichols, Fancy Farm, Ky., July 6: "Saturday evening and Lord's-day morning were good times for the church at Dexter, Ky. I preached to two good audiences."

Joe L. Netherland, Yuma, Tenn., July 7: "I am now in a splendid meeting at Friendship, in Carroll County. I will go from here to Jackson County for several meetings."

J. E. Bacigalupo preached at the Russell Street church of Christ, this city, last Lord's-day evening. Will J. Cullum, of Livingston, Tenn., preached at the morning service.

George S. Davis spoke for the Twelfth Avenue congregation, this city, last Lord's-day morning, and P. Hovious at night, when an enjoyable song service was held, conducted by Earl Shaub.

- J. S. Daugherty, Rockdale, Texas, July 6: "I closed at Macy, in Brazos County, Texas, at the water, this morning. Eleven were added to the one body—one by relation and ten baptized. From July 10 to July 19 I will be at Benchley, Texas."
- J. I. Reagan, Dallas, Texas, June 29: "I closed at Gladewater, Texas, last night, with fifteen additions—thirteen by baptism and two reclaimed. C. T. McCormack, of Dallas, led the singing. I go next to Hallsville, Texas; thence to the Highland Park congregation in Fort Worth."
- W. R. Yowell, Gainesville, Texas, June 29: "I began my work here with the Central church of Christ on the third Lord's day in this month. At the first night service one young woman came forward and began her worship with us. My address is Gainesville, Texas, now, instead of Franklin, Tenn."

John W. Hedge, Kosse, Texas, July 7: "The Box Church meeting, near Groesbeck, Texas, resulted in twenty-eight being added to the church, seventeen of whom were baptized. Fully one thousand attended the last service. The singing was the best, being conducted by Brethren Ferrell, Oats, and Bates."

Leslie G. Thomas, Nashville, Tenn., July 3: "The Indian Mound meeting closed last Lord's-day evening. It was estimated that from seven hundred to one thousand people were present at the last service. In the absence of Brother Reynolds, who was away preaching, James Jordan, of Oakwood, directed the song service."

W. F. Cottingham, 1011 Railroad Avenue, Corpus Christi, Texas, July 2: "Will you please give me the names and addresses of a few preachers who are both good men and good preachers and active personal workers, and who would be likely to be available for the work at Corpus Christi about September or October of this year?" Any preaching brother interested may write direct to Brother Cottingham.

Samuel H. Austin, Munfordyille, Ky., July 6: "I preached at Beckton, Ky., yesterday. I will be at Summit, Ky., on the second Lord's day, and at Railton, Ky., the third Lord's day. Then I go to Vesta, in Wilson County, Tenn., to begin a meeting for the brethren there on the fourth Lord's day. I distribute copies of the Gospel Advocate and try to get the brethren to read it regularly. I hope you will receive some subscriptions along from this work."

S. E. Templeton, Ben Franklin, Texas, July 6: "On Sunday night, June 28, I closed a very interesting meeting at the water's edge, at Spearman, Texas, with nineteen souls baptized into Christ and two restorations. Among the number baptized was an elderly man, some seventy years old, who had been a Roman Catholic all his life, I was told. The church at Spearman is without a house, but will build within the next year. The Lord willing, I will return next June for another meeting. At this time I am here in a meeting which bids fair to accomplish much good. I go next to Hereford, Texas."

F. O. Howell, Jackson, Tenn., June 7: "My meeting at Prattville, Ala., closed with several additions and good interest. I closed a mission meeting at Hopewell, near Medina, Sunday night. I will begin on July 19 at Haleyville, Ala."

Telegram from Price Billingsley, Memphis, Tenn., July 13: "I closed Cardwell (Mo.) meeting last night with over a thousand people present. Forty-five additions—thirty-six baptisms. I begin at Daingerfield, Texas, July 19. Success to Gospel Advocate."

Arthur B. Tenney, Menlo Park, Cal., July 8: "I am attending Stanford University, near Palo Alto, and helping the few brethren in Palo and Redwood City. We meet in private homes of the brethren, but are looking for a regular place for meeting. Sunday before last I preached for the little congregation at Aromas."

C. A. Buchanan, Venus, Texas, July 8: "Our meeting has just closed, with forty-six added to our membership—thirty-one by baptism. We had nine additions just before the meeting. The work grows constantly. E. W. McMillan, of Cleburne, was the preacher in our recent meeting, and J. H. Antwine, of Bonham, conducted the singing."

M. C. Cuthbertson, Dallas, Texas, June 30: "There have been fourteen added to our number since we came to our new building. Among those baptized was a woman ninety-two years old. All of those baptized were from human churches. The 'Review of R. H. Boll,' by Nichol and Whiteside, is great. I wish that every Christian could read it."

W. M. Oakley, Silver Point, Tenn., Route 2, July 10: "Our tent meeting at Roberts Switch, which began last Lord's day, continues with large crowds, good interest, and fine order. Two have been baptized to date. Leonard Kirk is in charge of the song service. We will move next to Buffalo Valley, where we will begin on July 19, the Lord willing."

W. T. Hines, Springtown, Ark., July 6: "My meeting in the brush arbor at Wager is one week old, with interest good, and crowds estimated at from two hundred to three hundred. We had dinner on the grounds yesterday, and after dinner we motored five miles to Cave Springs, where I talked to a large crowd. After closing here I shall go to Water Valley, Ky., then to other points in Kentucky and Tennessee."

E. Gaston Collins, Meaford, Ontario, Canada, July 6: "Good crowds yesterday, both morning and night. One confession and baptism at the morning service. I was at Griersville at 1:30 P.M. and started Bible classes, and preached there at three o'clock, with one confession. Baptism following the night meeting in town. Both baptisms a result of the Griersville meeting. Brother Klingman begins to-night."

J. H. Morris, Tuscumbia, Ala., July 1: "I have just closed my second mission meeting of the season at the Caryton mission, in the west end of Colbert County, Ala. I began on July 5 and preached twelve sermons. Five persons made the confession and were baptized, ranging in age from twenty-two to fifty years. It appears to be real mission work when one must lead all the songs, all the prayers, do all the preaching, and furnish the songbooks and lights."

John W. Fry, Columbia, Tenn., July 9: "The Tennessee Orphan Home, at Columbia, for the last twelve months has cared for more children than ever before during the same length of time, and we still have many applications on the waiting list. We are short of room and means of taking more until we can make room by finding homes for some of our children in good, Christian families. The demand to put children in the Orphan Home grows from the fact that the Home and its work are better known. We have tried to practice strict economy in carrying on the work, and, at the same time, the children are properly fed and clothed. The good women of some of the churches have rendered great help by getting the ages of the children from us and making plain clothing for them, and in some cases some would write for the Home to send empty fruit jars, which they fill with canned fruits and vegetables. Some make towels, pillowcases, and sheets, all of which saves the Home money and at the same time supplies the very things needed most. Any one desiring information will be supplied the ages, sex, and necessary measurements of the children, or fruit jars. We can only ask those desiring to help to supply or give or make that which is most convenient for them to undertake. We shall be glad at any and all times to supply information regarding the Home and children, and welcome investigation of the affairs of the Home."

BROTHER GORRELL NOT EQUAL TO THE TASK.

BY F. B. SRYGLEY.

In reviewing an article which appeared in the Apostolic Review, written by Brother W. J. Gorrell, I closed with the following statement: "If Brother Gorrell thinks that he can show that he has a right to use the Review, founded by man, through which to teach the Bible, and that I have no right to use a Bible college through which to teach the Bible, I will be glad to open the columns of the Advocate to him to do it, provided he can get my replies in the Apostolic Review. If anything comes of this offer, the readers of the Advocate will know it; but if they see nothing more of this in the Advocate, they may know that there is another contributor of the Review up against something he cannot handle. We shall wait and see."

I am now in receipt of what purports to be a reply to my review, and I suppose the brother sent it for publication in the Gospel Advocate, but he does not comply with the conditions here stated. He does not say one word about his right to teach the Bible and other things through the Apostolic Review. It will be noted also from the above quotation that I not only laid out before him the task, which was to "show that he has the right to use the Review, founded by man, through which to teach the Bible, and that I have no right to use a Bible college through which to teach the Bible," but that he was to get my reply in the Review. In this communication he says not one word about this task, neither does he make any promise to have my reply to him published in the Review. This could not have been an oversight in Brother Gorrell, for in this communication he refers to the latter part of my article, which shows that this very proposition made by me was under his eyes when he wrote what purports to be a reply to me. It will also be noted that I said: "If anything comes of this offer, the readers of the Advocate will know it." Well, there is "nothing doing." The brother says not one word about his right to teach through the Review, though his article contains something like six hundred words.

While I am under no obligation to give any attention whatever to what Brother Gorrell has here written, I will nevertheless let him speak in his own words. The brother makes the following statement: "Judging by statements found in the latter part of his review, we might be led to suppose that he will be surprised to know of my willingness to even acknowledge receipt of his reply, much less give any attention to its contents." No, I am not surprised that the brother acknowledged the receipt of my review or that he talked around and said nothing about the question at issue. I would have been surprised if he had tried to show that he had the right to teach the Bible and other things through the Review, founded by Benjamin Franklin, while the rest of us have no right to teach the Bible and other things through a Bible school founded by man.

The brother further says: "The question arises, why does Brother Srygley pass by the man who wrote that article and undertake to bring me to account for what Brother Hines wrote, simply and only on the ground that I called attention to it, and that in a commendable way and manner?" I did not bring him to account for what Brother Hines wrote, but for his own practice in using the Review in which to teach the Bible and then keeping up trouble in the churches because others believe they could patronize a school in which the Bible is taught, though they may never have done so.

The brother says: "Why not apply at headquarters and take the matter up with Brother Hines?" I never even intimated that I disagreed with Brother Hines; and if the brother can understand English, he ought to know I did not. He asks: "Is it not a fact that you never brought a single objection in the columns of the Advocate to the article mentioned until you read my remarks concerning it?" Yes, that is a fact, and I never brought a "single objection" to it after I read your remarks concerning it. The brother seems so disappointed that I agreed with Brother Hines that he seeks to make the impression that I disagreed with Brother Hines after I read his remarks. The brother's inability to understand me is really discouraging. In that article I said: "Some of us of the Gospel Advocate never have been as bad as Brother Gorrell thought we were. Some of us have known all the time that schools and newspapers are not church property any more than farms and dairies are church property." This was exactly Brother Hines' contention, but still the brother would try to make the impression that I disagreed with Brother Hines till I saw his remarks. 1 think a Christian has the right to teach the Bible on his farm; in fact, I would not run a farm where I was denied this right. Neither would I teach in a school where I could not teach the Bible. But it is the contention of the Review that one is a "new digressive" who teaches in or patronizes a school where the Bible is taught. No wonder Brother Gorrell cannot remember to try to meet this issue.

The brother further says: "Brother Srygley goes on record as saying that President Holton is mistaken as touching the fact that the church of Christ holds a deed for property at Thorp Spring now being used and controlled by Thorp Spring Christian College." I have been on record on that point ever since I learned what the church of Christ is. The church of Christ is the body of Christ, and is, therefore, made up, or consists, of all Christians. How could such a body hold a deed to anything? If Brother Gorrell is a Christian, he is a part of the church of Christ, and I am wondering if he holds any part of that deed. I am fearful that the brother does not know what the church of Christ is much better than the man did who wrote that deed, provided there is such a deed on record. I am afraid that both Brother Gorrell and the man who wrote that deed, if there be such a deed, have a sectarian idea of the church. With Brother Gorrell, I fear the church of Christ is that part of the body of Christ which holds with the Apostolic Review, founded by Benjamin Franklin; and if that is his idea of the church of Christ, I must say that he is a sectarian, and perhaps does not know it. As for Brother Holton, I must say in his defense that he wrote to Brother Hines, acknowledging that he was in error in the statement he made, and the correction was published in the Gospel Advocate; but one obsessed with the Review idea that every brother who teaches the Bible in a Bible school is a "new digressive" and ought to be withdrawn from is hardly expected to see such a correction or give any credit

As a parting shot, the brother delivers himself of the following: "Srygley, it seems to me you would better reckon with Brother Hines and President Holton before coming to me. I now take pleasure in recommending this to you, believing such a procedure to be fair dealing with all parties concerned. Try it once and note the results." Gorrell, I have no reckoning to do with Brother Hines or Brother Holton. I indorsed Brother Hines' article and Brother Holton's correction of his advertisement of the school, which he said, as I remember, was hastily prepared, and that by another.

Now, Brother Gorrell, to the issue. Will you undertake to prove that you have the right to teach the Bible and other things through the Apostolic Review, while other Christians have no right to teach it through a Bible school? This is the issue between us, and I would take pleasure in dealing fairly with every argument you can make on that issue. I am frank to say to the brother that I do not believe that he can make a single argument in favor of the Review as a means through which to teach the Bible that will not apply to a school. If he can make an argument of this kind, I would like to see it; and if he does not try to do it, it will confirm me in my faith that he cannot do it.

"CHRISTIAN GIVING." No. 3.

BY E. A. ELAM.

HELPING THE POOR.

What "Christian giving" is and the purpose of it, as set forth in the New Testament, have been stated. Last week the contribution of the Gentile churches to the poor of Judea was considered to some extent. Continuing, attention is called to the way in which this contribution was raised.

Now concerning the collection for the saints, as I gave order to the churches of Galatia, so also do ye. Upon the first day of the week let each one of you lay by him in store, as he may prosper, that no collections be made when I come. And when I arrive, whomsoever ye shall approve, them will I send with letters to carry your bounty unto (1 Cor. 16: 1-3.)

The Authorized Version and the margin of the version from which this quotation is taken say, "whomsoever ye shall approve by letters." This shows that the congregation at Corinth approved the ones of their own number who carried their contribution to Jerusalem, and that each congregation was responsible for its own contribution.

This "order" concerning this "collection" was given by inspiration, and shows the wisdom of God, who is the author of it. It should have the profound consideration of all, and it does receive such consideration from all Christians.

The fact that the disciples of Christ at Troas met on the first day of the week "to break bread" and that Paul instructed the Hebrews not to forsake their "own assembling together," as the custom of some was (Heb. 10: 25), aside from other teaching in the New Testament in regard to the Lord's Supper, is enough to lead all who desire to go fully and only by the word of God to do the same. Just so, Paul's "order" to the churches of Galatia and Corinth to make this collection upon the first day of the week is all-sufficient to teach churches to do so now. Christ's baptism in the river Jordan is a divine example, and the baptism of the eunuch by Philip is an inspired one. These are sufficient to show what baptism is. So this teaching on an inspired example of contributing on the first day of the week for a certain purpose, such as helping the poor, is sufficient to lead all who love the Lord to do the same.

Yet, as we shall see later on, all giving to the poor cannot be confined to this weekly contribution.

Notice the following: (1) This places before all a proper purpose for giving-the necessity of "the saints;" (2) regularity and when-"upon the first day of the week;" (3) who—"each one;" (4) how much—"as he may prosper." No human wisdom and human system can equal this, to say nothing of surpassing it. God, who directs the universe, can direct the finances of a congregation.

It is not the money, as such, which God wants. He himself needs no money. He seeks to lead people through their own liberality to richer spiritual blessings and to salvation. He seeks not the money or possessions of people, but their souls; but he can save them only as they become "rich in faith," "rich in good works," "rich" toward him (see Luke 12: 20, 21; 1 Tim. 6: 17-19), and they cannot become rich in this way without regular and liberal giving—without laying up treasures in heaven.

God requires a congregation to use only the money it has; hence, he asks of an individual no more than that one individual is able to do. But he does require that much, When a congregation gives all it is able to give, it gives all that God requires of it.

But how is an individual or a congregation to get money -that is, to make or to "raise" it for such purposes as God wants it used? God's way of doing this is as follows:

Ye yourselves know that these hands ministered unto my necessities, and to them that were with me. In all things I gave you an example, that so laboring ye ought to help the weak, and to remember the words of the Lord Jesus, that he himself said, It is more blessed to give than to receive. (Acts 20: 34, 35.)

Paul set this example for the elders of the church at Ephesus and for us all. Working at something useful is the way to have something with which to help the weak. This is one purpose which all Christians must have in view in following some honest occupation. This makes all daily labor, all honest toil, all work of brain or brawn, religious, makes it service to God, makes it a sweet pleasure, and destroys the difference between that which some so frequently call "the sacred" and "the secular." All the life of Christians—at home, pursuing some honest calling, or in the public service of God, is beautifully and joyously sacred-that is, since everything which God teaches is sacred.

Let him that stole steal no more: but rather let him labor, working with his hands the thing that is good, that he may have whereof to give to him that hath need. (Eph. 4: 28.)

This passage states again how that which is given to the poor is obtained. It must not be obtained by fraud, by cheating others, by theft, or by any other dishonest means. One cannot obtain money in any unfair, unjust, and dishonest way and escape condemnation by attempting to bribe the Lord, as has been stated, by giving something to his poor. "The sacrifice of the wicked is an abomination to Jehovah." The only way to have something to give to the needy is to work for it in an honest way. To work at that which is "good" is to follow some occupation which will bring good and not harm to others. No one has any sort of right to make money by doing that which will bring harm of any kind to others.

With other righteous purposes for following useful occupations (see 1 Thess. 4: 10-12; Tit. 3: 8, 14-margin; 2 Thess. 3: 10, 11), working in order to make something to give to others is one. But how many church members work with their hands in order to have something to give to the poor or to help support the gospel? This would be working for the Lord indeed. Some talk now about "raising money for the church." This is the right and successful way to do it; but this way many shun. They are either unwilling to work or to give of what they have made. If all church members would follow these instructions of the Lord, they would have all the money and other means God desires them to give, for he does not require them to give more than they have or can make.

Many work to make money to spend upon their own lusts-vanity, pride, and the indulgences of fleshly appetites—or to hoard up; but few, to give it away.

When church members fail to make and to use money as God directs. Satan suggests some other way to get it, such as suppers, excursions, foot-and-ankle shows, mock marriages, and various other entertainments which gratify the appetites and lusts of the flesh. Such things, instead of being "sacrifices acceptable, well-pleasing to God" (Phil. 4: 18), are an abomination to him.

It should be added here that all contributions to the poor, to the spread of the gospel, and to the general good of men cannot go through the contribution made by the church on the first day of the week. Christians are to do good unto all men as they have opportunity. (Gal. 6: 10.) Individuals are to entertain strangers, feed the hungry, clothe the naked, visit the fatherless and widows in their afflictions, teach the ignorant, and do all such other personal work as God directs.

A SAD CONDITION OF AFFAIRS.

BY F. W. SMITH.

The disciples of Christ who were not satisfied with the New Testament order of things and who sought to improve upon the Lord's way of doing mission work, and also imagined they could improve upon the way the early Christians worshiped God, have fallen upon evil days.

They organized societies with human laws to control and guide them, and these organizations in the process of time assumed control of the churches, until the churches were considered to function in the evangelization of the world only as money getters to support these human organizations.

The independence of the local church was bartered for nothing more than the empty honor of membership in an organization that controlled its money and directed its missionary efforts. Of course naught but spiritual paralysis, and finally spiritual death, could result from such a departure from God's word.

We are not, therefore, surprised at the following from the Christian Standard:

There is a story told of a son of Israel who was required to fill out a statistical blank for information as to his name, date of birth, and the nature of his business, which he did as follows, out of a full heart:

he did as follows, out of a full heart:

1. Name? Abraham Isaacs.
2. Born? Yes.
3. Business? Rotten.
Ludicrous as the report may seem, it was honest and to the point in the eyes of the reporter, and it may not be out of place to put other things to the test and obtain an answer in the same spirit. Of how many of our congregations would it not be sadly true to report:

Name? Church of Christ.

Born? Yes.

Name? Chu Born? Yes.

Business? Rotten.

Closed houses, empty pulpits, Lord's table unstressed, negligent membership, tell only too truly that the history is complete in the one word "born," and that the state of the one business of redeeming the world is in a "rotten" condition.

Such a state of things, no matter where it may be found, is a reproach to the name of Christ, and constitutes a challenge to all to bear a name as his followers. It ought not so to be, and it calls for prompt and resolute action to find and apply a remedy.

In more than a hundred years of innumerable and all but futile efforts to effect a cure through boards and committees and corporations, there has never been attempted the simple and common-sense way of schooling the churches to care for themselves, the only possible solution. In all these years no assembly has ever been called the sole object of which should be to teach the feeble church how to care for itself, how to use all its own resources for the redemption of its own community.

For the first time in all these years such a convocation is now called for this sole purpose, and for nothing else, where the anxious souls who are grieving over lost opportunities and seeming helplessness may find, in a great exchange of thought and experience, the inspiration in thought and methods that will convert apparent helplessness into dynamic power.

This challenge comes to every church, however weak or strong. To help or to be helped is the common incentive. In this common bond of sympathy, and in this alone, can our churches be infused with new life and be qualified to be in deed and in truth "the pillar and ground of the truth," each in its own environment.

This assembly, a great mass meeting of the earnest souls This assembly, a great mass meeting of the earnest souls who make the prosperity of the church their first thought and their last, will be held in the great resort of Hot Springs, Ark., where every facility for work and recreation abounds on every hand, in early September next. We ask all to follow these pages from week to week for further information ther information.

We fully agree with the Standard that "such a state of things, no matter where it may be found, is a reproach to the name of Christ," but we most emphatically dissent from the "remedy" proposed by the Standard.

In New Testament times the apostles and evangelists "schooled the churches to care for themselves" without calling an assembly or general convention of the different congregations for that purpose, as the Standard proposes. Has the Standard never read Paul's words to Barnabas, his fellow laborer on the first missionary journey? "And after some days Paul said unto Barnabas, Let us return now and visit the brethren in every city wherein we proclaimed the word of the Lord, and see how they fare." (Acts 15: 36.)

Or has the Standard overlooked the evangelists that Paul sent to the churches to teach and school or train them how to care for themselves? Suppose the Standard, as a little pastime, read 1 Thess. 3: 1-10, which gives an account of how a church was "schooled to care for itself."

When churches transfer the work God has laid upon them to some organization unknown to the New Testament, "closed houses, empty pulpits, Lord's table unstressed," and "negligent membership" will sooner or later be the inevitable result. Churches need the individual and personal work that brings them in direct and personal contact with both the field and the evangelist, as we find in the New Testament. Witness the churches sending by their own messengers to evangelists in the field, and from whom they received an acknowledgment of their offerings: "And ye yourselves also know, ye Philippians, that in the beginning of the gospel, when I departed from Macedonia, no church had fellowship with me in the matter of giving and receiving but ye only; for even in Thessalonica ye sent once and again unto my (Phil. 4: 15, 16.) Again: "For from you hath sounded forth the word of the Lord, not only in Macedonia and Achaia, but in every place your faith to Godward is gone forth; so that we need not to speak anything." (1 Thess. 1: 8.)

In the independent and individual work of the church in Thessalonica in sounding out the word it became an example to all churches engaging in the same work." "So that ye became an ensample to all that believe in Macedonia and in Achaia." (1 Thess. 1: 7.)

The brethren of this "Restoration Movement" got it into their heads that they could greatly improve upon this divine example by plans and methods of their own devising, and the result has been disastrous to "our plea." The "organizers" of these better (?) and more efficient (?) ways than the one revealed in the New Testament have fallen out among themselves, and the "war" between them has reached the point of bitterness, with all sorts of charges and countercharges.

While these dear brethren are "fussing" over a thing of their own creation that supplanted God's order, their pulpits are empty, church houses closed, the Lord's table unstressed, and the membership negligent.

Of course the editor of the Standard did not mean that such a state of affairs was universal among the "Disciples," but the situation is of such a magnitude as to be alarming, calling for a clear note of warning and the calling of a great "assembly" to seek a remedy for this spiritual disease. The organizing brethren are so obsessed with the idea of mass meetings or conventions to devise ways and means to help the Lord out of difficulties that they must now call a great "mass meeting" to devise some new method of "schooling the churches to care for themselves!"

Brethren, what have you done with the commission Christ gave to his apostles? Preachers are told to teach the baptized to "observe all things whatsoever I commanded you." (Matt. 28: 20.) Have the preachers among the "Disciples" neglected to thus "school the churches to care for themselves," while they dingatonged them for money three hundred and sixty-five days in the year to run the machinery they organized? With all the faults of those termed "antis," and who refused to become a party to this new denomination, their church houses are not, to any great extent, closed, and neither has the Lord's table gone "unstressed." Instead of calling a "mass meeting" to seek a remedy for the sad state of affairs among the "Disciples," they should abandon their unscriptural organizations, do away with their one-man pastor system that has supplanted and destroyed the work of scriptural elders, and teach the churches to be self-edifying.

BY T. B. LARIMORE.

"Let all things be done decently and in order." (1 Cor. 14: 40.)

Far be it from me to criticize adversely any custom among my brethren, unless duty clearly demands it. But eleven days from to-day—July 10, 1925—I shall be eighty-two years old. Through sixty-one of those fourscore and two years I have been a soldier of the cross, on the firing line, with my face to the foe, having obeyed the gospel about noon of my twenty-first birthday, and Brother Campbell and others having put me to work immediately after I was born into the family of God. It may not be unreasonable, therefore, certainly not unpardonable, for me to submit a few suggestions.

A faithful, sturdy old Scotchman who took care of a church house and churchyard said (or at least is reputed to have said): "I have heard every sermon that has been preached in this house in the last forty years, and, thank God, I'm a Christian yet!" Likewise, regardless of the sermons we preach and hear and the mistakes we make and observe, we should never allow our faith to fail, falter, or waver—never.

Now, then, while I am neither a musician nor the son of a musician, I wish to say a few things about the sacred song service. I have sometimes been sorry to note the efforts of song leaders to be funny, to say amusing things in connection with the song service. I rejoice and am glad that our earnest, efficient song leader here, Brother William Estes, and those who fill his place when he is absent, are too much impressed with the importance of the sacred song service to make attempts to be funny and to "get off" jokes when conducting the song service in worship to God. It is perilous for any man to try to be humorous before an audience unless there is a vein of humor in his nature. Religious service is not supposed to be funny, anyhow.

Many have said much, and much has been said recently, about the relative importance of certain items of Christian service, especially of the Sunday-morning service, but I am still sure every scriptural part of our work and worship is of sufficient importance to merit care and respectful reverence, and, hence, to demand that it be performed without hurry or worry or abbreviation to save time. Better omit a song or a prayer than hurry through it to save time. Why sing "the first, third, and fifth stanzas" of a song instead of the song, and thus fail to get either the sense, sentiment, or spirit of the song? Presumably the saintly soul who wrote the song believed all the lines necessary to develop the sense, sentiment, and spirit intended to be developed by it. Why garble it? Better sing the whole of two songs than sing a part of three or four. If not, why not?

Solomon says: "To everything there is a season, and a time to every purpose under the heaven." There is, therefore, a time to announce "the next song;" and one of the few things I do know is that that time is never immediately before an audience is expected to engage in prayer-never. Let us see how that works. Just before the prayer the song leader announces: "The next song will be No. 17." The brother who is to lead the prayer begins: "Our Father, who art in heaven." What are the others doing? Many of them are hunting the song announced, so as to be ready to begin singing when the prayer ends. be on their knees, but their thoughts are on the number of the song announced. The brother who is leading in prayer is trying to pray properly; but others are turning the leaves of songbooks, trying to find the song announced. and, having found it, they must keep the place in some way, so as to readily locate the song as soon as the prayer ends. The result is almost a prayerless prayer.

It is really not desirable that the song immediately following prayer should begin the moment the prayer ends. for the reason that there are always some stir and consequent confusion immediately after a prayer, incident to the change of posture and the reseating of those who have knelt to pray. Unless time is given for this confusion to subside, the song begins unsatisfactorily, only a few being prepared to begin with the leader. Late churchgoers often reach the door while the prayer is in progress and enter when it is ended. Unless the song is then announced and time allowed for these late comers to find it, some of the people are singing, while many others are consulting the index or hurriedly turning the leaves of songbooks. Announcing the number of the song, clearly and distinctly, twice-and it should always be announced twice-gives time for all stir and confusion to subside and all be ready to begin the song with the leader.

It is customary, in some places, for announcements to be made in the following form: "After this song, Brother Blank will lead us in prayer." Embarrassing situations sometimes arise in connection with such announcements. Not many months ago, in one of my meetings in a little Tennessee town, it was announced: "After this song, Brother Black will lead us in prayer." The song was sung. Brother Black, a devout man, knelt and began to pray, many of the people also kneeling, when the song leader announced: "After prayer, we will sing No. 21." Leaves of songbooks began to rustle and rattle all over the house; but Brother Black, sincere soul that he is, prayed as fervently as he could under the circumstances. This mistake was a result of the impression that the next song must be announced before the prayer, which should certainly never be done.

Brethren, these things ought not so to be. Why not announce, clearly and distinctly, each item of the service as it is reached? That is, announce the number of the song to be sung—announce it, clearly and distinctly, twice, as some may not understand it the first time; then the number of the next song when its time comes, and so on. When the time for the prayer arrives, announce it, having previously privately notified the brother who is to lead it. After the prayer is ended, announce the song to be sung next, thus giving the audience time to be seated or reseated and to find the song, that all may begin singing together.

The only exception to this rule is the announcement of the invitation song before the sermon, and the reason for that is obvious. The invitation song should begin immediately after the close of the sermon, and its announcement before the sermon does not create confusion, because the people are all seated and can arrange to readily find the song when the time to sing it comes, as all are supposed to be in their places by that time—are in their places, if they are at all interested in Christ and his cause.

"Let all things be done decently and in order."

- 1. No. It is one of "the main things."
- 2. Yes. (See Phil. 4: 6.)
- 3. The example of Jesus teaches us that thanks were offered for each separately. (See Matt. 26: 26, 27; Mark 14: 22, 23; Luke 22: 17-19; 1 Cor. 11: 23-25.
- 4. The only instruction we have on this point is the example of Christ. He "blessed" it and then "brake" it.
- 5. No certain "posture" is mentioned or described in the Scriptures. Any convenient, humble posture will be accepted of the Lord.
- 6. Yes. One large container with the small distributors or cups may be used, since the Scriptures do not command that only one cup be used.
- 7. There is no scripture that designates the condition of the wine that is to be used. It is spoken of as "the cup" or "the fruit of the vine." (Luke 22: 18.)
- 8. No scripture designates the kind of bread to be used. It is very probable that unleavened bread was used by the Savior, but there are no instructions in the New Testament telling the kind of bread to be used. We know that it would be safe in using unleavened bread, as the Savior probably used that kind.
  - 9. I suppose it is merely following a custom.
  - 10. See answer to No. 5 above.

- 11. "The Lord's Supper" is for all of the Lord's people who are present. "But let a man prove himself, and so let him eat of the bread, and drink of the cup." (1 Cor. 11: 28.)
  - 12. See answer to No. 11.
  - 13. See answer to No. 11.
- 14. As stated in answer No. 11, the Lord's Supper is only for the Lord's people. The New Testament teaches nothing on "open communion" or "close communion." All churches which follow the New Testament in this please the Lord; those which do not, displease him.
- 15. Any worthy, faithful disciple may do this. It is usually done by some of the male members.
- 16. Deacons may do this, as they would be included in the answer to No. 15.
  - 17. Yes. See answer to No. 15.
- 18. The Lord's Supper may be eaten at any convenient hour on the Lord's day, or the first day of the week. An hour which suits the greatest number should be selected; but if some cannot meet at that hour, then they may eat it at any other convenient hour. The Scriptures do not state what hour on the first day of the week it should be eaten; hence, any hour of that day will please the Lord.
- 19. Eating the Lord's Supper once on the first day of the week meets all scriptural requirements; hence, when this is done, it is best not to go any further.
- 20. There is no scriptural example or instruction authorizing the eating of the Lord's Supper on any day except the first day of the week.
- 21. No, if the prayer meeting is on the first day of the week and those who are participating have not eaten the Supper at any previous hour of that day. If the prayer meeting is on some other day of the week, then the Lord's Supper should not be eaten.
- 22. Scriptural examples and teachings give instruction to eat the Supper on the first day of the week. Every week has its first day. There are no distinctions to be made between the different first days of the week. Each first day of the week brings its own obligations. (See Acts 20: 7; 1 Cor. 16: 1, 2.)
- 23. All should be taught the purpose of the Supper and encouraged to eat it with humility and reverence.
  - 24. Read the Scriptures upon this subject.
- 25. Any clear and definite expression of thanksgiving for the bread may be used. The thanks should be full enough to include the bread; no long prayer should be offered for the bread; both extremes should be avoided. Thanks should not be too brief.
  - 26. See answer to No. 25.
- 27. All the blessings which God intends that any one who eats the Supper in faith and humility should receive. The Supper should be eaten as the Lord directs in the New Testament, whether we can see any benefits or not. There are always blessings for those who obey the commandments of God.
- 28. Yes, if one willfully and neglectfully persists in ignoring the Lord's Supper, that one should be disciplined.
- 29. Yes, so far as the "serving" is concerned. It may be that many do not eat it "discerning the Lord's body."
- 30. By seeking earnestly and prayerfully to please the Lord in eating the Supper.

BLIND LEADERS.

BY J. BARNES.

Talking over religious matters, we frequently hear folks say, "We all can't see alike," and in this way try to justify themselves in pursuing their religious teaching and practice in their religious worship of God. Any preacher that cannot see well enough to tell people just what to do to be saved, after it has been written down by inspired men, is surely blind indeed. It is wonderfully strange that the preachers of the different denominations can see so many grand and noble things to preach that cannot be found in the New Testament, but cannot see well enough to preach like the inspired apostles in telling inquiring people what to do to be saved, after it has been penned by Jehovah himself and made so plain by the teaching of the Holy Spirit "that the wayfaring men, though fools, shall not err therein."

The responsibility for erroneous teaching of God's word is great. "Now I beseech you, brethren, mark them which cause divisions and offenses contrary to the doctrine which ye have learned; and avoid them. For they that are such serve not our Lord Jesus Christ, but their own belly; and by good words and fair speeches deceive the hearts of the simple." (Rom. 16: 17, 18.) If all good and great men that pretend to be preachers of the gospel would be satisfied to preach just what they are authorized to preach by the word of God, it would be a great blessing to themselves and to the world. It seems to me that any man who is not willing to preach just what the Holy Spirit commands to be preached for the salvation of the souls of dying men and women would better stay at home and raise peanuts than to try to preach at all.

BIBLE CROSS WORD PUZZLE

NOT so many words as some, but those that are listed are hard enough to suit any Biblical student, and just to make them harder, not so many references are given as is the case with other puzzles in the book. This is a veritable "shorter catechism" and will repay careful thought by yielding up some unusually interesting Piblical

How to solve a Least work rul

To work out this puzzle, the white spaces must be filled with letters forming words answering to the various horizontal and vertical definitions given below. The horizontal and vertical words are not the same, but each gives a clue to the other. The first letter of each word is indicated by a number which refers to the definitions listed below.

It is advisable to first fill in, in both directions, those words which you know to be correct. These will furnish hints to those words which you do not know or had merely guessed at. When the puzzle is solved correctly, the letters in the white spaces will spell words both horizontally and vertically. The black spaces are the blind spots of the puzzle and merely form the pattern incidentally designating the ends and beginnings of the words contained in the puzzle.

free speech. If Mr. Scopes and other evolutionists, many of whom are personal friends of mine, wish to express their opinion and teach their hypothetheir opinion and teach their hypothesis, they have a perfect right to do so; but if the majority of the people of Tennessee object to the theory of evolution being taught to their children, they also have a right to make a law which prevents any man from forcing this theory upon their children while he is in their employment and their children are intrusted to his and their children are intrusted to his

Can we not object to, and pass a law against, Buddhism and Mohammedanism being presented to our seventh-grade boys and girls as a true religion? Yet could our objections to these things and our laws against them being taught in the public schools in any way prove that we are therefore opposing free speech? Certainly not, for one may be a Mohammedan, teach his religion upon the street, through his journals, and in his books, yet be denied by law the privilege of making it a part of the course presented to children whom he is employed to teach in the public schools, if the taxpayers of the State object. object.

schools, if the taxpayers of the State object.

Evolutionists may not be able to see why we should object. This is not the issue. We do object. Our objection shall be heard as long as the majority of Tennesseeans are opposed to their children's being taught that God's word is untrue. The privilege of opposing it cannot be justly denied them. This is plainly constitutional.

With many of us the issue rests on the personality and authority of Jesus. He was what he claimed to be, or he was deceived, or he was a deceiver. It can be proven that he was not deceived and was not a deceiver. Therefore, he was what he claimed to be. But he said he was the Son of God. There is abundant proof in his resurrection, his teaching, his son of God. There is abundant proof in his resurrection, his teaching, his works, his influence over men, his virgin birth, his personality, for accepting his claim.

I accept him as such, and upon his I accept him as such, and upon his authority I accept the account of the creation in Genesis. To say that Genesis is a myth is to me the same as saying that Jesus is untrue and is not the Son of God. Science is classified knowledge. The theory of evolution is in the field of philosophy. The hypothesis of evolution is a guess. It is an attempt to explain causation and pothesis of evolution is a guess. It is an attempt to explain causation, and is a denial of the Genesis account given by Jehovah and stamped by Christ with his approval.

To array all discovery and scientific progress under evolution is absurd. To say that all those who denounce the theory of evolution are fighting science is untrue. We do not object to science. We are benefited by science, we are students of science, and we honor science in its place. Mr. Bryan and others like him are not ignorant of science or its benefits. Many scientists oppose the theory of not ignorant of science or its benefits. Many scientists oppose the theory of evolution. The battle is against the illegal action of men who in the name of science insist upon teaching our children during their tender and impressionable years that the word of God is false and that Christ, our Lord, is untrue. We must object. We have a constitutional right to object. We would be traitors to our conception of Christ if we did not object.

WONDERING AFTER THE BEAST.

BY H. C. FLEMING.

In this article I simply wish to call attention to some of the things recorded in the thirteenth, seventeenth, and twentieth chapters of Revelation -not that I claim any superior knowledge or that I am able to fully understand unfulfilled prophecy. All uninspired men who have attempted to make specific interpretations of these or any others have made failures. But there are some in these that seem to be drawing nearer day by day, and they are at least nearer now than when they were first written; but we do not know how nor when God will bring them to pass. That will be at his own time.

Now let us read in Rev. 13: "And I saw one of his heads as it were wounded to death; and his deadly wound was healed: and all the world wondered after the beast." (Verse 3.) "And they worshiped the beast, saying, Who is like unto the beast? who is able to make war with him?" (Verse 4.) "And he opened his mouth in blasphemy against God, to blaspheme his name." (Verse 6.) "And it was given unto him to make war with the saints, and to overcome them: and power was given him over all kindreds, and tongues, and nations." (Verse 7.)

In reference to the foregoing I ask, why is the man of sin now seeking power, by cunning craftiness and deceitfulness, to control all the nations of the earth, and why is such a large percentage of people wondering after him? "Let him that hath understanding count the number of the beast: for it is the number of a man; and his number is Six hundred threescore and six." (Verse 18.)

"These shall make war with the Lamb, and the Lamb shall overcome them: for he is Lord of lords, and King of kings: and they that are with him are called, and chosen, and faithful." (Rev. 17: 14.) We notice from this that there will be trials, tribulations, and persecutions of the saints, but that they will finally triumph over all through the power of the Lamb of God. But what of those who worshiped the beast and his image? "And they went up on the breadth of the earth, and compassed the camp of the saints about, and the beloved city: and fire came down from God out of heaven, and devoured them." (Rev. 20: 9.)

All who wonder after the beast will be swallowed up in this great catastrophe; therefore, notwithstanding all now living may not remain until the completion of all these things, it behooves us to watch closely that we be not found in the number who will encompass the camp of the saints, and avoid all false teachings of men who lie in wait to deceive, strictly following the will of the Lord in all things pertaining to life and godliness.

"Beware lest any man spoil you through philosophy and vain deceit, after the tradition of men, after the rudiments of the world, and not after Christ." (Col. 2: 8.)

FREEDOM OF SPEECH.

BY BATSELL BAXTER.

In many of the States of our Union it is unlawful for a teacher to teach the Bible in the public schools. This is in spite of the fact that this is called a "Christian nation" and that the Bible is used in administering the oath of office to our Chief Executive. One State in the Union has recently made it unlawful to teach infidelity in the schools. This infidelity masks under the name "evolution."

Now, if some teacher should teach the Bible in some school in a State where this was against the law, his act would bring on him the penalty of the law, and little would be said about it. But now, when some one teaches evolution in a State where the people, through their lawmakers, have said that it shall not be taught in their schools, lo, the whole country is combed for the best lawyers to defend him, and a great array of legal and financial talent is rushed to his aid in the name of free speech.

Have the people a right to say that the Bible shall not be taught in their schools? No one has questioned that legal right, not even the advocates of "freedom of speech." These fellows are perfectly happy to have the Bible out of it. But when their theory which attempts to account for the origin of man and set the Bible story aside is ruled out of the schools, they rush like eagles from the four corners of the country to fight the law and nullify the will of the citizens of a sovereign State.

The people have a right to say what shall be taught in the schools which they have built and which they maintain by their taxes. They have as much right to legislate against teaching that destroys faith in the anchor of their religious life as they have to legislate against teaching which destroys faith in the Constitution, the anchor of our political faith.

The same influence that stopped freedom of speech in the classrooms on religious matters has brought in this teaching of evolution under the plea for freedom of speech. They are in favor of freedom of speech to teach their own theory, but against freedom of speech to teach the other side of the question.

the hour of meeting from the afternoon to the morning hour, and we find it more convenient and much easier to induce people to attend the morning service; hence, from this viewpoint, the work has been more successful. The hall will seat comfortably about one hundred and fifty people, but it does not afford the conveniences of a modern church building. It is centrally located, easily reached from all the hotels, subway stations, trolley cars, and busses. There is really no reason why a Christian coming to New York either on a visit, business trip, or to attend school, should not make it a point to worship with us.

I feel that every reader of the Gospel Advocate can, in a measure, appreciate my position relative to this or any other mission, that it takes money to keep the work going. It requires about two hundred and thirty-five dollars a month to meet our current expenses here, and that will barely keep our heads above the water without any margin whatever to advertise, buy literature, or do anything else to make the work progress. This church contributes on an average about seventy-five dollars of the monthly receipts. For instance, the total receipts for either March or April dropped as low as one hundred and seventy-five dollars, and it is not much better now, and you can imagine all the expenses being paid out of this amount without somebody making some real sacrifices! But I believe in making sacrifices, for they have been our making in this work. This is the field for a preacher to learn to make some of the greatest sacrifices he has ever made in his life.

But if the brotherhood can once be awakened to the real need of the New York field, then I believe it will help us to bear the brunt of the burden.

Brethren, in my former reports I have tried to make it plain that our support for this year was running very low, and I believe the above is sufficient for every one to see that we are greatly in need of a better support. So I still urge that more congregations and individuals join us in our struggle to establish primitive Christianity in New York City. May the Lord bless you in attending to this matter at once. ### SISTER NANNIE SWINDOLL LAWS.

BY D. P. CRAIG.

On June 8, 1925, Sister Nannie Swindoll Laws, after a brief illness, fell asleep in Christ. She was a member of the congregation at Hickory Flat, Miss., and was a true and consecrated Christian unto the end. I have never known a more faithful disciple nor one more zealous in advocating the ancient order of things and in keeping the traditions and institutions of the New Testament. She was indeed a bright and shining light in the community in which she lived, doing all things in the spirit of our Lord and Master.

The writer had the pleasure of visiting in her home, having been called by this esteemed sister to labor in word and doctrine in her community in opposition to the digressive element which had split and divided the congregation over things unauthorized by the word of God. Sister Laws lamented the tide of digressionism which has swept this part of the State, yet I never saw a finer example of Christian excellence than was exhibited in the daily walks of her life. It was beautiful to see how she rejected the doctrines and commandments of men and perfectly contented herself with what "is written." What her dear Lord had authorized and enjoined was sufficient. That was the end of the matter.

Sister Laws was the wife of G. T. Laws, whom she leaves to mourn her loss. She was born on March 3, 1846, and was married in December, 1866. She reared a large family, serving them during her long Christian life as only a true mother can, seeking to impress the image of Christ upon their hearts. Besides her husband. she is survived by six children, all of whom were present when the end came. A few days before her death a family reunion had been held, in which all the members of her family were present. She was a member of one of the oldest and best families of North Mississippi, which family was among the first converts to the Christian faith in that community.

On account of heavy rains and washouts, the writer failed to reach the Laws home in time to conduct funeral services, but an appropriate reading was made by Brother Dupee, an aged disciple, who had known the deceased for many years.

Sister Laws was always punctual to the Lord's appointments on the first day of the week; and when the congregation became divided by the introduction of human institutions, she took her stand with those who opposed them, choosing to commemorate the death and resurrection of the tractions. How comforting the thought that, after a life well spent in the Master's service, she has passed into that eternal rest, where there are no more disappointments, trials, sorrows, or death, and where God shall wipe al! tears from her eyes!

She was laid to rest in the Hickory

Flat cemetery, in the presence of a host of sorrowing relatives and friends. May the bereaved take courage at the noble example she has left them and press on in the name of the Master to great deeds of service and loyalty, even toward the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus.

COMMENDATIONS OF BIBLE LESSON HELPS

"I am delighted with your Lesson Helps, and regard them as the best I have examined." (C. W. Thompson.)

"We have been using the Lesson Helps for fifteen years or more. I noticed the change, and, in my humble judgment, think it good." (W. G. Harrison.)

"I have received sample copies of your Lesson Helps and examined them. I pronounce them as good, so far as I can think, as can be made." (Ira C. Moore.)

"We are using your Sunday-school Lesson Helps at Fairfax church of Christ, this city, and think they are good. We have no criticism to offer." (M. P. Lowry.)

"I am glad to commend the Bible Lesson and Helps issued by the Gospel Advocate Company. They cannot fail of being helpful to any church using them." (C. A. Norred.)

"The Quarterlies are fine. They should be a great help to the Bible student. I would be glad if Bible classes that do not now have them would take up their use." (R. P. Cuff.)

"Your Quarterlies received and briefly examined. They show that much time and care have been exercised in their preparation. They are clear, scriptural, and to the point." (E. L. Whitaker.)

"I think the Quarterlies very instructive and helpful in the study of the Scriptures' both in the home aud in the public assembly, and it will give me pleasure to commend them to all the faithful workers in my field of labor." (J. D. Jones.)

"The Sunday-school literature that is published by the Gospel Advocate Company I can heartly recommend to any one who is to search for good helps on our Sunday-school lessons." (Robert E. Wright.)

"A complete assortment of the Sunday-school literature published by the Gospel-Advocate Company was sent me recently. Having examined it carefully, I am glad to say I consider it excellent, and gladly commend it to congregations, teachers, and classes." (T. B. Larimore.)

"As a whole, I think your Lesson Helps far surpass other literature of its kind. Here in this great mission field (Louislana) where we have placed them, many comparisons have been made between them and both the denominational and our society brethren's literature, and at no time have your Lesson Helps come off second best." (C. C. McQuiddy.)

"It is a pleasure to write a word of commendation of Brother Elam's Notes on Bible School Leasons. They are the product of one who has given the greater part of his life to the study and teaching of God's Word. They are true to the Bible, comprehensive, and scholarly. If you love the truth, you will be delighted to study with him these wonderful lessons." (A. G. Freed.)

"Brother E. A. Elam's Notes, as published annually, is, in my judgment, sortotural and the best thing of its kind I have ever seen or that is published to-day. Everybody bught to have a copy and preserve it for study and reference. Broths: Elam's twenty-five years' work, if every year should be bound in a separate volume, the twenty-five volumes would be a great addition to any library. (C. M. Pullias.)

"At the Central church of Christ in Fort Worth we have been using in our Bible school Elam's Notes and other literature of his. For a great number of years the writer of this has felt that Brother Elam was one of the best-prepared men in the brotherhood for the preparation of such literature. His Notes, in our best judgment, represent, or reflect, the best efforts he has ever made. Both as an elder of the congregation and as a teacher in our Bible School, I have very great pleasure in indorsing his Notes. To the extent that an expression of our views is of value, I assure you we are very pleased to give it." (J. G. Wilkinson)

pleased to give it." (J. G. Wilkinson.)

"I have used Elam's Quarterlies for years. They are superior to any that I have seen, Elam's Notes on Bible School Lessons are much fuller than they. They give the historical setting as to time and place that is needed and valuable. They give so many scriptural citations and references—Scriptural citations and references—Scriptures that introduce the text or corroborate the text—that the average student may know the geography, the history, and the full meaning of the lesson. They give so many lessons, deducted from the copious citations of Scriptures, that the student may know more perfectly God's will. For years I have used Peioubet's Select Notes. I compare them weekly, I do not hesitate to say that Elam's Notes are infinitely superior, if

FAITH IN GOD OR MAN? BY O. H. TALLMAN.

A few years ago I bought a brick house, well situated and containing all modern conveniences. added a beautiful veranda, upper balcony, and an attached garage. These improvements proved to the world that I was not satisfied with the original house and that I had faith in my own ability to improve upon the original plan.

A few centuries ago Jesus Christ built for us a spiritual house; the church, containing all spiritual blessings. Now, if I add to this house a Christian Endeavor Society, a Ladies' Aid Society, and a few missionary societies, have I not as plainly proved to God and the world that I am not satisfied with the church of Christ, but have faith in my own wisdom and ability to improve upon the divine plan?

A SAFE POSITION ON OLD TES-TAMENT PROPHECIES.

BY J. B. NELSON.

There has been so much speculation on the prophecies found in the Old Testament that I have come to the opinion that no person should take a position upon a prophecy found in the Old Testament and ask others to accept his teaching of the same as vital to-day, unless he can find its quotation, fulfillment, or parallel in the New Testament. I believe if all will observe this we will remain upon safe ground.

Some one may be ready to ask what right have I to even suggest such a rule, or take such a position, or even infer that others should observe it. My answer is from the Bible. I believe I am in perfect harmony with the New Testament teaching. Let us hear from Jesus in his sermon to his disciples just before he was crucified: "These things have I spoken unto you, while yet abiding with you. But the Comforter, even the Holy Spirit, whom the Father will send in my name, he shall teach you all things, and bring to your remembrance all that I said unto you." (John 14: 25, 26.) "Howbeit when he, the Spirit of truth, is come, he shall guide you into all the truth." (John 16: 13.) You will please note that Jesus says the Holy Spirit "shall guide you into all the truth." Not "a truth" or "some of the truth," but "all the truth." And "he shall teach you all things "-not "some things," but "all things." Let us hear from Luke on these things: "The former treatise I made, O Theophilus, concerning all that Jesus began both to do and to teach, until the day in which he was received up, after that he had given commandment unto the apostles whom he had chosen." (Acts 1: 1, 2.) Let us hear from the inspired apostle Peter: "Seeing that his divine power hath granted unto us all things that pertain unto life and godliness, through the knowledge of him that called us by his own glory and virtue." Pet. 1: 3.) God in his divine power granted "all things" that pertain to life and godliness, and through the same apostles left to the generations to follow all he wanted them to believe and do concerning the things Christ taught and did while on earth.

In the face of the above quotations, how can those who are speculating upon prophecies concerning the Jews' going back to Palestine and Christ's coming back to earth to sit upon David's throne continue their divisive teaching, when, if their life depended upon it, they could not find one scripture that even hints of such?

If our speculative brethren will spend more time telling sinners how to become Christians and how to live the Christian life, they will accomplish more good and cause less confusion in the church of Jesus Christ.

From the Brethren

Celina, Tenn., June 21.—My short visit to the Free Hill congregation on the third Lord's day in June meant much to me. The facts that I had learned during my travels concerning the welfare of my people were burning deeply into my heart and the sad stories which I had heard from individuals were beating through my soul; but, being received so graciously by those in Celina who have had similar experiences, I count this as a memory to be treasured. Brother George A. Johnson, of Cookeville, Tenn., was conducting a series of meetings at this place while I was there. A contribution was taken for the Nashville Christian Institute, and the Gospel Advocate found its way into some new homes.—Annie C. Tuggle. Tuggle.

Nashville, Tenn., July 10.—On the first Lord's day in June I began a meeting at Huntsville, Ala., which continued three weeks and resulted in ten baptisms. This meeting was attended well by white and colored. A Missionary Baptist preacher attacked the truth five nights, and the truth overcame, and to God be all the praise. The church here, a little over two years old, has bought a splendid lot and is aiming to build at once. Next I went to Florence, Ala., and began a meeting in our new meetinghouse given to the colored congregation by the white church on Poplar Street. These are fine, Christian white people. This meeting resulted in six baptisms and the little band greatly edified. All the meetings I have conducted this year have been so encouraging I have been called back next year. I am now (July 9) at Laguardo, Tenn., conducting a tent meeting. Interest is high, and we are prayerfully looking for great results. Brother R. V. Cawthon (white) arranged for this meeting.—

CURRENT COMMENT

By JAMES A. ALLEN

E. F. Morgan, Boswell, Okla., sends us a clipping from the Literary Digest on "Dr. Fosdick's New Kind of Church," an extract of which says:

Forced out of the pulpit of the First Presbyterian Forced out of the pulpit of the First Presbyterian Church, in which he was a special preacher, because he could not subscribe to the "Westminster Confession of Faith," Dr. Fosdick now returns to the fold in which he was baptized, and enters a pulpit to which he was invited by almost unanimous vote, on conditions laid down by himself. These conditions require that the word "Baptist" be left out of the title of the institution, though used in its subtitle; that the only indispensable requirement for admission be confession of faith, the rite of baptism by immersion being omitted whenever desired; that Dr. Fosdick be permitted to choose his assistant ministers withimmersion being omitted whenever desired; that Dr. Fosdick be permitted to choose his assistant ministers without regard to their denomination; and that the congregation build a larger structure near Columbia University. Dr. Fosdick also stipulates that his salary shall not be in excess of five thousand dollars. Dr. Fosdick uses the phrase "inclusive membership" in describing what he wants; and Dr. Cornelius Woelfkin, the present pastor, whose resignation because of age takes effect next January, says that "inclusive membership" means receiving into membership persons from any Christian denomination upon presentation of letters, without insisting on the rite of immersion in cases where there is objection to it. "This," says Dr. Woelfkin, in a public announcement, is "evangelical and Christian. It is in harmony with our best Baptist traditions. Our genius is not an ordinance, but a spirit of religious liberty." Just one thing is central in Christianity, said Dr. Fosdick in his first sermon, as we quote it from press reports, and that is "discipleship to Jesus Christ—and that anybody who has that spiritual root of the matter sincerely in him ought to be welcome on equal terms with everybody else in the church of Christ." Declaring that Christianity in the beginning was a simple faith, without "elaborate sacraments" and without ritual, Dr. Fosdick goes on:

"What is Christianity? The Nicene Creed? That is a great creed, but it is not Christianity. What is Christianity? Is it the Catholic Church, or the Episcopalian Church, or the Baptist Church, or the Presbyterian Church? No. These are important; they have made great condick be permitted to choose his assistant ministers with-tributions; but they are secondary. They are not Christianity. What is Christianity? Is it baptism or the Lord's Supper? They are very beautiful to us who know them, but they are not Christianity.

"What is Christianity? Christianity is the spirit and quality of life that is breathed into people from fellowship with Jesus, and the people in whom it is you will find among all creeds and churches. Father Damien, the Cathelic, going out to help the leners because they are some of among all creeds and churches. Father Damien, the Catholic, going out to help the lepers because they are sons of God—that is Christianity. George Fox, the Quaker, proving the reality of the inner light that God had given him by the radiance of his living—that is Christianity. The Protestant missionary, murdered by the Boxers in China, sending back word to his ten-year-old son that when grown he should go out to China to tell the people who had killed his father about the love of God—that is Christianity.

"And, my friends, when you are all through discussing the things that are needed for the improvement of the church, this is what the church needs most of all: more real Christians, to whom Christianity is keeping fellowship with the Master and learning how to live."

Dr. Fosdick is not alone in being unable to subscribe to the "Westminster Confession of Faith." And yet the fact that he does not subscribe to the "Westminster Confession of Faith" does not furnish either reason or authority to deny some of the plainest statements in the Bible, as Dr. Fosdick has done.

This "new kind of church," which recognizes Dr. Fosdick as its leader, is to be "open to all confessing Christians, whether they have creed or none." The sensational "Docter" fails to see that no "confessing Christian" could enter such "an opening," for the reason that for a man to "confess" himself to be a Christian is equivalent to confessing that he subscribes to the Christian creed. A man without a creed cannot be a Christian. The word of God is the creed of the Christian. "Faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God." (Rom. 1: 17.) "Without faith it is impossible to please him [God]." (Heb. 11: 6.)

This is what cuts off Dr. Fosdick and all who stand with him. As much as they pretend to abhor "creeds" and "complicating" doctrines, they have a creed of their own that is as inclusive and exclusive as any creed in existence, and their "doctrine" is far more "complicated" than any of the "complicated doctrines" they condemn. The trouble is, not that they have a creed, but that their creed is antagonistic to the word of God, even to the extent of directly denying the truthfulness of plain statements of the word of God. No man who denies the word of God is a Christian. He may be very religious, may even be a preacher, as Dr. Fosdick, but he is not a

No man can make a sincere "confession of faith" when he is teaching that "the rite of baptism by immersion" may be "omitted whenever desired." Jesus commands "every creature" that "believes" to be "immersed," and no man has faith, much less can he make a confession of it, who refuses to do and teach all that Jesus commands.

Dr. Fosdick is mistaken about what constitutes Christianity. We agree with him that neither the Catholic, Episcopalian, Baptist, nor Presbyterian churches are teaching Christianity. These churches teach parts of Christianity, repudiate other parts of Christianity, and teach other things that are not Christianity at all. "Father" Damien, the Catholic priest, did a good deed in going to help the lepers, but many men help lepers who are not Christians and who do not believe in Christ. Doing good to men is a part of the life of a Christian; yet doing good to men, of itself, does not make a man a Christian. The theory of Christianity is the words of Jesus Christ, the practice of Christianity being an obedience to the words of Jesus Christ in daily life. Until a man is willing to believe, teach, and practice all that Jesus commands, he is not a Christian.

THE FIGHT.

BY J. W. MADDOX.

"Brethren and fathers, hear ye the defense which I now make unto you." (Acts 22:1.)

This is the beginning of Paul's speech, made to his own people, while standing upon the stairs of the castle in the city of Jerusalem, after he had been rescued from the Jews, his own people, who were about to kill him for defiling the temple by bringing into it, as they supposed, people that were Greeks; and they further claimed that he taught "all men everywhere against-the people and the law," and against Jerusalem.

It is safe to say that at this time he had been a preacher of the gospel for about thirty years, perhaps more. He had experienced enough to know that his life was always in danger whenever the teaching of the Holy Spirit opposed the popular religion. He had once been stoned and left for dead, and at other times had fled for his life; but none of these things moved him. On every occasion, whether during prosperity or adversity, during commendation or persecution, he demonstrated his honesty and his faith in Christ by making an opportunity to to preach the gospel. Any coward can be brave when he has the world at his back, but it takes a hero like Paul to face a howling mob that would destroy him. He well knew the persecuting spirit of the Jewish people and the glee in which they would stone him for preaching Jesus, yet, while still suffering from the beating administered in the streets of Jerusalem, he asked permission from the chief captain, who had arrested him, to speak unto the people—the mob which wished to kill him. He is safe in the captain's hands and can without fear defy them; but this is not his purpose. This howling mob he speaks to as "brethren and fathers" and prays that they hear his defense.

It was a most convincing address, showing that he could not possibly be mistaken concerning "this Way" which he had once persecuted unto death, but that through unmistakable and miraculous manifestations of the Son of God he had been convinced of the absolute certainty of Christianity, and by the same Jesus who appeared to him in the way he had been sent to preach the gospel to the Gentiles. Not only was this masterly address a complete defense of the cause that Paul espoused, but it was abundantly sufficient to convince this mob of the truthfulness of the claims of the new religion if they had been willing to believe truth and had not been blinded by their traditions. But their prejudice was too great; and when told that the Gentiles had also been made recipients of the gospel, "they lifted up their voice, and said, Away with such a fellow from the earth: for it is not fit that he should live." He had spoken words contrary to their belief, and no difference if Christ had appeared to him, they wished to put him to death.

The history of the Jews shows that they always opposed and persecuted those who resisted their current belief and practice whether right or wrong. They refused all reformers of whatever nation or creed. Stephen, in his speech before the council, said: "As your fathers did, so do ye. Which of the prophets did not your fathers persecute? and they killed them that showed before of the coming of the Righteous One; of whom ye have become the betrayers and murderers." (Acts 7:51, 52.) "Jehovah, the God of their fathers, sent unto them his messengers; . . . but they mocked the messengers of God, and despised his words, and scoffed at his prophets."

(2 Chron. 36: 15, 16.) Jesus said: "I send unto you prophets, and wise men, and scribes: some of them shall ye kill and crucify; and some of them shall ye scourge in your synagogues, and persecute from city to city: that upon you may come all the righteous blood shed upon the earth, from the blood of Abel the righteous unto the blood of Zachariah son of Barachia, whom ye slew between the sanctuary and the altar. . . . O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, that killeth the prophets, and stoneth them that are sent unto her! how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not!" (Matt. 23: 34-37.) Paul was thoroughly acquainted with Jewish customs and had an exact and personal knowledge of their persecuting spirit. He, no doubt, was familiar with the prophecies above quoted relative to their rejection of the counsel of God. But he used every opportunity to convince them of their fault and turn them to Christ. Although they possessed this spirit of unwillingness to accept truth, they were always given opportunity to hear the truth. We, as Christians, have no right to turn from those who err until we have endeavored to show them the truth. After they refuse to hear the truth, we cannot consistently continue to worship with them. There must then be a separation. We cannot worship with those who will not take the New Covenant as their only rule of faith and practice.

On studying this speech of Paul, we wonder that they did not accept such conclusive proof. How could they listen and not be convinced? Yet we have people to-day who say they believe the New Testament, but they wish to follow their own ways and their traditions just as did the Jews to whom Paul spoke. We are constantly confronted with members of the church who insist upon following some unscriptural way of doing the Lord's work, and that against the plain examples recorded under the new covenant. The practices of some congregations are very different from others. Those who instruct should endeavor to correct the fault of erring congregations so that all congregations work and worship alike. No congregation of Christians should be condemned until an earnest effort has been made to lead it to New Testament practice.

These Jews to whom Paul was speaking were his own countrymen, and he wished them to know the truth. No man accepting the responsibility of teaching the word of God has any right to refrain from presenting the truth in its fullness for the sake of pleasing his friends. Paul did not. Had he done so, he would have become not only their enemy, but also the enemy of Christ. Our greatest friends are those who have loved us well enough to tell us the truth when we have been misdirected in our duty and in our service to God. Those who decline to set us aright for fear of hurting our feelings or wounding our pride are the enemies of the cross of Christ as well as our poor friends. Paul did not make friends with the world, and neither can those who contend for the plain, simple teaching of the New Covenant. Every effort to bring the simple practices of the apostles to light will be met with ridicule and persecution—sometimes even among members of the body of Christ.

We must expect opposition both from within and without. The popular religionists and faddists of the day will not suffer the New Covenant to survive if they can help it, even though Paul should stand up to proclaim it to them. It requires courage and determination to withstand the Evil One and suffer the loss of friends. The spirit of persecution is still in the world, and those whom we seek to benefit and save may be the loudest to condemn us. There is nothing more ungodly than the mean spirit of persecution and ridicule. There is only one way to correct error, and that is to teach the New Testament in the spirit of Christ. The world will never be made good until people accept the New Covenant as their only rule of faith and practice. It is a sad condition to see some who claim to be Christians persecuting Catholics. Those who were persecuted have turned persecutor.

In this country there is a body of people who claim to be Christians—nothing more and nothing less. They have no creed but the Bible. But, in spite of the fact that they ask no one to believe or practice what is not found in the Bible, the popular religions of all the country unite against them.

It is a matter of fact to be regretted that sometimes we find even those who have no creed but the Bible conforming to the opinions of men. Sad to say, we sometimes find them slow to give up a human practice for a divine example. Shall we, on this account, become discouraged and refrain from an attempt to correct error in the church of Christ? Paul did not. Even to those who would slay him he proclaimed Christ. Whenever he found the brethren adopting human ways, he was firm in his endeavor to correct their folly. He had much trouble with early Christians over their human practices, and we may also expect trouble. Unless we try to correct the erring, we are their enemies. While Paul was diligent in proclaiming Christ to the heathen, he was untiring and bold in his efforts to correct any departure from the divine plan. He tells us to imitate him. The fear of ridicule must not restrain us.

THE CHURCH. BY J. LEE BLACK.

God promised to raise up a King over the Jews like unto David. (Jer. 23: 5.) When Jesus was conceived by the virgin Mary, the angel told her that "God shall give unto him the throne of his father David: and he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end." (Luke 1: 32, 33.)

When Jesus was born in Bethlehem of Judea, the wise men from the east came, inquiring: "Where is he that is born King of the Jews?" (See Matt. 2: 1, 2.)

Now, the Jews failed to understand the nature of Christ's kingdom. As they had lost control of the political government and had to be subject to the Roman Government, they longed for a king to deliver them from the Roman authorities and rule in a political kingdom. As Herod expected this of the Christ, he attempted to put him to death, lest he lose his throne. (Matt. 2: 3-8, 16.)

After Christ was crucified, his disciples were despondent, saying: "But we hoped that it was he who should redeem Israel." (Luke 24:21.) Then, when he rose from the dead, they took new courage and asked him: "Lord, dost thou at this time restore the kingdom to Israel?" (Acts 1: 6.) Now, they were all this time laboring under a misconception of the spirit and power of Christ's kingdom.

When Jesus said to Peter, "I will build my church; and the gates of Hades shall not prevail against it. I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven" (Matt. 16: 18, 19), he spoke of the kingdom he had come to establish. It was to be a kingdom which would rule by the law of love and kindness, not by force. To be a citizen of his kingdom, the church, we must have sufficient love and confidence in him as King to obey his laws. "To him shall you hearken in all things whatsoever he shall speak unto you." (Acts 3: 22.)

Now, there is nothing visible about his kingdom, the church, save the people who compose it. This body of subjects Paul calls the body of Christ. "Now ye are the body of Christ, and severally members thereof." (1 Cor. 12: 27.) In referring to Jesus as our King, Leader, or Lawgiver, Paul says: "He is the head of the body, the church." (Col. 1: 16.) Paul further states that he labored and suffered "for his body's sake, which is the church." (Col. 1: 24.)

Then, as it is such a great favor conferred upon us to have the privilege of being the subjects of this righteous King, Paul exhorts us to "walk worthily of the calling, . . . forbearing one another in love; giving diligence to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bonds of peace. There is one body, and one Spirit, even also as ye were called in one hope of your calling." (Eph. 4: 1-4.) Then, to give him due honor as our Leader, we must bear his name. "For neither is there any other name under heaven, that is given among men, wherein we must be saved." (Acts 4: 12.)

Many are still laboring under the same misconception of the church to-day that the Jews did in the personal ministry of Christ. They are looking for the church among human organizations. The church is composed of Christian people who are subject to Christ as their King, who honor him as their Head (Col. 1: 18), wear his name and none other (Acts 4: 12), and hearken to his words (Acts 3: 22) by being obedient to his law, striving to keep the unity of the Spirit among his followers (Eph. 4: 3). If you are saved, the Lord has added you to the church the right one. (Acts 2: 47.) If you are not supporting anything that divides his body and are hearkening unto his words in all things whatsoever he saith unto you, you may be sure that you are abiding in his love, even as Christ kept his Father's commandments and abode in his love. (John 15: 16.) "If a man love me, he will keep my word: and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him, and make our abode with him." (John 14: 23.)

There were religious organizations in the days of the personal ministry of Christ and the apostles, but they were not accepted as the church, neither did they affiliate with them. There were the Epicureans and Stoics, and Paul said they were very religious, but were worshiping in ignorance. (Acts 17: 18, 22, 23.) There were the Israelites, who had a "zeal for Gód, but not according to knowledge." (Rom. 10: 2.) There were the Pharisees, of whom Jesus said, "The Pharisees sit on Moses' seat;" but he warns us: "Do not ye after their works; for they say and do not." (Matt. 23: 3.) There were the Sadducees, but they deny the resurrection and say there are no angels or spirits. (Acts 23: 8.) Of such people as the obedient ones described above, who worship God in sincerity and in truth, none can doubt that they compose the "church of the living God, the pillar and ground of the truth." (1 Tim. 3: 15.)

ABRAHAMIC FAITH—WHAT IT IS, AND HOW WE MAY KNOW WE HAVE IT.

BY S. H. HALL.

In the articles gone before I feel sure we have learned that the expression, "Abraham believed God, and it was imputed unto him for righteousness," contains no difficulty. Believing God can mean nothing except the disposition we make of whatever he says to us. should be here said that just believing anything God says to us is not imputed unto us for righteousness. That is, there are many things that God had said to Abraham that he believed, but his belief of these things was not imputed unto him for righteousness. The same is true of us. God has said many things which, of course, we must believe and do, and which we can believe and do without having what is called "the faith of Abraham." For instance, we are told that in the beginning God created the heavens and the earth; and to believe God, we must believe this, for he said this; but this faith would not be imputed unto us for righteousness. We are taught to love our wives and be not bitter against them. This we can not only believe we should do, but can actually do it and delight in it, and at the same time not have what the Bible calls "the faith of Abraham."

Let us look again at the facts. The specific statement that Jehovah made to Abraham, which he believed without staggering with unbelief, was that God would give him a son when he was a hundred years old and his wife ninety and by nature barren. This circumstance Paul tells us is why it was imputed unto him for righteousness. Read it again in Rom. 4: 16-22. This statement Abraham could not believe without having faith that "against hope believed in hope." The promise looked hopeless and unreasonable from a human standpoint. The Bible declares that Abraham was fully aware of the fact that his own body was now dead, and so was Sarah's womb, so far as bringing forth children was concerned, but that, notwithstanding this fact, "he staggered not at the promise of God through unbelief; but was strong in faith, giving glory to God; and being fully persuaded that, what he had promised he was able also to perform. And therefore it was imputed unto him for righteousness.

But the question before us now is: Have others had just such faith? I think they have, and shall now proceed to prove it; and not only this, but that all who now obtain the promise of salvation must be "of the faith of Abraham," must "walk in the steps of that faith" that Abraham had.

I give some well-known examples and make but little comment. Turn to Num. 21: 4-9 and read it. The children of Israel had rebelled against God and Moses, and among them the fiery serpents came, and many were bitten, and many were dying. Penitently they came to Moses, saying: "We have sinned, for we have spoken against the Lord, and against thee; pray unto the Lord, that he take away the serpents from us." Moses went to God in their behalf, and the answer was for Moses to place a brazen serpent upon a pole, and say unto the people: "It shall come to pass, that every one that is bitten, when he looketh upon it, shall live."

Now look that statement squarely in the face. What is it to believe God? Is it not to believe exactly what he says? Could those people believe God without believing what Jehovah here said to them? And when they did believe it, did they not have as much faith as Abraham had at the time his faith was imputed unto him for rightecusness? Could they have believed the statement above without having a faith that "against hope believed in hcpe?" Does not looking at a brass snake to be healed of a snake bite and obtain the remission of their sins look as dead and hopeless to obtain the object promised as did Abraham's body at the age of one hundred years and that of Sarah's womb? In fact, here is a statement that no scul can take hold of, except by "the faith of Abraham." They exercised this faith, and the promise was theirs to enjoy.

But let us look again. This time turn to Josh. 6: 1-5. Joshua is ordered to tear down the walls of Jericho and take the city. But how? Walk around the walls once for six days, and on the seventh go seven times, then blow the trumpets and shout, and the walls will fall flat before you. Here are the words of Jehovah: "And it shall come to pass, that when they make the long blast with the ram's horn, and when ye hear the sound of the trumpet, all the people shall shout with a great shout; and the wall of the city shall fall down flat."

Again, may I ask: What is it to believe God? Is it not to believe what he says? Was it possible for Joshua and his associates to believe God and refuse to believe what God here said to them? But when they believed that declaration of Jehovah, they had as much faith as Abraham had. Look again at what God said to Abraham, then look at what God here says to these souls. He told Abraham that he would be blessed with a son when he was a hundred years old and his wife ninety and by nature barren all of her life. Abraham believed it, and God imputed it unto him for righteousness. He tells these souls to walk around the walls thirteen times, or once each day for six days, then seven times on the seventh day, blow the trumpets and shout, and the wall will fall flat before them. Now, which requires the greater faith to believe? They could not possibly believe this without having that faith that "against hope believed in kope." They could not possibly take hold of this statement by faith without walking "in the steps of that faith" that Abraham had. Who is it that cannot see this?

But some one says: "Brother Hall, we are not required to have such faith to-day." Yes, we are; the promise to-day is to those "who are of the faith of Abraham." But you want to know what God has said to us that we cannot believe without such faith. Turn to Mark 16: 15, 16, and let us read: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned." Now, what is it to believe God? Is it not to believe what he says? Tell me how to believe God and not believe this. But the waters of baptism are as barren for the purpose intended, so far as human reason can see, as was Sarah's womb; hence, it demands faith that against hope believes in hope. In other words, here is a statement of our Lord that we cannot take hold of without that faith that Abraham had. Let us turn now to Gal. 3: 26-29 and let Paul tell us that here is where we exercise that faith that Abraham had: "For ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus." Now note how Paul says he knows they are: "For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ. And if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise."

This settles it. This is how we know we have that faith that Abraham had. All of this debating and disputing over baptism is the most uncalled-for thing under the sun. Our Lord has promised to give us remission of sins, or impute our faith unto us for righteousness, when it becomes such faith as Abraham had, when we walk in the steps of that faith that he had. For this reason he throws before us is a statement that we cannot take hold of without exercising the kind of faith that Abraham had-viz., a faith that against hope believes in hope; a faith that will not stagger at his promise, but will give glory to God by saying that what God has promised, he is able to perform. Isaac, the promised son, came from a womb by nature dead and barren, hence looked hopeless to Abraham, in spite of which hopelessness he believed God. We, as children of God, have become such by a similar birth-viz., by a birth of water and the Spirit. "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." But our modern theologians consider the barrenness of the watery grave, and through unbelief they stagger and try to explain these scriptures away. But the man of the faith of Abraham, though it requires faith that against hope believes in hope, staggers not, but says: "Our Lord said it, and it must be so."

But enough for this time, and more later. Let me say again: There is nothing on earth that means so much to us as believing God—believing God just as Abraham did. I have had people to come to me with a finger on a certain statement of my Lord and say: "Brother Hall, what are you going to do with this scripture?" I have but one answer: "Believe it with all the sense I have. What else can I afford to do with it?"

It is very easy to pick up a bur and very hard to get rid of it, though it often makes itself very troublesome when you have it. The same is true of slang. There are many excellent words in the English language which are used so seldom that they are in danger of growing rusty. Better use these and leave slang alone.—Youth's Companion.

THE THINGS WE CAN'T AFFORD.

We can't afford to win the prize
That means another's loss;
We can't afford to miss the crown
By stumbling at the cross.

We can't afford the heedless jest
That robs us of a friend;
We can't afford the laugh that finds
In bitter tears an end.

We can't afford the feast to-day
That means to-morrow's fast;
We can't afford the feud that comes
To tragedy at last.

We can't afford to play with fire Or tempt a serpent's bite; We can't afford to think that sin Brings any true delight.

We can't afford with serious heed To treat the cynic's sneer; We can't afford to wise men's words To turn a careless ear.

We can't afford for hate to give Like hatred in return; We can't afford to feed a flame And make it fiercer burn.

We can't afford to lose the soul For this world's fleeting breath; We can't afford to barter life In mad exchange for death.

But blind to good are we, apart
From Thee, all-seeing Lord,
O, grant us light, that we may know
The things we can't afford.

-William Allen.

T. W. Phillips, Jr., Shreveport, La., July 5: "I closed at Homer, La., with twelve added."

Price Billingsley, Cardwell, Mo., July 6: "The meeting at Tulia, Texas, with fine hearing throughout, resulted in about forty being added to the local congregation, many the last day, most of them restorations, though sixteen of the number were baptized. Exceptionally fine audiences and several additions already mark this Cardwell union tent meeting, and I am to remain another week, then must wend my way back Texasward for other meetings."

Dr. W. W. Stone, Palacios, Texas, June 29: "I closed a short but interesting meeting on June 25, on the banks of a beautiful stream, in which I baptized a most excellent young man and his wife. He is excellent material and desires to preach the word. Brethren having any of our doctrinal books, who desire to put them where they will bear fruit, could do no better than to send them to him, as he is not able to buy. Address Roy Thompson, Fordtran, Texas, Route 1. They will be highly appreciated."

M. W. Sanders, Tracy City, Tenn., July 6: "For the benefit of those with whom R. N. Gardner is soon to labor, I feel that it is but just to them and to him to say that few men are more competent to teach, and I know of none more faithful to God's word, not only in the pulpit, but especially in his daily life, which, after all, is the strongest sermon that can be preached. It affords me great pleasure to say that any community is fortunate, indeed, to have this man of God as a citizen. Let me say for his family, too, that it is just what you would expect of a God-fearing, Christian home."

F. B. Shepherd, Abilene, Texas, July 6: "I have been enjoying your first-page articles for some time. You write things that just seem to fit and hit the mark. You placed your finger on the issue in the Scopes case and many other things. God bless you in your effort to keep the pure, unadulterated truth before the people. We must stand for the old paths and the primitive gospel with all our might. I want to see our brethren stand steadfast for clean living also, and regret to see the tendency to soft-soaping and pussyfooting in the pulpits of some of our churches. It isn't popular to tell the churches of their lack or the members of their ungodliness; but they must be told, or we will lose our own souls as well as they."

ORGANIC EVOLUTION.

BY C. S. AUSTIN.

Perhaps the most-discussed question of to-day is the one of evolution. This is true locally, at least. Like all other popular discussions, there is a great deal of lost motion. There is a vast amount of smoke that beclouds the real issue.

A few statements, then, defining the issue will be in order. Evolution in a very general way means "development." Every one must know that we have development in abundance all about us. Different breeds of plants and animals may be developed from inferior stock; no one questions this. But the particular phase of evolution (organic evolution) that teaches that one species can change into another—that all living animals have come up from one common ancestor—this evolution is the thing that is being attacked now by those who are termed "fundamentalists." Understand, also, that this is not a battle between science and the Bible. With all thinking people, it is not a question of finding and exploiting contradictions between science and the Bible. They do not contradict. Real science is true. The Bible is true. Both come from God; and since both come from God and are both true, they agree. The trouble is that evolution is not science at all. Its fondest adherents and supporters do not claim it to be a system of facts, but simply claim that it is a reasonable theory of what might have been. Please remember that organic evolution is not a science. Of course, it is fair to say that the theory of evolution is held by a great many scientists. Not all the scientists, however, are on the side of evolution. A great number of real scholars, and, I believe, a great majority of "common folks," still believe in the Bible as the revealed will of God, and in good oldfashioned religion as practiced by our fathers.

Briefly, evolution is an effort to prove that man, together with all other living things, has come from the lowest form of life all from one common ancestor. This development, according to the theory, has been quiet, steady, and so slow that millions of years have been required to show the present results. No miracle is allowed; no world catastrophe like the flood must come in. This gradual and upward change, they tell us, has come absolutely automatically. No higher intellect guided. The little bit of protoplasm, perhaps at the bottom of some ocean millions of years ago, accidentally had the beginning of life. Then, by the laws of variation, adaptation, struggle, and survival of the fittest, this cell has come up and up until we have man as the climax. So, according to this, man has not "come from the monkey," but from an ancestor thousands of generations beyond and lower than a monkey.

Now, with this human theory in mind, let us read the following from Moses: "And God said, Let the earth bring forth grass, the herb yielding seed, and the fruit tree yielding fruit after his kind, whose seed is in itself, upon the earth: and it was so. And the earth brought forth grass, and herb yielding seed after his kind, and the tree yielding fruit, whose seed was in itself, after his kind: and God saw that it was good." (Gen. 1: 11, 12.) "And God made the beast of the earth after his kind, and cattle after their kind, and everything that creepeth upon the earth after his kind. . . . So God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him; male and female created he them." (Gen. 1: 25-27.)

In the two paragraphs above we can surely see contradiction. One 's evolution; the other is Bible. Evolution reduces the work of God in creation to an unnoticeable factor, if it does not entirely eliminate it. If evolution is true, God is not the creator of man. At best, he only created a little jellylike protoplasm which finally developed, without God, into man. If there were no other fault in the theory than that it outlaws God and makes blind chance responsible for the existence of man on the earth, this indictment would be abundant cause for its rejection by people who are not outspoken atheists. You cannot believe both evolution and the Bible. As well say that a thing is black and white at the same time.

Notice, again, that the Bible account says that every plant and animal brought forth "after his kind." According to evolution, things must have brought forth different and better than their kind. For example, take the hog. The system teaches that at one time this was perhaps the highest developed form. Now, this hog had to bring forth some animal that was not a hog-something higher than a hog. If this were possible—if the hog somewhere in history had been known to produce a sheep then evolution would have a real argument; but during all the world's history such a thing has not been known to have happened. God said that everything should bring forth after his kind. That fiat of Jehovah builds a wall around every species of living things that cannot be crossed. An animal can make wonderful development inside of this wall, but it cannot cross. Just as long as a frog cannot bring forth a snake, as long as a fish cannot beget a bird, and as long as a bear cannot bring forth an elephant, evolution is wrong.

Evolution teaches unassisted upward development. This is wrong again. All improvement of plants and animals is possible by intelligent breeding. There is always a superior intelligence that helps the animal to improve. This fact is common knowledge. Suppose you take a herd of fine dairy cattle-Jerseys; suppose you leave them entirely to themselves for twenty years. Would you expect improvement? No, you know that without selection of the best for breeders and without the culling out of inferior individuals, you would have no improvement. Not only this, but you would have a mongrel herd that had lost their good qualities. All improvement is possible only by association with superior intelligence. This explains why the nations that have the Bible are superior to those who do not have it. The influence of inspiration is uplifting to a nation. Verify this statement by your own observations of the peoples of the earth. When a nation, a species, or an individual is left to itself the law is that it goes backward and not forward. If evolution is true, man has had a continuous upward development. Bible tells the story of the fall of man. If man has been all the time coming up, then he did not go down. If he never went down, he needs no redeemer; if he needs no redeemer, Christ, the God-man, is outlawed; and this very result, awful as it may seem, has come as the inevitable conclusion of evolution. The strange and unreasonable part of it is that some who claim to be disciples of the Christ pretend to believe evolution. Evolution, organic evolution, is just about as healthy to the faith of a Christian as water is to fire. The whole scheme of redemption rests on the Christ-his birth, his miracles, his death on the cross, and his ascension into heaven. When these facts are undermined, Christianity goes down. Any system that would destroy my faith in Jesus of Nazareth as the wonderful and immaculate Son of God is hostile to the religion dear to me. Evolution reduces our Lord to the plane of a mere man. Strangely, it honors him by saying that he was a good man and a great Teacher, but not inspired any more than Shakespeare. He cannot be this. He claimed to be more than a man. He was, or he was not. If he was not, then he was an impostor of the rankest type; if he was what he claimed, evolution cannot be true.

The time has come for us to go back to the Bible as the Guidebook of the nations. The church of the Lord has brought this book down through the ages, and it has been the chart and compass of man in the greatest storms of time. When our risen Lord went away, he commissioned men to carry the gospel to all nations, to every creature. Just as long as Christians remained true to this commission and preached and practiced only the teachings of inspiration, the sophistries of infidels and the "babblings of science falsely so-called" could not still their voice When they abandoned these simple teachings, the world was plunged into the Dark Ages. The light of Christianity shone out again from the hands of Luther, Calvin, the Wesleys, the Campbells, and others, only because they returned to the teachings of the Man of Calvary. Now is the time. Great is the opportunity. The battle is on. What we need is faith, not doubt; gospel, not theory. All who go forward in this conflict on the side of God and his revealed word will surely one day have the coöperation of all true scientists and the approval of Him who "spake as never man spake."

SUFFICIENCY OF THE CHURCH.

BY R. O. KENLEY.

Some few weeks back, while in the eastern part of the State of Texas, I met up with a prominent member of the Baptist Church, who was also a personal and boylood friend of mine. Among other things, I made inquiry as to what he was doing in his church. He replied that he was completely disgusted, as nearly all of the ministers of his denomination and the officers of almost every congregation of the Baptist Church had embraced Ku-Klux Klanism, and that a person who was not a member of the Ku-Klux Klan could not be a member, in good standing, in any of the congregations of the Baptist Church in Texas.

He further said that if he could learn of any denomination that was not dominated by some invisible or fraternal order, he would be glad to worship with it, though he did not agree with some of its articles of faith and practice. Upon first thought I felt that I could invite him to investigate the church of Christ, but upon second thought it occurred to me that many of the congregations of the church of Christ in Texas and elsewhere are dominated by the Masonic Order; therefore, I was not in a position to recommend to him any of the congregations of the church of Christ as being free from fraternal-order domination. From this standpoint the congregations of the church of Christ, in many places, are suffering with the same affliction as the Baptist congregations of which my friend made mention.

I can recall in my early childhood hearing the pioneer preachers of the church of Christ proclaim the sufficiency of the church of Christ as an organization for all things to be done and accomplished by Christians. I can well remember when my father and other members of the church of Christ, who had theretofore been prominent Masons, after growing in knowledge and understanding of the gospel of Christ, dropped Masonry, and claimed that all the good of the Masonic Order had been superseded by the better and greater things in the gospel of Christ. The Masonic Order, or any other fraternal order, is probably a good thing for people who are not members of the church of Christ; but for people who are members of the church of Christ and who claim to be Christians, the retention of their membership in the Masonic fraternity is a contradiction of their theory when they proclaim that the church is all-sufficient through which to accomplish all the good to be performed by Christian men and women. Wherever you find a church in which the elders or any of them are members of the Masonic fraternity, you will find a clique or klan which militates against those who are not members of said order; and such, of course, causes friction and final disruption of many congregations.

I can well remember when quite a boy that a congregation, numbering two hundred or two hundred and fifty members, was torn asunder, and ultimately destroyed, because of the attempt of some of the elders of the congregation to withdraw fellowship from a member who was a Mason, but who had two living wives, and from the first of whom he had not been scripturally divorced. It is my opinion that much of the trouble that arises in congregations has its origin in these invisible cliques composed of officers and preachers who are members of the Masonic fraternity.

I have had many invitations to join fraternal orders, and the only reason assigned as to why I should join is the personal benefit that I would receive therefrom, either socially or financially.

The object of a person's life after he becomes a Christian is to befriend and help mankind without regard to race, class, color, or distinction, and not members within a clique, and for which great benefits are ultimately promised. Is the proposition true that the church of Christ is all-sufficient as an organization for every need that man has while sojourning in this world? If so, why should we not demonstrate the truth of this proposition by practicing it?

WOE BECAUSE OF IMMORAL PREACHERS!

BY PRICE BILLINGSLEY.

Woe when we have preachers, some widely known, who are liars, cheats, and unchaste, whose sins are whitewashed and hushed up, allowed station and honor almost without a break, or their gross offenses not becoming known at all save through whispers, or, if for various rascalities they are withdrawn from at one place, they, through the collusion of silence, go elsewhere, unrepentant and abetted, to prey upon an innocent brotherhood! I say, woe! Our leaders and those who publish our papers, who are under special obligation, freely enough betimes speak out against this and that offender. But is the divine rule for public rebuke in these matters often invoked? See 1 Cor. 5: 5; Gal. 2: 11; 1 Tim. 1: 20; 5: 20; 2 Tim. 2: 17; Lev. 5: 1; 19: 17; Prov. 29: 24; Rom. 1: 32.

Do you say nothing can be done, however badly needed? But why not? Is it not being increasingly taken for granted that the divine order can be treated with impunity? Cheaters, liars, and apostates need to be shown; it is owed both to the world at large and to the church to be understood that nobody, least of all a gospel preacher, shall defy and flaunt the moral code and the proprieties, and lightly get off with it. When Israel's leaders fell into immoralities, God terribly rebuked and cursed them; and when some of our preachers grossly err and wantonly bring the Lord's cause into disgrace, and the outrages be hidden or winked at, the Lord will again terribly destroy. The guilty should be rebuked and humiliated by being published and their offenses named; the offense and the offender should be chastised in the open. Only so will the claims of justice be somewhat satisfied, the loose and unruly warned, and an outraged public sentiment vindicated.

The Lord's irrevocable decree is that sin must be paid for in full. Even divine pardon cannot save from many of its evil consequences. They that stand high have many blasts to shake them, and when they fall they are dashed to pieces. The church puts a man to the fore. But when he falls, he forfeits the right to honor and place bestowed upon him, nor can he rightly complain at severe measures of correction. He has made his bed, and lie on it he must; he must pay the penalty, even as a guard and warning to others. He has brought the church into deep odium, and many now suffer innocently on his account. Let him stoop down and kiss the rod that smites him, else Jehovah will utterly destroy him. He is a bird with a broken pinion, never to soar so high again, forever a wounded creature, often to be reminded of his shame, and only through long years of unwavering purity can he hope by so much as one jot to outlive and put down the ill fame of his fall. But let him rejoice that in coming to God with all his soul he will be lifted up to pardon and some usefulness.

It is ever a mournful thing, working general havoc, when those who sit in high places fall into disgrace. Disaster overtakes the masses when their leaders lapse in conduct. Yet life for the many is surer made when public offenders are brought to count, exposed and denounced, let this be ever so painful and disturbing. Nothing could be more destructive of the public weal than that sins be let alone. Unrighted wrong dare not be hushed up and forgotten. God cancels sin when the full price of repentance is paid, else it eats the soul to eternal damnation. Then, in these days of falling away, let the rising tide of departure be stemmed or stayed by plain truth being spoken.

J. G. Allen says: "It looks to me like the Tennessee lawyers at the Scopes trial at Dayton threw a monkey wrench into the evolution machine, by the way Darrow and others are howling."

Married, at the residence of the groom's aunt, Mrs. Mary Bradford, Arthington Avenue, this city, Saturday, July 18, 1925, George L. Harding and Ida Belle Burnett Noel, H. S. Lipscomb officiating.

B. C. Goodpasture, Atlanta, Ga.: "I recently closed a tent meeting on the North Side, in which there were five confessions and two restorations. Since last report there have been four additions at West End Avenue."

Visitors and tourists going to Asheville, N. C., for the summer may get information as to the place of meeting for Lord's-day worship by writing Earle H. West, Salem Avenue, Route 1, Asheville, or telephoning 815-L2 or 2663-J.

Paul E. Gorbit, Stonewall, Okla., July 18: "I am at the close of a mission meeting here at Owl Creek Schoolhouse. Two were baptized yesterday. Fourteen reclaimed. The brethren agree to keep themselves in order by teaching and communing on the Lord's day and contributing for the furtherance of the gospel."

- H. N. Mann, Riverside, Tenn., July 11: "Our meeting at Morrow's Valley, in Wayne County, July 5-10, resulted in five additions. I shall go to Lawrence County on the third Lord's day for a meeting at a schoolhouse near Park Grove."
- James M. Neill, Huntsville, Ala., July 17: "Luther Browning, of this city, closed a week's meeting with the Big Cove congregation on Sunday night, with two additions by baptism. The writer led the singing. I always pass the Gospel Advocate on to others, for I know I do good in so doing."
- J. C. Huckabee, Laurel, Miss., July 14: "You may say in the Gospel Advocate that Sister M. E. Hudson, of Laurel, Miss., lost her house and all that was in it by fire on July 13. There are a lot of the brethren who knew her, as her home has always been headquarters for brethren who come to Laurel to preach."
- J. G. Allen says: "I know the monkey trial at Dayton will result in good, because all the evidence we have from the beginning tells us that every time that men have attacked the Bible they have gone down in defeat, and at the same time the influence of the Bible has increased and its friends have been drawn closer together."
- J. G. Allen says: "I pray God to hasten the day when men will understand that for them to deny a part of the Bible places them on the enemy's side of the Bible. Yes, the Bible is a complete book and stands before men in such an attitude that to reject part includes all, to reject the Mosaic account of creation or the virgin birth nullifies all."
- C. R. Nichol, Clifton, Texas, July 17: "The meeting with the church in Kaufman, Texas, resulted in forty-six additions to the congregation. The congregation recently built a splendid new house, well located, and is working as few congregations work. This is the home of R. R. Stirman, who has done much to stay the tide of digression."
- B. D. Morehead and wife, en route to Japan, are located temporarily at 263 N Avenue 25 Los Angeles, Cal., for the purpose of studying the Japanese language, customs, and manners under Brother Ishiguro. Brother Morehead writes that Brother Ishiguro is a splendid teacher and that the people of the Pacific Coast are much interested in foreign missions.
- T. H. Roberson, Russellville, Ala., July 18: "The tent meeting at Russellville, Ala., conducted by G. C. Brewer, began on July 5 and closed on the night of July 17. People attended from many miles away, coming from Florence, Mount Hope, Town Creek, Phil Campbell, Spruce Pine, and other points in Alabama, and from Booneville, Miss. Thirteen were added to the congregation and one was restored."

Samuel H. Austin, Munfordville, Ky., July 14: "I preached on Saturday night and on Sunday at 11 A.M. and 7:45 P.M. at Summit, Ky., and at Fairfield on Sunday afternoon. There is a small, but loyal and wide-awake, band at Summit. Fairfield is a mission point, with no members there. I go to Railton, another mission point, next Lord's day. They only pay my expenses. Does any brother or church want to help toward preaching at these mission points?"

mission points?"

J. G. Allen, Nashville, Tenn., July 17: "I began a meeting at Cloverdale Church, near Elbridge, Tenn., July 5, with two services daily, and closed it on Obion River at 7:30 A.M., July 16, with baptizing. D. B. Gwynn, of Minnick, Tenn., led the song service. We had splendid audiences after the first few days, regardless of some counter attractions in the way of an opposition meeting and a circus; but as the people's faces were turned our way, they kept coming. The church there has some splendid material in it. Brethren Huffstutter, Yater, Cunningham, and others are truly doing a good work. I had the pleasure of a short visit with John R. Williams at Hornbeak during my meeting. He is held in the highest esteem by the brotherhood wherever he is known."

The man who is least willing to practice finds the most fault with the preaching.

We must have good eyes to see good, and good hearts to comprehend it when we do see it.

- Ben P. Hellums, Athens, Texas, July 12: "J. W. Dunn, of Tyler, Texas, will begin a mission meeting in Athens on August 16, under a big, new tent."

- George W. Graves, Nashville, Tenn., July 13: "Yesterday I began a meeting with the Shiloh congregation, in Jackson County, Tenn. We had a good hearing. There was one baptism and two restored."
- J. Leonard Jackson preached at Lindsley Avenue, this city, last Lord's day, with two baptisms and one reclamation. Brother Jackson formerly labored with this congregation, and his presence with them again was mutually enjoyable.
- H. C. Hale, Belvidere, Tenn., July 11: "At this writing I am in the midst of a very interesting meeting at Liberty Hill, in Moore County. From here I shall go to Grant, in Smith County. Sam Tatum, of Lebanon, will assist me in this meeting."
- O. C. Lambert, Waverly, Tenn., recently closed a six-days' meeting at Pleasantville, Tenn., with seventeen baptisms and one restoration. They began regular Lord's-day meeting. Brother Lambert is now near Johnsonville, Tenn., with two baptisms to date.
- A. G. Williams, Winfield, Ala., July 12: "A. Smith Chambers, Florence, Ala., closed at Winfield on July 12, with twenty-six additions, all by baptism. The last night of the meeting the crowd was estimated at two thousand. A. A. Lambert, of Winfield, conducted the song service."
- H. D. Jeffcoat, Ackerman, Miss., July 7: "Two were baptized at Kilmichael. Twelve were baptized at Nile by John P. Lewis and Homer Dudley. They are now at Clifton. Two were baptized at Sturgis by Brethren Hale and Vaughn. We are now in a good meeting here at home."
- S. H. Biggerstaff, Mocksville, N. C., July 13: "I closed at Jericho, near this place, July 5, with two baptisms. M. C. Kurfees, of Louisville, Ky., is to preach there next Lord's day. I began a meeting at Beaver Dam, near Woodleaf, N. C., July 10. Two baptisms thus far. I go next to Kannapolis, N. C."
- J. M. Gainer, Winchester, Tenn., July 14: "I am mighty glad to see you hitting the evolution question in the right spot. O, what a time for those who take the old Book literally to bring it to the attention of their associates! Command me when I can serve you or the Gospel Advocate."
- J. M. Gainer and Elam Derryberry are to begin a mission meeting at Wilmington, N. C., next Lord's day. The church at Winchester is assisting in the support of Brother Gainer to do the preaching. Will not some congregation contribute to the support of Brother Derryberry? Address Gospel Advocate office.
- Will E. Walker, Winchester, Tenn., July 17: "The High Street church of Christ sent J. M. Gainer to Wilmington, N. C., to hold a mission meeting for the small band of Christians there in January this year. The church here is sending him back to conduct another meeting at the same place, to begin on the fourth Sunday in this month. Elam Derryberry will lead the song service."
- F. C. Sowell, Columbia, Tenn., July 18: "I closed at Sandy Hook, in Maury County, with twelve baptized and four reclaimed. I closed the meeting with a Bible drill with twenty-two of the Tennessee Orphan Home children. They made a wonderful impression on the large crowd that heard them. I shall begin a meeting at Hill's Chapel on the third Lord's day in July; after that I shall go to Garrett, Texas, beginning there on the first Lord's day in August."

- L. H. Hudkins, Campbell, Mo., July 11: "Our meeting began on June 18 and closed on June 28, with nine baptisms."
- W. R. Smith, Rice, Texas, July 17: "With Brother Brigance doing the preaching and Brother Bost, of Texas, doing the singing, the Corsicana church has just closed one of the most successful meetings in many respects that it has ever had. The gospel was certainly proclaimed to saint and sinner without compromise and with much power. There were no record-breaking crowds and but few baptisms, but it was a great meeting."
- J. G. Allen says: "Many preachers are clapping their hands for the Bible at the monkey trial over at Dayton, but at the same time they 'can't see any harm in Bollism.' Truly some people are 'blind and can't see afar off.' Remember, brethren, that the devil deceives people; so 'anoint your eyes with eyesalve,' so that you can see that Bollism is more dangerous to mankind than monkeyism, because Bollism claims Bible for what they teach and monkeyism does not."
- Walter I. Kline, 1307 West Adams Street, Chicago, Ill., July 15: "I cannot afford to do without the Gospel Advocate in this large, wicked city. I have been preaching for the Central church of Christ through the months of May and June to good congregations each Lord's day, composed of members mostly from Tennessee and Kentucky and some from other States. Our protracted meeting began on the first Lord's day in July, with F. L. Paisley, of Kentucky, doing the preaching."
- C. Knowles, Huntsville, Ala.: "Our meeting at Mimosa closed to-day with thirty-three additions. The new congregation will meet in the high-school building till we can build a meetinghouse. My next mission meeting will be at Hazel Green, and we are praying God to help us plant a good congregation at that place. We always advise our new converts to begin meeting on the first day of the week to study the Scriptures. The Gospel Advocate has done me so much good that my faith, love, and good wishes extend to them and to all the brethren."
- J. P. Holland, Belzoni, Miss., July 11, sends a year's subscription to the Gospel Advocate to two persons and says: "We feel that we can in no other way 'break the bread of life' to those out of Christ more effectively than by getting them to read the Gospel Advocate, especially the first-page writings. Wife and I send the paper as a gift to these." Brother Holland is setting a splendid example. We hope all of our readers will follow his good example. Eternity alone can tell the good that such an effort upon the part of every reader would do.
- Hall L. Calhoun, Selmer, Tenn., July 14: "The meeting at Troy, Tenn., closed on Friday night, July 3. Eleven were baptized, four were restored, and nine placed membership, making twenty-four additions to the congregation in all. This was a most delightful meeting in every way. The attendance was large, the interest intense, the spirit hopeful. B. G. Swinney, of Henderson, Tenn., led the singing. He is an excellent song leader and a splendid, Christian young man. Any church securing his services will be fortunate. The brethren took excellent care of both singer and preacher."
- W. M. Oakley, Cookeville, Tenn., July 16: "Our meeting at Roberts Switch, near Boma, this county, closed at the water to-day, with fourteen baptized, four of whom came from the Baptists. This was our third and best meeting at this place. Large crowds were in attendance both day and night. Interest and order fine from the first service to the close. This was a great meeting. One feature of the meeting out of the ordinary was that they were all grown people, most of them heads of families, and every confession was made at the day services. We are moving to Buffalo Valley, where we will begin on Lord's-day morning. Leonard Kirk is with me in charge of the song service."

Wanted.—Should any young brother who is a good song leader and who would like to come to Florida to live read this, who is clean in life and character, willing to work, and determined to make good at anything he undertakes, let him write me at 509 Leonard Street, Bradentown, Fla. The church here needs such a man and is willing to find some kind of work that he can do to make a living, and then we will expect him to make good on the job he undertakes. This part of the country is on the greatest boom in its history. There is no better place to live, we think. Write us the kind of work at which you can make good, and we will see if we can place you at once. Give reference also.—Robert E. Wright, 509 Leonard Street, Bradentown, Fla.

Conducted for a half century by D. Lipscomb, E. G. Sewell, F. D. Srygley, and J. C. McQuiddy.

EDITORIAL

WORD FROM WASHINGTON.

BY T. B. LARIMORE.

Two and eighty years ago to-day-July 10, 1843-in rough, rugged, romantic East Tennessee, the homeland of W. G. Brownlow, Horace Maynard, Landon C. Haynes, and Bob Taylor, where brave men till the soil and faithful, fearless women keep clean homes and care for swarms of happy, healthy children, while the heavens caress the mountains and the mountains kiss the stars, I first saw the light of life, the light in which life flourishes here upon the earth, and I saw it in the shadow of that poverty in which I have lived and loved and labored through all the years that have come and gone since then.

Poverty, did I say? Then I must correct that. My brave little mother, who knew not the meaning of the feeling called "fear," was, to me, a treasure sublime and almost divine. She loved me as only a mother can love to the end of her pilgrimage here; and she lived in this beautiful, wonderful world nearly ninety years. Who can tell, with tongue or pen, the worth of that priceless treasure, a mother's love? I have no mother with me now; but if you could see all the telegrams, birthday messages, and mementos I've received, and appreciate them as I appreciate them, you might understand how rich I am. From north, from south, from east, from west, from all over the land they come, repeating the sweet old story of love. The sweetest thing a sincere soul can ever say is, I love you. But even that is not the crest of the climax of my riches; for, in Christ Jesus, I am trying to be a faithful follower of the Lamb, and "the Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are children of God: and if children, then heirs; heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ."

Friends who have seen me and friends who have never seen me want to know how I am and how I am getting along. I am well, and am getting along "as well as might be expected." Of course, I cannot now, as I used to do, preach twice every day and three times each Sunday; but I preach twice every Sunday. Last Sunday I baptized, with as much ease as I have ever baptized anybody, so far as I know, a young man who had come one hundred and fifty miles for that purpose. His wife, a charming little Christian, came to Washington with him.

Nearly everybody has always been good to me. I think I could count the exceptions I can remember on the fingers of one hand and have some fingers left. If I have treated anybody badly, I herein and hereby make all amends I can. I know I have no grudge against anybody, and I am glad of that.

With a good wife—as good as the best—who tries to anticipate all my wants, and who always does what she believes to be best for me, I have a good home with the Barnes family—Paschal, Helena, Hilda, Laurie, and Louise -all of whom are as good to me as they would or could be if I were their own grandfather, I am sure. And, withal, we have the nicest kind of neighbors, and that's a blessing not easily overestimated.

My vim, vigor, and vitality are probably about as you would expect after I have lived so long and borne the burdens I have borne. But you are more interested in knowing "it is well with my soul," and it is. I am absolutely free from fear, so far as the eternal future is concerned. The saints and faithful whom I serve here deserve and have my love and best wishes all the time. wish everybody well. I would curse nobody, but would bless everybody, if I could. Life is sweet, and it is good to be here; but I never forget, and I never regret, that "the time of my departure is at hand."

P.S.—July 11.—Last night some of our sweetest and best friends came into our home and made us happy as long as they stayed, and longer, for the memory of their pleasant visit lingers with us and makes us happy still. I hope and pray they may have the desires of their happy hearts forever.

SAM C. TIGERT'S EFFUSION. BY F. W. SMITH.

The readers of the Nashville Tennessean of July 9 were treated to a lengthy dissertation by Mr. Tigert regarding a number of things in "general," but not much of anything in "particular." Regarding the present agitation of the subject of "evolution," Mr. Tigert said:

It is more than probable that all this contest may result in the Bible being more closely studied and more fully interpreted in the light of science and reason. Bible students and religionists may come to realize, at last, that the Bible was written for primitive man, to be afterwards properly and harmoniously accepted or corrected and interpreted along with the natural laws, as the mind of man explores and researches and develops itself into a state of comprehensibility, without impairing real religious views.

The foregoing is a fair sample of the illuminating (?) processes Mr. Tigert employs to clear up the situation and set the world right and at peace on the disturbing question of the origin of things. But before noticing what is here said the reader's attention is directed to another statement by Mr. Tigert-viz.: "Therefore, back to the beautiful and allegorical Eden."

Of course the account of the garden of Eden is "allegorical," because Sam C. Tigert has said it, and the world must understand that he knows what he is talking about. But he should have been at least generous enough to inform his readers how he learned that the Bible account of Eden is "allegorical." Surely he will not let such wisdom perish with himself, but will, ere it is too late, bequeath it to his fellow man!

And "the Bible was written for primitive man," according to Mr. Tigert; but we are left to wonder what Mr. Tigert means by the words "primitive" and "Bible." Does he intend to convey the idea that the Bible was written all at once, and that it was so written in the days of Adam and his immediate posterity, or that any part of it was written before the days of Moses, who was born more than two thousand years after the beginning of time and the creation of all things? But really, since Mr. Tigert unequivocally affirms that the Adam of Eden was "allegorical," what does he mean by "primitive" man, anyway? If Adam of Eden was not a real man, but a mere allegory, when, where, and how did the race of man start, and of what was "beautiful Eden" allegorical?

Does not Mr. Tigert know that the Bible was not all written at once, and that the New Testament was written less than two thousand years ago? He would have us believe that the Bible was written as a primer for "primitive" man until the race developed itself into a "comprehensibility" to grasp the larger and more perfect revelation of God through the works of nature! Such a theory is strangely inconsistent with the practice of Mr. Tigert, who, if I mistake not, belongs to the legal profession, for he goes into court and pleads his cases from laws based upon the Bible, his "primer" written for "primitive" man.

Mr. Tigert should inform himself about the Bible before he reads it out of court. He should know that Moses, under the direction of God, enacted sanitary laws while in the wilderness that all of the wisdom of the medical world has never improved upon; and, furthermore, that the greatest laws for the government of man in every relation of life are found in the Bible, Mr. Tigert's "primer" written for "primitive" man. There is not even a semicivilized nation but whose civilization is based upon the Bible; and if the Bible were destroyed, the nations would lapse into barbarism in the full light of nature, Mr. Tigert's fuller and more perfect (?) revetation of God.

And the Bible is, according to Mr. Tigert, to be "interpreted in the light of science and reason." The word "science" is, with many, a tremendously big word, but when stripped of its high-sounding title it will be found rather ordinary. Strictly speaking, science is classified knowledge; but very much of the so-called "science" is nothing more than classified guesses based upon absolute false assumptions. Mr. Tigert's "science" and "reason" by which he proposes to interpret the Bible—a "primer" written for "primitive" man—are nothing more than human guesses; and when it comes to "guesses," one man has as much right to his guess as another, and I am going to guess that Mr. Tigert's "science" and "reason" can never tell him who God is.

With his "science" and "reason," he would be as ignorant of God as were the Athenians, whose knowledge of science and whose reasoning were the equal, to say the least of it, with that of Mr. Tigert. We hardly think Mr. Tigert would class himself in point of learning with the men of Athens and Greece in the days of Paul, and yet they knew not God. The world, by its wisdom, its science, philosophy, and the great book of nature, knew not God in the days of the apostles, and neither does the world through such means know God to-day. Mr. Tigert and all of his way of thinking must give us facts, demonstrable facts, before we can exchange our faith in the Bible for their preachments.

The school of thought with which Mr. Tigert musters rejects the Bible because it does not harmonize with human reason, but on the very ground on which they reject the Bible Christians accept it. If the Bible did not rise higher than human reason and contain the miraculous, it would be no better than any book emanating from uninspired men.

The province of human reason in religion is not to guide man as to what he shall believe or what he shall do, but to enable man to learn what God has revealed in his written word. Christianity is a system of faith, and requires man to walk by faith (2 Cor. 5: 7); but Mr. Tigert desires a religion based upon knowledge, and yet he lives by faith in things pertaining to this world. Why does he eat and drink? Does he know all about the process of digestion and assimilation? He does numberless things by faith, but would deny the Christian the right to walk by faith. Hence, with him, it is, "Back to the beautiful and allegorical Eden!" But how—O, how did he find out that Eden was allegorical?

OBITUARIES AND FUNERAL SERMONS. BY E. A. ELAM.

Besides paying proper tribute of respect to the dead. much good may be done in writing obituaries and preaching funeral sermons, if the truth is written and preached; otherwise harm is done. Extravagant declarations, and especially sensational ones, concerning either the righteous or the unrighteous, are out of place and untrue, and cannot change the condition of the dead. No man is the author of the truth or is another's judge. God will judge every man according as his life has been. To those who by patient continuance "in well-doing seek for glory and henor and incorruption" he will give "eternal life;" but those who are "factious, and obey not the truth, but obey unrighteousness," will suffer "wrath and indignation, tribulation and anguish: . . . for there is no respect of persons with God." (Rom. 2: 5-11.) God is both righteous and merciful, just and compassionate; and while we know the tree by its fruit, yet we are not to sit in judgment upon one another to condemn or to save; but we are to preach the truth, which embraces both the warnings and promises, the threatenings and hope of the gospel. Should we say a man has gone to heaven, such a declaration does not save him; should we say he has gone to perdition, that declaration does not place him there. We cannot be more merciful or more severe than God; neither are others saved or condemned according to our preached according as occasion requires.

I am very thankful, indeed, that I am no man's judge, and equally so that no man is my judge. Before our own Master we stand or fall.

But God makes very plain and full the conditions upon which, in mercy and grace, he will save people, and why people will be lost. These in all faith and love must be preached according as occasions requires.

Much is said in the Bible from the translation of Enoch to the declaration in the last chapter in Revelation that all who do the commandments of God have the unmerited, undeserved right to the tree of life and will be permitted to enter through the gates into the blessed city. God has fully instructed us concerning those who fall asleep in Jesus, the resurrection, and their eternal destiny. All this should be studied and taught, and in it all should rejoice. The bereaved should be comforted accordingly, Christians should be encouraged and filled with abiding hope, and sinners should be warned. This can all be done in tenderness and sympathy, love and faith, mercy and truth.

Two Good Men Gone.

One of these men is Brother W. P. Freeman, who died several weeks ago in his home in Gallatin, Tenn. He had been in poor health for several years.

Brother Freeman had been an industrious, active man in life's duties from his youth until he was forced to cease from such activities by failing health. To say he was a Christian is equal to saying he was honest and upright in all business affairs and in all relationships of life, because one cannot be a Christian without being honest and upright. For the same reason it is equal to saying he was truthful and dependable in all statements, engagements, and conduct; he was both economical and generous; he was a good neighbor and a quiet, law-abiding citizen; he was a loving and tender husband and father; and in these and other Christian characteristics he was a righteous example to his children. His light shone about him through his good works, and he was found always on the right side of all moral questions and religious issues. He was not nominally "a church member," but was an earnest, active, and zealous servant of the Lord, going about doing good. He was attentive upon the public worship and active in all the private affairs of the church. He was one of the elders of the congregation at Gallatin and felt deeply his obligations as such.

Without honesty, uprightness, integrity, earnestness, purity of life, zeal, liberality, love of the truth, righteousness, and godliness, one may pass for "a church member," but cannot be a Christian. Christianity embraces living and loving service of both God and man.

Neither Brother Freeman nor any other faithful man would have me say he made no mistakes in all his trials and devout efforts to always please and honor God; but his one purpose was to do the will of the Lord, and those who knew him best know how well he succeeded. He loved the truth—the word of God—and was never ashamed of it at any time or place, but was always ready to defend it to the best of his ability. He was a great stay to the church in Gallatin, being thoughtful, considerate of its greatest good, firm in his convictions, steadfast in the faith, prayerful, and studious of the Bible.

Brother Freeman taught his children the everyday, practical duties of the Christian life and left them the rich inheritance of a good name.

A good name is rather to be chosen than great riches, and loving favor rather than silver and gold. (Prov. 22: 1.)

There are some things in the Bible which some seem never to consider. One is that all who will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution. No one can stand up always for the truth and "contend earnestly for the faith which was once for all delivered unto the saints" without incurring the displeasure of some. This is to be expected. So Brother Freeman had his trials; but these only made him more faithful and steadfast.

With his home congregation, I loved Brother Freeman for his work's sake. I sympathize with his bereaved family, shall always feel an abiding interest in their welfare, and pray God's blessings upon them. Exceeding great and precious are God's promises to the faithful, and we rejoice in the hope that Brother Freeman rests from his labors, while his works follow after him.

J. N. SULLIVAN.

Another good man was Brother John Sullivan, whose obituary, written by Brother Srygley, appeared in this paper, July 9. I knew Brother Sullivan and his family for more than forty years. Before I held a meeting for his home congregation, New Hermon, Bedford County, Tenn., I had met him both in Shelbyville and Lynchburg, and was impressed with his interest in the church and his zeal for its success. But during this meeting I was in his home and became better acquainted with him and was impressed with his thoroughness and energy in everything he undertook. Later he and his brother, Jim, visited my meeting at Lynchburg in order to try to induce me to remove to Shelbyville, and he said if I would agree to do so he would send me his individual check sufficient to pay all expenses of moving. In the last meeting I held at Shelbyville his house was my home.

Some months after being in his home at New Hermon I received a card stating that Pearl Elam Sullivan, a fine baby girl, had made her safe arrival in his home. This girl is now Mrs. Page Riley, of Birmingham, Ala. With much interest I have watched her physical and mental growth and spiritual development in the service of the Lord. Brother Sullivan's family as well as himself have always been my personal friends, and I feel an abiding interest in every one of them and most heartily appreciate such friendship and Christian love.

Brother Srygley has well stated the facts of Brother

Sullivan's energy, business capacity, zeal for the cause of Christ, open-hearted hospitality, and liberality, also his ripe old age and the facts of his death. He passed with others through the trials and struggles of the church, but in conviction and faith, love and service, he was always on the side of the worship of God as written in the New Testament. All who prove faithful to the Lord unto the end must pass through the trials of their faith and courage tested by the doctrines and commandments of men. Many have neither the conviction nor courage to endure for Christ's sake the test. With the rest of us, Brother Sullivan would not want me to say that he made no mistakes. None of live without mistakes. If I had to live without faults and without making mistakes, I would at once surrender to Satan; but since Jesus ever lives to make intercession for us, and since, if we confess our faults, God is faithful and just to forgive us, I take courage and realize fully that by his grace I can fight the good fight of the faith to the victorious end. So, in the difficulties, struggles, and trials which beset us, we can press on up in blessed assurance toward the mark of the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus our Lord!

Brother Sullivan's entire family know they have my sympathy and Christian love and prayers. May the blessings of God attend them all.

J. J. WALKER AND INTEGRITY.

BY F. B. SRYGLEY.

Integrity is a great thing, and without it no one can be a. Christian. "Integrity" is given as a synonym of "honesty," "honor," "probity.", "Honesty" is the general term for freedom from fraud. No nice man of the world would accuse a gentleman of lacking in integrity unless he was trying to pick a quarrel with him.

In a recent correspondence between Brother Will J. Cullum and J. J. Walker with reference to a debate at Livingston, Tenn., J. J. Walker intimates that S. H. Hall is lacking in integrity. This I consider a grave charge for one gentleman to bring against another, to say nothing of a professed Christian of the "sweet-spirited" type that can indorse almost anything in religion except the whole truth. Brother Cullum thought he had a prospect of a debate at Livingston; and as Brother Clubb, at the close of the debate at Columbia between Walker and Brewer, had proposed a debate in every county seat in the State, Brother Cullum felt justified in writing to J. J. Walker and asking that he and Brother Hall hold a debate on the music question in Livingston. Instead of Walker's acting perfectly fair and frank about the matter by telling Brother Cullum that his brethren did not wish a debate in Livingston, he tries to injure S. H. Hall by calling his integrity in question in the following language:

Dear Brother Cullum: Yours of yesterday in hand. I will be delighted to represent our people in the proposed discussion. However, would appreciate your choosing a representative of greater integrity than S. H. Hall. If it becomes necessary, I can tell you, with abundant proof, just what I mean. I tell you this is not for the purpose of creating any sensation, but to let you know of my lack of confidence in the man and to safeguard you from any embarrassment that may accrue should it become necessary to expose the thing publicly. Many of your own Shelbyville people can, if they will, give you the information to which I refer.

It seems from this quotation that Walker admits that Brother Hall has a little integrity, but it is not great enough for Walker. Walker is a great man in the estimation of at least one person, and he does not wish to deal with a man of only a limited amount of integrity. He wants one of greater integrity than S. H. Hall. When Walker tried to get out of debating with Brother Hall at Shelbyville, he said nothing about his lack of integrity, but he called his ability in question by claiming that he had already whipped him twice and he would not stay whipped. I do not suppose that I could help Walker by a suggestion; but if I were allowed to make a suggestion, it would be to stick to the same thing all the time. When one changes his position so often, it convinces me either that he is not satisfied with his position or that he is not very sincere when he takes a position. Changing thus has too much of the appearance of looking for something for the present distress. It reminds me of the little boy's definition of a lie, of which he said: "It is an abomination in the sight of God, but a very present help in time of trouble."

It will be noted that Brother Walker says, "If it becomes necessary, I can tell you, with abundant proof, just what I mean;" but it can be stated that up to the present writing it has never become necessary, in Walker's judgment, though Brother Cullum has called on him repeatedly by letter to do so. It will be noted that he says in this first letter, "I can tell you;" but he afterwards decided that he could not tell Cullum, the man to whom he made the charge, but that he could tell others. Hear him on this point:

Dear Brother Cullum: Your long letter of April 2 in hand. Hall, in communication with me yesterday, promised to let me come before his board and there lay the proof of my claims on the table. My board will be present also, and likewise a stenographer to take down what is said. Cullum, you ought to have known before this that I do not talk just to hear myself, especially on matters of this nature.

Brother Hall was willing for Walker to prove his charge before any one; but this charge was made to Brother Cullum and about something which Walker says took place in Shelbyville and Montgomery, and, as it seems to me, to evade the issue, he wants to go before those who know nothing about the matter to introduce proof of a charge made to another. No one believes this charge who knows S. H. Hall, and but few who know Walker, and no one who knows the facts. The fact that Walker has made no further effort to lay his proof on the table is proof of insincerity on his part. No, I do not believe that Walker talks just to hear himself talk, but he talks for the other fellow to hear him talk, hoping to convince him of a thing which he does not believe himself.

It will be noted that Walker says: "Many of your own Shelbyville people can, if they will, give you the information to which I refer." I would call this a ruse behind which a tricky man was trying to hide himself until he could get away with something. Of course, to meet such a trick as that, Brother Cullum would have to write to the brethren at Shelbyville; and still, under the insinuation, he would not know to whom to write, as the statement is indefinite. It is also an insinuation that they might know of Sam Hall's lack of integrity and yet would not tell it. Besides, while Cullum was trying to run down this insinuation, Walker could enjoy the respite. Brother Cullum did the best he could to run the matter down, but, instead of finding what Walker charged, he found the opposite, as he got a statement from the elders and the preacher, in which they say: "We found Brother Hall to be a Christian gentleman, whose integrity and manner of conduct. in a religious discussion could not be questioned. He is amply able to defend his side of the proposition, and you may rest assured that the debate will be conducted on a high plane in so far as Brother Hall is concerned." This document is signed by Eugene Hicks, J. F. Boyd, G. R. Revis, and E. P. Watson. I do not like to compare the integrity between men; but when it comes to telling the truth, these men can tell it, and they can stick to it.

In a letter Walker said this thing that Hall did, which was so bad, "was not done in a corner either at Nashville, Shelbyville, or Montgomery." Then it was done three times. Whatever it is, it was done when Walker and Hall debated at Nashville; still, Walker could debate with him at Montgomery; and whatever it was, Hall did it again, but Walker made no objection on that score when he met him the third time; but Hall did it again, and still Walker made no objection, but after that he agreed to meet him at Rockwood, if some one would give him a place to stay and something to eat; but when it comes to Livingston, Walker cannot meet him because he has done something three times. If any one believes that is Walker's reason for not meeting S. H. Hall at Livingston, let him hold up his hand.

Now, I really believe that some one is lacking in integrity, but I do not believe it is S. H. Hall. "Fare ye well, Brother Walker." You may convince some that you refused to debate with S. H. Hall because he is lacking in integrity, but not me.

NOTES FROM THE WEST.

BY F. B. SRYGLEY.

We had our usual three sermons at Clayton, New Mexico, yesterday-Sunday, July 12-with baptizing in the late afternoon. Two were baptized yesterday, making three in all to date. We had good audiences at all the services yesterday. There were several here from quite a distance, with a considerable sprinkling of our would-be "progressive" brethren. I failed not to declare "the whole counsel of God" on the subject of Christian worship, and took occasion to point out kindly the additions which they had made to the worship as it was taught and practiced by the apostles. As far as I could tell, it was received kindly and thoughtfully. These "transgressive" brethren have no preacher at the present, their pastor having left them several months ago. They had their Sunday school yesterday morning, and put off the Supper till the end of our first service and took the Supper with us. I attended their Sunday school and, by request, taught a class, but the class was made up mostly of our own brethren. Their Sunday school was small, with about sixty-mostly childrenpresent. While they have had a large membership, yet, without a pastor, they seem to have nearly all quit. This, I believe, is a weakness of their system. When a church of this kind has a pastor, he usually organizes every kind of a society that he can think of; and when he leaves, these societies soon cease to function, and they call the church "dead" and quit going. The trouble is the oneman rule; for when he leaves he takes everything with him. One-man rule (and he a hired man) does not minister to the growth of anything permanent.

Crop failure for three or four years has discouraged the farmers, the merchants, and nearly every other interest in the country. They still have the high altitude, the healthful climate, a good appetite, and the best place to sleep in the world.

The meeting here will continue till Thursday night, and I am expected to go Friday night to Pueblo, Col., ready to begin there next Sunday (July 19).

I am expected to begin the meeting at Great Divide on the first Sunday in August.

THE OVERWORKED MOTHER.

It is a mother's constant temptation to serve her children in lesser deeds that rob her life of its most important property—to forget herself and waste her soul in the routine demands made by her children. But let every mother know that the best way to serve her children is to keep alive in her breast the importance of her own personality. Let her know that the time will come when these little ones will need more than the sacrifices of the nursery. Some day they will need her companionship. They will need her to be large-minded, up-to-date, so that they may share their men's and women's problems with her. Happy is that mother who grows with her children! Happy she who keeps to herself in their childhood sacred hours for her own self-culture, renewing ever the oil in her lamp, that to them her supreme gift may be a constant and increasing light!—Christian Century.

OUERY DEPARTMENT

BY H. LEO BOLES

Why is verse 37 in the eighth chapter of Acts of the Apostles put in the King James translation of the Bible and omitted in the American Revised Version?—WILLIAM M. MATTHEWS, Florence, Ala.

Verse 37 of the eighth chapter of Acts is called an interpolation. We do not know who was the interpolator. It is now generally understood that this verse was not found in the original manuscript. It is found in at least one manuscript in the latter half of the second century. Irenæus, who lived from the year 150 to 210, quoted this verse. This shows that it was a very ancient custom with the early Christians to require the confession as stated in this verse. The translators of the King James Version followed the manuscripts which contained this verse, but the translators of the Revised Version followed the more ancient manuscript, which did not contain this verse.

(1) Is there any sin in the organ, or is it the wrong use of the organ that constitutes the sin? (2) If Rev. 22: 18 has only one meaning, and if a man indorses the use of the instrument, will he be condemned?—J. D. McCuiston, Buchanan, Tenn.

1. There is no sin in the mechanical instrument called "the organ." It is an inanimate thing, and inanimate things and irresponsible people do not sin. The sin is with the one who uses the organ.

2. Yes. The scripture referred to is as follows: "I testify unto every man that heareth the words of the prophecy of this book, If any man shall add unto them, God shall add unto him the plagues which are written in this book." (Rev. 22: 18.) The use of instruments of music in the worship is an addition to God's will and is, therefore, a sin. Ignorance of God's law or will does not keep the violation of it from being a sin. Ignorance of the laws of the land do not excuse the violator of these laws; neither does the ignorance of God's will excuse any one for violating God's will.

I am writing you for some advice in regard to the condition of the little band of Christians here. I want you to answer through the Query Department of the Gospel Advocate. Sometime ago a few of the members of the church of Christ established a small congregation here, organized a Bible school, and met every Lord's day in the courthouse. Shortly afterwards a piano was introduced into the worship over the protest of the few loyal Christians. We have gone on in a half-hearted way, not knowing just what to do, as the men of the congregation are digressive, and we are such a small band all together, with the entire town against us. Just what should we do? Would it be right for us to pull away from the ones who think it right to have instrumental music in the church? We are still having to use the courthouse as a place for worship.—X.

This sister presents a very pathetic case. I do not hesitate to encourage them to worship as the Lord directs. If a band of worshipers are worshiping as "it is written," the Lord will bless them. If some of the number vitiate the worship by introducing things not authorized, then those who are loyal to the Lord must seek to correct the wrong. These sisters should point out kindly and earnestly the error and call attention to the wrong that is being done and insist that it be corrected. If those who are committing the wrong will not cease, then there is nothing left for the others to do but to withdraw themselves from such worship. For one to engage in a worship that is erroneous or corrupted by the inventions of man is to encourage such worship. No true, faithful Christian can afford to do this. We become partakers of the sins of others when we encourage them in their sins. For the sake of truth, for the good of others, and for our own salvation, we must not encourage wrongdoing or false worship. Many are deluded just on this point. They know that the use of instrumental music is not authorized by the word of God; that there is no scriptural authority for it, and that it violates some of the plain and simple teaching of the New Testament; yet, for the sake of peace and union, they say, they continue to worship with those who have corrupted the worship of our Lord. This is a dangerous thing to do. Peace and unity are to be sought. We should always "give diligence to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace," but this must not be done at the sacrifice of God's truth and a violation of our own conscience. advice to these sisters is that they seek another place of worship where they can worship in the way that "it is written;" that they start the nucleus of a church, or congregation, and work and worship as the New Testament directs, and the Lord will bless them and increase their influence for good. ☼ Ö

Please explain 1 Cor. 6: 18. If "every sin that a man doeth is without the body," what kind of sin would fornication be. Is there a difference between the two?—J. D. STONE.

The scripture referred to reads as follows: "Flee fornication. Every sin that a man doeth is without the body; but he that committeth fornication sinneth against his own body." Usually the temptation to sin comes from without and appeals to man through the senses. It is not said of fornication that it is not stimulated from without, but that it is peculiarly a sin against the body. It defiles the body, which is called "the temple of the Holy Spirit" and a "member of the body of Christ." Fornication separates the body from the union with Christ and unites it with a harlot. The great sin is the desecration of the body to such an unholy purpose. It is meant to be the dwelling place of the Holy Spirit and should not be polluted. Macknight paraphrases this verse as follows: "Flee whoredom for this reason also, that every other sin which a man committeth is committed without affecting the body, but he who committeth whoredom sinneth against his own body: he wasteth its strength, and introduceth into it deadly diseases."

When elders take public authority over the other elders and the church and stand in open assembly and tell one of the elders that he told a lie and is dishonest and will not pay his debts, and the other elder calls another a liar and draws his knife on him, what should the church do in such a case? And if the church is so weak and afraid that lives will be taken, what ought the accused do? Would it be right for them to pass to themselves and worship in peace and harmony as the word of God directs?—X.

The above presents a most shameful and disgraceful condition of affairs. Even men of the world should be ashamed of such conduct as is described above, much less Christian men who pose as elders. Such a condition shows that there is a total lack of spirituality on the part of those claiming to be elders, and it shows an equally bad state of affairs with the church if it tolerates any such men as elders. From the description as given above I would conclude that none of the men are fit to be elders or even fit to compose decent society. If the churches of our Lord cannot have men who are scripturally qualified as elders, they cannot make much progress with spiritual things. No church can rise higher than its leadership in spirituality and in the Lord's work. The elders are to take the lead in this work, and they must be consecrated men or else the church will suffer. No one who is devoid of the scriptural qualifications should pose as an elder, and no congregation ought to honor men who are not scripturally qualified. It is a lack of respect for the teachings of our Lord that such men pose as elders; it is also a lack of respect for the word of God that a church should tolerate such men as elders. I would suggest that a general spiritual cleansing be had in that congregation with respect to both the elders and the others.

THE RIGHTEOUS NEVER FORSAKEN.

It was Saturday night, and the widow of the Pine Cottage sat by her blazing fagots, with her five tattered children at her side, endeavoring, by listening to the artlessness of their prattle, to dissipate the heavy gloom that pressed upon her mind. For a year her own feeble hand had provided for her helpless family, for she had no supporter; she thought of no friend in all the wide, unfriendly world around.

But that mysterious Providence the wisdom of whose ways is above human comprehension had visited her with wasting sickness, and her little means had become exhausted. It was now, too, midwinter, and the snow lay heavy and deep through all the surrounding forests, while storms still seemed gathering in the heavens, and the driving wind roared amid the neighboring pines and rocked her puny mansion.

The last herring smoked upon the coals before her. It was the only article of food she possessed; and no wonder her forlorn, desolate state brought up in her lone bosom all the anxieties of a mother when she looked upon her children; and no wonder, forlorn as she was, if she suffered the heart swellings of despair to rise, even though she knew that He, whose promise is to the widow and to the orphan, cannot forget his word.

Providence had, many years before, taken from her her eldest son, who went from his forest home to try his fortune on the high seas, since which she had heard no tidings of him; and, in her latter time, had, by the hand of death, deprived her of the companion and staff of her earthly pilgrimage in the person of her husband. Yet to this hour she had been upborne; she had not only been able to provide for her little flock, but had never lost an opportunity of ministering to the wants of the miserable and destitute.

The indolent may well bear with poverty while the ability to gain sustenance remains. The individual who has but his own wants to supply may suffer with fortitude the winter of want; his affections are not wounded, his heart not wrung. The most desolate in populous cities may hope, for Charity has not quite closed her hand and heart, and shut her eyes on misery.

But the industrious mother of helpless and depending children, far from the reach of human charity, has none of these to console her; and such a one was the widow of the Pine Cottage. But as she bent over the fire and took up the last scanty remnant of food to spread before her children, her spirits seemed to brighten up as by some sudden and mysterious impulse, and Cowper's beautiful lines came uncalled across her mind:

> Judge not the Lord by feeble sense, But trust him for his grace; Behind a frowning providence He hides a smiling face.

The smoked herring was scarcely laid upon the table, when a gentle rap at the door and loud barking of a dog attracted the attention of the family. The children flew to open it, and a weary traveler, in tattered garments and apparently indifferent health, entered and begged a lodging and a mouthful of food. Said he: "It is now twenty-four hours since I tasted bread." The widow's heart bled anew as under a fresh complication of distresses, for her sympathies lingered not around her fireside. She hesitated not even now. Rest and a share of all she had she proffered to the stranger. "We shall not be forsaken," said she, "or suffer deeper for an act of charity."

The traveler drew near the board; but when he saw the scanty fare, he raised his eyes toward heaven with astonishment. "And is this all your store?" said he, "and a share of this do you offer to one you know not? Then never saw I charity before! But, madam," said he, continuing, "do you not wrong your children by giving a part of your last mouthful to a stranger?"

"Ah," said the poor widow, and the teardrops gushed into her eyes as she said it, "I have a boy, a darling son, somehere on the face of the wide world, unless Heaven has taken him away; and I only act toward you as I would that others should act toward him. God, who sent manna from heaven, can provide for us as he did for Israel; and how should I this night offend him, if my son should be a wanderer, destitute as you, and he should have provided for him a home, even poor as this, were I to turn you unrelieved away!"

The widow ended; and the stranger, springing from his seat, clasped her in his arms: "God indeed has provided your son a home, and has given him wealth to reward the goodness of his benefactress. My mother! O, my mother!" It was her long, lost son, returned to her bosom from the Indies. He had chosen that disguise that he might the more completely surprise his family. And never was surprise more perfect or followed by a sweeter cup of joy.

That humble residence in the forest was exchanged for one comfortable, and indeed beautiful, in the valley; and the widow lived long with her dutiful son, in the enjoyment of worldly plenty and in the delightful employments of virtue; and at this day the passer-by is pointed to the willow that spreads its branches above her grave.—Selected.

SMITH.

Elizabeth Smith, wife of Simeon Smith for more than sixty years, departed this life on June 12, 1924, at the home of one of her daughters, surrounded by eight of her nine living children. In her going the writer lost one of his best friends; her children, a true mother; and the church of Christ, one of its best members. But our loss is her eternal gain. After over eighty-seven years' service to humanity and the church, she was perfectly prepared and ready to go. She blessed this world with a large number of children—thirteen in all. Two died in infancy and two after marriage. Nine were left to mourn their loss, all with good, faithful, Christian families. She was always in a good humor, took the world easy, and was one of the best in sickness and distress. Bless her sacred memory! R. T. Sisco. Elizabeth Smith, wife of Simeon

ROMINE.

Our beloved brother, A. B. Romine, who suffered much from cancer, has "gone home." He had cancer on the who suffered much from cancer, has "gone home." He had cancer on the thigh, which was scattered by radium at a Nashville hospital. He thought he was doing fine, when he discovered that he had cancer of the stomach. He again went to Nashville, but to no avail. He suffered patiently for a few months, and passed away on January 18, 1925. He leaves a widow and four children, three of whom were at his bedside when the end came: Brother Ross Romine, of Murfreesboro, Tenn.; Brother George Romine, of Birmingham, Ala.; and Sister Emma Nunally, of Sheffield, Ala. Sister James Powers, of California, under existing circumstances, could not visit her father in his illness, which was a source of regret to him. He was born on August 17, 1864. On July 18, 1893, he became a member of the church of Christ. During the time that I had known him he was very promat in attendance of ing the time that I had known him he was very prompt in attendance at the worship. The writer spoke words of comfort to a large gathering of sorrowing friends. May Heaven bless Sister Romine and her children. W. M. Behel.

CLARK.

To-day (January 19) is my fa-ther's birthday. Had he lived, he would have been seventy-six years would have been seventy-six years old; but he peacefully passed away on January 12, 1924, just one week before his seventy-fifth birthday. For several years he had been in such feeble health that it seemed as if it were only the goodness of God that spared him to us so long. Ten months before his death my dear mother had left us after only a few days' illness. In about a month (March 25, 1924) my devoted husband, W. B. Walker, Jr., was called to follow. Father was then so feeble he could scarcely be up. But he bore his suffering and sorrow with the patience and strength of character so true to his nature. It was not God's will that his only child should be with him to the end, but he was tenderly nursed by other near McQUIDDY'S

STOVER.

J. P. Stover was born on March 20, 1871, and departed this earthly life on February 1, 1925, leaving behind a wife, six children, one sister (Mrs. W. A. Edwards, of Hornbeak, Tenn.), and seven half brothers and half sixters together with a best of relatives. and seven half brothers and half sisters, together with a host of relatives and friends, to mourn his going away. The deceased was a member of the church of Christ, having obeyed the gospel several years ago at Oak Ridge, in Obion County, later moving near Hornbeak and taking membership with the congregation here. The funeral was conducted at Hornbeak by Brother John R. Williams and the writer, after which the body was laid to rest in the Hornbeak cemetery to await the call from on high, when all the sleeping millions will come forth. It was my privilege to know Brother Stover and to be in his home. Just one week before his departure I was called upon to go to his home and conduct a short service, break bread with him, and pray with and for him. He was a man of many noble traits, honest and fair in his dealings, upright in character and life, leaving an example for his posterity worthy of their imitation. The write has lost a companion; the children, their father; the sister, her loving brother. Let us ever live true to God and serve him faithfully until death, that we may all receive the reward he so freely offers to all.

CULP.

James C. Culp died on January 28, 1925, at the home of his daughter, Mrs. John Fultz, in Eagle Mills, Ark. He was born in Alabama on July 20, 1837, and moved with his parents to Arkansas in 1840. He married Miss Jane Chambliss in February, 1861, and to this union two girls were born, one dying in infancy. He became obedient to the Lord in 1861, being baptized by a Methodist preacher. He was always satisfied with his obedidience to the gospel, and was a regular attendant at the Salem church of Christ, his wife, who died fifteen years ago, being a member of the Salem church. He sought membership with the Salem church, but refused to be reimmersed. He went through the Civil War and served his beloved Southland with honor. He was an honored member of the Masonic order. "Uncle Jim" Culp (as he was familiarly known) was honored and loved by all who knew him. He was eighty-eight years old at death. He died suddenly at night in his bed, apparently without a struggle. He leaves a daughter, five grandchildren, and eight great-grandchildren, with numerous other relatives and friends, to mourn his death. A Christian has entered into rest. His family lost a dear father, and I a true and beloved friend. The writer conducted the funeral, and the Masons buried his mortal body.

BONE.

Succumbing to a heart attack on Sunday night, January 11, 1925, George S. Bone, of Bakerville, Tenn., quietly passed away. He had not been in perfect health for some time, yet his death came as a severe shock to all who knew him. There was not a more influential citizen in Humphreys County than Mr. Bone. He was a merchant for twenty-one years, and was a never-failing source of help to a large number of small farmers who went to him yearly for the necessities of life. He had a kindly disposition, and although his tender-heartedness may have been preyed upon by some, his generosity, coupled with fine business acumen, resulted in his accumulating a handsome fortune. It is not known that any person ever went to him for aid without receiving it. Business concerns in several cities, which valued him as a citizen and customer, sent beautiful floral tributes, attesting their high esteem for him. Mr. Bone was married to Miss Mai Matilda Daniel on October 5, 1880, on Blue Creek, near Cuba Landing, Tenn. To this union eight

BIBLE CROSS WORD PUZZL

A PUZZLE of average difficulty and composite pattern, it is interesting because of its emphasis upon scriptural phases rather than proper names. Several of the few names have the antique spelling.

How to Solve a Cross Word Puzzle @ 1925 THE J.C.W. CO.

© 1925 THE J.C.W. CO. How to Solve a Cross word Puzzle

To work out this puzzle, the white spaces must be filled with letters forming words answering to the various horizontal and vertical definitions given below. The horizontal and vertical words are not the same, but each gives a clue to the other. The first letter of each word is indicated by a number which refers to the definitions listed below.

It is advisable to first fill in, in both directions, those words which you know to be correct. These will furnish hints to those words which you do not know or had merely guessed at. When the puzzle is solved correctly, the letters in the white spaces will spell words both horizontally and vertically. The black spaces are the blind spots of the puzzle and merely form the pattern, incidentally designating the ends and beginnings of the words contained in the puzzle.

Fullbright, Texas, July 9.—Since my last report I have assisted in two meetings. The first one, of eleven days' duration, was in Sheffield, Ala., and resulted in twenty-six additions, twenty-one of which were by baptism. This past Sunday I closed at Albuquerque, N. M. With both fasting and prayer the brethren began in an auditorium in the center of the town, seating three thousand people. The meeting resulted in twenty-two additions ing resulted in twenty-two additions and the moving of the congregation from the country to town.—G. A. Dunn, Jr.

Dossville, Miss., June 25.—We are now in the middle of the State, at Nile, and preaching in a schoolhouse, with large crowds and good attention. Two baptized yesterday evening. There is no church within thirty-five or forty miles of this place; so far as I know, and there are several good-sized towns within this radius. Our next meeting will be held at a place where the only members are a man and his wife and daughter. We will have five or six meetings of this kind during the summer. At some of the places there is no church.—John P. Lewis.

Corpus Christi, Texas, July 6.—Sixteen identified, two restored, and six baptized in a two-weeks' meeting in this city. Congregation in excellent condition. I have accepted work in Shreveport, which gives me the opportunity of preaching in my old home State (Louisiana), the desire of my life. I pray my health may permit. Brother Phillips has been there several months and is loved very much. He is anxious to continue his school work. Metropolis, Ill., July 11.—Breth-ren, let me speak of a man whom I esteem highly as a man, as a Christian, and as a gospel preacher. Owing to the financial strain all over the country and that awful tornado which passed through Missouri, Lilipians left Moreh, Pasth nois, and Indiana last March, Brother L. E. Jones has been made to lose a number of meetings he had booked for this year, and, as a result, he now has a lot of idle time. He is a man, to my certain knowledge, who ought to my certain knowledge, who ought to be kept busy all the time. He is a real teacher. Congregations that can call him for meetings will make no mistake in doing so. He is true to the Book and well worthy of all consideration of the churches of Christ. Address L. E. Jones, 417 East Fifth Street, Meropolis, Ill.—J. Oscar Paisley.

Austin, Texas, July 10.—On June 7 we began a meeting at Kerrville, Texas, which embraced three Sundays, closing on the third Sunday night. Six men and women were baptized into the one body, ten came over from the Christian Church to take a firm stand with the church of God on the Bible, and a congregation was set in order numbering forty-three. We set apart two elders and two deacons to conduct the work in the future. We also secured the old Union church house for the brethren Union church house for the brethren to use until they can construct one of their own, which they will do in the near future. On June 28 I preached at both the morning and evening hours for the Hyde Park church of Christ. Three more brethren lined up with us with the promise to go to work and help to build up the cause of the Master in the Hyde Park addition to the city.—H. F. Oliver.

A FRIEND. A FRIEND.

A DISTRESSING CASE.

BY J. W. GRANT.

Brother Oren L. Rowlett, of Riverland, Fla., is in dire need of financial aid and sympathy. He has had a terrible calamity, in which his dear wife lost her life instantly, his baby was badly burned, and his right leg was broken above the ankle. It happened on the night of June 21. In a letter just received from him he says:

Brother Grant, it seems like I am ruined. We had an awful wreck on Sunday night, June 21. We were coming home from church services that we had been holding in Lacoochee. I got delayed, and got only about halfway home when it got dark. You remember there is hardly any twilight here. I had no lights on my twilight here. I had no lights on my truck. Some boys met us, who were drinking some, I am told. They could hardly stay in the road. My car was on my side of the road, with the right wheels in the sand; but they hit me, and Lola [his wife] was killed almost instantly. Our baby was burned real bad, and my right leg was broken just above the ankle. Our two oldest children were with their grandmother. children were with their grandmother, and not in the wreck.

My wife was twenty-three years old, and was born and reared at Riverland. In the summer of 1919 I baptized her and her school friend, Miss Ulma Hardin. My wife was the first person that I ever baptized, and irst person that I ever baptized, and is the first of those that I have baptized to pass to the great beyond. She always encouraged me in my Christian work, and was willing to stay alone, if necessary, with the children, while I was filling my appointments among the churches. It seems to hard to give up one who was so so hard to give up one who was so kind and true.

In another letter, written to a friend and forwarded to me, he says: "Lola never recovered from the wreck, but our little baby is getting along fine."

Brother Rowlett is in dire need, and he, asks me to ask the Gospel Advocate readers and the churches to help him with a donation. He is a good Christian, a preacher, and was working with a road-building crew to support his family. He has left three little girls, the oldest under six years old, and the baby "burned," but "doing fine." He has the broken leg, and thinks he will lose three months from work on that account. Can you help him? I have known him nearly four years, and believe him to be a good, pure man, and worthy. Send the funds to O. L. Rowlett, Richloam, Fla., as that is the name of the post office.

Watson, of Cookeville, Tenn., is holding two meetings in Geneva County. On the whole, very good work is being done. I am glad to say that most of the preachers in the field in this section this year are men of unquestioned good character. The congregations throughout South Alabama have been so many times hindered in their progress by encouraging men whose lives were such as to be stumblingblocks to the critical world. Also, it is encouraging to find that precisions with the preceders in South Progress in South Progre Also, it is encouraging to find that practically all the preachers in South Alabama encourage the teaching of the Bible to old and young in groups according to the ability to understand the lessons. Now and then one comes along who cannot understand that it is scriptural to teach the Bible by having the lessons written or printed on paper as well as to have the lesson outlines on a blackboard and all the congregation in one group. Of course, when one of that degree of inconsistency does attempt to preach, he does practically no good. One preacher insisted that the Bible said for "women to keep silent in the church," and then told the sisters to sing. They broke the silence when they sang. Only occasionally do we hear of any friction over untaught questions. We need more workers, however, and much more needs to be done. Soon the night will come, when no man can work.—Fred M. Little.

A little contact with Scripture at the beginning of the day is like the touch of fresh water upon the face. It clears our mental vision; it freshens our better instincts; it steadies our spiritual pulse. Not seldom some verse will come home to our spirits with a new meaning and a new power and will thus sing all day in the background of our thoughts like some strain from some lovely and remembered music.

COMMENDATIONS OF BIBLE LESSON HELPS

"I am delighted with your Lesson Helps, and regard them as the best I have examined." (C. W. Thompson.)

"We have been using the Lesson Helps for fifteen years or more. I noticed the change, and, in my humble judgment, think it good." (W. G. Harrison.)

"I have received sample copies of your Lesson Helps and examined them. I pronounce them as good, so far as I can think, as can be made." (Ira C. Moore.)

"We are using your Sunday-school Lesson Helps at Fairfax church of Christ, this city, and think they are good. We have no criticism to offer." (M. P. Lowry.)

"I am glad to commend the Bible Lesson Helps issued by the Gospel Advocate Company. They cannot fail of being helpful to any church using them." (C. A. Norred.)

"The Quarterlies are fine. They should be a great help to the Bible student. I would be glad if Bible classes that do not now have them would take up their use." (R. P. Cuff.)

"Your Quarterlies received and briefly examined. They show that much time and care have been exercised in their preparation. They are clear, scriptural, and to the point." (E. L. Whitaker.)

"I think the Quarterlies very instructive and helpful in the study of the Scriptures both in the home and in the public assembly, and it will give me pleasure to comment them to all the faithful workers in my field of labor." (J. D. Jones.)

"The Sunday-school literature that is published by the Gospel Advocate Company I can heartily recommend to any one who is in search for good helps on our Sunday-school lessons." (Robert E. Wright.)

"A complete assortment of the Sunday-school literature published by the Gospel Advocate Company was sent me recently. Having examined it carefully, I am glad to say I consider it excellent, and gladly commend it to congregations, teachers, and classes." (T. B. Larimore.)

"As a whole, I think your Lesson Helps far surpass other literature of its kind. Here in this great mission field (Louisiana) where we have placed them, many comparisons have been made between them and both the denominational and our society brethreu's literature, and at no time have your Lesson Helps come off second best." (C. C. McQuiddy.)

"It is a pleasure to write a word of commendation of Brother Elam's Notes on Bible School Leasons. They are the product of one who has given the greater part of his life to the study and teaching of God's Word. They are true to the Bible, comprehensive, and scholarly. If you love the truth, you will be delighted to study with him these wonderful lossons." (A. G. Freed.)

"Brother E. A. Elam's Notes, as published annually, is, in my judgment, sortputural and the best thing of its kind I have ever seen or that is published to-day. Everybody ought to have a copy and preserve it for study and reference. Brother Elam's twenty-five years' work, if every year should be bound in a separate volume, the twenty-five volumes would be a great addition to any library. (C. M. Pullias.)

"At the Central church of Christ in Fort Worth we have been using in our Bible school Elam's Notes and other literature of his. For a great number of years the writer of this has felt that Brother Elam was one of the hest-prepared men in the brotherhood for the preparation of such literature. His Notes, in our best judgment, represent, or reflect, the best efforts he has ever made. Both as an elder of the congregation and as a teacher in our Bible School, I have very great pleasure in indorsing his Notes. To the extent that an expression of our views is of value, I assure you we are very pleased to give it." (J. G. Wilkinson.)

"I have used Elam's Questerlies for verse.

pleased to give it." (J. G. Wilkinson.)

"I have used Elam's Quarterlies for years. They are superior to any that I have seen. Eliam's Notes on Bible School Lessons sermuch fuller than they. They give the historical setting as to time and place that is needed and valuable. They give so many scriptural citations and references—Scriptural citations and references—Scriptures that introduce the text or corroborate the text—that the average student may know the geography, the history, and the full meaning of the lesson. They give so many lessons, deducted from the copious citations of Scriptures, that the student may know more perfectly God's will. For years I have used Peloubet's Select Notes. I compare them weekly. I do not hesitate to say that Elam's Notes are infinitely superior, if you want to know the Bible." (C. F. Holt.)

Nashville, Tenn., July 7.—Begining on the fourth Sunday in June, I spent a few days with the North Side congregation in Chattanooga, Tenn. congregation in Chattanooga, Tenn. Just about one year ago I went, in answer to a call from certain brethren, to hold a meeting in that part of the city, with a view to establishing a congregation. The old frame building in which they began their worship was burned a little later, and a nice, modern, commodious brick promptly took its place. The membership has more than trebled during its first year, and than trebled during its first year, and good work is being done. There were one hundred and thirty in the various classes on the Sunday I was there. The promptness with which the splendid new building we have detected. did new building was erected when they were burned out is an index to their faith and zeal. They are good people, and they mean business in the Lord's work.—W. H. Owen.

Chicago, Ill., July 6.—Our meeting in Toledo, Ohio, closed a week ago. Interest increased to the end. No one was baptized, but a Catholic and an Adventist conceded their error. The church in Toledo meets now in a good room in the Odd Fellows' building on Detroit Avenue, near Central Avenue. The meeting time is 10 A.M., fast time (nine o'clock, standard time). From the heart of the city take "Long Belt" Detroit Avenue. Reader, note this, for you might need it unexpectedly. The church in Toledo is growing, and we can help it by urging friends who go there to be faithful to duty. Several new members were located during the meeting. Coming here from Toledo, I had a nice visit in Detroit. W. S. Long (who baptized me) and Brother Claud F. Witty entertained me royally in their homes. Our central meeting began here vesterday in me royally in their homes. Our central meeting began here yesterday in the Capitol Building, with the largest attendance the church has had, I was told. No doubt there are hundreds of Christians in this city, if we could only gather them. Norman Davidson, of Nashville, Tenn., who is in the city on business, is assisting us with his good singing talent. One couple saw our announcement in the Gospel Advocate and drove ninety miles to come to the meeting yesterday. Moral: Read the Gospel Advocate and keep informed as to the cause of truth.—F. L. Paisley.

Texarkana, Ark.-Tex., July 3.—I regard this as important. When a man has worn himself out in the Master's cause, preaching the gospel, and has always lived it, too; when he has spent all of his life in this work till he is an old man, and so much of it in destitute places, till he has nothing left for a living; and when he comes to this condition in life, and, added to it, becomes an invalid, or down and out from sickness, rheumatism, and other ailments, I feel that it is the duty of the churches to support that man while he is in that condition. I say this about Brother J. P. Nall, of Teague, Texas. To my knowledge, he Teague, Texas. To my knowledge, he is not able to preach, and he has nothing to fall back on but a life record in the Master's work. Now, brethren, he needs help, and he needs it now. So when you read this, lay your paper down and write him a check. He will appreciate it. Christ says: "Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of these my brethren, even these least, ye did it unto me." Again: "Inasmuch as ye did it not unto one of these least, ve did it not unto one of these least, ye did it not unto me." Which shall it be in this case in judgment? He is a worthy brother. Send direct to Mrs. J. P. Nall, Teague, Texas.—J. W. Chism.

regular contributors. It has all of the regular departments of the best religious periodicals.

• In editorial policy it stands for individual consecration, against ecclesiastic organizations, as the scriptural and best method of doing missionary work. It recognizes no organization but the church of Christ as a scriptural medium of converting the world and developing the Christian character.

It opposes all human creeds and ecclesiastic councils, and pleads for the right of each individual to study the Scriptures for himself and formulate his own faith, without dictation or hindrance from churchly dignitaries. It opposes all clerical assumption of official authority in the church, and stands for the scriptural doctrine that each Christian has an office to fill, a work to perform—that all are kings and priests unto God.

It stoutly advocates the doctrine of missions, and argues unceasingly that every Christian is a divinely commissioned missionary and every church is a scripturally organized missionary society. The mission of every Christian and the design of every church is to preach the gospel to all the world.

It believes in, and stoutly advocates, congregational singing, as opposed to select choirs and instrumental performances, as the best and most soul-stirring church music. Let all the people sing. # CURRENT COMMENT

By JAMES A. ALLEN

An exchange of the Baptist persuasion says:

Founders of new sects, like Alexander Campbell and Joe Smith, the founders of Campbellism and Mormonism, give as an excuse for the existence of their young heretical sects, that the church Christ built had so apostatized that a "reformation" or "restitution" became necessary, and, therefore, these men who became the respective heads and founders of their own recent sects started denominations to suit their own depraved nature. If either Joe Smith or Alexander Campbell had really believed the Bible, the bending back of humanity would not now be burdened with Mormonism and Campbellism, for Christ said that the gates of hell shall not prevail against his church. Their infidelity plus their worldly ambition is the reason that they sold themselves to Satan for the purpose of promulgating his hellish, soul-destroying heresies.

The above weak and wicked slander from a man that should know better would not be dignified with a notice were it not for those upon whom such a man would practice such a deception. To mention the name of Alexander Campbell, a man whom the best and greatest men among his contemporaries regarded as without a peer, in the same breath with a degenerate impostor like Joe Smith is prima facie evidence that the man who so does is so fired by passion and blinded by prejudice as to be entirely outside the pale of candor, truth, or common honesty.

While it would be just as scriptural for Alexander Campbell to found a Campbellite Church as it was for John Smyth to found the Baptist Church or for John Wesley to found the Methodist Church, still Mr. Campbell positively disclaimed being the founder of any religious organization whatever and earnestly pleaded that the whole religious world ought to abandon everything founded by man and return to the church founded by Christ; and while it would be just as scriptural for a man to be a Campbellite as it would for him to be a Baptist, still, when a man refuses to preach or practice anything that was not preached or practiced by the apostles, no one can truthfully represent him as being anything but a Christian. If people "really believed the Bible," they would be satisfied to take it as their guide, be nothing but Christians, belong to no church except the church of Christ, and preach and practice nothing but what was preached and practiced by inspired men in New Testament times. Those who pursue such a course cannot be either Baptists or Campbellites.

Under the heading, "Old-fashioned Methodism," the Methodist Advocate, Nashville, Tenn., quotes from John Wesley, as given in an exchange, as follows:

Two passages from the writings of John Wesley, though often reprinted, may well be brought to mind in a time when some among us are insisting on a strict uniformity of opinion that is foreign to the tradition and spirit of Methodism:

"A Methodist is one that has the love of God shed abroad in his heart, one who loves the Lord his God with all his heart, and soul, and mind, and strength. He rejoices evermore, prays without ceasing, and in everything gives thanks. His heart is full of love to all mankind and is purified from envy, malice, wrath, and every unkind affection. His one desire and the one design of his life is not to do his own will, but the will of Him that sent him. He does good to all men—unto neighbors, strangers, friends, and enemies. These are the principles and practices of our sect. These are the true marks of Methodism. By these alone do Methodists desire to be distinguished from other men."

"The Methodists do not impose, in order to their admission, any opinions whatever. Let them hold particular or general redemption, absolute or conditional decrees; let them be churchmen or dissenters, Presbyterians or independents—it is no obstacle. Let them choose one mode of baptism or another—it is no bar to their admission. The Presbyterian may be a Presbyterian still; so may the Quaker. O, that we may never make anything more or less the term of union with us, but having the mind that was in Christ, and then walking as he walked!"

The Bible insists "on a strict uniformity of" faith, not opinion. And as "faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God," the only way people can be united is for them to preach and practice the things that are authorized and required in the word of God. A man who "has the love of God shed abroad in his heart, one who loves the Lord his God with all his heart, and soul, and mind, and strength," will "fear God, and keep his commandments;" and as God commands no man to be a Methodist, a Presbyterian, or a Quaker, or to "choose one mode of baptism or another," all who love God to the extent of being willing to do what he commands will abandon these human theories and become united on the word of God.

It is sinful to do anything as service to God that God does not command us to do, or to be anything that God does not command us to be. "What thing soever I command you, that shall ye observe to do: thou shalt not add thereto, nor diminish from it." (Deut. 12: 32.) The command "not to go beyond the things which are written" holds a man to what is authorized and commanded.

Jesus commands all penitent believers to be immersed. There are no "modes" of baptism, for the reason that there is only "one baptism." This "one baptism" is performed by going "down into the water" and being baptized, and then, after baptism, coming "up out of the water."

THE OTHER SIDE OF THE QUESTION.

BY K. C. MOSER.

It is said that every question has two sides. I suppose this is true. But when one takes a position and establishes himself upon it, he forgets, in many cases, that there is another side to the question. Thus many are kept by themselves in error, when an honest consideration of the other side of the question would show them their mistake.

The Pedobaptist imagines that sprinkling and pouring are baptism and that the "mode" is not significant. If he could be persuaded that there is another side to the question of the "mode" of baptism, he might be able at once to see his mistake.

There is another question, however, that concerns us more than does the above one; for we are agreed that immersion only is baptism. I refer to the matter of offending a brother, or rather to what is commonly thought to be an offense. Paul wrote: "Wherefore, if meat make my brother to offend, I will eat no flesh while the world standeth, lest I make my brother to offend." For example, the individual cup in the communion service is introduced, and some one objects. Now, he imagines that he is offended, and "while the world standeth" individual cups should not be used. Many demand that their opinions be respected, regardless of the offense their demands make. That is, they offend others that they themselves be not offended. I am certain that one cup is as offensive to many as the individual cup is to a few. According to the common interpretation of the above passage, one would have to "do evil that good may come."

Once in a meeting a brother objected to the singing of quartets, and served notice that unless the singing of quartets be discontinued he would quit the meeting. Not wishing, of course, that the meeting be a complete failure, the quartets were discontinued. The brother, as usual in such cases, took refuge behind a misinterpretation of 1 Cor. 8: 13. He supposed that everything that did not meet his approval should be discontinued at once.

But does not this question have another side? If doing something of which some one disapproves constitutes the offense of which Paul wrote, did not the brother who demanded that we sing no quartets offend me and others? He most certainly did, for I wanted them sung for the good that I thought they would do. So, then, I might have retorted: "It offends me for you to object to quartet singing; and I demand that you make no further objection thereto 'while the world standeth,' lest you offend me." Now, I submit that he has offended me quite as much as I have offended him. If singing of quartets continues, he is offended; and if they must stop, I am offended. According to a common interpretation of 1 Cor. 8: 13, there is but one remedy, and that is for the world to cease to stand. Then I suppose we could offend each other with impunity.

But I am certain that the Lord does not demand that I stop doing everything that does not meet the approval of every one. The Lord knew the endless peculiarities of some people would make such a course as impossible as it would be impracticable. It offends some church members for me to condemn dancing and mixed bathing. Must I stop preaching against sin? Others are offended when they are reproved for their lack of love, zeal, and activity. Must preachers and teachers cease to "reprove, rebuke, and exhort?" Doubtless Peter was offended when Paul "withstood him to the face." Did Paul do wrong? The disciples of Christ, seemingly afraid that Christ was making a mistake, once said to him: "Knowest thou that the Pharisees were offended, when they heard this saying?" Did Christ really make a mistake?

The complaint of causing offense has been a convenient club for everybody. It seems to work as well with one as with another. We have used it on the music folk, and, in turn, been mauled over the head with it by those who oppose the use of Bible helps, etc. But what did Paul really teach? What is it to cause a brother to offend?

Offending a brother in the scriptural sense is causing him to commit sin. The context of the passage referred to shows this. To eat meat in acknowledgment of an idol is a sin. This is the very thing that constituted the offense mentioned in the passage under consideration. "But some being used until now to the idol, eat as a thing sacrificed to an idol." That is, when one eats "to an idol," he simply becomes an idolater. Paul could eat meat "in an idol's temple" without sin, for he knew that there was but one true God. But if his eating meat led a brother into idolatry, he affirmed that he would eat meat no more.

Now, the offense consisted not in the brother's disapproval of Paul's conduct; for the offended brother ate of the meat, too, and was led to do so by Paul's example. Had he disapproved Paul's eating of meat, naturally he would not have followed Paul's example. The brother who opposed the singing of quartets did not ask to assist in singing them. He refused to listen to them. And here is another vital difference: If the brother who at first opposed quartet singing had been induced by the example of others to help in the singing of them, still he would have committed no sin unless he had violated his conscience. But not so with Paul's brother. However he might have felt about eating meat offered to an idol, still he would have committed sin in so eating.

Leading one, then, through my example, into sin, is offending that brother. And should I by my example cause others to sin, it would be my duty to change my practice. But if doing my duty meets the disapproval of some misguided brother, let me teach him "the way of the Lord more perfectly," provided he will be taught; but I must still obey God rather than to respect the whims of peculiar people.

THE CROSS.

BY JOHN ALLEN HUDSON.

The chief point of interest for me in the religion of the Lord Jesus Christ is not the little town of Bethlehem in which he was born, nor the manger in which he was placed at the time angels sang of good will, nor the murky waters of the sacred Jordan where he was baptized, but the "old rugged cross" upon which he died. He lived a righteous life, it is true, but he died for me in shame and ignominy and awful anguish upon that cross. And if Christianity has an emblem (in "baptism into death" and in "flesh and blood" in the Supper), it is in that center of the converging elements of the entire plan of redemption. All things before pointed to the cross. All things since have been based upon and derive their significance therefrom. It is the center of the world's hope, the Gordian knot that ties together God and humanity through the God-Man, the blessed Jesus. Heaven descended toward earth and earth was raised toward God on that memorable day some two millenniums ago when Jesus was impaled upon a Roman tree.

It was said by Rosseau that, if, when Socrates drank the cup of fatal hemlock, he died the death of a philosopher, Jesus, when he died upon the cross praying for his enemies, died the death of a God. He died as the immaculate Son of God.

The cross is the very heart and genius of Christianity. And it was a seeming incongruity! The birth of Christianity was not based upon a conspicuous deed enacted by a mighty prince before an admiring world. The Cæsars paraded, after conquering great nations, before their subjects in the capital city of the world, displaying trophies of war. One Roman emperor led the beautiful Zenobia, Persia's captured queen, bound in chains of gold, behind his chariot through the streets of Rome. The Cæsars were great conquerors. Jesus, displayed as a malefactor, a "man of sorrows and acquainted with grief," in the shocking and piteous rôle of the weak and wronged, triumphed through the cross and has made it more glorious than the chariots of victory used by the Cæsars. "The meek shall inherit the earth."

The cross is a burden to be borne. Christ forsook heaven and the company of angels and suffered himself to be impressed under the weight of the cross. Weak and trembling, exhausted from lack of food, through loss of blood caused by scourging, and from constant wakefulness, his emasculated physical form staggered under the weight of the shaft of death as he toiled toward the hill of redemption. So piteous was the sight, so heart-wringing, that the women who followed along set up a weird, piteous, soul-rending lament. Jesus craned his head from his stooping shoulders and said for them not to weep for him, but to weep for themselves and for their children.

In the dragging journey to Calvary, the cross became too heavy for the exhausted Son of Mary to carry. The weight of it crushed him. God prepared a fresh man from the country who was made the burden bearer to the place of crucifixion.

Jesus not only bore the cross, but he bore the sins of us all. "Who his own self bare our sins in his own body on the tree, that we, being dead to sins, should live unto righteousness." (1 Pet. 2: 24.) Responsibility in this world is commensurate with ability and place. No man may be free from it. To assume the proper amount of responsibility and to faithfully bear it is the work of a man or a woman. The heavy burden of the dark load of sins which the devil places upon the back of his servant is far harder to bear than the burden that Jesus places. While Jesus will place a burden to be borne, he will also remove a greater one. O, blessed Christ! And a man can select the best burden to bear. That is the cross. "Whosever doth not bear his cross, and come after me, cannot be my disciple." (Luke 14: 27.)

If the cross becomes too heavy for you to bear, Jesus will assist you. That is his promise. "God is faithful, who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able; but will with the temptation also make a way to escape, that ye may be able to bear it." As Simon, the Cyrenian, was impressed when Jesus could no longer bear the burden of the cross; so, when we are bowed to the point of being crushed, Jesus will throw himself in and help us to bear and to "carry on."

The cross is an emblem of self-denial. To come to the cross, to bear its weight-its too great weight-on a dusty road to Golgotha, to an ignominious and shameful death and seeming defeat, Jesus Christ, the Lord, had to deny himself of glories that excel the greatest dreams of finite minds. The phantasmagoria of the dreaming minds of poets cannot encompass the beauties of the celestial city which Jesus left. And he left so great glory for-what? But human experience knows what. The catalogue of crime is spread before our eyes. Miasma and filth everywhere abound; moral putrefaction ladens every breeze with the foul vapors of suffocation. The Lord Jesus Christ denied himself of divine glories and descended into this reeking dungeon of human life and bore the weight of the cross. What a denial! It required the self-abnegation of some one beyond this mundane sphere to accomplish that.

Since Jesus emptied himself of the glories of heaven and became identified with the interests of the human family, is he asking too much when he puts his religion first, and when the cross must be accepted as the first of all loves and be clung to with an undying loyalty? Jesus requires that we shall deny father and mother and wife and children and brother and sister and lands for him and his cross. If we do not, we cannot be his disciples.

The apostle Paul understood that he would have to deny himself of everything for Christ. He practiced the thought faultlessly. He said: "I am crucified with Christ: nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me: and the life which I now live in the flesh I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me, and gave himself for me." (Gal. 2: 20.) "If any other man thinketh that he hath whereof he might trust in the flesh, I more: circumcised the eighth day, of the stock of Israel, of the tribe of Benjamin, a Hebrew of the Hebrews; as touching the law, a Pharisee; concerning zeal, persecuting the church; touching the righteousness which is in the law, blameless. But what things were gain to me, those I counted loss for Christ. Yea doubtless, and I count all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord: for whom I have suffered the loss of all things, and do count them but dung, that I may win Christ." (Phil.

It was said by Lord Macaulay that John Bunyan, famous author of "Pilgrim's Progress," was at one time so obsessed with the idea that he, like Judas, had betrayed his Lord, he was almost insane. The idea drove him day and night. The apostle Paul was so obsessed with the idea of bearing the cross, of serving Jesus, that he was also driven day and night—driven into the wilds, among savages, among the humble, etc. He reasoned that he was not his own. "Christ works in me," he said. "I am determined to know nothing, save Jesus Christ, and him crucified," he said again. Such devotion carried the cross of the humble Nazarene to far-off heathen lands. If duplicated enough, it will bear it to all the world.

Let us deny ourselves of enough of the sordid things of time that we can a little exemplify the religion of the blessed Master. We must die, and we would die by it. Then let us live by it.

NOTES FROM THE WEST.

BY F. B. SRYGLEY.

The meeting at Clayton, New Mexico, closed on July 16, with three baptized. The audiences were very good at all the meetings. There is only a small band of disciples in Clayton who worship "as it is written." They meet in a hall and have the worship, but they have no Bible school or class work of any kind before or after the worship. There is one or two who object to thus studying the Bible, and, of course, as a result, the children are not interested in the study of the Bible. I tried to show them that it was their duty to encourage their children and all others to study the Bible on Sunday and every other day that they could. It is a pity that a few men can keep down such a good work. Usually this opposition comes from a man who thinks he is a preacher and that he can do great good by lecturing to all at the same time without any regard to age or development. These would-be leaders sometimes know but little about the Bible in a general way; and if they were confined to a lesson with such questions as will bring out the teaching of the Bible, they would not shine as great lights in the meetings.

Our would-be "progressive" brethren were very nice in allowing us the use of their house; and while the brethren intended to pay them something for the use of the house, they told the brethren they made no charge for if and felt that they should only pay for the extra lights used. In this they were more generous than one of our own churches which is opposed to the instrument in the worship. This church had a tent, and they were willing for these few brethren at Clayton to use it in a meeting, provided they would pay twenty-five dollars and freight on the tent both ways. If I am not mistaken, this same church has been advertised as willing to do missionary work in foreign fields. They certainly did not know the needs of the faithful few in Clayton or they would have been anxious to lend them a helping hand. It is easy sometimes for us to overlook opportunities right at our doors in our anxiety to see something far away to do for the glory of God. We have several little bands of faithful brethren over New Mexico that feel themselves unable to even have one week's preaching. They have had three or four crop failures, and many of them will be compelled to abandon their homes and seek work in other places, and many of them will abandon their homes forever by the foreclosure of a mortgage; but they need the comforts of Christianity while they live and the prospects of "a home over there" after death. I am glad I did what I could for the cause of truth and for the faithful in Clayton.

I am now in a meeting in Pueblo, Col. There are about fifteen here who meet in a hall, but the preaching is being done in a Methodist church. They have turned their house over to us without any strings to it, and we are at liberty to preach whatever we want to preach and no fuss made about it. Several outsiders and some of other churches are attending the meetings, and we hope to do some good. There does not seem to be any religious prejudice in Pueblo, but only a lack of interest and general indifference in religious matters. This is the vacation season, when many leave the city for a vacation and a general good time. This reminds me that I am not sure whether I have ever taken a vacation or not. I have had many good days and as much pleasure in life, perhaps, as I deserve, even if I have never taken what the world calls a "vacation."

I will write more of the work in Pueblo when I have better acquainted myself with conditions.

THE CHURCH WORK IN CHICAGO.

BY RUSSELL S. KING.

Brother F. L. Paisley, of Paducah, Ky., has just closed a two-weeks' meeting for the Central church of Christ in Chicago. Several members of the church of Christ who have moved from various portions of the country to Chicago took membership with the congregation during this meeting. There were no additions, but the brethren were encouraged and bound together more closely in brotherly love. At the present time we are trying hard to raise enough money to get Brother Paisley or some other good preacher to work for us next year. The cause of Christ is very weak in Chicago. We have no house to worship in, and we meet in a downtown hall for which we have to pay very high rent; but it is better to meet downtown, as the members that attend are scattered for about twenty-five miles north and south, and some of them seven or eight miles west. There is good train and elevated service from these parts of the city downtown.

Our biggest problem at the present time is to get the members that have moved from other places to take active part in our work. It is supposed there are, perhaps, one thousand people in Chicago that at one time were identified with the church of Christ, but since moving here have become careless in their duty. What we want to do is to find these people, visit them, and try to get them to become active in the work. This letter is written primarily to get the churches of Christ from the South, as well as the East and West, to send us the names and addresses of each and every person you know of that has moved to Chicago, as we are planning to make a call upon these people and see that they become active in church work, if possible. Do not put this off and say you will write some other time, but sit down and write to Russell S. King, Room 511, People's Gas Building, Chicago, Ill., giving the name and address of each person you know that is a member of the church and that is interested in primitive Christianity.

I would also be glad to hear from any church or individual who would be willing to make a monthly contribution, beginning the first of October and continuing for twelve months, to support a preacher in this great field. At the present time there are about one hundred members who are attending our services; but the most of them are young men and women that are barely making enough money to live on, therefore cannot be of much assistance in financing the work we want to do.

In addition to sending us the names and addresses of members of the church, I would suggest that you sit down and write every friend you have, urging them to attend our services in Room 309, Capitol Building, which is situated at the corner of Randolph and State Streets. It is just three blocks from Randolph Street Station, I. C. Interurban train, and just one block from Randolph Street Station of the elevated line. The street cars coming downtown issue transfers to other cars that pass by the corner. There are also bus lines from almost every part of the city reaching this corner or within a few blocks of it.

This is an urgent matter and needs your immediate attention. Chicago is a big city, and it is going to take sacrifice on the part of Christians to put the church on the basis where it belongs; so we are calling upon all loyal members everywhere to give us their support. I hope to hear from a great many as soon as you have read this article.

It is strange that we should neglect the large cities. There are more people in Chicago than in the whole State of Tennessee. Good judgment and common sense would seem to indicate that evangelists should be sent to where the most people are. This does not indicate, by any means, that we think the country and rural districts should be overlooked. The apostles, while not overlooking the country and small towns, made great efforts to plant the cause in the cities. The cities are radiating centers.

The brethren in Chicago lack some of being able to support an evangelist to preach publicly and from house to house every day in that great city. There are many single congregations that could furnish what the Chicago brethren lack. At most, two or three congregations should take up this work in a regular way. Write to Brother King at the address given.

I am personally acquainted with many, if not most, of the brethren in Chicago and with conditions there. An immense work is before us. Several evangelists should be kept going the year around. Not less than a hundred congregations should be planted in Chicago in the near future.

EVOLUTION TRIAL AT DAYTON.

BY J. H. ARROWOOD.

The great evolution trial at Dayton, Tenn., is over, and we are still here doing business in the name of the Lord at the same old stand. So far as the disciples of Christ at Dayton are concerned, we do not feel any the worse for having had it; for it has not only shown up the evolution side of the theory, but has also shown up the weakness of denominationalism. It proved very clearly to my mind that sectarianism is the hotbed of infidelity.

The great plea of the defense in the trial was that the Bible is subject to different construction or interpretation; that every man has the right to interpret it to suit himself; and when he does that, it is right, so far as he is concerned. That has virtually been the claim of the denominations all the while. The preachers of the different churches (denominations) of the town here and elsewhere seem to be nervous with fear that great harm will come to them as a result of the trial. But I have no fears for the disciples of Christ being affected by it, for we have been combating the evolution theory in religion since the beginning of the Restoration Movement—the same theory, plain and simple, the only difference being one in regard to the generation of man, and the other in regard to the regeneration of man. The whole get religion theory is an evolution theory, and to prove that fact I will recall to your minds an incident that happened years ago.

There was a very prominent preacher in Tennessee who, in order to make void (Acts 2: 38) the doctrine of baptism for (unto) remission of sins, cartooned a man down in the water with a goat in his arms. When he had dipped the goat into the water and brought him out, he was still a goat. And the denominations where I lived took that as the greatest argument put forth against what they called "Campbellism." (Acts 2: 38; Mark 16: 15, 16.) Now, I ask, what is in the theory in the cartoon? Just suppose the goat, after being dipped, had become a sheep? Would not that have been evolution from a lower to a higher class of animals? But the theory is that the goat is evolved into a sheep by some kind of divine touch of the Holy Ghost, and is then a fit subject for baptism. I am not able to see any difference between that and Darwinism.

I believe all the Bible is inspired of God, both the Old Testament and the New Testament, and I believe the record of the generation of man as given in the first and second chapters of Genesis is truth-God's truth. I also believe the record of the regeneration of man as given in the first and second chapters of Acts; and I think as much of the man who tries to make void the divine record as to the generation of man that is given in the first and second chapters of Genesis as I do of the man who tries to make void the divine record of the regeneration of man as given in the first and second chapters of Acts, for I am not able to see any difference.

I am not alarmed over the evolution trial nor the effect it may have on the disciples of Christ at Dayton, for we are not disturbed in the least about it. In all my preaching to the church here, I have admonished them to sit steady in the boat while the storm is raging and the waves rolling high, and not make the mistake Peter did when he left the ship to walk on the troubled waters of the Sea of Galilee, but abide in the ship—the church—and, above all, keep Jesus in the ship, and she will weather the gale and land us on the banks of sweet deliverance. So let us continue "steadfastly in the apostles' teaching and fellowship, in the breaking of bread and the prayers." (Acts 2: 42.)

Brother James A. Allen was with us during the week of the trial and preached for us each night. He did some fine preaching, and we feel edified by his preaching, for he imparted to us the gospel truth.

HONORABLE TITLES.

BY D. P. CRAIG.

Honorable titles and exalted positions among men go hand in hand. To many men, this is their exceeding great reward, notwithstanding the Messiah taught his disciples to call no man master, for they had only one leader and teacher, the Messiah, "and all ye are brethren." Many of the contemporaries of our Lord craved the uppermost seats in the synagogues and to be hailed by men, " Master, master." This I observe is a spirit which has been freely imbibed by the leaders of the popular forms of Christianity in modern times. They rather disown such titles by which the early disciples of the Master were known, and to be called "Doctor," "Reverend," "Right Reverend," "Father," etc., which are degrees conferred by old Doctor Antichrist. This because they love the praise of men more than the praise of God.

Occasionally some of my brethren have similar ambitions, and some things they practice are at least cousinsgerman to the above. Putting on expensive building campaigns and becoming settled pastors at handsome and luxurious salaries are quite common with a number of them. I thought they had learned that such things are the products of theological systems, born centuries ago in opposition to ancient and apostolic Christianity, when heathen philosophy, Judaism, and Christianity began to be compounded, after many of the institutions of Jesus were buried and forgotten. Yet men claiming to be gospel preachers will unearth these old popish skeletons and rear them in the midst of Christian tabernacles, in spite of the advice of the learned and judicious who have long since observed the fruit they bear. Since the old Doctor has persisted in conferring his degrees in an unbroken succession, and, like the bald-headed "Papa" at Rome, trembles for his reputation and ancient record, lest his perpetual chain should be broken or it should lose one of its precious lengths, it is very important that he safeguard his old distinctive marks-or the mark of the beast, shall we sav?

Recently in a newspaper clipping I was called "Reverend." Supposing that I gloried in such titles and submitted to them as sectarians do, a brother wrote me and asked what I did to get to be "Reverend," and how it affects a man when it comes on.

In substance I answered that I was not responsible for the ignorance or spirit that prompts "digressives" or sectarians to confer such high-sounding titles on a simple preacher of the gospel (and I hope this is all I aspire to be.) Had I been preaching all these years in that respective community, instead of "Rev." - and "Dr." -, these people would have long since learned that reverends and doctors of divinity are exceedingly apposite to the Jewish order of things and to the pomp of paganism as exhibited in the ecclesiastical orders of the day. Neither have I read that "Dr." James or the "Right Reverend" Peter preached the funeral sermon of "Reverend" Stephen. Consequently I trust I have imbibed more of the spirit of my Master and less of the mystic doctors of the

I want no distinguished name or fame, even should I be smart enough or pious enough to merit them. And since I realize that I am a very common potato in the vineyard of the Lord, being known to only a few congregations or churches of Christ, I choose to be called "brother" as Christ commands me; or if a man disdains to pay me this honor, I shall be satisfied with being called by my name—nothing more, nothing less. But, frankly, I had just as soon be called "God" as "Reverend"—that is, if I were a big preacher, like some men.

Having never had the degree of "Reverend" conferred upon me, so much coveted after by modern divines, I know not what process one must undergo to obtain it, or under what spell or charm one is immersed into when, as the brother says, "it comes on." Why this sectarian scribe presumed to call me "Reverend," I presume not to say. Perhaps he had a sufficient reason, though he did it without any authority or encouragement from me. If I were to risk a guess, it would be because of a false education upon his part.

If a man wishes to find out the magic feeling of such an influence, he may learn by asking those who have long been under the magic of its charms, who delight in being thus called, who own it and would feign spit in your face if they failed to receive it; but for my part, I reject it, and with stronger emphasis than those who crave to wear it. Let those be honored by it who make it the end of all their toil and care, but I have not so learned Christ. The reader will pardon my frequent use of the personal pronoun. This being a little experience of my own, I pass it on because of the lesson it might give to some.

ABRAHAMIC FAITH—WHAT IT IS, AND HOW WE MAY KNOW WE HAVE IT.

BY S. H. HALL.

I trust that every reader has well fixed in mind what we have thus far learned on this important subject. We have learned that Abrahamic faith is a faith that will believe cnything God says, regardless of the circumstances under which he has to believe it, and will do anything God says do, regardless of how difficult it may be to undertake to carry out Jehovah's instructions. Too, we have learned that the expression, "Abraham believed God," can mean nothing else than the disposition he made of a plain and simple statement God made to him, and that your and my believing God can mean nothing else than the disposition we make of a similar statement Christ has made to us. The specific statement that God made to Abraham was that he was to be blessed with a child when he was a hundred years old and his wife ninety. This was contrary to nature and looked unreasonable; hence, the only way Abraham could take hold of it was to have "faith that against hope believed in hope." In spite of this circumstance, he staggered not at God's promise, but was strong in faith, and glorified God by taking the decided stand that what God had promised he could and would perform, and therefore it was imputed unto him for righteousness. Go back to Gen. 15: 1-6 and read it. There can be no misunderstanding this if you halfway want the truth. Then turn to Rom. 4: 16-22 and read Paul's clear-cut explanation of this fact.

Now, I have some things I want to say that bring out one of the greatest sins of this age. Men are going all over this country preaching doctrines that forever forbid those who indorse and embrace them believing God, and thousands are led to believe that they are saved by "the faith of Abraham," when, in fact, instead of their having "the faith of Abraham," they have been led to disbelieve God instead of "believing God" as Abraham did. Are we not warned by our Lord against false prophets who come in sheep's clothing? (Matt. 7: 15.) The doctrine of "justification by faith only," taught by nearly all the man-made churches that exist and that millions of dollars are yearly spent to disseminate, instead of being "justification by faith," would be "justification in unbelief," and such a thing cannot be. It makes my soul sick when I think of the thousands deceived into the idea that they have the faith of Abraham, that they are justified by faith, when, instead of their having faith, they have the very opposite of what Abraham had. And sicker still do I become when I see those who know better make such a feeble effort to give the pure gospel to the nations of the earth. They that have the gospel and will not give it to the nations have just as poor a chance of heaven as they that have error and are giving it to the nations instead of the "truth of the gospel."

Now get this: The very moment Abraham believed God's own revelation as to how he would bless all nations in his seed, not that very moment did he obtain the promise. "Then Abraham fell upon his face, and laughed, and said in his heart, Shall a child be born unto him that is a hundred years old? and shall Sarah, that is ninety years old, bear? . . . And God said, Sarah thy wife shall bear thee a son indeed; and thou shalt call his name Isaac: and I will establish my covenant with him for an everlasting covenant, and with his seed after him. . . . Mv covenant will I establish with Isaac, which Sarah shall bear unto thee at this set time in the next year." (Gen. 17: 17-21.) If Abraham had believed that he must have the son "right now," the very moment he believed Jehovah's declaration, he would not have been believing God, for God did not say that. To believe God is to believe what God says. Teaching people a doctrine that God does not teach and getting them to believe it is not leading them to believe God. Paul speaks of Abraham: "After he had patiently endured, he obtained the promise." (See Heb. 6: 15.) God's promise to Abraham was that, in spite of his old age, a son should come from his own loins according to the law of procreation, and that the child would be born at a set time the following year. To take the how this son was to come and the time he was to come out of God's statement and try to make Abraham believe that he must expect the son right now, or by faith only, would have been to try to make Abraham cease to believe God and believe something God did not say. This you know.

But look at the others who believed God just as Abraham did, and you see the same fact. God told Moses to tell the children of Israel who had been bitten by fiery serpents that it would certainly come to pass that if those thus bitten would look at the serpent of brass Moses put on a pole, they would live. God said that, and those people could not have believed God without believing that. Now suppose some one had at once arisen and said to the Israelites: "You must not expect the healing to be done when you look; you must expect it to come by faith only; the very moment you believe God's statement, that moment you will be healed, then look because you are healed." And had the people believed that, would they have been believing God? Most certainly not, for God did not say that, and the last one of them would have died. God said the healing will come when you look. There was a set time for the healing, and to take this time out is to change the statement altogether.

And now look again and see how and when the walls of Jericho fell down. God said for them to walk around the walls once each day for six days, go around seven times on the seventh day, then blow the trumpets and shout, and the walls would fall flat before them. To believe God was to believe this, for he said this. But soppose some one had arisen and said to Joshua and his army: "You must expect the walls to fall by faith only, and the walking must come after they are down; or, in other words, the moment you believe what God has said to us, the walls will come down, then go around because they are down." But the very moment Joshua and his army were led to expect the walls to fall before they went around them as directions stated, that very moment would Joshua and his army have been led to disbelieve God, for God said no such a thing as that. There is a time fixed in the statement Jehovah made for the walls to fall; and when you take this out, you have changed God's statement, and believing the changed statement is not believing God. "By faith the walls of Jericho fell down, after they were compassed about seven days." (Heb. 11: 12.) To make souls expect the promise before obedience is rendered is to make them disbelieve God. Most certainly the blessing and promise cannot come in unbelief.

Now take our Lord's statement to aliens to-day. In Mark 16: 15, 16 he says to his apostles: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." How can I believe Christ and refuse to believe this? preachers change it and teach the sinner to believe that "he that believeth and is saved may be baptized," and get souls to believe this, that soul is not believing Christ, for Christ said no such a thing. We showed beyond question, last week, that this statement of our Lord is the statement that we must believe in order to exercise "the faith of Abraham," or "walk in the steps of that faith" that Abraham had. Read it again in Gal. 3: 26-29, where Paul refers to the Galatians' being baptized into Christ as his reason for knowing that they were justified by faith and that this faith made them "Abraham's seed." Why will preachers and teachers strive so hard to change Jehovah's statement? It is just because it looks unreasonable to them that we should expect remission of sins in the act of baptism. But how much more unreasonable is this than that Abraham should have a son when he was a hundred years old and his wife ninety? No, they want to walk by human reason rather than by faith. May God ever help me to walk by faith and, Abrahamlike, never stagger at anything my Lord says.

Is it not sad that the burden of practically all the preaching and teaching done by such large bodies as the Baptists, Methodists, and Presbyterians, as well as others, on Mark 16: 15, 16, is to try to make people disbelieve what our Lord, in fact, did say and believe, instead of their perversion of it? And such faith is not "the faith of Abraham." How sorely we need to arise, in the name of our Lord, and flood this country, by tongue and pen, with the pure word of God, that the doctrines of men may deceive the honest-hearted seeker no longer!

GOOD GENERALSHIP IN PREACHING.

BY PRICE BILLINGSLEY.

Wise and good gospel preachers are quick to take advantage of a pleasing and correct manner in presenting the truth. The word loses none of its force, but rather is enhanced, in being presented in a restrained and kindly way. It goes without saying that unmixed truth of the gespel must be spoken; this alone saves. But loyalty to truth is no right synonym of lovelessness; one does not prove himself true thereto by being graceless and insulting. A sword thrust delivered with a smile is far more disconcerting than where sent home with a frown. Even Satan, who insinuates himself into the heart to sinister ends, transforms himself into an angel of light, and we are commanded to be as wise as serpents and harmless as doves. An excellent spirit must animate the speaker, else it were infinitely better that he remain silent. A grievous disservice can be rendered the cause of the Master, even when the word is spoken, through its being delivered in a bad spirit. Silly manners and dogmatic or sarcastic spirit in the preacher can render the word of God of none effect. To speak in any spirit save that of meekness and fear and love, showing compassion for the sinner while hating the sin, is to err and invite the Lord's certain displeasure.

The following passages, though presenting only one side of this matter, no true man will disregard, though we sometimes see selfish men with good words and fair speeches deceiving the hearts of the simple: "The servant of the Lord must not strive; but be gentle unto all men, apt to teach, patient, in meekness instructing those that oppose themselves." "Speaking the truth in love." "Restore such a one in the spirit of meekness, considering thyself." "Let your moderation be known unto all men." "Showing all merkness unto all men." "Beseech by the meekness and gentleness of Christ." "With all long-suffering and doctrine." "We persuade men." "Commending ourselves to every man's conscience in the sight of God." "The words of the pure are pleasant words." "Sweet to the soul and health to the bones." "By mercy and truth iniquity is purged." "A soft tongue breaketh the bone." "Words of the wise are heard in quiet more than the cry of him that ruleth among fools." "Reproof that shall not break the head."

Christ was the most adroit Teacher men ever knew. His gospel was revolutionary, upsetting the established order, forcing everybody who heard it either to accept or despise it, its mild-seeming precepts being high explosives. Yet he never unnecessarily aroused the opposition, but rather used every favoring circumstance and bent of the public mind to further his cause and plant his word in the heart. What an example for us to-day! We who preach that word must set the world by the ears and rudely disturb the peace; we have no choice else. Yet, if wise, we will not try to render it more offensive by a boorish manner, just as, if true, we will not, out of overtender regard for men, try to soften or break its force. In faithfully preaching it, it is the will of God that we study to present it as appealingly and winsomely and as little oppositionstirring as possible. Have I myself been unduly severe in preaching? It is a grave fault, which I would correct. I would be more winsome! Let me be kind to those in error! I am persuaded we should never attempt to set men free of wrong till first we have made them sure we love them. Proved love alone can make a reproof stick; thus we lead and save the lost. Let us never through unwisdom close hearts which we can hold open to the word of life, or by an uncouth or spiteful manner shut doors which with wisdom and compassion we may hold open.

NELSON COMPLETE CONCORDANCE

To the

American Standard Bible

By M. C. HAZARD, Ph.D.

A concordance is a word-finder—an index to the words in the Bible designed to increase your knowledge of what the Bible contains by enabling you to find easily any word, verse, or subject in the Bible.

This new Concordance, by Dr. M. C. Hazard, is the first Complete Concordance ever issued to the American Standard Version of the Bible—the most accurate version of the Holy Scriptures in the English language.

Five years have been occupied in its completion, during which time the editor and publishers have had constantly in mind the problems of the Bible student. - the cause of Christ."

  Dr. W. Boyd, Donelson, Tenn., July 23: "J. Pettey Ezell, of Cookeville, Tenn., closed an eleven-days' meeting at Donelson last night. He is earnest, clear, sound, and bold in his preaching. One remarkable thing in this meeting, from first to last, was the gradual increase of interest. The attendance every afternoon was better than the preceding one until it grew to about one hundred, which is very fine for this place. There were eight baptisms. Every one, save one, demanded baptism 'the same hour,' and that one was baptized the same day. One was restored. It was indeed a fine meeting, and we expect much good to follow. Brother Ezell is a strong preacher, a fine worker among the members, a great lover of children, and, in our judgment, well qualified in every way to do good and successful work wherever he may labor. He is excelled by few, if any. E. H. Ijams, of David Lipscomb College, will preach at Donelson on the first Lord's day in August, day and night."

H. A. Brown, Gainesboro, Tenn., July 20: "I have just closed an eight-days' meeting at Cub Creek, in Jackson County with thirty added to the church at that place. I will go to West Tennessee for several meetings, beginning at Alwood next Sunday."

M. D. Baumer, Carthage, Tenn., July 12: "I preached in the Presbyterian church house at Gordonsville, Smith County, on Lord's-day afternoon. Seven members began regular meeting there. Four others will meet with them. I hope to be with them again on August 2."

I came to Freemont to begin last night, but was rained out, so will begin this afternoon. I am to go to Bethel, near Hornbeak, next Lord's day."

- E. E. Shoulders, New York, N. Y., July 20: "The proper address of the church here is 226 West Fifty-eight Street—not 226 West One Hundred and Sixty-second Street. Yesterday was our fifth anniversary day of the New York church. We dispensed with the regular sermon and had talks by different ones, which were to the point of living a better and closer life with our blessed Lord. Do not forget the New York work."
- J. M. Tucker, 1608 West North Avenue, Chicago, Ill., July 20: "F. L. Paisley, of Paducah, Ky., began a meeting for the church of Christ here, in Room 309, Capitol Building, State and Randolph Streets, July 5, and continued it until the evening of July 19. Five placed membership with the church. Two of these said they had been negligent and wished to renew their allegiance to the Lord. Brother Paisley did some fine preaching. He is a great admirer of the Gospel Advocate."

Will J. Cullum, Livingston, Tenn., July 25: "On the night of July 6 we began a meeting, with S. H. Hall doing the preaching. It has always been hard to get a hearing at Livingston, but from the beginning (with the exception of two nights) the tent was filled to overflowing; in fact, we were able to seat the immense crowds at night, and the day audiences averaged about one hundred and fifty. Visible results, four baptisms. I shall begin a tent meeting at Flat Creek to-morrow."

H. D. Jeffcoat, Ackerman, Miss., July 20: "The meeting at Tilden closed on Friday night, with a large crowd and much interest. We promised to go back for two weeks next July. We are now at old Spring Hill, in Benton County. Three services yesterday, with dinner on the ground. Large crowds. We go to Red Hill next Lord's day for a week, then to Ford's Well on the first Lord's day in August. Claud Williams, of Houston, Miss., our song leader, is doing his part well."

Harvey W. Riggs, Hardyville, Ky., Route 1, July 18: "We closed the tent meeting near Three Springs, Ky., on July 14, with three additions and one restored. We really hoped for more results to come from our efforts in the Master's service there. That little band, led by E. H. Smith, a plain, sincere, hard-working Christian and farmer, is truly faithful and loyal. Each man or boy will lead in public prayer. Here with the Fairview Church since July 15. We are having good audiences and interest. Yesterday two rural schools were present in charge of their teachers, and we had a splendid service. We want to make a good offering to-morrow for the China mission work."

R. A. Craig, Shelbyville, Ky., July 20: "The writer, with A. B. Barret, of Fayetteville, Tenn., assisting, plans to hold a revival in Frankfort, Ky., in August, to continue three weeks. Frankfort, the capital of Kentucky, is situated in the heart of the blue-grass region, being thirty miles from Lexington, thirty-six miles from Paris, and forty-six miles from Winchester. For a number of years I have given my time to this section of Kentucky, evangelizing in needy places; and having looked into the Frankfort situation, I feel that there is no field that needs the gospel more than does this one, there being no church there after the New Testament pattern. This part of Kentucky is the great battlefield where McGarvey, Lard, Smith, Rogers, Grubbs, Stone, Campbell, and others faithful to the cross wielded the sword of the Spirit; but—alas!—their work has almost sunk into oblivion. The great school at Lexington has been taken over by the higher critics; boys and girls are being robbed of their simple faith in the word of God; no longer is the Bible respected in this once great institution of learning. So we few Christians who are making a stand for the primitive order of things are going into the enemy camp to restore the ancient order of the church. To do this, we must have the cooperation of the churches that stand foursquare on the word. We must put on a campaign of advertising which will reach every home in Frankfort. This means that we must distribute circulars, placard windows, and stretch banners across the streets. Then, too, we must keep a good 'ad.' running daily in the papers. So we are asking the churches to assist us in this great campaign for the Lord by making a liberal donation to this meeting. We believe that there is every indication of the possibility of planting the cause in Frankfort, there being a number of brethren there who go to the country for worship, and there are others who have stated that they long to return to the truth. Please ponder seriously this appeal and send all donations to R.

PHARISAISM.

BY E. A. ELAM.

We should heed the admonition of Jesus: "Beware ye of the leaven of the Pharisees, which is hypocrisy."

He said this to his disciples, and he said do this "first of all."

He further says: "But"-whether or not this admonition is heeded-"there is nothing covered up, that shall not be revealed; and hid, that shall not be known." (Luke 12: 1-3.)

Sooner or later every form of hypocrisy, by whomsoever practiced, will come to light; for God says: "And be sure your sins will find you out." (Num. 32: 33.)

The Lord solemnly warns against the deceitfulness of sin (Heb. 3: 12, 13), and hypocrisy is the very essence of deception. The New Testament shows that some who profess to serve God as Christians only are self-deceived and deceive others.

Then it is most necessary to obey Jesus in bewaring of "the leaven of the Pharisees."

The Pharisees were the most numerous and most "orthodox" religious sect among the Jews. They believed in angels, spirits, and the resurrection, and in this were opposed to the Sadducees, another religious sect. Paul was a Pharisee. (Acts 23: 6-8.) They were scrupulous and punctilious as to outward forms, but paid little regard to purity of heart and life. They with the Sadducees strongly opposed Christ. They tithed "mint and anise and cummin," and "left undone the weightier matters of the law, justice, and mercy, and faith." They should have done the former, but should not have neglected the latter. As it was, they were "blind guides." They strained out the gnat and swallowed the camel. (Matt. 23: 23, 24.) They were great critics, faultfinders, and exacting in telling others what to do; but they said, and did not. They presented a beautiful outward appearance, made long public prayers and great pretensions, but in heart were full of extortion, excess, and rottenness. They were filled with all uncleanness, corruption, iniquity, and hypocrisy. They split hairs over theories, liked chief seats in meetings, sought to be considered the greatest in the kingdom of heaven, and loved religious titles. With all this, they were zealous for their own righteousness. while living in disobedience to God. They were intensely missionary, compassing sea and land to make one convert, making him at the same time "twofold more a child of hell [Gehenna] than "themselves.

Study Jesus' exposition and denunciation of the hypocrisy and corruption of the Pharisees in. Matt. 23.

A LESSON FOR THE CHURCH.

There is such a thing now as being church members nominally, or pretended Christians, and even professed guides of the blind, lights to those in darkness, teachers of babes, and instructors of the ignorant (Rom. 2: 17-23); and yet, with all these pretensions and professions, there is such a thing as being "lovers of self, lovers of money, boastful, haughty, railers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, implacable, slanderers, without self-control, fierce, no lovers of good, traitors, headstrong, puffed up, lovers of pleasure rather than lovers of God;" and while all this, "holding a form of godliness, but having denied the power thereof." These, says Paul, are "ever learning, and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth," "take captive silly women laden with sins, led away by divers lusts." Tim. 3: 1-7.) What can be the difference between these and the Pharisees, except the Pharisees may have been more moral? One person cannot be all these bad things at once, but any one of them is bad enough in a pretended teacher and leader.

There can be nothing more pharisaical than to split hairs over various theories and to neglect justice and mercy and faith; than to make laws where God has made none, while disobeying some he has made; than to hold "a form of godliness," while denying the power thereof.

The "power of godliness" is the transformation it makes in one's own heart and life-godliness in one's own character; mercy, justice, uprightness, purity, truth, and love; also, hatred of evil and wrongdoing anywhere and in any one. Jesus loved righteousness and hated iniquity. (Heb. 11: 8, 9:)
One's "logical deductions" are far more binding on some

than the teaching of the New Testament. The Pharisees by some process of logic had drawn the conclusion and had made the law that to "swear by the temple" is nothing, but to "swear by the gold of the temple" is binding. But Jesus says they were blind and fools.

Are not some theories and contentions to-day as foolish? Are not some who make such contentions as blind?

I cannot undertake and am not able to specify various instances of pharisaism. But saying, and doing not, is one: binding burdens upon others, while doing nothing to lighten them, is another; forever criticizing and finding fault, while not setting a proper example, is another; seeking religious titles of any sort is another; seeking prominence and boasting and self-exaltation is still another. A vast amount of pharisaism can be sifted out by studying and especially by practicing 2 Tim. 3: 1-7. Think a while on "lovers of self," "lovers of money," "boastful," "haughty," "railers," "slanderers," "no lovers of good," "without self-control," "silly women laden with sins," "lovers of pleasure rather than lovers of God;" and yet all these are pretending to learn and to teach the truth! In some places such teachers seem more popular than the humble, meek, modest, truly pure, and sincerely goodly ones. But the Lord knows all who are his.

In vain, it seems, one quotes that which Jesus so strongly teaches against wearing religious titles, seeking chief seats in the synagogues, being anxious for salutations in public places, and striving to be the greatest in the kingdom. It is easy enough to teach that in order to be great one must be a servant, or that the servant of all is the greatest of all, but it is not so easy to practice it. Teaching and practice are two different things.

"QUESTIONS FOR COOPER."

BY F. W. SMITH.

Under the above heading there appeared in the Nashville Banner, July 1, the following list of questions by Atha Hardy to Noah W. Cooper:

As the Hon. Noah W. Cooper is keeping the wires hot with questionnaires, perhaps it would not be amiss to ask him a few questions:

1. Paul, in Rom. 14: 5, says: "One man esteemeth one day above another: another esteemeth every day alike. Let every man be fully persuaded in his own mind." And in Col. 2: 16 Paul says: "Let no man therefore judge you in meat, or in drink, or in respect of a holy day, or of the new moon, or of the Sabbath days." As Mr. Cooper neither helioves in nor practices the photographs of the world ther believes in nor practices the above portion of the word of God, could he tell us why?

2. The Bible says: "That which befalleth the sons of men befalleth beasts: as the one dieth, so dieth the other; yea, they all have one breath; so that a man hath no pre-minence above a beast." (Eccles. 3: 19.) Does Mr. Cooper believe this? If so, he goes farther than those yicked scientists who say that man descended from a least, but is not one now.

3. Does Mr. Cooper believe that the earth has four corners, as the word of God states? (Rev. 7: 1.) Or does he believe the earth to be round, as the wicked scientists

4. Solomon (Eccles. 9: 5), Isaiah (26: 14), and Job (7: 9) all state that there is no life after death: Do you Do you believe this portion of God's word, Brother Cooper?

5. According to Gen. 1: 20, 21, the fowls of the air were nade of water, but according to Gen. 2: 19 the fowls were nade out of the ground. Could Brother Cooper tell us which is correct?

6. Gen. 7: 2, 3 states that the clean beasts went into the ark by sevens, but Gen. 7: 8, 9 says the clean beasts went into the ark by two and two. Now, Brother Cooper, did the clean beasts go into the ark by twos or by sevens? Of course, you know.
7 God's word says the sun goes around the earth. (Eccles 1: 50.) Do you believe this?

8 The Scriptures say that the earth is stationary. (Ps. 93:1; 96: 10; 104: 5). Now, Brother Cooper, do you believe the above portion of the word of God, or do you again side with those wicked scientists?

9. As there is so much of the Bible that you do not believe Brother Cooper, do you not consider you all the sisteit to insist on all others believing literally all the ATHA HARDY. lieve Brother Cooper, do you not consider yourself incon-

Asyen Hill, Tenn., Route 2.

While the Gospel Advocate holds no brief for Mr. Cooper and does not wish to appear in the rôle of his defender, yet it will, because of the general interest in and the relation of Mr. Hardy's questions to the subject of relgion, give them some notice.

Ou friend evidently thought he was propounding to Mr.  $\phi$ ooper some "unanswerable" questions, and questions that would knock the Bible, as a divinely inspired book and an infallible guide in religion, into smithereens. It is painfully true, however, that, with Mr. Cooper's view of tle Jewish Sabbath, he cannot sustain his position in the light of the quotations regarding the keeping of days submtted by Mr. Hardy; but with the proper division and aplication of the word of God, Mr. Hardy's question No. 1 preents no difficulty at all.

he Jewish Sabbath with its restrictions was abrogated in he death of Christ, a thing that Mr. Cooper seems never to lave learned, and Paul was showing that while no one was commanded to keep any day "holy," yet any Christianis at liberty to so regard any day as such to himself. The disciples met together on the first day of the week to eat he Lord's Supper and perform other acts of worship (Act 20: 7), but were never commanded to keep the first day f the week as the Jews kept Saturday (Acts 20: 7; 1 Co. 16: 1, 2). Mr. Cooper or any one else can regard any ay "holy" to himself, but he must not seek to bind such in another. However, the Lord's day should not be madea holiday, but a day of religious service.

In question No. 2, Mr. Hardy seems to think that the Bible classes man in his death with the beasts of the field. That's true regarding man's body and the breath of animal life, for in this respect the bodies of man and beast are both mortal and return to the dust whence they came, But Jesus Christ asked his disciples a question that shows the preëminence of man over the beast-viz.: "What man shall there be of you, that shall have one sheep, and if this fall into a pit on the Sabbath day, will he not lay hold on it, and lift it out? How much then is a man of more value than a sheep!" (Matt. 12: 11, 12.) Again: "Fear not therefore: ye are of more value than many (Matt. 10: 31.) In what sense, then, and sparrows." why, is man of more value than the beasts of the field in both life and death? (1) Because of his creation. "What is man, that thou art mindful of him? and the son of man, that thou visitest him? For thou hast made him but little lower than God, and crownest him with glory and honor. Thou makest him to have dominion over the works of thy hands; thou hast put all things under his feet: all sheep and oxen, yea, and the beasts of the field, the birds of the heavens, and the fish of the sea, whatsoever passeth through the paths of the seas." (Ps. 8: 4-8.) In life man was given the lordship of the earth because of his superiority to all other created beings, because he was created in the "image," of God, possessing attributes akin to the infinite Father. (Gen. 1: '26-28.) Man alone, of all earth's inhabitants, has the power to reason, a thing that has been demonstrated over and over again. (2) Man is at least a dual being, possessing a body and a soul; and while his body, like that of the beast, returns to the dust, his "soul" will continue to exist through all eternity as a conscious entity. "And these shall go away into eternal punishment: but the righteous into-eternal life." (Matt. 25:46.)

In question No. 3, Mr. Hardy wishes to know if Mr. Cooper believes the earth has four corners. Of course, Mr. Cooper, Mr. Hardy, and Mr. Everybody Else believes that in the sense in which it is used in the Bible, for they are constantly using in their speech the four points of the compass-viz., north, south, east, and west.

Question No. 4 deals with life after death, and the answer is: No, there is no animal life of man after death any more than there is of the beast. But the inner man, the soul, continues to exist.

In question No. 5, Mr. Hardy betrays a lack of sober thought that is absolutely surprising. Gen. 1: 20, 21 does not state that the fowls were made of water, and our friend evidently misread the record, which is as follows: "And God said, Let the waters swarm with swarms of living creatures, and let birds fly above the earth in the open firmament of heaven. And God created the great sea monsters, and every living creature that moveth, where with the waters swarmed, after their kind, and every winged bird after its kind: and God saw that it was good." Now, what is there in these scriptures to sustain Mr. Hardy in his efforts to discredit the Bible? He should be more particular before rushing into print with his lack of a knowledge of the plain statements of the Bible. But in this he is like all the learned (?) scientists who discredit the Bible-viz., ignorant of the simple statements of holy Question No. 6 leaves Mr. Hardy in no better attitude toward a knowledge of the Bible than does his question No. 5. He "thinks" he sees a contradiction in the Bible narrative regarding the beasts entering the ark. Here is the record; "Of every clean beast thou shalt take to thee seven and seven, the male and his female; and of the beasts that are not clean two, the male and his female: of the birds also of the heavens, seven and seven, male and female, to keep seed alive upon the face of all the earth. For yet seven days, and I will cause it to rain upon the earth forty days and forty nights; and every living thing that I have made will I destroy from off the face of the ground. And Noah did according unto all that Jehovah commanded him. And Noah was six hundred years old when the flood of waters was upon the earth. And Noah went in, and his sons, and his wife and his sons' wives with him, into the ark, because of the waters of the flood. Of clean beasts, and of beasts that are not clean, and of birds, and of everything that creepeth upon the ground, there went in two and two unto Noah into the ark, male and female, as God commanded Noah." Now, any one can see at a glance that in verses 2 and 3 God is giving Noah directions concerning the "number" and "kind" of animals to take into the ark, while the record of their "entering" the ark is not given until we reach verse 9. If Mr. Hardy will read and study the Bible instead of the writings of infidel scientists, he will keep himself out of the public prints with such a list of questions as he has propounded to Mr. Cooper. But I dare say his knowledge of the Bible is on a par with that of the big lawyers that defended Mr. Scopes.

In question No. 7, Mr. Hardy thinks he finds a contradiction of the revolutions of the earth around the sun, but no such contradiction exists. The Bible was not written to teach either geology or astronomy, and much of its language is accommodated to to the ideas and customs of the people. Why does Mr. Hardy himself say the sun "rises" and "sets?" Because to him it so appears, and he will so write and speak. But, in reality, does Eccles. 1: 5 sustain Mr. Hardy's charge? Adam Clarke, a most learned commentator and translator of the Bible, states that "all the versions agree in applying the first clause of the sixth verse to the sun, and not to the wind. Our version alone has mistaken the meaning." Commenting on Eccles. 1: 5, 6, Clarke says: "It is plain, from the clause which I have restored to the fifth verse, that the author refers to the approximations of the sun to the northern and southern tropics-viz., of Cancer and Capicorn. . . . annual course through the twelve signs of the zodiac, when, from the equinoctial, he proceeds southward to the tropic of Capricorn; and thence turneth about toward the north, till he reaches the tropic of Cancer; and so on."

Mr. Hardy, in question No. 8, finds as he supposes, a statement that the earth is "stationary;" but, unfortunately for his hunt for contradictions in the Bible, the passages he submits do not sustain his contention. There is a vast difference between the word "established" in the passages cited and the word "stationary" used by Mr. Hardy. The Psalmist refers to the order of the world and the laws which control it when he says: "The world also is established, that it cannot be moved." God has so established or fixed the material world and its laws that naught can be disarranged by the power and wisdom of man. All that man can accomplish with his inventions must be done in harmony with some fixed law of God.

WHO THEN CAN BE SAVED? BY F. B. SRYGLEY.

In the Apostolic Review of June 23 there appeared the following apology made by Brother L. E. Ketcherside:

Dear Brother Sommer: In reference to my statement in the Review of 9th inst., I think I owe the Review managers an apology, as well as the faithful disciples of Indianapolis. I should have given more attention to the Church Directory before writing the statement that I wrote. It was simply through neglect that I did not do so. I sincerely ask the forgiveness of the Review managers and publishers for any heartaches resulting from my article, and will try to be more careful hereafter.

The statement for which the brother so graciously apologizes to the managers and publishers of the Review was to the effect that there was only one congregation of disciples in Indianapolis, and for that statement the Review called the brother's attention to the fact that, according to the Church Directory furnished by the Review, there were two congregations in the city—one on the North Side and the other on the East Side. It was perfectly natural that Brother Ketcherside should feel like making this apology, since he had contradicted the Church Directory furnished by the only loyal Review. It would be too bad for Brother Ketcherside to get out of harmony with anything which this paper publishes, as it is the only paper that is entirely right all the time. According to the Review Directory, the brother was simply mistaken about the number of "faithful disciples" there are in the large city of Indianapolis, but I see no occasion for any great heartache over the matter. Of course, it is always better to be accurate, but even two congregations of faithful disciples in a city the size of Indianapolis is nothing to boast of, especially as it has been the home of the only loyal paper in the world, so far as I know. The Review has, no doubt, converted some people to its theory of withdrawing from every disciple as a "new digressive" who even believes that he might teach or be taught in a Bible school. It seems like it will take the Review some time to convert the world at its present progress. In the apology to the publishers and managers the brother further deposes as follows:

I sometimes wonder if I am too enthusiastic in my effort to urge the brotherhood to greater activity. But when I see the zeal of the enemies of the cross of Christ and the comparative unconcernedness of my own brethren, I cannot refrain from weeping. When I think of the zeal of our erring brethren of the South in contrast with our good brethren of the North, it is saddening to me indeed. My heart is indeed heavy for Israel.

No, brother, I do not think you are too zealous in urg ing "the brotherhood to greater activity;" but I think you are too inconsistent in opposing the teaching of the Bibe and other things through a Bible school founded by min and favoring the teaching of the Bible and other things through the Review, founded by Benjamin Franklin.

The brother says: "When I see the zeal of the enemies of the cross of Christ and the comparative unconcerredness of my own brethren, I cannot refrain from weepig." Dry your eyes, brother, and look the situation squarely in the face. May it not be your inconsistency above referred to that has dried up the zeal of those whomyou call your "own brethren?" Does the brother mean that every one is an enemy of the cross of Christ who doe not bow to the inconsistency of the Review and its admiers? If so, there are many enemies, and "my own brcherhood" is a slim crowd without much zeal or anythin; else to commend them to these enemies of the cross of Crist.

The brother is very sad when he sees the zeal d his "erring brethren of the South in contrast with ourgood brethren of the North." Why does he think his brethren of the North are such good brethren, while his brethren of the South are erring brethren? It cannot be that his brethren of the North are good because they are lacking in zeal; neither can his Southern brethren he erring brethren because they do not preach the gospel, for many of them do. The brother may not be willing to give the real reason, but, as it seems to me from this distance, the reason is, these Southern brethren will not bow to the inconsistency of the Review and its admirers.

This apology made by Brother Kethcherside led Brotler C. W. Sommer, the office editor of the Review, to follow the example of Brother Ketcherside and also make an apology in these words:

It is a rare thing that Brother Ketcherside has one, and we honor him for it. He has acknowledged a misake (and a mistake it was even though it was through nisinformation) without any attempt to justify himself. Then we, in attempting to correct that mistake, male a statement that's misleading, and we'll follow his example in acknowledging it. We said there were two congagations in the Church Directory, and that two other asemblies have sprung up of recent years, leaving the impression there were four loyal congregations. Well, there are only two we count as loyal; the other two, however are the result of these other congregations' upholding the New Testament church so strongly that these two felt constrained to move to themselves where they could have what they desired in the way of teachers and teaching. In the sense of separating "the sheep from the goats," we consider we've been at work; but we plead guilty to the charge that we've not done what we could have done.

It was very careless to make the impression that these assemblies that had sprung up of recent years are loyal, when they claimed the right to "have what they desired in the way of teachers." I think the brother has inadvertently given the thing away. These brethren would not allow the Review to select all the preachers for them, and, of course, they could not be loyal in Brother Sommer's estimation. Brother Sommer's statement agrees with the facts as stated by one who is familiar with the two assemblies that Brother Sommer says he does not count as loyal. This witness testifies as follows:

The "other two assemblies" did not pull off, but began the work, and because they would not bow to the rule of the Sommers and the Review they are "branded" as "unloyal" and "new digressives." These two congregations are as true to the New Testament as any congregations I know anything about.

It will be noted that this brother says "these two congregations are as true to the New Testament as any I know anything about." Therefore, they are not disloyal to the New Testament, but to the Review; and it seems that, in the estimation of C. W. Sommer, to be disloyal to the Review is to be disloyal indeed. But these two loyal congregations in Indianapolis have separated "the sheep from the goats." I suppose the brother here takes his figure from that eternal separation that will take place in the great judgment day. This almost sounds like the anathema of Rome to me. If a congregation in Indianapolis dares to select a teacher outside of what has been called the "Review family," he must stand on the left hand with the goats! There was no chance here for repentance, for the Judge had decided the question and made the eternal separation. This would really be amusing if it were not so serious. It is strange how far a man's prejudice will lead him. If this is a fair sample of the domination of the Review, I congratulate these brethren in their escape from it. The thing for these brethren to do is to go right on preaching the gospel and practicing its precepts and pay as little attention as possible to the anathemas of the Apostolic Review, as nearly everybody else is doing.

WORD FROM WASHINGTON. BY T. B. LARIMORE.

The Library of Congress is next on our list of public buildings in Washington, it being the fourth and last of the buildings in the Capitol group. I hesitate to attempt to describe the Library, for I cannot appropriately picture in words the beauty of its interior. It surasses in that respect all other public buildings in the capital, and, it is said, no building in the world surpasses it in beauty. The decorations are all the work of American architects, painters, and sculptors; hence, we have especial reason for appreciating its marvelous beauty.

Its grounds adjoin the grounds of the Capitol, the Library being east of the southern extension of the Capitol and about five hundred yards from it. The building is not remarkable for its size in this city of big buildings, although it covers three and a half acres of space, set in the midst of ten acres of ground, is three stories in height, and has more than eight acres of floor space. Nor does it rival the Capitol in exterior beauty and impressiveness, although it is a handsome structure of white New Hampshire granite, its third story surmounted by a huge black copper dome, the panels of which are covered with gold leaf. It represents an outlay, including the grounds, of about seven million dollars.

The building consists of a great central rotunda, inclosed in a parallelogram of halls and galleries, with square pavilions, or towers, in the corners. Four open courts in the space inclosed furnish light and ventilation to the rotunda in the center and to the galleries and pavilions inclosing it. It is said to be the best-lighted library building in the world, having nearly two thousand windows.

The approaches and entrance to the building are on the western front, facing the Capitol, where a grand staircase on either side leads to a wide facade, or esplanade. Below this esplanade, on the street level, is a fountain, representing the Court of Neptune, its broad, semicircular basin containing the bronze figure of the fabled sea god, surrounded by Tritons, sea nymphs, and other denizens of the deep, jets of water from their horns or mouths catching the sunlight from every angle.

From this front esplanade, or open porch, a broad flight of steps leads to the three entrance arches of the front, the bronze doors of which deserve attention, embodying the development of recorded knowledge from its earliest dawn to the modern preservation of history, science, and truth by the art of printing.

Entering the corridor, or vestibule, along the west front, is like being ushered suddenly into a fairy land of the imagination—a bewildering vista of gleaming white marble piers and Corinthian columns, floors of beautifully colored mosaic, and ceilings richly ornamented in gold and harmonious colors. The building is peculiar in this respect: the walls, columns, and piers are nearly all of purest white, and the colors are shown in the mosaic floors and in the allegorical and historical figures on the ceilings and above the arches and doorways, done in exquisite coloring.

Arches lead from the vestibule to the central Stair Hall, which has been designated as "a vision in polished marble." Here great staircases of white marble on each side lead to the balcony above. The Hall rises seventy-two feet to the vaulted ceiling below the skylight, presenting an indescribable vision of shining white columns and richly ornamented arches and ceilings above the balconies that border the Hall.

A lobby leads from this central hall to the Reading Room-an octagon-shaped room one hundred feet in diameter and rising one hundred and twenty-five feet to the inner ceiling of the dome that crowns the building. In this room the white marble so much in evidence in other parts of the building gives place to soft shades of yellow, brown, and red, the columns being of red Numidian marble, resting on bases of brown Tennessee stone, the arches of Sienna marble. The room is fitted with two hundred desks and chairs for readers, arranged in a semicircle, and with rows of cases for cards containing the names of authors and titles of books. Space in the center of the room is occupied by the issue desk for the use of the attendants who bring from the book stacks in the adjoining galleries and corridors books requested by readers. Books can ordinarily be delivered to readers in about five minutes after the request has been handed in. Electric book carriers connect the issue desk with the north and south book stacks, and an electric book carrier runs through a tunnel twelve hundred feet long connecting the Capitol with the Library, the passage taking only three minutes.

No visitors are allowed on the Reading Room floor, it being for readers only, and one thousand can be accommodated in the various reading rooms and alcoves. Not less than three thousand, it is said, visit the Library daily. By ascending to the second gallery above, visitors can look down and have a good view of the reading room.

The Library of Congress is not a circulating library, but is what its name indicates—a working library for members of Congress, and also for others who go there to read or consult books on various subjects.

Opening on the corridor extending south from the central hall is a large reading room reserved for the use of Representatives, and no room of the Library is more lavishly and sumptuously ornamented; and just beyond it, occupying the southwest pavilion, is the Senate reading room, also a handsomely ornamented room. These rooms are not open to visitors except as a special privilege.

The Periodical Room, or Public Reading Room, occupies a great hall extending along the south side of the building, and is entered from the south corridor. It contains newspapers from all parts of the United States and from many foreign countries, and also a great supply of weekly and monthly periodicals. The newspapers are conveniently arranged on racks, and readers can readily find the latest available edition of any newspaper on file, and attendants are at hand to procure publications that have been filed away. This room is fitted with two hundred desks and chairs for the convenience of readers.

In the various halls, corridors, and pavilions are so many objects of interest and beauty that weeks would be required to examine them all; but they are so systematically and carefully arranged that students can readily find books, music, papers, manuscripts, or other objects of special interest. However, as a visitor to the Library recently suggested, the building itself is so beautiful that nothing in it excites as much interest and admiration as the Library itself does.

The most beautiful single object there is perhaps the mosaic Minerva on the landing between the first balcony and the balcony of the reading room. This piece of mosaic, fifteen feet high and nine feet wide, formed of tiny pieces of mosaic no larger than my thumb nail, depicts Minerva as a chieftainess, whose armor has been partly laid aside and who is now interested in the arts of peace.

On the western side of the first balcony, within a semioctagonal railed-off space, is a marble cabinet in which is set a case covered with gold leaf and provided with folding doors, and within this case, protected by glass, is the original Declaration of Independence, the writing now almost illegible from the effect of light and air, it not having been always so protected. On the stand below is a case containing the original copy of the Constitution of the United States, similarly protected. A custodian keeps watch and ward over these documents so prized by the people of the United States, and all possible care is taken to preserve the writing from further fading.

On the ground floor, which is entered from the driveway beneath the stairways of the front entrance, are the superintendent's offices, the copyright offices, the reading room for the blind, and many other offices. The service rendered to blind readers is country-wide, through loans by mail, post-free under special provision of law. On the top floor of the building an excellent cafeteria is conducted.

The Library now contains more than three million books; also a great collection of prints, maps, music, manuscript, etc. It is the largest collection of books in the United States and the third in size in the world, being surpassed by only the British Museum and the French National Library. The main collections are strongest in bibliography, history, political and social sciences, public law and legislation, the fine arts, American local history, biography, and genealogy.

Two copies of every book copyrighted in the United States are deposited in the Library; hence, the number of books there is constantly increasing from that source, as well as from other sources. An exact system of filing by cards is observed, and by consulting the cards in the cases in the reading room and thus ascertaining the library number of any book desired, it can be procured with little delay. There's more than a hundred miles of shelving in the book department, all accurately numbered and lettered, and the attendants can readily find any book in the library if its library number is known. Ordinarily within five minutes from the time a request is handed in the book desired is in the hands of the reader. The Library is absolutely free to all readers over sixteen years of age.

The books are catalogued and the printed catalogues are distributed to the various libraries of the country. Books needed in any part of the United States are furnished through local libraries. By means of interlibrary loans, special service is rendered to investigators engaged in research work in various part of the country. The purpose of the Library is the freest possible use of the books consistent with their proper care and the widest possible use consistent with the convenience of Congress, the primary purpose of the Library being for the use of our national lawmakers.

Appropriations are made annually by Congress for the maintenance of the Library, the total appropriation in 1922 being $711,745.99. The building is open from 9 A.M. to 10 P.M., except on Sundays and most holidays, when it is open from 2 to 10 P.M.

A good book to use in your Lord's-day services, prayer meetings, and young people's meetings. # OUERY DEPARTMENT

BY H. LEO BOLES

Please give me the Greek word for the word "prophesy" in 1 Cor. 14: 31.—X.

The Greek word for "prophesy" in 1 Cor. 14: 31 is "propheteuo," and means to teach, refute, reprove, admonish, comfort one another. So says Thayer.

In Mark 14: 51, 52, we have the following: "And there followed him a certain young man, having a linen cloth cast about his naked body; and the young men laid hold on him: and he left the linen cloth, and fled from them naked." Please advise who the "young man" was (give name) and who the "young men" were (give names).—P. D. HENDERSON, Smith's Grove, Ky.

We do not know who this "certain young man" was. It is evident that he was not one of the twelve. Some have supposed him to be Mark, who wrote this book; but this is only a conjecture. As the guards laid hold of him, he fled and left his garment, which was "a linen cloth cast about his naked body." He simply slipped out of his garment and escaped arrest. We are told that people in that Eastern country dressed then, and many do now, with very loosely fitting garments, and they could suddenly disengage themselves from the garment and elude arrest.

Please answer these questions through the Gospel Advocate: (1) Since we are commanded to lay by in store upon the first day of the week as we are prospered, and we know that God commands us to give of our means, how much of our income should we give? (2) If a man is very poor and owes a debt, does that excuse him from giving? (3) Would it be safe to teach the people that God requires a tenth? (4) If a man gives freely, will he prosper?—E. T. BRAZZELL, Manila, Ark.

- 1. The Lord does not specify "how much of our income" we should give. We are taught that the Lord loves a cheerful giver, and that we should give as we are prospered, but no stated amount is required. Under the law of Moses they were required to give one-tenth in addition to the other sacrifices which they were to make, but under the law of Christ encouragement is given for liberality. No tax is levied upon God's people to-day. It is not the spirit of Christianity to force any one to do any service to God. All service must be voluntarily given. Surely Christians ought to do as much as was required of the Jews. All Christians should cultivate liberality and generosity in the Lord's work.
- 2. It does not excuse him from giving if he has anything to give. Some one has very aptly said that there are but two classes, the giver and the receiver. If one is not able to give anything, then he should be given to. Many make the excuse of poverty for not giving. They have not industriously labored to have something to give, and are to be condemned for such an idle life. Again, some are so extravagant that they have nothing to give on Lord's day. These also are to be condemned. We need not think that we can rob God by contracting a debt.
- 3. No. It is never safe to teach the people anything that God does not teach them. Nowhere in the New Testament Scriptures are we taught that God "requires a tenth" of his people. They should be encouraged toward liberality, but should not be taught that God requires any specified
- 4. Yes, if he is faithful in living the Christian life. "But this I say, He that soweth sparingly shall reap also sparingly; and he that soweth bountifully shall reap also bountifully. Let each man do according as he hath pur-posed in his heart; not grudgingly, or of necessity: for God loveth a cheerful giver. And God is able to make all grace abound unto you; that ye, having always all sufficiency in everything, may abound unto every good work: as it is written, He hath scattered abroad, he hath given to the poor; his righteousness abideth forever. And he that supplieth seed to the sower and bread for food, shall supply and multiply your seed for sowing, and increase the fruits of your righteousness: ye being enriched in everything unto all liberality, which worketh through us thanksgiving to God." (2 Cor. 9: 6-11.)

- (1) Please explain in full how far advanced a missionary has to be. (2) Should one decide early in life to be a missionary, would he have to go on and take a regular high-school and college course, or would he only have to take what he would need in that line of work? (3) Are there any requirements as to physical condition and age to be a missionary? (4) When one decides what country he wishes to go to, about how long does one have to study the language of that country? (5) Is there any hope of the church of Christ having missionaries in China soon? (6) Is this the only country where the church of Christ has no missionaries? (7) How many churches of Christ are there in the United States, and what is their membership? (8) Do you know of any State in the Union where there are no churches of Christ? (9) Can you study any language you wish to at David Lipscomb College? (10) What is the standing of the college? Is it a senior college? If not, is there any prospect of its being one in the near future?—NELLIE MAY FORREST, Niota, Tenn.
- 1. One should have as good an education as is possible under the circumstances. Of course, a knowledge of God's word, aptness to teach it, and a love for the salvation of souls are the essentials.
- 2. The regular high-school and college courses are not essentials, but they are splendid assets. A general or broad education is best before one begins to specialize.
- 3. There are no requirements "as to physical condition or age to be a missionary." If one goes to a foreign country, one should be in sound health and of sufficient age and experience to render the best service. Usually the one who does this kind of work is dependent upon the churches, and the churches are not willing to send and support one in a foreign country who is physically unable to do the work.
- 4. It would depend upon how apt one is to learn as to how long it would take one to learn the language of a country. Some languages are more difficult than others. Much would depend upon the previous training in high school and college.
- 5. Yes. There is hope of the church of Christ "having missionaries in China." There is now a call for some one to go to China. Write Brother Don Carlos Janes, Dearing Court, Louisville, Ky.
- 6. No. There are a number of countries where there is no faithful representative of the church of Christ.
- 7. I have no accurate statistics for the present time. The census for religious bodies for the year 1906 gives the following report: "The total number of communicants reported is 159,658; of these, as shown by the returns for 2,642 organizations, about forty-one per cent are males and fifty-nine per cent females.
- 8. There are a number of States which have no church of Christ. Among these are Connecticut, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, and others.
- 9. At David Lipscomb College you can study the following languages: English, Latin, Greek, French, and Spanish. All these languages are taught by very efficient instructors.
- 10. David Lipscomb College is a member of the Tennessee College Association and the American Association of Junior Colleges. It is now offering the four-year college courses.

BIBLE CROSS WORD PUZZ

THERE are four long words of quite unusual difficulty in this design, but all the others are unusually easy to fill in. You can guess at least two of the long ones without a reference book.

© 1925 THE J.C.W. CO. How to Solve a Cross Word Puzzle

To work out this puzzle, the white spaces must be filled with letters forming words answering to the various horizontal and vertical definitions given below. The horizontal and vertical words are not the same, but each gives a clue to the other. The first letter of each word is indicated by a number which refers to the definitions listed below.

It is advisable to first fill in, in both directions, those words which you know to be correct. These will furnish hints to those words which you do not know or had merely guessed at. When the puzzle is solved correctly, the letters in the white spaces will spell words both horizontally and vertically. The black spaces are the blind spots of the puzzle and merely form the pattern, incidentally designating the ends and beginnings of the words contained in the puzzle.

McDONALD.

George W. McDonald was born eighty-seven years ago, in Lee County, Ga., and departed this life on February 1, 1925, at the home of his only son, W. W. McDonald, with whom he made his home. He is also survived by a small grandson, G. W. Howell. Brother McDonald was married fifty-five years ago to Miss Zilpha Melvin, who preceded him in death a few years. The community, the home, and the church will miss him. Brother who preceded him in death a few years. The community, the home, and the church will miss him. Brother McDonald had been a faithful and loyal member of the church of Jesus Christ at New Hope, near Albany, for a long number of years, being senior elder for that congregation. His life was an inspiration to all who knew him. His chief joy was in things pertaining to salvation and things pertaining to salvation and the promotion of the cause and kingthe promotion of the cause and king-dom Christ died to establish. Though he had passed threescore and ten, with eyesight too dim to read, he was cheerful, and would lift his feeble voice in song and praise and take an active part in the Bible lessons, an-swering and asking questions from the Scriptures. His life was one of righteous fruit bearing. His mission fulfilled. God called him up higher to fulfilled, God called him up higher to his reward. "For to me to live is Christ, and to die is gain." "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord." A FRIEND.

HICKMAN. Roy Madison Hickman was born on October 16, 1901, and died on March 7, 1925. It was my pleasure to know Roy for several years. His morals were good. He was a gradu-ate of the Cullman County High School. He received an internal bruise in a game of ball that resulted in his death. It was my great pleasure to visit him during his sickness and talk to him about his spiritual welfare, to take his confession and baptize him. He did not live long after he obeyed the gospel, but we feel that his conversion was genuine. Roy was young in years, but he has left to those who survive him a memory that will prove a blessing and a bendiction. To know him was to love him. Honorable, truthful, clean in thought and life, tender as a child and gentle as a woman, he was an unusual combination. He made friends with all ages and classes. He bruise in a game of ball that resulted friends with all ages and classes. He was especially kind and thoughtful of old people. He leaves a precious mother, a devoted father, an affectionate sister, a loving brother, with other relatives and many friends. To all of them I would say: Look beyond to the crown unfading the reverse to the crown unfading, the reward that awaits the faithful in Christ. M. A. CREEL.

DUGGER.

Sister E. E. Dugger, aged sixty-seven years, died at the home of her daughter, Mrs. F. F. Locke, in Lawrenceburg, Tenn., Tuesday morning, February 10, 1925. Sister Dugger had been a great sufferer, but she bore it all with patience and Christian fortitude. The cause of her death was an attack of pneumonia. Sister Dugger was a Miss Thurman before her marriage. Her husband died nineteen years ago and left her with the care of the children. She was a most estimable Christian mother. She lived to see all of her children in the church. This was a great consolation to her. She leaves seven children—four boys and three girls. They are: John Dugger, Ethridge, Tenn.; Mark and Andrew Dugger, Lawrenceburg, Tenn.; Charlie Dugger, Clovis, New Mexico; Mrs. W. R. McKissick, Columbia, Tenn.; Mrs. P. A. Hickman, Lynnville, Tenn.; and Mrs. F. F. Locke, Lawrenceburg. She also leaves three brothers and two sisters, as follows: William Thurman, Franklin, Tenn.; Robert Thurman, Nashville, Tenn.; James Thurman, Culleoka, Tenn.; Mrs. J. S. Green, Franklin, Tenn.; and Mrs. Fannie Dugger, Columbia, Tenn. Sister Dugger loved the church and the pure word of God. She will be missed in the town and the church. To the bereaved children I would say: Live for the good that you may do, as your dear mother lived, and all will be well.

WALLACE-WALLACE DEBATE.

BY W. CLAUDE HALL.

At Ada, Okla., Foy E. Wallace, Jr., engaged H. W. Wallace (digressive) in a four-nights' discussion of the following subject: "Instrumental music, as an aid to singing in Christian worship, is scriptural." The debate began on June 30, and was held in the new convention hall, which will seat over fifteen hundred people. The writer was chosen as timekeeper for Brother Wallace. It is the first debate I have ever attended in which the speakers deported themselves in such a Christlike manner that neither had to be corrected or interfered with during any of their speeches.

H. W. Wallace had some questions propounded to Brother Foy Wallace, the answering of which resulted in a challenge from H. W. Wallace for this debate.

The "psallo" argument was used considerably. The "walking-cane" argument was used but once. Foy E. made it look so puerile that nothing else was said about it. H. W. tried to show that Ps. 87 was a prophetic vision of the church; he also had musical instruments in heaven.

I think that all the arguments were met as ably and convincingly as is possible. Foy E. debates for the benefit of the hearers assembled, and not to try to catch his opponent in little traps and quibbles.

Ada is a thriving little city of twelve thousand people. The Southeastern Teachers' College is located here, having twenty-five hundred students in attendance this summer. The Portland Cement Company has its largest plant here, which makes a daily shipment of from forty-five to fifty carloads. The church is a good one, and, so far as I could discern, is doing its duty.

FACTS REGARDING THE LA-MINE CHURCH LAWSUIT.

BY J. G. MALPHURS.

Inasmuch as some of the daily papers, especially of Missouri, have had something to say regarding the lawsuit which the above-named church was forced into by the "digressives," and because these reports did not get the issue squarely before the public, it is but justice to both parties that the facts be stated as they are.

"Lamine Christian Church," as it has been known for practically sixty years, has an interesting history, which I shall not take time to explain now. It is a strong rural church a few miles from Blackwater, Mo. The "digressives" have tried to get this church under their control before, but all attempts have met with failure. The immediate trouble which brought about the lawsuit has for its leader Gus R. Schuster, who sometime past had been asked to prove himself for an elder. Over the protest of the church last fall he began seeking a register for a Christian Church who favored innovations in the worship. He was asked to resign as elder and cease his opposition to the church in creating a faction. (Rom. 16: 17.) He deliberately refused to do so, and the church withdrew from him. Quite a number of the members had been inactive in the church, some of these favoring instrumental music in the worship, some caring nothing for church of any kind. These he lined up, brought them to the church house on January 4, and organized, in a state of excitement, what he called a "Christian Church," He demanded possession of the house, which was refused. Then he brought a digressive preacher and attempted to take the pulpit from me at the very hour I was engaged to preach. Firmly, yet kindly, we stayed with our rights. Mr. Schuster and his followers sued for possession.

The trouble, then, is not, as might be gathered from the daily papers, between Brother Schuster and myself. The real issue is: Shall those who oppose innovations in the worship continue to control the property, or shall those who want innovations take over into another organization this property? The decisions of Missouri courts gave the property of similar cases to those adhering to original doctrine. Being confronted by these decisions, the "digressives" and their attorneys wished to make the impression on the judge that we are a new sect. To assist in this effort, they tried to prove that the church of Christ opposes voting in political elections and that we did not swear when taking the oath. These efforts were but quibblings and were ably refuted; and, on the other hand, abundant proof was offered that Lamine is now what it has always been, that Mr. Schuster and his followers are a new sect, not satisfied with the church as they found it when they were baptized.

The loyal side was ably defended by Brother J. H. Lawson, of Houston, Texas, and three Missouri lawyers. The trial coming at the end of court, the judge will not render his decision until the next term in October. Our attorneys, as well as we, feel sure that the decision will be in favor of the old church.

The above shows the spirit of the "digressives." They are filled with the spirit of the world and care nothing for the right or wrong of a question. If they wanted to do the right thing, they would build a house of their own.

We commend Brother Malphurs and those with him. The house is theirs by virtue of the fact that they are standing on the original ground of the reformation. The apostles never used the organ. A. Campbell would not preach where one was used. Missouri courts have recognized our transgressive brethren as apostates from the original faith and have refused them any title to houses built by those opposing departures from the original faith. J. A. A.

SOME THINGS PREACHERS SHOULD KNOW.

BY FRED M. LITTLE.

The Gospel Advocate gave its readers the benefit of what I had to say concerning the above subject. A preacher brother in Northwest Alabama writes me as follows concerning what I said:

Dear Brother Little: I have finished reading the Gospel Advocate. Among the good things was your "Some Things Preachers Should Know." To my mind, this should have been said years ago and kept in almost every issue of every paper published by the brotherhood. I am truly thankful that you had the grit to say it. I know not to whom you refer, but I have more than one preacher in mind who needs the lesson. So say on, brother."

A brother who is principal of a public school in a South Alabama town took occasion to congratulate me for speaking concerning individuals and congregations being imposed upon by preachers who do not deport themselves in a way creditable to the calling and dignity of a minister of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

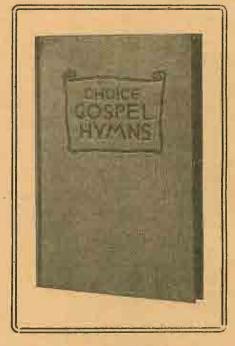

A sister who knew of one incident to which I referred in the article said: "Why didn't you say that to the preacher instead of writing it?" I replied: "There are so many who need the same lesson that I thought a little general discussion along the line would do good."

I would have all understand that I love my preacher brethren. I know by experience their hardships and the sacrifices they are called upon to make. I know we have good, worthy, competent ministers of the gospel who are not sufficiently remunerated to have many things that would add materially to their personal appearance as well as to their comfort. But, brethren, there is no excuse for any of us not being neat and clean when we presume to go before the public as public proclaimers of the word.

There is plenty of water and soap; so why should I mop my face with a badly soiled handkerchief? It is economy to have clean linen. It does not wear out so badly in the wash to have it laundered oftener. Shoes shined look better and last longer than to allow them to stay dusty or muddy. A comb, pocket size, used frequently will add much to the contour of the most of our heads. Our good sisters with their snow-white pillowcases hate to have them needlessly soiled by heads that need shampooing. If we do not own a pocketknife, almost any boy will lend us one to do the necessary manicuring to remove the filth-laden, ebony-edged nails. A visit to the dentist to have discolored teeth polished will be appreciated by people who have to look at us while we speak. Following the work done by the dentist by daily use of toothbrush will have a tendency to keep us healthy, as well as to give us a much-needed improved personal appearance. If we propose to shave, let us shave often enough to keep the stubble from being noticeably visible. If we do not shave, it will be in order to keep the beard and mustache brushed.

Our common-school facilities of today enable most people to obtain at least a grammar-school education. The preacher who does not observe the rules of the English language reasonably well will find his hearers questioning his ability to teach the Bible. It is natural for people to reason that if a preacher has not been student enough to learn to apply the very common rules that govern the correct use of the mother tongue, then he is hardly competent to be relied upon as being a dependable teacher of things divine. I am not saying that the conclusion thus reached is necessarily true, but it has its weight. None of us are too old to learn. If there are those who had not the advantages of literary schooling in their youth, they now should, to an extent, make up that deficiency by procuring a text on English and studying it as opportunity affords until they acquire the necessary information to be able to speak correctly. A close observer should be able to learn to speak correctly, grammatically, by hearing those who do speak correctly. Brother, you have no idea how much it detracts from the weight of your sermon for you to unscrupulously slaughter the English language.

Be it known by our brethren that they gain nothing by hurling insinuations and reflections at preachers who have college degrees. Education is necessary. It may be abused by the one who has it, but education rightly used is a blessing. We do well to encourage education. We need more and better-educated preachers.

The illiterate minister may be true to the old Book; the idiosyncrasies of the careless may be condoned; but the "tramp preacher" who roams at large over the country with no objective in view, uninvited by any congregation, who, as a rule, is not amenable to the discipline of any church, needs to find out that the congregations of the church of Christ do not intend to be imposed upon by the self-imposed dictator. The congregations here in South Alabama have suffered untold injury by just such imposition. My observation has been that such preachers have only destructive sermons. They tear down everything and build up nothing. They stay at no one place long enough to construct anything. They build up a fire and leave it to go out. They defy, they dare, they criticize everybody and everything. They tell of the great things they have done. They set up men of straw and knock them over and then walk off and proclaim: "What a hero am I!" "But they preach the gospel," says one. Yes, but the good they do is evil spoken of: for no preacher is of permanent benefit unless backed up by humble, consecrated living. The life speaks louder than words. Preachers should know these things.

EARNEST WORK.

Life should be full of earnest work, Our hearts unlashed by fortune's frown,

Let perseverance conquer fate And merit seize the victor's crown.

The battle is not to the strong,
The race not always to the fleet,
And he who seeks to pluck the stars
Will lose the jewels at his feet.

SELECTED THOUGHTS.

To live by rule is often to miss the nobler mastery, the mental and moral developing of principle.

A noble deed is a step toward God Lifting our feet from the common sod To a purer air and a higher view.

I hold that it becomes no man to nurse despair, but in the teeth of clenched antogonisms to pursue the worthiest until he die.

I saw the lightning's gleaming rod Reach forth and write upon the sky The awful autograph of God.

Be just and generous with yourself. When you make a mistake, do not be mean enough to hug the failure until you faint.

Be thou like the bird perched upon some frail thing, who, although he feels the branch bending beneath him, yet loudly sings, knowing full well that he has wings.

- "The Sunday-sohool literature that is published by the Gospel Advocate Company I can heartily recommend to any one who is in search for good helps on our Sunday-school lessons." (Robert E. Wright.)
- "A complete assortment of the Sunday-school literature published by the Gospel Advocate Company was sent me recently. Having examined it carefully, I am glad to say I consider it excellent, and gladiy commend it to congregations, teachers, and classes." (T. B. Larimore.)
- "As a whole, I think your Lesson Helps far surpass other literature of its kind. Here in this great mission field (Louisiana) where we have placed them, many comparisons have been made between them and both the denominational and our scolety brethren's literature, and at no time have your Lesson Helps come off second best." (C. C. McQuiddy.)
- "It is a pleasure to write a word of commondation of Brother Elam's Notes on Bible School Lessons. They are the product of one who has given the greater part of his life to the study and teaching of God's Word. They are true to the Bible, comprehensive, and scholarly. If you love the truth, you will be delighted to study with him these wonderful lessons." (A. G. Freed.)
- "Brother E. A. Elam's Notes, as published annually, is, in my judgment, sortpural and the best thing of its kind I have ever seen or that is published to-day. Everybody ought to have a copy and preserve it for study and reference. Brother Elam's twenty-five years' work, if every year should be bound in a separate volume, the twenty-five volumes would be a great addition to any library. (C. M. Pullias.)
- "At the Central church of Christ in Fort Worth we have been using in our Bible school Elam's Notes and other literature of his. For a great number of years the writer of this has felt that Brother Elam was one of the best-prepared men in the brotherhood for the preparation of such literature. His Notes, in our best judgment, represent, or reflect, the best efforts he has ever made. Both as an elder of the congregation and as a teacher in our Bible School, I have very great pleasure in indorsing his Notes. To the extent that an expression of our views is of value, I assure you we are very pleased to give it." (J. G. Wilkinson.)
- pleased to give it." (J. G. Wilkinson.)

  "I have used Elam's Quarterlies for years. They are superlor to any that I have seen. Elam's Notes on Bible School Lessons are much fuller than they. They give the historical setting as to time and place that is needed and valuable. They give so mazy scriptural citations and references—Scriptural citations and references—Scripturat that introduce the text or corroborate the text—that the average student may know the geography, the history, and the full meaning of the lesson. They give so many lessons, deducted from the coptous citations of Scriptures, that the student may know more perfectly God's will. For years I have used Peloubet's Select Notes. I compare them weekly. I do not hesitate to say that Elam's Notes are infinitely superior, if you want to know the Bible." (C. F. Holt.)

WILL WE KNOW EACH OTHER THERE?

BY G. F. MILLS.

This is a question that the pious of earth have brooded over for centuries. Some think that our departed loved ones are ever present with us, though unseen; that they are cognizant of all of our comings and goings. One writer, speaking of his departed companion, puts it thus: "I feel her gentle spirit touch upon my brow, and, comforted, I know that she is ever near." Then we frequently picture our gone-on loved ones as being in heaven enjoying all of the happiness of the celestial city, waiting and watching and longing for our coming.

When these vile bodies of ours shall be resurrected, transformed, made over, spiritualized, immortalized, we shall understand. These spirit bodies will be stripped of all fleshly ties, of all kindred affections and desires of the flesh. There will be neither male nor female, no marrying nor giving in marriage, but all one in Christ.

Peter, James, and John were allowed to see Christ in his glorified state on the mount of transfiguration, their eyes having been adapted to this vision, or miracle. Moses and Elijah appeared on that scene, and were recognized by this trio of apostles. They had never seen either of these patriarchs in the flesh; for Elijah had been translated to heaven in a flaming chariot centuries before, and Moses had also died long years before, for he died on Nebo's lonely mountain on this side of Jordan's wave, and God buried him in the valley in the land of Moab.

Another example of a man in the flesh seeing a supernatural vision is the apostle Paul when he was "caught up to the third heaven" and "heard unspeakable words, which it is not lawful for a man to utter." The beloved John, the Revelator, looking through the veil of intervening space while he was on the isle of Patmos in the Spirit on the Lord's day, saw an innumerable host that no man could number in the city of God.

I am confident, trustful, and satisfied that all who walk the straight and narrow path from earth to that "city which hath foundations," whose maker is God, will have happiness and joys full and complete in the city of our Father, the home of the soul.

"Bless the Lord, O my soul: and all that is within me, bless his holy name."

GOSPEL ADVOCATE

The GOSPEL ADVOCATE is the oldest living periodical published in the interest of the church of Christ. It is now in its sixty-seventh volume, and it has a larger list of regular, paidup subscribers than it has ever had before. Its circulation is increasing rapidly, and it is daily growing in favor with the people. It contains twenty-four pages, and is issued every week. It is printed in large, clear type, on good paper, and is neatly pasted and trimmed. It has by far the largest circulation of any periodical published south of the Mason and Dixon Line in the interest of the church of Christ. It has regular editorial writers, besides a large number of able and regular contributors. It has all of the regular departments of the best religious periodicals.

In editorial policy it stands for individual consecration, against ecclesiastic organizations, as the scriptural and best method of doing missionary work. It recognizes no organization but the church of Christ as a scriptural medium of converting the world and developing the Christian character.

It opposes all human creeds and ecclesiastic councils, and pleads for the right of each individual to study the Scriptures for himself and formulate his own faith, without dictation or hindrance from churchly dignitaries. It opposes all clerical assumption of official authority in the church, and stands for the scriptural doctrine that each Christian has an office to fill, a work to perform—that all are kings and priests unto God.

It stoutly advocates the doctrine of missions, and argues unceasingly that every Christian is a divinely commissioned missionary and every church is a scripturally organized missionary society. The mission of every Christian and the design of every church is to preach the gospel to all the world.

It believes in, and stoutly advocates, congregational singing, as opposed to select choirs and instrumental performances, as the best and most soul-stirring church music. Let all the people sing. Provide a book for everybody in the house, and let us all make a joyful noise unto the Lord. Sample copies mailed free to any address.

SCRIPTURE STUDIES

BY JAMES A. ALLEN

We believe the world is getting better. At the same time, we think this would be a difficult question to decide with any degree of certainty. While believers in the Lord have multiplied wonderfully in the last century, the wickedness of men has increased immensely in almost every sphere of human endeavor. Men have not trembled to make inroads even into the sacred precincts of the church of the living God. It is difficult to understand unfulfilled prophecy—if, indeed, it can be understood at all until fulfilled. And while Jesus Christ our Lord declared that "this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in the whole world for a testimony unto all the nations," he also asked the question: "When the Son of man cometh, shall he find faith on the earth?" It seems to have been a matter of doubt.

* * *

The twentieth century, from present indications, would seem to be an age of improvement. In politics and religion, general intelligence among the people seems to be on the increase. But we fear the reaction of the people against the schemes of oppression and tyranny, politically and religiously, will go too far. Socialism is as far wrong upon one side as the combines are upon the other. The same thing must be guarded against in the opposition of the masses against the government of priests, in the rebellion of the many against the tyranny of the few. In repudiating the dogmas of human systems, many run to the extreme of denying the truth of all religion.

There are principles laid down in the Bible that apply with equal force to humanity in all ages. While the Mosaic code of laws long ago accomplished the purpose for which these laws were given, and so was taken away, to be superceded by a better, still much is to be learned from God's dealings with man in those ages. The underlying principles of things remain the same. All grow better or all grow worse. "Evil men and impostors shall wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived." (2 Tim. 3: 13.)

Good men, upon the other hand, grow better and better. The work of uplifting man has from the beginning gone forward in a series of revolutions and reformations. The relax of one age brings on the fervent ardor of the next. But the trouble is that corrupt leaders have held the government of the people longer than the influence exerted by some rising reformer.

Some of the personal friends of Mr. Campbell have torn down much of what he labored all his life to accomplish. The followers of Luther and Calvin, instead of pressing on in the work of reform, retrograded into sects antagonistic to their life work. But such is the history of corrupt humanity. Under the old order the Jews were started in the right direction, but in a few years apostasy set in. When reformers arose among them and set them right again, it was only to be followed by another fall. After having left Egypt, crossed the Red Sea in a marvelous triumph, and seen the mighty wonders performed by God in behalf of them, in the absence of Moses the children of Israel went almost immediately into idolatry. "And Jehovah spake unto Moses, Go, get thee down; for thy people, that thou broughtest up out of the land of Egypt, have corrupted themselves: they have turned aside quickly out of the way which I commanded them: they have made them a molten calf, and have worshiped it, and have sacrificed unto it, and said, These are thy gods, O Israel, which brought thee up out of the land of Egypt." (Ex. 32: 7, 8.) I fear it is the case in too many of our churches now that if two or three of the older brethren were to pass off, the whole church could be easily carried into the wrong. It seems that this is the history of all churches; and an intelligent observer can see the same principle in the political affairs of the world.

It is an undisputed fact that the Christian profession was once upon true grounds. But it is a matter of doubt as to whether or not such has been the case since. They were started right, were placed upon the firm foundation of the inspired word as an all-sufficient rule of faith and government. But "there shall come a falling away," said Paul; "an apostasy" would develop among the people of God. This apostasy came and was consummated in the person of the "man of sin," or "son of perdition," who produced the Dark Ages of the Christian era by supplanting the Bible with the category of priests by edicts issued from Rome.

Since the time of Luther intelligence has been on the increase among the people. Until recent years, however, the gospel had not been preached in its ancient fullness and simplicity, as it was in the beginning; and even yet it seems that there is something lacking in the manner of those who preach it that was fully exhibited to advantage by the first preachers. I believe that if preachers would get down on a level with the people, as inspired men did, and preach the gospel like they preached it, the people at large would make haste to obey it with as much readiness now as they once did.

There is but one body of people that occupy the original position advocated by the apostles; and although this body of people have always been the objects of hatred and slander, even their bitterest enemies are compelled to acknowledge that they are safe. It cannot be denied that we have the vantage ground, for we teach nothing that cannot be expressed in the language of inspired teachers. Sects and parties are getting old, are turning gray with age, and the people are beginning to see that they have been hoodwinked. Fifty years ago many thought that Alexander Campbell originated the idea that man must "be baptized for the remission of sins." But as in the political world popular sentiment is growing against corporate trusts and combines, so in the religious world the mists are clearing and the people are beginning to learn that many things are retailed from the pulpit that are not any part of the religion of the New Testament. The people are beginning to see that Peter taught them to "be baptized" long before Mr. Campbell was born; and theologians, who think their "craft in danger," are unable to check the turn in the sentiment of the people.

WHAT IS TO BE GAINED?

BY LEE JACKSON.

The short, but pertinent and suggestive, article of Brother Elam on "Unfulfilled Prophecy" in the Gospel Advocate of February 19 puts us to thinking, and thus serves as a prompting for the question which is at the head of what I am now writing.

As a distinctly separate class of Bible students and teachers, we propose to teach only the things for which we can give a positive "Thus saith the Lord;" and upon this, and this alone, do we propose to maintain and promote the "unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace." Upon the scriptural principle involved in this position, then, why is it that so many among us seek to bind the great body of brethren and teachers of our plea to the support of ideas and teachings for which no positive "Thus saith the Lord," either in precept or example, can be given? Men adopt these worthless notions, preach them in their sermons, and publish them in the columns of our papers—the same papers which we expect the public to read as a means of learning something of our plea for unity; and then, when we are confronted by an opponent with the statement that much of what we teach is unscriptural, we are forced either to be silent and make no reply to the charge, submissively taking our unpalatable dose of medicine, or try to make some sort of an apology by claiming that the majority of our leading and bestqualified teachers do not hold these speculative notions as matters of faith. And frequently it happens that we are not certain as to whether this hesitating apology is based upon fact or not, for upon some of these speculative issues we are in uncertainty as to where the majority of our leaders stand. By this it is not meant that we are in uncertainty as to where the most of our best-informed leaders stand on the essential matters of Scripture teaching, but we do not know where the majority of our wouldbe leaders stand; and at this present time these would-be leaders are far from being in the minority. At the present the trumpet appears to give so many varied and uncertain sounds that many may not know when or how to prepare for the battle. We are willing and ready to do battle in behalf of the grand old plea that the fathers battled so valiantly for in the beginning, but our warriors have become so much divided that we are afraid to shoot for fear that we may injure the cause for which we stand by hitting some self-constituted leader who has fallen out of line with those who stand upon the originally chosen battle ground.

By experience the writer of these lines knows what a furor among brethren in certain sections can be raised by a refusal to indorse a would-be leader who proposes to debate in defense of a proposition which is out of harmony with our plea for unity and which cannot be scripturally sustained. Through self-assertiveness these self-constituted leaders gain the confidence of unsuspecting brethren, and then woe be to the man who is bold enough to oppose them in their propagation of their fanciful notions and hobbies!

But let us get back to the question at the head of our article. For those who propose to give a "Thus saith the Lord" for what they teach, what practical benefit is to be gained by contending for these nonessential issues? The teaching of the New Testament as a system of religion is so eminently and sublimely practical in all of its essential features that no man or combination of men, in the exercise of their human wisdom, can improve upon it in its application to the necessities of human life. As a system of religion, binding man to God in a responsible and justified relationship, there is nothing required of man except that which is taught in concrete and tangible form. That which is taught as the faith of the gospel is a force in the human heart which moves men to act in conformity to the will of God, and upon this doing of the will of God is suspended man's salvation in eternity, and also his highest and best interest while living on earth. And not only this; it is only the essentially practical things taught in the New Testament that can help mankind at large through the Christian's relation to his fellow men. Belief in speculative opinions as a means of differentiating one class of religious believers from another has never been of practical benefit to the world in mitigating the sufferings of mankind, and the holding of these opinions has nothing to do in preparing men for happiness in the life to come. The belief of these things as matters of opinion may serve the ambitious purposes of men in causing endless contentions and divisions, but, so far as helping humanity to rise to a higher and better life is concerned, they are lifeless. Faith in Christ, as existing in the human heart, is a living principle which moves men to do the things which Christ commands us to do, and it is the doing of these commands that puts man in right relationship to God, and also makes him useful in helpfulness to his fellow human beings. This faith in Christ as an active force in the life of man, or as the law of the heart, is the faith for which we should earnestly contend. The contending for abstract opinions as differentiating theories dees the world no good.

In order to make the meaning a little clearer, let me speak of an occasion when I served as moderator while two differing preachers were engaged in debate. One of the propositions in dispute was the hereditary total depravity of man. The debater in the affirmative was able to show from the Scriptures that man is depraved, and the one in the negative would not deny this, but neither would claim the ability to measure the intensity or the degree of man's depravity; in other words, neither debater was able to define his meaning as to total depravity. As moderator, I arose before the audience and called for an expression on the part of the church members of the man in the affirmative, asking if they believed it necessary for a man to believe in the total depravity of man in order to prepare for heaven. The response to this was in the negative. The question then put before them was: "Do you believe that faith in Christ and a doing of the will of God as revealed in Christ are necessary to prepare you for heaven and eternal life?" The response to this was in the affirmative. It was then suggested that, as neither debatant was able to define himself on the subject of depravity so as to make the matter tangibly understood by the audience, the discussion of the proposition was only confusing and should be discontinued—and it was discontinued.

Among those to whom we are in the habit of referring as "our brethren" there exists a disposition to contend for points of teaching simply for the purpose of emphasizing lines of distinction between our "church," as we call it, and the sectarian denominations. In doing this, we have overlooked the fact that in principle we are making ourselves a denomination. This remains as true, whether we denominate our whole body of people as the "Christian Church" or as the "church of Christ." we dominate all of those found on one side of the dividing fence as the "Christian Church" and those on the other side as the "church of Christ." We then have two distinctly separate denominations. The only way to restore the undenominational condition of the apostolic age is to so preach and teach that the faith of men will be in Christ and not in opinions as dividing lines, and thus establish churches as worshiping and working congregations which belong to Christ, as purchased by his own blood. Such congregations of believing and working men and women are "churches of Christ;" and this is true of them without marking out a distinguishing line around all of them as taken together and thus calling all of them as put together "the one church of Christ" in Mississippi, Tennessee, Kentucky, Missouri, or as constituting the one church of Christ wherever found. If the Lord had needed an organized body as a general church, with a dividing line drawn around it, he most certainly would have established such an institution in the apostolic age. The only dividing line established in the apostolic age was the line which divided believing, worshiping, and working congregations from the unbelieving world. If, upon the basis of our plea for a "Thus saith the Lord," we succeed in establishing such congregations of Christian workers, we will be sufficiently distinguished without contending for anything merely for the sake of being distinguished from others. In the beginning of our labors in behalf of unity we contended for the breaking down of denominational lines, teaching that Christians should not try to fence themselves off by using distinguishing creeds, but now some among us appear as trying to create and multiply these lines of distinction. Yet the differentiating opinions for which we are so zealously contending neither increase our faith in Christ nor promote our especial interest in Christian living. Nothing of interest to the cause of Christ is gained by pressing the distinguishing points for which brethren are contending. A positive "Thus saith the Lord" will help the cause of Christ, if given in precept or example.

BETTER GET ACHAN OUT OF YOUR CAMP. BY H. J. PHILLIPS.

Joshua failed to take Ai with three thousand men because one man had committed a sin against the Lord. This man, Achan, had stolen a wedge of gold, a rich robe, and two hundred shekels of silver, which he hid in his tent and in the ground. For this sin the army that was sent to take the city of Ai was driven away in defeat. Joshua was like our leaders of to-day—gave up, fell on the ground, put dust on his head, and was ready to accuse the Lord of forsaking his people.

God spoke to Joshua and told him to get up from the earth, saying: "Israel hath sinned, and they have also transgressed my covenant which I commanded them: for they have even taken of the accursed thing, and have also stolen, and dissembled also, and they have put it even among their own stuff."

Now Joshua did the very thing that the Lord wanted done. He started out to get rid of the family that had caused the defeat of his army; and when he found the guilty man, he did not put up with his sins as we do in these days. But this man, Achan, with his sons and daughters, his oxen and asses and sheep, were brought into the valley of Achor, where they were stoned to death and burned with fire.

After Achan was put to death, then Joshua started out to take the city of Ai again. This time he had the Lord to help him fight the enemy. So with all ease the city was taken and burned.

Then Joshua built an altar to the Lord, and on it was written all the laws that God had given Moses on the mountain. The people came to hear Joshua read the law aloud, and they learned the law of Moses, even the women and the little children and the strangers who lived among them.

One great trouble to-day is that people do not read the word of the Lord enough, but depend too much on some one to tell them the old, old story; and often the preacher teaches people many things that are not taught in God's word. To know the truth will make one free.

I am of the opinion that the reason so many congregations cannot do much for the cause of Christ is because they have in the church an Achan that the church needs to get rid of. We need not kill any one; but when people continue to sin, and at the same time try to stand high in the church of Christ, we need to get rid of them, after all has been done that the church can do to get this modern Achan to quit sin. God has no need of a man of sin in his camp, or church.

Some men stand well with the church because of their money, their many friends, or their learning. So far as the record shows, Achan stood as well as any other subject under Joshua until he committed this great sin. The same God that would not tolerate sin then in his camp will not tolerate it now. So let each congregation of God's children see if they have an Achan in it. If so, rid the church of them.

WHITHER ARE WE DRIFTING? BY W. F. LEMMONS.

So far as I am personally concerned, I do not know but one way to please God in our work and worship, either on Lord's day or any other day. Our service in the worship of God must be patterned by the New Testament as our only creed and the work and worship of the New Testament church as our example. To find out how the Jerusalem church carried on, and to take that as an example, is safe. Mosheim, a great historian, affirms that all the Christian churches, during the first century, patterned after the Jerusalem church. If the first church of Christ established in the world is not a mold in which or by which every other church of Christ on earth is to be modeled, we would just as well shape churches after the Methodist creed, or the Baptist manual, or any other document originated by the wisdom of man.

Not only must the church be molded by the divine pattern, but it must carry on after the example set forth by those who were the legal ambassadors of Jesus Christ, to whom he delegated the authority to bind and loose. (Matt. 16: 19.) Paul says: "Be ye followers of me, even as I also am of Christ."

The New Testament churches were not each a republic, with authority to legislate and operate by majority vote. Quite to the contrary, each church constituted a kingdom, with Christ as supreme King over all, with the apostles as ambassadors and the church as an organized unit—a kingdom. "Ye are a kingdom of priests."

With Christ, the King, as "head over all things to the church," and not Peter as Pope, each member had to be governed by the King, as "head of the church." To depart from the divine pattern was to depart from the faith. Even the elders of the church were under the authority of Christ, and were made elders by his authority. (Acts 20: 28; 1 Tim. 3: 1-11; Tit. 1: 1-11; 1 Pet. 5: 1-5.) "And let these also first be proved; then let them use the office of a deacon, being found blameless." (1 Tim. 3: 10.) There is certainly no authority to reverse this Godordained plan of the eldership and practice as some doappoint men elders and deacons on trial, similar to the method of the Methodists, in former years, in receiving their members on "six months' probation." We cannot please God and thus "whip the devil around the stump" in the method of appointing elders and deacons. When men desire such office and have demonstrated that they possess the qualifications will be time enough for the matter of appointment.

The church had not reached beyond the middle of the second century of its history before loose methods and unscriptural theories were being practiced in the church. The eldership had practically been supplanted, and the one-man rule took its place. Within another one hundred years the eldership was abolished, and the government of the church simmered down to one man as Patriarch over all the Eastern (or Greek) churches, and the Pope as sole ruler over the Western (or Latin) churches; for the church had divided into the Eastern Church and the Western Church, and here it merged into the wilderness and lost its identity. However, these conditions did not come without a fight. There were faithful men from the apostolic days, among the Greek and Latin fathers, who had fought against the departures that brought on this apostasy.

Early in the history of the church the convention methods sprang up simultaneously with other departures from the pattern of the Jerusalem church. Organized efforts of one sort and another became prominent, and legislation followed inevitably, innocent as they may have felt about the matter at the time. "It is not in man that walketh to direct his steps." Every effort and religious act must be directed by the King—the head of the church. Soon baptism became corrupted, as well as the Lord's Supper. These departures, with many others, gave us the Pope, with headquarters at Rome, and the Patriarch, with headquarters at Constantinople.

The Restoration Movement, under Stone, the Campbells, Scott, and others, which was "the voice crying in the wilderness" for a return to Jerusalem and to pattern after the Jerusalem church and the early Christians, had not reached more than fifty years of its history until these departures from the New Testament order of things were taking form. The convention system, on a small scale, was taking form, chiefly among the younger set of preachers. The authority of the eldership was supplanted by the majority-vote system, borrowed from the Baptists. Instrumental music was introduced, and at these conventions, or "preachers' meetings," boards (State and national) were founded, societies were formed, missionary societies (home and foreign) came into being, with various other departures from the truth. These departures resulted in the division in the church.

During the past few years the church of Christ, which has so long condemned all these convention methods and things that smacked of human wisdom in church work, has fallen into the practice of calling "preachers' meetings," to which preachers from various sections of the country are invited, a program having been prepared, with certain favorite preachers to take the leading parts. Hundreds of preachers attend them. All leave, apparently, with well-filled stomachs and heads.

It seems to me that if our "preachers' meetings" are in harmony with the Scriptures (they are just conventions on a small scale), that the "digressives'" convention system on a larger scale is equally as scriptural. In both cases they are "preachers' meetings," with invitations for any member of the church to attend that wishes to attend. The work done at the digressive conventions may differ in some respects from the work done at our "preachers' meetings;" but with all that has happened to the church as a result of these meetings, it seems to me that we are taking "a leap in the dark." Human nature is not different now from human nature in the first centuries of the church, nor yet fifty or seventy-five years ago. We cannot evade the fact that "like cause produces like effect."

The first conventions, or preachers' meetings, called by the church were small affairs compared with our modern "preachers' meetings." They grew gradually into the larger methods of State and national conventions. Legislation followed.

I am not assuming the attitude of judge and jury. I have not been to any of our "preachers' meetings." I have always been too busy to attend when they were being pulled off. It is my opinion that if all the preachers that attend these meetings would take the money and use the time expended at these meetings, and each get out into some destitute field and hold a mission meeting, that God would get more glory from their work and many more souls would be saved. Think of the good that would come as a result of fifty preachers holding fifty mission meetings at once. If it is a fact that "there is more rejoicing in heaven over one sinner that repenteth than over ninety and nine just persons that need no repentance," surely such a host of faithful men, breaking the bread of life to the starving multitudes in the wilderness, would set the angels to rejoicing in heaven. This would not be so pleasant for the preachers as associating with each other, being entertained by the strong churches, and assimilating the ideas and methods of others, but it would certainly fill the empty souls with the bread of life and bring rejoicing "unspeakable and full of comfort" to them. Apparently the largest per cent of preachers who attend these meetings are those that preach regularly for some church.

Really it seems to me that these meetings are just one way of "whipping the devil around the stump" and reaching the methods of the transgressives over another route or under another name.

In New Testament times we do not read about the Jerusalem church calling a "preachers' meeting," having made out a certain program to be acted out by certain preachers. It is quite true that certain questions were carried up to the apostles at Jerusalem for settlement; but the apostles have committed their authority to record, and we do not have to have any such called meetings for the settlement of questions. Everything can be settled by the Book.

Departures from the simplicity of the truth come unconsciously, and start on a small scale and with good intentions. I think it is perfectly safe to "go into the highways and hedges" and preach the unsearchable riches of Christ, and leave the conventions and the near-conventions to the transgressors, while we keep busy advancing the kingdom of Christ. Is that safe and sound or not? This article is not meant to condemn, but to suggest. We should have some scriptural reason for the things we do—either precept or example or circumstantial evidence. Let us labor and pray that the unity of the Spirit may be kept in the bond of peace, and that the peace of God may rule in our hearts.

DISTRIBUTION OF BIBLES.

BY DAVID LIPSCOMB, JR.

Brother S. F. Morrow and his wife have engaged in this most worthy enterprise, one that is especially fit and laudable in these restless days when it seems that men and women, old and young, are trying to put God and his Book out of their lives, trying to follow what they call "truth" as it is revealed, or supposed to be revealed, in rocks and mud flats and time of which there is no calendar. Indeed, to their view, a million years is but as yes-With mighty words-"azoic," "Eocene," "Triassic," "Tertiary," etc.—they confuse the simple and persuade those wishing to get the Ten Commandments out of their hearts and revert to brutish beasts. They set aside the plain tale and take up a theory that they cannot prove. The story Moses told is too simple for their mighty minds. They eschew the statement, "In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth," for a statement that some countless years ago God or some force created a one-celled creature, and it backed God off the boards and did the balance its own self. It just let God push the button, then exit God. If one could (and some claim to) swallow the nauseous, disgusting theories, where does it put you?

Are little boys really and truly made of slugs and snails and puppy-dog tails? Is the nursery rhyme to be accepted, rather than the sublime, uplifting idea that even the Greeks without direct revelation had—"We are the offspring of God?" Who does not love to think of his lineage of brave fathers and chaste mothers? And what better family tree could there be than that which goes, "which was the son of Adam, which was the son of God?" Let us all help in this good work.

NOTES FROM WEST TENNESSEE.

BY JOHN R. WILLIAMS.

The meeting at Mount Zion began on Lord's day, July 12, and closed on Thursday night, July 26. The attendance was above the average, the singing was excellent, and the people seemed to hear what was said. I do not know how much prejudice was created or removed. One thing I do know: I tried to preach the gospel of the Son of God, which is God's power unto salvation. Two married men, two young ladies, one young man, and one boy were baptized—six in all. The congregation called me to conduct another meeting in 1926. So I have one call for a meeting next year.

Yesterday (the fourth Lord's day in July) was a day long to be remembered by many. It was the opening of the new meetinghouse at Burrus Chapel, also the fortieth anniversary of Brother W. S. Robinson's birth into the kingdom of God's dear Son. Forty years ago I baptized him. Forty years ago I began preaching. Thirty years ago I held the first meeting in the meetinghouse at Burrus Chapel. The brethren took all good material of the old house and added new material enough to build a nice, comfortable, stucco meetinghouse, of which they are, and should be, very proud. There were brethren and sisters present from Arkansas, Kentucky, and Tennessee. Brother Joe Ratcliffe, who has faithfully and earnestly preached the gospel for forty-one years, together with his faithful wife, was present. Brother Lambert, who is engaged in a meeting at Ridgely, with his singer, Brother Spivey, was present.

Our brethren have four good meetinghouses in Lake County—Burrus Chapel, Jones Chapel, Ridgely, and Tiptonville. The one in Tiptonville, however, has not been transferred by deed yet—waiting for the Methodists to complete their new meetinghouse. Owing to the dry weather and almost a failure in crops, it will work a hardship on the brethren of Jones Chapel to meet the payments. In former "Notes from West Tennessee" I called attention to this and asked the brethren at other places to lend a helping hand. By their actions they have said, "Let her go;" but we do not intend to "let her go," as this is the first and only opportunity we have had of getting a meetinghouse in Tiptonville and a chance of establishing a congregation there. If you will help them, it will be appreciated very much by the brethren, and especially will it be well pleasing to the Lord.

Yesterday (July 26) Brother Gardner Hall began a meeting at Bethel. Next Lord's day Brother Eph Smith is to begin in Hornbeak. On the same day I am to begin my fifteenth meeting in succession at Jones Chapel.

Brethren, it is astonishing how the people are falling for the devil's monkey doctrine in West Tennessee. Yes, many of them would prefer to live and die the death of a monkey than to obey the gospel and be saved. These are certainly trying times on the church, especially the young members, who need to be taught their duty. Preachers seem to realize the danger of telling the members of their wrongsdanger of losing a job-and some of them will say nothing against the sins committed by church members. During the forty years that I have preached I have learned what it takes to make a preacher popular with the people, also I have learned what it takes to make a preacher popular with the Lord; and since I decided to try to be popular with the Lord, I am not popular with but few of my brethren and sisters. But I am still in the fight, and desire to remain on the firing line and fall in the hottest of the fight.

It is impossible to estimate the terrible consequences of sin. Pain, disease, and death are its offspring. Poverty, sorrow, and misery follow in its wake. How we should hate and fight sin!—Selected.

A BEAUTIFUL LIFE. BY A. B. LIPSCOMB.

The purpose of this notice is to chronicle the beautiful life rather than the early death of one of the best young women who ever blessed the world with the radiance of her presence and good works.

Mrs. Effice Price Witt was born near Spring Hill, in Maury County, Tenn., August 29, 1899. Early in life she began reading and studying the Bible. For that reason she was prepared to obey, and did obey, the gospel at the tender age of thirteen years.

She was married on June 1, 1919, to Arthur A. Witt, at Franklin, Tenn. Their married life was exemplary in every respect, and the tender, unstinted devotion of each to the other was a matter of frequent comment among their friends.

Sister Witt's faith, courage, and patience were displayed through a long period of suffering which ended with her going away on May 5, 1925. To many her death seemed very untimely and they were reminded of these words:

"Death lies upon her, like an untimely frost Upon the sweetest flower of all the field."

But God knows best. Life is not measured by the calendar, but by experience. We may live but a few years and yet experience much.

Sister Witt's few years on the earth were teeming with usefulness and permeated with the spirit of the Master. Her glorious life with the redeemed is just begun. This truth, along with many other precious promises from the Word, Brother J. C. Lawson and the writer pointed out at the funeral service, which was conducted at the Reid Avenue Church, in Nashville, of which Sister Witt was a faithful member. Her body was laid to rest in the family lot near Burwood, Tenn. But Brother Witt did not bury the memory of his darling wife. That may abide with him and with us in sweet fragrance forever.

WHAT IS THE CHURCH DOING FOR THE FOR-EIGNER IN AMERICA?

BY ROBERT S. KING.

Some one has said: "The greatest foreign mission land on the globe to-day is our own America. Here we do not go in search of the millions; the millions come to us. We are not obliged to conform to alien customs; they adopt ours. We are not a little group engulfed in hundreds of millions of alien faith; we are the majority. Our faith is ingrained in the very fiber of the government; those strangers are here, cut loose from their native government and religious customs."

Do you know that the number of people living in New York City is greater than the combined population of the six New England States? Do you know that within a distance of twenty miles there are twelve million people, or one-tenth of the population of the United States? Do you know that there is one small New Testament church there among this vast thronging multitude?

New York has a million pupils in her public schools and fifty thousand students in her two universities and ten colleges.

The Department of Commerce gives us some figures on the foreign population. The total figures credited to foreign white people in 1920 are 4,294,629 out of a total population of 5,620,000. The distribution of this total among the leading tongues is: Hebrew and Yiddish, 946,000; English and Celtic, 897,000; Italian, 803,000; German, 690,000; Russian, 221,000; and Polish, 161,000. The other fourteen per cent of users of foreign tongues speak more than thirty different languages, some of these colonies being large enough to make respectable cities. There are 60,000 Swedes, 40,000 Norwegians, 32,000 Spaniards, 26,000 Greeks, and 76,000 Magyars. The foreign white population of New York is greater than the combined population of Boston, Detroit, and Chicago.

There is one street—Jones Street—that is 445 feet long, and in a short walk of one hundred and twenty steps you will pass buildings that house 1,072 people, including 522 children, representing ten nationalities. You will hear these people speaking Italian, Russian, Polish, Greek, West Indian, Austrian, French, Spanish, Irish, and English.

The American Bible Society, which furnished this information, is doing a great work among these foreign-born of New York in the distribution of Bibles in fifty-three languages among these millions of people.

William Carey once said: "Expect great things from God; attempt great things for God."

There are nearly ten million foreign students in America new, and it is said that they return to their native land with less religion than when they came. Why?

The aggregate of foreigners and their children born in the United States totals 36,000,000, or almost a third of our entire population.

What is the church of Christ doing for these people? Did you know that there are seventy-four Buddhist temples right here in Christian America? Is it anything to you?

WORK AMONG THE ITALIANS.

The only Italian mission among our brethren is in Tampa, Fla., and is partly supported by the Nashville churches. Louis Dasaro is the evangelist, and he is making some converts. He is working under the direction of the Tampa church, and is assisted in the work by this church. Brother Dasaro is widely known in the churches, especially of the South, and is exceedingly zealous and courageous, fearlessly preaching the truth to his Catholic countrymen. Some are obeying the truth and much interest is manifested. They are just now completing a new louse to be used by the church and the Italian mission at different hours.

The Tampa Italian mission is the only one of its kind among our brethren in America, and it is very poorly supported. What are you going to do about it?

WORK AMONG THE JAPANESE.

Some two and a half years ago, through the efforts of S. H. Hall and others, a mission among the Japanese was opened in Los Angeles, Cal.

Brother Ishiguro, the evangelist in this mission, was converted several years ago in Japan. He was then a student in Tokyo, but had been a student of the Bible for some years. When Brother Vincent came home, Ishiguro was left to care for the Otsuka church. Under his care this church grew to be the largest in the city of Tokyo, he having baptized more than a hundred of his fellow countrymen. Later he came to America to continue his studies, and graduated at Abilene Christian College in 1922. After finishing there, he came to Nashville and entered Vanderbilt University, which place he left to enter the work at Los Angeles, being joined by his wife and boy from Japan. By his untiring efforts he has succeeded in building up a church which meets in his own hired house.

More than fifty thousand Japanese live in Los Angeles, and many more thousands live in other cities of California. What a great opportunity to do foreign mission work at home! This work is being supported mainly by the churches at Nashville and the Central Church at Los Angeles.

Work Among the Jews.

Did God cast off his people? I wonder how many of us were ever touched by Paul's great hope, "that if the casting away of them [Israel] be the reconciling of the world, what shall the receiving of them be, but life from the dead?" Paul's prayer and heart's burden for Israel was that they might be saved. And I often think how severely we let them alone with their religion.

Somehow we feel that they will not accept Christ, but have we given them a trial?

Through the Peak and Main Streets Church, Dallas, Texas, and other faithful brethren, a Jewish mission has been started. Although the work is necessarily slow, yet some progress has been made and some have obeyed the truth; and this is no small act on the part of a Jew when you consider the intense persecution which thus becomes his lot. Many have been awakened by the earnestness and zeal of the missionary, Stephen D. Eckstein, who keeps his mission open day and night and never misses an opportunity to tell the story of Jesus, who died for them. It must be an inspiring sight to see these old fathers in Israel eagerly listening to the gospel story.

Much work has been done by this mission, and Hebrew literature has been sent out from this mission to Jews in twenty-two States. During 1924 New Testaments and tracts to the amount of three hundred and seventy-five pounds were placed in the hands of Jews through the efforts of friends who sent their names. The seed is being sown, and it is bound to bring forth fruit. Let us pray with Paul that Israel may be saved.

OTHER MISSION WORK.

Besides the work among the Japanese at Los Angeles, there is a small mission work at two other places on the Pacific coast.

There is a mission at Elmdale, Montana, among the American Indians. Brother J. O. Golphenee is the minister in charge of this work.

There is also a mission among the French Catholics in Louisiana and a Mexican mission in Abilene, Texas.

WHAT IS THE CHURCH DOING FOR THOSE IN OUR PRISONS?

It is said on good authority that 500,000 men, women, boys, and girls pass through the 7,000 penal institutions of the United States and Canada each year, and eighty per cent of them are under twenty-five years of age. Think of it! Confined in cramped prison cells, away from home and loved ones and all that life holds dear, most of them begin to think soberly. This is the time to sow the seed of the gospel. Many religious bodies with less truth than we preach are on the job night and day. O, where is the church of Christ?

The Christian Intelligencer recently made this statement: "The Roman Catholic Church in this country has budgeted $5,000,000 for spreading Catholicism in America this year, with special reference to the Southern States.

Twelve thousand red Communists meeting in Madison Square Garden, New York, recently, pledged themselves to work for Leninism and oust Christianity in this country.

O, church of Christ, awake to the perils and powers that are working against the church! Remember, the fields that were neglected in the days of the early church were the fields that brought forth the greatest enemies of the Christian religion, and we are having these enemies to fight against even until this day. Mohammedanism and Buddhism were brought forth in neglected mission fields and have become a power in the world, and at times have almost had the best of the fight.

The gospel is the power of God-unto salvation and will change all of this; but "how can they hear without a preacher," and "how can they preach except they be sent?"

Do you need any further call? God calls us; Jesus commands us. "Go ye therefore."

Stir me, O stir me, Lord, I care not how,
But stir my heart in compassion for the world.
Stir me to give, to go, but most to pray.
Stir till the blood-red banners be unfurled
O'er lands that still in deepest darkness lie,
O'er deserts where no cross is lifted high.

Write us for our new catalogue of good books. It is yours for the asking.

THE PASSING OF WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN. BY F. W. SMITH.

The writer has always had a great admiration for Mr. Bryan as a man of undoubted integrity and superior abilities. He was easily the greatest orator in the United States, and could command anywhere and at any time the largest audiences of any public speaker. No matter on what theme Mr. Bryan addressed the people, through the press or from the platform, he was always interesting and instructive. While he was a target for his political enemies, he seemed unruffled and undaunted and held tenaciously to what he believed was right and for the best interests of his country.

Whether Mr. Bryan's policies were best for the people, I presume not to say, because I know but little about politics, or the science of government. I am, however, fully persuaded that Mr. Bryan believed he was right, and that he was absolutely free from the tricks and corruption often found among political leaders.

The latter part of his life was devoted to a defense of the Bible against the attacks of its enemies, not only found in the rabble and riffraff element of the country, but also in the colleges, universities, pulpits, and religious papers. The greatest defense of the Bible against evolution and all forms of skepticism and infidelity I ever heard fell from the lips of Mr. Bryan.

I have frequently said publicly and privately that William Jennings Bryan was doing the greatest work against infidelity of any living man, and I, with perhaps millions of others, am made sad by his death.

In a private letter from M. C. Kurfees, which, by his permission, I here give, he says:

My soul is overwhelmed with grief and sorrow this morning. The sad news reached us here last night that Mr. Bryan died yesterday afternoon. In my humble judgment, no man could have been taken just now from the public life of the world who would have left a wider or sadder vacancy.

I have never taken any particular interest in Mr. Bryan's political career—at least, no more than I have taken in some others on that line; but I have taken a very particular and profound interest in his magnificent and unanswerable defense of the Bible against the onslaughts of infidelity. His fight against the insidious attacks of modern evolutionists was unequaled by that of any living man in America or Europe, and at this moment I know of no man, qualified in all respects, to take his place. I have not only read him, but have been with him face to face and have heard him. The average newspaper of the day has been marked by flings at him, but it may possibly be because most of the papers are either infidel or were afraid to meet him, or perhaps both. I pray God that his seemingly untimely death may be overruled for good. Let us join in such a prayer.

The speech that Mr. Bryan had prepared to deliver to the jury in the Scopes trial at Dayton, Tenn., will go down in history as one of the most powerful pleas for the Bible and exaltation of the word of God ever made by man. That wonderful appeal to the jury closes as follows:

That wonderful appeal to the jury closes as follows:

Again force and love meet face to face, and the question,
"What shall I do with Jesus?" must be answered. A bloody, brutal doctrine—evolution—demands, as the rabble did nineteen hundred years ago, that he be crucified. That cannot be the answer of this jury representing a Christian State and sworn to uphold the laws of Tennessee. Your answer will be heard throughout the world; it is eagerly awaited by a praying multitude. If the law is nullified, there will be rejoicing wherever God is repudiated, the Savior scoffed at, and the Bible ridiculed. Every unbeliever of every kind and degree will be happy. If, on the other hand, the law is upheld and the religion of the school children protected, millions of Christians will call you blessed and, with hearts full of gratitude to God, will sing again that grand old song of triumph:

"Faith of our fathers, living still.

"Faith of our fathers, living still,
In spite of dungeon, fire, and sword,
O how our hearts beat high with joy
Whene'er we hear that glorious word!
Faith of our fathers—holy faith—
We will be true to thee till death."

It is worse for an old man to grow sage than it is for a young one to sow wild oats.

Hardeman, president of Freed-Hardeman College, Henderson, Tenn., will do the preaching. Elam Derryberry will conduct the singing. Camping grounds free. Good lunch stand near the big tent. First-class, modern hotel just off the grounds. A wonderfully interesting place to visit. How could you spend your vacation more pleasantly or profitably? For further information, write A. E. Emmons, Pittsburg Landing, Tenn.

F. O. Howell, Haleyville, Ala., July 21: "Permit me to express my entire satisfaction in what you had to say last week about supporting the elders of a congregation in withdrawing from disorderly members of the church. You are right when you say that if a member of the church is right himself, that he will not permit the elders to withdraw from him, even though they be in the wrong; and certainly it is true that if a sister congregation desires to fellowship one who has been withdrawn from, they should first look into the case, taking it up with the elders who did the withdrawing. If these elders have made a mistake and will not correct it, they are unfit for the position they occupy. Looseness along this line has been the cause of many incurable ills among the churches throughout the land. I believe we need more teaching in our religious papers along this line. Our meeting here starts off with good interest."

- P. D. Lawson, Walnut Ridge, Ark., July 20: "I began a meeting here yesterday. Good prospects for a good meeting. This is the home of John L. Fry, one of the best preachers and debaters of North Arkansas. May God bless the Gospel Advocate and its many readers."

George W. Graves, Nashville, Tenn., July 27: "My meeting with the Union brethren was well attended. Seventeen were baptized and two were reclaimed. At present I am with the church at Philadelphia in a meeting. Both of these places are in Jackson County, Tenn."

Emmett G. Creacy, Horse Cave, Ky., July 27: "Our meeting at Rock Springs, near Celina, Tenn., closed yesterday at the water. Twenty-three were baptized into Christ and ten were restored. I visited and preached at Willow Grove and Celina while on this trip."

I. B. Bradley, Gassaway, Tenn., July 30: "I will close here to-night. Four have been added to date, and we look for others—one of these an old lady close to seventy years of age, I judge. I go to Paris, Tenn., for a few sermons, beginning on the first Lord's day in August: thence to Antioch, near Murfreesboro, Tenn., for my ninth meeting."

Willie Hunter, Tompkinsville, Ky., July 30: "I closed a ten-days' meeting at Clemonsville, in Clay County, Tenn., yesterday, with fine interest and three baptized. After filling my appointment here Sunday, I shall go to Eminence, in Tennessee, for another meeting. G. C. Brewer will begin our meeting on August 16. We are advertising and planning for a great revival."

Alonzo Williams, Murray, Ky., July 18: "From July 5 to July 14 I was at Macedonia, Tenn., preaching twice each day. Three were baptized. Following this meeting, I heard J. D. Tant, near Dresden. He is doing some excellent preaching. Hall Calhoun and Leonidas Holland will begin a tent meeting in Dresden, July 19. I go next to Sharpe, Ky. Success to the Gospel Advocate."

Leslie G. Thomas, Nashville, Tenn., August 1: "Otto Prater and I closed the Cherry Creek meeting, near Sparta, Tenn., Thursday night, with about six hundred present. In all, there were twelve additions—five baptized and seven restored. Brother Prater is a splendid song leader. He expects to return to Nashville about the first of the year, and will be glad to answer calls both for singing and preaching."

One year ago last Monday, J. C. McQuiddy departed this life. He was editor and business manager of the Gospel Advocate for forty years. He was the greatest publisher in the church of Christ in his day and time. And in addition to the great work that he accomplished as a publisher, his work as a writer and as a preacher will live and bless mankind until time's knell shall sound. Honor to his memory! And his son is more than fulfilling the fondest hopes of his father by the manner in which he has assumed the burdens he laid down and by the ability and talent that he has shown in carrying them so successfully.

L. S. White, Tioga, Texas, July 28: "I recently conducted a meeting in a school building out from Wichita Falls. This work was started up and will be looked after by one of the elders of the church. There were four additions. On the second Sunday in July I began a meeting at Bardwell, Texas, and closed it on the fourth Sunday. Homer Ferguson led the singing. There were fourteen baptized. Two of these, a father and daughter, were Catholics. The Bardwell church is doing much to sound out the word of the Lord in destitute places near by. I began a meeting in Tioga last night. Willis Kreager preaches for this church, and is doing a fine work at his own expense. B. M. Taylor is leading the songs, and is doing good work. The meeting is starting well."

KEEP FAITH.

We pity the man who has no faith
In the common run of folks,
Who picks at the flaws in man and his laws
And believes that ideals are but fokes.

We pity the man who harbors doubt And the man who scoffs at life. It is easy to tear down the things most dear; It is hard to keep faith in the strife.

We honor the man who seeks the truth
With an open heart the while;
For a question is fair, but doubt is a snare,
Which engulfs the poor soul with its guile.

We honor the men who trust in men,
Who believe that right will win,
Who are not the bad for the good to be had,
And who find more of love than of sin.

We honor the pilgrim's fearless heart
And his fearless flag unfurled,
For the light of the way to the perfect day
Is the man who keeps faith with the world.

PURSUIT OF KNOWLEDGE.

We have the testimony of the wisest men that have lived that knowledge is the price of toil. Sir Isaac Newton says that to patient industry he owes whatever of knowledge he had acquired; and the present wonder of our country, Ellihu Burritt, the "learned blacksmith," who, at less than thirty years of age, has already learned, more or less perfectly, fifty languages, and studied various branches of science, says: "All that I have accomplished or expect or hope to accomplish has been and will be by that plodding, patient, persevering process of accretion which builds the ant heap-particle by particle, thought by thought, and fact by fact." The Rev. John Todd, in his Student's Manual, a work that every seeker of knowledge should read, very appropriately remarks: "Those islands which so beautifully adorn the Pacific and which but for sin would seem so many Edens were reared up from the bed of the ocean by the little coral insect, which deposits one grain of sand at a time till the whole of those piles are reared up. Just so with human exertions. The greatest results of the mind are produced by small, but continued. efforts. I have frequently thought of the motto of one of the most distinguished scholars in the country as peculiarly appropriate. As near as I remember, it is the picture of a mountain, with a man at its base, with his hat and coat lying beside him and a pickax in his hand, and as he digs, stroke by stroke, his patient look corresponds with his words, 'Peu et peu'-' little by little.'

"He who expects that by waiting he will be able to rise by some bold stroke, will probably resemble at last the countryman who loitered on the river bank, hoping that the stream would exhaust its waters. But the young man who believes that knowledge is worth possessing, and is willing to apply his energies, has much to encourage him. He may point to some of the brightest ornaments of the nation and of the world, and tell of the time when they were poor and obscure. Roger Sherman was a shoemaker and was encumbered with the care of his widowed mother and helpless family; yet he became deeply skilled in mathematics, afterwards read law, was appointed a judge, and rose to eminence as a jurist and politician. It has been remarked of him that he never said a foolish thing in his life. General Greene, the favorite of Washington, was a blacksmith, and had only the elements of an English education given to him. 'But to him an education so limited was unsatisfactory. With such funds as he was able to raise, he purchased a small but well-selected library, and spent his evenings and all the time he could redeem from his father's business in regular study.' Benjamin Franklin, it need scarcely be said, was a practical printer, and emphatically the artificer of his own fortune. Rittenhouse, who was pronounced second to no astronomer living, was a farmer in early life, and it is said that when a boy the smooth rocks in the fields and the fences by the wayside were often covered with his arithmetical calculations. He became eminent as an astronomer and mathematician. Nathaniel Bowditch, the celebrated navigator and scholar, was poor, and enjoyed few opportunities in youth to acquire education. All his science and his fame were the fruits of persevering application. Who was Fulton, whose inventions in the application of steam power have added millions to the wealth of our country, and especially of the West? And who was Whitney, the inventor of the cotton gin, by which the wealth of the South was doubled?"

Let the industrious student read his country's history, and he will find that there are but very few of the number that have risen to eminence with the inheritance of fortune's favors; and among the living, he will find laborers and mechanics standing conspicuous in our deliberative assemblies. Youth should study, too, that they may make useful and respectable private citizens; for such as seek to store their minds with useful knowledge, and who train their reasoning powers to think efficiently, will rise, notwithstanding the frowns of fortune, if they are true to themselves and correct in their moral deportment. When we look around upon our substantial farmers, master mechanics, and prominent citizens, how large a portion were poor boys, while the worthless and dissolute are often those who commenced life under favorable auspices.

But there are difficulties in the way! Thousands would rejoice to be learned, were it not for the toil. They would gladly enjoy the gratification that wealth affords, but they are unwilling to labor for the prize. Think you that the men we have named rose to distinction without effort-or, rather, did they not climb the ascent step by step? Burritt, to whom we have already alluded, is not merely a blacksmith by profession, but a day laborer for eight hours at the anvil. William Cobbett was once a common soldier, and afterwards a member of the British Parliament. He says of himself: "I learned grammar when I was a private soldier on the pay of sixpence a day. The edge of my berth or my guard bed was my seat to study. In my knapsack was my bookcase, and a bit of board on my lap my writing table. I had no money to purchase candles or oil. In winter time it was rarely that I could get any light but that of the fire, and only my turn at that. To buy a pen or a sheet of paper, I was compelled to forego some portion of food, though in a state of starvation. I had no moment of time that I could call my own; and I had to read and write amid the talking, laughing, singing, whistling, and bawling of at least half a score of the most thoughtless of men-and that, too, in the hours of freedom from all control. And I say, if I, under circumstances like these, could encounter and overcome the task, is there, can there be, in the whole world, a youth that can find an excuse for the nonperformance?"—Selected.

DUERY DEPARTMEN

BY H. LEO BOLES

We have in the church of Christ at Huckabay, Texas, a man and his wife who have been members for several years. They have several children, some of them maryears. They have several children, some of them have ried. The man left his wife without the one scriptural cause, secured a divorce, and married another woman lived with her for six or eight months, secured a divorce from her, and married again his first wife. Are either or both of them now living in adultery? What is the duty of the church toward them? Please give any light that you may be able to give, through the Gospel Advocate.

J. H. CRABTREE.

There are two questions suggested here by the querist. (1) Are either or both of them now living in adultery? (2) What is the duty of the church toward them?

I do not think that either party as described above is now living in adultery. Of course, the husband, while separated from his lawful wife and living with the other woman, was living in adultery. But since he has left her and gone back to his legal and scriptural wife, he cannot be said to be living in adultery. He has quit his sin and should be penitent of it. If, indeed, he is penitent or has repented of it and asked God to forgive him, he has been forgiven, and, hence, is not guilty of the sin of adultery.

What is the duty of the church toward them? It is the duty of the church, if God has forgiven him, to forgive him. This will include helping and encouraging him in living the Christian life. It is the duty of the church, so far as it may be able, to strengthen him in the Christian life and shield him from temptations of like nature. It is the duty of the church, so far as it may be able, to forget and remove the shame of the sin of which he has been guity. It is the duty of the church to commend him and his good wife in the course that they are now pursuing. Thy stand in need, as never before, of the help and encowagement of the church. So often brethren and sisters male mistakes in not encouraging those who are trying to liveright. Many have been driven into deeper sin because thoe who claim to be spiritual have not come to the rescue of hose who had fallen. The strongest test of one's spiitual life is shown just at this point.

he scripture referred to above is: "He that is not with mels against me; and he that gathereth not with me scatterth. The unclean spirit when he is gone out of the ma, passeth through waterless places, seeking rest; and fining none, he saith, I will turn back into my house whnce I came out. And when he is come, he findeth it swpt and garnished. Then goeth he, and taketh to him seen other spirits more evil than himself; and they enter in Ind dwell there: and the last state of that man becometh worse than the first." (Luke 11: 23-26.) Christ is illstrating that one cannot remain neutral. "He that is ng with me is against me." Evil spirits, or demons, dwelt inhearts which were congenial. Sometimes Jesus cast thm out. The case of a demoniac who is cured and then abws himself to become repossessed is used to illustrate the case of a person who repents of his sins, but makes n effort to acquire holiness. Such a person proves the ipossibility of being neutral. He attempts to turn from Stan without seeking Christ, and so falls more hopelessly ito the power of Satan again.

In Matt. 12: 43-45 Jesus seems to apply this to the wish people. They were attempting to free themselves didolatry and sin, but would not accept the Christ. They lought to obtain self-righteousness without accepting the hrist. Jesus shows them that it is impossible to be free om sin or possess righteousness without accepting him. there is no alternative or neutral ground to occupy. If they do not accept him and his teaching, they must accept Satan.

Some have thought that it has application to the reformation begun by John the Baptist. Many received his message at first with much favor, giving promise of a general and thorough reform; but very soon the people lapsed into their own habits and cherished the delusive hope that they would be saved because of their reformation, and therefore would not have to accept Jesus as a Savior. I think that the spirit of the teaching has its application to every one to-day. If one attempts to reform without accepting Christ, his case is hopeless.

(1) In 2 Cor. 12: 2-5, who was it that was "caught up to the third heaven?" (2) Does Mark 9: 38-40 mean that there were different churches in Christ's time or not? (3) Is it right to rebuke them if we think they are wrong? (4) Please answer the foregoing questions in the next issue of the Gospel Advocate.—DAN G. KEITH, Charleston, Ark.

1. It was probably Paul. Paul seems to refer to an experience of his own, but does not use his own name, lest some might think that he was glorying in his own experiences.

2. The scripture referred to is as follows: "John said unto him, Teacher, we saw one casting out demons in thy name; and we forbade him, because he followed not us. But Jesus said, Forbid him not: for there is no man who shall do a mighty work in my name, and be able quickly to speak evil of me. For he that is not against us is for us." (Mark 9: 38-40.) It seems that the apostles were jealous. They did not want any one to exercise the authority of casting out demons but themselves. The man referred to was not an enemy of Christ, because he could not use the authority of Christ, or power, and be an enemy. No one could cast out demons in the name of Jesus except those whom Jesus had given the power, and he gave only his friends this power. It does not show that there were different churches during the life of Christ. There were different Jewish sects of religion, but there were no churches as we have them to-day. Christ built but one church, and that was his; and he gave no authority to any one to build or organize any other church.

3. Yes, it is always right to rebuke wrong and error in the spirit of Christ. Paul said: "Preach the word; be urgent in season, out of season; reprove, rebuke, exhort, with all long-suffering and teaching." (2 Tim. 4: 2.) Again, he said: "Them that sin reprove in the sight of all, that the rest also may be in fear." (1 Tim. 5: 20.) No one can be loyal to the truth without opposing error. In opposing error, the truth should be taught. rebuke, exhort, with all long-suffering and teaching." One cannot rebuke error to any great profit without teaching the truth. No one can be loyal to the church of Christ without opposing denominationalism. This should be done in meekness and long-suffering, teaching those who are in

4. Frequently we get the request that is made by this brother to print the answer "in the next issue of the Gospel Advocate." This cannot be done. The paper is usually made up some weeks before it is printed. Again, there are other questions which have been asked and must be answered in their turn. It is an unreasonable request of any paper for any one to ask that an article or an answer to a query be published "in the next issue."

There are eight hundred texts in the Bible that encourage us to rejoice and be glad, but the average man manages to manufacture something like nine hundred reasons why he should not.—Exchange.

ANOTHER GOOD MAN GONE.

BY S. H. HALL.

On Lord's-day evening, July 26, 1925, as the sun was hiding its face behind the hills in the golden west, Dr. J. J. Horton, of Elora, Tenn., closed his eyes in the long sleep of death, so far as his earthly body is concerned.

A very appropriate funeral service was conducted in the house of worship at Elora on Monday afternoon at three o'clock by T. C. Little, of Fayetteville, Tenn., and the writer, prayer being led by Brother Rozar, who was in a revival at Elora at the time, interment taking place near New Market, Ala., on Tuesday following at eleven o'clock.

We give this notice of the death of this good man because of the many who knew him and loved him. Dr. Horton labored with us in Atlanta, Ga., for one year as medical evangelist, preaching on Lord's days, holding meetings in and near the city, and doing gratis all of our medical service for the poor. This was one of the happiest years of my life, and one in which I felt we came more nearly meeting the demands of New Testament teaching in local church work. On account of his wife's health he had to give up this work and return to Elora, where he lived the most of the time until the end came.

Brother Horton practiced medicine for twenty-eight years, and was a great success in this line of work. During this time he was affiliated with the Baptist Church. Coming to know and understand the New Testament better, he ceased to affiliate with the Baptists and spent the last eighteen years of his life in the church of Christ. have never seen one more eager to get others to see the truth than Brother Horton. He was a tireless worker, and when he died he left hundreds in Christ that are there because of his teaching. He never could get away, altogether, from the practice of medicine. He was too great a success along this line, and those who knew him best always sought his advice and prescriptions when they could do so.

Brother T. C. Little meant much to Brother Horton during his two stays in the hospital at Fayetteville. He not only visited him; but when there for about three weeks before the end came, Brother Little got the church to contribute fifty dollars to help meet the expenses. It was my pleasure to solicit the interest of others in Brother Horton's behalf during his last days here on earth, Russell Street making regular monthly offerings to help him after he became unable to continue his work as an evangelist. Chapel Avenue, here in Nashville, also helped.

By the special request of Sister Horton, I incorporate in this report her sincere thanks to all the churches and individuals who stood so nobly by her as she played so well her part as a nurse to her dying husband. No husband ever had a wife who served him more devotedly and untiringly than did our dear Sister Horton do for her husband. This is a sweet consciousness that will ever bless her along life's way.

Brother Horton had just passed his sixty-fourth birthday. He is survived by his wife, three sons, two daughters, three brothers, and three sisters, with a host of friends, to mourn their loss.

It is a great thing to be a child of the King, to be faithful and loyal to him while journeying here, then to lay our armor down and go home to live in peace forever. This our brother did, so far as human hearts can judge in the light of the teaching of our Lord and the record our brother made. The Lord ever be tender to Sister Horton, and may she continue faithful to her husband's Lord, is my prayer.

THE BIBLE AND TESTAMENT FUND.

Niota, Tenn., Box 89, July 16, 1925.-Mr. S. F. Morrow, Nashville, Tenn.—Dear Brother Morrow: I saw your article in the Gospel Advocate about the Bible and Testament fund. I wish I were able to make you a large donation, but am not. We are working to establish a congregation We have our building about three-fourths done, but have no furniture and owe one hundred and seventy-seven dollars on what we have done. No painting has been done yet. Any help you could give or secure for us would be appreciated. There are only eight members here, and only appreciated. There are only eight members here, and one man. None of us are able to help much, but we do what we can. East Tennessee certainly is a mission field Churches of Christ are few for the church of Christ. Churches of Christ are few here. If we who claim to be true followers of Christ do not work harder, the infidels, denominations, and evolutionists will soon have East Tennessee, for they have a tight grip on her now.

Now, Brother Morrow, speaking of giving the Testaments away, I wish you could give us several. Just as many as you feel you can donate, our little congregation here will appreciate. Any help you could give us to interest and teach the people right certainly would be appreciated. I wish we were able to pay for fifty or a hand and Testaments to give to the needy here but we are hundred Testaments to give to the needy here, but we are not. Whenever we have any to spare, we feel that it should go for the church building and to try to finish and furnish it.

Do you know of any congregation that is able to help another and that would help us? We are few in number and need help. I hope it will not be too great a sacrifice for you to donate us several Testaments, which I hope we may be able to give to the needy and lead them aright.

Your sister in Christ, (Miss) NELLIE MAY FORREST.

I take the liberty to publish the above letter to let our readers know we are receiving many calls from litte, struggling congregations for Bibles and Testaments. If the spirit which is manifested in this letter fails to touch the hearts of those who are able to give to such a func I feel that it is almost useless for me or any one else to write more. I am glad to say that some have already found it in their hearts to give to this fund. Mr. Jores. the bookkeeper for the Gospel Advocate Company, ias notified me that he has received some money for this find and has opened up a separate account for it. In sencing contributions to this fund, mark on the envelope, "Bble and Testament Fund." This will make the work lighter on all. Remember, this is a free work on the part of all. I hope and pray that I will not have to come to you in person to beg money for such a noble cause. God in his Word says he loves a cheerful giver. This statement ias always filled my heart with joy and gladness-that, a poor, unworthy being, could do something to cause Gotto love me. What a glorious privilege it is to help the hlpless! Food and raiment are very good and should alwys be given; but when it comes to the bread of life, he precious word of God, which lives and abides foreer, Jesus says: "Heaven and earth shall pass away: but ny words shall not pass away." Let us fill the world wth the word of God, as the waters cover the sea.

To the sister whose letter appears above I would sy, as soon as we receive our Bibles and Testaments, we vill forward you some at once. I will say to all that itis almost impossible for me to answer all letters, ony through the Gospel Advocate. All letters and orders se being filed, and all contributions, the bookkeeper, M. Jones, says, will be acknowledged through the Advocas, for which I am truly thankful. S. F. Morrow.

THE MALIGNING OF MR. BRYAN.

BY F. W. SMITH.

Because W. J. Bryan proved such a stumblingblock to the infidels who assembled at Dayton, Tenn., to defend a man for violating the law of the land, he has become the object of abuse, slander, and vilification by such men as Clarence Darrow, Malone, Hays, and others.

As a specimen of Darrow's "fling" at Mr. Bryan, we have the following:

Of course I cannot help having some pity for Mr. Bryan for being obliged to show his gross ignorance by simple and competent questions asked him on the witness stand. However, I am inclined to think the public would forget its center if he stopped reminding them about it.

I was led to believe that Mr. Bryan was perfectly willing to permit evidence as to the correct interpretation of Genesis, and likewise as to what evolution meant, by the fact that I was reliably informed by a dozen newspaper men of high standing and the announcement which was generally printed that he invited the fullest investigation of evolution and religion.

Any lawyer of even ordinary ability can load himself up on technical terms and a smattering knowledge of medical science, go into court, and seemingly expose the "ignorance" of learned physicians. This is what Darrow did in his questioning of Mr. Bryan, who made no pretense either from press or platform of being a scientist, familiar with all the technical terms and writings of "scientific investigators." But Mr. Bryan, as thousands of others who believe the Bible, had read enough of the fuolish guesses of scientific evolutionists to see the absurdity of their claims.

Mr. Darrow, by some of his questions, exposed his own ignorance regarding what the Bible teaches and what Christians believe. Mr. Bryan was at Dayton to defend the Bible against the attacks of infidels, and the Christian world is satisfied with his work. It was perfectly clear that Darrow had no respect for the Bible when he termed Bryan's faith "fool religion;" and since such a characterization of the Christian religion by this defender of infidelity, he has gone even lower in the estimation of believers in the word of God.

Mr. Darrow, according to his own admission, is an agnostic, rejecting a belief in God and repudiating the Bible as a revelation from an All-wise Being. He is what is correctly termed an "atheistic" evolutionist, one who believes that man and all things else happened by chance without any prearranged order whatever.

And yet this man, who can believe that this material world, with its wonderful system and order, unity and harmony, means so perfectly and completely adapted to certain ends, came into existence by "chance," has the brazen effrontery to characterize Mr. Bryan's faith in God and in the Bible as a divine revelation as "a fool religion!" If Mr. Bryan's religion is "a fool religion," what must be the character of the religion of an "atheistic" evolutionist such as Clarence Darrow?

I speak "advisedly" in referring to Mr. Darrow's religion; for despite his boasted and egotistical espousal of agnosticism, he is as certainly a believer in and worshiper of some god as that he breathes, lives, and has his being. He is not such because he wills it so, but because he cannot help from being so. The God who made Clarence Darrow placed within him a "soul sense," or a worshiping faculty, that will as naturally express itself in the worship of some object as it is for him to breathe the air about him. He refuses to worship the true God, and, like Robert G. Ingersoll, he creates a god of his own, before which he bows and offers the homage of his soul. Ingersoll created out of the genius of Shakespeare his god, enthroned it in the affections of his heart, and held it up to the world as the model for all men and for all time.

Darrow has created out of human "intellect" and human "reason" a god after his own liking and enthroned it in his heart, notwithstanding his avowal of agnosticism to the contrary; and because Mr. Bryan would not fall down and worship Darrow's god, his religion is termed "a fool religion!"

Mr. Malone, who, in the beginning of the trial, proclaimed himself as much of a Christian and believer in the Bible as Mr. Bryan, deceived no one but himself. He has, however, shown his true colors in his unqualified indorsement of Clarence Darrow as a superior man to W. J. Bryan. Note Malone's fulsome eulogy of Darrow:

The life, the sacrifice, the great spirit of charity and Clarence, the years of service to the downtrodden which Clarence Darrow has given to his fellow men will stand contrast with the arrogant assumption of William Jennings Bryan that he is the predestined representative in the United States of all Christians. Bryan has not dared to face the issues in a court of law when he would be to face the issues in a court of law where he would be responsible for his conduct and his answers, and the people know to-day that there is more of a philosophy and love of Jesus Christ in Clarence Darrow than there is in the pretensions of William Jennings Bryan.

In the foregoing Malone palpably misrepresented Mr. Bryan as assuming to be the "predestined representative in the United States of all Christians." Mr. Bryan was simply exercising his right at Dayton and throughout the land, as a believer in the Bible and Christianity, to lift his voice against the efforts of infidels to discredit our holy religion. It is enough to cause a blush of shame to tinge the cheeks of an iron man to hear Malone speak of a man who proclaims himself an agnostic and a ridiculer of the Bible as rendering "service to the downtrodden."

If Darrow were to spend a thousand lifetimes defending criminals and defeating the ends of justice, giving all such service free, he could not compensate for the injury wrought to one soul by his infidel teachings. Darrow, Malone, nor any other defense lawyer at Dayton wanted the true issues of the case tried, but, as Mr. Bryan very correctly charged, they sought an opportunity to belittle the Bible and defend the infidel theories of evolution. Because they could not accomplish their purpose in these respects as successfully as they had hoped, they must give vent to the pent-up hatred cherished for Bryan ere the trial began.

How there can be the "love of Jesus Christ" in a man who boldly repudiates him and his word, Mr. Malone will have a hard time proving to those who believe the Bible. When it comes to drawing a contrast between Darrow, Malone, Hays, and others who defended Scopes, and the matchless Bryan, regarding their worth to the world, the very suggestion appears ludicrous.

A few celebrated criminal cases in which Darrow figured and a government position accorded Malone are the sources of the public's acquaintance with them. Of course the Dayton trial will perpetuate their names, not because of any helpful service to their fellow men, but because of the nature of the trial.

When Clarence Darrow and Dudley Field Malone's names shall have faded from the memory of man, William Jennings Bryan's name will shine on as a man who dared to stand up before the infidels of the world in defense of

No matter how much one may have differed from Mr. Bryan regarding some things he believed and practiced in religion, all must admire the purity of his life, his lofty ideals, and his courageous defense of the Bible in the hostile camp of the infidels.

Since writing the above Mr. Bryan has passed away, and the writer joins in sympathy and sadness with the millions who appreciate his defense of the Bible.

BROTHER D. J. POYNTER'S LETTER.

BY F. B. SRYGLEY.

I am in receipt of the following letter from a brother in Nebraska, whom I never saw or heard of till I saw his name in the Christian Standard a short time ago:

Albion, Neb., June 30, 1925.—Dear Brother Srygley: A friend of mine, with whom I exchange reading matter, handed me a copy of the Gospel Advocate in which you review Brother Lappin's reply to a query of mine. In conclusion you said (or words to that effect) if I was satisfied with the reply, I was easy. I imagine I am about as well satisfied as you are, judging by your review. I thought at the time it was an unfair, insinuating reply. I asked a young woman, who does not read church papers, a high-school graduate with one year in the university, to read it and tell me what it meant to her. She said: "He calls you a stubborn old crank." I asked another high-school girl to read it and tell me what she thought of it, and she said just what the other girl said. So I concluded it wasn't prejudice that made me conclude what I did about it. By your article I see I have more company. That's the trouble with all on that side of the question. I have never seen a fair one among them. I can stand it if they can, but it makes me feel sad. Why can't they be Fraternally, D. J. POYNTER. honest and fair?

Brother Poynter asked Brother Lappin what course he should pursue if the congregation where he worshiped should introduce an instrument into the worship contrary to his judgment and conscience. The brother stated that he had no prejudice against instrumental music of itself, but that he believed it was unauthorized by the Bible and that his conscience would not allow him to try to sing in the praise of God where an instrument was used. Brother Lappin answered the brother's question without giving one single quotation from the word of God, but told a story about an old brother whom he called "Uncle Billie" that had the same kind of a conscience that Brother Poynter seemed to have, and that his "gracious brethren" would dispense with the instrument on days when "Uncle Billie" came to church, and the rest of the time they used it. Brother Lappin wondered how "Uncle Billie" felt when fifty people were so gracious as to give up their right just for the sake of "Uncle Billie's" conscience. Well, from Brother Lappin's standpoint, these "gracious brethren" gave up no command of God. Then why should Brother Lappin compliment them so highly and intimate that "Uncle Billy" was so stubborn that he could not give up his conscientious convictions for the sake of the liberty of these "gracious brethren?" I told Brother Lappin if his answer satisfied Brother Poynter, then he was easily satisfied. From Brother Poynter's letter it will be seen that Lappin's answer was no more satisfactory to Brother Poynter than it was to me, and that it made the same impression on those disinterested parties that it did upon us. I know Brother Lappin is a strong man and a most pleasing writer, but this shows how weak a strong man can be when he tries to defend an unscriptural practice.

It will be noted that the weak effort of Brother Lappin to dodge the issue and not try to meet it fairly has made the impression on Brother Poynter that none of them are fair and honest in the defense of their unscriptural practice. There is no occasion for Brother Lappin's making that impression upon his readers, and my advice to him is to apologize to Brother Poynter for his ugly insinuations and try to prove his practice in the use of an instrument in worship by the word of God; and if he cannot do that, let him show by the Bible that it is right for Brother Poynter to worship God contrary to his conscience.

I am anxious to know what disposition Brother Lappin will make of this; and if I see anything further from him on the subject, I will most gladly report the same to the readers of the Advocate.

HUNTING FOR THINGS TO CRITICIZE.

BY E. A. ELAM.

When otherwise good men set their hearts on finding heresy or something to criticize, or something to which to object, they will certainly succeed, if they have to manufacture something. Some things are so palpably false that no attention should be paid to them, except to show what some brethren will do in their prejudices and partisan spirit. If they were simply ignorant, one would have patience and manifest continued perseverance in trying to instruct them. But with all explanations and instructions on teaching the Bible in schools, for instance, and on writing comments on Bible lessons, some brethren persist in misrepresenting both these good works.

The following letter, just received, is an instance of this:

Dear Brother Elam: Some of the congregation here are at strife over the use of your Bible "Notes." The opposing ones, led by pretty strong men, raise up all the objections that can be thought of, one of which is a rumor that your work has to, or does, go before the International Sunday School Board. ("of sectarians") to be censored and passed upon by said board.

I wish you would write me just what relation you have,

in your work, with that board.

There is much discussion about it, and none of us are sure so as to answer those objections, only to tell them that it does not hurt the "Notes." And write me any other advice or suggestion you see proper. Please write me at once. Yours in Christ,

A little previous to this one, another letter from another State was received asking about a similar misrepresentation, stating in substance that "The International Sunday-school Lesson Committee" furnishes the comments on the lessons of my "Notes."

Nothing can be further from the truth or more palpably false than these two letters. The "sectarianism" complained of is found in its rankest form in these letters. It is a shame for the veriest sectarians to complain of sectarianism. These statements show the profoundest ignorance of "The International Sunday-school Lessons." This committee does not know me, has never heard that I prepare comments on the lessons, and certainly has nothing to say in regard to what I write—not a thing more than the Methodist Conference, or Presbyterian Assembly, or General Convention of the Christian Church, or the Catholics or the Mormons.

Speaking ironically, of course, those who are so ignorant and so sectarian as to make the above declarations are in justice and honesty (!) the most competent ones to teach the Bible either privately or publicly.

"The International Sunday-school Lesson Committee" is composed of men of different denominations. It selects only the "Lesson Texts"—that is, the scriptures to be studied in the lesson-and furnishes only this to any one who is disposed to write comments on the lesson or to preach a sermon on this text. It is no more than some member of some denomination, or some one of no denomination at all, asking me to preach a sermon or to write an article on "The New Birth," or "The Work of the Holy Spirit," or "What Must I Do to Be Saved?" or "The Elders," or any other subject. If a sinner should ask me to preach on any Bible subject, should I do it? Yes. But my sermon, or article I might write, on the subject would be no more subject to the sinner's approval than are my comments on the lesson to this International Committee.

"The International Sunday-school Lessons," for the purpose used, furnish the best uniform series for a complete study of the whole Bible—that is, from Genesis to Revelation-known to me.

Following this course of study and reading the intervening chapters, pupils will be carried through the whole Bible in six or eight years. Every one who desires to know or to teach the will of God in its fullness will study and teach the whole Bible.

Beginning with 1926, this committee furnishes a new series of lessons of six years, beginning with Genesis and ending with Revelation. It says:

It will be noted that during the six years the entire Old It will be noted that during the six years the entire Old Testament is to be studied in chronological order, with a quarter devoted to Genesis alone. Four important and interesting topical courses are offered: "Studies in the Christian Life," "Some Great Christian Doctrines," "Some Social Teachings of the Bible," and "Some Great Men and Women of the Bible." Each of the four Gospels is studied in its entirety, three months being given to John, six months to Mark, six months to Matthew, and six months to Luke. Besides, the course of three months on "The Life and Letters of Peter" will furnish a rapid survey of the Gospels. The Acts and the Epistles are studied three times, once in the three months on "The Life on "The Life and Letters of Peter" will furnish a rapid survey of the Gospels. The Acts and the Epistles are studied three times, once in the three months on "The Life and Letters of Peter," once in the six months on "The Life and Letters of Paul," and again in the six months on "The Spread of Christianity," which includes the Revelation. It will be noted further that this cycle of studies is not allowed at any time to get far from the central theme of all our Bible study, the life of the world's Redeemer and its extension in the history of the early church.

For our further information this committee says:

This six-year cycle, subject to such modification as may be thought best in the progress of the work of lesson making, is as follows:

January-March, 1926-The Message of the Gospel According to John.

April-June, 1926—Messages from Genesis.

July-December, 1926—Early Leaders of Israel: From Moses to Samuel.

January-March, 1927—Studies in the Christian Life.
April-June, 1927—The Life and Letters of Peter.
July-December, 1927—Early Kings and Prophets of Israel: From Samuel to Isaiah.

January-June, 1928-The Gospel of the Son of God: Studies in Mark.

July-December, 1928—The Life and Letters of Paul. January-March, 1929—Some Great Christian Doc-

April-September, 1929—Later Leaders of Judah: From Isaiah to Nehemiah.

October-December, 1929-Some Social Teachings of the January-June, 1930-The Gospel of the Kingdom: Studies in Matthew.

July-December, 1930-Some Great Men and Women of the Bible.

January-June, 1931-Jesus the World's Savior: Studies in Luke.

July-December, 1931—The Spread of Christianity: Studies in Acts, the Epistles, and the Revelation.

This shows what the lessons will be for the next six years. This, with the lesson text, is all the committee furnishes. We do not have to use this if we choose not to. I sometimes change the subject and add something in the Scriptures to the lesson text.

This is a good uniform series of Bible studies, which we can use or not as we choose. It is far better than the haphazard way of no system at all.

One advantage of this to all congregations using this series of lessons is all study the same lesson at the same time; and when one goes from one congregation to another or from one State to another, one finds the same lesson. Besides, all denominations studying the same lesson at the same time may have a tendency to cause all to more nearly think and speak the same thing.

Let it be stated and fully understood that these series of lessons furnish only one way or method of studying and teaching the Bible. There are other methods and no methods at all. It is wrong to attempt to force a congregation to give up one way of studying and teaching the Bible for some other way not so good or for no way at all. Still, if one objects to the use of this series of lessons and the comments upon them and prefers simply to read from the Bible, a congregation should not be disturbed and divided over it; but he who objects to this series of lessons and comments thereon should himself never make a comment on any line in the Bible, or tell where a place is located, or the time when any event occurred, etc.; for an oral comment is no more scriptural than a written one, and less apt to be correct.

What is meant by "just taking the Bible?" It certainly does not mean to take anything any man, learned or ignorant, wise in his own conceits, presumptuous, who does not really study the Bible, or who never read the New Testament through one time in his life, may say about the Bible, or any teaching of the Bible, or any theory of his own, as the veritable word of God; it means to really study the Bible on "all things that pertain unto life and godliness "-ALL, not a few-" the whole counsel of God "in order to learn the will of God, that IT-not anything else-with nothing added thereto and nothing subtracted therefrom-may be accepted, and in order to obey it day by day in all affairs of life. It does not mean for some man, learned or ignorant, to stand before a class or an audience, although with Bible in hand, and tell what he thinks a passage means, especially when what he thinks is as far from the truth as the two letters above show that some are. To "just take the Bible" means "putting away falsehood" and speaking "truth each one with his neighbor" (Eph. 4: 25); that slander, fraud, deception, self-conceit, drunkenness, fornication, dishonesty, idleness, etc., are disobedience to God and lead to perdition. There are thousands of church members, to our distress, who do not "just take the Bible" on many subjects of everyday life or of public service-for example, home building and home-keeping, modest apparel, carnal warfare and bloodshed, loving one's neighbor as oneself, loving one's enemies, doing good for evil, paying debts and meeting all other obligations, caring for widows and orphans, honoring father and mother, helping the needy, the qualifications and work of elders, covetousness, laying by one in store according to the prosperity of God, the everyday life of the church, and many other duties and blessings. Many young preachers now, scarcely out of their swaddling clothes, who are "located" with some church as "the minister," having charge of affairs, etc., are not "justtaking the Bible," neither are the elders of such church or the church itself. So here they go "just taking the Bible." "Speaking where the Bible speaks and being silent where it is silent," or "just taking the Bible," has become with many only a partisan doctrine. It means with all such only to do as they please in daily life, to teach their own notions and vain conceits, and to ignore much of what the Bible does teach.

WORD FROM WASHINGTON.

BY T. B. LARIMORE.

The Arlington National Cemetery is on the Virginia hills opposite the Lincoln Memorial, and from many points in Washington City the white-pillared Arlington mansion and the Memorial Amphitheater are plainly seen, crowning the green slopes of the hills across the Potomac.

Long ago, in colonial days, Arlington was the property of the Custis family, literally one of "the first families of Virginia," the head of the family, John Custis, having bought the tract of eleven hundred and sixty acres early in the eighteenth century. The property descended to his son, Daniel Parke Custis, who, at his death, left a beautiful young widow and two children. The widow married a young officer in the Colonial Army, George Washington by name, and the family went to live at Mount Vernon, Washington's estate, fifteen miles down the river. Arlington was cared for and kept up by the Washingtons till John Parke Custis was of age. The property had been entailed to him by his father. The daughter of Mrs. entailed to him by his father. Washington died early, but the son lived, married, and served upon the staff of his stepfather during the latter part of the Revolutionary War. He died in 1781, leaving an infant son and daughter, who were adopted and deeply loved by George Washington.

The children retained the Custis name, however. The daughter was the Nelly Custis whose name is seen so often among the historic mementos at Mount Vernon. The son, George Washington Parke Curtis, inherited and took possession of Arlington and erected the mansion that stands there now, completing it in 1803.

The Custis family lived at Arlington, beautifying and improving the estate and dispensing a generous hospitality, till the death of Mrs. Custis in 1853 and the death of her husband in 1857, when the estate fell to their only surviving child, a daughter who had married a young army officer, Robert E. Lee, and Arlington became the home of the Lees.

When the Civil War came on, Colonel Lee, though personally opposed to secession, deemed it his duty to follow his State out of the Union; hence, he resigned his commission in the United States Army and, April 22, 1861, rode away from Arlington to cast his fortunes with the Southern Confederacy, and, it is said, never saw the place again. The furniture in the house was not taken away when the family left, and when, almost immediately after Lee's departure, Federals took possession of the premises, everything of historic value, including many Washington mementos and memorials, was seized by the government, and much of it is now to be seen in the National Museum here and at Mount Vernon.

The estate could not be confiscated, because of its being entailed; but it was sold for nonpayment of taxes, and the government bought it for twenty-six thousand one hundred dollars. A camp and a hospital were established there, and, as the war went on and battles were fought, the Washington cemeteries became crowded and the slopes of Arlington began to be used for a military cemetery. Strange to say, the first grave made there was for a Confederate soldier who died in the hospital. In 1877, George Washington Custis Lee, son of Gen. Robert E, Lee, and heir to the estate under the will of his grandfather Custis, entered suit against the government for the property, attacking the validity of the tax sale, and finally won his suit in the Supreme Court of the United States. He at once transferred his restored rights to the government for one hundred and fifty thousand tollars, which was paid him in 1884.

That decision is cited as an instance of the absolute freedom of the Supreme Court from sectional prejudice. A former Confederate soldier, son of the commander in chief of the Confederate forces, was suing the government, against which he had so recently fought, for the restoration of property seized during the war and then used for a military burying ground. But the Supreme Court, unbiased by these facts, decided the suit in his favor and restored to him the title to the property.

So much for the history of Arlington. The mansion is on the brow of a hill overlooking the Potomac, two hundred feet below and half a mile distant. The house is a tine example of the architecture of that day, with its large rooms, wide halls, and long front portico with immense white pillars. The view from that portico is one of unexcelled beauty, and has been so considered since the days when Lafayette enjoyed the hospitality of the Custis home. From no other place have I been so impressed with a view of the capital city as from the heights of Arlington. Immediately below is the stately Potomac, and across its placid waters are Georgetown and Washington, while far to the north are the white towers of the Soldiers' Home, and the spires of Alexandria to the south. The Capital and the National Cemetery are now closely connected, and when the great memorial bridge which is now under construction shall cross the Potomac from the Lincoln Memorial to the slopes of Arlington, they will be even more closely connected, and the bridge will be what its name indicates-a great memorial commemorating the union of the North and the South.

The grounds at Arlington are beautifully kept and adorned, with shrubs and flowers in graceful profusion; but nature has done much more than art to make it a beautiful spot, with its green slopes and ravines and hill-sides crowned with forest growth.

Arlington House contains little that is of interest. The rooms to the right of the entrance are used by the superintendent of the grounds. In the room to the left, formerly the main drawing-room, is kept a register where visitors are requested to record their names. On the walls are plans of the cemetery and framed copies of addresses and orations, among them Lincoln's famous speech at Gettysburg. It has been suggested that as much as possible of the furniture formerly in the mansion be collected there again and other furniture of that period added, until the house shall present something of its former appearance.

Immediately in front of the house is a flagstaff from which "Old Glory" floats from sunrise each day till the sunset gun at Fort Myer, near by, echoes from shore to shore of the river. South of the house is an open circular colonnade surmounted by a low domed roof, on the cornice of which appear the names of Washington, Lincoln, Grant, and Farragut, and on the columns are inscribed the names of Thomas, Meade, McPherson, Sedgewick, Reynolds, Humphreys, Garfield, and Mansfield. At various points in the grounds are bronze tablets inscribed with stanzas from Col. Theodore O'Hara's poem, "The Bivouac of the Dead."

Charles L'Enfant, the French architect who laid out the city of Washington, is buried immediately in front of Arlington House. The space east of the house is devoted to the graves of officers, and many stately monuments are there; but more impressive than even these are the Fields of the Dead, where the graves of the soldiers of the Civil War, each marked with a plain headstone, whereon is inscribed the name of the soldier, his State, and the number by which he is enrolled on the roster kept by the War Department, stretch away in seemingly endless lines, row after row—sixteen thousand graves of men who wore the blue in our great war we call the "Civil War."

Another section of the cemetery holds the graves of Confederate dead, the tall monument of which was provided by the women of the South, through the Daughters of the Confederacy. The presence of such a monument there speaks very eloquently of the reunion of those once opposing hosts into one people, citizens of a common country, living under one flag. When this monument was erected in June, 1914, the Grand Army of the Republic and the United Confederate Veterans united in the dedication ceremonies.

The dead of other wars than the Civil War sleep at Arlington. Eleven Revolutionary officers are buried there, and many soldiers of the War with Spain and of the World War. The victims of the destruction of the battleship Maine, in Havana harbor, and several hundred soldiers who lost their lives in Cuba and Porto Rico during the Spanish-American War are buried in the southern part of the cemetery. Their monument is a group consisting of the mast, the anchor, and a cannon from the ill-fated battleship.

In 1923 the dead buried in Arlington Cemetery numbered thirty-three thousand two hundred and twenty-five, but the number is constantly increasing, of course. In accordance with a privilege granted to wives and daughters of soldiers buried there, many women are buried in Arlington beside husband or father.

The Memorial Amphitheater, dedicated in 1920, was erected mainly through the efforts of the Grand Army of the Republic, as a memorial to the soldiers of all our wars, and also to provide an assembly place for the many who visit Arlington on Decoration Day. It is a white marble, open-air structure, similar to the Roman amphitheaters, covers a space of thirty-four thousand square feet, and seats five thousand, there being room for several thousand more in the colonnades, and the stage will accommodate several hundred persons. The eastern side of the amphitheater looks toward Washington, and just across the roadway from the eastern front is the tomb of the Unknown Soldier, a plain square sarcophagus of white marble, absolutely unmarked. But hundreds of people visit that tomb every day, and I have never seen it when there were not wreaths of flowers on and about it, all-high and low, rich and poor, home-born and foreigners-being seemingly desirous of bestowing honor upon the unknown sleeper there and the thousands of unknown dead he represents.

All cemeteries are places of sadness, but Arlington National Cemetery is especially so because a vast majority of the bodies buried there died in the bloom of youth or in the strength of mature young manhood. The aged must die. The time of their departure is always at hand. The young may die, but we naturally expect them to live. When war marshals its hosts, however, and marches them to battle, that order is reversed. Then the physically strongest, fittest, and best young men send each other to the grave. May the Lord hasten the day when war shall cease to be.

The body of William Jennings Bryan, our great national advocate of peace, who has just passed away, will rest on the summit of the highest hill in Arlington, near the graves of thousands of American youths who lost their lives in the World War. In the midst of our sorrow at his passing, we rejoice that the peace he so earnestly desired crowns our country to-day.

Christ's commandments are not harsh, hard laws, but the revealing to us of Christ's character.—L. K. Smith.

From the Brethren

Woodlawn, Tenn., July 24.—Brother F. P. Taylor and I closed a meeting at Taylor's Grove on July 10. There were four baptized and one took membership. Interest was good. Brother C. H. Baker conducted a meeting at Mount Zion, this (Montgomery) county, July 12-20, with fourteen baptized, three from other religious bodies, and two restored. I assisted in part of the meeting. I go next for a meeting at Dog Creek, in Cheatham County.—J. J. Reynolds.

Water Valley, Ky., July 21.—My mission meeting at Wager, Ark., is history. The crowds met under the brush arbor in great numbers, estimated at five hundred. Four were baptized. I will return to them next year, the Lord willing. I am in Kentucky for two meetings—at Water Valley and Pilot Oak; then to Tennessee for two—at Knob Creek and Pleasant View; and from there to Arkansas for two—at Cave Springs and Rogers. I have calls for more work, but cannot do it.—W. T. Hines.

Cleveland, Tenn., July 25.—I closed a week's meeting with the congregation at Dalton, Ga., Sunday, July 19, with fourteen baptisms and two restorations. I began at Palmer's Chapel, in Sumner County, Thursday evening, July 23. I will be here over Sunday, August 2. From here I go to Brownsboro, Ala., where I am to begin on August 3. I am always delighted wherever I stop to find that the Gospel Advocate is a regular visitor in that home. I wish its pages were being read weekly by every member of the body of Christ.—W. S. Phillips.

Columbus, Miss., July 20.—On July 6 I began a meeting at Steens, Miss., and closed it on Saturday following. The house was full every night to the close, with fair day audiences. One reclaimed and one by membership. On July 12 I began another meeting at Bankston, Ala., closing on the following Friday night. The attendance and interest increased to the close. There were at least four hundred people at the closing service. There were no visible results. A. M. Plyler, of Jasper, Ala., came on Monday and led the songs. He is a splendid song leader and an able young preacher. It is hoped that much good may yet come of this meeting.—J. W. Howell.

Lake City, Fla., July 25.—The meeting conducted at Cherry Sink by the writer, beginning on July 4, closed on July 19, with two sermons and dinner on the ground. We had a good average attendance, considering that we labored under very unfavorable conditions, and God blessed our labors with some visible results. The church was set in order by the appointing of two elders and two deacons, and the midweek prayer meeting and song practice was revived. Two young men made the good confession and were baptized. Judging by expressions from the members, my work was pleasing to them. Many asked me to return at some future time, which it will be my pleasure to do. The home of Brother and Sister J. C. Blitch was my home while there, and a good one it proved to be.—J. O. Barnes.

DAVID LIPSCOMB COLLEGE NASHVILLE, TENNESSEE

Hildreth, Fla., July 14.—Brother Frank Baker, of Berry, Ala., began a meeting with the church of Christ a meeting with the church of Christ at Burlington, Fla., on June 26, and continued it twelve days, with good crowds and good attention, but no visible results. Brother Baker then moved to Santa Fé, three miles from this place, and held a five-days' meeting, with five additions by baptism. The little congregation was left in a much better condition spiritually. Brother Baker was a stranger here at his coming, but he leaves here with the love and best wishes of the best people. Brother Baker goes from here to Pensacola. We hope to have him with us again.—W. L. Fuller.

him with us again.—W. L. Fuller.

Celina, Tenn., July 24.—I will make a short report of the work here and some work I have done in Jackson County, Tenn. Brother Marion Harris baptized one here at Celina last week. Brother Will J. Cullum preached here last Sunday night. All seemed pleased with the sermon. The Knight brothers are in a meeting at Cave Spring, near here, with fair audiences. Emmett Creacy is in a good meeting at Rock Springs, in this county. There have been quite a number of additions. I preached six times at Cave Spring the last of June and baptized one. I began a meeting and baptized one. I began a meeting at Big Branch, in Jackson County, which resulted in five baptisms and three restorations. One of these had been a Methodist since childhood; another was the first to leave the Methodist ranks of her father's family. Both were married ladies. On the second Lord's day in July I began a meeting at the Forks of Finn's Creek, in Jackson County, which resulted in four baptisms and eight restorations. This was the third meeting for me at that place in the last four years. I will begin a meeting at Arcot Schoolhouse to-morrow night. This is a large, new schoolhouse near Celina.—L. L. Yearley.

Ludlow, Ky., July 26.—About four years ago twelve members established a congregation of the church of Christ in Covington, Ky., in the Moose Temple, on the third floor. We have struggled hard, trying to have the gospel preached in its purity and simplicity in this wicked city, surrounded by many denominations, among which are a number of Catholics. We have been blessed, have reached a goodly number of people, and, with the help of the Southern churches, have bought a nice lot in a good location. But we are not financially able to build. We could accomplish so much more if we were on the first floor, as it is very hard to reach the people where we are. I am writing a number of preachers, asking them to help us in this great work. Any donation sent will be appreciated. Address me at 207 Park Avenue, Ludlow, Ky.—Bessie Corman. are not financially able to build.

FREED-HARDEMAN COLLEGE

OUTLOOK BRIGHT

"Day by day in every way" the prospect for next session grows brighter. As the summer advances and the opening date approaches the interest grows greater. "Well, you are looking for a great school next year at Henderson, I suppose," and "I am sure the school at Henderson is going to be great next year" are common expressions wherever members of the faculty go. The writer of this has heard them in Florida, Michigan, and Texas. The interest and confidence in the future success of the school seems to be general.

WHY NOT?

Why should it not succeed? There is every reason why Freed-Hardeman College should enter upon a new and greater era of usefulness. It is founded upon the right principles and stands for the right things. While surrendering none of its educational ideals, it has met all requirements for recognition. It has been approved by the State Department of Education and it has been admitted into the Tennessee Association of Colleges. Its faculty, buildings, equipment, and curriculum meet every test and requirement.

IMPROVEMENTS

Several thousand dollars are being spent this summer on improvements. The buildings are all being gone over and painted afresh both within and without, new furnaces are being installed, more classrooms are being added, the blackboards are being resurfaced, the girls' dormitory is being renovated from basement to garret, and new furnishings added; in short, the whole plant is being made fresh, clean, and attractive for the opening.

THE FACULTY

The most important factor in any school is its faculty. They mold and shape its character and carry out its ideals. Just think of the men at the head of Freed-Hardeman College—Hardeman and Calhoun! Where will you go to find their superiors? Among the great teachers and preachers, who will surpass them? Among all the brethren, where is there a greater scholar than Calhoun? Younger and less widely known, but one of the best school men in the State, is C. P. Roland, dean of the College. Other members of the faculty are graduates of standard colleges and universities. Men and women of Christian character, scholarship, ability, and experience make up the faculty. They are specialists in their lines of work.

THE BIBLE PRE-EMINENT

While the work in every line and in all departments is thoroughly and conscientiously done and is as good as the best, yet it is in the teaching of the Bible and the training of young men to preach the gospel that Freed-Hardeman College stands out preëminent and par excellent. Here are teachers that have every qualification—love for the truth, knowledge of the Book, soundness in the faith, experience, scholarship, etc. Three of the Bible teachers have traveled and studied in Egypt and the Holy Land. Two of them have spent more than twenty years teaching the Word in the schoolroom, and they stand in the frent rank of all the great preachers of the ancient gospel. So where could any one go to get better instruction in the word of God or better preparation for preaching it? It is our honest opinion that no school offers a more thorough, scholarly, or finished course of instruction in the Bible than Freed-Hardeman College. It stands for the Bible, and the Bible alone, in all matters of faith and practice, work and worship, with no hobbies or cranky notions of any kind.

The new catalogue, covering all the work of the school, expenses, etc., will be mailed at once upon request.

OBITUARIES

McLAIN.

Sister Lake McLain died at the home of her mother, Mrs. J. E. McLain, Lawrenceburg, Tenn., on February 5, 1925. She had been in very poor health for some time, and her death was not unexpected. Funeral services were held at the church of Christ in Lawrenceburg, where she delighted so much to go, by the writer, followed by interment in Mimosa Cemetery. Lake was a sweet, Christian girl, and loved by all who knew her. She had just blossomed into young womanhood when she was stricken with a fatal disease. She became obedient to the faith early in life and remained true to her calling until death. Her last days were filled with hope and love. She kept her Bible on the bed with her. It was her daily companion as long as she was able to read. It is good to know and associate with such kindred spirits. She surely was in possession of that love that can suffer long and be kind. A beautiful life with a happy ending. We offer sympathy to the bereaved ones. Thomas C. King.

GEERS.

Mrs. Sarah Cleveland Geers was born on February 13, 1869, and died on January 1, 1925. She was the only daughter of Sister Nancy Cleveland, who, with three brothers, survives. She was married, about twenty-five years ago, to J. B. Geers, who preceded her to the grave about one year. Sister Geers obeyed the gospel at the age of fourteen years, and for about thirty-five years was a member of the Foster Street congregation, of Nashville, Tenn. It was my privilege to live a neighbor to Sister Geers and worship in the same congregation for a number of years, and she was always willing and ready to do her part in every good work. The aged mother, who is now very sick, has lost a devoted daughter, who so lovingly cared for her, and the three brothers have lost a loving sister. May God bless them, and may they ever live true, Christian lives, as we feel sure Sister Geers lived, that when they are called upon to leave this home they may be able to say: "I have fought the good fight, I have finished the course, I have kept the faith: henceforth there is laid up for me the crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give to me at that day; and not to me only, but also to all them that have loved his appearing." (2 Tim. 4: 7, 8.)

DICKSON.

Some thirty-seven years ago, near Troy, Tenn., a little daughter, Elsie, was born into the family of Brother George Tucker and wife. With an obedient disposition worthy of emulation this little girl grew into young womanhood. When Brother John R. Williams aided some half dozen brethren in establishing a congregation near by, known as "Mount Zion," Miss Elsie Tucker soon became "obedient unto the faith," being "born again" into the family of our Heavenly Father. In this family she was content to abide till death, early was content to abide till death, early in the morning of December 18, 1924. With Brother J. E. Acuff assisting in prayer, the writer conducted services at the home in Nashville, Tenn., and also at the home of her parents in Obion County, after which her mortal remains were laid to rest in the family burying ground. Some fifteen years ago Sister Elsie was married to one of our noble teacher-preacher brethren, Brother James W. Dickson. Two children (Trice and Bettie Meade), a husband, father, mother Meade), a husband, father, mother, two sisters, and a brother, besides relatives and friends, were left to mourn their loss. Brother and Sister Dickson lived in the house with Mrs. White and me soon after their man White and me soon after their mar-riage, and Brother Dickson taught riage, and Brother Dickson taught with me the last school I ever taught. I know she was a "worthy woman," a loving mother, a devoted wife, a helpful friend and neighbor, a consecrated Christian. She bore her sufferings for more than two years with unusual patience, always greeting her many friends with a smile. She was anxious that her husband give himself more and more to preaching the glorious gospel. What a blessed thought in this age of perversion of woman's sphere and work as ordained by the Lord!

CHURCH HOUSE NEEDED.

BY W. M. OAKLEY.

One year ago we succeeded in getting a few Christians to covenant themselves together at Buffalo Valley, Tenn., to keep house for the Lord. They have been faithful to meet in the loft of an old storehouse the past year. We are now making a great effort to build a nice (but modest) house in which to worship. A lot has been secured, paid for, and the little band (though poor in this world's goods, but "rich in faith") have gone about to build before winter. They have subscribed in work and money something over one thousand dollars. They are not able to complete their house without help from congregations and individuals round about. Somebody helped you; won't you help us? Time, money, and preaching have been wasted here for twenty years because of no place to meet. Will not all who read this send a contribution to this worthy cause? The cause of our dear Lord demands it. Send direct to Dr. S. Denton, chairman of the building committee, Buffalo Valley, Tenn. Restrictive clause is in the deed. We would also like to be put in touch with some secondhand seats. Anything you may do will be greatly appreciated. And may the Lord bless you.

BIBLE CROSS WORD PUZZLE

THE two long words at the top and bottom of the crosses are so easy to get that they immediately furnish clues to as many vertical words as each has letters. The other nine-letter words at the side are equally simple, and thus you have your puzzle almost finished when it is well started.

How to Solve a Cross Word Puzzle © 1925 THE J.C.W. CO.

© 1925 THE J.C.W. CO. How to Solve a Cross Word Puzzle

To work out this puzzle, the white spaces must be filled with letters forming words answering to the various horizontal and vertical definitions given below. The horizontal and vertical words are not the same, but each gives a clue to the other. The first letter of each word is indicated by a number which refers to the definitions listed below.

It is advisable to first fill in, in both directions, those words which you know to be correct. These will furnish hints to those words which you do not know or had merely guessed at. When the puzzle is solved correctly, the letters in the white spaces will spell words both horizontally and vertically. The black spaces are the blind spots of the puzzle and merely form the pattern, incidentally designating the ends and beginnings of the words contained in the puzzle.

COMMENDATIONS OF BIBLE LESSON HELPS

- "I am delighted with your Lesson Helps, and regard them as the best I have examined." (C. W. Thompson.)

- "We are using your Sunday-school Lesson Helps at Fairfax church of Christ, this city, and think they are good. We have no criticism to offer." (M. P. Lowry.)
- "I am glad to commend the Bible Lesson Helps issued by the Gospel Advocate Company. They cannot fail of being helpful to any church using them." (C. A. Norred.)
- "The Quarterlies are fine. They should be a great help to the Bible student. I would be glad if Bible classes that do not now have them would take up their use." (R. F. Cuff.)
- "Your Quarterlies received and briefly examined. They show that much time and care have been exercised in their preparation. They are clear, scriptural, and to the point." (E. L. Whitaker.)
- (E. L. Whitaker.)

  "I think the Quarterlies very instructive and helpful in the study of the Scriptures both in the home and in the public assembly, and it will give me pleasure to comment them to all the faithful workers in my field of labor." (J. D. Jones.)
- "The Sunday-school literature that is published by the Gospel Advocate Company I can heartly recommend to any one who is in search for good helps on our Sunday-school lessons." (Robert E. Wright.)
- "A complete assortment of the Sundayschool literature published by the Gospel Advocate Company was sent me recently. Having examined it carefully, I am glad to say I consider it excellent, and gladly commend it to congregations, teachers, and classes." (T. B. Larimore.)
- "As a whole, I think your Lesson Helps far surpass other literature of its kind. Here in this great mission field (Louisiana) where we have placed them, many comparisons have been made between them and both the denominational and our society brethren's literature, and at no time have your Lesson Helps come, off second best." (C. C. McQuiddy.)
- "It is a pleasure to write a word of commendation of Brother Elam's Notes on Bible School Lessons. They are the product of case who has given the greater part of his life to the study and teaching of God's Word. They are true to the Bible, comprehensive, and scholarly. If you love the truth, you will be delighted to study with him these wonderful lessons." (A. G. Freed.)
- "Brother E. A. Ellam's Notes, as published annually, is, in my judgment, sertatural and the best thing of its kind I have ever seen or that is published to-day. Everybody ought to have a copy and preserve it for study and reference. Brother Elam's twenty-five years' work, if every years should be bound in a separate volume, the twenty-five volumes would be a great addition to any library. (C. M. Pullias.)

For a great number of years the writer of this has felt that Brother Elam was one of the best-prepared men in the brotherhood for the preparation of such literature. His Notes, in our best judgment, represent, or reflect, the best efforts he has ever made. Both as an elder of the congregation and as a teacher in our Bible School, I have very great pleasure in indorsing his Notes. To the extent that an expression of our views is of value, I assure you we are very pleased to give it." (J. G. Wilkinson.)

  "I have used Elam's Quarterlies for years. They are superior to any that I have seen. Elam's Notes on Bible School Lessons are much fuller than they. They give the historical setting as to time and place that is needed and valuable. They give so many scriptural citations and references—Scriptural citations and references—Scriptures that introduce the text or corroborate the text—that the average student may know the geography, the history, and the full meaning of the lesson. They give so many lessons, deducted from the copious citations of Scriptures, that the student may know more perfectly God's will. For years I have used Peloubet's Select Notes. I compare them weekly. I do not hesitate to say that Elam's Notes are infinitely superior, if you want to know the Bible." (C. F. Holt.)

From the Brethren

Muskogee, Okla., July 24.—We had Brother Al Hopkins, of Henryetta, Okla., with us on July 19, and enjoyed his two discourses very much. Last night Brother G. W. O'Neal, of Clarita, Okla., stopped over with us while passing through Muskogee. Our regular order of services was dispensed with and he delivered a very fine sermon. Brother Allen is away in meetings at this time, but our away in meetings at this time, but our work is going on nicely, and the atwork is going on nicely, and the attendance is encouraging. All are getting ready for the meeting Brother McClung is to hold for us in October. We meet each Sunday morning and evening and Thursday night, and welcome any brethren passing through Muskogee to meet with us. The church is located at the corner of C and Kankakee Streets.—C. Maynard. C. Maynard.

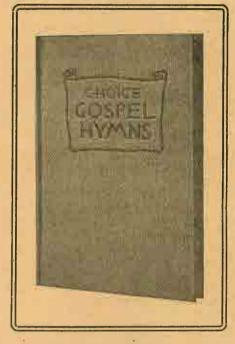

Tupelo, Miss., July 24.—The meeting here has made good progress this week. The little band of loyal brethren here have just finished a comfortable, attractive meetinghouse. An article appeared a few weeks back telling of their past treatment and how much they had sacrificed. They have used economy and good judgment in building their house, but will have to raise a considerable amount of have to raise a considerable amount of money before paying out of debt. Although they have been meeting in the courthouse for a number of years the courthouse for a number of years and have had this building in view for some time, they have responded readily to calls for assistance from other places. I ask the readers of this article to retrospect. Perhaps some of you have had assistance in a time of need. If so, you will be moved to mail a check to Brother T. D. Long, Tupelo, Miss., to assist in a like cause. We have had one addition to date, and interest is growing.—C. P. Roland.

Moore Haven, Fla., July 22.—We are trying to establish a congregation on the New Testament plan at this place. I am now living here, and shall spare no means I have to establish a church. Moore Haven is a new town in a new country, the county seat of a new county (Glades). Everything is booming. Land is selling every day. Three-fourths of the men and half the women are in the real estate business. Seven of the denominations have established congregations, none over seven years old. In the midst of all this rush it is no easy the midst of all this rush it is no easy problem to get people to stop and think of the simple plan of saving men and women from sin and ruin. I have bought a meetinghouse for one thousand dollars. I paid two hundred and fifty dollars on this building and tot and government and for the and fifty dollars on this building and lot and gave my personal note for the balance. I believe the brethren of the church of Christ will help me pay this. I shall write no personal letters or appeals for help, but will write each giver a personal letter of thanks about November 1. I shall be busy all the summer and fall. I have two debates planned with Adventists for September or October.—John B. Peden.

GOSPEL ADVOCATE

The GOSPEL ADVOCATE is the oldest living periodical published in the interest of the church of Christ. It is now in its sixty-seventh volume, and it has a larger list of regular, paid-up subscribers than it has ever had before. Its circulation is increasing rapidly, and it is daily growing in favor with the people. It contains twenty-four pages, and is issued every week. It is printed in large, clear type, on good paper, and is neatly pasted and trimmed. It has by far the largest circulation of any periodical published south of the Mason and Dixon Line in the interest of the church of Christ. It has regular editorial writers, besides a large number of able and regular contributors. It has all of the regular departments of the best religious periodicals.

In editorial policy it stands for individual consecration, against ecclesiastic organizations, as the scriptural and best method of doing missionary work. It recognizes no organization but the church of Christ as a scriptural medium of converting the world and developing the Christian character.

It opposes all human creeds and ecclesiastic councils, and pleads for the right of each individual to study the Scriptures for himself and formulate his own faith, without dictation or hindrance from churchly dignitaries. It opposes all clerical assumption of official authority in the church, and stands for the scriptural doctrine that each Christian has an office to fill, a work to perform—that all are kings and priests unto God.

It stoutly advocates the doctrine of missions, and argues unceasingly that every Christian is a divinely commissioned missionary and every church is a scripturally organized missionary society. The mission of every Christian and the design of every church is to preach the gospel to all the world.

It believes in, and stoutly advocates, congregational singing, as opposed to select choirs and instrumental performances, as the best and most soul-stirring church music. Let all the people sing. Provide a book for everybody in the house, and let us all make a joyful noise unto the Lord. Sample copies mailed free to any address.

SCRIPTURE STUDIES

BY JAMES A. ALLEN

The present is a unique, a remarkable age. Unsettled conditions, a general state of unrest, seem to prevail in all countries. It may be that the same conditions, upon a smaller scale and in different ages and nations, have existed before; but so stupendous an unrest, tending toward revolutionary upheaval, seems to be a peculiar distinction of the present time. "Many are running to and fro;" old foundations are crumbling; the fetters and chains of the past are being broken; and, certainly, "knowledge is on the increase." While such a condition is painful, who can say that it is harmful? Feudalism, landed proprietorship, "the divine right of kings," were swept away by a general unrest of the masses, culminating in a general upheaval. Under the oppressive yoke of tyrants the volcano simmered for centuries, and then came the eruption.

* * *

The storm first broke in France. The suppressed murmurings of a downtrodden people burst into frenzied violence in the French Revolution. Though the operation was exceedingly painful, though the streets of Paris were crimsoned with rivers of blood, did not the revolution, sweeping away tyranny and oppressien, improve the condition of the people? Though it was a "reign of terror," did not the storm clear the atmoshere? Agitation is what purifies the waters of the ocean and prevents stagnation; and if it were not for the storms that rock it, the ocean would have a scum upon it, so filling the breeze with disease as to render life upon the land extinct.

But good and evil are intricately commingled. The same revolution that swept away the tyranny and feudalism of France also deified the "goddess of reason." Extremes beget extremes; and the world, like the pendulum of a clock, swings from one extreme to the other. The ability to preserve an equilibrium, to adhere to the rational mean, is a rare gift and is not the common property of the masses. This may be ascribed as one reason why truth and right are always with a small minority instead of being with the great majority.

No true man, who has at heart the good of the cause of Christ, which is the cause of humanity, can be a disinterested spectator in the crisis toward which things are tending. The two great forces of good and evil are struggling for the mastery. The servants of Christ and the servants of the devil are maneuvering for the vantage ground. The armies of truth are struggling to put to flight the armies of the father of lies, who is endeavoring to fasten the chains of delusion and error, and its consequent misery and sin, upon the mind of an incredulous public. Every man must choose his side and take his place. There are no white feathers, there is no quashing of the indictment. Neutrality does not exist and no one can sit on the fence. "He that is not with me is against me," says the great Captain of our salvation; "and he that gathereth not with me scattereth."

We cannot, in this place, for obvious reasons, enumerate the many errors that are now so enthusiastically advocated. Some of them are so artfully insinuated as to deceive, "if possible, the elect." Most of the colleges are filled with various forms of skepticism; many imaginary reformers are busily circulating numerous heresies; and a very general wave of unrighteousness and crime seems to have visited the entire world. Some, squinting at prophecies that cannot yet be interpreted, imagine that the devil has been let loose; others, viewing the many manifestations of human depravity, think that conditions would not indicate that he had ever yet been confined.

We can only regret to notice that some of our brethren are now engaged in a very earnest struggle to inculcate a sentiment for denominational federation. The whole effort to do so is monstrously evil. We are very frank to admit that the signs of the times would seem to indicate it as a possibility of the future; but if it ever comes to pass, it will entail indescribable suffering and woe. The confusion of languages upon the plains of Shinar, when the ancient world was leagued to build the infamous tower of Babel, forever stamps God's disapproval upon a united league of the forces of the world. In union there is strength; and a union of organizations not of divine origin would present such a tyranny of evil as could not but result in consequences beyond human power to tell. Besides, no sane man can imagine a federation of churches to be Christian union. No similarity could exist between such a league and the union for which the Savior prayed. To establish a central melting pot; to take a skimming of the creeds, Protestant and Catholic, Jewish, Turkish, and Pagan; and to blue-pencil such parts of the Bible as would make it more palatable to infidels, would produce such a broth as would create one of the greatest persecutions of all time in an effort to force it to the lips of Christ's true people. As desirable as Christian union is, and without which Christians are disobeying a plain command of God, there can be no Christian union except upon the union grounds that are given in the New Testament.

The church needs men-" faithful men." It needs men who are true to God's word, and who are neither afraid nor ashamed to stand where the apostles stood. It needs men whose ears do not itch and in whose hearts the god of this world can find no place. And that such men may rise and buckle on the armor of light and be valiant in the fight is the fervent prayer of Christ's true people, and the earnest desire of the innumerable hosts in the heavens.

Those who seek a federation of the denominations refuse to embrace the teachings of inspired men or to recognize the oneness of the church of the New Testament. Popular "pastors," members of the "Ministers' Alliance," refuse to preach what inspired men preached, or to tell sinners what the Holy Spirit, speaking through inspired men, commands them to do to be saved. Christians cannot wink at such a situation. They must arise in the strength of Israel's God and cry aloud.

On the day of Pentecost, at the conclusion of the first gospel sermon delivered under the great commission given by Christ to his apostles, the audience, laboring under an intense conviction, "said unto Peter and the rest of the apostles, Brethren, what shall we do?" (Acts 2: 37.)

The answer to that question is of superlative interest to every responsible subject to the gospel call. No sane man, unbiased by passion or prejudice, desires to die in his sins or to appear before God, in the judgment, without a wellgrounded hope of meeting God in peace. The plainness, clearness, and simplicity of the gospel is conspicuously exhibited in the simple and easy answer given by inspired men to this question. "God is love," says an inspired oracle; and the very fact, therefore, that God commands a thing to be done shows that it can be done. God, who is the Creator of man, understands man's abilities and capacities far better than any conference, synod, or general council ever assembled. Inspired men spoke "as the Spirit gave them utterance;" "men spake from God, being moved by the Holy Spirit;" and the Holy Spirit, who is the Advocate of Christ and the Author of the gift of tongues, is supremely more competent to address human intelligence than any manual, discipline, or creed in existence.

That the gospel was intended for popular consumption may be observed from the writings of the prophets before the dawn of the Christian era. Seven hundred years before Christ, Isaiah said: "And a highway shall be there, and a way, and it shall be called The way of holiness; the unclean shall not pass over it; but it shall be for the redeemed: the wayfaring men, yea fools, shall not err therein." Many have erred and do now err because they are thereout; but the illiterate and unlearned, and those of limited intellectual abilities, if they come to the Holy Scriptures, and to them alone, as their only source of information, "shall not err therein." Habakkuk writes: "And Jehovah answered me, and said, Write the vision, and make it plain upon tablets, that he may run that readeth it." Anything that is so simple and plain "that he may run that readeth it" seems easily within the mental grasp of all, except infants and idiots, and readily adapted to universal consumption by the public.

No human vocabulary contains plainer terms than those used by Christ in commanding his apostles to evangelize the world. "Go ye therefore," said Christ, "and teach all nations." No one not utterly blinded by bias and prejudice could possibly misunderstand it. "Baptizing them into the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit." Who, in his right mind, could misunderstand it, if he really desired to understand it? John baptized in Ænon near to Salim, because there was much water there." (John 3: 23.) "Then went out unto him Jerusalem, and all Judea, and all the region round about the Jordan; and they were baptized of him in the river Jordan, confessing their sins." (Matt. 3: 5, 6.) Jesus made and baptized "more disciples than John (although Jesus himself baptized not, but his disciples)." (John 4:1, 2.) The language used by Christ could not be plainer: "Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I commanded you: and lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world." (See Matt. 28: 19, 20.)

"And he said unto them, Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature." Is it possible for language to be plainer or simpler? "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned." (See Mark 16: 15, 16.)

Any man not blinded by bias or prejudice who cannot understand such language is not responsible enough to be a subject of the gospel call.

SERMON OUTLINES

NEW AND ENLARGED EDITION

A Book of Three Hundred New Sermon Outlines

BY A. J. BACHMAN.

Just the book for preachers, elders, deacons, Bibleclass teachers, and others that take public part in church services.

The book has three hundred sermon outlines and a helpful supplement containing funeral texts, marriage ceremonies, forms for church letters, and Hedge's "Rules" for debate.

A good book to use in your Lord's-day services, prayer meetings, and young people's meetings. Let the leader announce the subject, hand slips of paper containing different sections of the outline to the members who are to take part in the next meeting, requesting them to make a talk or read the scriptural references on that section of the outline. Or, let the leader put the outline on the blackboard, omitting the scriptural references, then ask the congregation to supply the correct scriptural references at the next meeting, and give reasons why they selected these references.

THE EVOLUTION OF THE BIBLE.

BY CHARLES M. CAMPBELL, JR.

What is man, that he should try To question the wisdom of God on high, Other than to study his holy Word, And to teach it to those who have not heard?

Of how God sent his Son to die, Then lifted him up into the sky To reign in heaven at God's right hand, And how angels bow at his command.

Of how Christ kept the Mosaic law, Kept it without one single flaw. And prayed to God at Gethsemane To die at his will for you and me.

So that Jesus kept his Father's command Is why he sits at his right hand; And we must obey without a sigh, To reign with Jesus and the angels on high.

For when God devised our soul's salvation, He extended, through Jesus, an invitation To live the life or die the death, For God made Adam and gave him breath.

But the evolutionists or infidels, In seeking souls to burn in hell, Are denying the death, burial, and resurrection By a scheme of monkey-man perfection.

But forget the evolutionists' sinful scheme And allow the Savior your soul to redeem. Repent, believe, and be baptized; For in God's word we are thus advised.

It is not a mere question Of human science or direction, But the Savior's holy command. So obey it to-day; there is no other way To sit at the Savior's right hand.

WILL THE CHURCH OF CHRIST EVER AWAKE? BY ROBERT S. KING.

It is said that three out of every four in this world do not know that Christ died for them, or that "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life."

How could they know unless some one told them? Paul said: "Whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved. How then shall they call on him in whom they have not believed? and how shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard? and how shall they hear without a preacher? and how shall they preach, except they be sent?" (Rom. 10: 13-15.)

Can you answer these questions without going or sending? In view of the fact that God is not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to the knowledge of the truth, and in view of the fact that he commissioned the church to take the gospel to the whole creation, and realizing that he has no tongues but our tongues to tell men about him, what should the church of Christ be doing?

Where Christ has not gone there are no churches, no schools, no hospitals, no orphan homes or old people's homes, no charitable institutions of any kind, no doctors to minister to the sick, no natural affection for each other, and scarcely any sanctity in its womanhood or sense of refinement. There are no glad songs of redemption, but their songs are a wail. Little blind girls are unwanted; so they put them in the river or fatten them up for sale to brothels. A she devil has been known to take a string of these unfortunates and some sort of musical instrument and go through the streets at night, renting them out to sons of Belial, to be taken up again next morning after a night of lust.

Girls are sold into a life of vice and shame for a small amount of money, sometimes as little as twenty cents, and marriage is arranged by parents and go-betweens without the consent of the girl, thus compelling her to live with and be a slave for a man she never saw or loved. Often a girl of twelve years or less is married to a man forty-five; and should he die, the young wife becomes the slave of his family, doing all the drudgery, being misused, kicked, and beaten. In India it was the custom, until forbidden by British law, to bind the wife to the corpse of her husband, to be taken to the burning ground, where both bodies were placed on the funeral pile. After the ceremony, the eldest son of the nearest relative, with his back to the pile, would set fire to it and leave without once turning around, as that would mean the greatest misfortune. Slowly the fire would light up, and the unfortunate woman, feeling the fire approaching, would set up an awful outcry. To drown this, men with tomtoms sit near; and the louder her cries, the louder they beat the drums until she is slowly burned to death.

Another custom which has been forbidden by British law was for the mother to cast her baby into the River Ganges to please the gods. But to-day babies are cast into the jungles and left for wild animals to devour, if they are sick and the mother knows not what to do for them. There is no sympathy or affection for the sick, and often they are carried out at night and left for the hyenas to devour.

Another picture of cruelty among those without Christ is to see the Turkish soldiers go through the Armenian villages, and each soldier thrust his bayonet through a baby, and thus they parade the streets as long as there is life or kick or cry in them. When they are dead, they are flopped off like rats for the village dogs to eat.

In South America large numbers of children are killed by witch doctors allegedly under the instruction of the evil spirit. If the child is allowed to be born naturally, the witch doctor puts the palm of his hand over the little mouth, and with the thumb and finger he presses the nose until life is extinct. These people, when asked by the missionaries why they did this, said: "We have done this in our ignorance. We did not know it was wrong. We had no one to teach us. When will you come back?"

We shudder as we think of the cannibals who eat human flesh and bury human beings alive. A missionary once said his first duty on arriving on a certain cannibal island was to bury the skulls and the hands and feet of a recent cannibal feast; but he lived to see the day these same people were gathered around the Lord's table.

The gospel of Jesus Christ changes all of this. Where Christ has gone, all of these evil practices have been stopped. The same teaching that Paul and Barnabas gave the church at Antioch, if taught to the churches of America, would change all of this, and every church would become a radiating center to sound out the gospel to those who know it not. Arthur Mitchell wrote of a journey of only twenty-four hours from Hangchow to Shanghai: "I was absolutely awestruck and dumb as I steamed past city, after city, great and populous, one of which was a walled city of three hundred thousand souls, without one missionary of any Christian denomination whatever and without so much as a native Christian helper or teacher of any kind. That silent moonlight night, as I passed unnoticed by those long, dark battlements, shutting in their pagan multitudes, was one of the most solemn of my life; and the hours of daylight, when other cities still larger than many of our own great populations were continually coming in anew, and the teeming populations of the canals and rivers, villages, fields, and roads, were before my eyes, kept adding to the burden of the night."

These people for whom Christ died cannot redeem themselves. Nothing but the blood of Christ can cleanse them. There are a thousand million human beings in the world without Christ, and eight hundred million are absolutely untouched by missionary effort of any kind. One of these poor wretches, without God and without hope, dies every second, sixty each minute, thirty-six hundred each hour, eighty-six thousand each day. Is it anything to you? Do you care? How can they hear without a preacher? How can they preach, except they be sent? Can you hear them calling?

The Turk-tortured Armenians, the demon-tortured Africans, the child widows of India, the neglected children of China, the neglected tribes of South America, all are calling—calling you.

Not many years ago a newly appointed Chinese official invited all the lepers in his district to a feast. The day was set, and the hungry lepers came, rejoicing over such unexpected good fortune. When all had assembled, soldiers drove them into a pit, poured oil upon them, and then started the blaze. The leper problem for that district was thus quickly solved. This is only one of the many instances that might be cited of heathen treatment of helpless victims. There are said to be more than a million of these (lepers) Christless, helpless, suffering humans in China alone, or one to each four hundred population.

We perhaps can't do much for these sin-cursed people, but we can take their children and train them and make useful men and women of them.

O, church of Christ, awake to your duty and obligation! God will not hold you blameless if you fail to take the gospel to all nations and peoples.

"For God so loved the world, not just a few— The wise and great, the noble and the true, Or those of favored class or race or hue— God so loved the world. Do you?"

WE REJOICE.

BY S. H. HALL.

Beginning on Lord's day, July 19, and continuing eleven days, a series of meetings was conducted at Grant, Smith County, Tenn., by Brother H. C. Hale, the song service being led by Brother Sam Tatum. Twelve souls were baptized into Christ and the membership was greatly encouraged and strengthened. On the second Lord's day of the meeting the Baptists started a revival, but it did not cause Brother Hale to have smaller audiences. The truth had been preached in its purity and simplicity, and it had been done in the spirit of our Lord, and the people were too well impressed by it to be pulled away.

Grant has been considered a very hard place to conduct a successful meeting. This was considered one of the best we have had at that place, and we rejoice not only because of the good done, but because Brother Hale is our boy. It is just three years and a few months since he was baptized into Christ. We saw in him the making of a great preacher, and joined Brother N. B. Hardeman in giving him one year's work in Freed-Hardeman College, and since then two years in David Lipscomb College. His literary attainments were very meager to begin with, but no young man has studied harder than he has, and his growth has been phenomenal.

Brother S. P. Lowry, who preaches for the congregation at Grant once a month, dropped in for the last two days of the meeting and contributed much to the interest.

Brother J. E. Bacigalupo was off on his vacation, and decided to take his vacation by spending the time with Brother Hale in the meeting at Grant and with the writer at Livingston, Tenn. His presence was very much enjoyed by the members at both places. He was with us at Livingston two days and was with Brother Hale four days, and did the baptizing for Brother Hale. The last night of our meeting at Livingston an emergency call came for some one to preach at Algood in the forenoon of the fourth Lord's day in July and go to Netherland in the afternoon and preach and baptize a mother who had expressed a desire to be baptized. Brother Joe Jones preaches at these places monthly, but was in a series of meetings at another place and could not be there. Brother Bacigalupo was asked to do this work, and he cheerfully did so, to the satisfaction of the brethren at both places. From this work he hurried on to Grant and did much in the way of personal work to make the meeting at Grant a glorious success. Brother Bacigalupo has been in the church but little more than three years. When we found him in our work at Russell Street, he was a very prejudiced Methodist. After coming to see the church of our Lord as indeed it is, he eagerly embraced the gospel in its fullness and preaches day and night as he mingles with the people. He established the Merchants' Feed Company, in Nashville, and has proven a success in this business; but since his conversion, like the scattered disciples of "the Jerusalem church," he has been "preaching the word" along with his business. May God help all of our congregations in their efforts to make preachers and teachers of the word out of every soul they baptize into Christ, is my prayer.

PLACES IN WHICH BAPTISM WAS PERFORMED INDICATE IMMERSION.

(David Lipscomb, in the Gospel Advocate of November 3, 1910.)

Two weeks ago we gave the meaning of the word "baptism," and at the request of a number of brethren we give more on the same subject.

The places it was performed indicate immersion. They "were baptized of him in Jordan, confessing their sins." (Matt. 3: 6.) "And Jesus, when he was baptized, went up straightway out of the water: and, lo, the heavens were opened unto him, and he saw the Spirit of God descending like a dove, and lighting upon him." (Verse 16.) "And there went out unto him all the land of Judea, and they of Jerusalem, and all were baptized of him in the river of Jordan, confessing their sins." (Mark 1:5.) "And it came to pass in those days, that Jesus came from Nazareth of Galilee, and was baptized of John in Jordan." (Verse 9.) "And John also was baptizing in Ænon near to Salim, because there was much water there: and they came, and were baptized." (John 3:23.) "And as they went on their way, they came unto a certain water: and the eunuch said, See, here is water; what doth hinder me to be baptized? . . . And they went down both into the water, both Philip and the eunuch; and he baptized him. And when they were come up out of the water, the Spirit of the Lord caught away Philip, that the eunuch saw him no more: and he went on his way rejoicing." (Acts 8: 36-39.) "And on the Sabbath we went out of the city by a riverside, where prayer was wont to be made; and we sat down, and spake unto the women which resorted thither. And a certain woman named Lydia, a seller of purple, of the city of Thyatira, which worshiped God, heard us: whose heart the Lord opened, that she attended unto the things which were spoken of Paul. And when she was baptized, and her household, she besought us, saying, If ye have judged me to be faithful to the Lord, come into my house, and abide there. And she constrained us." (Acts 16: 13-15.)

Paul and Silas were brought out of the jail by the jailer, who "took them the same hour of the night, and washed their stripes; and was baptized, he and all his, straightway. And when he had brought them into his house, he set meat before them, and rejoiced, believing in God with all his house." (Acts 16: 33, 34.) They went out of the jail and out of his house to find water sufficient to wash their stripes and for his baptism. Saul was in the house in Damascus believing and sorrowing over his sins when Ananias said to him: "And now, why tarries' thou? arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord." (Acts 22: 16.) He had to arise that he might be baptized. This would not have been necessary to have water poured or sprinkled upon him, but was necessary in order to be immersed. Then his baptism was a washing; neither sprinkling nor pouring could be regarded as a washing. Immersion must be a washing or a bathing. Inasmuch as immersion is the act of faith in which God forgives sins, and it is a washing, it is called a "washing away of sins." The facts all make immersion sure. Then Paul says: "Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death: that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life. For if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection." (Rom. 6: 4, 5.)

These show that not only the circumstances connected with the places of baptism indicate immersion, but that the terms used as equivalents of baptism show it was immersion. Paul and those Roman Christians were buried in their baptism and raised again; were planted in the likeness of Christ's death and then arose in the likeness of his resurrection. "Except a man be born of water and the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." (John 3:5.) To be "born of water" is to come forth from it after having been enveloped in it. "Buried with him in baptism, wherein also ye are risen with him through the faith of the operation of God, who hath raised him from the dead." (Col. 2:12.) Then the Israelites "were all baptized unto Moses in the cloud and in the sea." (1 Cor. 10: 2.) Jesus said to his disciples: "Are ye able to drink of the cup that I shall drink of, and be baptized with the baptism that I am baptized with? They say unto him, We are able. And he saith unto them, Ye shall drink indeed of my cup, and be baptized with the baptism that I am baptized with." (Matt. 20: 22, 23.) This baptism of suffering that Jesus endured was not a mere sprinkling. but an overwhelming of suffering that pressed his soul down to death. The baptism of the Holy Spirit was a complete overwhelming of them with the power of God. All the facts and circumstances connected with baptism, all the figures used to illustrate it, forbid the idea of anything save the immersion, the overwhelming, the burial of the person baptized. It seems to me nothing could be plainer. What is more reasonable than that when one is dead to sin he should be buried out of the body of sin and raised in Christ Jesus?

The founders of all the churches say that baptism, as taught in the Scriptures, was immersion. Luther says: "The term 'baptism' is a Greek word; it may be rendered into Latin by 'mersio;' when we immerse anything in water that it may be entirely covered with it. . . . It were proper those should be deeply immersed who are baptized." John Calvin, the founder of the Presbyterian Church, says: "It is evident that the term 'baptize' means to immerse, and that this was the form used by the ancient church." ("Institutes," Book IV., Chapter 15, Section 19.) Zwingle, the leader of the Swiss reformers, says: "When ye were immersed into the water of baptism, ye were ingrafted into the death of Christ." ("Commentary "-Rom. 6: 3.) John Wesley says: "'We were buried with him '-alluding to the ancient manner of baptizing by immersion." (" Notes on New Testament " Rom. Mr. Wesley so wrote and published, but this sentence has been dropped out of some editions by the Methodist publishers. Mr. Wesley was asked to baptize a child of Mr. Parker, in Savannah, Ga., on May 5, 1736. He refused to do it, because they would not certify it was sickly. They indicted him before the grand jury. He was tried and found guilty for refusing to sprinkle a baby; he believed it ought to be immersed.

There is not a respectable scholar in the world that does not admit baptism is immersion, and was so practiced in apostolic times.

However, many say that any way will do; yet it is both a folly and a sin to do anything else than be immersed. All persons acknowledge immersion is baptism; many believe sprinkling or pouring is not. The first is certain and safe; the latter is doubtful. It is only a foolish man that will risk the uncertain and doubtful while he can have the certain and safe way, especially in a matter of so great moment as obedience to God and the salvation of the soul, and in which a wrong course cannot be corrected after we reach the judgment.

Again, it is a sin to divide the church and people of God. All can unite on immersion, since all believe it acceptable baptism; all cannot unite on affusion, since some believe it sets aside the law of God. None believe it essential to baptism. To divide the people of God on a nonessential is sinful; hence, to insist on affusion is sinful. No excuse exists from any standpoint for advocating affusion, save to sustain a practice received from Rome in the Dark Ages to sustain a party. To make and keep up parties and divisions in the church is the highest crime against God and man.

R. T. Farrar, Florence, Ala., August 3: "On the third Lord's day in this month I am to begin a meeting for the church of Christ at Flat Creek, in Bedford County, Tenn. This is one of the oldest congregations in the State. David Lipscomb, Jesse Sewell, and others of sainted memory labored faithfully and fruitfully there. This is the home of my childhood, and I esteem it a great honor and happy privilege to return to the scenes of youth and preach the simple gospel story to relatives, playmates, and friends of bygone days."

GOSPEL TREASURE IN EARTHEN VESSELS. BY H. W. JONES.

Let us examine this important subject by answering three questions relative thereto—viz.: (1) What is the gospel? (2) Why is it called "treasure?" (3) Where found then and now?

The word "gospel" means good news, glad tidings. Religiously, it is the sweet story or message divine that Christ died to save poor, sinful man. It is called "the gospel of God," because it came originally from God, the Father. It is called "the gospel of Christ," as Christ is the immediate Author, the central figure or Person, and the subject-matter of it. It is called "the gospel of the grace of God" (Acts 20: 24), because it manifests God's favor, mercy, and love to poor, fallen man, and is the means whereby his grace is bestowed.

In the gospel are three central, fundamental facts which all responsible human beings must believe-viz.; (1) "That Christ died for our sins according to the scriptures," (2) "that he was buried," and (3) "that he was raised [for our justification] according to the scriptures." (1 Cor. 15: 1-8; Rom. 4: 25.) Conforming to these three grand facts of the gospel are three divine, God-given commands through Christ, which all responsible human beings must obey-namely (1) Believe wholeheartedly that Jesus Christ is the Son of the living God; (2) repent—turn away (in heart and life) from all sin; and (3) be immersed on Christ's authority-yes, buried and raised with him in baptism (Col. 2: 12)—so we might walk "in newness of life" (Rom. 6:4). Conditioned upon our whole-hearted obedience to these three leading primary commands of the gospel are many "precious and exceeding great promises" which induce obedience, inspire hope, cause us to "rejoice in the Lord" and press on unto eternal life in the world to come. Among these "great promises" are "enter the kingdom of God," "shall be saved," "remission of sins," "into Christ," "into his death," "put on Christ," a "good conscience," "gift of the Holy Spirit," "eternal life," and happiness, peace, and joy in heaven. Now, for any man to single out and unduly emphasize one of our Lord's promises, to the exclusion of other promises or blessings equally as great, is to make and mount a hobby, "causing divisions," etc., which is sin. Note that, all ye special faith-in-design-of-baptism theorists! There is but one faith essential to valid baptism, and that centers in a divine Person, the Christ of God. Nothing is more clearly revealed in the gospel than that. (Read Matt. 16: 15-18; John 20: 30, 31; Acts 2: 36-38; Acts 8: 36-38.)

So we have gospel facts to believe, commands to obey, blessings and promises to hope for, enjoy, and inspire us to love, obedience, faithfulness, and final perseverance. Love is the highest motive to obedience. (John 14:15; 1 John 5:3.) Fear is also a motive (2 Cor. 5:10); but "perfect love casteth out fear" (1 John 4:18). So "faith working through love" obeys without our knowing specifically the rewards or blessings we shall receive "for" our obedience. (Heb. 11:8.) Now try this: (1) Commands, not promises, are obeyed; (2) Christ saves all who obey him; (3) therefore, commands (not promises) are conditions of our salvation.

2. The word "treasure" means precious metals, money, jewels; riches accumulated or possessed; hence, a stock or store of anything valuable; something very precious. Then, because the gospel is a storehouse of things "valuable" to our spiritual being and "very precious" to our souls, it is referred to by Paul, in 2 Cor. 4, as "this treasure." Hence, Christ gave us the parables of the "hidden treasure" and "the pearl of great price." (Read Matt. 13: 44-46.) The gospel is a "treasure" because it is "the gospel of our salvation" (Eph. 1:13); "the gospel of peace" (Eph. 6:15); "the faith of the gospel" (Phil. 1:27); "the hope of the gospel" (Col.

1:25). God's love to man is revealed in the gospel; it is "the glorious gospel" (2 Cor. 4:4); "the everlasting gospel" (Rev. 14:6); it is a "treasure," very precious, because there is but one gospel (Gal. 1: 6-9). The gospel of Christ is a spiritual "treasure" because "it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth" (Rom. 1:16)—not a power, some of the power, nor part of the power unto salvation, but it [the gospel] is THE power-the only power-of God unto salvation. And, mark you, it does not say that some kind of mysterious power of God (better felt than told or explained) is the gospel, as I've heard Calvinists transpose it. No such "twist" could have been made had no false theory of conversion been invented. Not a soul has ever been converted to Christ before the gospel of Christ was preached to that soul. All conversions in heathen lands demonstrate the truth of that statement. So all must "hear the word of the gospel and believe" (Acts 15:7); and this belief which comes by hearing God's word (Rom. 10:17) being "unto righteousness" and "justification," then that "mysterious power" (so-called) is imagination and delusion; while the plain gospel contains "the riches of his goodness, mercy, forbearance, and long-suffering." Precious "treasure," gospel divine!

3. Where was the gospel in the beginning? Paul says: "We have this treasure [the gospel of Christ] in earthen vessels [mortal bodies]." Yes, they had the divine, heavenly truth, so precious, in weak, mortal bodies, that it might be evident to all that it is from God. What a splendid, precious treasure placed in so cheap, so fragile, earthen vessels! But God committed the ministry of the gospel of life, the treasure of the knowledge of Christ, to poor, frail (but faithful) human beings, "that the exceeding greatness of the power may be of God, and not from ourselves," says Paul. This comports exactly with what Christ said to the twelve "while he was yet with them-viz.: "I go away, and will send you another Comforter (Helper), even the Spirit of truth, the Holy Spirit," and he (the Holy Spirit) "shall teach you all things," "guide you into all the truth," "and bring to your remembrance all that I said unto you," "and declare unto you the things that are to come." Christ was crucified, buried, resurrected from the dead, ascended to heaven, and sent the Holy Spirit on Pentecost day (Acts 2); the apostles were inspired thereby and went everywhere preaching the gospel message, "the Lord working with them, and confirming the word by signs, wonders, and manifold powers that followed."

Christ, in his last commission, which was world-wide and age-lasting, said to his apostles: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." "Go ye therefore, and make disciples of all the nations, baptizing them into the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world." Thus the gospel was preached by the Spirit-guided apostles "in the beginning;" and Christ was "with them" then, and is "with them" now, and will continue "with them" in the same message "unto the end of the world;" but he is not with any modern "apostles," so-called.

This message divine, as found recorded by the pen of inspiration on the sacred pages of Holy Writ, is committed "to faithful men, who shall be able to teach others also." (2 Tim. 2.) Therefore, the theory of an immediate, abstract operation of the Holy Spirit, separate and apart from God's holy word, is a deception, a fraud, a hallucination. The truth is: God, Christ, and the Holy Spirit, all three, operate together "through the word of the truth of the gospel," which is "the power of God unto salvation." This gospel word was committed unto the apostles as "ambassadors for Christ." (2 Cor. 5: 18-20.) We have these inspired words to-day, kept intact through the ages, and they will be here till the end. The Holy Spirit now dwells in God's faithful children (1 Cor. 6:19), who use "the word of God" as "the sword of the Spirit" (Eph. 6:17). Brethren, what are we, as "churches of Christ," doing with these "words of eternal life" committed to us? Are we zealously "holding forth the word of life, that we may have whereof to glory in the day of Christ?"

THE CONGREGATION ONLY.

BY LEE JACKSON.

This is written only for the purpose of commending Brother Srygley's review of Brother S. S. Lappin's article in the Christian Standard, entitled, "The Congregation is All that We Have." I want first to thank Brother Lappin for having written his article, and then to thank Brother Srygley for giving his strictures in the manner that leads us to understand that there are yet leading brethren among us who are willing to teach that the local congregation is the only working institution known as a church of Christ, or church of God, in the New Testament Scriptures. When so many on the one side of the issue are trying to bind all our congregations together under the management of official "boards," and on the opposing side so many are contending for just one general church of Christ, and many of these claiming that "we as a people" are that one general church of Christ, it is refreshing to read after brethren who write as Brethren Lappin and Srygley have written. In the days of Alexander Campbell and Walter Scott, of Moses E. Lard and Robert Richardson, and of Tolbert Fanning and David Lipscomb, it was not difficult to understand that those pleading for New Testament purity in teaching and practice stood only for the local congregation as the only institution ordained of God for the salvation of the world and the propagation of the cause of righteousness.

Since the beginning of our plea many men among us have come to the front possessed of a yearning desire to become noted as leaders and debaters, and in spite of our motto, to give a positive "Thus saith the Lord" for what we teach and practice, and to make no contention for anything not essentially vital to righteous living and the salvation of souls, these overambitious men have devoted themselves to contending for things as marks of distinction that are no part of the gospel, and for which no positive "Thus saith the Lord," either in precept or example, can be given. The contention for such issues simply for the purpose of augmenting lines of distinction has greatly hindered the cause of Christ and has been a very great stumblingblock in the way of our plea for unity. The local congregation is the only thing named in our English New Testament to which such names as "church of God," "church of Christ," or "church of saints" can be scripturally applied. As Brethren Srygley and Lappin so scripturally contend, we have only the local congregation as a body of Christian worshipers and workers for which we can scripturally contend in our plea for the unity of God's people in the world. To bind together a class of congregations under a convention board and call the whole group either "Christian Church" or the "church of Christ" is unscriptural and sectarian, and the teaching that all of the loyal congregations constitute the one "church of Christ" in the State and nation, or that such an aggregation is the one "church of Christ" in the world, is equally unscriptural and denominational. It was this unscriptural misconception that led to the formation of the Church of Rome. Let me again commend a considerate reading of Brother Srygley's comments on Brother Lappin's article, and let us all endeavor to avoid the sectarian denominationalism toward which so many among us are inevitably drifting.

NOTES FROM THE WEST.

I expect to close here to-night. This meeting has not accomplished what it should, but some of us have done all that we could. The audiences have never been large, but those who have attended the meetings have been regular. There are a few as fine people here as one can find anywhere. They are faithful in their attendance, and they love the truth and are willing to endure persecution or social ostracism in order to live up to what they believe the Bible teaches. There are little more than a dozen who thus stand for their faith. There are many who go to some of the "digressive" churches, who claim that they do not believe in their innovations, but they have not the courage or the disposition to stand out against the things that are untaught in the Bible. Three took their stand with us last night, and we are expecting a few more to do the same thing to-night. This will increase the strength of the little band some; but there are many others that should do the same thing.

There are enough people in Pueblo who know the truth, if they loved it as they should, to make a large congregation. They have no house, only a hall in which they can meet on Sunday, but no place in which to hold a protracted meeting. True, we have used a Methodist church in which to hold this meeting; but it is in a different part of the city, some distance from their hall, and it would take a month to get the people to understand what we stand for and what we are doing in a Methodist church. If we had a little house among the laboring people, we could perhaps get a start and accomplish more in a permanent way. Some steps have already been taken to secure something permanent in Pueblo. I am doing all I can to encourage this, and I shall not forget the work here after I am gone.

I shall leave in the morning for Great Divide, Col., and expect to begin the meeting there on Sunday, August 2. When through there, I expect to return to Denver, where I hope to meet Mrs. Srygley, and she will go with me to Los Angeles, Cal. I have kept busy every day since leaving Nashville on June 25.

There is nothing better than laboring for the advancement of the cause of truth; and while I may strike some things which are a little hard, I do not have to hold to them very long, as I am on the go all the time. I am missing the association of my former friends the present summer, but I am happy in the consciousness that I am trying to do good. I thank the brethren and sisters all over the country who made this trip possible for me, but I have done no more than I should.

My work during the year resulted in eleven baptisms and three restorations and much good accomplished otherwise. I am now open for meetings or local work. Address me at Pikeville, Tenn., and it will be forwarded to the proper address. Success to the Gospel Advocate and those connected with the great work that you are carrying on."
- Charles P. Poole, David Lipscomb College, Nashville, Tenn., August 3: "I want some brother to locate with the church in Cambridge, Mass. There are about twenty members who meet in Phillips Brooks House, Harvard University. This church was organized about four years ago, and progress has been noticeable since the beginning. This would be a great opportunity for some one who really loves the truth and also desires to take advantage of this opportunity to attend Harvard. ## EDITORIAL

THE PUEBLO CHIEFTAIN AND EVOLUTION.

BY F. B. SRYGLEY.

The following editorial appeared in the Pueblo Chieftain. of Pueblo, Col. When this appeared in the paper, a brother asked the editor if he would publish a reply to the same, and he said he would be glad to do so, and I immediately prepared a reply; but after keeping it two days, the editor declined to publish it. He made some such excuses as that it was too long and that it misrepresented him, etc. I here give the editorial and my reply to the same, to allow the readers to form their own conclusion as to why the editor did not publish it:

EDUCATION, RELIGION, AND SCIENCE.

Nobody can reasonably find any fault with the jury that brought in a verdict against Scopes in the evolution case. It was not for the jury to pass upon the wisdom of the law, and there was no room for doubt, either as to the meaning of the law or as to its willful violation by the person against whom the indictment had been found.

It is not probable that the makers of the law appreciated full significance of that law or the effect that be likely to have upon the educational system of that State. Evolution is something more than a theory of the origin and the development of the human animal. It is rather a great principle whose application is to be found in every avenue of progress and development throughout the uni-

In barring the schools of Tennessee to evolution the Legislature of that State has excluded from the schools every honest and qualified teacher of geology, biology, ethnology, and all other sciences that are in any way related to the development of vegetable or animal life upon the earth, and this prohibition applies not less to mental and moral traits than to physical features and powers.

No honest and self-respecting teacher in any branch of scientific knowledge, in which life and progress are concerned, can henceforward hold a place in the schools of Tennessee. He cannot teach his pupils what he knows to be truth, for the law of Tennessee says that that truth shall not be taught, and the law further says that truth is in conflict with the Bible.

REPLY.

To the Pueblo Chieftain: I see in your good paper of July 22 an editorial on "Education, Religion, and Science," which does the lawmakers of Tennessee an injustice. This, of course, was not intentional on the part of the editor. He is too broad-minded to desire to misrepresent any one, much less the majority of the people of a great State.

The editor says: "It is not probable that the makers of the law appreciated the full significance of the law or the effect it would likely have upon the educational system of the State." This is likely true, as it is not probable that any one understands the full significance of hardly any act he may perform; but from my knowledge of the law itself as it stands upon the statutes of the State of Tensignificance of the law as the editor of the Chieftain does, provided this editorial fairly represents his knowledge of the law.

The editor further says: "Evolution is something more than a theory of the origin and the development of the human animal." Certainly so, and what right has the good editor to assume that the lawmakers of the State of Tennessee did not know this fact?

Tennessee did not know this fact?

Again, he says: "In barring the schools of Tennessee to evolution the Legislature of that State has excluded from the schools every honest and qualified teacher of geology, biology, ethnology, and all other sciences that are in any way related to the development of vegetable or animal life." If I have read the law correctly, evolution is not barred from the schools of Tennessee, but only that unproved guess of the scientists that sets aside the Bible teaching on the origin of man. The editor has here stated, perhaps unintentionally, that no teacher of biology stated, perhaps unintentionally, that no teacher of biology is honest unless he contradicts the Bible account of the creation of man and teaches that man was evolved from a lower order of animal life. As far as progressive evolution is concerned, every intelligent preacher in the country believes it. They all believe that the animal and vegetable kingdoms have been improved by the effort and care etable kingdoms have been improved by the effort and care of man over these things, and that man himself, under the teaching of God, has been improved both physically and mentally; but this is far from believing that man sprang from some lower form of animal life. With a superior mind over the animal, he can be improved and developed; but let man turn the animal loose with no superior mind over him, and he will degenerate to his original state. Man, under the teaching of his Creator, can develop and has developed to his present position; but turn the race loose with no God over it and no Bible to instruct man, and he will go back to heathenism.

but turn the race loose with no God over it and no Bible to instruct man, and he will go back to heathenism.

Our good editor has not, perhaps, seen the full significance of his editorial any better than the lawmakers saw the full significance of their act. The Governor of Tennessee said recently that it seemed that the State would have to give up their Bible or their public schools one, but the people of Tennessee had decided to keep both. I have the god doubt that there are many people in Colorado that no doubt that there are many people in Colorado that would give up the public schools before they would give up their Bibles. The law of Tennessee does not oppose the teaching of any kind of evolution, but it only opposes the teaching of that kind of evolution that sets aside the the teaching of that kind of evolution that sets aside the Bible account of the creation of man in schools supported either in part or in whole by the money of the State. If Mr. Scopes and the editor of the Chieftain want to teach that evolution that sets aside the Bible, they are at liberty to teach it in their own schools and receive their pay for so doing from men who do not believe the Bible; but when they undertake to teach that kind of evolution in State-supported schools, they are barred from so doing. The wrong is in their trying to slip their unbelief of the Bible as the word of God into our State and church schools. Let them build their own schools as the churches have done and teach their false doctrine to their heart's schools. Let them build their own schools as the churches have done and teach their false doctrine to their heart's content. They now have one teacher in the person of Mr. Scopes who has rendered himself unfit for a public school-teacher in the State of Tennessee by willfully breaking the law. He will now make a most excellent man to teach in a school that denies the Bible, as he has proven himself a first-class lawbreaker.

The editor further says: "No honest and self-respecting teacher in any branch of scientific knowledge, in which life and progress are concerned, can henceforward hold a place in the schools of Tennessee. He cannot teach his pupils what he knows to be truth, for the law of Tennessee says that that truth shall not be taught." Why did the editor not quote the law and thus allow his readers to see whether it says that or not. What the editor means here must be that the law means "that that truth shall not be taught," for, if I have read it correctly, it does not say that in the words the editor uses. There is a vast difference between a theory or a hypothesis of the origin of human life and teaching the truth on that subject. If the scientist will teach what is known to be truth and not theorize about it in a way to set aside the Bible, there will be no objection to their teaching. We should distinguish between a theory and a fact.

A weekly paper of Pueblo, called the "Public Opinion," agreed to publish the above reply to the Chieftain, and it appeared in that paper of July 30.

WORD FROM WASHINGTON.

BY T. B. LARIMORE.

So far as my limited information impresses me, there seems to be but one topic of conversation in Washington to-day, and that is the death of the great Commoner, William Jennings Bryan, coupled, of course, with thoughts and themes and things suggested thereby. Nobody has mentioned to me my health, my plans, or even my opinion of the weather. This morning I stepped into a barber shop, where three or four good barbers serve the public, and, without passing the usual compliments of the morning, one of them said: "Well, we've lost our friend." Our neighbor, a retired lawyer and judge of high reputaticn, said, in passing: "Well, Bryan is gone. I am very sorry. He was a great and a good man, and will be sadly missed." High and low, rich and poor, learned and ignorant, all seem to suffer a sense of personal loss in the passing of William Jennings Bryan.

I deem it perfectly safe to say Bryan was a great and good man, a friend of the toiling millions of suffering humanity, honest, conscientious, and sincere, and I am glad the civilized world was shocked and saddened when his strangely and startlingly sudden departure was announced—such a sudden departure, without the privilege of even saying good-by to his faithful and now weeping wife. He died a peaceful, painless death, while his wife waited near him. As he was seen and known and loved and trusted here, he shall be known on earth no more forever.

On earth long ago there was a Commoner Divine who loved and sympathized with the poor and oppressed, and who, to save them from the burdens they bore, said: "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light."

To come unto him now is to abandon sin and Satan and accept Jesus as our Savior. To take his yoke upon us is to submit to his government, to render the obedience Divinity demands. To learn of him is to learn the things taught by Divinity. Now, in this age, under the present dispensation, to do all these things is to hear the gospel, to believe the gospel, to repent of our sins, to confess our faith in Christ, to be buried with him by baptism into death, to be raised up with him, and to thereafter walk in newness of life as Divinity directs.

Divinity directs Christians to be Christians—"only this and nothing more," glorifying God in this name: "If ye are reproached for the name of Christ, blessed are ye; because the Spirit of glory and the Spirit of God resteth upon you. For let none of you suffer as a murderer, or a thief, or an evildoer, or as a meddler in other men's matters: but if a man suffer as a Christian, let him not be ashamed; but let him glorify God in this name." (1 Pet. 4: 14-16, A.R.V.) Divinity directs Christians to commune and contribute on the first day of the week, as did Christians in the earlier days of the church, when they were under the personal supervision of inspired men: "And upon the first day of the week, when the disciples came together to break bread, Paul preached unto them, ready to depart on the morrow; and continued his speech until midnight." (Acts 20:7.) "Upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store, as God hath prospered him, that there be no gatherings when I come." (1 Cor. 16:2.)

Divinity directs Christians to love one another with a pure heart fervently: "Seeing ye have purified your souls by obeying the truth through the Spirit unto unfeigned love of the brethren, see that ye love one another with a pure heart fervently." (1 Pet. 1: 22.)

Christians are commanded to study the word of God: "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth." (2 Tim. 2:15.)

We are directed to bear one another's burdens—"Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ" (Gal. 6:12)—to pray, to preach, to sing, and do whatsoever else the New Testament teaches us to do, neither adding to nor taking from the things prescribed for us.

Jesus died for us—died that we might live; that we, through him, might have everlasting life. His death was painful in the extreme. Nailed to the cross, he hung there in indescribable agony till he died. How many of us are willing to bear burdens, to endure privations and hardships for Christ and his cause? "Must Jesus bear the cross alone?" He is our Friend divine, and we should gladly become and be his friends. He says: "Ye are my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you." (John 15: 14.)

HONORING FATHER AND MOTHER.

BY E. A. ELAM.

Honor thy father and thy mother, that thy days may be long in the land which Jehovah thy God giveth thee." (Ex. 20: 12.)

That God made this one of the Ten Commandments, written with his own finger (Ex. 31:18) upon "the tables of stone," called "the two tables of testimony," "the words of the covenant;" sealed them by the blood of animal sacrifices; and placed them in "the ark of the covenant" Ex. 24:12; 32:15, 16; 34:27, 28), makes this a most serious and solemn duty. God gave this commandment, thus written and preserved, to Moses, that he might "teach" it to the children of Israel. It is oft repeated in the Old Testament.

Stubbornness and rebellion in sons were sins punished by death.

If a man have a stubborn and rebellious son, that will not obey the voice of his father, or the voice of his mother, and though they chasten him, will not hearken unto them; then shall his father and his mother lay hold on him, and bring him out unto the elders of the city, and unto the gate of his place; and they shall say unto the elders of his city, This our son is stubborn and rebellious, he will not obey our voice; he is a glutton and a drunkard. And all the men of his city shall stone him to death with stones: so shalt thou put away the evil from the midst of thee; and all Israel shall hear and fear. (Deut. 21: 18-21.)

This most fearful punishment sent by God upon such a son shows the enormity of such sins. Also, it shows to what extent parents, the elders of the place, and all others should go in order to correct such sins.

This should most deeply impress both parents and children and the whole church now.

This commandment is repeated in the New Testament, or "New Covenant," which has been sealed by the blood of Jesus. (Heb. 8:8-13; 9:11-28.)

Children, obey your parents in the Lord: for this is right. Honor thy father and mother (which is the first commandment with promise), that it may be well with thee, and thou mayest live long upon the earth." (Eph. 6:1-3.)

The promise attached to this command in the Old Testament is: "That thy days may be long in the land which Jehovah thy God giveth thee."

This is the first commandment that children are called upon to obey, and the first to which the promise is attached.

All should study and know, and all preachers and elders should teach, what it is to honor father and mother.

It is to respect, love, and obey them; but it is more. Children are commanded both to obey and to honor parents. Jesus shows how the Pharisees and others, by disobedience to this commandment, had made void God's commandments by their traditions.

Why do ye also transgress the commandments of God because of your traditions? For God said, Honor thy father and thy mother; and, He that speaketh evil of father or mother, let him die the death [be stoned to death]. But ye say, Whosoever shall say to his father or his mother, That wherewith thou mightest have been profited by me is given to God; he shall not honor his father. And ye have made void the word of God because of your tradition." (Matt. 15: 3-6.)

Mark (7:12) says:

Ye no longer suffer him to do aught for his father or his mother.

Jesus shows first, then, that to speak evil of father or mother, or to curse them, is to dishonor them. (Ex. 21: 17; Lev. 20: 9). "Cursed be he that setteth light by his father or mother." (Deut. 27: 16.)

Jesus next shows that to honor father and mother is to look after their temporal comfort, welfare, and happiness, and to support them in affliction, decrepitude, and old age.

The Pharisees taught that children were released from all obligations to help and support their parents if they should say what they had was given to God.

We also learn from this that we cannot serve God with our money or give it to him, except by using it as he directs. To withhold money or help and support, due to parents, and then to offer that money to God in some other way, is dishonoring both God and parents.

He, then, who, in the name of Christ, opens his own home to his father and mother, or makes their home comfortable, and gives his time and money in making their last days pleasant, honors God and his parents with his time and means. He who tires of his parents and casts them off in old age or affliction cannot be a Christian. He should repent and show by proper treatment of his parents that he has repented. When Paul says, "Honor widows that are widows indeed" (1 Tim. 5:3), he means to support and care for these widows; so to honor parents is to do the same for them when necessary. Therefore, Paul further says:

But if any widow hath children or grandchildren, let them [these children and grandchildren] learn first to show piety toward their own family, and to requite their parents: for this is acceptable in the sight of God. (1 Tim. 5:4.)

To show piety at home, then, is to care for and to serve parents and grandparents. There is such a thing as being Christians at home. If we are not Christians at home, we cannot be Christians away from home.

To requite parents is to repay them for what they do for children when children are babes and young and cannot help themselves. Children can never do enough to repay their parents for the sacrifices, anxieties, tears, prayers, and untiring work parents have made, suffered, and done for them. Think of the suffering a mother undergoes when children come into the world, the agony she experiences when one is seriously sick, and more so when one sins and proves prodigal, or passes away without proper preparation for eternal life! Think of what a father endures to properly educate, train, and prepare his children for a useful and Christian life, and the pangs of grief he feels when they fail! How can such parents be requited?

On the other hand, what service can be more beautiful and fuller of blessings than that of properly and lovingly caring for the aged, and especially parents? There have always been such dutiful sons and loving daughters, who rise up and call their parents blessed. Such are a crown of honor and glory to their aged parents and fill their last days on earth with comfort and peace, joy and hope. No enjoyment of empty society or selfish accumulation of wealth can bring to children such supreme happiness.

God, both in the Old and New Testaments, promises to bless children who obey him in honoring their parents. It will be well with them, and they have the promise of long life. It is well with them in many ways; it fits them for obedience to the civil law and to the law of God, and brings to them the respect and love of all good people.

Disobedience at home leads to disobedience to our civil laws and to God; disobedience at home starts children on the downward road to perdition. As we have seen, a drunken, gluttonous, and rebellious son was to be stoned to death, and Paul (2 Tim. 3:1-5) says disobedience to parents is one sign of "grievous times."

Among the grievous sins and widespread evils of the present generation, disobedience to parents and disregard for them in every way are some of the greatest.

Parents themselves, in a large measure; next, school-teachers in general; and also almost all preachers are responsible for this sad and woeful condition. If these sins are ever checked and the hearts of the young again turned in the right direction, this great work will have to be emphasized with power in repeated sermons by every preacher in the land, taught their pupils by every teacher in every schoolroom, and instilled daily into the hearts of their children by all parents in all homes in existence.

A most lamentable truth is, homes are passing out, and parents, teachers, and preachers have failed to teach the will of God in regard to home building and home duties, as well as other vital things of life. Until parents, teachers, and preachers become aroused to this most solemn work, nothing more can be expected from the majority of children than to go from bad to worse. It is farcical and pharisaical to claim to be preachers of the gospel and at the same time to neglect and avoid teaching parents their duty to their children, children their duty to parents, and all teachers of all schools their duties to all their pupils in regard to these and all other duties of life. Without these duties, children are being taught and trained, as intellectual animals, to seek pleasure, to make money, to plunder, to engage in military service, to shed blood, to make widows and orphans, and to devastate homes and countries of others.

A QUESTION ANSWERED. BY F. W. SMITH.

I am perfectly satisfied that there is no question regarding the proper teachers of the Christian religion, and as to what men should "believe" and "do" in order to please God, but finds a ready and correct answer within the Holy Volume. Uninspired men may not always find that answer, but the solution is, nevertheless, in the word of God. Because of "preconceived" ideas and "false" teaching one may be unable to discover what otherwise would be perfectly clear to the most ordinary mind, and for this reason we should all strive to divest ourselves of every hindrance to a correct understanding of God's word.

With these preliminaries, the following question will be considered:

Ethridge, Tenn., July 3, 1925.—My Dear Brother Smith: In the reading of your quotation from "An Illuminating Professor," in the Gospel Advocate of July 2, I was reminded of the first verses of Eph. 2, and I want to ask you a question, to be answered in the Gospel Advocate if you think proper. Is not such designing, artful, insidious, misleading teaching the work of "the prince of the powers of the air, of the spirit that now worketh in the sons of disobedience?" Your brother in Christ, Lucas North.

The passages in question are these: "And you did he make alive, when ye were dead through your trespasses and sins, wherein ye once walked according to the course of this world, according to the prince of the powers of the air, of the spirit that now worketh in the sons of disobedience." (Eph. 2: 1, 2.)

THE FORMER CONDITION OF THESE SAINTS.

1. They were "dead," not literally, but spiritually; and as the word "death" means separation, the truth here presented is that those addressed were at one time separated from the spiritual life that flows from God. But while they were dead in this respect, they were very much alive in another and a very different respect—viz., alive to the world and its sinful ways.

2. The passage tells us very plainly how they became dead spiritually—viz., "through your trespasses and sins." It was not, then, as the most popular teachers of religion in "creed" and pulpit utterances boldly declare, due to "Adamic, inbred, transmitted, or inherited" sin. In other words, they were not "born" sinners, as is almost universally preached from press and pulpit, but became dead spiritually through their own trespasses and sins.

To quote Eph. 2:3, "Among whom we also all once lived in the lusts of our flesh, doing the desires of the flesh and of the mind, and were by nature children of wrath, even as the rest," as proof of "inherited" sin, is to misuse and abuse the word of God.

The word "nature" in this passage has the meaning of custom, or practice—the same as it does in 1 Cor. 11:14: "Doth not even nature itself teach you, that, if a man have long hair, it is a dishonor to him?"

Commenting on Eph. 2: 3, the great Presbyterian, James Macknight, in his "Commentary" on the Epistles, says: "In the passage under consideration, nature is that second corrupt dead nature, which men form in themselves by habitually indulging vicious inclinations; for the apostle speaks of men's being 'by nature children of wrath' as the effect of having their conversation [manner of life] in the lusts of the flesh."

It is confidently submitted that not a statement of the Bible is more clearly presented than the above, and yet, through false teaching of men regarding sin, "infant baptism" and the immediate operation of the Holy Spirit became the most popular doctrine in the religious world. The fact that the word of God teaches baptism for (or unto) the remission of sin is so clearly and forcefully presented upon the sacred page (Acts 2: 38; 22: 16) that the human doctrine of infants born in sin demanded "infant baptism" for the remission of the infant's sin.

The Roman Catholic Church teaches that "Adam's transgression was not confined to himself, but was transmitted, with its long train of dire consequences, to all his posterity. It is called original sin because it is derived from our original progenitor." ("The Faith of the Fathers," pages 304, 305.) The same author, Cardinal Gibbons, speaking of Christ, says: "Now he tells us in his gospel that baptism is the essential means established for washing away the stain of original sin, and the door by which we find admittance into his church, which may be called the second Eden." (Page 307.)

The Protestants, who came out of the bosom of the Roman Church, adopted this false doctrine, and hence we have in the Methodist "Discipline" this: "Dearly beloved, forasmuch as all men are conceived and born in sin, and that our Savior Christ saith, 'Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God,' I beseech you to call upon God the Father, through our Lord Jesus Christ, that of his bounteous mercy he will grant to this child that which by nature he cannot have; that he may be baptized with water and the Holy Ghost, and received into Christ's holy church, and be made a lively member of the same."

Here is distinctly attributed, as it is by the Roman Church, a cleansing virtue to the water of their so-called "baptism" that washes away "Adamic, transmitted, or inherited" sin. In the case of infants dying without baptism the doctrine of the immediate operation of the Holy Spirit was invented as a "substitute" for the cleansing power of water from "original" sin as the infant passed away.

It was but a short step from this false conception of the Holy Spirit's mission and manner of work to the almost universally false doctrine of the "direct" or "immediate" operation of the Holy Spirit in the conversion of sinners.

3. Every false doctrine or precept of men is the work of the "prince of the powers of the air, of the spirit that now worketh in the sons of disobedience," whether so intended or not.

Even good men, sincere men, and men who desire to honor God, are frequently used of Satan for the accomplishment of his purposes. As proof of this statement. two characters are introduced, one from the Old Testament and one from the New Testament. "And when they came unto the threshing floor of Chidon, Uzza put forth his hand to hold the ark; for the oxen stumbled. And the anger of Jehovah was kindled against Uzza, and he smote him, because he put his hand to the ark: and there he died before God." (1 Chron. 13: 9, 10.) Uzza was a good man. and no doubt his action in this matter was prompted by the desire to protect the ark of God from injury, but it was disobedience to God's law. Even those who were ordained to bear the ark were forbidden to touch the ark: they could only bear it by the staves on either side. " And when Aaron and his sons have made an end of covering the sanctuary, and all the furniture of the sanctuary, as the camp is to set forward; after that, the sons of Kohath shall come to bear it: but they shall not touch the sanctuary, lest they die. These things are the burden of the sons of Kohath in the tent of meeting." (Num. 4: 15.) Saul of Tarsus, who became Paul the apostle, is a notable example of sincere and honest men being used of Satan. He was at one time a bitter and persistent persecutor of Jesus Christ and his church. "For ye have heard of my manner of life in time past in the Jews' religion, how that beyond measure I persecuted the Church of God, and made havoc of it: and I advanced in the Jews' religion beyond many of mine own age among my countrymen, being more exceedingly zealous for the traditions of my fathers." (Gal. 1: 13, 14.) But while doing this, he was sincere, desiring to honor God, for he declared: "I verily thought with myself, that I ought to do many things contrary to the name of Jesus of Nazareth." (Acts 26: 9.) As to whether he was honest in so thinking, he leaves us in no doubt, for he declared he always had a good conscience: "And Paul, looking steadfastly on the council, said, Brethren, I have lived before God in all good conscience until this day." (Acts 23: 1.) But what was he doing in persecuting Jesus and his church, if not the work of Satan, the "prince of the powers of the air, the spirit that now worketh in the sons of disobedience?" That we may be in no doubt, let Paul inform us on this point: "Faithful is the saying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners; of whom I am chief: howbeit for this cause I obtained mercy, that in me as chief might Jesus Christ show forth all his long-suffering, for an ensample of them that should thereafter believe on him unto eternal life." (1 Tim. 1: 15, 16.) Paul was "sinning," and sinning is the work of Satan, though ignorantly done as in his case.

THE CONCLUSION.

I believe that, in the light of the clear teaching of the holy Scriptures, Brother North is right in the position that the teaching of the "illuminating professor," as well as all scientists and religionists who teach doctrine contrary to the word of God, is the work of Satan. Some are the willing servants of Satan, while others are deluded with the impression that they are serving God. Therefore, it behooves us all not only to heed the admonition, "Beloved, believe not every spirit, but prove the spirits, whether they are of God; because many false prophets are gone out into the world" (1 John 4: 1), but to look well to our own teaching, lest we become false teachers and lead souls away from God.

PEARLS.

BY DAVID LIPSCOMB, JR.

"Neither cast ye your pearls before swine." This admonition is somewhat difficult to heed when we consider the number of swine. But the pearls are to be had, and they are ours. The chiefest one, the goodly one, the one to be sought for the world over, for which the greatest price should be paid, is the Sermon on the Mount, the Savior's best gift to the world, the safe and sane code of morals, beside which the best utterances of Socrates and other great teachers are but feeble counsel. It is Christ's message to the world. If all else were lost, it would be a correct guide for human conduct. There is no phase of intercourse between a man and his fellow man, filial, parental, fraternal, marital, that is not touched upon and adorned. From the "blesseds" to the "foolish man" there is wisdom which is from above.

"Give not that which is holy unto the dogs, neither cast ye your pearls before swine, lest they trample them under their feet, and turn again and rend you." The counsel is good and wholesome. It means (1) that we should avoid the company of hogs-hogs that walk like men; (2) that should we, through force of circumstances, be unable to altogether avoid such company, we should be discreet in speech, and give no opportunity to said hogs for blaspheming the name of our beloved Master. Remember the words of the wise man: "There is a time for everything." While we should never be ashamed of Jesus or our faith, we should use some serpentine wisdom. Some of the early reformers, followers of John Wycliffe, by their overzeal and indiscretion, gained to themselves the epithet of "babblers." They were too enthusiastic, and chose neither their time nor audience. Paul on Mars' Hill quickly sensed that he was wasting his time and pearl of speech before the idle populace of Athens, a populace that had become so dogmatic that it spent its time only in telling or hearing some new thing. The great virtue of the age of Pericles and Cimon were gone, and there was only idle curiosity and gossip. They were hogs, but lazy hogs.

The hogs are still with us, and by their acts we may know them. We meet them in many places. We cannot tell them by their garb, but we can by their grunts and greed, and by their dispositions to wallow in the mire of filthy jest and anecdote. Sometimes they wear clergyman's black, sometimes they move among the smart set; but scratch them a bit, and the hog comes out in coarseness and vulgarity. A certain lady said to me once that certain preachers seem to find much enjoyment in telling broad jokes and laughing immoderately over them. A fountain cannot send forth sweet waters a certain period, and at other times bitter, filthy stuff. Let us, with David, pray: "Create within me a clean heart, O God; and renew a right spirit within me."

There was once a modest country girl who, to assist her mother, waited upon the table at a country hotel. There came in some well-dressed but rude men. After the manner of their kind, they began to talk to the girl, inquiring her name, etc. She said her name was "Pearl." "O," said one, a biblical wit, "you are the pearl of great price." "No," she said, demurely, "I am the pearl that was cast before swine." There was a silence deep and loud.

The pearls in our Book are numberless. They lie thick sown as the islands in the Aegean Sea. We can, if we but will, gather on every hand. The teachings of our Savior in the Sermon on the Mount, the parables illustrative of the kingdom, his farewell talks to his disciples around the passover table, his prayer for his disciples, his prayer for himself in the garden, his tender solicitude for his mother, his plea even in his agony for his murderers—all these are pearls of wondrous beauty. In the writings and speeches of his disciples we can find pearls of surpassing luster—the Twelfth of Romans, Thirteenth of First Corinthians, Second Peter, all of James, the Twenty-second of Revelation. Besides these and uncounted others which lie on the surface, by delving deeper we may discover "full many a gem of purest ray serene."

Our Old Testament is full of pearls of thought from Moses to Malachi. On the road, camp for a long time with Isaiah and learn from him of things said about the Lion of the tribe of Judah, who was to come up "as a root out of dry ground." All these pearls are to us a precious heritage to be kept sacredly from contact with swine.

As for ourselves, we should collect these as more precious than gold or rubies, remembering always the beautiful words of Paul: "Whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things."

NEWS FROM SARAH ANDREWS.

BY ROBERT S. KING.

Sister Andrews is now comfortably located on one of the islands in the northern part of Japan where she can avoid the two months' rainy season, and is using every available means to get well that she may get back to her work. The work at Shizuoka and Okitsu is still going on, and the expense money comes from her personal allowance. There is nothing we can do that is too good for this sacrificing servant of God. We should not spare any expense, that she may be well taken care of. I know none of you feel that she is a burden on the church, but, on the other hand, it is a pleasure for us to make her as comfortable and happy as her circumstances will admit. I rejoice to know that she is improving, and pray that her hopes may be realized. Remember her in your prayers, that, if God wills, she may be spared to the work she loves so well. Here follows her interesting letter:

Dear Brother and Sister King: Your last two letters—one dated May 18 and the other June 11—were forwarded to me here, and, as usual, I was so glad and thankful to hear from you. Thanks for the liberal inclosure which came in the last one. Oh how I wish I could write the donors each time! I have just re-read your letter written in May, and find it contained a check, too, which I will acknowledge here with heartfelt thanks. I was thinking that check came in the letter before these two. I wanted that check came in the letter before these two. I wanted to write you sooner, but until a few days ago we were living in a house without a chair or table or much of anything else, and it seemed hard to write down on my all fours; so I kept putting it off until we really got settled.

As I remember, I wrote you shortly before leaving Okitsu and made mention that as soon as Brother Fuji we would leave for mori made his monthly preaching trip we would leave for the north. He, with his daughter, came on the first Sat-urday in June, she to stay during our absence to help in the work, and he to be there over Sunday to preach. Be-fore he came we walked the full length of the town giving unday in June, she to stay during our absence to help in the work, and he to be there over Sunday to preach. Fore he came we walked the full length of the town giving out invitations, but the attendance was not good, after all. We took courage, however, believing we had done all we could. Two young people were baptized, and how happy they seem! Wish I had time to tell you the history of one of them. Brother Fujimori left on Monday and we the following morning. The friends at Okitsu gave us quite a send-off and we had a pleasant trip, arriving here a little after ten o'clock Friday night, having stopped off one night in Tokyo and one at Brother and Sister Fox's place about six hours from Tokyo. By the time we got here oliki San especially felt that we were a long way from home. The bigness and broadness of things made us feel that we were in a different country altogether. The population is not so great on this island, so the space is quite a joy as well as a tonic. This particular city is laid off in blocks and the streets are wide, reminding one of home. The big State University here is one of the main attractions, with its wonderful grounds and a farm in connections, with its wonderful grounds and a farm in connection; also a botanical garden. It is at the farm we get our milk, about a half gallon a day, and I never drank richer, better milk anywhere. The "eats" are all grand here, and I am going to get fat.

We went to a hotel and spent the first three days on our arrival. The lodging there being high, especially when one has to pay for two, as soon as we found a place that would do at all we moved to it and stayed twenty days. We found this place and expected to move the first day of July, but Oiki San got up that morning with a sore throat and high fever; so we were delayed again. We have two owns here—one foreign style, with table and chairs and a little bed that a foreign style, with table and chairs and a little bed that a foreign style, with the lamb and then resort to the grass. I first got blistered, out invitations, but the attendance was not good, after all.

feel yet that I will have to give up, God helping me. It was not for that reason that I wrote those letters to you after hearing the diagnosis of my case in March. Of course I may have to go, and will if it seems best later on, though, as far as my own wishes are concerned, I would like to go to heaven from Japan. I am trying to submit all things wholly unto the Lord, and in this I find true peace and joy.

I was so glad to hear that the Moreheads are coming and that our force would be increased with such good prospective workers. May the Lord bless and lead them.

Three years ago I was with dear Sister Lipscomb at this me. O how I enjoyed it! Remember me especially to her. Christian love and good wishes to you both and to all the friends there.

Yours ever gratefully, SARAH ANDREWS.

On the card for Little Bible Lesson Pictures, the lesson for December 3, 1922, on the subject, "Jesus Sends Out Seventy Helpers," the question is asked: "Whom did Jesus choose besides his disciples to help him?" The answer given on the card is: "Seventy men and women." Is it true that Jesus sent out "men and women" when he sent out the seventy?-X

No. It was a mistake for the editor of the picture card to state that women were sent out with the seventy. There is no scriptural authority for such a statement. Jesus did have women helpers, or women who ministered unto him, but he did not send them out with the seventy. The picture cards are not edited by the Gospel Advocate Company. Sometimes error gets into the lessons, as they are edited by sectarians. The Gospel Advocate watches very closely these lessons and corrects many errors, but sometimes an error is overlooked

Union, S. C., July 24.—With our three preachers located in the State, we think that we are moving along fairly well this year. We are at this time in a good meeting at Moore, with seven baptized and some things righted. I have done most of the preaching, with Brother Gibbs and Brother Mosley using the other time. We will close this meeting on Sunday morning and begin a tent meeting at Stone Station. The brethren at Stone Station seem to be determined to press on. Some have the courage and faith that accomplishes something in the work. We have call after call for meetings in new fields. People will come for miles to hear, and insist that we go to their town or neighborhood and hold a meeting. Most of this we have to turn down. We find that there is no use to start the work and then turn them loose by themselves. What we need is workers. We could get the workers if we only had support for them. We owe one thousand dollars on our house. This costs us eighty dollars interest per year. Can't some good brother lend us this amount, to be paid back at twenty-five dollars per month without interest? I believe that would be using your money well. We can give good notes that will make it safe.—Thomas H. Burton.

Clovis, New Mexico, July 25.—I held a few-days' meeting at Melrose, some twenty-seven miles west of here, beginning on the third Sunday in June and closing on the fourth Sunday afternoon. This place is indeed a hard place to get people out to hear the truth; and yet, while we had no additions, the meeting did much good in other ways. We have but very few brethren here, and they are a little slow. Last Sunday I preached for the Clovis congregation both morning and evening, and in the afternoon I baptized a young lady who had been sick for several months. The ladies of the church had been visiting her from time to time, and I had visited her often, and at last I taught her the truth, and she confessed her faith in Christ and expressed a desire to be baptized. On account of her condition (suffering from tuberculosis) the young lady was not able to get out of bed and go to the church; so we arranged to take her in an ambulance to the church, and four men let her down slowly, and I baptized her by the assistance of these brethren. The girl was happy, and next morning before. Her mother, who had been a member of the church, but out of duty, came up and confessed her wrongs and took membership with the church here. Brethren, I am doing my very best in this country. I am to begin a mission meeting at Floyd, some eighteen miles west of Portales, on July 20. Brother and Sister Frasa, of Dayton, Tenn., sent me three dollars and seventy-five cents to help me in this gospel work. Others wishing fellowship in this meeting may send to me or to Brother A. J. Hunt, Floyd, New Mexico. I am anxious to hold other meetings where they are crying, "Come over and help us;"

but, brethren, if you do not help me in this work, I cannot do it. The church at Clovis is a good one and is doing all it can, but we need help in this field. On the first Sunday in August I am to begin a meeting at Portales, and I am anxious to hold a meeting at a schoolhouse some eight miles north of Endee. Will you help me?—D. S. Ligon.

THE ONE HUNDREDTH ANNI-VERSARY OF ROAN CREEK CHURCH.

BY J. B. BRECHEEN.

Roan Creek Church was organized in Carroll County, ten miles south of Huntingdon, in the year 1825. This is perhaps the oldest church in the State, and one of the oldest among the brethren in America. It was organized with Kitty Guest and wife, Billy Holmes and wife, Polly Holmes, and Levi McWherter as charter members. From that time until now there has been a strong, loyal congregation continually worshiping at this place.

For many years there was a camp meeting each year, to which many people came from all over West Tennessee and camped during the revival meeting. Nearly all the old preachers preached there, among whom were Jim Holmes, Allan Kendrick, Carroll Kendrick, Brother Van Dyke, Brother Stalling, John Neely, McGee, David Lipscomb, E. G. Sewell, J. A. Carter, Elihu Scott, Briney, Roulhac, Moses E. Lard, Crumb, Cook, and too many others to mention.

From this congregation many other congregations have sprung, among which are Williams Chapel, Wildersville, Hickory Plains, Obion Chapel, Trezevant, Huntingdon, Christian Chapel, Clarksburg, Lexington, and Hare's Mill.

The brethren now worshiping there have decided to celebrate the one hundredth anniversary with an old-fashioned meeting, in which the old story will be told, old songs will be sung—in fact, the gospel will be preached as near as possible like it was preached in Jerusalem nineteen hundred years ago.

ITEMS OF INTEREST.

BY A. A. BUNNER.

Judge Raulston knew how to handle the Scopes case. Tennessee had a man in the person of Judge Raulston who knew the merits of the case that he was to try—that is, he knew that neither the Bible nor the theory of evolution was on trial in his court, but it was Mr. Scopes who was on trial for the violation of a law of Tennessee; and for the violation of this law, and not for believing the theory of evolution nor disbelieving the Bible, Mr. Scopes was convicted and fined. The country needs just such judges at every bar of this land. But the various theories of evolution, both theistic and atheistic, will finally fall asleep, while the Bible will continue to live. Over fifty years ago it was more talked of than it is to-day -that is, the Darwinian theory of evolution. While I was then young and just starting out as a preacher, I met with many young men on the trains and boats who argued with me and tried to make me believe that they could trace their ancestry back to the monkey, and some of them did not have to trace their ancestry very far back to convince me of their low origin. But the man who wants to claim the monkey for his granddaddy and the moneron for his great-granddaddy, just let him enjoy his claim. But I have met up with a few specimens of so-called humanity of this kind in the last few years that have made me think that the poor monkey, if he were a mind to do so, could find good grounds for a suit of slander against Messrs. Darwin, Haeckel, and others.

OUTLOOK BRIGHT

"Day by day in every way" the prospect for next session grows brighter. As the summer advances and the opening date approaches the interest grows greater. "Well, you are looking for a great school next year at Henderson, I suppose," and "I am sure the school at Henderson is going to be great next year" are common expressions wherever members of the faculty go. The writer of this has heard them in Florida, Michigan, and Texas. The interest and confidence in the future success of the school seems to be general.

WHY NOT?

Why should it not succeed? There is every reason why Freed-Hardeman College should enter upon a new and greater era of usefulness. It is founded upon the right principles and stands for the right things. While surrendering none of its educational ideals, it has met all requirements for recognition. It has been approved by the State Department of Education and it has been admitted into the Tennessee Association of Colleges. Its faculty, buildings, equipment, and curriculum meet every test and requirement.

IMPROVEMENTS

Several thousand dollars are being spent this summer on improvements. The buildings are all being gone over and painted afresh both within and without, new furnaces are being installed, more classrooms are being added, the blackboards are being resurfaced, the girls' dormitory is being renovated from basement to garret, and new furnishings added; in short, the whole plant is being made fresh, clean, and attractive for the opening.

THE FACULTY

The most important factor in any school is its faculty. They mold and shape its character and carry out its ideals. Just think of the men at the head of Freed-Hardeman College—Hardeman and Calhoun! Where will you go to find their superiors? Among the great teachers and preachers, who will surpass them? Among all the brethren, where is there a greater scholar than Calhoun? Younger and less widely known, but one of the best school men in the State, is C. P. Roland, dean of the College. Other members of the faculty are graduates of standard colleges and universities. Men and women of Christian character, scholarship, ability, and experience make up the faculty. They are specialists in their lines of work.

THE BIBLE PRE-EMINENT

While the work in every line and in all departments is thoroughly and conscientiously done and is as good as the best, yet it is in the teaching of the Bible and the training of young men to preach the gospel that Freed-Hardeman College stands out preëminent and par excellent. Here are teachers that have every qualification—love for the truth, knowledge of the Book, soundness in the faith, experience, scholarship, etc. Three of the Bible teachers have traveled and studied in Egypt and the Holy Land. Two of them have spent more than twenty years teaching the Word in the schoolroom, and they stand in the front rank of all the great preachers of the ancient gospel. So where could any one go to get better instruction in the word of God or better preparation for preaching it? It is our honest opinion that no school offers a more thorough, scholarly, or finished course of instruction in the Bible than Freed-Hardeman College. It stands for the Bible, and the Bible alone, in all matters of faith and practice, work and worship, with no hobbies or cranky notions of any kind.

The new catalogue, covering all the work of the school, expenses, etc., will be mailed at once upon request.

THE IMPOSSIBLE HAS BEEN DONE.

BY ANDY T. RITCHIE.

Only a few years ago the task of establishing a congregation of Christians in McEwen, Tenn., seemed impossible, and a number of brethren acquainted with religious conditions felt that it could not be done, but a visit to that town will convince all that their predictions did not come true; and while it is by no means a Jerusalem of religious deportment, we have a nice church building and a regular meeting of Christians working and worshiping after the scriptural order, and some as faithful, sacrificing brethren and sisters as can be found anywhere. brethren are in debt on their house, which is in an unfinished condition. Though comfortable, it needs plastering on the inside and must be seated. I know of no better place for brethren to do a little real mission work, with promise and prospect of its paying a return, than to send them a contribution.

Our recent meeting there was well attended both afternoon and night. Good interest was manifested and kindly feeling prevailed, and the plea of the Bible was placed before many who had heretofore given it but little thought. Two persons were baptized and much general good accomplished.

From McEwen we went to Only, in Hickman County, to labor with another one of our young congregations. The meeting there was well attended and much good accomplished. Seven obeyed the Lord in baptism and others were more favorably impressed with the truth.

Closing at Only on Saturday night, I came to Jackson's Temple, in Dickson County, and began on Sunday morning. Andy T. Ritchie, Jr., went on home for a few days' rest. Our meeting at the Temple was well attended and the interest promised results. There was one baptism and the members were made stronger.

We began at Eureka, in Warren County, last Sunday (July 26), and the prospects at this time are not very encouraging. Brother Dan Gunn is in a meeting only a short distance from here, and, of course, takes some who would otherwise be with us. Then the Methodists, who are largely in the majority in this neighborhood, began a meeting in opposition to ours and are working might and main to keep people from hearing the truth, and so far have succeeded admirably; but, with the few members here, we labor on, and will leave the results with the people and with God, who will overrule all to his glory and the good of the finally faithful.

We go next to Williamson County, and then to Arkansas.

INDIANAPOLIS NOTES.

BY J. C. HAZEL.

The evangelistic services recently conducted by the East Side church of Christ, with Brother E. G. Creacy, of Horse Cave, Ky., doing the preaching, and Brother V. M. Spivey, of Nashville, Tenn., leading the song service, were, we believe, the greatest gospel services ever conducted in our city. We had a large tent, and most of the time the tent was reasonably full, and much of the time the seats were all taken. During the meeting thirteen made the confession and twenty-three took membership-thirty-six in all.

Brother Creacy presented the gospel in its purity and simplicity in a very eloquent manner, and it was well received by the people who came out to hear him. Many of them stated that they never heard the gospel preached as Brother Creacy preached We believe that the reason his sermons were so well received by the audience from time to time was because there were no sensational themes or stories presented, only the gospel as taught by Christ and his disciples. Many people living in this community had never heard of the church of Christ until recently, and were inclined to look upon us as being a peculiar people, teaching some form of doctrine that was hard to understand; but before this meeting closed they were taught by Brother Creacy that the church of Christ in East Indianapolis was made up of people who speak where the Bible speaks and are silent where it is silent. We truly believe that they have a different understanding, not only of what the church of Christ stands for, but what the Bible teaches.

We are very grateful to neighboring congregations of the church of Christ for the interest they manifested in this meeting, and for the contributions they made to help support the work in this community. We had visiting brethren from Pekin, Bedford, Bloomington, Crawfordsville, Ladoga, Newcastle, Muncie, and Covington, Ind.; Danville, Bismarck, and Champaign, Ill.; Cincinnati, Ohio.

Quite a number of the brethren from the South Side church of Christ and West Indianapolis and some from North Indianapolis attended the services and coöperated with us to the fullest extent.

We are endeavoring to secure a lot upon which we hope to erect a perma-We have almost outnent home. grown the hall where we have been worshiping and are now looking for larger quarters.

As we have had a request to state briefly the history connected with the establishment of the cause in East Indianapolis, we desire to make the following statements: On April 6, 1924, some twelve or fifteen members of the church of Christ in various localities met for the purpose of discussing the possibility of establishing the cause in East Indianapolis. At the first meeting financial support was pledged by the ones in attendance to carry on the expenses for the first six months. On the following Lord's day we held our first worship in the hall where we are now meeting, with an attendance of approximately twenty-five or thirty persons. To-day our attendance is from seventy-five to a hundred, and as a result of the meeting recently held we are confident that our attendance will be increased to at least one hundred and fifty each Lord's day.

We trust at some future time that Brother Creacy and Brother Spivey will return and be able to carry on the great work that they have started.

We invite all visiting brethren that may be in Indianapolis on Lord's day to worship with us, and we especially invite an interest in the prayers of Christian people. The church meets in the Red Men's Hall, 3851 East New York Street.

POWER OF UNITED PRAYER.

There is great virtue, great might, in united Christian prayers, such as we offer when we are come together in Christ's name. There is a sort of violence in them, holy violence, taking the kingdom of heaven by force .-Selected.

DON'T PROCRASTINATE.

A naughty little weed one day Poked up its tiny head. "To-morrow I will pull you up, Old Mr. Weed," I said. But I put off the doing till, When next I passed that way,
The hateful thing had spread abroad,
And laughed at my dismay.

A naughty little thought one day Popped right into my mind.

"Oho," I cried, "I'll put you out To-morrow, you will find!"
But once again I put it off,
Till, like the little weed, The ugly thing sprang up apace
And grew into a deed!

So, boys and girls, heed what I say And learn it with your sums: Don't put off till to-morrow, for To-morrow never comes. To-day pull up the little weeds,
The naughty thoughts subdue,
Or they may take the reins themselves, And some day master you! -Selected.

The two greatest names associated with Christian education among The two greatest names associated with Christian education among the disciples of Christ are J. A. Harding and David Lipscomb. No men stood more solidly for truth, and no men wielded such powerful influence on the lives of their students.

Harding College carries on this influence. Of its faculty, five were trained directly under these men. Practically all the others were trained under their students and have received the same influence.

What other college can reproduce so completely the earnestness, the spiritual force, the high idealism of these founders of Christian schools? We have made

BIBLE CROSS WORD PUZZLE

SOME very odd names are worked into this puzzle, which has a decidedly well-balanced design. There are four seven-letter words, Numbers 14, 18, 20 and 44, and we advise you to get them first. No. 44 is certainly easy, and so for that matter is 14. Consult your Bible for the references to difficult proper names.

How to Solve a Cross Word Puzzle

To work out this puzzle, the white spaces must be filled with letters forming words answering to the various horizontal and vertical definitions given below. The horizontal and vertical words are not the same, but each gives a clue to the other. The first letter of each word is indicated by a number which refers to the definitions listed below.

It is advisable to first fill in, in both directions, those words which you know to be correct. These will furnish hints to those words which you do not know or had merely guessed at. When the puzzle is solved correctly, the letters in the white spaces will spell words both horizontally and vertically. The black spaces are the blind spots of the puzzle and merely form the pattern, incidentally designating the ends and beginnings of the words contained in the puzzle.

obeyed the gospel in early life, and became identified with the Christian Chapel congregation, near Dongola, Ill., where he served as deacon and then as elder of the church. He was one of the pillars of the church at that place. Few were the times that the church assembled, while in health, that he was not there, and even during his last illness, which continued about a year and a half, when circumstances would permit, he was found in his place at worship, which was always on the front seat, singing with the spirit and with the understanding. He was a splendid singer. On Sunday, January 4, the writer preached at the church, and though Brother Karraker was very feeble, he was at his place. This was the last service he was able to attend. Had he lived until May 30, he would have been sixty years old. In 1884 he was married to Mary L. Lingle, who survives him. To this union eight children were born. One died in infancy, and another in 1915 at the age of twenty years. The six living ones are married, and a finer set of children it would be hard to find. He also leaves seventeen grandchildren, three brothers, and one sister, together with his widow, besides a great number of other friends, to mourn his departure. The funeral was conducted by the writer.

REPORT OF MEETINGS.

BY J. D. TANT.

I have just closed a fine tent meeting three miles east of Dresden, Tenn., with three baptized. I held a tent meeting there last year as a mission, and baptized several and put them to work. Later I went back and met John R. Clark (Baptist) in debate, and now the brethren are meeting regularly for Bible study and worship. I hope to see a strong congregation there soon. During this tent meeting I had the noted Calhoun, who was preaching at Dresden, to come out and preach one time for us. Many heard him, and all rejoiced to find him a humble, devoted, God-fearing, gospel preacher. His many years' wandering from his Father's house in "digressive" pastures has not caused him to lose respect for the word of God. I am glad he has come back home, and there is no reason why he and Hardeman should not make the Freed-Hardeman school one of the greatest in the South.

I am now in a fine meeting at Berea, four miles east of Rives. This church was built up by Brother John R. Williams. I find many brethren in this part who count Freed, Hardeman, G. Dallas Smith, Hoskins, Colley, and Hassell among the able preachers who have worked in West Tennessee. They seem to love them all, and generally wind up by telling what John R. Williams has done, and the many relatives of theirs he has baptized, and conclude by saying: "For a gospel preacher, I would not turn him down for any of them."

I am glad to read Srygley's reports of his work in the West. I am sure he is learning things of our anti-Sunday-school brethren in the West that Tennessee preachers know nothing about. The last one of their tribe I met in debate was Noah Cowen, who seems to be their only big man and debates for all of them; yet they are divided into six different classes, and each class thinks they are the only loyal brethren and the door of heaven is locked against all the rest.

I go to Stop, Ky., for my next meeting.

GOSPEL ADVOCATE

The GOSPEL ADVOCATE is the oldest living periodical published in the interest of the church of Christ. It is now in its sixty-seventh volume, and it has a larger list of regular, paid-up subscribers than it has ever had before. Its circulation is increasing rapidly, and it is daily growing in favor with the people. It contains twenty-four pages, and is issued every week. It is printed in large, clear type, on good paper, and is neatly pasted and trimmed. It has by far the largest circulation of any periodical published south of the Mason and Dixon Line in the interest of the church of Christ. It has regular editorial writers, besides a large number of able and regular contributors. It has all of the regular departments of the best religious periodicals.

In editorial policy it stands for individual consecration, against ecclesiastic organizations, as the scriptural and best method of doing missionary work. It recognizes no organization but the church of Christ as a scriptural medium of converting the world and developing the Christ

tian character.

It opposes all human creeds and ecclesiastic councils, and pleads for the right of each individual to study the Scriptures for himself and formulate his own faith, without dictation or hindrance from churchly dignitaries. It opposes all clerical assumption of official authority in the church, and stands for the scriptural doctrine that each Christian has an office to fill, a work to perform—that all are kings and priests unto God.

It stoutly advocates the doctrine of missions, and argues unceasingly that every Christian is a divinely commissioned missionary and every church is a scripturally organized missionary society. The mission of every Christian and the design of every church is to preach the gospel to all the world.

It believes in, and stoutly advocates, congregational singing, as opposed to select choirs and instrumental performances, as the best and most soul-stirring church music. Let all the people sing. Provide a book for everybody in the house, and let us all make a joyful noise unto the Lord.

CURRENT COMMENT

By JAMES A. ALLEN

Concerning the recent visit of Clarence Darrow, famous Chicago criminal lawyer, to Gregory Bald, in the great Smoky Mountains, a "special to the Tennessean" said:

When the lawyer, self-confessed agnostic, stood upon the summit of Gregory Bald and cast his vision down the deep valleys below, through which flowed the silvery streams dashing to foam against the boulders, and as he looked away across the panorama of mountains whose heads were raised against the skies, and whose giant forms were covered with the most wonderful foliage and flowers, he is said to have exclaimed: "There must have been a God to have created all this."

Noting the above report, the editor of the Tennessean says:

The newspaper story of Clarence Darrow's exclamation as he viewed the Great Smokies in all their majestic grandeur, "There must have been a God to have created all this," may be but a figment of some reporter's imagination, but it is by no means incredible. The poet has said: "There is no unbelief, whoever plants a seed beneath the sod and waits to see it push away the clod, trusts he in God." Some one else has said that nobody but a fool could be an atheist—and Darrow is no fool.

We copy the following from Abbott's "Life of Napoleon Bonaparte," Volume I., pages 245, 246:

One evening a group of officers were conversing together upon the quarter-deck respecting the existence of God. Many of them believed not in his being. It was a calm, cloudless, brilliant night. The heavens, the work of God's fingers, canopied them gloriously. The moon and the stars, which God had ordained, beamed down upon them with serene luster. As they were flippantly giving utterance to the arguments of atheism, Napoleon paced to and fro upon the deck, taking no part in the conversation, and apparently absorbed in his own thoughts. Suddenly he stopped before them, and said, in those tones of dignity which ever overawed: 'Gentlemen, your arguments are very fine; but who made all those worlds, beaming so gloriously above us? Can you tell me that?" No one answered. Napoleon resumed his silent walk, and the officers selected another topic for conversation.

All nature, through thousands of voices, proclaims the existence of God. The existence of a design is an evidence of the existence of a Designer. Reason and intelligence see in creation ample manifestation of the existence of the Creator. It requires more faith to believe that accident and chance are responsible for the wonders of the universe than it does to believe that they are the work of an all-wise and all-powerful Creator. "The fool hath said in his heart, There is no God." (Ps. 53: 1.)

From "Memoirs of A. Campbell," Volume II., pages 419, 420, we copy the following:

I awoke with the morning star, and going out on deck, from the brilliant and mild appearance of the heavens I anticipated the glories of a sunrising at sea, and accordingly hastened to awake my companions to enjoy with me the richest of Nature's feasts. Soon as we were all seated on the upper deck at the stern, with our faces to the east, we began each to designate that point from which we expected the sun to lift upon us his effugent countenance. As we gazed upon the pacific and silvery brow of the tree. As we gazed upon the pacific and silvery brow of the tran-As we gazed upon the pacific and silvery brow of the tran-quil sea, which, as a splendid mirror, seemed to reflect the glories of the heavens fresh upon us with every tremulous swell which urged us to the desired haven, we saw a bright-ness in the orient which indicated to us the near approach of the joyful monarch of the day. The crepuscular glim-merings gradually spread over all the east, and as they swept a loftier arch toward the empyrean, they assumed the brightness of liquid brass; while deeply bedded in the far-distant horizon, two pyramidal columns began to rice far-distant horizon, two pyramidal columns began to rise, as if the clouds from the Atlantic had suddenly formed themselves into pillars for the gates of the morning, erecting a sublime fort for the entrance of Nature's luminary. Instantly the empyreal sovereign streaked with gold the inner side of these two colossal pillars, from between which he seemed resolved to enter upon the race of a summer day. Deeper and broader he laid on the molten gold till these two columns, capped with rubies, stood gilded from top to bottom. The curtain of night, which seemed to encircle this bottom. The curtain of night, which seemed to encircle this glorious arch, culminated over the spot where the eyelids of the morning began to open; but before we could take the dimensions of this new portico of day, the sun himself in all the gorgeousness of his own peerless glory, gently raised himself to peep over the silvery deep from which he was about to emerge. After a single glance, which dazzled on the back of every gentle curl on the surface around him, he suddenly, at a single bound, stood upon the sea, and by another effort drew after him from the briny deep a golden pedestal as if from a surface of liquid fire, on which he seemed for a moment to sit, while from his dazzling locks floods of light and splendor began to flow. His yellow hairs, as if baptized in a sea of glory, dropped light zling locks floods of light and splendor began to flow. His yellow hairs, as if baptized in a sea of glory, dropped light and joy upon a world starting into life, while the gradual expanding of his wings proclaimed him about to fly the circuit of the universe. Bidding farewell to sea and land, he began his flight to heaven; and as he onward and upward bent his way, I was reminded of Jesse's son, who while a shepherd boy used to sing: "The heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament showeth his handiwork. Day unto day uttereth speech, and night unto night showeth knowledge. No speech nor language is there where their voice is not heard. Their line is gone out through all the earth, and their words to the end of the world. In them he has set a tabernacle for the sun, who is as a bridegroom coming out of his chamber and reis as a bridegroom coming out of his chamber and re-joiceth as a strong man to run a race. His going forth is from the end of heaven, and his circuit to the end of it, and there is nothing hid from the heat thereof."

While all nature proclaims the existence of God, we are dependent upon the Bible for a revelation of God. The very existence of the Bible furnishes as great, or greater, evidence of the existence and work of its divine Author as the very existence of creation proclaims the being of the Creator. The wisest and most learned men are wholly incompetent to produce such a book as the Bible. The thoughts that it presents are infinitely above the highest reach of the greatest minds of earth; both the matter it contains and the style of its composition, as well as the ideas to which it gives expression, are as far above the loftiest grasp of the highest intelligence known among men as the heavens are higher than the earth. We need not, therefore, inquire as to whether or not uninspired and fallible men wrote the Bible. They are utterly incompetent and wholly inadequate to such a task. Let those few narrow and shallow-minded, but supremely egotistical and bigoted men, who have entrenched themselves in our schools and colleges while the people slept, and who are scholars, "falsely so called"—I say, let these men who do not like the Bible and who sneer at it produce another book just as good.

It is more than passing strange that Christian people themselves are so uninformed on the evidences. Christianity invites investigation and examination, howsoever rigid or severe; it courts the closest scrutiny of the keenest and most learned minds. Christianity can grow and thrive only in the light.

The Bible presents a series of historical facts, events that occurred in the history of the world. The whole question of the divine origin of the Bible hangs on whether or not these facts really occurred. If they did occur as recorded in the Bible, then all that the Bible claims is true; if they did not occur, the enemies of the Bible would be only too glad to show it.

Has it ever been shown that these marvelous and supernatural facts did not really occur? The uninformed reader would, perhaps, be amazed to know that never, at any time, has the slightest counterevidence been offered. No man has ever been able, nor is any man now able, to deny that these facts occurred. They have no proof, no evidence. They would take away the Bible, our rule of daily life, the joy and happiness of the Christian life, and rob us of our hope of heaven, and in the place of all this they would put-nothing, absolutely nothing; and they are interested in nothing but an indulgence of the lusts of the flesh. This is the real and underlying, but never expressed, motive that prompts the bitter attacks upon the Bible. Infidelity is as darkness nothing. As darkness is simply the absence of light, so infidelity is simply the absence of faith. There is nothing feasible or tangible about it, nothing capable of sustaining us through the trials and toils of life, or of supporting us when the dread time comes for us to walk down into the valley of the shadow of death and out into the beyond.

THE TREE OF LIFE.

BY R. O. KENLEY.

When Jehovah was creating the things of this world, all of which were for man's good, he created the tree of life. This tree grew in the garden of Eden, the first home of man. Man was permitted to eat of its fruit; and the fruit of this tree, when eaten of by man, would keep him from becoming tired and weary and would perpetuate his temporal or physical life; in fact, so long as he ate of the fruit of this tree he would never die. But in order for man to be a recipient of its beneficence he had to eat of its fruit, not once, but continuously. There was one tree in the garden of Eden the fruit of which man was forbidden to eat of. Jehovah said: "Ye shall not eat of it, neither shall ye touch it, lest ye die." (Gen. 3:3.) Man transgressed this law of Jehovah and was driven from the garden of Eden. Jehovah did not use any violence or direct means to end man's physical life, but let him perish for a lack of the fruit of the tree of life. (Gen. 3: 22-24.) As Adam was the first man of Jehovah's creation, the sentence of physical death that Jehovah passed upon him descended and extends to all his posterity. (1 Cor. 15; 22, 23.)

By man's expulsion from the garden of Eden he suffered: (a) Denial of the privilege of eating of the tree of life; (b) physical or temporal death, because he could not obtain access to the tree of life.

Man, from the time of his creation, has at all times been a free moral agent; he could obey Jehovah or not. Jehovah has never left man without a remedy for his sins; so he set about at once, after his expulsion from the garden of Eden, to evolve and perfect a plan or scheme for man's final salvation. To perfect this plan, Jehovah took approximately four thousand years. This plan was completed in Christ. "For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive." (1 Cor. 15: 22.)

Jesus Christ became the first man of a new (spiritual) creation, as Adam was the first man of the physical creation. "The first man Adam was made a living soul; the last Adam was made a quickening spirit. . . The first man is of the earth, earthy: the second man is the Lord from heaven." (1 Cor. 15: 45-47.)

Jesus Christ became man's tree of life. His fruit, if eaten, will give man eternal spiritual life. To learn of Christ, his commandments, life, and character, and obey his commands, is to partake of the fruit of Christ. "My tongue shall speak of thy word: for all thy commandments are righteousness." (Ps. 119: 172.) "And he that keepeth his commandments dwelleth in him, and he in him." (1 John 3: 24.)

Partaking of the fruit of the spiritual tree of life requires an active faith, repentance, and obedience to all his commands, knowledge, humility, and an earnest, persistent, and burning desire to learn more and more of the will, life, and commands of Jesus Christ, with a purpose and desire to conform our lives like unto his. "But ye are not in the flesh, but in the Spirit, if so be that the Spirit of God dwell in you. Now if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his." (Rom. 8: 9.) "And Jesus said unto them, I am the bread of life: he that cometh to me shall never hunger, and he that believeth on me shall never thirst." (John 6: 35.) "This is the bread which cometh down from heaven, that a man may eat thereof, and not die." (John 6: 50.)

Adam and his posterity were by Jehovah absolutely cut off from the tree of life—that is, the tree whose fruit, when eaten of, would perpetuate man's physical life.

Through Jesus Christ we are given a better plan, in that no man is cut off or prevented from partaking of the fruit of his life and resurrection and thereby perpetuating man's spiritual life; so, if any man in this age fails to perpetuate his spiritual life, his suffering and loss will be due entirely to his own volition and refusal to eat and partake of the fruit. If there is a spiritual famine prevailing in the world to-day, it is not due to any purpose of Jehovah, but to man's refusal to eat and partake of the spiritual food that will perpetuate his life.

"WHY FEIGNEST THYSELF TO BE ANOTHER?" BY JAMES E. CHESSOR.

THE MASK OF THE HYPOCRITE.

There is much pose nowadays. We see it in the pulpit, and we see it everywhere. I fear that too few of us are as sincere and open and frank as Christians ought to be. Oftentimes we are in mask.

Now, we can fool men, and even ourselves, but not God. Our Lord's severest denunciation was directed against hypocrites. A hypocrite was a mask wearer in the old Greek amphitheater. The actor could not be heard back of the fiftieth tier of seats, and hence wore a large false head, with something like a modern megaphone from his real to his false mouth. This enabled him to fling his voice the needed distance. It was the wearing of this false head that led to the use of the word to describe a dissembler.

Richard Mansfield was accustomed to say that he was merely a play actor, but all the world was, as it were, engaged in one vast universal Hallowe'en frolic of hypocrisy. Of course, this is too severe a judgment, but our Lord's warning to the hypocrites comes down the centuries. "Verily, they have their reward," he said. And he meant that they have the praise of men and the condemnation of God. The mask will be torn off at the last day. God will judge the secrets of men, bringing every hidden thing to light. Hypocrites shall give account of their hypocrisy.

"Come in, thou wife of Jeroboam; why feignest thou thyself to be another?" cried the blind prophet, Ahijah, to the false queen. He was blind, and yet he saw, God giving him discernment; and the feigning queen went home discomfited. The word of God to-day discovers sin, if we but realized it. There is nothing we can hide from his all-seeing eye. To feign ourselves to be another, or anything different from what we are, is supreme silliness.

Your SIN FINDING YOU OUT.

As "murder will out," so sin in any of its multifarious forms will out. Moses, speaking by inspiration, said so. Moses was afraid certain tribes would not keep their plighted word, that they would play false, and he warned them that their sin would find them out if they failed. The story is worth repeating.

"But if ye will not do so, behold, ye have sinned against Jehovah; and be sure your sin will find you out." That is the warning. In Num, 32 is the story of the settling of the tribes of Reuben and Gad in Gilead, east of the Jordan. These tribes, possessing great herds of cattle, were so favorably impressed with the fine pasture lands of Gilead that they asked leave of Moses to abide in that goodly land. At first he doubted the wisdom of the plan, thinking it a scheme to shirk, and he asked with some petulance: "Shall your brethren go to the war, and shall ye sit here? Wherefore," he added, "discourage ye the heart of the children of Israel from going over into the land which Johovah hath given them?" But the Reubenites and the Gadites vowed good faith. They would build fortified cities, they said, east of the Jordan for their wives and children, and folds for their flocks, and then the armed men would go over and help their brethren in the wars. Moses then agreed to the proposition. "But if ye will not do so," he warned, referring to the agreement, "behold, ye have sinned against Jehovah; and be sure your sin will find you out."

There was danger of their breaking faith, of playing false. Jehovah would not brook a lapse on their part; their sin would be discovered. And here is a basic principle applicable to all sin. It cannot be hidden from God, and oftentimes it cannot be hidden from men. Like the blood of Abel, iniquity cries aloud from secret places. What we say cannot for long deceive men when what we are is all the time discovering us. "I can't hear what you say," said Emerson, "when what you are is dinning in my ears!"

And since our sins will find us out—discover us to men and to God—it concerns us most to find our sins out and forsake them. Whatever is calculated to bring us to shame and misery had best be got rid of. And nothing but the grace of God and the blood of Christ will free us from the stain of our sins.

"WITHOUT SPOT AND BLAMELESS."

Let us break away from our sins. Let us tear away the mask and be true Christians. Let us be clean and pure. Only clean Christians will welcome the Lord's return. Others will be "ashamed. . . at his coming." The last spot must be removed. "Wherefore, beloved, seeing that ye look for such things, be diligent that ye may be found of him in peace, without spot and blameless."

There need not be a single spot. The blood of Christ can cleanse us if we will come with contrite hearts, asking mercy, seeking grace to help us in time of need. Tear off, therefore, the mask, discover your sin, and be rid of it! Be washed in the blood of the Lamb!

"There is a fountain filled with blood,
Drawn from Emmanuel's veins;
And sinners plunged beneath that flood Lose all their guilty stains."

THE BIBLE INERRANT. BY PRICE BILLINGSLEY,

To-day the country is verily at grips with infidelity, which is one of the big and vital issues of the hour. Satan turns a new trick filling pulpits and college chairs with those who exalt the guesses of scientists over the Bible and asperse the sacred record and bring it into general disesteem. They profess that they know God, but in works verily they reject him and set at naught the divine way. They are infidels, in spite of no matter what they profess or believe themselves to be, deceivers of the most dangerous type. Yet the uproar over evolution is not an unmixed evil. It is well that those who in these things give rein to the flesh and feed human pride should be known for exactly what they are, and in every denomination there is such war over the issue as to force new cleavages and realignments, which Jehovah can overrule. so that they who will to do his will shall have their eyes opened and error's shackles struck off. If only amidst these upheavals the churches of Christ are awake and prepared to take full advantage of their unrivaled strategic position!

Let the issue be squarely joined. The first of truths to be maintained is the inerrancy of the Bible. If Jehovah wrote it, it is infallible. It is inerrant or not divine. If he is not its Author, it is a deception. But if we accede to its divine authorship, there is no course left us but to accept unreservedly every word of it as infallible. If we may edit and discard parts of it, we disown it as divine, unless, indeed, God blunders, in which case he is not God at all. There is no middle course; the entire Book stands or falls together. But let it be affirmed with all assurance that God himself is the Author of the Bible. Holy men of God wrote and spoke it at his immediate incidence, whereby was revealed, not their own thoughts or will, but the mind and will of the Creator. Their own frailties and limitations of the flesh were insured against by inspiration. They did not originate; as fit instruments, they only transmitted the truth from God; and nothing in this Book has ever been disproved, though for ages the most powerful of sinister forces have waged relentless warfare upon it, with the inevitable result that those who affected to criticize and correct it were forced finally to admit themselves in error. Then let the fiercest light be turned on, the fullest and freest investigation be courted. Let Christians explore anew the grounds of the faith within them and know that the foundation of God standeth sure. Let us take the fight to the scoffers.

Shall the Creator be brought to count by our rule of thumb? What saith Jehovah? There is no wisdom nor counsel nor understanding against the Lord. (Prov. 21: 3.) Who is man to reply against God? (Rom. 9: 20.) A wild ass's colt. (Job 11: 12.) Wise men by searching cannot find God out. (Job 11: 7-11; Eccles, 3: 11; 8: 17; Rom. 11: 33.) Man must not be exercised in matters too high for him. (Ps. 131: 1; 139: 6.) Great things doeth Jehovah which we cannot comprehend. (Job 37: 5.) There is no searching of his understanding. (Isa. 40: 23.) His judgments are a great deep (Ps. 36: 6) which no man can approach unto (1 Tim. 6: 15, 16). Nothing is too hard for him. (Matt. 19: 26; Luke 1: 37.) Then, what if some things in the Bible should appear unreasonable or impossible to us? Does this prove it uninspired? We accept nature in spite of difficulties encountered, waiting for more light, and it is arrant egotism to do otherwise with the word of the Lord, for it is utterly beyond the creature to pass upon the Creator. Not that his ways are unreasonable, though this is no lawful question to raise with those who profess to believe and be subject to him; we have no right to bring the realm of faith and the things of God to the test of human philosophy and reason. What God says and does is true and right forevermore, regardless of our puny minds and purblind vision, and these the heart of faith accepts without reserve or question.

But let a kindly word of caution be added. I understand the parental ambition to see children get up in the world and advance, the commendable willingness to endure hardships and practice rigid self-denial therefor. However, here lurks a deadly peril; so that wise parents will have a care when their children go away in quest of a finished education that they do not return with a finished Christianity. For in almost every center of learning in the land are polished and winsome professors who under innocentlooking guises are ready to insinuate into tender hearts the infidel blight that the Bible is not infallible. I am persuaded that many noble souls have been snared and ruined through this pitfall which Satan knows so well how to spread for unsuspecting feet. I have seen young Christians back from college, devotees to apostate science and human reason, no longer really interested in the Bible and the church, though pure and consecrated when they went away. Youth must be made aware of these dangers. Let your boy and girl be first grounded and settled in the truth; to understand that God is true, though every man a liar. Make them know that in all the world nothing is important compared to accepting the Bible as from God and its every word as true. It is the polestar by which the whole life is to be reckoned, else one is lost irretrievably. This is why I want my children educated where the word of the Lord is the ruling textbook.

Loving God is but letting God love us—giving welcome that is, to God's love, knowing and believing the love God hath to us,—Horace Bushnell,

No man or woman of the humblest sort can really be strong, gentle, pure, and good, without the world being better, for it, without somebody being helped and comforted by the very existence of that goodness.—Phillips.

THE STRANGE WOMAN.

Inclosed is copy of a page that will appear in our next issue of The Mirror. I thought maybe you might like to use this in the Gospel Advocate; for if some of the rumors that I hear are halfway true, several of our brethren, especially some of the leaders, need to re-read same.

"Be not deceived; God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap." (Gal. 6: 7.)

"The lips of a strange woman drop as a honeycomb, and her mouth is smoother than oil: but her end is bitter as wormwood, sharp as a two-edged sword." (Prov. 5: 3, 4.)

"To keep thee from the evil woman, from the flattery of the tongue of a strange woman. Lust not after her beauty in thine heart; neither let her take thee with her eyelids. For by means of a whorish woman a man is brought to a piece of bread: and the adulteress will hunt for the precious life. Can a man take fire in his bosom, and his clothes not be burned? Can one go upon hot coals, and his feet not be burned? So he that goeth into his neighbor's wife; whosoever toucheth her shall not be innocent. . . . But whoso committeth adultery with a woman lacketh understanding: he that doeth it destroyeth his own soul. A wound and dishonor shall he get; and his reproach shall not be wiped away." (Prov. 6: 24-33.)

"And, behold, there met him a woman with the attire of a harlot, and subtle of heart. (She is loud and stubborn; her feet abide not in her house: now is she without, now in the streets, and lieth in wait at every corner.) So she caught him, and kissed him, and with an impudent face said unto him, I have peace offerings with me; this day have I paid my vows. Therefore came I forth to meet thee, diligently to seek thy face, and I have found thee. I have decked my bed with coverings of tapestry, with carved works, with fine linen of Egypt. I have perfumed my bed with myrrh, aloes, and cinnamon. Come, let us take our fill of love until the morning: let us solace our-With her much fair speech she selves with loves. . . . With her much fair speech she caused him to yield, with the flattering of her lips she selves with loves. forced him. He goeth after her straightway, as an ox goeth to the slaughter, or as a fool to the correction of the stocks; till a dart strike through his liver; as a bird hasteth to the snare, and knoweth not that it is for his life." (Prov. 7: 10-23.)

"Now therefore the sword shall never depart from thine house; because thou hast despised me, and hast taken the wife of Uriah the Hittite to be thy wife. Thus saith the Lord, Behold, I will raise up evil against thee out of thine own house, and I will take thy wives before thine eyes, and give them unto thy neighbor, and he shall lie with thy wives in the sight of this sun. For thou didst it secretly: but I will do this thing before all Israel, and before the sun." (2 Sam. 12: 10-12.)

"But the fearful, and unbelieving, and the abominable, and murderers, and whoremongers, and sorcerers, and idolaters, and all liars, shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone: which is the second death." (Rev. 21: 8.)

"DEALING WITH THE DISORDERLY." BY JOHN T. SMITHSON.

In the issue of the Gospel Advocate of June 18, 1925, an article from Brother L. E. Carpenter appeared under the above heading. This article is good and timely. It should be read, studied, and the truth it conveys be practiced more than it is to-day. Personal feelings and preferences are attributes of the flesh. All who are prompted by these in any matter are governed by the flesh and its desires.

From this source arises every evil in the church. It is manifestly clear that there are two, and only two, things which prompt every act of every member of the church. These are they: the Spirit and the flesh. These are contrary the one to the other. (Gal. 5:17.) These, being contrary to each other, must lead in opposite directions, and ultimately terminate in opposite places in eternity. Then, to settle without any argument the place where every responsible being will be in eternity is to determine the direction he is traveling. All members of the body of Christ either live and walk by the Spirit or they live and walk by the flesh. The Spirit leads to life and peace, but the flesh leads to death—the second death, which is the lake of fire. The way of the flesh is enmity against God. It is not, and can never be, subject to God's law. They who walk by the flesh cannot please God. (See Rom. 8:1-18.) The kingdom of God is not inherited by flesh and blood. (1 Cor. 15:50.) Flesh and its ties and blood relation must be laid aside by all that inherit the kingdom of God.

There are two, and only two, classes of members in the church. In the light of the subject of this article, they are the orderly class and the disorderly class. The orderly class walks by the Spirit. The disorderly class walks by the flesh. Obedience to the gospel makes a new creature of a person and starts him on an orderly way to the land of everlasting joy. Just as long as he is controlled by the gospel he walks orderly. But when he fails to live as the truth of God directs, he then breaks the line of march and walks out of order; he is then a disorderly walker. Unless he is brought to order or the ones walking orderly withdraw themselves from him, the whole line or membership will be in disorder. It is very necessary, then, that the disorderly member be restored to the orderly way, or be withdrawn from by the other members. The apostle Paul, guided by the Spirit, wrote to the church in Thessalonica, saying: "Now we command you, brethren, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye withdraw yourselves from every brother that walketh disorderly, and not after the tradition which they received from us." (2 Thess. 3: 6.) This language is too plain to be misunderstood. It does not make any difference who the brother is, when he walks disorderly, all the members, in obeying the command, "in the name of our Lord Jesus," must withdraw from him. Whenever it becomes necessary for one member to withdraw himself from a brother who walks disorderly, it is then necessary for every member to withdraw himself from that brother. That member who does not withdraw himself from him becomes a partaker of his disorderly walk and should be withdrawn from in obedience to the Lord's command.

Remember, God does not place any restrictions or modifications around the brother who walks disorderly, but simply says, "every brother who walks disorderly." Hence, it matters not who he is, a preacher or what the world calls a "layman," a relative of any kind, rich or poor, if he walks disorderly, we are to withdraw ourselves from him. This must be done to keep the church—the body of Christ—pure, and to keep the members, individually, from being partakers of the wrong. Just as certain as we do not warn the disorderly brother of his sin, just that certain do we partake of his sin, and of his blood God will hold us guilty in the judgment. The final and an effective way to warn the disorderly is to obey the Lord's command to withdraw ourselves from him.

Finally, in the light of the foregoing, it is evident that there are two, and only two, ways to deal with the disorderly. One way is to warn him, withdraw yourself from him, and thus be free from his sins and pure from his blood. The other way is to let him alone, say nothing to him, go with him, associate with him, uphold him, and thus become partaker of his sins and guilty of his blood. Which of these ways are you doing, my brother?

Do justice to your brother (you can do that whether you love him or not), and you will come to love him.—Ruskin.

NOTES FROM THE WEST.

BY F. B. SRYGLEY.

I closed an eight-days' meeting at Great Divide, Col., on Sunday night, August 9, with no visible results. This is the place where a church was planted last year. I found the little congregation still faithful, having met to worship God weekly since I was there last year. They have grown in many ways during the year that is past. They sing better and have learned a great many things from the study of the Bible. They are better prepared to meet all opposition than they were a year ago. Not one of the number who were baptized last year, so far as I could learn, has turned back, but all are zealous for the truth. True, they have a few among them that want to be broad and liberal, rather than to be as narrow as the New Testament teaching. There are only a few of these, and they have made no effort to change the worship from the simple, apostolic way. The meeting did good in that the faithful were more firmly grounded in the teaching of the New Testament. Many of the community were out at work in other localities, while the rest were busy trying to save their hay; but, with all that, there was a greater proportion of the people out at the meetings than usually attend a protracted meeting even when there is nothing in the way.

On Saturday night a number came from a near-by town to have a public dance in the community building where we were holding our meeting. We politely surrendered the building to them and held our meeting that night in the street; but be it said to the credit of the dancers that they did not begin their revelry till after the meeting was over and the worshipers had gone away. I did not feel like surrendering to the devil till I had fired my gun. The dance was not the flaming success that they expected it to be, and it is to be hoped that the light-hearted will not soon undertake to run a dance during a protracted meeting in which the gospel is being preached. A dance is no aid to the worship of God, even if it is found in the same verse where the organ is found. I wonder if Brother Briney has ever learned that Dr. Smith was wrong when he said that the "dance" as it is found in Ps. 150 is a musical instrument. If he has examined Thayer's Lexicon, he has; and if not, he does not desire to be set right.

There does not seem to be any religious prejudice in the neighborhood of the Great Divide, but all seem anxious to learn the truth. It will be a great pity if some other preacher does not go to the assistance of the faithful of that community. They have some there that will fight till they are mustered out of service.

I expect to meet Mrs. Srygley in Denver on Tuesday morning, August 11, and we will go together to Los Angeles, Cal., where I am to begin a meeting on August 16. It has been forty-six days since I left home, and I have preached every day except when traveling. I am feeling as well or better than when I started on the trip. It is a wonderful thing to preach the gospel to those who really feel the need of it.

BY H. LEO BOLES

Please answer the following questions through the Gospel Advocate: (1) Does "into" mean under or inside of? If so, explain Acts 8: 38, 39. (2) If one is a sinner until he is baptized, and if a sinner's prayer is not heard, then how about Paul in Acts 9:11? (3) Does church history prove that the Roman Catholics originally immersed and later began to sprinkle? If so, what date? (4) Is the chuch of Christ increasing over the sectarians or not?—H. B. MCCULLEY, Springtown, Texas.

1. "Into" comes from the Greek preposition "eis." Thayer, in his Greek lexicon, gives the meaning of "eis" as follows: "A preposition governing the accusative, and denoting entrance into, or direction and limit; into, to, toward, for, among." It is used, says Thayer, properly of place after verbs of going, coming, sailing, flying, falling, living, leaving, carrying, throwing, sending, etc.; first of a place entered, or of entrance into a place, into."

2. There is much misunderstanding and confusion in the religious world on the subject of prayer. Good people have gone to both extremes in regard to the "sinner's praying." God does not hear and answer the alien sinner's prayer for forgiveness without the sinner's complying with God's will. No one need sit down in his sins and ask God to forgive him. There is no promise of any blessing to any one who will not obey God. "If I regard iniquity in my heart, the Lord will not hear." (Ps. 66: 18.) "Set thou a wicked man over him; and let an adversary stand at his right hand. When he is judged, let him come forth guilty; and let his prayer be turned into sin." (Ps. 109: 6, 7.) know that God heareth not sinners: but if any man be a worshiper of God, and do his will, him he heareth." (John 9: 31.) These scriptures and others that could be quoted teach that one must not regard iniquity in his heart, or love the pleasure and practice of sin, if he expects God to hear his prayers. God begins to hear the sinner as soon as the sinner begins to hear God. God heard Cornelius' prayer; and Saul prayed before he was baptized, and was told to go down into the water, calling upon the name of the Lord. As the sinner begins to turn his heart to God in obedience to God's will, he begins to pray for God to guide him in doing all that is required for his salvation and redemption. In this way and in this sense God hears prayer.

3. Yes. The Roman Catholic Church was not organized in a day; it was a gradual development, a gradual departure from the New Testament order of work and worship. George B. Fisher, in his "History of the Christian Church," page 41, says: "The ordinary mode of baptism was by immersion. Whether in this rite the pouring of water on the head was sometimes practiced then (A.D. 120), as it certainly was subsequently, is an open question. The first distinct reference to baptism by affusion is in the early writing called "Teaching of the Twelve Apostles," written perhaps about A.D. 120, where the direction is given, in case there is not a sufficiency of water, to pour water on the head thrice." McGlothlin, in his "The Course of Christian History," page 47, says; "Baptism was still administered almost exclusively by immersion, often threefold, in the name of the Trinity." He has reference to the period of time A.D. 323-600. A. H. Newman, in his "a Manual of Church History," page 136, says: "Christian baptism is the immersion of a believer in water as a symbol of death to sin and resurrection to newness of life. The meaning of the word, the description of the act in individual cases, and the symbolism (burial and resurrection) all seem to fix the outward form of the ordinance as immersion." Hauch, referring to New Testament baptism, remarks: "Baptism probably always took place through immersion in flowing water." All the authorities quoted above are sectarian, but they give testimony to the fact that baptism as taught in the New Testament and practiced by the early Christians was immersion. They also bear evidence that affusion for baptism began in the second century after the church was established and that it gradually came into use.

4. I do not know, as I have no statistics on that point. In many sections of the country there is a rapid increase in the number of those who are satisfied with the simple teaching of the New Testament.

In John 13: 14, Christ said: "If I then, the Lord and the Teacher, have washed your feet, ye also ought to wash one another's feet." Should we wash one another's feet? Please explain through the Gospel Advocate.—R. C. Gentry, Tupelo, Miss.

No, not as a church ordinance. It may be done as an act of Christian service, but not as a church ordinance. Jesus washed the disciples' feet, as recorded in the thirteenth chapter of John, to teach a very important lesson on humility and service, but did not command that this be done as a church ordinance as some practice it. This act was done before Jesus said concerning the Holy Spirit: "But when the Comforter is come, whom I will send unto you from the Father, even the Spirit of truth, which proceedeth from the Father, he shall bear witness of me." (John 15: 26.) Again, speaking of the work of the Holy Spirit, he said: "But the Comforter, even the Holy Spirit, whom the Father will send in my name, he shall teach you all things, and bring to your remembrance all that I said (John 14: 26.) We find no Spirit-guided unto you." speaker or writer commanding that foot washing be practiced as a church ordinance. After the church was established on Pentecost the Spirit guided the speakers and writers in giving full instructions to the church, but we find no instruction enjoining foot washing upon any member. It is mentioned only one time, in 1 Tim. 5: 10, and there it is classed as a good work. Hence, we conclude that it may be done as an act of service when needed, but not in a formal, useless way.

Please explain Acts 15: 20. Does it mean for us not to eat strangled meat and blood?—Mrs. W. M. Russell, Mission, Texas.

The scripture is as follows: "Wherefore my judgment is, that we trouble not them that from among the Gentiles turn to God: but that we write unto them, that they abstain from the pollutions of idols, and from fornication, and from what is strangled, and from blood." (Acts 19: Paul and his company had gone from Antioch to Jerusalem to settle the question whether or not the Gentiles who became Christians should be circumcised. The decision of the apostles and elders at Jerusalem was that the Gentiles should not be subjected to circumcision in becoming Christians. James led in writing a letter setting forth all that should be required of the Gentiles and the things from which the Gentile Christians should abstain-"from things sacrificed to idels, and from blood, and from things strangled, and from fornication." 15: 29.) God has from the beginning forbidden his people to eat blood. They were forbidden to eat things strangled, because the blood remained in them, and they could not eat the flesh of things strangled without eating the blood. God forbade Noah's eating blood (see Gen. 9: 4); he forbade the Jews through Moses (see Lev. 3: 17; Deut. 12; 16-23). Hence, we see that under all ages God has forbidden his people to eat blood.

It is impossible to estimate the terrible consequences of sin. Pain, disease, and death are its offspring. Poverty, sorrow, and misery follow in its wake. How we should hate and fight sin!—Selected.

DEATH OF DANIEL WEBSTER.

He was lying in an easy posture, without pain or suffering, but with his eyes covered with a napkin to exclude the light. Mr. Curtis spoke to him about a political letter he had lately received relating to the pending presidential election. "My dear friend," was his answer, "I care no more about politics than the jackdaw that sits on the top of St. Paul's. Go down to the library and read Cowper's Jackdaw."

He seemed to go on as a person who was making preparation for an event that was to happen to some one else. So complete was his control over himself and his sufficiency for the needs of the occasion that no one about him felt it to be necessary, in such matters, to do anything but to follow and execute his directions.

In the evening the will, which had been drawn up by Mr. Curtis, was brought to Mr. Webster to sign. He was then in a sitting posture, supported in his bed by pillows.

By this time nearly the whole household were assembled in his room. He asked if Mrs. Webster and his son had seen the will, and if they approved it; both assured him that they fully assented to it. Then he said: "Let me sign it now." It was placed before him, and he affixed his signature to it, strongly and clearly written: and, as he returned the pen to Mr. Curtis, he said, looking at him with a peculiar smile, "Thank God for strength to do a sensible act;" and then immediately, and with great solemnity, raising both his hands, he added: "O God! I thank thee for all thy mercies."

He then looked inquiringly around the room, as if to see that all were there whom he wished to address. As he was manifestly about to say something that ought to be preserved, Mr. Curtis took notes of his words. He spoke in a strong, full voice that might have been heard over half the house, and with his usual modulation and emphasis; but very slowly, and with an occasional pause. He said:

"My general wish on earth has been to do my Maker's will. I thank him now for all the mercies that surround me. I thank him for the means he has given me of doing some little good; for my children, these beloved objects, for my nature and associations. I thank him that I am to die, if I am, under so many circumstances of love and affection. I thank him for all his care.

"No man, who is not a brute, can say that he is not afraid of death. No man can come back from that bourne; no man can comprehend the will or the works of God. That there is a God, all must acknowledge. I see him in all these wondrous works. Himself, how wondrous!

"The great mystery is Jesus Christ-the gospel. would be the condition of any of us if we had not the hope of immortality! What ground is there to rest upon but the gospel? There were scattered hopes of the immortality of the soul, running down, especially among the Jews. The Jews believed in a spiritual origin of creation. The Romans never reached it; the Greeks never reached it. It is a tradition, if that communication was made to the Jews by God himself, through Moses and the fathers. But there is, even to the Jews, no direct assurance of an immortality in heaven. There is, now and then, a scattered intimation, as in Job, 'I know that my redeemer liveth;' but a proper consideration of that does not refer it to Jesus Christ at all. But there were intimations-crepuscular-twilight. But-but-but, thank God, the gospel of Jesus Christ brought life and immortality to lightrescued it-brought it to light. There is an admirable discourse on that subject by Dr. Barrow, preacher to the Inner Temple, I think it is his sixth sermon.

"Well, I don't feel as if I am to fall off; I may."

He now paused for a short time; a drowsiness appeared to come over him, and his eyes were closed. In a moment or two he opened them, and, looking eagerly round, he asked: "Have I—wife, son, doctor, friends, are you all here?—have I, on this occasion, said anything unworthy of Daniel Webster?" "No, no, dear sir," was the response from all.

He then began the words of the Lord's Prayer; but, after the first sentence, feeling faint, he cried out, earnestly: "Hold me up; I do not wish to pray with a fainting voice." He was instantly raised a little by a movement of the pillows, and then repeated the whole of the prayer, in clear and distinct tones, ending his devotions with these words: "And now, unto God, the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, be praise forever and forever! Peace on earth, and good will to men—that is the happiness, the essence—good will toward men."

All was now hushed within the chamber, and to those who stood waiting there were but three sounds in naturethe sighing of the autumn wind in the trees, the slow ticking of the clock in the hall below, and the deep breathing of their dying friend. Moments seemed hours, and Mr. Curtis says: "Still the measured beat of time fell painfully distinct upon our ears; still the gentle moaning of the wind mingled with the only sound that arose within the room; for there were no sobs of women, no movements of men. So grand, and yet so calm and simple, had been his approach to the moment when we must know that he was with us no more that he had lifted us into a composure which, but for his great example, we could not have felt. At twenty-three minutes before three o'clock his breathing ceased; the features settled into a superb repose; and Dr. Jeffries, who still held the pulse, after waiting for a few seconds, gently laid down the arm, and, amid a breathless silence, pronounced the single word, 'Dead.' The eyes were then closed, the remains were removed from the position in which death came, and all but those who had been appointed to wait and watch slowly and mournfully walked away."-Selected.

LOOSE MARRIAGE.

I was talking to a telephone girl this morning, and a certain girl was mentioned that had worked herself up to a good position with the telephone company. The question came up as to whether she was married, and the answer was that "she was married, but was not living with her hosband." This girl I was talking to said it was a standing joke over at the office, as so many of the girls have been married and are not living with their husbands, or are divorced. Memories of a blessed mother and father will never cling around such men and women. Unwept, unloved, and unsung they will go to their graves, and there will be no one to perpetuate their memory. It means something in this old world to establish a home and stick to it and see it through after we have started it. It means something to grow old together and see, as in a mirror, the image of the father and mother of younger days in the faces and forms of their children. It means something to have some one near that we have loved and trusted so long to hold our hand as we set out on that long journey, and to realize that our love was strongest at the last. Has this anything to do with religion? It is the Lord's doing, and not man's .- C. W. Sommer.

There were no additions, yet the meeting was well attended and fruit will follow. Brother Morton is now in a meeting with the Philippi congregation, near Columbia.

C. C. McQuiddy, Alma, Ala., August 11: "The seed sowing at Mulberry became a victory for the truth. Large crowds at all the services. From five hundred to twelve hundred the last night. Visible results, fifty-three. They will have to build, as they are unable to rent a place in which to meet, and will need outside help for this. Mulberry is a town of about two thousand."

Thomas D. Rose, Houston, Texas, August 12: "Recently A. B. Barret was with the church at Winchester, Ky., for four days. He presented four lessons as true and faithful to the Book as I ever heard. He is doing considerable work in Kentucky this summer, and all who love the word of God more than they love the teachings and speculations of men greatly appreciate his labor."

- J. L. Hines, Mount Juliet, Tenn., August 14: "I closed a good meeting at Ball Hill Church, near Carlisle, Ky., on August 12. Five were baptized. I preached from one to four times per day and taught a class of children. This church was rescued from digression four years ago, but has had a hard struggle because of the unsettled in her ranks, but I believe the future is brighter. I will begin next Sunday at Adams, Tenn."
- W. M. Oakley, Bloomington Springs, Tenn., August 15:
  "We closed a meeting of twelve-days' duration on Martin's Creek, at the water, to-day, which resulted in fourteen baptisms and one restoration. This is my third and best meeting here. Great crowds attended both day and night, with fine order and interest to the close. Leonard Kirk, of David Lipscomb College, is with me, in charge of the song service. Leonard is a fine, Christian young man and does his work well. Six of those baptized came from the Methodists. We are moving to Double Springs, where we will begin our next meeting on Lord's-day morning. Brethren, we need your prayers."

we need your prayers."

James E. Chessor, Centerville, Tenn., August 12:
"W. A. Sisco, of Hohenwald, Tenn., began a meeting with the Sulphur Creek congregation, in Hickman County, August 2, which continued for eight days. Due to factional differences in the church and other untoward circumstances, there were no additions; but Brother Sisco's strong, logical, scriptural sermons will bear fruit, and there were signs of returning 'life' even before the meeting closed. Brethren confessed publicly to their errors, and the 'feud,' which has existed for twelve months, was wiped out. This church is one of the oldest in Hickman County, having been organized by the pioneers in the days of Campbell and Stone."

On account of lack of space we are compelled to hold many reports of meetings until next week.

Conducted for a half century by D. Lipscomb, E. G. Sewell, F. D. Srygley, and J. C. McQuiddy.

THE RELATIONSHIP OF CHRISTIANS TO CIVIL GOVERNMENT.

BY E. A. ELAM.

As the following questions state, Brother Clark is making these inquiries general. I prefer to give my answers in this way, and in doing so to attempt to present the teaching of the New Testament on Christians' relationship to civil government:

Dear Brother: I am making an investigation to discover as far as possible the attitude of the church of Christ in this country toward the question: "Does the New Testament permit a Christian as a soldier to take human life in carnal warfare?" I expect to publish the results of this investigation when I shall have finished it. Names of those who answer my questions will, of course, not be published. To give all concerned interesting information on the subject, I am asking several hundred preachers to answer the following questions briefly, clearly, fully:

1. Do you believe that a Christian can scripturally take human life in war?

2. Give reasons for your answer. Dear Brother: I am making an investigation to discover

2. Give reasons for your answer.
3. Have you any evidence that Christians of the first three centuries after Christ took part in carnal warfare?

If so, what is it?
4. What appears to be the general attitude of the brethren of your acquaintance toward the question?

5. Do you ever speak in public on the subject? If so, in what way and to what extent? A prompt reply with clear-cut answers will be appre-ated. Sincerely and fraternally,

N. L. CLARK. I shall answer these questions in the order in which they are asked.

1. No.

2. Christ forbids it.

3. No. Everybody knows that when Constantine made the cross his standard the church came to a turning point in its history. Christ entered the world as the Prince of Peace and under the song of the angels of peace on earth and good will to men. He commanded his disciples to put up the sword, giving as his reason, "for all they that take the sword shall perish with the sword." Myers, in his "Ancient History," declares that up to this time-312 A.D., when Constantine gained the victory over Maxentius-the church had been characterized by a nonmilitary spirit; but from that time it became militant and "leaned more and more upon earthly power," and into it entered "a worldly spirit." Myers says: "This infusion into the church of the military spirit of Rome was one of the most important consequences" of the victory of Constantine, and "from this moment can be traced the decay of its primitive simplicity and a decline from its early high moral standard." (See Myers' "Ancient History," pages 480-482.)

4. All who really follow Christ stand aloof from carnal warfare.

5. Yes. In the way the New Testament does, and to the same extent. Not to do so is to fail to proclaim "the whole counsel of God" or to preach Christ, and him

I prefer that my answers to these questions and my name be published, because I think they are important questions and the proper answers to them will do good. If I thought Christians should engage in carnal warfaretaking human life, making cripples, widows and orphans, and devastating countries-then, trying myself to be a Christian, it would be because I believe Christ teaches this, and I would say so, because I would be ashamed and a coward not to teach whatever Christ teaches. Since he teaches to the centrary, I am not ashamed or afraid to teach that-of course, always in humility, in the love of the truth, and in the spirit of the Master. On a question of such vital importance, including life and death on earth and the eternal destiny of millions, no man, either for or against it, should wish his name withheld. Christ is ashamed of every one who is ashamed of his teaching, and therefore ashamed of him, and will deny every one who denies him.

To study and to understand the teaching of the New Testament in regard to the relationship of Christians to civil governments will show what it teaches on the subject of Christians' engaging in carnal warfare, and it will show also that they must be submissive and law-abiding citizens of whatever government under which they may live, except only when that government requires them to disobey God. In such a case God must be obeyed at every hazard.

Such scriptures as Matt. 5: 38-48; Rom. 12: 17-21; 13: 1-10; 1 Tim. 2: 1-4; 1 Pet. 2: 13-17, and others, should be studied. All these and other scriptures could be quoted in this article, but all who desire to know and to do the will of God will turn to them and study them, anyway; otherwise they will not.

The relationship of Christians to civil government now is just the same as when Christ and the apostles were on earth or when the New Testament was written, and will always remain the same. If it was wrong in the first century for Christians to fight with carnal weapons and to take human life, it is wrong now; if this is right now, it was right for Christ and the apostles to do so. Nothing can change the life and teaching of Christ.

Famines, pestilences, and wars cannot change the will of God. The recent great upheaval of nations and the World War have not changed the relationship of Christians to civil governments-that is, " the powers that be."

God, his will, the Holy Spirit, Christ, his church, Christ's preaching, and therefore the life of Christians, and heaven, are always the same. They cannot be changed to suit the changed conditions of the affairs of the world or adapted to the changed conceptions of worldly-wise men concerning civilization and progress; but all men of all grades of progress and civilization and in all relationships of life must adapt themselves to God, Christ, the Holy Spirit, the church of God, the teaching of Christ, and must practice this teaching.

Christianity is the teaching of Christ—no more, no less. It is unchangeable. The gospel of Christ remains forever the power of God unto salvation to all who believe it. (Rom. 1: 16.) There can be no other gospel. (Gal. 1: 6-10.)

The relationship of Christians to civil governments, whether a kingdom, an empire, a monarchy, or a republic, is that of submission. The New Testament says: "Be in subjection to the higher powers." "Be subject to every ordinance of man for the Lord's sake." "Render to all their dues: tribute to whom tribute is due; custom to whom custom; fear to whom fear; honor to whom honor." "Honor the king." All kinds of taxes must be paid.

Civil government is "the ordinance of God," for "the powers that be are ordained of God." To withstand this power is to withstand "the ordinance of God," and all who do this "shall receive to themselves judgment."

But for what purpose has God ordained civil government? This is a most important question, and the answer to it must be received with all reverence. God gives the answer—namely, to restrain evildoers and to protect the righteous; to be, "not a terror to the good work, but to the evil;" "a minister [not a preacher of the gospel, but God's servant, although not a Christian1 of God to thee for good." Civil government "bears not the sword in vain," but is God's "avenger for wrath to him that doeth evil." This cannot be misunderstood. God has ordained civil government; civil officers are God's servants to protect the righteous, but to prove a terror to evildoers, and avengers of God's wrath to them. The "sword," or any means of physical punishment, is the weapon used to restrain evildoers.

God gives his reasons, too, for requiring Christians to be in subjection to civil rulers. This cannot be misunderstood, either. (1) For conscience's sake, or because it is right; Christians must be law-abiding, peace-loving, peacemaintaining, orderly, industrious, honest, righteous, and God-fearing people. (2) That they may by "well-doing" "put to silence the ignorance of foolish men" and may have "the praise" of the civil authorities—may let their light shine by showing what kind of lives Christians live. (3) To escape the wrath or vengeance of God visited upon evildoers through civil government, because it is God's "avenger for wrath to him that doeth evil."

Paul declares that "law is not made for a righteous man, but for the lawless and unruly, for the ungodly and sinners, for the unholy and profane, for murderers of fathers and murderers of mothers, for manslayers, for fornicators, for abusers of themselves with men, for menstealers, for liars, for false swearers, and if there be any other thing contrary to the sound doctrine; according to the gospel of the glory of the blessed God, which was committed to my trust." (1 Tim. 1: 8-11.) This means that this teaching in regard to law is according to the gospel of God, and all Christians will reverentially live according to it.

Christians need no law to restrain them from lying, stealing, swearing falsely, committing fornication, abusing themselves with men, murdering fathers and mothers or any one else, because they will not commit these sins, anyway, but are law-abiding, peaceable, righteous, godly, and holy—all for conscience's sake—for right's sake and, therefore, for Christ's sake.

Hence, we see that the relationship of Christians to civil government is that of submission, not that of aggression. They are forbidden to have lawsuits with one another, are commanded to settle their differences among themselves and not before unbelieving civil authorities, and must suffer wrong rather than do wrong. (1 Cor. 6: 1-11.) They are forbidden to take vengeance. "Avenge not yourselves, beloved, but give place unto the wrath [vengeance] of God: for it is written, Vengeance belongeth unto me; I will recompense, saith the Lord." On the contrary, God's command to Christians is: "But if thine enemy hunger, feed him; if he thirst, give him to drink: for in so doing thou shalt heap coals of fire upon his head. Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good." (Rom. 12: 19-21.)

How, then, or through what does God take vengeance? Through civil government. This is one of the purposes for which God has ordained civil government. It should be a terror, therefore, to all evildoers, "an avenger for wrath to him that doeth evil"—God's avenger for God's wrath. This is God's ordained way of punishing on earth evildoers and of protecting all who do well; of restraining evildoers and suppressing wrong and making it so his children can pursue their tranquil, peaceable, quiet, and godly lives.

Because God has ordained and overrules all civil governments as his ministers (not preachers or Christians, but his servants), "attending continually upon this very thing," Christians are commanded to pray, to make supplication, to make intercessions, and to offer thanksgivings "for kings and all that are in high place" (the civil authorities or officers), that God will use them—his servants—so that his children "may lead a tranquil and quiet life in all godliness and gravity." (1 Tim. 2: 1-4.)

Christians cannot take the matter of vengeance and the manner of administering it out of God's hands. This is not their work, and God assures them that he will attend to it. "O ye of little faith!" Can you not trust God?

We see, then, again, as clear as light, that the relationship of Christians to civil government is to "be subject to every ordinance of man for the Lord's sake: whether to the king, as supreme; or unto governors, as sent by him for vengeance on evildoers and for praise to them that do well." (1 Pet. 2: 13, 14.) Whether Christians like the form of government or the laws of the government under which they live, they must cheerfully and humbly submit "for the Lord's sake."

Christians cannot join mobs or in any way encourage mobs of any kind; they cannot encourage lawlessness in any form.

In no case can Christians disobey that government under which they live, or refuse to submit to any of its laws or regulations, except only when it forbids their doing something God has commanded or commands them to do something he has forbidden. In that case they must obey God rather than the government. This way is so plain that "wayfaring men, yea fools, shall not err therein."

According to this, Peter and John said to civil authorities with power to imprison and even to behead them, "Whether it is right in the sight of God to hearken unto you rather than unto God, judge ye: for we cannot but speak the things which we saw and heard" (Acts 4: 19. 20); and, "We must obey God rather than men" (Acts 5: 29). According to this, the three Hebrew children disobeyed Nebuchadnezzar and were cast into the fiery furnace, heated "seven times more than it was wont to be heated," declaring to Nebuchadnezzar: "Our God whom we serve is able to deliver us from the burning fiery furnace; and he will deliver us out of thy hand, O king." (Dan. 3.) According to this, Daniel disobeyed King Darius and went "into the den of lions." According to this, Jesus was crucified, and the apostles went into prison, some were beheaded, and early Christians suffered martyrdom. By the authority of Cæsar's government-the civil authorities -Jesus was crucified, the church was persecuted, many were imprisoned, and not a few were killed in different

When Pilate said to Jesus, "Knowest thou not that I have power to release thee, and have power to crucify thee?" Jesus replied: "Thou wouldest have no power against me, except it were given thee from above; therefore he that delivered me unto thee hath greater sin." With this declaration Pilate was most seriously impressed and sought to release Jesus, but was a coward and was afraid of the Jews. (John 19: 10-12.)

Whenever there comes a clash between God's law and civil government, God must be obeyed at all cost-at the cost of life.

It may be added that to place personal comfort and protection, money and other property, or even life itself, befere obedience to God is a traitorous and most fearful thing.

"WHERE THREE WORLDS MEET." BY F. W. SMITH.

H. B. Trimble, pastor of the McKendree Methodist Church, one of the largest congregations of that faith in the city of Nashville, recently, according to a daily paper, discoursed on the subject heading this article. The newspaper report is as follows:

Contending that there are now three outstanding tendencies in religion and that these are represented by the groups which he classified as the literalists, the agnostics, and the vitalists, Dr. H. B. Trimble, pastor of McKendree Methodist Church, discussed some of the current controversial questions in his sermon Sunday morning, when he spoke on the subject, "Where Three Worlds Meet,"

Dr. Trimble pointed out some of the views held by the adherents of the three schools saying that each view rep-

Dr. Trimble pointed out some of the views held by the adherents of the three schools, saying that each view represented a party more or less conscious of itself. According to Dr. Trimble, two of the parties, the literalists and the agnostics, were "very loquacious at the Scopes trial."

The vitalists, he said, were absent and uninterested, because they could see nothing in the lawsuit that would aid the Christian religion.

Dr. Trimble said he did not down the night of Trimble said he did not deny the right of any man to believe as his conscience dictates, but contended that the vitalist tendencies are more in accord with the teachings of Christ, according to his opinion.

Mr. Trimble may have deceived himself, in trying to cast reflection upon Mr. Bryan and those with him contending for the Bible, by saying that the literalists and the agnostics were "very loquacious at the Scopes trial," but he has not deceived those who can read between the lines of all such utterances.

His classification of the parties involved in the controversy regarding the origin of man-viz., literalists, agnostics, and vitalists-reveals Mr. Trimble's attitude toward this most vital issue before the world. If he would candidly define the position of what he terms a "vitalist," there would be found to exist the same difference between a "modernist" and a "vitalist" that exists between tweedledee and tweedledum. He affirms that the "vitalist tendencies are more in accord with the teachings of Christ" than are those of the fundamentalist, and no one save a "modernist" could or would give expression to such a faith. He most certainly thinks the "fundamentalists" are, at least in some particulars, contrary to the "teachings of Christ," and it would not only be interesting to have Mr. Trimble point out the differences between "fundamentalists" and "the teachings of Christ," but he owes it to himself and the public to do so.

Columbia, Tenn., July 31.—(Special to the Tennessean.)
—Pleading for the kind of religion that will not break faith with the spirit of the Man of Galilee, and denouncing the making of many laws as the "cure-all" of the evils of the present social order, Dr. H. B. Trimble, of McKendree Methodist Church, Nashville, delivered an eloquent and powerful address last night at the annual laymen's banquet of the Columbia district at the First Methodist Church here.

"There is a growing tendency to control life from without," said Dr. Trimble. "We have a multiplicity of laws, telling us not only what to do, but what to think."

Bringing out the fact that he was neither a fundamentalist nor a modernist, the speaker called himself a "vitalist," defining this term as one who was not dependent on forms and meaningless customs for his spiritual guidance, nor yet one of the Darrow type, who tries to conceive of God with the help of the senses only, but one who tries to put in his own soul the vital spirit of Jesus Christ, for a regeneration of his and others' lives.

"The New Testament should be the basis. The problem is not one of form and custom, but for the ideal of God to enter the soul of man and reconstruct his life to be more nearly like that of Jesus of Nazareth."

Class hatred, race problems, war, social evils, and other tendencies of the age were stressed by the speaker as of more importance than theological "squabbles" about forms and customs or abstract questions among church men.

"There is no question in theology in which the inquiring mind cannot pick a flaw," he said.

"Jesus Christ on earth would be embarrassed by the number of his defenders who give their voices, but not their lives, to save his faith for the world. We need more of the giving of lives and less of voices."

The suspicion naturally is that in "denouncing the making of many laws" Mr. Trimble was making a "fling" at the antievolution law being defended at Dayton, Tenn. If this supposition is correct, then we have the position of a "vitalist" in the matter, which is the same as that of a "modernist."

This seems to be a just supposition in the light of the following: "We have a multiplicity of laws, telling us not only what to do, but what to think." There is not a "modernist" in the land that will not interpret Mr. Trimble's utterances as being in perfect sympathy and accord with the doctrines of "modernism."

Mr. Trimble's definition of a "vitalist," "as one not dependent on forms and meaningless customs for his spiritual guidance, but one who tries to put in his own soul the vital spirit of Jesus Christ," makes the impression that a "vitalist" is a "latitudinarian" in his religious views. His further statement that "the New Testament should be the basis," "that the problem is not one of form and custom, but for the ideal of God to enter the soul of man and reconstruct his life to be more nearly like that of Jesus of Nazareth," is puzzling to the ordinary mind.

Of course, if there are any "empty forms" and "meaningless customs" enjoined in the New Testament, Mr. Trimble should be able to point them out. But since he says "the New Testament should be the basis" for our "spiritual guidance" and for the "ideal of God to enter the soul of man," we wonder how this can be done without conformity to the forms and customs enjoined in the New Testament.

We are exhorted to hold fast to the very form of sound words: "Hold the pattern of sound words which thou hast heard from me, in faith and love which is in Christ Jesus." (1 Tim. 2: 13.) Now, how we can get the proper "ideal of God to enter the soul of man," except through the revelation God has given of himself in the Bible, is difficult to comprehend. The "pattern of sound words" informs us that God created man, thus: "And God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him; male and female created he them." (Gen. 1: 27.) Again: "Jehovah God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul." (Gen. 2: 7.) Does Mr. Trimble, a confessed "vitalist," hold to this "pattern of sound words," or does he believe the Darwinian theory of man's creation?

There is no middle ground between "fundamentalism" and "modernism" for a so-called "vitalist" to occupy, and Mr. Trimble need not be trying to "straddle the fence" or stand on neutral ground in this fight. He should come out boldly, and not be throwing rocks from the ambuscade of a "vitalist"-covertly criticizing the Legislature for passing the antievolution law and Mr. Bryan in contending for the Bible. For what else can such a statement as the following mean: "The vitalist, he said, were absent and uninterested, because they could see nothing in the lawsuit that would aid the Christian religion?"

According to Mr. Trimble, the maintenance of a law to prohibit infidels from teaching that which sets aside the word of God and lowers the standard of manhood to the children in our public schools can render no aid to Christianity! Can he, then, point out any law on our statute books that can be construed as in any way helpful to society and of benefit to Christianity?

ANOTHER ECCLESIASTICISM. BY F. B. SRYGLEY.

The Christian Standard, with its large constituency, is laying ground or planting the "seed" for the development of another ecclesiasticism under the name of "The Christian Restoration Association." In its issue of July 18 the Standard's front page is featured with this embryonic ecclesiasticism, the first part of which is as follows:

The Christian Restoration Association is ready to launch its new program. A dozen "free agencies" will cooperate. Beginning September 7 in the Northwest, and moving east, a team composed of James DeForest Murch, president of the Christian Restoration Association; E. C. Sanderson, president of the International Bible Mission; and W. D. Cunningham, director of the Yotsuya Mission, will hold a series of great Restoration rallies. In nine centers brethren will gather for mutual encouragement and to hear the program of the "free agencies."

The first humanly organized society among the disciples had the same air of innocence and timidity which now characterizes the "Christian Restoration Association," but Mary's little lamb turned out to be a wolf in sheep's clothing, according to the Standard's own testimony.

If I were to grant that all these agencies are now free, which I do not, will they not lose that freedom when they all get together in this "Christian Restoration Association" which the Standard is proposing to help them launch? Is not this the same step the others took when they organized all the other societies into the "United Christian Missionary Society?" These erring brethren that brought all the free (?) societies together had perhaps about the same motive the Standard now has in encouraging the building up of another ecclesiasticism as much like the one the Standard is now fighting as two black-eyed peas. The Standard will perhaps think this new association is perfectly free till it begins to do something that does not suit the Standard.

It will perhaps do the Standard no good for me to suggest that there is no scriptural authority for the "free agencies" here mentioned, and, therefore, can be none for the Christian Restoration Association after they get it launched. I suppose it will then simply be another one of the Standard's business institutions which it will use as it does the mails and the banks. But the Standard is more zealous in encouraging these unnecessary agencies than it is in building up churches of Christ which are authorized by the word of God. It cannot be ignorance on the part of the Standard, for Brother Lappin has said in the Standard that the local church is all that we have in the Bible. Why cannot the Standard use its influence and its space to build up "all that we have by divine authority?" I have the Standard's indorsement of the above statement through S. S. Lappin, who edits a special department in that paper.

In launching this new ecclesiasticism, these "free (?) agencies" are proposing to take in the United States. They have divided up the States in their "line-up" into the Northwestern, Southwestern, Prairie States, South Central, Mississippi Valley, Central States, Southeastern, Great Lakes, and Eastern. From this "line-up" all the free disciples in the United States can tell where they belong. I suppose those of us who live about Nashville will fall under the Southeastern division, as I see the rally for this division will be held at East Point Christian Church, Atlanta, Ga., on September 28, 29. I am a disciple of Christ and am interested in missionary work, but I was not consulted as to the time or place to hold this rally; in fact, I did not know they were going to have it till I saw it in the Standard. What becomes of my "freedom" in this matter? But I would guess that I was consulted about it as much as the great body of people who compose the "East Point Christian Church" at Atlanta, Ga. I would guess that this rally was got up by the preacher and the leaders who are trying to organize the "Christian Restoration Association." About all that the members of that church are expected to do is to furnish the money with which to run the thing, while they launch it and operate it after it is launched. These members have about as much to say about this association as the average Methodist has about running the Methodist Conference. These brethren talk about "freedom in Christ," and the average member has about as much freedom as a bird in a cage. Brethren, you need not count me, either in the "Eastern" or any other division of the United States. I will go on and be only a Christian, belong only to the body of Christ, and give all my time to build up the local church, for Brother Lappin says that is all that we have in the Bible. I am very well satisfied with the Bible, and shall use what little influence I have to encourage people to stand by that divine document.

To show how good this new organization proposes to be, the Standard quotes the following from the board of trustees:

The board of trustees in a recent statement said: "We stand before the brotherhood as one of a number of free agencies. We want no official character. We want no authority. Above all, we do not want to be the means of building up among our loyal brethren any ecclesiastical establishment.

I see. The board stands "before the brotherhood as one of a number of free agencies." I wonder what the board means by "the brotherhood?" There is nothing in the Bible but the body of Christ, and any brotherhood which is smaller than this can be nothing but a party or a denomination. I know the Standard's position is that it has the right to use any business agency through which to earry on its missionary work; but the question I raise is, can it organize and maintain an agency like the "Christian Restoration Association" without building up a party in religion, which is contrary to the teaching of the New Testament? Who will undertake this work as a business proposition if it is disconnected with a "brotherhood," or a religious party, which is but a denomination under a different name? The board may claim that it "wants no official character," but what other character can it have except an official character? Anything more than the church which is over a Christian is official in character, whatever may be its claims. I do not know who the board means by "our loyal brethren," but it appears to me from the connection that it means those who are loyal to human institutions, for no man can be loyal alone to the New Testament by launching and maintaining an institution which is contrary to the New Testament teaching. It is nothing more than an effort to build up a religious party, which is condemned by the word of God.

James DeForest Murch, president of the "Christian Restoration Association," in what the Standard calls "a significant challenge" makes the following statement:

Exalt the local church as the fullest flower of the kingdom of God on earth, free and untrammeled by any agency of man's making. We challenge the brotherhood to choose whether it will be bond or free.

I think the above is more eloquent than correct. I never knew before that the local church was a "flower of the kingdom of God on earth," but I thought the church was the kingdom and that the "local church" was the church in some locality. I have known, though, all the time, that it is "free and untrammeled by any agency of man's making," and I do not propose to allow my part of it to be "trammeled" by Brother Murch's human institution which he calls the "Christian Restoration Association." If it binds no one and trammels no one, pray tell me what it can do. I can be free and untrammeled without the thing, and I see nothing that it can do but build up another ecclesiasticism, the president's denial to the contrary notwithstanding. I accept the brother's challenge and will be free from all such unscriptural agencies.

WORD AWAY FROM WASHINGTON. BY T. B. LARIMORE.

Called to Chattanooga, Tenn., for a marriage, we—Mrs. Larimore and I—left Washington City at 9:50 P.M., Thursday, July 30, and reached "The Hawk's Nest"—which is, in plain English, the meaning of the Indian name, "Chattanooga"—about 5 P.M., July 31. We were met and warmly greeted by the friends we came to see, and were soon installed in one of our two Chattanooga homes.

Brother and Sister Proffitt and their daughters, Laurine and Genevra, known as the major and the minor Proffitts, constitute the Proffitt household when we are not at home, but they claim us as members of the family wheresoever we may be. Creed and Notie Maynard claim us, too. So, we have two Chattanooga homes, in addition to an undivided and undefined interest in many other pleasant homes there. I baptized the Proffitt family, Mrs. Proffitt excepted—who was the first of the four to obey the gospel.

The high contracting parties whom I was called to help into a state of happiness that should always be highly appreciated were Harry Leon Brown and Miss Genevra Proffitt. Harry is a successful young business man of Chattanooga. Genevra, though scarcely past her teens, is a graduate of the University of Chattanooga and a competent and popular teacher.

The Brown-Proffitt marriage, which was solemnized Tuesday evening, August 4, in the chapel of the University of Chattanooga, was a somewhat elaborate affair; hence, I approached and passed through it with fear and trembling. How poorly I performed my part charity testifieth not. Long life, peace, prosperity, and happiness to the happy couple here, and life eternal in a world that is better and brighter than this.

Brother and Sister Shipley and other appreciated friends from Sale Creek were at the wedding. My daughter, Dedie, my first-born, and Virgil, my youngest child, met us in Chattanooga and autoed us to Dunlap and thence to Nashville. After the marriage we visited Dr. and Mrs. W. C. Barnes and other friends in Chattanooga, and, Thursday afternoon, went to my long-ago home town, Dunlap, capital of Sequatchie County, the middle county of the three Sequatchie Valley counties. "Sequatchie," a Cherokee Indian word, means "The Land of Many Waters." The home of Brother J. T. Walker, in Dunlap, is our Sequatchie Valley home, and we hoped to spend several days there, showing Dedie and Virgil the scenes of my childhood and early youth; but about five hours after we reached Dunlap a telephone message called us to Nashville, to bury my faithful and devoted friend, Judge M. H.

Last year I made a hurried trip from Washington to Tennessee, to the burial of Brother James T. Anderson, of Hurricane Mills. Friends in Washington said to me just before I left them two weeks ago: "You are going on a happier mission this year; hence, your trip will be more pleasant than that of last year." But less than a week after my arrival in Tennessee I was hastening to the burial of one of my Mars' Hill boys, who had been indeed and in truth a devoted friend and brother. How uncertain are the plans and pleasures of life! How closely tears follow smiles, sorrow follows joy!

Now I am in Nashville, in the home of Brother A. M.

Burton, who has a bright boy named for me. I appreciate all my namesakes, of whom I have many. One of them lives in New Zealand, nearly on the opposite side of the globe. So far as I know, not one of them has ever been hanged, and only one of them has been committed to jail.

I preached to two great audiences at Charlotte Avenue Church last Sunday (August 9) and met hosts of friends, loyal, loving, and true. The audience and the welcome I received were uplifting and encouraging. I felt as Paul must have felt when, as he neared Rome, a prisoner, the brethren came out on the Appian Way as far as the Three Taverns to meet him. As he did, I "thanked God and took courage."

THE WORK OF DISTRIBUTING BIBLES.

Columbia, Tenn., August 5.—Dear Brother Morrow: We are now working on our new church house, and later on we are going to coöperate with you in Bible distribution. Several years ago I got our congregation to purchase two hundred and fifty Bibles, and many have been given away, and there are now more Bibles in our church house than in any other church house I know of. I really think a church should be well supplied with Bibles in their church house, as well as in their homes. For the Bible itself is the word preached. And we should encourage and exhort people to read it and study it, as you are doing, If the church, as a rule, would follow your example, our people would be a peculiar people, for they would be familiar with God's word.

JOHN W. FRY.

The above words from Brother Fry are very encouraging to our work of placing the Bible in every home and a New Testament in every child's hand, say, from the time he can begin to read any book. Give it to him as his own property, tell him about Jehovah God, the everlasting Creator of heaven and earth, and that he loved us so much as to give his only begotten Son to come and die that we might have life through his name. Fathers, mothers, and Sunday-school teachers, you will be surprised to see how the child will read and understand it and learn to love it.

"Hear, O Israel: Jehovah our God is one Jehovah: and thou shalt love Jehovah thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy might. And these words, which I command thee this day, shall be upon thy heart; and thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children, and shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thy house, and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down, and when thou risest up. And thou shalt bind them for a sign upon thy hand, and they shall be for frontlets between thine eyes. And thou shalt write them upon the doorposts of thy house, and upon thy gates." (Deut. 6: 4-9.)

What a wonderful and plain command to us fathers and mothers to-day! And where are the homes in which this commandment is being obeyed? No wonder our children are gone astray like sheep that have no shepherd! We let our children go to the dance hall or card party or the damnable beach, where drinks of some kind are used at most of such gatherings, a temptation that few parents can withstand. How fathers and mothers can or will allow their pure, sweet, God-given children to go to destruction in this way is a mystery to me. In the language of the old prophet, I say: "Turn ye, turn ye from your evil ways; for why will ye die, O house of Israel?"

We sincerely ask all to join in this good work of distributing Bibles. It is a God-given privilege, not a burden, to give our time and means to this work. Remember, this fund is undenominational. We want all to have the benefit of the low prices of these books, and hope and pray that every meetinghouse in the land will keep a supply of Bibles and Testaments on hand and see that every widow and orphan child has one.

S. F. Morrow.

GOSPEL ADVOCATE

The GOSPEL ADVOCATE is the oldest living periodical published in the interest of the church of Christ. It is now in its sixty-seventh volume, and it has a larger list of regular, paid-up subscribers than it has ever had before. Its circulation is increasing rapidly, and it is daily growing in favor with the people. It contains twenty-four pages, and is issued every week. It is printed in large, clear type, on good paper, and is neatly pasted and trimmed. It has by far the largest circulation of any periodical published south of the Mason and Dixon Line in the interest of the church of Christ. It has regular editorial writers, besides a large number of able and regular contributors. It has all of the regular departments of the best religious periodicals.

In editorial policy it stands for individual consecration, against ecclesiastic organizations, as the scriptural and best method of doing missionary work. It recognizes no organization but the church of Christ as a scriptural medium of converting the world and developing the Christ-

tian character.

It opposes all human creeds and ecclesiastic councils, and pleads for the right of each individual to study the Scriptures for himself and formulate his own faith, without dictation or hindrance from churchly dignitaries. It opposes all clerical assumption of official authority in the church, and stands for the scriptural doctrine that each Christian has an office to fill, a work to perform—that all are kings and priests unto God.

It stoutly advocates the doctrine of missions, and argues unceasingly that every Christian is a divinely commissioned missionary and every church is a scripturally organized missionary society. The mission of every Christian and the design of every church is to preach the gospel to all the world.

It believes in, and stoutly advocates, congregational singing, as opposed to select choirs and instrumental performances, as the best and most soul-stirring church music. Let all the people sing. Provide a book for everybody in the house, and let us all make a joyful noise unto the Lord.

BIBLE CROSS WORD PUZZLE

TWO Jewish prefixes are added, in this puzzle, to the familiar English ones which the cross word puzzle solver knows well by now. One of them is very usual, the other not met with quite so often. But with a reference book and the aid of the interlocking words they will not long remain hidden.

How to Solve a Cross Word Puzzle

© 1925 The J.C.W. CO. How to Solve a Cross Word Puzzle (23)

To work out this puzzle, the white spaces must be filled with letters forming words answering to the various borizontal and vertical definitions given below. The horizontal and vertical words are not the same, but each gives a clue to the other. The first letter of each word is indicated by a number which refers to the definitions listed below.

It is advisable to first fill in, in both directions, those words which you know to be correct. These will furnish hints to those words which you do not know or had merely guessed at. When the puzzle is solved correctly, the letters in the white spaces will spell words both horizontally and vertically. The black spaces are the blind spots of the puzzle and merely form the pattern, incidentally designating the ends and beginnings of the words contained in the puzzle.

From the Brethren

San Francisco, Cal., August 8.— The church work around the Bay is moving along nicely. Brother Neeley Gardner, of Sacramento, is spending a part of the summer in Berkeley and has been presching some for the difhas been preaching some for the dif-ferent congregations. He preached once in Redwood City, twice in San Francisco, and a number of times in Berkeley. Brother Arthur B. Tenny, president of the Graton Bible School, is doing some school work in the Stanis doing some school work in the Stanford University this summer, and he has got the few brethren in Palo Alto and Redwood City to meeting regularly. I spoke for the brethren in Sacramento last Lord's day, and Brother Gardner preached in San Francisco. We still meet in Richmond Hall, Fourth Avenue and Clement Street. My address is 1281 Sixth Avenue.—W. Halliday Trice.

Nashville, Tenn., August 3.—During the two months' mission work in Montana and Colorado, I held four short meetings in Montana—Elmdale, short meetings in Montana—Limdale, Kerns, Big Horn, and Buffalo—cov-ering a month and a half of the time. I closed the last half of the month with a mission meeting at Casper, Wyo. The crowds were small, owing to the fact that it was a busy time. But the work I went to do was accomplished. I left all the churches in peace and I left all the churches in peace and harmony and determined to work hard and to "keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace." Contributions received for this work from all sources amounted to $197.59. My expenses for the trip were approximately $150. I feel thankful to all who contributed. May the Lord bless and prosper them all.—W. P. Lemmons.

MAKES PUMPING UP TIRES UNNECESSARY.

N. B. Hughes, of 2514 Monroe, Chicago, Ill., has perfected a new air-tight valve cap that enables auto owners to pump up their tires once and never touch them again until punctured or worn out. Leading tire manufacturers, after thorough tests, have approved Mr. Hughes' invention and banished the old theory that air escapes through rubber. One inflation lasts the life of a tire, and tire mileage is doubled. These and tire mileage is doubled. These caps retail for $1.25 for a set of five The inventor wants agents and will send proof and samples free. Write him to-day.

FROM EAST TENNESSEE.

BY GEORGE W. FARMER.

It has been some time since a report has gone from this section. People away write and say: "Let us hear more from East Tennessee." We appreciate all this, and are glad that the needs of this section are becoming better known all the time. Sickness and much work have given me little time for reports.

The Cleveland work is doing well. The attendance and interest are fine, notwithstanding the hot, dry weather. Since our last report there have been three baptisms and eight others have taken membership. The work at other points is doing as well as we could expect, all things considered. Since the first of the year there have been eleven meetings held east and northeast of Chattanooga. We are hoping to have several more during the summer and fall. The Fayetteville church supported Brother R. A. Largen in two good meetings, one at Ooltewah and the other at Niota. Brother Largen did fine work at these Brother R. C. White, with Brother Elmore Phillips as song leader, held a good meeting at Big Springs, in Meigs County. They succeeded in getting a number of the brethren together and setting them to work for the Lord. I have heard from them since their first meeting. They had about thirty out, and had an interesting and enthusiastic meeting. I hope and pray that they may do well. This is the only place in Meigs County where we have people meeting and worshiping according to the New Testament.

A good little sister at Johnson City, writes: "Hurry on to Johnson City." She wants the old Jerusalem gospel preached and a church after the New Testament order established there. This is the right spirit. Instead of sitting down and doing nothing, give the Macedonian call. This is helpful to us all. By doing so we get information that is needful in helping to do this work.

The brethren at Rogersville want to finish paying for their lot, well located in the heart of the town. They want to get their house built so they can move into town and be able to reach so many more people. These brethren are poor people, though good people. They need help. Let all take notice and send them some help. Send check or money order to William Lawson, Rogersville, Tenn.

Let us all work and pray that the cause may grow in East Tennessee as elsewhere.

Address:

Stop, Ky., August 5.—I am now in the mountains of Kentucky, preaching the gospel three times a day to large congregations. I am on the territory and near the old home of "Raccoon" John Smith. He fought many battles with the Baptists in this part and led many to the light. I am also preaching once a day at Monticello, county seat of Wayne County, where Brother C. R. Nichol recently met Boyce Taylor in debate. I fear Brother Nichol killed all future hope of debates in this county, as he so completely overthrew Baptist teaching as held by Taylor that all Baptists who heard it are down on debating. I have just closed a fine meeting at Berea Church, near Rives, Tenn, with five baptized. I promised to help them again next year. Berea is a fine congregation and is a product of the only John R. Williams, who has done more gospel preaching and built up more Bible churches than any other man in West Tennessee. Brother Williams came and spent one day with me. I love him. He is a fine gospel preacher, but is called a "back number" because he does not hold a degree. If he only had a degree, he would be a wonder. I go from here to Mississippi for one debate and one meeting, and then back to Kentucky.

WOOSLEY.

Mrs. Elizabeth Hix Woosley was born on July 8, 1846, and on February 4, 1925, after all had been done that kind hands and loving hearts could do, her spirit left all that was mortal and went home to God. She was married to William F. Woosley on December 26, 1867, and was the mother of seven children. Her husband and four children preceded her to the great Beyond. She was baptized into Christ when ouite young and lived to a ripe old age, in accordance with God's promise to those who do good and eschew evil. The noblest character on earth is a good mother, and the earthly loss is her eternal gain.

ONE Who Loved Her.

FITZGERALD.

Sister Sina McLain Fitzgerald, wife of Earl Fitzgerald, died at their home of Earl Fitzgerald, died at their home in Sheffield, Ala., on Sunday, March 8, 1925. Funeral services were held at the church of Christ in Lawrence-burg, Tenn., conducted by T. C. King. She had been a Christian from early life and died in the faith. The wise man. Solomon, speaks of the godly woman in Prov. 31. He says that "her price is far above rubies" and that "her children rise up and call her blessed." We shall not weep for her as those who have no hope. She was buried in Mimosa Cemetery, in Lawrenceburg. She was just in the prime of life, being thirty-seven years of age. She was a loving companion, prime of life, being thirty-seven years of age. She was a loving companion, a tender mother to her children, and a true Christian. She leaves a little girl, nineteen months old, and one son, twelve years old. While her going is sad to her loved ones, her days of suffering are over and the joys of a blissful eternity are hers. There she awaits the coming of the loved ones left behind. Thomas C. King.

KACHELMAN.

KACHELMAN.

Mrs. Mary Gresham Kachelman was born at Mars' Hill, four miles north of Florence, Ala., about sixty-seven years ago, and was educated at the old Mars' Hill College. She was the oldest daughter of the late Elder W. H. Gresham, and a niece, by marriage, of Elder T. B. Larimore. "Miss Mary" (as she was affectionately known) married John Kachelman on December 28, 1882, and together they reared a splendid family—Mrs. W. A. Frye, Florence, Ala.; Mrs. Amos Clanton, Rogersville, Ala.; Louis Kachelman, Mars'Hill; Miss Gussie and George, who reside with the father at Mars' Hill. Misses Esther and Emma Gresham, reside with the father at Mars' Hill. Misses Esther and Emma Gresham, Mrs. Tankersley, and George and Ed Gresham, sisters and brothers, also survive her. Mrs. Kachelman became a Christian in early life, and in all the years she never wavered or weakened in her efforts to be well-pleasing to her Maker. While her home was a mile from the church house, she always attended services when her health and the weather would possibly permit. Her presence and influence will be greatly missed. As a member of her community, Mrs. As a member of her community, Mrs.

Kachelman was ever ready to help in any good work. Only those who were fortunate enough to be her nearest neighbors could know and appreciate her real worth. Her kindnesses were innumerable, and she was a friend, tried and true, every day in the year. And when real sorrows and heartaches came, she was ever ready to share one's burden. She was tenderly loved by young and old and held in the highest respect by all who knew her. Just at dawn on the morning of January 20, 1925, the spirit of this noble woman took its flight, and the body was laid to rest in the family cemetery, near the home.

MRS. H. P. Lucas.

BIRDWELL.

On Lord's day, March 15, 1925, our beloved brother and colaborer in the Lord, Blake Birdwell, fell asleep in Jesus. On the previous Monday he was stricken with paralysis, from which he never rallied. He was a son of Joseph and Jane Birdwell, and was born on January 4, 1847. He obeyed the gospel in 1867. He was married to Delpha Belle Keith, daughter of Alexander and Elizabeth Keith, on April 23, 1876, and to them were born eleven children. One died in infancy. Seven daughters and were born eleven children. One died in infancy. Seven daughters and three sons survive him, and all were with him in his last affliction. Broth-er Birdwell stood for the very highest ideals of Christian purity. He was firm in his stand against anything that would lower the standard of that would lower the standard of purity, holiness, cleanliness, and god-liness, in the individual, the family, or, above all, the church. He was a deliberate, concise, earnest, and thoughtful speaker. May the Lord abundantly sustain and direct his bereaved wife and children. Brother O. L. Carnahan and the writer spoke words of comfort to the sorrowing ones in the home of our departed brother, after which his body was laid to rest in the Turner graveyard, near Clementsville, Tenn.

JOHN H. ARMS.

WILLIAMSON.

Sister Maggie Williamson died at her home in Ethridge, Tenn., on March 13, 1925, aged seventy years and a few months. Sister Williamson was a Christian in deed as well as in name. The body was laid to rest in the beautiful cemetery at Ethridge. Beautiful flowers covered her last resting place. A yest throng Ethridge. Beautiful flowers covered her last resting place. A vast throng of people attended her funeral, which was held at her home on Sunday afternoon. Traveling men and friends from Nashville and surrounding towns were there in numbers to show their large for the deported one. Her towns were there in numbers to show their love for the departed one. Her favorite songs were sung—"Asleep in Jesus," "My Loved Ones Are Waiting," and "Death is Only a Dream." The funeral services were conducted by the writer. "Aunt Maggie" (as everybody called her) was as well known as any one in the county. She had been operating a hotel at Ethridge for more than twenty-five years. All the traveling men who have been much in this territory knew her and loved her. She lived daily so that every one with whom she came in contact knew her sweet, Christian spirit. A life like hers will continue to be an inspiration to others and will live on and on. Thomas C. King.

McQUIDDY'S RUDIMENTS OF MUSIC

Reading music is purely a mechanical problem, and a too lib-eral use of theory will confuse rather than help in attaining desired results.

Any one may learn to read music accurately and rapidly who will never be able to sing acceptably, for various reasons. Some sing naturally, as do the birds, while others must have long and thorough training be-fore the ability is acquired to sing the Major Diatonic scale correctly; others are unable to sing in "tune," and consequently must have severe drill under a competent instructor before the voice is brought under control. The student will, therefore, understand that neither theoretical technicalities nor voice building will be discussed in this book -merely the art of reading music.

There is no better music composer in this or any other country than is the editor of "McQuiddy's Rudiments of Music." Price, 20 cents, single copy, prepaid; $2.25 per dozen, not prepaid. Address

Rockwood, Tenn., August 1.—Local work is moving along nicely, with additions every little while. I baptized a man a few weeks ago who came from the Baptists. He is proving himself useful as a good song leader, and does anything else he is called upon to do. I have just closed a mission meeting under a brush arbor on the mountain in the edge of Cumberland County. Brother J. S. Turner greatly assisted by leading the singing. There were five additions—four baptized and one (a Baptist preacher) who claimed scriptural baptism. We are to set these few to worshiping "as it is written" next Lord's day. We are now busy preparing for another mission meeting at Spring City, a town of about two thousand inhabitants a few miles from Dayton on the Southern Railroad. Brother F. L. Paisley, of Paducah, Ky., is to do the preaching. Will not some congregation agree to support him in this meeting? I am not prepared to promise him anything except railroad fare and accommodations while laboring with us. Surely the laborer is worthy of his hire.—Thomas J. Wagner.

WOMAN AND MOTHER. BY X.

Excepting the spiritual blessings wrought by Heaven's wisdom and power, it seems to me that the greatest blessing to humanity is a godly woman. A godly woman is a great blessing and an ungodly woman is a great curse. A woman in her Godgiven sphere wields a wonderful influence and, no doubt, shapes the course of many lives.

As we think of woman and her great opportunities there comes another dear to the hearts of us all, one of the sweetest words of language—"mother." That boy or girl who has or had a godly mother is wonderfully blessed indeed. Greatly handicapped and to be pitied is the boy or girl whose mother is or was a Jezebel or a Herodias.

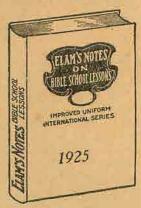

Girls and boys, listen to your mother, if she be a godly mother. Cling to "mother's apron strings," because when you break away you are breaking away from your best human friend. It was she who faced the "valley of the shadows" that you might have life; ministered to you in your sickness; and while others slept, came to your bedside and tucked the covers about you. It is mother that will advise you safely. If you doubt this, ask those who have held the wrinkled hand for the last time; those who have planted a farewell kiss upon a cold and icy brow. Ask those whose tears have stained a casket's plush.

I have heard my uncle sing a song which I am sure must be true, though I cannot say from experience—" You never miss your mother till she's gone." God has been good to me, for my mother is not yet gone. But if nature takes what seemingly is a natural course, it cannot be long till the telegram will read, "Come." I know not the grief and sadness of that hour. But when it comes and I stand by the casket, I will remember that it was she who taught me, in my tender years of childhood, that childish prayer:

Now I lay me down to sleep. I pray thee, Lord, my soul to keep; If I should die before I wake, I pray thee, Lord, my soul to take.

When I stand broken-hearted and look upon that wrinkled form, I can't say she was beautiful; I can't say she was a belle of society; I can't say she was a political leader—and thank God I can't; but thanks be to Him "from whom all blessings flow," I can say she was a "worthy woman." I have known her to rise at the midnight hour and go minister to the sick. I have never seen the thirsty go from her without his "cup of cold water;" I have never seen the hungry go away without bread; I have never seen the naked go away unclothed. I have, since coming into manhood, at Christmas time, carried cake and pie, baked by her, across the fields and left them at the cabin of "Uncle George," an old negro who lived a hermit's life. Surely her five children rise up today and call her blessed. Mother has left her footprints in the snow and mud many times as on Lord's days she tramped her two-mile journey to be around the Lord's table. # WHAT IS PREACHING THE GOSPEL?

BY VERNON L. STEWART.

"Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature." (Mark 16: 15.) "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost." (Matt. 28: 19.)

But what does it mean to preach the gospel to every creature? To preach the gospel is to preach Christ, and to preach Christ is to tell of the life that he lived, of the trials and temptations that he successfully withstood, and of the many wonderful things that he did to make the people believe; and to tell how the Jews set traps for him, and how, after failing many times, in their anger they laid wicked hands upon him and lifted him up and crucified him; tell of his burial, and how he rose on the morning of the third day, giving us the hope of an eternal life after this earthly tabernacle has dissolved, if we will only heed God's commands. And what does he command us to do? First, that we must believe that Jesus Christ is his Son; second, that we must repent of our past sins; third, that we must be baptized-that is, must be immersed, or buried with Christ in baptism—then rise to "walk in newness of life," putting the old man behind us with our sins that are blotted out, and rising a new creature. "If any man be in Christ, he is a new creature." (2 Cor. 5: 17.) And to be in Christ is to be in the church of Christ, for the church of Christ is the body of Christ. Whatever, therefore, is necessary to bring one into the church or body of Christ is necessary to become a new creature, and is of such importance that it is well to know how one gets into Christ. With the Bible before us, we should have no difficulty in arriving at a correct solution of the matter. "Therefore if any man be in Christ, he is a new creature: old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new." A new creature, adding to his faith virtue; to virtue, knowledge; to knowledge, patience; to patience, temperance; to temperance, godliness; to godliness. brotherly kindness; to brotherly kindness, charity. And if any man have these things, he is neither barren nor unfruitful. And such is that which should be preached to every creature; and "he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned." (Mark 16: 16.)

By JAMES A. ALLEN

The Christian Sun, Richmond, Va., under the heading, "How to Pay Our Missionary Debt," says:

The missionary debt of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, is two and a half million dollars. This is the largest liability that ever rested upon our church, and in the aggregate it seems appalling. But in relation to our ability it is a bagatelle, for a contribution of only one dollar from each member would wipe it out.

This debt is the most pressing problem now before us. The interest alone absorbs an amount equal to one-half of our entire home mission budget, or one-fourth of our total income from the missionary assessment. It would maintain all our work in any foreign field, with the possible exception of Japan.

Is there any intimation in the New Testament that the apostles and evangelists preached the gospel on credit? Those "that were scattered abroad went about preaching the word" (Acts 8: 4), but they did not wait to be guaranteed a salary or do it as a means of making a living. A man who won't "go" until somebody prearranges the pay would better bless mankind by staying at home, and he would be more at home in the cornfield than in the pulpit. Indeed, "the laborer is worthy of his hire" (Luke 10: 7), and close and tight-fisted churches who permit preachers to work their hearts out with little or no support are open to the censure of both heaven and earth; but, at the same time, the preacher who permits the pay to have any weight whatever in his decision to preach and who does not preach from the pure love of it and because he feels that "necessity is laid upon me; for woe is unto me, if I preach not the gospel" (1 Cor. 9: 16), is a hireling in search of filthy lucre, and would do humanity more good by confining his labors to the cornfield instead of the

This system of organizing missionary corporations "to preach the gospel to the heathen" owes its origin more to the fact that the corporations create many jobs with good pay than it does to any love for the heathen cherished by the said corporations. And as systematic propaganda designed to milk the churches is the main business of these corporations, an ability to boost the program and raise money is more of a qualification for these said jobs than any amount of personal consecration to the service of God or individual activity in living the Christian life. Missionary boards and soulless corporations should be abolished and all Christians should work individually and through their local congregations, as the disciples did in New Testament times under the leadership of inspired men.

An editorial in the Christian Advocate, headed, "Prayers in Secular Papers," says:

"The daily press is quick to know the tastes of its readers and to strive to supply them with what they want. This fact explains the readiness of several hundred newspapers to accept and publish prayers. Announcement has been made that the Federation of Churches of Rochester, N. Y., will obtain written prayers from numerous prominent men and supply them through syndicated methods to the papers of the country."

The desire to be popular is one of the great sins of men. It is natural for secular, worldly papers to cater to the public. But for a preacher of the gospel to try to give the people what they want instead of what they ought to have is for him to be false to God and untrue to his word. Such was one of the brands of the false prophets. When a preacher reaches the point where he loves popularity and is willing to sacrifice the word of God, he ought to quit preaching and do something else.

A prayer that is offered for the people to hear is not heard in heaven. "And when ye pray, ye shall not be as the hypocrites; for they love to stand and pray in the synagogues and in the corners of the streets, that they may be seen of men. Verily I say unto you, They have received their reward. But thou, when thou prayest, enter into thine inner chamber, and having shut thy door, pray to thy Father who is in secret, and thy Father who seeth in secret shall recompense thee. And in praying use not vain repetitions, as the Gentiles do: for they think that they shall be heard for their much speaking." (Matt. 6: 5-7.)

The failure of many to pray is alarming. No one can successfully live the Christian life without daily study of the word of God and daily prayer. Few realize the joy and strength of such habits. "Continuing steadfastly in prayer." (Rom. 12: 12.) "With all prayer and supplication praying at all seasons in the Spirit, and watching thereunto in all perseverance and supplication for all the saints." (Eph. 6: 18.) "In everything by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving let your requests be made known unto God." (Phil. 4: 6.)

There are such things as spontaneous flashes of suggestion that come on the inspiration of the moment, but they come to those who have previously meditated long and earnestly on the questions involved; and even so, those exalted moods in the Christian life in which the soul mounts up on wings like an eagle come to those who have toiled along the road of faithful daily service.—Bryan Collier.

OUERY DEPARTMENT

BY H. LEO BOLES

Is it scriptural for a woman to teach the Bible? Paul, in 1 Tim. 2: 12, seems to forbid two things: first, he will not permit woman to teach; second, he will not permit her to have authority over man, but to be in silence. Now, if Paul would not suffer a woman to do these things, I would like to know where we would get authority to encourage her to teach.—X.

These questions have been answered frequently, and for the benefit of all I am submitting a lengthy quotation from Dr. Macknight, who is considered one of the best commentators on the Epistles. He paraphrases 1 Cor. 14: 34 as follows: "Having enjoined the orderly exercise of the spiritual gifts; as in all the churches of the saints is well known. Your women, on pretense of being inspired, have assumed the office of public teachers; but my command is, Let your women be silent in the churches; for it hath not been permitted to them by Christ to teach in public; but they must be in subjection, as also the law of Moses commandeth. I do not permit women so much as to ask a question in the church, even on pretense of receiving information. But if they wish to learn anything, let them ask their own husbands at home: for it is an indecent thing for women, on any pretense, to speak in the church." He paraphrases 1 Tim. 2: 11, 12 as follows: "Let every woman receive instruction in religious matters from the men in silence, with entire submission, on account of their imperfect education and inferior understanding. For I do not allow a woman to teach in the public assemblies, nor in any manner to usurp authority over a man; but I enjoin them, in all public meetings, to be silent." knight, in commenting on 1 Cor. 14: 34, says: "For determining the question, it may be of use to observe, that in this chapter the apostle, after describing prophecy and explaining the inspiration by which the prophets spoke, and ordering them to pray and prophesy in a known language, or, if they prophesied in a foreign language, to do it so as it might be interpreted by some one in the assembly who had the gift of interpretation, and after giving them directions concerning the orderly exercise of all their spiritual gifts, founded on this fact, that the spiritual gifts of the prophets were subject to the prophets, he adds, Let your women be silent in the churches, for it hath not been permitted them to speak. The prohibition standing in this connection implies that the Corinthian women were not to pray and prophesy in the church as teachers, on pretense of being inspired and unable to restrain the motions of the Spirit. Next, the reasons mentioned by the apostle show that the prohibition was absolute and general. Christ had not permitted women to speak in the church as teachers to the men; neither had the law of Moses permitted them, for it commanded them to be in subjection to the men. The apostle, therefore, considered women's praying and prophesying in the church as a renouncing of their subjection to the men. Accordingly he terms it (1 Tim. 2: 12) a usurping authority over the man. They were not so much as to ask a question in the church, even on the pretense of learning something, lest it might have given them a handle for entering into disputations with the men. But if they wished to learn anything, they were to ask their husbands at home-nay, it was indecent for women to speak at all in the church; being inconsistent with that modesty which is their greatest ornament. In short, to cut off every pretense for women's teaching in the church, the apostle asked them, Did the word of God go forth from you into the world? or did it only come to you by the ministry of the men? Plainly telling them that whatever inspirations of the Spirit they might be favored with, no inspiration was given them for the purpose of enabling them to teach publicly or to lead the devotion of the church. But it may be asked, since women were not allowed to pray and prophesy in the church, for what purpose were the inspirations of the Spirit bestowed on them? They were bestowed for enabling them to instruct their own sex in private, especially those of the younger sort and those who were newly converted. Perhaps, also, some of the married women, who were eminent for their gifts and knowledge, may, in private conversation, have assisted the novices even among the men, as we find Priscilla expounded the way of God to Apollos (Acts 18: 26); and as the daughters of Philip, the evangelist, may have done, who are said (Acts 21: 9) to have prophesied; for prophesying does not necessarily imply the foretelling of future events by inspiration, but most commonly signifies the speaking by inspiration to the edification of others. At the same time, if the daughters of Philip had the knowledge of any future events given them by inspiration, it will not follow that they uttered these prophecies in the church. They may have published them in conversation, like Anna (Luke 2: 38), whereby all the ends for which these events were revealed to them may have been answered." In commenting on verse 35, Dr. Macknight says: "This is the apostle's third reason for prohibiting women to teach in the church. It is contrary to the modesty natural to the sex, and to the manners of all nations. The apostle adds a fourth reason (verse 36), that no woman had been commissioned by Christ to preach the gospel to unbelievers. To conclude, if any of the women were inspired in the public assemblies, they suffered no hardship from this prohibition; because, having the command of their gifts, they could keep silence till they went home, where in their own families they might utter these revelations; or they might do it in meetings of their own sex, privately gathered for that purpose." 善 尊 尊

When Herod had Peter put in prison, the record in Acts 12: 5 says: "Peter therefore was kept in the prison; but prayer was made earnestly of the church unto God for him." Was the church praying for Peter's deliverance?—X.

The church made earnest petition for God for Peter. The record does not state whether the church was praying for his deliverance, for his welfare, or whether it was for grace and strength for him to suffer in the name of Christ. B. W. Johnson, in commenting on this verse, says: "By the whole church, in its assemblies, that God might deliver him." Adam Clarke comments as follows: "These prayers of the church produced that miraculous interference mentioned below, and without which Peter could not have thus escaped from the hands of this ruthless king." Thomas O. Summers comments as follows: "They believed in the objective benefit of prayer." D. Lipscomb says: "During Peter's imprisonment the church prayed earnestly for his deliverance, and to these prayers his deliverance is in a measure attributed. It is an example to us that we should pray." McGarvey says: "We have reason to believe that they were not praying for his release." From these quotations we see that commentators differ in their opinion.

WHERE SHALL I GO TO BE RIGHT?

(J. B. Briney, in Christian Standard, July 4, 1925.)

John A. Smith, of Texas, sends me a clipping from the Firm Foundation, containing the above question and the Firm Foundation's answer, which seems not to be satisfactory to Brother Smith, who asks me to answer it in the Christian Standard, "making the matter so clear and plain that any of us can tell where we are at." The question was propounded by a brother who appears to be at sea ecclesiastically on account of the trouble existing among the disciples over the organ question. He lives in a town where there are two congregations that have no fellowship with each other on account of this question, and he does not know which congregation to unite with to be sure that he is right. That the use or nonuse of an organ should be made the standard by which it is to be decided whether a congregation is a church of Christ or not, is a marvel in view of the fact that there is no direct teaching in the New Testament on the subject.

The first step to be taken in the investigation of such a question as this is to ascertain what are the conditions of church membership as laid down in the sacred Scriptures. This is a matter of easy solution, for the word of God is very explicit in its teaching on the subject: "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except one be born of water and the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." (John 3: 5.) In this birth into the kingdom of God, the begetter is the Spirit, who operates through the Word, which is the seed of the kingdom and by which faith comes. (Rom. 10: 17.) This is in strict accord with the first letter of John (5: 1), which says: "Whosoever believeth that Jesus is the Christ is begotten of God." That "born of water" means baptism goes by common consent. "But now he [God] commandeth men that they should all everywhere repent." (Acts 17: 30.) These passages, besides many others that might be cited, make it perfectly manifest that faith, repentance, and baptism are the scriptural conditions of membership in a church of Christ, and it is nowhere hinted that any opinion with respect to the use or nonuse of an organ is such a condition.

From the foregoing scriptures and reasoning, it follows that a congregation of baptized, penitent believers is a church of Christ, whether using an organ in its service or not, and remains such till it makes its opinion on that subject a test of fellowship, and undertakes to legislate where the Lord, the head of the church, has not legislated. But when a congregation makes its opinion a test of fellowship, thus enacting legislation where the Lord has not legislated, it becomes a faction, and really a rival of the King by attempting to bind God's children where he has left them free. "For freedom did Christ set us free: stand fast therefore, and be not entangled again in a yoke of bondage," is an apostolic injunction that should be heeded, and no human opinion must be allowed to become a law for the Lord's free people.

Coming now directly to the question of the use of a musical instrument in the song service of the church, let us inquire as to the sphere to which this matter belongs; and a moment's reflection will convince sober reason that it does not belong to the sphere of faith, for faith rests upon plain and unequivocal statements of the word of God. It belongs to the domain of helps in carrying on the Master's work and worship. If the use of an instrument helps in this sphere, then it is proper and right to use an instrument. That the use of an instrument helps in singing is the universal testimony of the world's best singers, and such will not sing without the aid of an instrument. In detailing the equipment of the church for carrying on its work, Paul uses the following language: "And God hath set some in the church, first, apostles; secondly, prophets; thirdly, teachers; then miracles; then gifts of healing, helps, governments, divers kinds of tongues." (1 Cor. 12: 28.) Here God authorizes the use of helps; and if the use of an instrument helps in any way in serving the Lord, then the use of an instrument has divine authority, and he who opposes it fights against God.

In Acts 27: 17 we read as follows: "And when they had hoisted it up, they used helps, undergirding the ship." The helps were the things with which they undergirded the ship. So God has authorized the use of helps in carrying on the affairs of the church. If the use of a chart helps a teacher in teaching, he may use a chart; and if the use of an instrument helps a singer in singing, he may use an instrument. Who can point out the difference, morally, between using a chart in teaching and using an instrument in singing? Both are helps in doing the things respectively involved, and both are right, or both are wrong. Will any man so stultify himself as to say that the use of a chart in teaching is wrong and sinful? I trow not. Then, let every man hold his peace with respect to the use of an organ in singing, and not split a church over what is clearly allowable as a help. I am aware of the fact that the word rendered "helps," in 1 Cor. 12: 28, is not the same as the word rendered "helps" in Acts 27: 28, but the words are synonyms, and mean practically the same thing, and hence they are translated by the one word

Speaking of those who oppose the use of an instrument in singing the praises of God, Brother Smith says, "These folks base their contention, or most of it, on Col. 3: 16;" and, hence, it is in order to examine that passage to see whether or not it excludes the use of an instrument in singing, and that question is really settled in advance of the examination by the fact that God permits the use of an instrument as a help, and God does not exclude in one passage what he permits in another. The passage reads thus: "Let the word of Christ dwell in you richly; in all wisdom teaching and admonishing one another with psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing with grace in your hearts unto God." The parallel passage in Eph. 5: 19 reads as follows: "Speaking one to another in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing and making melody with your heart to the Lord."

In the first place, let it be noted that these psalms, hymns, and spiritual songs were to be sung by the brethren to one another, and, hence, such service was not worship, and this one consideration nullifies the objection to the use of an instrument in worship, which is based upon these passages. Wherein lies a reasonable objection to using an instrument when people are singing to each other? But while this vocal and audible service is being rendered by the brethren to one another, it is to be done with grace or gratitude in the heart to God, and this should be the case in everything that a Christian may do. In the second place, let it be observed that the "singing and making melody" to the Lord is to be done "with your heart;" and if this excludes the use of a musical instrument, it excludes the use of the vocal cords, for they constitute a musical instrument that is not in the heart, but in the throat! What proves too much proves nothing, and thus the objection to the use of an instrument is thoroughly disposed of.

One further remark: "The Savior and his apostles attended the temple services during his lifetime, and the apostles continued to do so after his death as long as the temple stood. It is well known that musical instruments were used in that service, and there is not a note of disapproval to be found in the word of God. If it had been the divine intention that the use of instruments in singing the praises of God should be discontinued, he would have plainly and directly said so; but the question was never even broached by any inspired writer. The questions of circumsion and that of eating meat sacrificed to idols were discussed and decided, but no question was ever raised as to the use of an instrument in singing—a thing to which the Jews were accustomed, and which Christ and the apostles sanctioned by their presence when instruments were used. That such could have been the case if the use of an instrument in Christian worship is sinful is unthinkable.

BURRITT COLLEGE.

BY J. E. ACUFF.

Burritt College began the fall term of 1925 on Tuesday, August 18, with one of the best openings in its history from the standpoint of enrollment and green for school work. Brother H. E. Scott, who has so successfully managed the school in the past, continues as president. He is a worthy successor to an illustrious line of predecessors. The presidents of Burritt College dating back to antebellum days have been distinguished for their unselfish philanthropy, their devotion to duty, and their legalty to the church. The names of Carnes, Brents, Sutton, Billingsley, and all the others, as to that matter, will never be forgotten by those who were fortunate enough to come within the range of their influence. The principles they taught still live and are being presented to the world through the personality of students now scattered over the entire country. Wherever they be found, they are holding positions of trust, enjoying the confidence and esteem of their associates. Many of our foremost preaching brethren received their early training at Burritt College. It is difficult to find a congregation anywhere but that has been affected in a wholesome way by some former student.

Burritt College, known as the "Pioneer of the Cumberlands," has during all of the seventy-six years of its history been under Christian influences. A strong, well-written restrictive clause in the deed protects the property against modern innovations in the work and worship and prevents the teaching of the Darwinian theory of evolution, destructive higher criticism, or other similar things that are being taught in a great many colleges, which have a tendency to undermine the faith of our youth.

Each day's work is begun with devotional exercises. The study of the Bible, though not compulsory, is encouraged. Classes are arranged for all grades. The Bible department is in charge of James E. Chessor, so well and favorably known to Gospel Advocate readers.

The college is located in the village of Spencer, on top of Cumberland Mountain, nine miles from the railroad. It is one of the health spots of Tennessee, and is far removed from the vice, corruption, and evil influences of larger cities, and furnishes an ideal location for students who want to make the best of their opportunities.

The rates for board, tuition, and other expenses have always been at less than the average of other schools. The entire faculty work at a financial sacrifice.

The campaign for funds with which to build a muchneeded dormitory and make other improvements and purchase additional equipment is meeting with merited success both among the churches and the old students. A comfortable sixty-room dormitory is planned. The foundation has been laid and is paid for. Brick for the building are being manufactured (molded and burned) on the ground. There is sufficient cash in the treasury to pay for all the brick. It is greatly desired to complete the building without interruption, and this will be done if funds are available. The same kind of economy that has characterized the school from the beginning is being practiced in the building of this dormitory.

In consideration of the good the school has done, is doing now, and its prospects for future usefulness, the trustees have no hesitancy in calling on the brotherhood for help, and are gratified at the response so far. Brother H. C. Denson, one of our gospel preachers, who has been associated with the college and knows its needs, is devoting his entire time to the campaign, calling on as many brethren as possible. The trustees are very anxious to finish the dormitory before the beginning of another term; so do not wait for Brother Denson or some one else to see you, but send your contribution now direct to Burritt College, Spencer, Tenn., and do your part toward speeding up the completion of the dormitory, and thus enable the college to enlarge its usefulness. Every dollar contributed will be wisely expended in the cause of Christian education.

The following extract is taken from the "Preface" of the last school catalogue:

With more than usual pleasure and justification the trustees of Burritt College commend the work being done and the good being accomplished by this illustrious institution of learning, under the management of President H. E. Scott, a thorough scholar and a devoted Christian gentleman, who has engaged a corps of experienced educators for his faculty, all of whom work zealously and incessantly to advance the best interest of those committed to their charge.

Since Burritt College opened its doors to the public on February 26, 1849, it has made and maintained a record unique and, in some respects, unparalleled in the annals of the educational world. It is a pioneer as a coeducational institution; has never increased tuition charges in its seventy-six years of existence, and is the sole survivor against higher prices and increased charges, thus keeping faith with the spirit of its founders, who sought to offer first-class educational advantages to the youths of our country at minimum prices. From its former students it has a higher percentage of successful and eminent men and women to attest the efficiency and thoroughness of its work than any other school in the South.

It preserves an atmosphere of Christian influence unexcelled and hes been estimated to the preserves and the school in the south.

It preserves an atmosphere of Christian influence unexcelled and has been active in keeping away all influences calculated to divert the attention or pervert the morals of its students, and, in this respect, its location is ideal, being in easy touch with the outside world, and yet being located in a semirural community, remote from the vices and attractions of the city, the din and dust and the vices and distraction of great industrial and commercial centers, and where students and teachers may retire to "the quiet and still air of delightful studies" and may cherish

"The love of learning, the sequestered nooks, And all the sweet serenity of books."

THE JAPANESE MISSION. BY S. H. HALL.

Some of our readers are already aware of the fact that Brother and Sister B. D. Morehead, of Nashville, Tenn., have dedicated their lives to the work of missions in Japan. We have no more loyal and faithful souls, in my judgment, among us. They both know the Book and love the cause of our Lord and Savior. These two qualifications are enough to guarantee success wherever they may be sent. The Waverly-Belmont congregation, of Nashville, has sponsored their work, but others are coöperating with them in the work. When this reaches our readers, Brother and Sister Morehead will be on their way from San Francisco to Japan.

As they stopped over in Los Angeles for about a forty-days' stay with Brother and Sister Ishiguro and Sister Eving to get what little help they could in the little time they had to stay, the following letter will be of interest to our readers, as it concerns the work Brother and Sister Ishiguro are doing. Sister Ewing, having taught school in Texas for seven or eight years, is there now in training under Brother and Sister Ishiguro, preparing to sail for Japan sometime next year. Read what Brother Morehead has to say:

Sister Morehead and I arrived in Los Angeles at 2 P.M., Saturday, July 4. The first thing I did was to call up Brother S. E. Witty, and learned that all of the Central people, including Brother Witty (his wife answered the telephone) were out on a Japanese picnic. We soon located my wife's aunt, her father's sister, with whom we spent the night.

on Sunday at 10 A.M. we found ourselves with the Lord's people who had gathered in the Gamut Club Building to worship. Brother Witty gave us a splendid introduction, and after worship he took us home with him and treated us to a good dinner. That afternoon I (my wife not being rested from the journey) went with Brother Witty to Pasadena to a coöperative singing, where I met Brother Nay, also Brother Riggs. We then went on to Ontario, where Brother Witty preached that night, and I received an invitation to preach for them, which I did on July 19, taking my wife with me. We ate dinner with Brother Rice, and spent the night with Brother Hamilton. We began our study with Brother Ishiguro on Tuesday

Brother Rice, and spent the night with Brother Hamilton. We began our study with Brother Ishiguro on Tuesday following our arrival on Saturday. We study with him four days per week at the same hours Sister Ewing does. On Sunday, July 12, Sister Ewing and wife and I worshiped with the little Japanese band of God's people and received some fine lessons from them, especially in regard to their earnestness. Every one took some part, all sang, and all but one contributed some money. I have noticed on several occasions that many Americans, a large percentage, fail to contribute, which is a duty for Christians to perform. Some women let their husbands attend to that part of the worship, but they could not ask their husbands to do their praying for them.

We are well pleased with the splendid reception which

We are well pleased with the splendid reception which the Central congregation has given us. They are doing a great deal for the Japanese mission.

The Japanese mission affords an opportunity for the church of Christ to show its interest in the salvation of souls. Brother Ishiguro has baptized ten of his native people in the short time he has worked. I doubt very much if an American soldier of the cross could go from Nashville, Tenn., to a city like unto Los Angeles, where the church of Christ is not known, as among the Japanese the church was not known, and baptize ten in the salvation. length of time under the same circumstances as Brother Ishiguro has worked. He has been very much handicapped in that his small house, not large enough to accommodate many children in Sunday-school work, has cost him so much—fifty dollars per month. He needs a larger building, one which would accommodate one hundred or one hundred and fifty children, and one with four or five classrooms, so that his helpers could more systematically work with him without confusion during class recitation, and in which he could live, and thus save the high rent.

Such a home for that faithful energetic worker for God.

Such a home for that faithful, energetic worker for God can be built where many of the fifty thousand Japanese in Los Angeles can be taught. The responsibility of carrying the gospel rests upon those who have taken His name to wear. Are we doing and have we done all we could to spread the truth? "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven." The Savior voiced the Father's will when he said "teach all nations."

May God bless you all.

May God bless you all.

I am so glad that the Los Angeles Christians gave these good people such a warm reception, as well as the good people at Ontario and Pasadena. I am sure Brother and Sister Morehead were strengthened for their trip and future work by this short stay with them.

But the thing of importance in this article is to call the attention of those who love the cause of our Lord to the sore need of a permanent home for Ishiguro's work. Who will give one thousand dollars toward this? Then how many will give five hundred dollars? And how many will give two hundred and fifty dollars or one hundred dollars? If twelve brethren would give one thousand dollars each, I feel sure the permanent home could be had, with all the needed room, and the fifty dollars monthly rental would be stopped. Brethren, let us take hold of this now and put it over. I am asking that the building committee at once get hold of the best buys, and am making this appeal through our three leading papers, so that as many as possible may know what we are trying to do and join us in the effort.

Certainly this mission has already proven itself worthy of permanency. Let us give it what it needs for the sake of the thousands of Japanese right there surrounding it and for what it means as a place for our missionaries to Japan to get the needed preparation where the climate is so ideal before sailing for Japan.

Send no checks just now, but let me have a letter or card, that I may know how much you will give. Address me at 820 Woodland Street, Nashville, Tenn.

OUR TRIP TO LOS ANGELES.

BY B. D. MOREHEAD.

We left Nashville at 8 P.M., June 26, and arrived in St. Louis at 8 A.M. next day. Our thirty-eight hours' stay in St. Louis was very pleasantly spent. After taking lunch with my wife's cousin, we called A. B. Senseney, an employee of the Life and Casualty Insurance Company, and a former classmate at David Lipscomb College. He took us driving through one of the most beautiful parks in the city. On Sunday at 10 A.M. we found our way to the house of prayer, where I preached. After worship, we took lunch with another classmate, Mrs. L. E. Dunn (Bushman). She and her husband took us to the train after a very pleasant social hour.

Our next stop was Colorado Springs, Col., where we visited our good brother in Christ, S. M. Spears. We were delighted to find him enjoying fairly good health. We met with the brethren at prayer meeting, and found them interested in their souls' welfare. It is needless to say that we motored to the top of Pike's Peak, the highest motor drive in the world. While on top of the mountain, standing around a big log fire in an old-time fireplace, we looked out of the window to see for the first time a snowstorm on the second day of July.

We had only two hours in Salt Lake City, Utah, which we spent seeing the wonderful Mormon Temple. A period of forty years was spent in the erection of this temple at a cost of four million dollars.

The Central church of Christ in Los Angeles, Cal., received us royally and are careful to see that we do not want anything while in their midst.

Charles C. Shockney preached at Dog Creek, in Cheat-ham County, last Lord's day, with good order and fine interest at all three services. The Lord willing, he will preach at the Kingston Springs church of Christ twice next Lord's day.

Pride E. Hinton, Marion Junction, Ala., August 12: "The Antioch and Victory churches, near Warrior, Ala., have just closed two successful meetings in which I did the preaching. There were four conversions at Victory and three at Antioch."

- C. R. Haynes, Murfreesboro, Tenn., August 16: "I certainly rejoice over the progress the Gospel Advocate is making and the good I believe it is producing. There has been a great improvement in both the editorial and business policies of the journal."
- W. C. Phillips, Cleveland, Tenn., August 18: "The meeting at Brownsboro, Ala., closed on Sunday, August 16, at the morning service, with four additions and one restored. I began at Limrock, Ala., Sunday evening. Best wishes for the Gospel Advocate."
- J. S. Daugherty, Rockdale, Texas, August 19: "I was at Oakwood, in Leon County, from July 24 to August 2, with ten baptized and two restored; at Old Caddo, in Johnson County, August 7-16, with three baptisms and much gospel seed sown. I am to begin a mission meeting in a Holiness tabernacle, four miles south of Caldwell, Texas, August 21. There is no congregation there, but I hope to establish one. Success to the Gospel Advocate and all the faithful."
- J. W. Brents, Stayton, Tenn., August 18: "Brother Harper, of Union University, Jackson, Tenn., and I closed at Baldwyn, Miss., last Wednesday night. Crowds were good and interest fine throughout. This congregation has arisen and prospered in spite of the rebuffs received from within and without. Especially have they met severe opposition by some members of the Christian Church. They are determined to press on. Tom Nicks and I began here in Stayton last Sunday. I will be in Knoxville during the month of September."

THE BLESSING OF BEING TURNED FROM INIQUITY.

BY JAMES E. CHESSOR.

THE FUNDAMENTAL BLESSING OF CHRIST.

"Ye are the sons of the prophets," said Peter to Jewish hearers, "and of the covenant which God made with your fathers, saying unto Abraham, And in thy seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed." (See Acts 3: 11-26.) The covenant here mentioned is that made with Abraham (Gen. 12: 3) in which the Savior was promised. "Unto you first [before the Gentiles] God, having raised up his Servant [Jesus], sent him [the true Seed of Abraham] to bless you, in turning away every one of you from your iniquities." To Israel first in order before the Gentiles pertain the Messianic promise and blessing, but the boon of salvation is for Jew and Gentile.

And Peter shows how Jesus is to bless: "In turning away every one of you from your iniquities." This is the fundamental blessing of Christ to Jew and Gentile. Every other blessing is contingent upon this one. No mortal can be truly blessed who is not turned away from his iniquities. On the other hand, when we are turned away from our iniquities, the full fruition of every other blessing will follow in due season. Thus was Jesus sent to save us, to bless us beyond measure by loosing us from our sins. The angel of the Lord said with reference to the Child: "Thou shalt call his name Jesus [Savior]; for it is he that shall save his people from their sins."

THE NEED OF BEING TURNED FROM INIQUITY.

From this text we get two important truths. In the first place, if God sent Jesus to turn us away from our iniquities, it follows that without Jesus no one can be turned away from his iniquities. Apart from Christ, every man must die in his sins. For if the recuperative or restorative power had been in man, if in his own will and character merely he could have broken away from the power of sin, no Savior would have been needed or sent. God would not needlessly have put himself to such an immeasurable cost. That heaven must yield up Jesus shows earth's dire need of his mission. In the second place, if God sent Jesus for this very purpose of turning away every one of us from our iniquities, we are bound to admit that this can be-that through Jesus Christ any one of us, whether Jew or Gentile, can be turned away from his iniquities. Jesus was sent for that, and he did not fail of his object. If there has been failure, the cause of it lies with us; through ignorance or unbelief or willfulness we have so far failed to lay hold of the blessing Jesus holds out to us. It is a matter of "whosoever will."

Once, at a great moment in our lives, we were cleansed from our old sins, became new creatures in Christ. That was when we died with him, were buried with him into death and raised with him into life. Then were we babes in Christ, innocent, humble, trustful, and such as the kingdom of heaven is made of. But how is it with us now? Have we actually and permanently been turned away from our iniquities, and are we even now turned away from our iniquities? No, many of us have failed; we know in the depths of our hearts that we have failed. And good is it for us if we are indeed conscious of it and will seek wholeheartedly the healing of our failure. Then may we find the remedy. But too often we are bewildered and become discouraged over our failure in the Christian life. We are often in the Slough of Despond, and often on the verge of despair. We do not understand it, we see no remedy, we lose heart utterly. Every resolution, every good attempt, seems to fail. Our prayers do not appear to avail anything. The very acts of worship and service seem contaminated with insincerity and unworthy motive. And our everyday life—what a dismal series of constant failures! The heart is weary and sick with regular defeat. We have no spirit of fight, no hope of victory. All this despite our good intentions and our nagging conscience. What is our need—pardon? Yes, we need pardon, but we need more: even to be turned away from our iniquities. And to accomplish that service, Jesus was sent. God raised up his Servant and sent him for that. Our remedy, the healing of our failure, lies in Jesus Christ.

"IN MY FLESH DWELLETH NO GOOD THING."

The man who has not been turned away from his iniquities is yet "in the flesh "-that is to say, is yet gratifying the passions and lusts of the flesh. Now, in the flesh dwelleth no good thing, so much so that if you are in the flesh merely, in you dwelleth no good thing. "For I know that in me, that is, in my flesh, dwelleth no good thing." This is Paul's declaration of personal experience. But it is true in every man's case that in his flesh dwelleth no good thing. The flesh is not capable of good. See but the works of the flesh (Gal. 5: 19-21) to be convinced that in the flesh there is nothing good. Those many deeds of evil (fifteen in all, with a "such like" appended) the flesh, when unrestrained, will lead you to do. Now a thing that must be checked lest it transgress the bounds of right, that holds all the seeds of evil, that bears by nature corrupt fruit, is incapable of good. "A good tree cannot bring forth evil fruit, neither can a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit." While the world stands it shall never happen that the flesh will of itself do, or lead the man to do, the will of God. Why? "Because the mind of the flesh is enmity against God; for it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can it be: and they that are in the flesh cannot please God." Definite and decisive is this language. So if there were no way for a man to be other than "in the flesh"-under the domination of the flesh-it would seal the doom of us all. But immediately Paul added: "But ye are not in the flesh but in the Spirit, if so be that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you." Here is the key to the whole situation: if you have been turned away from your iniquities, you are in the Spirit; but if not, you are in the flesh even until now.

The whole possibility of our pleasing God, of our being turned away from our iniquities, turns upon an if clause: "If so be that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you." If the Spirit dwells in us, the flesh must lose dominance. Now, the fact that the Spirit does dwell in us, even in the weakest Christians, is solemnly declared over and over, so much so that if any man is at all a Christian he has the Spirit. "But if any man hath not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his." If we have become Christians, then we have the Spirit, and that regardless of utter weakness or failure. And if you have God's Spirit, then hear: "But I say, Walk by the Spirit, and ye shall not fulfill the lust of the flesh. For the flesh lusteth against the Spirit, and the Spirit against the flesh; for these are contrary the one to the other; that ye may not do the things that ye would." Here is something you can do: "Walk by the Spirit." Here is something the Spirit will do for you: "Ye shall not fulfill the lust of the flesh." The Spirit will intercede for you and help your infirmities. To follow the Spirit sets aside the flesh, and vice versa. The only antidote for following the flesh is following the Spirit. "But this I say, Walk by the Spirit." Under this procedure the flesh, ignored, neglected, discredited, deposed, unable to maintain itself, is being put to death, crucified. "For they that are after the flesh mind the things of the flesh; but they that are after the Spirit the things of the Spirit." "If ye live after the flesh, ye must die; but if by the Spirit ye put to death the deeds of the body, ye shall live." "And they that are of Christ Jesus have crucified the flesh with the passions and the lusts thereof."

THE FLESH OR THE SPIRIT-WHICH?

Have you, or have you not, been turned away from your iniquities? Have you through the Spirit crucified the flesh with the passions and lusts thereof? Which is ruling in your life—the flesh or the Spirit? Let us apply an easy test. Now the works of the flesh are manifest. God gives us a bold list of them—posts them, as it were, and says: "These are the works of the flesh." And over against this list he exhibits the fruit of the Spirit. Here are the lists:

WORKS OF THE FLESH

Fornication
Uncleanness
Lasciviousness
Idolatry
Sorcery
Enmities Strife
Jealousies
Wraths Factions Divisions Parties
Envyings
Drunkenness
Revelings

FRUIT OF THE SPIRIT

Love Joy Peace Long-suffering Kindness Goodness Faithfulness Meekness Self-control

Go over the items in the first column, and ask yourself whether your conduct exhibits those works. If you must answer in the affirmative, the point is settled: the flesh is controlling you, and you have not been turned away from your iniquities. Then take the fruit of the Spirit: if it grows out of your life, the works of the flesh surely are not found there. For the two are mutually exclusive, contrary the one to the other. They cannot coexist; the tree is either good or bad. But if you have the works of the flesh, it may be either because you never came to Jesus at all, or, ignoring the claims of the indwelling Spirit, you have fulfilled the works of the flesh instead. In that case you are in the way of death, instead of joy and peace, and may well be troubled about your condition. "For the mind of the flesh is death; but the mind of the Spirit is life and peace." There is such a thing as grieving the Spirit and quenching the Spirit. It is said also that the Spirit of God will not strive with man forever.

"BY THE SPIRIT LET US ALSO WALK."

If you find that in your flesh dwelleth no good thing, you have made no new discovery; that has always been the case, and always will be the way of it. Do not, therefore, worry about that matter. If the promptings of the flesh rise up to distress you, look at your carnal nature uncompromisingly, but serenely, from the commanding height of the Spirit of God, as if to say: "I know you, and expect nothing better from such a quarter. You are capable of all these evil things." Paul did not say that in himself dwelt no good thing, but in his flesh. So do you consider that the flesh that prompts to evil is not your real self-not the new man, but the old, and must be put off. Waste no time, therefore, in trying to make the flesh good; it is by nature an unruly evil. Ignore it, pay no attention to its evil suggestions; disregard its claims and desires; crucify it, put it to death, slay utterly. Do not stoop to argue with it, to reckon with it, much less to make provisions to fulfill the lusts thereof. Bear the cross of crucifixion daily.

Lastly, walk by the Spirit. That is the end of the flesh's power over you. "But I say, Walk by the Spirit, and ye shall not fulfill the lust of the flesh." "If we live by the Spirit, by the Spirit let us also walk."

It is by accepting the means through which God teaches us, and recognizing his hand in the events by which he acts on the soul, that true virtue is attained.—T. T. Carter.

Every congregation ought to have a nice, convenient place for baptizing. It is a positive shame to have to go away over back of Sam Slikem's farm and baptize in a mudhole Increased activity would result in all the churches if the elders of the churches would see that every family of every congregation subscribe for and read the Gospel Advocate.

Mrs. B. L. Boyd, Jasper, Tenn.: "We do enjoy reading the Gospel Advocate so much each week, and always pass it on to others. We wish you success and that you may always stand firm for the old Jerusalem gospel."

Preachers should avoid the clergy idea. And while it is scriptural for a preacher to confine his labors to one congregation as long as he can do the most good that way, he should studiously avoid the sin of "pastorating."

B. C. Goodnasture, Atlanta, Ga., August 19, sends a new subscription to the Gospel Advocate and says: "I am in the third week of a tent meeting in Capitol View, with seven confessions and one from the Baptists to date."

Charles F. Hardin, Optario, Cal., August 10: "We came to this congregation on July 26 and found them at work, at peace, loving each other, and loving to work. We have had fourteen additions since we came—ten of them yesterday. This is indeed a great church."

A. B. Hunter, of New Philadelphia, Ohio, recently closed successful meetings with the Coble and Russell Creek congregations, in Hickman and Perry counties, respectively. Brother Gunter has built up a congregation in New Philadelphia and others in near-by towns.

B. D. Morehead and wife sailed for Japan, from San Francisco, Cal., last Tuesday. Brethren, send "once and again" to them. They are making a great sacrifice to preach the gospel. They should not lack for a penny! Frank R. Jones, Arcade, Nashville, Tenn., will send all funds to Brother and Sister Morehead.

S. H. Hall preached at Russell Street, this city, last Lord's day. There was one baptized and one by statement. Brother Hall closed a splendid meeting at Hillsboro, Tenn., August 11, with ten baptisms and one restoration. Oscar Parham and Ed. Bacigalupo were with Brother Hall, doing the baptizing and assisting otherwise.

A cartoonist in the Memphis Commercial Appeal had a splendid cartoon in last Friday's paper, in which Clarence Darrow says: "I have no faith." "I do not seek God because he cannot be found." "I don't 'know' anything; so that, for me, there's no such thing as truth." And yet he says: "But everybody else is an ignoramus."

Robert Lee Key, of Town Creek, Ala., and Miss Helen Smith, daughter of Brother and Sister J. S. Smith, of Mount Hope, Ala., were married on Wednesday, August 19, in the parlors of the Hermitage Hotel, this city, Van A. Bradley officiating. Brother Key is a promising young preacher. His wife is a fine young woman, and comes of one of the best families of Mount Hope.

C. Knowles, Huntsville, Ala., August 13: "We closed the meeting at Harvest to-day. Twenty were added to the church."

Hatton B. Gist, Kenedy, Texas, August 14: "I have just closed a great meeting at Duster, Texas, with eighteen conversions."

C. R. Nichol will be in a meeting with the New Hope congregation, one and one-half miles east of Readyville, Tenn., September 3-13.

J. M. Gainer, Winchester, Tenn., August 17: "The Wilmington meeting resulted in one addition to the congregation. Elam Derryberry did the best of work in leading the song service."

Alonzo Williams, Alamo, Tenn., August 17: "I closed a meeting at Macedonia, Tenn., July 14, with three additions. On August 6 I closed at Sharpe, Ky., with thirty-seven additions. I am now at Alamo in the second week of our meeting. Eight have been baptized."

- O. C. Lambert closed a six-days' meeting at Daniels Landing, Tenn., with forty-nine additions to the congregation—thirty-four by baptism. This makes more than one hundred additions in the last six weeks. Brother Lambert is now at Corinth, near Athens, Ala., with a fine beginning.
- E. A. Lowry, Graysville, Tenn., August 17: "We expect to begin a tent meeting at this place on September 6, and have only a dozen songbooks. If any congregation has some 'New Christian Hymns' they are not using, please send us some by parcel post and oblige. We are only twelve in number."

Though somewhat wearied by the four services daily at Nolanville, Brother Ezell gave us two splendid practical sermons, which were much appreciated by all Christians. We are glad he accepted the invitation to come our way, and his visit, though very brief, has won for him the admiration and friendship of the Denton congregation."
- M. D. Baumer. Carthage, Tenn., August 18: "On Lord's day after the morning service I went about a mile into the country and baptized a sick woman. We had to let her down into the water in a sheet. Next Lord's day I am to preach at Dixon Springs, where the Gospel Advocate has some warm friends. There have been some mighty fire articles in the Gospel Advocate against hobbyism and infidelity recently."

THAT QUESTION BROTHER LAPPIN ANSWERED.

BY F. B. SRYGLEY.

It will be remembered that Brother Poynter, of Albion, Neb., asked Brother Lappin what course he should pursue when an organ is used in a congregation where he meets to worship in connection with the singing of praise to God. Brother Poynter forestalled Brother Lappin with the statement that he had no prejudice against instrumental music, but that he would give his kingdom to know that it was right to use it. Lappin answered as though it were an established fact that the instrument is commanded in Christian worship and that Brother Poynter is an ignorant man, controlled by prejudice and a determination to have his own way in the face of the plain teaching of the New Testament. True, he did not say this, neither did he quote one passage of the Scriptures, but this was implied by the story he told about "Uncle Billy" and his gracious brethren who yielded something-no one knows whatfor the sake of poor "Uncle Billy," who was determined to have his own way about the little matter of worshiping God.

I told Brother Lappin if Brother Poynter was pleased with his answer, he was certainly easily pleased. It has turned out that Brother Poynter was not satisfied with the answer, and from present indications Brother Lappin is not quite pleased with his own answer. In the Christian Standard of recent date Brother Lappin allows a Brother Phelps to try to answer Poynter's question in the following communication:

Chillicothe, Mo., May 19, 1925.—D. J. Poynter.—Dear Brother: I notice a short letter from you in the Standard of May 16. The name sounds familiar. I think I read after you years ago in The Review. In those days I had the same perplexities you mention. It is, to say the least, a very unpleasant situation. But I think there is a safe

Just how to present it without making this letter too long is a problem. Like yourself, I was a devout follower of those godly men, Campbell, McGarvey, Frank-lin, Lipscomb, et al., and the only scripture that then bothered me was "singing and making melody," in Eph. 5: 19. That "and" bothered me. I had to give it the meaning of "thus" or "thereby," like the sectarians read "to" in Rom. 8: 16, but have "with" in their minds. But there stands the "and"—singing and doing something else. You know we are strong on making scripture interelse. You know we are strong on making scripture interpret scripture. Let us try it here. How is melody made? Read carefully Isa. 23: 16 and Amos 5: 23. I know the objections that may be raised to these references, but they tell how "melody" was made. Then scholars tell us that in the Greek there is a word that means only vocal music. In Eph. 5: 19 that word is translated "singing;" but "making melody" is from another Greek word meaning instrumental music. Contemporaries of Paul, as Josephus, Plutarch, et al., are so translated.

Publicly, as well as privately, I have often prayed: "Lord, open thou mine eyes that I may behold wondrous things out of thy law." I could not thus pray and keep my eyes closed to the above and many other stubborn facts which might be presented.

Can you listen to the radio, showing you that the air about us is literally filled with instrumental music, and atill say that the Lord never intended that this talent of man should be used in worshiping him?

I am fully aware of the difficulties one meets in making religious changes, but I believe my Lord approves this change; hence, I am happy in using this "liberty in Christ."

would be glad to go further into this subject privately with you if you so desire.
With best wishes and Christian love,

I am your brother, T. G. PHELPS.

Brother Phelps admits that the situation is perplexing, but he thinks there is a way out, and he gives his own experience about the way he got out of the perplexing situation. But Brother Phelps should remember that his experience can be worth nothing to Brother Poynter till he gets in the same condition. Does Brother Phelps mean that he worshiped with the organ before that little conjunction "and" convinced him that he was wrong in opposing the organ in worship? You see, Brother Phelps, that little "and" has not yet convinced Brother Poynter that the organ is right, as it did you. Now the question comes back on Brother Phelps, What should Brother Poynter do until he is convinced by the " and " that it is right to use a mechanical instrument in the worship? If I were to admit that he ought to do just what Phelps did, when he is convinced by the "and" that it is right to use the instrument, that would not prove that it is right for him to use it before he is convinced. Brother Poynter did not ask what course he should pursue if he thought it was right to use an instrument in worship, but what ought he to do believing it to be wrong to use it.

Brother Phelps, if you want to help Brother Lappin, I wish you would confine yourself to the issue. You talk about the way the "sectarians" do, and you do like nearly every other man I know who undertakes to defend errorthat is, change the issue when you see you cannot meet it as it is. I am unable to see why the brother should have been so "bothered" over the word "and," or why it was necessary to give it the meaning of "thus" or "thereby" and have "with" in the mind. If the brother will turn to the Revised Version, he will find it is "with" in the text. It reads in that version, "singing and making melody with your heart to the Lord." It is all right, brother, to read it and have "with" in your mind, for it is in the text. It looks like the brother was too anxious to get out of his perplexity to even study the question much or to care very much how he got out of the hole.

Why should Brother Phelps have been so perplexed over the situation, unless it was that he wanted to go with the current rather than stand by the law of God? I am glad that Brother Phelps had conscience enough to be perplexed, even if he did settle it so easily. But the question is, What ought Brother Poynter to do until that little conjunction "and" settles his conscience? I know some consciences are easy settled; but Poynter may not be able to see as Brother Phelps does, and in the event he does not, what should be his attitude toward the use of the organ in worship?

The brother asks, "How is melody made?" and then suggests that Brother Poynter read Isa. 23: 16 and Amos 5: 23. It is all right for the brother to read the entire Old Testament, but why run away from the text in hand? The brother is answered by his New Testament text. That text says that melody is made "with the heart." No wonder the brother wanted to get his querist in the Old Testament, for the text the brother had under consideration says that melody is made "with the heart," and it would be hard for any man to make a mechanical instrument out of the human heart. Where did Brother Phelps ever know a "sectarian" to do worse than thatthrow down a text which is against him and run off to another where he thinks he can get comfort?" Brother Poynter has never asked how the Jews under the law of Moses praised God, but what he should do when people introduce the organ into the Christian worship and he has to take part with them, when he believes it is wrong to do so. The brother evidently tries to dodge his own logic when he says: "I know the objections that may be raised to these references, but they tell how 'melody' was made." Yes, these passages tell how melody was made, but they do not tell how it is made in the Christian dispensation; but the text you left tells how it is made. It is made with the heart, and that fact precludes the mechanical instrument.

The brother says that the Greek word translated "making melody" "is from another Greek word meaning instrumental music." That cuts the limb off between him and the tree; for if the word means instrumental music, then no one can make melody without the instrument. Brother Phelps is required to obey that passage, but he cannot obey it without a mechanical instrument. He ought to carry some kind of an instrument around with him, for he is required to make melody, and he cannot do it "with the heart," as the New Testament says, for the word means instrumental music. The brother says "contemporaries of Paul, as Josephus, Plutarch, et al., are so translated." I cannot say about that, but I do know that there is not an English Bible that has ever been adopted by the people that has ever translated the word "to play upon an instrument." If it is plain that the word means to play upon an instrument, why did not the translators of the Authorized Version or the Revised Version so translate it? Is it possible that they did not know of Josephus, Plutarch, et al.?

As for the air being full of instrumental music, my idea is that you had better try to learn how to worship God from the New Testament instead of the air. One may be very happy in taking "liberties" with the Bible, but this fact does not make it right. I wish the brother had given us some of these stubborn facts to which his eyes have been closed. The ones he gives are neither stubborn nor facts.

"CONDITIONS FOR ENTERING THE KINGDOM." BY F. W. SMITH.

The Nashville Tennessean of August 10 carries a synopsis of a discourse by H. B. Trimble, on the subject, "Jesus Instructs Seekers." The speaker is quoted as saying:

I deny most emphatically that any one has a right to supplement the requirements that Jesus laid down as conditions of admission into his own kingdom.

No one who understands the sovereignty of Jesus Christ, his supreme authority as a Lawgiver, and has respect for the word of God, would in the slightest degree dissent from this statement by Mr. Trimble. They would, however, go further and say: "No one has the right to modify, take from, change, or alter in any way whatever, 'the requirements that Jesus laid down as conditions of admission into his own kingdom,'" They would also indorse the following from Mr. Trimble:

Either Jesus did or did not know how to tell people to get into the kingdom. It is very certain that he assumed the right to tell them, and that on several occasions he did actually give instructions to seekers on the subject. If these instructions are not to be regarded as sufficient, then Christianity breaks down on account of the inability of its Founder to interpret his own purpose.

Assuming that Jesus did know how to tell people the conditions of entering the kingdom, that method will be discovered in the New Testament, where his own words and the cases with which he dealt are recorded, or else humanity will forever be ignorant at this point, and the only logical position with regard to the Christian religion would be agnosticism. We simply would not know, and there positively would be no way to find out.

The "basis" for investigation on the subject was well laid by Mr. Trimble, but, unfortunately, he ignored the instruction Jesus gave on the subject and substituted one of his own. This will abundantly appear as we see more of Mr. Trimble's statements. Note this:

It is a significant fact that Jesus never gave a single word of mere theory when instructing people as to how they should enter the kingdom. That is to say, no theological belief in the commonly accepted meaning of a creed was ever required of any one by him. Those beliefs that have ever been the bone of contention among theologians were entirely ignored. Those forms of faith over which the conventions of the various denominations contend so wehemently held no interest for the great Teacher and Revealer from Galilee.

Revealer from Gaillee.

All of his instructions dealt directly and exclusively with life. Nicodemus came desiring to know about the kingdom. He had been impressed by the miracles that he had seen. Jesus abruptly turns from the field of miracle in the outer world to the significance of divine power in the heart by declaring the necessity of the new birth. The substance of this declaration is: "You must have a new fountain of motive, of life; you must have a new heart."

If Mr. Trimble means by "mere theory" that Jesus Christ did not lay down a certain "fact" to be believed and certain commands to be obeyed in order to enter his kingdom, he is very far from the "basis" he submitted on which to conduct his investigation—viz.: "That method will be discovered in the New Testament, where his own words and the cases with which he dealt are recorded." According to this, Jesus has a "method" by which people enter his kingdom; but it will be observed that Mr. Trimble does not "adhere" to that divine method in his teaching.

If he means by the term "creed" the uninspired documents that serve as bonds of union in the denominational world, he is eminently correct in saying that the great Teacher has nothing to do with them. But there is the divine creed, the foundation of the church of the living God, which Peter confessed, and which every one must believe and confess as a condition of entering the kingdom—namely, that Jesus is "the Christ, the Son of the living God." (Matt. 16: 16.) This confession involves the divine Sonship of Jesus, his miraculous conception and virgin birth. Mr. Trimble appears to be rather "radical" in his teachings, having invented the term "vitalist" to differentiate himself from the fundamentalists and modernists, and it would be of interest to have him declare his belief regarding the virgin birth.

He tells us that regarding Jesus as a teacher, "all of his instructions dealt directly and exclusively with life." This is rather "indefinite," and our friend completely lost sight of the "method" of entering the kingdom which he said could be found in the New Testament in the words of Jesus. Jesus gave no instructions regarding spiritual life without giving directions in plain words how to obtain it.

It was unfortunate for Mr. Trimble's audience, and also for the readers of his published discourse, that he should have introduced the interview between Nicodemus and Jesus on the subject of entering the kingdom without telling what Jesus said to that Jewish ruler. It would have been conforming to the "basis" Mr. Trimble had adopted for his investigation regarding "the requirements that Jesus laid down as conditions of admission into his own kingdom" to have given the exact words of Jesus to Nicodemus-viz.: "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except one be born of water and the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." (John 3: 5.) But for some reason he chose to give instead his own indefinite explanation: "You must have a new fountain of motive, of life; you must have a new heart."

Jesus told Nicodemus how he could "have a new fountain of motive, of life," and how to "have a new heart," but Mr. Trimble would not, on that occasion, let Jesus tell through him the audience to which he was discoursing. This, to my mind, is an exceedingly dangerous way to handle the word of God. It may be that Mr. Trimble was trying to escape "those forms of faith" against which he proclaimed; for had he quoted the language of Jesus to Nicodemus, he would have encountered "baptism" as a "form" expressing faith. While the rich young man did not ask about entering the kingdom of Christ on earth, but what to do to inherit eternal life, he was told to "keep the commandments," and they were designated. (Matt. 19: 16-19.)

A FLING AT FUNDAMENTALISTS.

In the light of previous utterances by Mr. Trimble, it was suspected that the discourse under review was intended in part, at least, for that class who believe in conforming to the words of the Bible in teaching and practice. The following seems to confirm that suspicion:

An exhaustive study of the Savior's dealing with seeking souls would reveal the fact that he invariably gave instructions that had to do with life only, not with theory, as have literalists of all ages.

Notwithstanding the above statement, God has in every age of the world required the strictest conformity to his law, and not an instance can be found where disobedience to the smallest command was condoned. Mr. Trimble knows nothing of the mind or will of God, save as it is expressed in the words of the Bible, and he should know that, according to the only correct construction of language, words must be taken in their literal sense unless the context forbids. "For if the word spoken through angels proved steadfast, and every transgression and disobedience received a just recompense of reward; how shall we escape, if we neglet so great a salvation? which having at the first been spoken through the Lord, was confirmed unto us by them that heard." (Heb. 2: 2, 3.)

Mr. Trimble further says:

At this point the question as to whether any one has the right to make requirements that Jesus did not make forces tiself upon us. As for my part, I most emphatically deny that any ore has the right to supplement the requirements that he laid down as conditions of admission into his own kingdom.

Is this an intimation or a charge that those whom he terms "literalists" make requirements that Jesus did not? If not, to what does Mr. Trimble refer by such language? Let us be frank, and ask: Does the demand that the Genesis account of man's creation, the divine inspiration of the Bible, and the virgin birth of Jesus constitute "requirements that Jesus did not make?" Are these things implied in Mr. Trimble's veiled language? Trimble is the pastor of a large congregation (McKendree, of Nashville), and his teaching has more or less influence, and because of this fact the public has the right to a clear-cut statement on these vital issues. He places the apostle Paul in contradictory attitudes-viz.: "He preached that faith in Christ alone was essential to salvation." While Paul taught that men were justified by faith, it was an obedient faith, and the obedience was to a "form" of teaching. (Rom. 6: 17, 18.)

A SUMMING UP.

Mr. Trimble sums up his conclusions as follows:

The literalists' religion is easy:

1. Because it requires no supreme sacrifice. They appear to think they have fulfilled their obligation to God by defending the faith against the enemy, which often means a strenuous attempt to prevent the birth of a new civilization which God himself has decreed. Tens of thousands of Christians have spent more time discussing Dayton in the last three months than they have spent in a lifetime the last three months than they have spent in a lifetime endeavoring to carry out the great commission to share the Christian spirit and life with the world.

2. The literalists' religion is easy because it requires no great venture of faith. Its ideal is the minute interpretation of words written on a page.

The vitalists' religion is comparatively difficult:

1. Because it requires great spiritual emphasis in a day of strong devotion to the material and lust for worldly power in both church and State.

2. Because it substitutes service for self, growing out of the acceptance of Christ's conditions of salvation.

3. Because a great venture of faith is required which gives the greatest of all spiritual blessings, the sense of personal fellowship with God and personal responsibility

The above, as the old saying goes, "let's the cat out of the wallet." We are on the eve of "the birth of a new civilization which God himself has decreed." This will, we suppose, be built upon the doctrine of the "vitalists." Such men as William Jennings Bryan wasted their time at Dayton, according to Mr. Trimble; and the "literalists," which means the fundamentalists, make no "supreme sacrifice" in contending for the word of God against infidel evolutionists, according to Mr. Trimble.

Again: "The literalists' religion is easy because it requires no great venture of faith." The reverse is exactly true, because the "literalists" (fundamentalists) believe what the word of God says, while the "modernists" believe only what suits them-that is, only such parts of the Bible as appeal to their reason.

The analysis of the "vitalists'" (?) religion, as given by Mr. Trimble, comprises three elements-"spiritual emphasis," service for others "growing out of the acceptance of Christ's conditions of salvation," and "a great venture of faith." If this were really true, does any one believe for a moment that the fundamentalists are no the equal of the "vitalists" (modernists) in these things!

Mr. Trimble may bring himself into the "limelight" by such teaching as he is quoted as giving to the public, but he may expect his utterances to be tested by the divise standard.

"WHERE SHALL I GO TO BE RIGHT?" BY M. C. KURFEES.

Under this question as a heading is found, in the Christian Standard of July 4, 1925, an article from the per of J. B. Briney concerning those "at sea ecclesiastically on account of the trouble existing among the disciples over the organ question." We republish his article in ful on page 819. The reader will please examine it carefully before reading this reply. We hope not only to make perfectly clear the real issue involved in the present case and to disentangle it from the irrelevant matters with which our aged brother complicates and confuses it, but also to point out and expose the remarkable fallacies found in his reasoning on the subject. Brother Briney's logic, as we shall see, proves the scripturalness of some things which he opposes in precisely the same way that it proves the scripturalness of instrumental music in divine worship. We shall consider his points in systematic order as follows:

1. He says: "That the use or nonuse of an organ should be made the standard by which it is to be decided whether a congregation is a church of Christ or not, is a marvel in view of the fact that there is no direct teaching in the New Testament on the subject." He was not called on to answer the question whether "the use or nonuse of an organ" determines "whether a congregation is a church of Christ or not." The question which was submitted to Brother Briney is simply no kin to the one which he answers. Here is the question that was propounded to him: In a case of two congregations, one using and the other not using instrumental music, he was called on by a brother to answer the question "which congregation to unite with to be sure that he is right." But it was, no doubt, much easier for Brother Briney, favoring instrumental music in the worship, to answer the question "whether a congregation is a church of Christ or not" that uses an organ, which the brother did not ask him, than it would have been to tell the brother, in that case, "which congregation to unite with to be sure that he is right."

2. Sometimes parallels and comparisons help us to see the truth. Let us suppose, for example, an Episcopal brother, in a case of two congregations, one using and the other not using incense in the worship of God, comes to the Bishop with the question, "Where shall I go to be The Bishop, favoring the use of incense as Brother Briney favors the use of instrumental music, makes Brother Briney's identical reply with the substitution of incense for instrumental music: "That the use or nonuse of " incense " should be made the standard by which it is to be decided whether a congregation is a church of Christ or not, is a marvel in view of the fact that there is no direct teaching in the New Testament on the subject." What would Brother Briney say? Yea, what could he say? The correct answer to this question is, he could say absolutely nothing. So far as refuting this point is concerned, he would be completely silenced.

3. The Episcopal Bishop then says to his inquiring brother: "The first step to be taken in the investigation of such a question as this is to ascertain what are the conditions of church membership as laid down in the sacred Scriptures," and he then proceeds, as does Brother Briney, to give the scriptures showing merely faith, repentance, and baptism to be such conditions, and then, substituting incense for the organ, he adds again in the identical language of Brother Briney: "These passages, besides many others that might be cited, make it perfectly manifest that faith, repentance, and baptism are the scriptural conditions of membership in a church of Christ, and it is nowhere hinted that any opinion with respect to the use or nonuse of " incense " is such a condition." Again we ask, what could Brother Briney say? And again the correct answer is, he could say absolutely nothing.

4. But the Episcopal Bishop, in further instruction to his inquiring brother, continues and says with Brother Briney: "From the foregoing scriptures and reasonings it follows that a congregation of baptized, penitent believers is a church of Christ whether using" incense "in its service or not, and remains such till it makes its opinion on that subject a test of fellowship and undertakes to legislate where the Lord, the head of the church, has not legislated." And here again what could Brother Briney say? Absolutely nothing.

5. But the Bishop continues with Brother Briney's language: "Coming now directly to the question of the use of" incense in the "service of the church, let us inquire as to the sphere to which this matter belongs. And a moment's reflection will convince sober reason that it does not belong to the sphere of faith, for faith rests upon plain and unequivocal statements of the word of God. It belongs to the domain of helps in carrying on the Master's work and worship. If the use of "incense "helps in this sphere, then it is proper and right to use" incense. The pious Episcopalian can join Brother Briney in quoting 1 Ccr. 12: 28 to support not only instrumental music, but incense also as among the "helps" that are permissible, and with equal emphasis can say: "Here God authorizes the use of helps; and if the use of "incense" helps in any way in serving the Lord, then the use of" incense "has divine authority, and he who opposes it fights against God." And here once more what could Brother Briney say? Absolutely nothing. If our aged brother should dare to say here that incense is not a "help" in the same way that instrumental music is, we reply that that has nothing whatever to do with the issue. Those who use incense in the worship of God claim that it "helps" in that worship: and no matter how it helps, they have the same right to decide on mere "helps" that Brother Briney has, and he is effectually and completely estopped from consistently saying a word against their contention.

6. Again, he says: "If the use of a chart helps a teacher in teaching, he may use a chart; and if the use of an instrument helps a singer in singing, he may use an instrument." This plausible statement contains a very pronounced and misleading fallacy. It assumes the very point in dispute-namely, that instrumental music is merely a "help" to singing. If that were true, it would be all right to have it. We may properly use in the work and worship of God anything and everything that is merely a "help" to that work or worship. But we cannot properly use any "help" which, however much it may help in any given direction, nevertheless violates, at the same time, divine authority. In the Jewish worship, both vocal and instrumental music were divinely commanded; but in Christian worship, only vocal worship is so commanded. In the Jewish worship, the worshiper was commanded to sing and play; in Christian worship, the worshiper is commanded to sing, but he is not commanded to play. Hence, he who plays in that worship does so without any such command and, therefore, practically arrays himself against divine authority, precisely as would the Jew who offered a bullock in sacrifice in a case where God commanded a sheep to be offered. If it be said that God has not commanded us not to play, we reply, neither did God command the Jew not to offer the bullock. He told him to offer a sheep, and if he offered some other animal, he was doing what he was not commanded to do; and in precisely the same way, since God commanded the Christian to sing, if he plays, he is doing what God has not commanded. If it be said that those who use instrumental music also sing, we reply that when they sing they are obeying God, but not when they play. If a Jew who was commanded to offer a sheep offered both a sheep and a bullock, in the former he would be obeying God, but not in the latter.

Let us take another Biblical illustration. We are commanded what viands to eat on the Lord's table—namely, the loaf and the cup. The Lord does not say we must not eat meat and vegetables on that table, but we know that we must not eat them there, because he has not commanded them. The whole Bible confirms the fact that, in the service of God, we must do what we are commanded to do, and not something else.

7. Brother Briney says: "Who can point out the difference, morally, between using a chart in teaching and using an instrument in singing?" That depends entirely on what the "instrument" is "in singing." If it does nothing but help to sing, it is all right; but if it violates some law of God, as the use of an instrument of music in this case does, then it is all wrong.

But let us inquire, how does the use of instrumental music in Christian worship violate the law of God? We answer, it does so by being the kind of music which God has not commanded. God has commanded vocal music, and only vocal music, in Christian worship. He has nowhere commanded instrumental music. In the case of animal sacrifice, God's servant always had to offer the kind of animal which God commanded and not some other kind. If God commanded a sheep, he must not bring a bullock; if God commanded a bullock, he must not bring a sheep. Hence, when Brother Briney asks, "Who can point out the difference, morally, between using a chart in teaching and using an instrument in singing?" we promptly reply that he who uses a chart in teaching is merely using a help which does what God commands, and does not, at the same time, do something which God does not command; whereas he who uses "an instrument in singing," which makes instrumental music, is not only using a help in doing what God commands, but is using a help which, at the same time, not only does what God does not command, but what, as we have seen, he has implicitly forbidden.

8. Brother Briney quotes Col. 3: 16, "Let the word of Christ dwell in you richly; in all wisdom teaching and admonishing one another with psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing with grace in your hearts unto God;" and he then says: "Let it be observed that the 'singing and making melody' to the Lord is to be done 'with your heart;' and if this excludes the use of a musical instrument, it excludes the use of the vocal cords, for they constitute a musical instrument that is not in the heart, but in the throat!" In all candor and seriousness, if Brother Briney really thinks, as his language about "the heart" and "the throat" seems to imply, that the heart here meant is the muscular organ which beats in the left side of the human body, then we respectfully decline to waste words with him on any such absurd contention.

9. Again, he says: "The Savior and his apostles attended the temple services during his lifetime, and the apostles continued to do so after his death as long as the temple stood. It is well known that musical instruments were used in that service, and there is not a note of disapproval to be found in the word of God. If it had been the divine intention that the use of instruments in singing the praises of God should be discontinued, he would have plainly and directly said so. But the question was never even broached by any inspired writer." Exactly so; and "it is" also "well known that" burning incense was "used in that service, and there is not a note of disapproval to be found in the word of God," and, therefore, according to Brother Briney's logic, it is all right for Christians to burn incense in the worship of God! If not, why not? "If it had been the divine intention that the use of" incense "should be discontinued, he would have plainly and directly said so. But the question was never even broached by any inspired writer," and, therefore, according to Brother Briney, the burning of incense in Christian worship is divinely authorized! Sure enough, "what proves too much proves nothing, and thus the objection to the use of" incense in the worship of God today "is thoroughly disposed of." If not, why not?

10. Finally, the reader can see that Brother Briney and I are making fine progress in proving that instrumental music and the burning of incense in the worship of God to-day are divinely authorized. The fact is now as clearly established as a mathematical demonstration that the two practices stand or fall together. The truth is, there is not one solitary intimation of divine authority for either one of them in the worship of God under Christ.

WHAT SHALL BE DONE WITH SOME PREACHERS? BY E. A. ELAM.

This has become to be a most important and serious question.

None can doubt that there are very many preachers who love God and the truth; are honest, upright, straightforward, and pure in heart; are unspotted from the world, touch not, taste not, handle not any unclean thing, avoid every form of evil, and seek the glory of God and the peace of all men; are pious and holy, and in self-sacrifice preach the gospel of Christ in its fullness and power, regardless of consequences.

While we rejoice that there have always been and will always be such preachers, it must be admitted that not a few preachers, together with many other church members, are to-day frauds and impostors of the first order. It is also admitted that such seem to be on the increase; if not, more have come to the surface in places. Truth demands this admission. Truth demands, too, the recognition of the fact that such preachers and church members are a menace to the purity and peace and spiritual development of the church.

BUT WHAT MUST THE PAPER DO?

Outside of conscientiously teaching the whole truth on all these and other subjects, what should this paper do? Almost every week reports come into its office from Maine to California and from Canada to Florida, as the expression goes, making complaints against preachers. Some are accused of not paying their debts; congregations in turn are accused of not paying the preacher so that he can pay his debts (and if a congregation does not pay the preacher, of course he cannot pay others, for it never occurs to him that he must be honest whether others are or not, or that there are dozens of honest ways in which he can make money in order to pay his debts, or that it is better not to be in debt-but let that pass for the present); other preachers are accused of engaging in questionable schemes in their efforts to make money as well as to preach, and the investor becomes the loser and sufferer; some, of teaching things contrary to the doctrine of Christ and of being factionists; and some, of being too familiar in places with some sister or of actually committing adultery.

A complimentary report of the work of some such preacher, interspersed with "fine audiences," "splendid sermons," "great interest," "magnificent" outlook for a "grand meeting," "the preacher and singer well cared for," etc., is sent in with the request for its publication. This report, in the kindness and innocence of the paper, has no sooner been published than here comes solemn protests from some other quarter of the globe against publishing notices of such a man. Now, what is the poor, but innocent, paper to do? The paper assumes that every man is innocent and honest until proved guilty. The paper cannot depend upon a statement per se from some brother at a distance and whom it knows not personally concerning the dishonesty and impurity of a preacher any more than it can depend upon a statement per se from another brother concerning the same preacher's innocence. When the paper receives two such contradictory statements, it knows there is a grievous wrong somewhere. In the first place, it knows the brother is either guilty or not guilty; it knows, furthermore, that, according to human nature, in prejudice and a partisan spirit the case may be exaggerated, or in preference it may be palliated or even denied. The ridiculousness of expecting a paper to publish every accusation made against a preacher by some, and every denial of said accusation by others, can be seen most readily. If there were no prejudice, no partiality, ne jealousy and envy, no favoritism and self-seeking; if there were no falsehood and if every man always told the naked, whole, unvarnished truth, every man's statement could be received on its face value and no statement would conflict with any other and the truth would always shine forth as clear as light. But, unfortunately, this is not always the case. Not many church members have grown in grace sufficiently not to be governed more or less by these human passions. They may be so blinded by sin that they do not realize that they are influenced by such clearing house to balance all accounts for and against preachers or other church members. It is not an ecclesiastical court to sit in judgment on every man's case and to pass sentence for or against him. Certainly it is not a garbage can into which all the trash and filth of unworthy preachers, ungodly men and women, and contentious congregations are to be poured. It is not a scavenger. It appreciates too highly its long list of spiritual-minded, pure-hearted, and Christlike readers to set before them such unwholesome, unedifying, unspiritual, and soul-corrupting food.

Let the paper be clear and clean, pure and holy, "strong and of good courage" in all "the good fight of the faith" and in contention "for the faith which was once for all delivered unto the saints;" and let it teach, therefore, in dignity and strength, all the will of God against dishonesty, fraud, corruption, unrighteousness, lying, unscriptural divorces, and adultery of every form and by whomsoever committed; but never let it become besmirched with the strife, bitterness, unholy contentions, and unrighteous divisions of corrupt preachers and sectarian congregations!

What is the teaching of the New Testament on the question of how to deal with false teachers and immoral preachers? This teaching is plain and to the point.

The first thing is not to rush into the religious papers with these troubles. This is most clearly not the scriptural way. Religious papers have no jurisdiction over anybody or anything religiously. Frequently rushing into the papers shows the wrong spirit and manifests disobedience to God. Religious papers, I repeat, must be ready always to teach the entire will of God, to the extent of their ability, on all subjects, without prejudice or partiality and in the love of the truth.

The church is the place in which to deal with false teachers and immoral members. The elders with their scriptural qualifications have been placed by the Lord as overseers of the church, including the teaching it is to receive, and they are held responsible by him for this teaching. (See Acts 20: 28-30, 32; 1 Tim. 5: 17, 18; 1 Pet. 5: 1-4; and other passages.) In studying and teaching the New Testament order of things—the church of the New Testament, with all its work and public service and daily life-if we do not teach the qualifications and work and responsibilities of elders, we prove recreant to our trust. Some talk much about "the restoration movement;" but what have they restored, or what are they trying to restore? If that is the church of the New Testament, why do they not teach the church of the New Testament and practice what they preach? The New Testament teaches that, "if unruly men, vain talkers and deceivers," "teaching things which they ought not, for filthy lucre's sake," and overthrowing "whole houses," should arise, the elders of the congregation in which such teaching is done should stop it. Their qualifications fit them for doing this. The elder must hold "to the faithful word which is according to the teaching [of the apostlesthat is, of Christl, that they may be able both to exhort [the church] in the sound [not untrue] doctrine [teaching]. and to convict the gainsayers." (Tit. 1: 9-11.) "factious man after a first and second admonition" is to be refused. (Tit. 3: 10: especially, Rom. 16: 17, 18.) The church at Ephesus tried some who called themselves apostles, when they were not, and found them false. (Rev. 2: 2.) But the church at Pergamum did not deal with the ones who held to the teaching of Balaam and the Nicolaitans as should have been done; and the church at Thyatira allowed that wicked woman, Jezebel, to declare herself a prophetess and to teach and to seduce the Lord's servants to commit fornication and sacrifice to idols. (Rev. 2: 14, 15, 18-23.)

These and other passages show that the congregation where the false teaching and other wrong has been done, and not some paper, must deal with the false teacher and wrongdoer otherwise, and is the place where all must be righted.

This having been done in the fear of God, in the scriptural way, for the scriptural purpose, and in the spirit of Christ, the fact can then be published scripturally and others warned scripturally against the wrongdoers. The New Testament faithfully warns against false teachers and immoral teachers, calling some by name, and the church to-day should do the same at the proper time, in the proper spirit, and in the proper way.

The great failure or wrong is, many elders and congregations either lack the scriptural information or the faith and courage, or both, to obey God in these particulars. Some are wise in their own conceits; they have their preconceived notions, or prejudices, or preferences, regarding elders and their work and responsibilities; or some, it seems, treat the whole work of the church as a political affair and institution of the world; and some seem to think the elders are to serve in the capacity as sheriffs or other civil officers. What God has to say in regard to all this, it appears, has no weight. All should admit, at least, that God is right and the Bible true. That which God says on the subject of elders and their work is plain and sufficient without comment from any. All can read that and follow it. Preachers or others who will not do that much, and all of that, cannot want their hearers to learn and to do the will of God.

But how should the different preachers accused truly or falsely of immoral conduct, although they may be strong preachers otherwise, be dealt with? It is a sin and shame that such reports are afloat. If they are not true, it is very sinful and slanderous to circulate them; if they are true, the fact that they are true is a sin and a reproach upon the church.

The Bible condemns the man who takes up a false report (Ex. 23: 1) and who goes up and down as a tale-bearer among people (Lev. 19: 19), and says that he who utters a slander is a fool. It is a great sin to repeat a false report.

On the other hand, the cause of Christ demands that the truth, the simple and plain truth, be told in regard to accusations of one's dishonesty, unrighteousness, unchastity, or other sins. How should such cases be treated? Just the reverse of the way in which many are treated. 2 Thess. 3: 6-15 states that the congregation—the whole congregation-one as much as another-must withdraw from every brother who walks disorderly. This is sufficiently plain. It being a fact that, after proper instruction and admonition and persuasion (Gal. 6: 1, 2), a brother walks disorderly, the congregation as such must withdraw from him. Again, as a rule, the congregation as such will not do this. The elders may decide this is scriptural and best, but the congregation is either indifferent or begins to take sides, and strife and division are engendered. Then some one wants to impose the whole affair upon the papers. It is contrary to the will of God to act thus. It is contrary to the will of God for members to try to hide or palliate the wrong of any one. But the place to deal with the wrongdoer is in the church.

In many instances the church is not properly informed or lacks convictions and courage, and is cowardly. The church—the whole church, the elders leading and teaching the rest—should proceed in faith and courage according to the will of God to encourage, and to admonish, and to warn, and to withdraw.

In 1 Cor. 5, Paul directs the Corinthians how to deal with the man who was guilty of such fornication as was not named among the Gentiles. Paul being present in spirit, sanctioning the act, the sinner was to be turned over to Satan to be buffeted for his sin, to be brought to repentance, and, if possible, to be saved finally. Having repented in course of time, he was to be received again into the fellowship of the church in Corinth. He had to have time to reflect upon his shame and conduct, to feel the force of the action of the church, to note the consequences of his sin, to show that he had repented and had recovered himself "out of the snare of the devil." This is the scriptural course, but all this cannot be done in a day.

But what is the paper to do? It is to teach this and all other truth without preference, prejudice, or partiality. Different reports, as stated, have come at different times of accusations against preachers of unbecoming conduct, with the request, unuttered or expressed, that they be published. As stated, also, this is in no way scriptural. But it is scriptural for the congregation where the wrong is said to have been committed (and it is the duty of this congregation to do so) to take up the case, investigate it thoroughly without prejudice or partiality, and to ascertain the facts in the case. If the preacher and others have acted imprudently only, let that fact be stated and the proper admonition and reproof be administered. If the preacher is guilty of adultery, let the congregation in which the sin was committed deal with the guilty parties according to the will of God in faith and courage and love of the truth, regardless of supposed consequences. Nothing must be covered up. This done, the preacher should then be reported to his home congregation, and its elders and members should have sufficient love for him, for God and the truth, and sufficient courage, to deal with him according to the direction of the New Testament. This done in earnest prayer and love for the church, such preachers would either be brought to repentance or their evil practices would be stopped. By steadfastly, zealously, courageously pursuing the scriptural course, the church can be rid of talebearers, false accusers, and slanderers, on the one hand, and of dishonest, unchaste, and otherwise corrupt preachers, on the other hand.

WORD AWAY FROM WASHINGTON.

BY T. B. LARIMORE.

The delightful, hospitable home of Brother A. M. Burton and family, of Nashville, Tenn., has been and is our home a few pleasant days—pleasant, not because the weather is so scorchingly hot, but delightfully pleasant despite the scorching weather.

First of all, the Burton family is a Christian household; not a large family—the father, the mother, three bright boys and four pretty girls—only nine in number; but all of them that are old enough are Christians, and they practice what the very best of us preach. Every one of them is worthy of membership in such a family, and precious little Jean, the baby—well, "of such is the kingdom of heaven."

Since leaving Washington I have preached only twice a week, but I have preached to enthusiastic throngs, and have met hosts of friends and loved ones, including several namesakes. I feel stronger and younger than I felt when I left the capital of our country about two weeks ago.

We went to see Sister Lipscomb, David Lipscomb's widow, yesterday. Of course she is not old, and I am one year, one month, one week, and one day younger than she is. That statement is strictly correct—not stretched to preserve its symmetry and oneness. Of course everybody loves Sister Lipscomb, and wishes her many years of useful life here. She says she enjoys "Word from Washington," and considers it interesting and instructive—which tendeth not to diminish my vanity. She may not like this installment, however, as there is something in it about her. Woman's modesty prevents the printing of much about her, notwithstanding she is sometimes mentioned even on the front page, where I think woman should be frequently mentioned—when good things are to be said.

Yes, I've heard of Eve, Jael, and Jezebel; I've heard of Sarah, Mary, and Martha, too.

We have visited many other friends in and around Nashville, whom we were glad to see and who were glad to see us again. We have spent two nights and a day in the delightful home of Brother and Sister Miller-" Paul" and "Fannie," we call them-who are very active and earnest in the cause of Christ and are worthy of it. Paul gladly helps with mind, muscle, and money; and Fannie is his able, efficient helpmeet in all good works. They are members of the Foster Street church of Christ, which church contemplates the construction of a commodious, convenient, strictly up-to-date meetinghouse in the very near future; and I hasten to say I have the promise of permission to preach the first sermon and conduct the first series of meetings in it. So, you see, I'm still planning for the future, notwithstanding, necessarily, I shall see but little of it.

The house of which I am speaking is to stand on a corner lot one hundred and fifty feet square, slightly elevated above its surroundings, in one of the best communities in the city. Fortunately or unfortunately, as the case my be, there are no rich people in the Foster Street Church, except the rich in good works; but those blessed brethren expect, the Lord willing, to build, furnish, and finish that house without begging a penny. Of course, if generous souls offer them assistance, they will gladly and gratefully accept it, but they will ask no aid but divine aid. Pagan people ago proclaimed and propagated the principle that "the gods help those who help themselves," and we believe Jehovah helps the faithful now.

The saints and faithful at Gallatin, twenty-eight miles north of Nashville, I believe it is, have sent a messenger to insist upon my preaching for them next Sunday, August 23, which I hope to do. If so, we will take my grand-daughters, Misses Mary George and Myra Larimore, to Gallatin, if we can—and I think we can. Of course they are good-looking girls, being akin to me!

Long years ago—about sixty years ago—I spent one Sunday in Gallatin and tried to preach—probably thought I did preach. There were some jolly girls, lively young women, in the family that claimed me that day. They have probably passed away—gone, but not forgotten. Granville Lipscomb and I made that trip to Gallatin together, and I think we walked it Saturday evening and night, from Franklin College—distance, about thirty-five miles. As we walked, we devoted the time diligently to the Greek verb. One of us would repeat it, and the other would listen; then the other would repeat it, and the one would listen; and thus we got it into our minds so that we hoped it would stay there.

CROSS WORD

EVERY Bible student recognizes the inspiration of this design. It is a puzzle of average difficulty. You will probably need your Bible at hand for some of the unfamiliar names. Do as much as you can without it, for you will remember the words you work out better than those you get too

How to Solve a Cross Word Puzzi

To work out this puzzle, the white spaces must be filled with letters forming words answering to the various horizontal and vertical definitions given below. The horizontal and vertical words are not the same, but each gives a clue to the other. The first letter of each word is indicated by a number which refers to the definitions listed below.

It is advisable to first fill in, in both directions, those words which you know to be correct. These will furnish hints to those words which you do not know or had merely guessed at. When the puzzle is solved correctly, the letters in the white spaces will spell words both horizontally and vertically. The black spaces are the blind spots of the puzzle and merely form the patternincidentally designating the ends and beginnings of the words contained in the puzzle.

From the Brethren

Los Angeles, Cal., August 14.—I preached for a small congregation in Orange, Cal., August 9. There are just thirteen members there.—B. D. Morehead.

Celina, Tenn., August 13.—I closed at Pine Branch, near Celina, July 9, at the water, with nine additions to the one body. I am now at Cedar Grove, near Center Point, Ky., with two additions to date.—C. A. Ashlock.

Lawrenceburg, Tenn., August 11.— I closed a meeting at Shiloh, in Alabama, yesterday morning, on the bank of a little stream, with fifty-one additions—eighteen baptized and thirty-three restored—sixteen the last night and fourteen at the water.— John F. Crews.

Rives, Tenn., August 15.—Brother J. Paul Slayden has just closed a wonderful meeting at this place. Nineteen became obedient to the word who had wandered came back to the fold. The church was greatly strengthened by this meeting.—W. L. Woody.

Altus Okla., August 13.—I recently held a meeting at Lawton, Okla., with eighteen additions. Brother Elvin Bost, of Fort Worth, Texas, led the song service. My last meeting was at Blair, Okla., with Brother Howard Carter, of Altus, song leader. The meeting resulted in twenty-three additions.—J. A. Cullum.

Dancy, Miss., August 12.—I closed at Rogers Spring, Tenn., Monday night, with twenty-nine baptized and two from the Baptists who claimed to have obeyed the Lord in baptism—thirty-one in all. Brother J. Roy Vaughn recently held a splendid meeting here at Dancy, with seventeen baptisms.—A. H. Smith,

Lake City, Fla., August 17.—We have a small congregation of Christians here, with a good and well-located house of worship. No hobby riders are wanted. The little body here is too sacred to be divided. Our supreme motive is to build up the cause of Christ in our city, our county, and our native State.—J. O. Barnes.

Camden, Tenn., August 9.—I closed a meeting at Beaver Dam to-day, with three additions. I will begin at Mount Moriah to-night. Brother Bertram Sarratt, closed at Cedar Grove last Lord's-day night. Seven were added to the Lord by baptism and three erring children came back and confessed their faults. Brother S. T. Nix, of Lebanon, Tenn., assisted Brother Sarrett for three days in this meeting, giving valuable aid in the song service and preaching the word.—R. B. and preaching the word.-R. Henry.

LET US SHOW THEM THE ROAD.

BY MRS. J. D. TAYLOR.

It is easy and a pleasure to direct people to certain places on this old earth, but most of us grow tonguetied and so afraid we'll hurt their feelings when we try to direct our fellow men on the road to heaven. Very emphatically we will say, "No, indeed, that road will not take you to Nashville; it will take you straight to Memphis;" but we do not say, when we see our brethren get entirely off the heavenly road, "That road leads straight to hell." We might hurt their feelings. Many, many times I say to myself: "You are a coward and do not in the least deserve the blessings and love your Savior has showered upon you.'

We know in our hearts that this heavenly road is the only worth-while road to travel; and, too, we know when we miss this road, going often in the bypaths of sin, we are in great danger of being lost. Not only will we be lost if we do not travel it ourselves, but we will be lost if we fail to warn and help our brethren. In the seventeenth and eighteenth verses of the third chapter of Ezekiel we will find this to be true.

We would not let little children go alone through a dark wood inhabited by robbers or vicious wild animals, but we do let our young brothers and sisters come into "the fold" and wander out again, drifting along through temptations and the most worldly pleasures, wandering along because no one shows them the right road, when only a word, or maybe an "I miss you from Sunday school," or an invitation to some pleasant place of amusement, would get them on the beautiful road again and interested in their life's journey. The invitation could be to a singing practice; almost all young folks love to sing. You could take them to visit with you; visit both sick and well, for lots of times even well folks get lonely. Flowers are one of most wonderful beauties. Teach the Sunday-school children to make flower gardens. When we watch flowers grow and bloom, we feel so near to God; and the children will feel that way, too, and it will strengthen them. The nearer we live to God, the stronger we are.

The greatest of all the stations on our heavenly road is Love, and it is not a "stopping station;" it is an eternal walk onward and upward to real life. The very best way to show our younger members this road is to travel it with them. Just as "children are mirrors of their parents," our younger brothers and sisters are the mirrors of the older ones of the congregation, and I know it is impossible to shower too much love upon the lambs of our flock. From experience I know it is best to overcome evil with good, overcome hate with love. The devil is not going very far along the road that is concreted with love; he would be uncomfortable.

My mother used to say (and I know it is true) that the best way to be happy with a satisfied happiness is to keep busy doing worthwhile things. The path of duty is the only worth-while path. Our precious young folks have worlds full of stored-up energy; and if we older ones are not bright enough and energetic enough to keep them busy and interested in worth-while work, their energy will burst forth into badness that will break our hearts and send their souls and ours to hell, for we are our "brother's keeper."

No matter how rich or famous we become, we are not a success without love; so let us make, with God's help, our road of life, for both ourselves and those around us, a joyful road, brilliantly lighted with the most beautiful of all love, the love of God, and keep our precious young members so busy along the way that they will never care to go into the sin road; and if they do stumble and fall (when we have neglected to keep them busy), let us help them up and on again in a spirit of love, like Jesus would, and like we helped our little children up when they used to fall while learning to walk. You know they stood at our knees a long time, then by a chair very close to us; then we took them by the hand and let them take a few steps every day until their legs grew strong; then they took a step or two all alone, but we were right there to hold them up just before they fell. When they learned to walk alone, we showed them the best places to walk. If we took this much pains with our young members, asking God to help us all the way, I am sure we all would be purer and better and happier and stronger to stand life's trials and there would be many more souls in heaven.

Here is another man who never makes a mistake—the man who never does anything; but this is one of the greatest mistakes.—Exchange.

AN INTERESTING LETTER.

Douglas, Arizona, August 3 .- I recently visited my aged father, J. W. Wescoat, of Nursery, Texas, and sisters. Having passed his ninetieth birthday and being unable to write, he requested me to write for him a few lines, so that his old friends in Tennessee might learn of his whereabouts and of his condition in his declining days. He suffered an attack of erysipelas in the feet over five years ago, which drew and twisted his feet until he became unable to walk. He suffered untold agony for months, and was left an invalid and in such a condition that he requires constant care. But through all these years of suffering he has kept his soul fed upon the blessed promises contained in God's holy Word.

My father was born and reared in Weakley County, Tenn. It is interesting to hear him tell how he became a member of the church of Christ, as he grew up to be a man under a different faith. But comparing the doctrines of the different churches with the teachings of the blessed Book, he about decided that all were wrong, and if he wished to gain the favor of God he must obey the gospel. This he did, and at once he was called a "Campbellite." But having never heard one of those fellows preach, he satisfied himself by wearing the name found in the Guidebook-"Christian" -and fought a hard fight alone in the little town of Palmersville, Tenn., finally winning out, organizing a church, building a house of worship, and living many years to see souls turn from darkness unto the light of God's dear Son. He was an elder in the church at Palmersville for years. He moved to Rogers, Ark., and the church there wanted him as an elder. A few years later he moved to Plainview, Texas, where, too, he was an elder until he had to give up the work he loved so much to do, on account of this sickness. The fact that he cannot meet with brethren and sisters around the table on Lord's days, he says, takes the joy out of life. He asks the prayers of his friends and brethren in his declining days. He wishes to praise the Gospel Advocate for the wonderful work it has done and is doing in contending for "the faith which was once for all delivered unto the saints." He has read the Advocate for many years, and cannot remember when his home was without it. And knowing that, at most, his stay here now is short, he asks that I say good-by to the editors and contributors of the Advocate, with the wish that the paper may continue to grow, ever holding up the banner of Prince Emmanuel until time shall be no more. While he is too feeble to write, he will be glad to hear from any of his friends. Very truly,

J. R. WESCOAT.

In editorial policy it stands for individual consecration, against ecclesiastic organizations, as the scriptural and best method of doing missionary work. It recognizes no organization but the church of Christ as a scriptural medium of converting the world and developing the Christian character.

It opposes all human creeds and ecclesiastic councils, and pleads for the right of each individual to study the Scriptures for himself and formulate his own faith, without dictation or hindrance from churchly dignitaries. It opposes all clerical assumption of official authority in the church, and stands for the scriptural doctrine that each Christian has an office to fill, a work to perform—that all are kings and priests unto God.

It stoutly advocates the doctrine of missions, and argues unceasingly that every Christian is a divinely commissioned missionary and every church is a scripturally organized missionary society. The mission of every Christian and the design of every church is to preach the gospel to all the world.

It believes in, and stoutly advocates, congregational singing, as opposed to select choirs and instrumental performances, as the best and most soul-stirring church music. Let all the people sing. #### ANDERSON.

Beulah Duncan Anderson, wife of Brother John Anderson, departed this Brother John Anderson, departed this life, at her home in Rector, Ark., on June 30, 1925, aged fifty-three years. The large concourse of relatives and friends present at her funeral bore mute testimony to the place she held in our hearts. Her friends never realized how much they loved her till she had left our midst. Her suffering was intense during the few days of her last illness, but she is now where pain and sorrow are not known. Her husband and children are not as those husband and children are not as those who have no hope. Her life was a shining example of Christian piety. Her husband, four sons, and two daughters are Christians. They have only to continue in the right to be only to continue in the right to be able to meet their beloved wife and mother where all is happiness and joy.

A FRIEND.

COLEMAN.

Brother John Coleman, of the church of Christ, of Dunmor, Ky., was called upon to exchange worlds on July 9, 1925. Brother Coleman was born on April 27, 1865. He was married to Drucilla Martin in 1898, and to this union seven children were born. He leaves behind, to mourn their loss, a wife, mother, two broththeir loss, a wire, mother, two brothers, two sisters, six children, and a host of others. He obeyed the gospel in 1912, under the preaching of Brother John Hines, and lived a consistent Christian until his death. Brother Coleman was very fond of the religious papers, especially the Gospel Advocate. He was always present at the worship on Lord's day as long as health permitted, and I never heard him refuse to do anything that he was called upon to determine the determined the determined to determine the determined the determine thing that he was called upon to do.

Brother Roy C. Hyde, of Drakesboro, Ky., conducted the funeral services in the presence of a large crowd.

GAITHER.

Sister Sarah Gaither was born on August 27, 1860, and died on April 19, 1925. She leaves two daughters, Mrs. Charles White, of Ethridge, Tenn., and Mrs. Hale Lyle, of Memphis, Tenn.; also one sister, Mrs. C. M. Joiner, of Ardmore, Okla. She obeyed the gospel at the age of fourteen years and thus became a faithful member of the church of Christ. The funeral and burial were at the Bumpass graveyard, services being Bumpass graveyard, services being conducted by the writer. Sister Gaither was one among the best of Christian women. She suffered much in this life, but, being under the benign influence of the benign in the beni this life, but, being under the benign influence of that love that can suffer long and be kind, she never lost her patience. She was always cheerful and kind to everybody. No mother ever had greater love for her children. Our counsel to the dear children.

dren is that they follow mother as she followed Christ. Live for Christ and his cause as mother lived, and all will be well in the rest that remains sweet unto the people of God.
Thomas C. King.

STEWART.

Brother W. H. Stewart, of Lawrenceburg, Tenn., died at his late home, April 24, 1925, at the age of seventy-seven years and eight months. He leaves, to mourn his death, his wife; four sons—W. P. and C. L. Stewart, of Chicago, Ill.; Philip and Marshall, of Lawrenceburg, Tenn.; and five grandchildren. He was a member of the church of Christ from early life. Brother Stewart moved with his family from Indiana to Lawwith his family from Indiana to Lawrence County near forty years ago. It is said by his neighbors that a better neighbor, friend, and citizen would be hard to find. Brother Stewart pos-sessed some of the most prominent traits of a true Christian. First, that traits of a true Christian. First, that of humility. He was humble in mind. He occupied a very humble place in the walks of life. He had the spirit of sympathy; he wept with them that wept. He was long-suffering; and while he suffered long and much, still he was kind. "Love suffereth long, and is kind." He was tenderly nursed with tender hands and loving hearts. Thomas C. King.

CURRENT COMMENT

By JAMES A. ALLEN

Sister J. C. McQuiddy calls our attention to the following editorial, under the heading, "The House United," in a recent issue of the Saturday Evening Post:

Church union is an accomplished fact in Canada. The Methodist, Presbyterian, and Congregational denominations have been merged into the United Church of Canada. The membership of the amalgamated body will exceed two and and a half million, nearly a third of the total population of the Dominion.

The three churches have been moving toward union for more than twenty-five years. The impelling motive, without a doubt, has been the feeling that union is the very essence of the Christian faith and that the perpetuation of denominational differences was not in accordance with the practices of Christian principles. Back of that, however, were considerations of a pressingly practical nature. There was overlapping in the foreign-mission field and much duplication of effort in other directions. Small towns and villages had sometimes two or even three denominational churches where one would have sufficed. One result of this multiplication of impoverished little churches was a starvation scale of remuneration for the ministers of rural congregations. Granted that the theological differences could be settled, there were the soundest of reasons for the union of the three churches, but it took many years of controversy and campaigning to reconcile the denominationalists to the loss of their cherished identities. The Methodists, naturally enough, hesitated to abandon their heritage as the bearers of the banner of Wesleyan reform. Nevertheless, the Methodist Church of Canada reached an accord on the subject as early as 1911, when the Congregational Church also swung into line. The Presbyterians found it harder to make up their minds. The unyielding faith of the Covenanters was theirs, and it was not until 1923 that a decision in favor of union could be reached. The vote in the Presbyterian General Assembly was four hundred and twenty-six for union and one hundred and twenty-nine against. Most of the antis have decided since not to go into the United Church camp, and a small Presbyterian Association will remain to follow without deviation or compromise the teachings of John Knox.

The theory of union is that one church can be broad enough to harbor within itself many divergences of belief on minor points. The successful culmination of the movement in Canada should have a marked effect on church organization the world over. It unquestionably will stimulate the tendencies toward union which have existed in other Protestant countries, and the results of the "high adventure," as the Canadian leaders term it, will be watched with the keenest interest.

The merger of the majorities of "the Methodist, Presbyterian, and Congregational denominations" of Canada "into the United Church of Canada" could not be called Christian union. The merger was not formed on the basis that constitutes the grounds upon which all Christians can unite, nor was the politics employed in bringing it about the sort of procedure that leads to Christian union.

If, really, the editor of the Post is correct in saying that "the impelling motive, without a doubt, has been the feeling that union is the very essence of the Christian faith and that the perpetuation of denominational differences was not in accordance with the practices of Christian principles," then "the impelling motive" was commendable and was worthy of a better issue than the one to which it came. While this merger of three denominations into one is not Christian union, at the same time it is an encouraging indication when great denominations begin to realize the sin of disunion and division.

But a sinister aspect is given to the aforesaid merger by the mere mention of the fact that, back of this "impelling motive," there "were considerations of a pressingly practical nature." Through the merger of the three denominations matters were so adjusted that, for instance, in small towns where there had fermerly been "two or even three denominational churches" with "a starvation scale of remuneration for the ministers," instead of three churches paying three pastors a "starvation" price, the consolidated church fattens the salary of one pastor. As "it took many years of controversy and campaigning to reconcile the denominationalists to the loss of their cherished identities," we can but infer that at least some part of the "controverting and campaigning" was done by the pastors who were to profit by the arrangement.

But the whole thing is based on a mistaken idea of what constitutes Christian union. The oneness for which the Savior prayed cannot be brought about by "politicking" and campaigning carried on by men who are to profit financially by a majority vote. It is an absurdity in fact and a travesty on both language and logic to denominate anything as "the theory of union" that is based on the assumption "that one church can be broad enough to harbor within itself many divergences of belief on minor points." "Divergences of belief" on any "points," whether they are major or minor, is impossible in a unity of faith. And who is to settle the "divergences of belief" in what constitutes "minor points?" Generally things that "campaigners" consider to be "minor" are considered to be very major by those who are actuated less by the spirit of the world.

The main thing in bringing about Christian union is for men and women to become united to God. All who become united to God, by the same act become united to one another. The same thing that unites a man to God unites him to all of God's children. God forbids division and disunion among his children. "Now I beseech you, brethren, through the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye all speak the same thing, and that there be no divisions among you; but that ye be perfected together in the same mind and in the same judgment." (1 Cor. 1: 10.)

There is the width of the heavens between the unity that exists in the family of God and the consolidations, amalgamations, and mergers to establish which interested parties plan and conduct campaigns for the purpose of polling a majority vote. The United Church of Canada is not united, but is a polyglot of discordant elements that has but added to, instead of decreased from, the baneful divisions of the religious world.

THE ISHIGURO MISSION.

BY S. H. HALL.

In connection with what was said in the Gospel Advocate last week in behalf of the great work Brother and Sister Ishiguro are doing for the Japanese people in Los Angeles, Cal., I am giving our readers a letter recently received from Sister Hettie Lee Ewing. She is one of our best Texas Christian girls, and her financial backing in this work is being sponsored by our good brother, C. W. Sewell, of Corpus Christi, Texas, with other Texas friends. She is studying the Japanese language and customs under Brother and Sister Ishiguro with the idea of going on to Japan sometime next year. In her letter, which is here given in part, she says:

Dear Brother Hall: I am in receipt of your check and letter, both of which I appreciate very much. I will write and thank Sister Brooks for the help right away.

You have asked me to write you a newsy letter about the mission work here.

For one, I have been proud of the fact that I was a member of the one true body of Christ, but not until the last year or two have I come to realize that I was trying last year or two have I come to realize that I was trying to enjoy the blessings of being in that one body without doing all of God's will. I have come to realize that during the years that I have been a member of the church of Christ I have been shirking my part of the great commission, "Go ye, ... and teach all nations;" that it is there in the word of God just as surely as is "repent, and be baptized," and that it is there now just as surely as it was when first spoken; that it means me just as surely as it meant Peter; that it means red men, white men, black men, and all others, "for there is no respect of persons with God."

The church of Christ has begun a work in Los Angeles

The church of Christ has begun a work in Los Angeles which is doing its part in fulfilling the commission. It is a work to be proud of, because it has something here that which is doing its part in fulfilling the commission. It is a work to be proud of, because it has something here that is not to be found in very many places. It has a growing congregation among the colored people, with a resident preacher, Brother Cassius, who is a splendid worker. It also has a growing congregation among the Japanese people, with a resident preacher, Brother H. Ishiguro, who is another splendid worker. Even here, however, our efforts to spread the gospel are meager compared with what we are able to do and with what is our duty. God's children are asleep on the job. They are not thinking, and they are losing precious time and precious souls by not uniting and doing their best, as they would do if it were a worldly project that would give them worldly gain.

Brother Cassius is doing a wonderful work, with a very poor support for a living. However, the colored brethren have been able to build a good house to worship in; and we all know what a great help it is to have a good, pleasant meeting place. Brother Ishiguro is doing such a great work among his people, while he has not the room, nor the kind of room that he needs, in his home for his work. The Sunday-school classes are growing. We have about fifty enrolled at present, and hope to have many more when cool weather sets in. He has four Sunday-school teachers now, whereas he has had only three heretofore. His rooms are too crowded already. What will they be when all get to work and carry out their plans to enlarge the enrollment? His daily classes are scattered; and although he has a car now and can reach more people, still he needs a building to invite them to for worship and study. Near his home there is an expensive building going up for the Methodist Japanese mission work. It is costing something like forty thousand dollars. And there are other good buildings of denominations near him which are something for those denominations to be And there are other good buildings of denominations near him which are something for those denominations near proud of. Why can't we do something like this and reach many more than we can ever reach under the present plan of work?

I have been in Los Angeles nearly two months, studying the Japanese language, customs, and character. I enjoy the work more each day, and I see the great opportunity each day getting larger and more promising. It isn't necessary for all to teach at home, and it isn't necessary for all our efforts to be put on one people, but it is necessary for all to teach everywhere and to everybody.

The mission field is open here just the same as in Japan or elsewhere, but doing it here does not relieve us of our duty over there. I feel that there are others who could auty over there. I feel that there are others who could come here and work, where they will still be in their homeland and where the climate is pleasant and the Christian fellowship is great, while they could not go to a foreign land. I can go, if God is willing, and so for this reason I am planning to go either in the spring or late in the summer of 1926. I do not want to leave my place here vacant, though. I want some one to be ready to come and work with Brother Ishieuro. vacant, though. I want some and work with Brother Ishiguro.

Your sister in Christ

HETTIE LEE EWING.

I am glad to state that one of the sisters of the Central church of Christ in Los Angeles, Sister Belle Ragsdale, has decided to take up the study of the Japanese language with Sister Ewing and prepare herself for more effective work in this mission. This is what she should do. She lives there, and can live at home with her people and help in this work. May others follow this splendid example.

But from reading Sister Ewing's letter, you are again impressed with the sore need of a permanent home for this work. We must have it. It will not take forty thousand dollars, the amount the Methodists are putting into their building. Again I say that I think twelve thousand dollars will put this over for us, so far as our needs will be for a number of years. Making this not only a mission, but a school in which those who contemplate going to Japan are to get the needed preparation, may in time demand more buildings. But we do now need a small chapel, with five or six recitation rooms annexed and with living quarters for Brother and Sister Ishiguro, all connected. This will increase their opportunities and powers a hundredfold and save the fifty dollars monthly rent we are now paying.

Who will help us raise this amount? How many will give one thousand dollars each? Who will give five hundred dollars, two hundred and fifty, or one hundred dollars, to this end? As stated before, I want no money just now. Just drop me a card, giving me your name and address and the amount we may call upon you to give in cash. If you want to pledge so much to be paid monthly, that is all right. The brethren are looking into the lot situation, and as soon as they have their hands on the best bargain we want to close the trade. You will be notified in due time to whom to send your checks. Address me at 820 Woodland Street, Nashville, Tenn.

OLD HICKORY CHURCH OF CHRIST. BY T. J. WARDEN.

A wonderful opportunity for Christian service has developed for us recently, an opportunity of which we are eager to take full advantage. A few years ago we started a mission at Old Hickory, about sixteen miles from Nashville, the site of a former powder-mill community used by the government during the war. Although during the past few years the community has for the most part been inactive commercially, the mission has been a source of great joy and inspiration to the people remaining in that section. Many fine meetings have been held and the attendance and spirit have been splendid.

Within the past year the Du Pont interests have been actively engaged in building there a great silk mill, which, when completed, will house in the community upward of twenty thousand people. Some units are now running, and others are being added as rapidly as possible. Here indeed is a great field for God's work. When the Du Pont plans became definite, we called upon them, requesting that they set aside a suitable plot of ground so that we might erect a church building. We found that they were willing to allot ground for only one church, the one which by the demand of the people of the community seemed most to be desired.

Their letter explaining their stand in the matter and the conditions under which our church would be acceptable to them is reproduced herewith:

Du Pont Rayon Company (Incorporated), Old Hickory, Davidson County, Tenn., May 27, 1925.—Mr. A. A. Crawford, Old Hickory, Tenn.—Dear Sir: On April 23 you and Mr. A. M. Wilkes called at this office relative to a possibility of obtaining ground in our community upon which to build a church to build a church.

We stand perfectly willing to set aside ground to be used for church purposes only, if there is a demand for this church. At the present time we could not set aside ground for three or more churches, but are willing to set aside enough ground to take care of one church in the beginning, and later on are willing to take care of more churches if necessary. Our policy in this respect is briefly as follows:

We would set aside this ground for a period of years for a nominal figure of one dollar, the ground to be used for church purposes only, and would revert back to the company at any time it was not used for church purposes. We would expect that the organization interested would submit to us plans for approval of their building, and also very definite plans of how they propose to finance the building.

The first church to be built will be built by the organization which is representative of the largest number of people in the community, and which also has the greatest financial strength, or is connected in such a way with financial interests that the completion of their project is assured. Since we cannot at this time set aside three or four tracts for churches, it is, I believe, obvious that we must be sure that a project to be a church once started is sure of completion, at least as far as the financing of the building is concerned.

If you want more definite information, I should be Very truly yours, Howard J. White, pleased to supply it. General Superintendent.

We are very happy to say that since this letter was received our church has been the one selected, and plans have been drawn up for a church building that will fulfill the needs of the community and the conditions of the Du Pont interests.

The building will cost about eight thousand dollars. The members of the mission church, sixty-two in number, have succeeded in raising two thousand dollars, and good friends and brethren in Nashville and other near-by communities have willingly subscribed more than forty-five hundred dollars. So that we are now prepared to begin building, but lack about fifteen hundred dollars for com-

We are facing such an unusual privilege in bringing the Word thus to a whole community that we feel sure this comparatively small amount remaining will be readily subscribed by our friends in the faith.

Brother Warden and the disciples at the Powder Plant were very fortunate in having the Du Pont people select the church of Christ as the one to be given the lot upon which to build. Brother Warden and those with him have assured the Du Ponts that they would be able to build. As Brother Warden says, they lack about fifteen hundred dollars of being able to finish building.

Old Hickory will be a town of about twenty thousand people, and a building there would be a great help in carrying on the work. Any persons who are interested may address T. J. Warden, care of the Williams Printing Company, Nashville, Tenn. J. A. A.

ORPHAN AND DEPENDENT CHILDREN.

BY J. W. FRY,

Service to humanity deserves the sincere consideration and coöperation of every Christian, and each should bear in mind the question to self: What am I doing to bless the lives of others? There are many ways and means by which every Christian can do good by following in the footsteps of Jesus, who went about doing good. Orphan, dependent, and neglected children are brought into the world by no fault of their own, and forced to grow up as best they can without the proper nourishment and under bad influences, causing them to fall short of developing into good citizens.

The Tennessee Orphan Home is doing its best to help all the children it can with its present resources. more cooperation and fellowship, more children will be helped. Efforts are made to find Christian family homes for children who are inmates of the Tennessee Orphan Home, which is a home for orphan, dependent, and neglected children; so, when they do not fit in the family home in which they have been placed, they are brought back to the Tennessee Orphan Home, and later tried in other homes until a congenial home is found. So those taking children from the Tennessee Orphan Home run no risk of getting a permanent burden placed upon them. We trust more Christians will feel like a good brother and wife who visited our Home recently and stated that they had five children of their own and aimed to take one from this Home, as they believed they would be able to bring up and develop another child. If such a desire to help others obtained among all Christians, there would be very little need of an orphan home other than to admit children and prepare them to go into family homes.

The work of the Tennessee Orphan Home was commended in a letter from Dr. R. R. Reeder, who for thirty years has been active in directing the welfare work of caring for children in orphan institutions, in which he says: "I should think from the description of the work of your institution it is rendering a great and efficient service to dependent children. Your home is certainly not an institutionalized place, and the stress you put upon family placing clearly shows an up-to-date point of view. These are my conclusions after many years of service in behalf of dependent children."

Rearing children is a great God-given work, in which all Christians should take an active part, either by taking into their homes neglected children or helping those engaged in that work. Communities and congregations can frequently help a widowed mother keep her children together and develop them into useful men and women. Where children have a good, Christian mother, physically able to work and guide her children, no institution can ever take the place of such a home. Those helping such a mother and children will be rewarded in this life and that which is to come. Where the mother is not qualified to develop her children, they can be placed in the Tennessee Orphan Home until good family homes can be found for them, and supervision and oversight of the children will be given in order that they may have the advantages of a common-school education, with proper food and clothing, so they may grow into useful citizens.

OUR MESSAGES.

James C. Dixon, Elkmont, Ala., August 28: "E. O. Coffman, of Lawrenceburg, Tenn., recently closed a good meeting at this place with one addition. O. C. Lambert, of Waverly, Tenn., closed vesterday morning at Corinth Church, near Athens, with forty-four additions. Twenty-one came into the church at the last two services. He began last night at Ephesus, near Athens. From there he will go to Athens to begin on the first Sunday in September. M. A. Creel, of Cullman, Ala., closed last Saturday at Cartwright, near Athens, with nine additions. He is now in a good meeting at Pettusville, near here, with four additions to date."

J. B. Austin, Scott's Hill, Tenn., August 15: "John Taylor has just closed at this place with twelve additions—eleven men, six of whom are heads of families. I am to work in the Adamsville high school the coming year. Send the Gospel Advocate to me at that address."

Horace W. Busby, Justin, Texas, August 23: "I am now at this place in a good meeting, with large crowds attending. One thousand or more present last night. This is my sixteenth meeting since the first of January, with about three hundred and twenty-five baptisms. From Justin I go to Glenwood, Fort Worth."

R. L. Colley, Rector, Ark., August 26: "I have just closed a meeting at Pleasant Valley, near Greenway, Ark., with nineteen baptized and six restored. I am now in a mission meeting about four miles east of Rector, with five baptisms to date. I will go from here to Bethel Springs, Tenn., where I will meet N. V. Parker (Primitive Baptist) in a four-days' debate."

Charles Taylor, Paducah, Ky., August 25: "Since last report I have held meetings at the following places: Melber, Ky., with fourteen baptisms; Paducah, Ky., four baptisms, four by membership; Calvert City, Ky., eight baptisms; Christiana, Tenn., two baptisms; Rock Hill Church, near Murfreesboro, Tenn., four baptisms. I go next to Gilbertsville, Ky. Success to the Gospel Advocate."

Thomas J. Wagner, Rockwood, Tenn., August 27: "The tent meeting at Spring City closed last night, with nine members found who showed a willingness to bind themselves together to start a congregation worshiping as it is written." Besides these, about thirty-five made the good confession, most of whom were baptized, a few claiming to have had scriptural baptism. Brother Paisley did some able preaching."

John B. Hardeman, Franklin, Tenn., August 26: "The Jones Chapel meeting closed last night. I am to return home (Sedalia, Ky.) to begin my eighth session of school. During the past two months I have held meetings at the following places: Farmington, Ky., with four added; Providence, Kv., eleven baptisms; Antioch, near Murray, Ky., eight additions; Green Plains, near Hazel, Ky., sixteen baptisms; Jones Chapel, four additions."

C. R. Nichol to C. H. Woodroof: "It is my wish to serve you at any time it is within my power, and you should feel no hesitancy in calling on me for anything I am able to give. It is, my boy, for the cause of Christ we both labor, and in that work my life is given. Then use me as you can. Not many years and I will have passed on to my reward; and if I can leave some of the things I have learned in your hands to continue the work, I shall be glad."

W. S. Long, Detroit, Mich., August 20: "Married, at the home of the bride's uncle, 5456 Avery Avenue, on the evening of August 18, Mr. Walter Schofield to Miss Elva Thompson. Both are faithful members of the Vinewood church of Christ. Brethren who desire to direct their friends to the Vinewood Church in Detroit may tell them to take the Baker car and come to the corner of Vinewood and Dix Avenues, or they may call Lafayette 6316-W."

E. N. Glenn, San Diego, Cal., August 24: "I heard F. B. Srygley vesterday at the Sichel Street Church, in Los Angeles. The house was filled to capacity. There was one baptism at the morning service. We enjoyed lunch and the afternoon with the church people in the park. Brother Fugua is planning to be with us at our all-day meeting in San Diego on September 6, and will preach a few nights. The church is located at Herbert and University Avenues."

A. T. Hamiter, Gainesville, Fla., August 21: "I closed another splendid meeting at Newton, Ala., on August 16, and I am now in a mission meeting at Benevolence, Ga. None there had ever listened to a gospel sermon before. I shall probably go to Hazelhurst next for a mission meeting. I am sure this will reach the ears of some churches who will willingly donate to the support of these meetings. If not, I am already committed to the work, and I believe that the Lord will provide."

Book on Evolution, edited and compiled by E. A. Elam, containing articles from brethren who have studied the question, is in course of preparation and will be ready for distribution in three or four weeks. It will be printed in large, clear type, substantially bound in full cloth, and will contain about 275 pages. The price will be $1.50.

QUERY DEPARTMENT

BY H. LEO BOLES

- (1) Please explain 1 Pet. 5: 5. Do the words "Younger" and "elder" mean in the Lord, or are they used with respect to age? (2) Is "elder" here the same as "bishop," or does it refer to age? (3) Does God's word teach that the younger should listen to the teaching of the older, when the older teach the truth? (4) Should the leaders of a church be the older members?—H. E. Mc-COLLUM.
- 1. The scripture referred to is as follows: "Likewise, ye younger, be subject unto the elder. Yea, all of you gird yourselves with humility, to serve one another: for God resisteth the proud, but giveth grace to the humble." (1 Pet. 5: 5.) Younger people in the church are to be respectful to older people. Older people in the Lord are supposed to have more experience, knowledge, and wisdom, and are, therefore, prepared to instruct and guide younger Christians. It also means that younger members are to honor and obey the elders of the congregation. Macknight, in his commentary, says: "As in the preceding part of this chapter the apostle, by an elder, means a person holding a sacred office, such as a pastor, or teacher, it is reasonable to think that he uses the word in the same sense here."
- 2. Yes, "Elder" here is from the same word that designates "bishop."
- 3. Yes. Of course, this implies that the elders teach the truth of God.
- 4. Yes. The older ones are better fitted in age, experience, and wisdom, if they have been trained in piety, than the younger members.

In the Gospel Advocate of April 9, 1925, you were asked to "tell how the loaf should be made for communion services on Lord's day, giving the scripture, chapter and verse." You state positively that "there is no scripture telling 'how the loaf should be made for communion services on Lord's day," (1) Is it a good work? (2) If so, is the man of God "furnished completely unto every good work?" These questions are in my mind in regard to what you say about the fruit of the vine also. You also say that "we may know that unleavened bread will be acceptable." If "there is no scripture telling 'how the loaf should be made for communion services on Lord's day," how may we "know that unleavened bread will be acceptable?" If "we may know that unleavened bread will be acceptable." why not always use that which "we may know" will be acceptable? You also say that "other kinds of bread might be used." I suppose you mean acceptably. How may we know that "other kinds of bread might be used" acceptably?—A. J. TRAIL.

Our brother has possibly unintentionally violated some of the regulations which should govern the Query Department. It is not the province of this department to argue questions, but to answer in a brief way questions which are asked for information. However, we know Brother Trail to be a good man, and we are giving space to his argument and question.

1. Yes. It is a good work.

2. Yes. Paul says: "Every scripture inspired of God is also profitable for teaching, for reproof, for correction, for instruction which is in righteousness: that the man of God may be complete, furnished completely unto every good work." (2 Tim. 3: 16, 17.) Brother Trail is a physician, and a good one, too. Let us test his argument by asking him a few questions. Is it a good work to treat a case of typhoid fever. Is the man of God furnished completely unto every good work? Will Brother Trail give the chapter and verse that states how to treat a case of typhoid fever?

If our brother knows of a scripture which teaches how a Christian is to prepare the loaf (or bread) used in the Lord's Supper, I shall be glad to have him do so. knows of a scripture which commands a certain kind of "wine" or "the fruit of the vine," I should like for him to name the scripture. Brother Trail knows-and we all know-that there is no scripture in the New Testament describing the kind of bread to be used or fruit of the vine to be used. It is very probable, as I have stated more than once in answer to this question, that unleavened bread was used by our Savior in giving the Lord's Supper the first time, or eating it with his disciples just before his betrayal, as all leavened bread was to be excluded from the homes at the passover. Only unleavened bread was to be used at the passover, and the Lord's Supper was instituted at the passover; hence the very strong probability that the Savior used unleavened bread. But how does Brother Trail know that the Savier intended that no other bread should be used on the Lord's table down through the ages except unleavened bread? The New Testament nowhere specifies the kind of bread to be used. How does Brother Trail know that the Savior intended that his disciples could not eat the Lord's Supper acceptably without having unleavened bread? Brother Trail does not know and cannot know that the Savior meant to forbid on the Lord's table the use of any and all kinds of bread. When he says that only unleavened bread shall be used in the Lord's Supper, he is legislating where the New Testament is silent; he is imposing a law upon God's people that Christ and the Holy Spirit did not ordain. It is a fearful thing to press our own opinions and legislations upon God's people, putting a yoke upon them which Christ did not authorize, and doing this oftentimes to the disturbance and disruption of the body of Christ. I said that it was safe to use unleavened bread because of the strong probability that Christ used it, and that we would be safe in using just what Christ probably used. I have not said-I would be afraid to say-that no other bread is acceptable to the Lord, since Christ, the Holy Spirit, and inspired writers have not instructed on this question.

Should a church have a treasurer and keep money in the treasury to pay for its annual meeting?—X.

It seems that every congregation should have some one who looks after and keeps the money which is contributed from time to time. A church that is active in the Lord's service must make contributions to the poor and distressed, as well as supporting the preaching of the gospel. Emergencies arise in a congregation and urgent demands are made by the distressed. There should be enough in the treasury to take care of these cases of emergency. Paul said to the church at Corinth: "Now concerning the collection for the saints, as I gave order to the churches of Galatia, so also do ye. Upon the first day of the week let each one of you lay by him in store, as he may prosper, that no collections be made when I come." (1 Cor. 16: 1, 2.) Dr. Macknight translates these verses as follows: "Now, concerning the collection which is for the saints, as I ordered the churches of Galatia, so also do ye, On the first day of every week let each one of you lay somewhat by itself, according as he may have prospered, putting it into the treasury, that when I come there may be then no collections." A treasury implies a treasurer. It seems that it would be a wise thing for the church to have money in the treasury for its annual meeting. No church should ask a preacher to come and hold a meeting without being willing to support him, and the support should be ready when the preacher arrives, so that the time and attention of all the members could be given to the meeting in order that the meeting be a success.

YES, I JUST WONDER, TOO. BY J. N. ARMSTRONG.

I heartily commend Brother Billingsley's "I Just Wonder" that appeared in the Gospel Advocate of June 11.

Blessed is the preacher of the gospel—yea, the Christian—that can keep those two "attitudes"—namely, one of that unswerving devotion to truth that kindly but firmly abhors all evil, one that always supports the right and that clearly and unmistakably identifies himself with them that hold to truth, but at the same time keeps an attitude of compassion, long-suffering, sympathy, and helpfulness toward the wrongdoer, void of any compromise. Jesus our Lord was all of this. Every wrongdoer into whose presence the holiness of our Lord came felt the disapproval of our Lord, but at the same time recognized in him a compassionate friend.

Truly it is not easy to reproduce the life of our Savior in these two attitudes to the sinner. It takes skill to instruct in righteousness, to reprove, to correct, to rebuke the church and the world, and keep manifest in it all the desire to help and bless the wrongdoer—to save him from his error.

But, as Brother Billingsley implies, when one has done his best, one must not expect to keep the good will and friendship of all. No one was ever hated more bitterly than was our Lord, though he always sustained in perfect poise the two attitudes toward those whom he taught.

A firm, steadfast life against the world's evils, though it be lived with the gentleness and compassionateness of Christ himself, will arouse antagonism, bitter opposition, and hatred. Even as our Lord said to his brethren in the flesh: "The world cannot hate you; but me it hateth, because I testify of it, that its works are evil." 7: 7; see, also, Matt. 10: 34-39.) It is altogether an error for us to conclude that one can preach and live the truth in a wicked world like ours and not be hated and despised as was our Lord; yet there is a strong feeling among "us"-many are afflicted with it, I fear-that if one be wise, prudent, and kind, one can avoid such antagonism and keep the friendship of all. If it were so, it would be a reflection on our Lord's wisdom. For think not, my dear friends, that the life of the world has changed. It may have donned a new dress, but it is still "enmity with God." "The friendship of the world is enmity with God." And he that "would be a friend of the world maketh himself an enemy of God." (James 4: 4.)

So strong is the conviction in many that, if a man is prudent, wise, and kind in his manner, he can avoid antagonism and keep the friendship of all, and yet preach and live the truth, that when a man does find himself opposed, antagonized, and in trouble, he is at once declared radical, extreme, or imprudent, when, in reality, these things came upon him through his unfailing faithfulness to the word of God. His only way to have been "wise" and "kind" would have been to wink at evil and to compromise with gross wrongs. Sometimes I know men find themselves in serious trouble because they threw monkey wrenches into the wheels of the machine. I am making no excuse for the unnecessary arousing of antagonism and trouble; but for preachers to believe they can preach the truth needed so wisely, prudently, and sweet-spiritedly that they will be loved by all is a dangerous error.

Certainly one can preach for a church for an indefinite number of years and get along with that church and be loved by all the church. He can, also, preach truth, always preach truth, but he may find himself selecting the truth that will not disturb the congregation; that will leave them alone in the things they want to do, in their business, in their social life, and even in their religious life.

For instance, he may know that the young people of that congregation frequent the mixed swimming pool or beach; so he will wink at that evil, or he may vulgarly joke about it and pass it up at that, and keep the young people on his "side." But he who positively stands against the life of the world and teaches against it with no uncertain sound will find the water boiling around his head. It is well for the servants of God to say to themselves now and then: "Am I now seeking the favor of men, or of God? or am I striving to please men? if I were still pleasing men, I should not be a servant of Christ." (Gal. 1: 10.)

NOTES FROM WEST TENNESSEE.

BY JOHN R. WILLIAMS.

The Jones Chapel meeting began on the first Lord's day in August and closed on Thursday after the second Lord's day, at the water. Ten were baptized and three restored to fellowship. Of the number baptized, three were Methodists and one a Baptist. This was the fifteenth meeting in succession at that place and was by no means a failure. Large audiences, especially at night, gave good attention to the preaching. There is one thing I can say about the Jones Chapel congregation that I can't say of all others that I know: the plainer and stronger the preaching, the better they like it. During the meeting a report was circulated that the congregation called me to time and told me that if I did not soften down and stop such plainness of preaching they would stop me. The devil never started a bigger lie. Never in my life did I try harder to expose false teaching, false conversions, and false worship, and to get the plain, simple facts before the people. The plainer I put it, the better the congregation enjoyed it.

I am sorry to say that I know of many congregations in West Tennessee that will not indorse such preaching, but will condemn it and pass the preacher up that will preach it. God wants fighters. The fight is on, and on to stay, unless the people of God will line up, take the sword of the Spirit, and go into the fight to stay till the finish. In nearly all the congregations in West Tennessee there are members so full of sectarianism they will not "endure sound doctrine." It would be a blessing to the congregations if these "milk-and-cider" members would go where they really belong-into sectarian bodies. Not long ago I was speaking to a great, good, gospel preacher, and I asked him who was to blame for such conditions. He said: "Elders and preachers." The more I think of his answer, the more I see he is correct. All sectarian bedies have some truth, but no one of them nor all of them have all the truth. There is but one church on earth to-day that has all the truth, and that is the one built by Christ Jesus the Lord. No man or woman on earth has a scriptural right to belong to any other than the one Christ built. To do so is to say that man can build a better church than Christ did.

A few days ago I had the pleasure of hearing Brother J. Paul Slayden preach at Glass. I cannot remember when I heard a sermon that did me more good than the one he preached. His subject was, "The Boldness and Courage of the Apostles." To say that Brother Slayden is a bold proclaimer of the gospel is to put it very mildly. He certainly is a great man and a great preacher. There are places, however, that he won't fit in. I get some encouragement out of this, as there are places I do not fit in. To be plain about the matter, I am truly glad I do not. Automobiles, bathing places, dance halls, and smooth preaching are all to be reckoned with by the gospel preacher. When the few old members pass off, I fear there will be a great departure from the old Jerusalem gospel—the "simplicity and purity" of the worship.

The Lord willing, I am to begin a meeting next Lord's day (August 23) at Oak Ridge, and on the second Lord's day in September I am to begin a meeting in Kentucky Bend.

Brother Smith, of Martin, Tenn., held a week's meeting at Hornbeak while I was in Lake County. I did not get to hear him while he was here. However, the brethren say he did some fine preaching. Two were baptized and one restored to fellowship.

If the prize (heaven) is not worth fighting for, it is worth nothing. Who, then, is willing to fight to the end? I am doing what I can to hold the congregation in line and prevent a rupture in the body or a departure from "the faith." Pray for me.

FRUITS MEET FOR REPENTANCE. BY PRICE BILLINGSLEY.

- 1. Not able to look up. (Ps. 38; 5; 39; 9; 40; 12.)
- 2. Covered with confusion. (Jer. 3: 25; Dan. 9: 7;
- 3. Confounded and cannot open mouth. (Job 40: 4; Jer. 22: 22; Ezek. 16: 63.)
- 4. Remembers evil ways and loathes self. (Ezek. 9: 4: 20: 43; 36: 31, 32.)
- 5. Abhors self and repents in dust and ashes. (Job 42: 6.)
- 6. Turns with fasting and mourning. (Joel 2: 12; James 4: 9.)
- 7, Cleanses hands and purifies heart. (Job 11: 14; James 4: 8.)
- 8. Sorrows after godly manner and clears self. (2 Cor. 7: 9, 11.)
- 9. In sorrow declares the sin. (Ps. 32: 5; 38: 4, 5, 18;
- 10. Acknowledges offense and seeks God's face. (Hos. 5: 15.)
- 11. In shame bears God's indignation. (Jer. 31: 19; Mic. 7: 9.)
- 12. Humbled and accepts punishment. (Lev. 26: 41; Lam. 3: 39.)

From a close study of these and related scriptures and a knowledge of present-day church conditions, it is clear that vastly more is involved in repentance than is commonly thought. Possibly our teachers do not give a tithe of consideration to the subject which it demands. Many congregations wink at sin; describe it in mild, inoffensive terms; or ignore it altogether or cover it up with hush and polite whitewash. This, when what is required is that in shame and mouring they should rise up and cast it forth with all their might. Rude public exposure can heal it and withhold from worse things. I admit that these works answerable to amendment of life seem at the time exacted killingly exorbitant and well-nigh impossible of being rendered. So steep is the divine price of repentance that most are unwilling to pay it. Yet the Lord's hand is cruel that it may be kind; these fruits of repentance are just and right, and in the long run kind, seeing it is the only way to pardon, honor, and full restoration.

Sins known to the public cannot be put away by some convenient private arrangement. Nor do they go out of date. The Lord must cancel them, which he does only when the full price of repentance is paid, or they eat the soul to eternal damnation. And he who genuinely repents of his sins never attempts to excuse himself, or hedge, or dodge, or hide. He does not wish the shame hushed up and forgotten, or resort to crafty device to put it out of mind. He does not use mild terms in describing them, or ambiguous phrases in the matter of their settlement. Not the repentant man! Instead, cost what it may, he wants men to see the fruits of his repentance and to know that he has reformed. His confession does not have a string to it; he surrenders unconditionally by specifically naming his transgressions and in shame renouncing them, and wherever possible he makes restitution. And then, with spite toward nobody, he accepts the hard lot which through disobedience he has brought upon himself.

The penitent must name his own particular wrongs. "He shall confess that he hath sinned in this thing." (Lev. 5: 5.) "Tell what thou hast done." (Josh. 7: 19.) "Confess your faults." (James 5: 16.) "If we confess our sins." (1 John 1: 9; Prov. 28: 13.) In no uncertain terms one must own to and declare his own sins. This is the Lord's way of strengthening the erring from another fall and helping others to have confidence in him. If this is the law (and it is), then let it be understood that he who does not bring these fruits is a condemned impenitent, cowering in the bondage of divine disfavor, regardless of what is believed about him or what he says. This in connection with my article on immoral preachers.

A TRAGEDY.

BY H. LEO BOLES.

The following is a letter written by a young lady to her grandfather. This young lady was trained in a home that believed in God, in Christ, and in the Bible as the word of God. She grew up and was finally placed in school under teachers who do not believe the Bible. These teachers with their theories have completely destroyed her faith in the Bible. What a tragedy! It is one of the saddest tragedies in the life of any one to have his or her faith wrecked in God and the Bible. Such was the effect of the training that this young lady received. Isn't it bad for Christian parents to place their children under such influence?

I think that parents commit a crime against their children when they place them under such godless influence before their faith is well grounded in the Bible. Greater is the crime committed by Christian fathers and mothers when they place their children under such influence as will destroy their faith in God and the Bible, when they could place them under Christian teachers where the word of God is respected and taught daily, so that their faith may be strengthened in God and the Bible. The letter reads as follows:

Seattle, Washington, October 12, 1924.—Grandpa Dear: Seattle, Washington, October 12, 1924.—Grandpa Dear: I am in a perilous state, and in my distress I am coming to you to seek the truth. I am in doubt as to the existence of God. Grandpa, you must remember that I am a product of the age, and in school having studied the beginning of the world and the evolution of man, it is a little difficult to read Genesis and believe what I find there.

H. G. Wells has something to found his statements upon; the Bible has nothing. I believe that Jesus Christlived and preached the gospel, just as Confucius, Buddha, and Mohammed lived and preached a good and pure reliand Mohammed lived and preached a good and pure reliand monammed fived and preached a good and pure religion. If Christianity is so great, grandpa, why are the blackest pages in history accounts of its wars? Why is it that Christianity is but a few hundred years younger than other pagan religions and is yet embraced by such a comparative few? There are millions of devout Mohammedans in Arabia; are there millions of devout Christians in America? I go to church and wonder how many there even know the Tan Commendance.

medans in Arabia; are there millions of devout Christians in America? I go to church and wonder how many there even know the Ten Commandments, and if so, how many follow them. The Lord gave these commandments for the people to live by: are there any that do so?

I have read the Bible through with no great understanding of its inner meaning, but with the simple, direct mind of any girl of twenty. I found few great words and few figures of speech; in fact, the Old Testament is just an interesting account of a very tragic people. Do you think it possible for me to believe in evolution and food? Write me a letter, grandpa, and explain everything you think it possible for me to believe in evolution and in God? Write me a letter, grandpa, and explain everything you can; for I am anxious to learn the truth, and only wish you were here to talk with me.

Great music and works of art live, and are as good and perfect to-day as they were in the beginning because they "ring true." There is something in them that touches the heart of every human being. If a thing does not live through the ages, then it does not deserve to; and I believe religion to be deteriorating. The greatest men to-day are not those inspired by God. They are not even religious men. I am with the multitude, grandpa. My life is being lived to the best of my ability, because in giving happiness it is returning to me a thousandfold. After this life I anticipate nothing other than to fertilize the earth.

Lovingly, EVELYN.

As stated, this letter was written by a schoolgirl to her grandfather who now lives in Nashville, Tenn. I repeat that this reveals a sad tragedy. How sad for one to give up faith in the Bible and turn to the theories of man! Such is the result of much of our modern-day education.

I am not attempting to answer the questions asked in this letter. A book is being prepared by the Gospel Advocate Company on the question of evolution which will fully answer the questions raised in this letter. This book will be from the press within a few weeks.

There was no congregation at Columbus City when Brother Browning went there, but they now have twelve members who say they will meet every Lord's day. Brother Browning will begin a meeting at Honeycomb Church, in Marshall County, on the first Sunday in September. Long live the Gospel Advocate and its editors!"

Conducted for a half century by D. Lipscomb, E. G. Sewell, F. D. Srygley, and J. C. McQuiddy.

WORD AWAY FROM WASHINGTON.

BY T. B. LARIMORE.

August 25, 1925. Nothing strange, startling, or spectacular, in any way involving us or either of us, has occurred, so far as I know, since I wrote you last week. We have simply been walking about on the streets of the capital of our native State, shaking hands with friends, new and old, and having a good time. A bad time is what some people call a good time; but we are having a genuinely good time, which has nearly all passed and gone, I'm sorry to say.

We went to see Sister Sewell, widow of our beloved brother, E. G. Sewell, last week; but, as she has been in this beautiful world scarcely ninety-three years, she is unwilling to be inactive, hence was away from home. enjoying the beauties of nature and other blessings, hence we failed to see her. We saw some nice people at her home, however, and learned that her prospects of several more years of useful life are encouraging. May the prospects brighten and all those prospective years be hers.

Early this morning, before the city began to stir much, we met Frank Watrous, who was evidently glad to see us; but he was gladdest to see "Miss Emma," as Mrs. Larimore is still called here. He took pleasure in telling her of the nice family of which he is the head now; and he and "Miss Emma" talked of old times at Foster Street. Joe Warlick once declared that everybody he saw at Foster Street Church, elders and all, had at some former time been in Miss Emma's Sunday-school class-and her class was the infant class! Well, Frank was in that class, and, this morning, Mrs. Larimore reminded him of a little incident he may have forgotten. One morning he asked her for two papers instead of one, as he wanted to take one to his little sister. She gave him the papers, and, always on the alert for new pupils, she asked him: "How old is your little sister, Frank?" He replied: "Three days old." Thus he enrolled his baby sister in the class at an early age, and, Mrs. Larimore says, he, in due time, brought her with him to the class, and later another baby sister, and all three were faithful members of the class till they grew out of it.

We have visited the "Old Woman's Home," where we found a few elderly ladies, who seemed to be pleasantly and comfortably situated and contented. Our visit was especially to see Sister Jennie Williamson and Sister Kitch, and we were glad to find them both well and happy to see us. At St. Thomas Hospital we found my oldtime friend, John McMillin, a patient there, and his brother, Benton, ex-Governor of Tennessee. John once perpetrated an innocent little joke, of which I reminded him. I conducted a series of meetings a few miles from their home. Before the meeting began, Mrs. McMillin said she was going to attend every service. Warned that such a course might kill her, as she was not in robust health, she said: "If so, I'll die in a good cause." Taking two or three of their fine boys in a buggy with her every day, she attended that meeting from start to finish. When the meeting closed, she was well and her husband was happy. He said: "If my wife ever has another spell, it shall be a short spell, for I'll know exactly what to do, and I'll do it. Pll buy an old 'bonestack' and a rickety old buggy, start a Campbellite meeting about ten miles from home, and turn 'er loose." There may be much in Christian (?) Science; I'm sure there's much in Christianity, and the Christian faith of a faithful Christian woman can work wonders-not miracles, but wonders, nevertheless.

We found Sister Brown in bed, but cheerful and hopeful. I claimed kinship with her on the ground that the B in my name stands for Brown. She did not resent it, and I appreciated that.

Sister Peel, whom we visited in her home in the country, has lived here eighty-eight years, loving and serving the Lord nearly all of that time. As my indulgent wife is willing for all the pretty girls who wish to do so to kiss me, Sister Peel was granted that privilege when the parting time came. So, you see, my visit was not in vain.

We visited other friends in and around Nashville, trying especially to visit friends who are sick. To-day we went to the Community House of the church of Christ on Boscobel Street, and there saw Sister Hurt, the pleasant matron of the establishment, Sister Williams and Sister Anna Gooch, who gave us a most affectionate welcome to the Home. I am delighted that the brethren are establishing such homes for those who need homes, and I hope the work may continue and increase.

That pleasant little visit ended our goings to and fro in Nashville this time, as we must soon turn our faces toward Washington.

DRIFTING WITH THE TIDE.

BY F. W. SMITH.

It is much easier to drift with the tide than it is to stem the current. All who have had experience in rowing know this to be literally true. One has only to drop the oars, fold the arms, and sit quietly in the boat to drift; while it requires both mental and physical exertion to battle against the current. To "drift" requires neither skill nor energy, but is intoxicating to the sensibilities, lulling to sleep all fear of danger, and rendering the subject oblivious to his surroundings. The single thought of comfort and ease takes possession of the soul without considering whither it is drifting and the inevitable consequences.

THE PROPER IDEALS OF LIFE.

Life is a tremendous problem, fraught with obligations and responsibilities that are far-reaching, and on the proper discharge of which are suspended the highest and best interests of time as well as an eternal destiny crowned with endless bliss. There should be, then, a guiding star to every rational soul whose radiance will reveal the hidden dangers and serve as an unerring pilot amid the breakers on life's tempestuous sea.

What can be that star other than the "Star of Bethlehem"—the "Light of the world" and the only hope of a lost race? If Jesus' pure life and his doctrine do not constitute the "proper ideals of life," then from what source may we expect such? What improvements have been made regarding the correct manner of living since the "Man of Galilee" walked among the inhabitants of Palestine?

The world before and since has had its great teachers, its profound philosophers and lawgivers, but none of them could lift man above himself, leaving him stranded on the shoals of human wisdom and weakness.

THE MOLDING OF TRUE IDEALS.

All of man's thoughts, his ambitions, aspirations, aims, and purposes must be cast in the divine mold in order to the proper formation of his ideals. An ideal that does not "embody" the Christ life is a consummate failure to begin with, and the sooner such a conception is abandoned, the better for the soul.

There is not and never has been but one perfect example for humanity, and that example is found in the life, character, and teaching of Jesus Christ. When mankind turns away from the divine standard as revealed in the holy Scriptures for patterns of true idealism, it is comparable to walking away from light into darkness. This is true because it is said: "O Jehovah, I know that the way of man is not in himself; it is not in man that walketh to direct his steps." (Jer. 10: 23.) From this, as well as from many other passages of Holy Writ, it is perfectly clear that man, notwithstanding his wonderful mental endowments, needs a guardian, one to direct his course in life.

CHARACTERISTICS OF THE TRUE PATTERN.

Since Jesus Christ is the only true and correct pattern by which to form proper conceptions of life that will crystallize into characters fitted for the enjoyment of God in time and through all eternity, it is highly important to keep before us our model.

1. Jesus Christ did the will of his Father, no matter how strong the opposition. In fact, he met with opposition upon all sides, but it never entered his mind to give up, fold his arms, and float with the popular tide. He fulfilled to the letter the prophecy, "I am come (in the roll of the book it is written of me) to do thy will, O God" (Heb. 10: 7); and while the doing of that will rendered him the most unpopular being that ever lived in this world, culminating in his death on the cross, he never wavered. He loved the truth, the will of God, and spurned the plaudits of a sinful world. How, then, can one dare claim to be a follower of Jesus Christ, and compromise the truth of God, drift with the popular tide, instead of stemming the current of opposition to the kingdom of God? It is a "lamentable" fact that many disciples go from the rural districts into towns and cities, and instead of seeking a place of worship after the New Testament order, they compromise the truth and drift with the tide of popular religion. The congregations where they formerly worshiped were, perhaps, numerically strong, and they were content to worship as the Bible directs so long as they remained in the country. But upon removing to the city and beholding the fashionable and popular churches, they realized that in order to be true to the truth it meant a struggle against strong opposition, and hence they folded their arms and "drifted with the tide."

2. Jesus Christ was separate from sinners. "For such a high priest became us, holy, guileless, undefiled, separated from sinners, and made higher than the heavens." (Heb. 7: 26.) Of course, no one can attain to the fullness of his perfection, but we should and must strive to approximate it. But this cannot be done by running with the world, mixing and mingling with the ways of the world in the unholy and ungodly pleasures of the world. To "abstain from every form of evil" (1 Thess. 5: 22) requires the courage of a true soldier, one who is not only fearless of popular sentiment, but is willing to openly and publicly combat it. Many church members, rather than suffer the criticism of a godless world, will compromise with the world, and misrepresent their Lord and Master by engaging in the things that are antagonistic to his kingdom. They do this because it is so much easier to "drift with the tide" than it is to "stem the current."

3. Jesus Christ was always submissive to the Father's will. His motto was: "Not as I will, but as thou wilt." (Matt. 26: 39.) Some, if not many, professed Christians murmur and complain at the providences and dispensations of God. They seem to have caught the spirit of murmuring from Israel of old, who exclaimed: "Ye have brought us forth into this wilderness, to kill this whole assembly." (Ex. 16: 3.) God was leading them toward the promised land, a land of plenty, and yet because of a few hardships they complained against the leadership of God. There are many "fair-weather" Christians; and when a little cloud appears in their sky, they begin to complain at their lot. O, it is so much easier to drift with the tide than it is to stem the current!

CORRUPT LEADERS.

BY E. A. ELAM.

In addition to what was said last week in answer to the question, "What shall be done with some preachers?" let it be added that corrupt judges, false and immoral prophets, and covetous and licentious priests marked the beginning and accomplished the end of the downfall of the kingdom of Israel and the destruction of the kingdom of Judah.

One lesson for us is: the church to-day can advance no further and rise no higher in spirituality than its elders and preachers, or its teachers and leaders.

Beginning with Solomon's disobedience to God in marrying his hundreds of foreign wives and his introduction of idolatry into his kingdom to please them, and tracing the kingdom through changing vicissitudes to the Babylonian captivity, this statement will be found true. The same will be found true in regard to the kingdom of Israel.

The division of his kingdom followed Solomon's sins, as God declared it would, as a consequence. From the height of its glory and peace it began to decline. It went from sin to sin and to destruction.

Lamenting the captivity of Judah and the desolation of Jerusalem, Jeremiah says:

It is because of the sins of her prophets, and the iniquities of her priests, that have shed the blood of the just in the midst of her. (Lam. 4: 13.)

To read of the abominable sins of the prophets and priests—the shepherds—of God's people at different times makes the blood run cold. The prophets claimed to have visions from God and to present his will to the people, and the priests professed to teach the people and to represent them to God. They were false; they led the people to trust in falsehood and to believe lies, they sought their own gain, they fed themselves and not God's sheep, they were drunkards and licentious.

Let us begin with Isaiah and read consecutively to the last of Malachi, marking with a pencil every charge made by the Lord against prophets and priests (called also "shepherds") of covetousness, serving for hire, falsehood, drunkenness, licentiousness, etc.; then we will understand and feel the force of Jeremiah's declaration.

To begin with, Isaiah (1: 23) says, the faithful city had become a harlot, and whereas she was full of justice and righteousness, she had become a lodge for murderers; she had corrupted her money and her wine; her princes had become rebellious and companions of thieves; "every one" loved bribes and followed after rewards; and they judged not the widows and orphans. This is a most fearful charge. The nation was sinful and the people were laden with iniquity, "a seed of evil doers, children that deal corruptly." Notwithstanding the severe chastisement of Jehovah, the whole nation revolted yet more and more. The whole head was sick and the whole heart faint. From the sole of the foot even unto the head there was "no soundness in it; but wounds, and bruises, and fresh stripes:" they had not been "closed, neither bound up, neither mollified with oil." (Isa. 1: 5, 6.)
Isaiah's most beautiful, wonderful, and soul-stirring

Isaiah's most beautiful, wonderful, and soul-stirring prophecies concerning the coming of the Messiah and the wonderful Prince of Peace are interspersed with the dark shadows of "woes," "woes" against God's then rebellious people. Hosea, contemporary with Isaiah, makes (chapter 4: 11-14) reference to debauchery which, Adam Clarke says, should not be mentioned, and Judah is warned against following this shameful and diabolical example of Israel.

Micah, also contemporary with Isaiah, denounces the wicked rulers and priests and says "the heads thereof judge for reward, and the priests thereof teach for hire." (Mic. 3: 11.)

The book of Amos states the same sins.

Jeremiah's prophecy is filled with warnings against and denunciations of false prophets (see Jer. 23) and licentious and otherwise corrupt priests. He says it is a horrible thing that "the prophets prophesy falsely, and the priests bear rule by their means" (through their influence), and the people "love to have it so." (Jer. 5: He declares that every one of them, from the 30, 31.) least to the greatest, was given to covetousness; from "the prophet even unto the priest every one" of them dealt falsely, and of this abomination they "were not at all ashamed, neither could they blush." They were all grievous revolters and went "about with slanderers;" they were as "brass and iron," and all of them dealt "corruptly." (Jer. 6: 9-15, 26-30.) They could not be impressed with truth and right. Again: "Ye trust in lying words, that cannot profit. Will ye steal, murder, and commit adultery, and swear falsely, and burn incense unto Baal, and walk after other gods that ye have not known, and come and stand before me in this house, which is called by my name, and say, We are delivered; that ye may do all these abominations?" (Jer. 7: 8-10.)

These prophets, priests, and people seemed to think, according to the accusation of Jeremiah, that because they stood in the temple and pretended to worship God they would be delivered from the sins of lying, stealing, and fornication.

Does it not seem that some preachers and teachers of to-day think they can take liberties, or even practice fraud, commit adultery, and sin otherwise with impunity, because they preach and teach? On the contrary, it does not appear to them that God requires them to be the cleaner and purer, the more righteous and holy, and to set the better example because they are preachers and teachers. Notice that God says such practices in prophets and priests are abominable; they are no less so in preachers and teachers of to-day. Such preachers and teachers are no less false and hypocritical.

Ezekiel says of false prophets: "Woe unto the shepherds of Israel that do feed themselves! should not the shepherds feed the sheep? Ye eat the fat, and ye clothe you with the wool, ye kill the fatlings; but ye feed not the sheep." (Ezek. 34: 1-10; read the entire chapter.)

Does it not appear that much more now than fifty years ago preachers and other religious teachers look far more after feeding and taking care of themselves than the spiritual growth and welfare of the church? Is not the fleece far more to them than the flock? Jesus teaches clear and wonderful lessons in the parable of the sheepfold. The "hireling, and not a shepherd," flees when he sees the wolf-that is, trouble and danger-and the sheep are scattered and destroyed. He does this because he is a hireling-that is, serving only for hire. "The thief cometh not, but that he may steal, and kill, and destroy." The true shepherd remains with the sheep, protecting them from harm, hazarding and even giving his life for them. This is preëminently true of Jesus, "the good Shepherd." But all undershepherds and teachers have the same spirit and follow his example; and if not, they are not his. (Rom. 8: 9.)

All these sins of prophets and priests—shepherds—of Israel and Judah did not come upon them at once. They grew into them by degrees, by more and more. The apostasy of the church into the Dark Ages did not come as a cyclone or Egyptian darkness, but little by little the church fell away. See in 2 Thess. 2 and Rev. 2 and 3 how the spirit of lawlessness and covetousness and licentiousness was at work in the days of the apostles. Can the church expect to escape the attacks of the same spirit of Satan now? Does not Satan use the same human agency now?

The New Testament now, as well as the Old Testament then, points out and warns against "false gods" and idolatry of various forms; "false Christs; "false apostles;" "false prophets;" "false teachers;" "false brethren;" "deceitful workers," Satan's ministers, fashioned into "ministers of righteousness;" "whose end shall be according to their works." One of the apostles turned traitor, possessed of a devil, and betrayed the Son of God with a kiss. May there not be such treacherous kisses placed upon the spotless cheek of the church now? There followed others, in kind if not in degree: blind guides "corrupt in mind and bereft of the truth, supposing godliness is a way of gain;" who go "in the way of Cain' and run "riotously in the error of Baalam for hire;" "shepherds that without fear feed themselves;" "clouds without water," driven "about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, in craftiness, after the wiles of error;" "autumn leaves without fruit, twice dead plucked up by the roots; wild waves of the sea, foaming out their own shame; wandering stars, for whom the blackness of darkness hath been reserved forever," Pau mentions some who corrupt, or make merchandise of, the gospel; who handle the word of God deceitfully; who with their smooth and fair speech beguile the hearts of the innocent, who serve not the Lord, but their own belly (Rom. 16: 17, 18; Phil. 3: 19), and who "creen into houses, and take captive silly women laden with sin, led away by divers lusts, ever learning, and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth" (2 Tim. 3: 6, 7).

The enormity of the sin of being a false prophet with the desire to lead the people into rebellion, in the Old Testament, is seen in the fact that it was punishable by death. (Deut. 13: 5; 18: 20.) This being put to death in the Old Testament is only a shadow of the eternal death which false teachers spoken of in the New Testament will have to suffer. This fearfulness of the punishment of false teachers does not make the impression in places that it should. "Because sentence against an evil work is not executed speedily, therefore the heart of the sons of men is fully set in them to do evil." (Eccles. 8: 11), whether prophets, priests, or preachers.

Let it be remembered that God, through Jeremiah, says the false prophets and adulterous priests were not ashamed of their course and did not blush at their sins. A man is certainly in a very bad state when his own evil doings do not cause him to blush and do not put him to Can one bring shame and reproach upon the church, the Lamb's bride, and not even blush or hang his head in shame? Just so false prophets and unchaste priests stood in the temple of God, thinking they could sin with impunity because they were prophets and priests. It is a great piece of audacity for a man to attempt to go boldly on in sin without repentance, confession, humility, and fruits worthy of repentance. If a man is not detected in sin, his sense of right and his own conscience should so smite him that he cannot rest under it and pretend to be a teacher and guide in the church.

Another thing which must be noticed is, Jeremiah says, "the people love to have it so." There is a great fault in the people. They have itching ears and heap or pile up such teachers as will gratify them. (2 Tim. 4: 3, 4.) We see from this that many preachers and teachers like to please the people. This is a great temptation. Hosea says: "Like people, like priests." The priests were what the people wanted them to be. They did not strive to have the people what God wanted them to be. This may be true of preachers now, as when Paul wrote. There is an eternity of difference between pleasing even the most of church members, catering to their likes and tastes, notions and conceptions, and seeking to please God in saving them from their sins. It is one thing to preach and work in the love of the truth to save people and quite another thing to want to be a leading and popular preacher, to seek one's own advantage and glory,

One of the most important things for the church to learn is that it cannot rise in unity and peace, purity and love, righteousness and holiness, higher than its leaders. But since the church cannot rise in these graces higher than its leaders, it will be dragged down, on the other hand, to a level with them in corruption and pollution.

Let some preachers think and act as they please and teach what they may, elders with their scriptural qualifications and doing their scriptural work are the Godappointed shepherds, defenders, guides, and teachers of the church. Not that they are to do all the teaching and the other work-not at all; but they are the overseers, the bishops, of all, and must have all things done in accordance with the will of God. When this is done, all things go well-that is, to please God. If men are put up as elders, who are selfish and self-righteous, ignorant of the word of God and wise in their own conceits, close and niggardly, who have no broad outlook for the church, but are partisan and sectarian, and who provide always such preachers as themselves to teach the church, it can never be in liberality and service, truth and love, what the New Testament will make of it; it can never be free from jealousy and envy, hatred and strife, and stand upon the high and holy plane of integrity and uprightness, unity and peace, faith and purity. In the ratio that elders, other teachers, and preachers are lacking in the practice of the truth, liberality, and zeal, the Christian virtues and graces, and true spirituality, the church goes down to this level. Water seeks its level, but can rise no higher, and no congregation can rise higher than its teacherstheir example and teaching.

Every church should know its membership. In order to keep informed as to the residence and membership of your church, you should have a church record. Our Church Record is the very thing you need. Price, $2.50, postpaid.

NOTES FROM THE WEST.

BY F. B. SRYGLEY.

Mrs. Srygley met me in Denver on Tuesday, August 11, and we spent one day with Brother and Sister Ford, of Englewood. They are fine, Christian people, and they always do enough for a friend to put him under obligations to them. This was our home last year while in Denver.

We left Denver on Wednesday and went back through Pueblo and up the Arkansas River, through the Royal Gorge, and over Tennessee Pass (which is more than ten thousand feet above sea level) and on to Salt Lake City. We stopped over one day at Salt Lake City, and tried to see the city and a few of the sights surrounding it.

On Thursday afternoon we went to the lake itself, which was a surprise to me, as I found it had a much larger body of water than I had expected. It is seventy-five miles long and forty miles wide, and the water of the lake contains twenty-two per cent salt. It must be a fine place in which to learn to swim, as they say one cannot sink in its waters. I do not know this to be true, as I did not try it. Great quantities of salt are taken from this water during the summer months. The water is pumped from the lake and allowed to spread out over the flat country near it, where the water evaporates and leaves the salt on the ground. Every five buckets of water will make more than one bucket of salt. The water from the lake is confined in squares of an acre or two, spread out over what is called the "salt beds;" and as fast as the water evaporates, more is made to flow over the beds until the salt is left two or three feet thick, and then it is plowed up and banked, where it remains for a year, and then it is blasted up and hauled to the mill to be ground and made ready for shipment. A man told me that the two salt works shipped daily an average of sixteen hundred tons from May 15 to November 15. I do not know that this is true, and I confess it sounded rather "salty" to me.

The impression is made on the visitor that Salt Lake City is dominated by the Mormons. They seem to take every opportunity to advertise their religion to the tourists who pass through the city. There are many things in the city to remind one of Brigham Young and the Mormon religion. The old house in which Young first lived has been preserved and is pointed out to the visitor. The old mill pond where he owned the first flour mill of Utah, his individual farm, is now a city park. It is claimed that Brigham Young did the first irrigating that was done in the United States. He must have been a man of considerable ability and of great patience, as he had nineteen wives and fifty-two children besides two adopted children. The old wagon in which he traveled to Utah is now on the first floor of the Capitol. His grave is pointed out to the visitor in a plot of ground which was once his garden; but no other grave can be put there, as it is now in the heart of the city.

We remained over in Salt Lake City to hear the organ recital in the Mormon Tabernacle. I pronounced this a rather poor entertainment; but it was new to us, and we were both anxious to hear it. The tabernacle was built in the early days, and it is claimed that there is not a nail in the building. It is a circular building, and the walls are built of stone. The roof is a dome, and the rafters that support the roof are fastened together in the center by strips of rawhide. The Mormon Temple stands in the same inclosure, which is now called "Temple Square." The temple is not used as a church, as it is considered too sacred for any one to enter except a Mormon, and he must he a Mormon that uses no tea, coffee, or tobacco. The temple is used only for marriage ceremonies and to baptize for the living and the dead. Mormonism, like Catholicism, seems to be a mixture of paganism, Judaism, and Christianity.

We left Salt Lake City on August 14 for Los Angeles.

HOME READING

THE JUDGE.

The judge glanced down at the ledger before him.

"Jim Parkinson," he read; and then looking up, he turned toward the prisoner's dock and saw a thin, pale-faced boy of about eighteen standing there. "Come on, Jim," he said, not unkindly. "Stand up over here in front of me where I can get a better look at you. They've got you down here charged with theft. That means jail. How'd you come to do it?"

The boy moved out of the prisoner's pen and came up to the rail in front of the judge. His face carried a dogged expression of indifference. He hung his head. "I was hungry!" he mumbled.

A trace of a smile, somewhat grim, showed on the judge's face. He was not a hard man; but most prisoners charged with petty theft told him they did it because they were hungry—that they wanted to sell what they had stolen and buy food. It was an old tale calculated to work on the sympathies of the court.

The judge regarded the boy for a moment and then spoke somewhat sharply. "O, you were hungry, eh?" he said. "Well, what did you steal—an overcoat?"

"Food!" the lad answered. He did not look up, but stood staring at the floor, and his tone also indicated an indifference as to his fate. "I was hungry, an' I stole some food from a back kitchen winder that I found open."

The judge reflected. Too many vagrants were being picked up. They were getting to be a nuisance. They didn't want to work, as a rule. He spoke sharply.

"Look up at me—don't hang your head that way! Why don't you go to work and earn food the way other people do, instead of stealing it? That's no way to live! Are you too lazy to work?"

The boy raised his head quickly. For a moment there came into his eyes a flash of resentment. "I've looked for a job ever since the money I got on my last one give out," he replied, "but I ain't been able to get none. I ain't got no schoolin'. I can't read or write. I been battered 'round everywhere—I been a tramp all over the country. Nobody wants me—I ain't got nothin' to live for—I been in jail 'bout a dozen times!"

The judge was quick to see the flash of resentment in the boy's eyes, and it nettled him. He did not like to have prisoners look at him in that way when they were before him for sentence.

He replied in quick, sharp tones. "Well, this will make thirteen!" he said. "Too many of you fellows around. You ought to be able to get work if you want it. I don't believe you want it. Thirty days, officer!"

The judge got into his limousine and was driven home. It was a beautiful, clear day. Everybody he met seemed happy. His wife waved to him with a smile from a window as she saw him alight from the car. His children rushed up to him as he entered the hall, with the many and diversified tales that children have to greet a loving parent. But the judge was a bit absent-minded. He was trying to think where he had heard that name before. Subconsciously he realized that it was before his professional life—back in the days of youth—and that it was more than a casual acquaintance. Then suddenly he remembered. He smiled.

"That factory girl," he said to himself—"Parkinson—Nelly Parkinson—that I used to see when I was a senior at college!" He passed into his study and sat down in a great easy-chair, lighting a cigar. "Jove!" he said, musingly, "I haven't thought of her since I graduated and left that college town. Just an ordinary sort of affair that so many well-to-do young college chaps have with some girl of the lower scale. I remember, she said she loved me." He smiled at the recollection. "And she gave me a half of a silver shilling, some old pocket piece that she filed in two. Yes, and I remember now, she drilled a hole through her half, at the factory, and wore the thing around her neck with a piece of yellow ribbon. Guess I must have lost mine soon after. I've no recollection where it went. Funny, that boy's name made me recall her!"

The telephone rang sharply,

The judge laid his cigar on the ash tray, picked up the receiver and placed it to his ear. It was the officer in charge of the city jail speaking.

"Your Honor? . . . O, yes. . . . Well, Judge, that boy you sent up for stealing did away with himself. Made a break on the way up and threw himself in front of an electric car. Mashed up badly—died in a few minutes."

The judge listened attentively. He was used to hearing all sorts of news about prisoners in his professional capacity, and was never surprised. His voice was kindly, but with an element of the stereotyped in it.

"Well, that's too bad. Pretty young to take his life!"
And then, casually, as a matter of routine: "Any identification found on him?"

The officer answered in the voice of the paid official going through a part of his duty. "No," he said, "not a thing to tell who he was. All they found was an old envelope. He'd sewed it up in his jacket, somehow, I believe—so's not to lose it, probably. Hold on a moment.

Here it is. . . . It's an old, dirty thing with something written on it in lead pencil. . . There's a date, . . eight years back. . . Let's see what the rest is. . . Pretty hard to read—words misspelled—some woman that wasn't educated much. . . I've got it: 'Jim, from your mother who is dying, memory of your father who never knowed you was born.'"

"I see," said the judge. He yawned. All sorts of odd papers and letters were found on suicides. He was bored with the recital and reached with his free hand to pick up his cigar again. "What was in the envelope, anyway?" he asked, casually.

There was a moment's wait. The officer was evidently studying what he held in his hand. "Why, nothing," he said—"nothing at all but a half of a silver shilling with a piece of old yellow ribbon strung through a hole in the rim."—Selected.

"THE PROFITABLE WORD," BY J. C. Mc-QUIDDY,

Contains a choice selection of the writings of J. C. Mc-Quiddy, compiled by A. B. Lipscomb. For over forty years Brother McQuiddy was editor and publisher of the Gospel Advocate. "The Profitable Word" is a gem, and contains some of the best thoughts of a great mind. It contains 196 pages and is bound in silk and stamped in gold and white metal. Send $1.50 and get a copy.

COMMENDATORY.

I am glad to inform the brotherhood that Brother W. A. Sisco, of Hohenwald, Tenn., has so far regained his health that he is again actively engaged in evangelistic work in Hickman, Lewis, and Perry counties. For years he has been a patient sufferer; but he is now much improved in health, and, though not vigorous or robust, is able mentally and physically to conduct successful gospel meetings.

As a preacher, Brother Sisco is clear, logical, direct, tactful, and unafraid. He preaches the gospel in fear and fearlessly, in love of the truth and of souls. His strong gospel sermons benefited me greatly in the meeting I attended, and I congratulated the congregation on securing such a man as he to teach them the way of life; and his efforts bore fruit, and will yet bear fruit, in the hearts and lives of those hearers.

Brother Sisco is a good man as well as a good preacher-conscientious, devout, spiritual, willing to spend and be spent for Christ. He does not seek notoriety and honors, but he does seek work, and he is found in hard places and at mission points laboring without murmur for the furtherance of the gospel. And now that he is physically able to preach, mentally alert, and desirous of doing good. churches need not hesitate in calling him. Once he had more work than he could do; but when his health failed, the brethren feared he would break down in meetings, and so have hesitated in calling him. The meeting I attended was a most difficult one, and the mental and physical strain was great, yet Brother Sisco preached twice a day for eight consecutive days and did much visiting.

I should rejoice to know that the churches will use this humble, godly man in the ministry. He is just the type they need most—a man of firmness, conviction, unselfishness, grounded in the truth, able, set for the defense of the gospel. If the churches would call such men—"faithful men, able to teach others also"—they would be the better served and the gospel of Christ would be furthered.

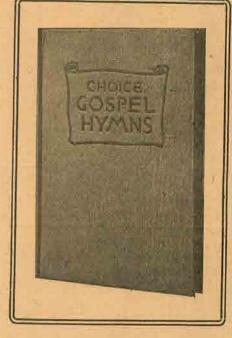

Let the congregations who loved Brother Sisco in other days for his work's sake call him to labor for them now. Let this faithful servant be kept busy. I commend him to any congregation which loves the truth presented in its simplicity and purity and logical clarity. A man who wants work and who is capable ought to be given work, not for his sake merely, but for the gospel's.

BIBLE CROSS WORD

THE seven-cross puzzle is interesting because it combines so many short words. You will notice there are few over five spaces long. Yet sometimes these badly broken-up designs have some catch words that exercise your wits as much as the longer ones. But with the exception of one word you should be able to get every single word without reference to a Bible or Riblical dictionary. Biblical dictionary

How to Solve a Cross Word Puzzle

© 1925 The J.C.W. CO. How to Solve a Cross Word Puzzle (25)
To work out this puzzle, the white spaces must be filled with letters forming words answering to the various horizontal and vertical definitions given below. The horizontal and vertical words are not the same, but each gives a clue to the other. The first letter of each word is indicated by a number which refers to the definitions listed below.

It is advisable to first fill in, in both directions, those words which you know to be correct. These will furnish hints to those words which you do not know or had merely guessed at. When the puzzle is solved correctly, the letters in the white spaces will spell words both horizontally and vertically. The black spaces are the blind spots of the puzzle and merely form the pattern, incidentally designating the ends and beginnings of the words contained in the puzzle.

THE WORK OF THE HOLY SPIRIT.

In this article we will study the beginning of the animal kingdom.

"And God said, Let the waters swarm with swarms of living creatures, and let birds fly above the earth in the open firmament of heaven. And God created the great sea monsters, and every living creature that moveth, wherewith the waters swarmed, after their kind, and every winged bird after its kind; and God saw that it was good." (Gen. 1: 20, 21.) This was the creation or beginning of the lower, or monotrematous animals. God spoke, and the seas swarmed with living creatures, and birds flew in the open firmaments of heaven. The Holy Spirit, giving the laws by which this species of animals should be perpetuated, put the fertility or reproductive power in the egg or spawn. Every bird flying in the firmament to-day and every fish swimming in the waters comes from the egg or spawn. After the Holy Spirit had thus placed the reproductive power, there was no further need of the creative power being brought into operation. Therefore, the miraculous period ceased with the creative period.

God then created a higher species, or the mammal animals. "And God said, Let the earth bring forth living creatures after their kind, cattle, and creeping things, and beasts of the earth after their kind: and it was so. And God made the beasts of the earth after their kind, and the cattle after their kind, and everything that creepeth upon the ground after its kind; and God saw that it was good." (Gen. 1: 24, 25.) For six thousand years this kingdom has produced after their kind, according to the law given on the day of creation.

The highest species of the animal kingdom, or of God's creation, was man. "And God said, Let us make man in our image, after our likeness: and let them have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the birds of the heaven, and over the cattle, and over all the earth, and over every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth. And God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him; male and female created he them." (Gen. 1: 26, 27.) Thus God finished creation with his crowning work-man. When God created "male and female," the Holy Spirit gave the law of procreation by which the earth has been peopled and repeopled for six thousand years. Therefore, procreation began where creation ended, and the miraculous period ended with the creative period. "And God blessed them: and God said unto them, Be fruitful, and multiply, and replenish the earth, and subdue it: and have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the birds of the heavens, and over every living thing that moveth upon the earth." (Gen. 1: 28.) This is the simple story of the creation of the material kingdoms as related, in only a few verses, in the Bible. This record of creation, as told in the Bible, is as invulnerable as God himself.

With the thousands of volumes in the world to-day that have "evoluted" from the fertile minds of all the "evolutionists" who have ever lived, there is not one thing discredited that the Bible says about creation. Men and women are on the earth, multiplying, replenishing, and subduing the earth, just as God said they would do. They are over the works of God's hand, where the Bible record says God put them.

What kind of a theory do the evolutionists offer us for man's existence as he is to-day? They say, back in the dim distance of the past, millions of years ago, there was an infinitesimal particle of life. Somehow, this little particle of life began to wiggle itself through the fleeting centuries, overcoming every obstacle and surmounting every difficulty that chanced to be in its way, gathering strength and intelligence as it "evoluted," until finally it evolved the human family.

The long process of evolution, the road which scientists say this small particle of life traveled, has proven a very difficult road for them to travel. They have begun with man as he is, and back-tracked him through the centuries to an impassable gulf—they call it a "missing link." Here they have floundered for decades and are still floundering, trying to find a way by which they hope to span the chasm and trace man back to his supposed origin. The infidel's belief of man's origin, briefly stated, is this: they say they know where man started from, and they know where man is, but they do not know how he got there—that is, they admit, according to their theory of man's origin, there is a link missing, and they do not know where it is or what it was.

The man that would ask you to reject the Bible record of man's origin and accept a theory like the evolution theory is either a fool on the origin of man or he believes you to be one. The Bible is the only book in the world that gives man's origin, mission, and destiny. Let us accept the Bible record with unwavering faith, while the evolutionists hunt the "missing link."—John T. Lewis, in Truth in Love.

McQUIDDY'S RUDIMENTS OF MUSIC

Reading music is purely a mechanical problem, and a too lib-eral use of theory will confuse rather than help in attaining desired results.

Any one may learn to read music accurately and rapidly who will never be able to sing acceptably, for various reasons. Some sing naturally, as do the birds, while others must have long and thorough training be-fore the ability is acquired to sing the Major Diatonic scale correctly; others are unable to sing in "tune," and consequently must have severe drill under a competent instructor before the voice is brought under control. The student will, therefore, understand that neither theoretical technicalities nor voice building will be discussed in this book merely the art of reading music.

There is no better music composer in this or any other country than is the editor of "McQuiddy's Rudiments of Music." Price, 20 cents, single copy, prepaid; $2.25 per dozen, not prepaid. Address

A VISIT TO TOLEDO.

BY W. S. LONG.

On a recent Lord's-day morning at eight o'clock fifteen of the Vinewood Avenue members, of Detroit, Mich., took cars and drove to Toledo, Ohio, to meet with and encourage the faithful in Christ who meet for worship every Lord's day.

The place of meeting in Toledo is the Masonic Temple, on Detroit Avenue near Central Avenue. Should brethren desire to write the brethren there, they may address L. A. Hines or William Paisley, 228 Millard Avenue

Our company reached Toledo at 10:30 A.M., and found a happy, peaceful, and faithful band busy in the Bible-school lesson. They were using Brother E. A. Elam's Lesson Helps in connection with the Bible, and the recitation proved to the visitors that they were students of the Bible. Brother Darnell, of Morrison, Tenn., was teaching one class, and he does his task well.

Toledo has the brightest prospects for a strong congregation in years to come that I have seen in a long time. There are no "cranks" or "hobby riders" to hinder their growth. But a great city like Toledo needs a Paul, or a Barnabas, or a Timothy, or a Titus, to labor there daily for about two years. They have no regular preacher near, and never hear a discourse unless some preacher visits them. Now, how fine and how scriptural it would be for some congregation in Ohio, or Tennessee, or Texas, that has two hundred or three hundred members, to send an evangelist there to help this little band for a year, at least! What church will be like Antioch of old and send this great city a missionary? Watch, and see who will say: "Here am I; send me."

Dallas, Texas, August 15.—I recently labored with the Pearl and Bryan Streets congregation here, preaching twice and teaching the fine class of young people in the Bible school each Lord's day, directing the Wednesday-night meetings, and visiting the sick and conducting funerals through the week. It was a pleasure to be at home for a month and to work under such fine conditions. However, I was only "supplying," as it is commonly called. The last Lord's day in May it was arranged for Brother J. B. Nelson to take up the work at Pearl and Bryan Streets regularly so soon as he could get released from other work which he had promised. He is now back in Dallas, working with this church, and we are expecting to see the congregation go forward to greater things. The work of this church in establishing the Boles Orphan Home is not only a splendid achievement, but sets a good example of doing things through the church as an altogether sufficient and efficient organization.—C. E. Wooldridge.

GOSPEL ADVOCATE

The GOSPEL ADVOCATE is the oldest living periodical published in the interest of the church of Christ. It is now in its sixty-seventh volume, and it has a larger list of regular, paid-up subscribers than it has ever had before. Its circulation is increasing rapidly, and it is daily growing in favor with the people. It contains twenty-four pages, and is issued every week. It is printed in large, clear type, on good paper, and is neatly pasted and trimmed. It has by far the largest circulation of any periodical published south of the Mason and Dixon Line in the interest of the church of Christ. It has regular editorial writers, besides a large number of able and regular contributors. It has all of the regular departments of the best religious periodicals.

In editorial policy it stands for individual consecration, against ecclesiastic organizations, as the scriptural and best method of doing missionary work. It recognizes no organization but the church of Christ as a scriptural medium of converting the world and developing the Christian character.

It opposes all human creeds and ecclesiastic councils, and pleads for the right of each individual to study the Scriptures for himself and formulate his own faith, without dictation or hindrance from churchly dignitaries. It opposes all clerical assumption of official authority in the church, and stands for the scriptural doctrine that each Christian has an office to fill, a work to perform—that all are kings and priests unto God.

It stoutly advocates the doctrine of missions, and argues unceasingly that every Christian is a divinely commissioned missionary and every church is a scripturally organized missionary society. The mission of every Christian and the design of every church is to preach the gospel to all the world.

It believes in, and stoutly advocates, congregational singing, as opposed to select choirs and instrumental performances, as the best and most soul-stirring church music. Let all the people sing. Provide a book for everybody in the house, and let us all make a joyful noise unto the Lord.

From the Brethren

McAlister, Okla., August 19.—The meeting at Myrtle Springs, Texas, was well attended and several were baptized. From there I went to Lockhart, La., and had a fine hearing and four or five baptisms. Next I held a three-Sundays' meeting at Tyrone, Okla., with good crowds and seven baptized. I go next to Largo, Texas, for a twelve-days' meeting. Then I am due at Indianola, Okla., for a tendays' meeting, embracing the first two Sundays in September. I am to begin at Walnut Ridge, Ark., on September 19.—Bynum Black.

Union, S. C., August 17.—Since my last report we have held two meetings. The one at Moore closed with fifteen baptized and the church in fine condition. We closed at Stone Station last night with a very large crowd. We baptized four here. These brethren are planning to build a house immediately. Then we want to have another meeting, and hope to firmly establish the cause here. Brother Mosley is doing a good work with these congregations, and the brethren love him and his faithful companion, and are very thankful to have them in their midst. We plan to begin a tent meeting in Union this week. We are going into a part of the town that we have never had the opportunity to hold a meeting in before. We are having calls from every side to come over and preach in their neighborhood. Yesterday some men came to me and said if I would pitch my tent in a certain place that I would haptize a hundred people. They said came to me and said if I would pitch my tent in a certain place that I would baptize a hundred people. They said that the people were begging for us to come. It makes my heart ache to hear such calls and then not be able to reach them. I can go into such places and baptize several, but then we would not have any one to perfect them in the gospel. Brethren, my heart's desire and prayer to God is that he may send more laborers into this field, for truly the harvest is white and the laborers are few. What will the answer of many churches in will the answer of many churches in will the answer of many churches in that day be, when they say, "No one ever told the gospel plan to us?" How can whole churches sit idly by and have one little week's meeting at the expense of a hundred dollars and think that they are going to rest in the last day? May God hasten the day when the Christians will get the fighting spirit and train and support fighting spirit and train and support the soldiers on the firing line to the pulling down of Satan's stronghold. If you will not send us a preacher and support him, then send us some help to enable us to do more in sending out thousands of tracts and good books to place in the homes of people. We are ready and willing to do this work, if you will help finance it. Send us any good books or tracts that you have that would be good for distribution .- Thomas H. Burton.

ROBINSON.

On May 2, 1925, at her home in West Point, Ky., Sister Bessie Belle (Baker) Robinson was called to rest. At the time of her death she was twenty-nine years and nineteen days of age. Bessie (as we called her) obeyed the gospel early in life at the Green Street church of Christ, in Nashville, Tenn. This congregation was blessed with her presence and influence as a faithful and untiring worker until she moved to Louisville, Ky., in November, 1923. On June 30, 1924, she was married to Mr. Charles N. Robinson, of West Point, Ky. After a life well spent in the service of the Master, she has passed into her eternal rest, to await the coming of her friends and loved ones, whose lives were but made happier and brighter by the pleasant associations with one so kind and true. Funeral services were conducted at the church of Christ in West Point by Brother D. H. Friend, and she (with her little babe) was laid to rest in the Jefferson Cemetery. She leaves her husband, mother, father, four sisters, three brothers, and a host of friends, to mourn her passing. Now to them no word could be more comforting than that revealed to the apostle John: "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord." DOUGLAS S. BRITTAIN.

He lived over seventy-three years, and for forty years was a member of the church. He loved the Gosnel Advocate, and read it as long a member of the church. He loved the Gospel Advocate, and read it as long as he could read. He was a diligent student of the Bible, a lover of the truth, and was faithful to his family and to God. His life here is ended, but the influence of his life will live on. Just three weeks before his death, on May 19, Sister Gregory, his wife, passed away. He and his faithful wife and children tenderly cared for the old people till the last. #### STUDY OF THE BIBLE.

The importance of studying the Bible cannot be overestimated. To a failure to study the Scriptures may be traced many lukewarm churches, many unfortunate circumstances of individuals and communities, and many wasted, wrecked, and unhappy lives. The Bible is the oldest book in the world. That it is the best book in the world has always been, and still is, the consensus of opinion among the best minds. The Bible reveals God to man, the Creator to the creature. It reveals man to himself and gives him, as an introduction to a study of himself, a few brief hints of what he originally was; and also tenders, for his encouragement, a few kind intimations of what he shall hereafter be, in a redeemed and regenerated state. This much of the past and future is benevolently given in order to prepare man for the burden of the revelation, which is to show him what he now is, in a lapsed and fallen state, and to show him what he ought to be, after a new birth, as an adopted child of God and as an heir to immortality.

Man cannot worship God by proxy. He must proceed personally upon his own faith. He can "walk by faith" only in so far as he has intelligently received the word of God and personally understood it, and cannot, therefore, stumble into the worship of God or be led into it by other causes or motives. To perform an act or take a step as service to God without a previous intelligent reception of the word of God to guide in taking the step or performing the act becomes a presumption that angels fear to assume. Except "by faith" no man can be "well pleasing unto God:" and Paul asserts that "whatsoever is not of faith is sin." Faith, then, which "cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God," is an essential prerequisite to that service so justly owed by every man to the great Father of lights, and which, when performed in spirit and truth, is pleasing and acceptable in his sight.

We cannot lay too much stress upon the necessity of the study of the Scriptures. Indeed, ignorance of the teaching of the Bible is, I think, one of the principal causes that make it possible to introduce heresies into the churches and that lie at the basis of the general indifference to the performance of Christian duty. Paul wrote thus to Timothy: "And that from a babe thou hast known the sacred writings which are able to make thee wise unto salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus." (2 Tim. 3: 15.)

Moses, fifteen centuries before the Christian era, said: "Hear, O Israel: Jehovah our God is one Jehovah: and thou shalt love Jehovah thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy might. And these words, which I command thee this day, shall be upon thy heart; and thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children, and shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thy house, and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down, and when thou risest up. And thou shalt bind them for a sign upon thy hand, and they shall be for frontlets between thine eyes. And thou shalt write them upon the doorposts of thy house, and upon thy gates." (Deut. 6: 4-9.) The same passage is repeated almost verbatim in Deut. 11: 18-20. The purpose there given is: "That your days may be multiplied, and the days of your children, in the land which Jehovah sware unto your fathers to give them, as the days of the heavens above the earth." (Verse 21.)

General increase of Bible knowledge naturally decreases and dispels sin. Countries in which the Bible is most read suffer less from lawlessness, vice, and crime. Sectarianism cannot flourish where the people study the Scriptures. Neither Protestant nor Catholic sects can increase or thrive when the people are taught the pure word of God. The Bible is not peculiar to any sect or schism on earth. It disseminated Christianity before any of the doctrines that form the distinctive features of each of the present respective parties were originated.

Taste for reading the Bible is one of the best indications of healthy spiritual and moral character. Only those depraved in mind and poisoned in taste can fail to find pleasure and profit in Bible study. David said of the righteous man: "His delight is in the law of Jehovah; and on his law doth he meditate day and night." (Ps. 1: 2.) As "the fool hath said in his heart, There is no God," so the higher man rises above the fool, the more he delights in God and meditates upon his word. It is peculiarly significant that all great and good men have delighted in reading and meditating upon the Holy Scriptures and that the extent of their genius has invariably determined the extent of their taste for such reading and study. Even men in the business and political world, without having received a Christian education and without being themselves Christians, have instinctively, through the possession of native talent and genius, recognized the presence of a superhuman finger upon the sacred page. Webster, a lawyer, and one of the foremost men in the Senate, read the Bible daily for, as he frequently said, the mental strength that he felt himself receive from such reading; and Andrew Jackson, in his dying hour, impressively pointed to a copy of the Bible lying on the table, and said: "That book is the Rock upon which the republic rests." Napoleon, emperor of infidel France and surrounded by atheists, frequently discoursed at length upon the divinity of Christ and upon the evidences of the divine origin of the Bible. A Catholic, he imprisoned the Pope and often vividly exposed the corruptions of the church; but for the pure word of God, apart from Catholicism and human traditions, he ever, till the last, maintained the greatest reverence and respect. I cannot, for the want of both time and space, adduce even a tithe of what might be presented showing the awe with which men of genius have regarded the Bible and the reverence and profound respect it has always met at their

The Scriptures should be read regularly. Spiritual food is infinitely more essential than physical food. If Moses thought it essential for the Jews, fifteen hundred years before Christ, to memorize the word, to teach it diligently unto their children, to have it as a sign upon their hand and as frontlets between their eyes, and to write it upon their doorposts and upon their gates-I say, if such a diligent study of the word was necessary in order to be a godly Jew, in that ancient age, how much more is a diligent study of the word necessary in order to be an acceptable Christian in this enlightened day! Paul, therefore, recognizing this, says: "Let the word of Christ dwell in you richly," (Col. 3: 16.) Children of God are "filled with the Spirit" to the extent that the words of the Spirit dwell in them. The word of God, the Sun of righteousness, throws a noonday light upon every problem confronting man, pertaining to his duty and happiness, and illuminates the only path that will lead him through Christ to a mansion in the city of God. J. A. A.

TRIBUTE TO THE MEMORY OF WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN.

(D. E. McCorkle, in Williamson County News, July 30.)

Bryan is gone! How this great Captain will be missed! Whether it be friend or foe, all men alike will miss this great outstanding character of the whole world, for he was a world character. No man, perhaps, in history has flashed so suddenly into renown and held his fame so long as has William Jennings Bryan, who on Sunday evening, July 26, passed out from his activities in this world where he had lived and labored and loved so long. True, he was not old in years, being a little past sixty-five, but O how much he had lived in those years! How he had wrought! How he had forced men, not alone in his own country, but the world over, to love and respect him, in spite of the fiercest and most truculent antagonisms! He first attracted nation-wide attention in his famous tariff speech in Congress when the nineties were young; but it was in the National Democratic Convention of 1896 that, in his "Cross of Gold" speech, he electrified the convention and the country and snatched the nomination for the Presidency from Richard P. Bland and other great leaders of his party. From that day he became his party's idol and held the preëminence in its councils till he endured a second defeat for the Presidency, when his star dimmed a little, but only a little, till it regained its splendor and shone as brightly as before, and, with some waxings and wanings, continued to shine as a brilliant luminary till the close of his eventful and splendid life.

From 1896 to 1912 the writer followed his fortunes and his flag with unfaltering trust in his wisdom as a great In the latter year some things happened that caused some abatement of the enthusiasm with which I had followed him, but I never doubted the clean character and purposes of his spotless life. I came to disagree with him on some matters political, and I felt that a vaulting ambition had led him at Baltimore to do what I thought him incapable of doing; but at that he betrayed no greater weakness, if as great, than most ambitious men in public life have shown throughout the tide of time. In his private life he was pure and impeccable. He was a deeply pious and religious man, a quality so rarely found in those who figure conspicuously in politics for such long periods. As an orator he had no equal in this age, nor any superior in any other age. His presence was so impressive, his voice so commanding, and his speech so clear and logical that when he arose to speak he could still the wildest and most tumultuous audience into a silence which was not disturbed even by a whisper. His personality and his oratorical abilities were known and appreciated throughout the civilized world, and he was probably the best-known man in the world. He spoke in the great capitals of Europe and even in Egypt, and commanded rapt attention in all places where he spoke. It was related of him, on unquestionable authority, that one time a number of years ago, when he was a private citizen, not at that time a candidate for any office, he entered, unannounced, a great convention hall in London, where a large political meeting was in progress, and where such men as Chamberlain were to speak; and as Bryan quietly entered the hall he was instantly recognized, and such a cheer as shook the rafters of the big building went up from the throats of that vast throng. This could scarcely have happened with any other private citizen of Perhaps such a demonstration might have happened in the case of a Napoleon whose fame was mainly military; for since it is true of mankind that they are more prone to glorify the destroyers of their kind than their benefactors, great military heroes will evoke applause not accorded to men of peace. But Bryan was preëminently a man of peace, and for peace he would sacrifice high office and "a place in the sun," as he did in giving up the Secretaryship of State in the Wilson cabinet.

His last great work was that of defending the Bible and the Christian religion against the insidious attacks of infidelity under the soft pseudonym of "evolution." In this work he died in the harness, having fought a good and winning fight, a fight which will not be lost though he is gone. In his death there is universal grief; many are the expressions and deep are the feelings of sorrow over his departure, not in this country alone, but all over the civilized world. Even his bitterest foes pause to reverently bow their heads in sadness at his sudden taking off. We will hear that magic voice no more, we will see that impressive gesture not again, we will see that strong mouth and that flashing eye no more, but his great work done in earnestness of purpose and for the good of his fellow man will live on and on as long as hearts hunger after the "Living God."

THE BIBLE AND TESTAMENT FUND.

BY S. F. MORROW.

In Rom. 13: 11, 12, Paul, through the Spirit, says: "And this, knowing the season, that already it is time for you to awake out of sleep; for now is salvation nearer to us than when we first believed. The night is far spent, and the day is at hand: let us therefore cast off the works of darkness, and let us put on the armor of light." Jesus says: "I am the light of the world: he that followeth me shall not walk in the darkness, but shall have the light of life." (John 8: 12.) Yes, while Jesus was here on earth, indeed and in truth he was "the true light" that should give light to every one that cometh into the world. Ps. 119: 105 says: "Thy word is a lamp unto my feet, and light unto my path." From this statement of the sweet singer of Israel, we know when to look for light to-day. From Ps. 138: 2 we learn that God exalts his word above his name. If our God has exalted his word above his name, how precious it should be to every one of us to know what it teaches and to meditate on it day and night, that we may know our duty to our Creator and how we should treat our neighbor!

We have observed for years that those who study the Bible most and love it best, and who commence studying it when young, make the best people in all the world. Teach your children while small that Jehovah is God and is all-powerful; that all blessings come from him; that he is full of grace and truth, and that his word is truth. Fill their little minds full of Bible stories; and when they become large enough to read, give them a New Testament. Live righteously and godly before your children, and practice what you preach. In doing this, you will give to your children and your neighbors' children the greatest fortune that this world affords.

The foregoing scriptural teaching furnishes some of the reasons why we are trying to raise a Bible and Testament fund, that all, as far as possible, may know Jehovah God, from the least to the greatest, and may know that "he is a rewarder of them that seek after him." We all are agreed that to the word of God we must go as a source of all true knowledge. As stated in previous articles on this Bible and New Testament fund, we want every congregation of worshipers to secure a sufficient number of Bibles and Testaments, keep them on hand, and see that every person in each community has one. If any are not able to buy a Bible or Testament, give it to them. Let all who are able pay the price—about half as much as these books sell for at places where they are kept on sale.

Now, some may want to know how this is possible. The

New York Bible Society, which is enabled to manufacture these Bibles and Testaments by gifts of money from good people who want to save the people from sin and eternal condemnation, has agreed to let us handle the books, or will let any one handle them at these prices, provided it is done without profit. I have been using their Bibles and Testaments for years. I do not think I have ever sold one, but I keep a supply of the books on hand. Those who are able will, we think, be glad to pay the price and give some to help sustain this fund.

We are thankful that the brethren are giving liberally to this fund. One brother gave a thousand dollars, one hundred to be paid annually. Others are giving one hundred annually for life. All who want a part in this good work will please write me. Make your own terms, and you and the good Lord, through his teaching, name the amount, remembering that "the Lord loveth a cheerful giver." Some are sending checks to the Gospel Advocate Company, which is right. At the proper time acknowledgment will be made through the Gospel Advocate of the amounts received, together with the names of the contributors. We hope that this work may be perpetuated till our Lord and Master comes. A board of trustees to direct the funds and the distribution of Bibles and Testaments will be selected from among the trustees of the Fanning Orphan School and other good schools of the brotherhood. We have ordered two thousand small Testaments and two hundred large ones, and hope to be able to fill orders soon. Any suggestions will be highly appreciated.

BY JAMES E. CHESSOR.

Doing WELL IN CHRIST.

"And let us not be weary in well-doing: for in due season we shall reap, if we faint not." (Gal. 6: 9.)

One of the most emphatic terms in this verse is "well-doing." We are not to be weary in well-doing. The term occurs at almost the mathematical center of the verse and receives stress of voice in reading. It is so simple that it hardly needs defining. If we reverse the order of the words "well" and "doing," which are connected by the hyphen, we have "doing well."

We are to do well. In what? In the Christian life, to make satisfactory progress, to please God in our work and worship and service. Doing well, then, according to the divine standard of well-doing, not our own—doing God's will, receiving his approbation. And the Father desires that we do well in Christ. Christ was well pleasing to him, and so should Christians be.

Now the Galatian Christians had started out well—
"ye were running well;" but they had been hindered—"who hindered you?" False teachers had come among them and bewitched them. "O foolish Galatians, who did bewitch you, before whose eyes Jesus Christ was openly set forth crucified?" They were in danger of falling away, and so Paul writes them this letter of encouragement that they may with purpose of heart cleave to Christ.
We as Christians can profit by this exhortation.

MUCH GIVEN, MUCH REQUIRED.

In these articles I shall suggest four things that well-doing is not: knowledge, emotion, professing, resolving. First, knowledge is not enough. Knowing is not doing. No Christian can be said to do well if he is ever learning, but never doing. Of course, knowledge is necessary, but knowledge is not enough. It is true, as said Hosea, that without knowledge we perish; but it is equally true that "to him that knoweth to do good, and doeth it not, to him it is sin."

And Christians, as a rule, know more of the divine will than they are disposed to practice. They know to do good, but oftentimes do it not, and thus sin by omission. We are prone to boast about our superior knowledge of the Scriptures. In view of our practice, such boasting is not good. We contend for the word of God, the word in its entirety, without addition or subtraction—the whole truth, and nothing but the truth. We declare the whole counsel of God, contend earnestly for the faith. "To the law and the testimony," is our motto. We speak where the Bible speaks; we are silent where it is silent. We speak as the oracles of God, and try the spirits, whether they be of God. We will have nothing but the Book for our creed. We urge that the inspired word should be rightly divided and applied, handled aright. We meditate upon the holy precepts day and night. We teach it to great and small and everywhere; we would make disciples of all nations. We would fling the torch of the gospel flaming into every benighted soul sitting, cheerless, hopeless, helpless, in the Stygian darkness of the region and shadow of death. them, and to all, we would have light to spring up. We would lift up the Christ, the Light of the world, that the path of every man might be lighted. And for all this we are to be praised. Not a word can be said against such a position. Let the word be sounded out. Let the gospel be preached. Let the world be saved. Let unity prevail.

But we are weak on doing. There's the rub. And our boasted knowledge and fidelity to God's word will avail us nothing, if we fail to do works worthy of and proportionate to our knowledge of the divine will. We must live up to the dictates of our enlightened conscience. And why, indeed, educate the conscience, if only to defile it, to sear it, to stultify it, by irresolution and apathy? Why, indeed, learn what to do, if we are not going to do it? What avails it? Better to be a heathen in darkest Africa than an enlightened Christian in "enlightened" America, if we do nothing! Knowledge is nothing if an enervating incubus lies upon the will. Knowing is not doing, and doing nothing casts the greater reproach upon us in view of our boasted claims to greater knowledge.

Knowledge carries with it responsibility. To increase knowledge, therefore, is to increase the weight of responsibility in geometric ratio. The more we know, the more we must do; and if we fail, the greater will be our condemnation, the sorer our punishment. So taught the Christ. "And that servant, who knew his lord's will, and made not ready, nor did according to his will, shall be beaten with many stripes; but he that knew not, and did things worthy of stripes, shall be beaten with few stripes. And to whomsoever much is given, of him shall much be required: and to whom they commit much, of him shall they ask the more."

Remember, too, that Paul speaks of a "sorer" punishment. It behooves us, therefore, to do according to our lights, as God has given us to understand his will. Much is given, much committed; much shall be required, much asked. Knowing, therefore, our Lord's will, we must do according to his will, or we shall be beaten, not with few, but with many stripes, and the sorer will be our punishment. In view of these principles, we ought to do more, to translate our knowledge into action, into the service of good works. "For now is it high time to awake out of sleep."

"WHAT DOTH IT PROFIT?"

Nor is emotional feeling enough. I do not discount emotion. But emotion is not doing. Feelings are often delusive. It is possible to feel all right and be all wrong. So we cannot rely upon our feelings in doing the will of God. They cannot be trusted. We may, for example, feel that we wish the world converted, and do nothing toward furthering the gospel. The impulse would be commendable, but the failure to act would be ruinous. In that case the good wish would profit nothing.

Of course the feelings must be enlisted in every undertaking for the Lord. We cannot even get into Christ without obeying "from the heart" the gospel of Christ. "But thanks be to God, that, whereas ye were servants of sin, ye became obedient from the heart to that form of teaching whereunto ye were delivered; and being made free from sin, ye became servants of righteousness." Every act of acceptable worship and service is likewise from the heart, or heartfelt. Take the matter of giving for an example. Unless the heart is in the gift, the donor will not be blessed. He must give of his heart's bounty, not from a sense of duty.

"He gives nothing but worthless gold Who gives from a sense of duty,

"And if I bestow all my goods to feed the poor, and if I give my body to be burned, and have not love, it profiteth me nothing." It profits the giver nothing, because his heart is not in the deed. On the other hand, "love" that does not act, like faith without works, is barren, being alone. It profits nobody, neither the well-wisher nor the needy. "If a brother or sister be naked and in lack of daily food, and one of you say unto them, Go in peace, be ye warmed and filled; and yet ye give them not the things needful to the body; what doth it profit?" Indeed, what doth it profit? Deeds without heart are poor enough; they benefit the needy or unfortunate merely. But "heart" without deeds is worse; it eventuates in no blessing at all. The need is for heart and deeds-a heartfelt religion. Then will both "Sir Launfal" and "the beggar" be blessed abundantly.

"Not what we give, but what we share-For the gift without the giver is bare; Who gives himself with his alms feeds three-Himself, his hungering neighbor, and Me."

Doing well in Christ, then, consists of love and deeds of love. It is characterized by a faith that works through love. First we must have knowledge, then faith, then love, then deeds of love. Then shall we have profit indeed, and fruit abounding to our account.

And to do well in Christ we must bear in our lives the fruit of the Spirit-love, joy, peace, long-suffering, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, meekness, self-control. If we have not the Spirit of Christ, we are none of his. We cannot then do well in him. But the Spirit in our hearts will lead us to do good uniformly and invariably. therefore, present ourselves-body, soul, and spirit-unto God, as alive from the dead, and our members as instruments of righteousness. Then shall we be well pleasing to him. Then shall we do well in Christ.

MAN, OR CONSTITUENTS THAT MAKE MEN. BY JIM HALL ELAM.

(Submitted as class work in Cumberland University.)

Did you ever think just what the word "man" means? Does it mean any more in your estimation than the highest type of animals? To me the word "man" means so much that I have found only few in the world. Perhaps some people think that a man is one who is six feet tall and with shoulders two and one-half feet broad, with strength like an ox. But, as I think of a man, so many things are necessary that I don't know what to mention first.

A man is one who puts God first. A man thinks of others as well as himself, and the good that he can do for them. A man will not flatter you when he wants you to do something for him and not speak to you when he doesn't have any need of you.

A man will not lose his individuality in a crowd. A man has the courage of his convictions and is not afraid to say "No," though all the world say "Yes," A man will not allow the overdevelopment of one faculty to stunt or paralyze his other faculties; he will not value his occupation as a means of getting a living, but will see self-development, culture, and manhood in his occupation.

A man has courage and is not a coward in any part of his nature. He is not cursed with some little defect of weakness which cripples his usefulness and neutralizes his

A man is not one-sided in his development, but has a broad view of things and mixes common sense with his theories, and does not let a college education spoil him for practical, everyday life.

A man regards his good name as a priceless treasure. He is full of life and fire, but trains his passions to heed a strong will. He learns to love all beauty, to hate all vileness, and to respect others as himself.

A man is educated all over. He has the acutest sensible nerves, cultured brain, dextrous hands, alert eye, a heart tender, magnanimous, and true.

Here are ten marks of an educated man, by Edward Wiggan, that I found in the American Magazine:

- 1. He keeps his mind open on every question until the evidence is all in.
- He always listens to the man who knows.

3. He never laughs at new ideas.

- 4. He cross-examines his daydreams.
  5. He knows his strong points and plays them.
  6. He knows the value of good habits and how to form them.
- 7. He knows when to think and when to call in the expert to think for him.

  8. You can't sell him magic.

  9. He lives the forward-looking and outward-looking life.

  10. He cultivates a love for the beautiful.

KIPLING'S IDEA OF A MAN.

If you can keep your head when all about you If you can keep your head when all about you Are losing theirs and blaming it on you; If you can trust yourself when men doubt you, But make allowance for their doubting, too; If you can wait, and not be tired by waiting, Or being lied about, don't deal in lies, Or being hated, don't give way to hating, And yet don't look too good nor talk too wise.

If you can make one heap of all your winnings And risk it on a turn of pitch-and-toss,
And lose, and start again at your beginnings,
And never breathe a word of your loss:
If you can force your heart and nerve and sinew
To serve your turn long after they are gone,
And so hold on when there is nothing in you
Except the will which says to them, "Hold on!"

If you can talk with crowds and keep your virtue,
Or walk with kings, nor lose the common touch;
If neither foes nor loving friends can hurt you;
If all men count with you, but none too much:
If you can fill the unforgiving minute
With sixty seconds' worth of distance run,
Yours is the earth and everything that's in it, And-which is more-you'll be a Man, my son!

EDGAR A. GUEST'S "A MAN."

A man doesn't whine at his losses: A man doesn't whimper and fret Or rail at the weight of his crosses,
And ask Life to raise him a pet.
A man doesn't grudgingly labor,
Or look upon toil as a blight;
A man doesn't sneer at his neighbor,
Or sneak from a cause that is right.

A man doesn't sulk when another Succeeds where his efforts have failed; Doesn't keep all his praise for the brother Whose glory is publicly hailed,
And pass by the weak and the humble
As though they were not of his clay;
A man doesn't ceaselessly grumble
When things are not going his way.

A man looks on a woman as tender And gentle, and stands at her side At all times to guard and defend her, And never to scorn or deride. A man looks on life as a mission, To serve just so far as he can; A man holds his noblest ambition On earth is to live as a man.

No man need have any fear of having too high an ambition if his ideals are noble.

A "THUS SAITH THE LORD" FOR WHAT WE TEACH.

BY LEE JACKSON.

In the beginning of our plea for unity upon the basis of the simplicity of New Testament teaching and practice, it became well understood that nothing was to be taught as a matter for belief or practiced in worship which could not be substantiated by a positive "Thus saith the Lord," either by apostolic precept or apostolic example. There are yet living many of our older people who can distinctly remember when it was not thought out of place for a Christian brother to demand this, and no preacher as a leader became prominent enough to be exempt from this demand for a positive "Thus saith the Lord." With the passing of the years, however, and the growth of that spirit of partisan rivalry over issues that have no vital bearing upon either the salvation of men or the living of the Christian life, a change has come, and it is no uncommon thing for brethren to accept teaching as scriptural simply because some favorite leader among us says that it is true to the principles of our plea for the gospel, or at least makes the claim that such teaching is true to a generally accepted understanding as to what the Scriptures teach. Very few persons are thoughtful enough to remember that what is commonly understood to be the teaching of the Scriptures on a question at issue may be a common misunderstanding. This has been found to be true of generally accepted teachings in the past, and it is possible for it to be true of some things for which we are contending as a necessary part of our plea for New Testament teaching.

The most able Bible teachers associated with the Restoration Movement in its beginning were clear in their statements that the primary purpose in Bible revelation was and is to reveal God to man in the Christ as man's Savior, and not for the purpose of making known any system of doctrine as the object of saving belief or faith. Under the Old Testament dispensation, in preparation for the coming of the Christ, God made himself known to Israel, and all teaching given in addition to this evidence of the existence of God and his providential watch care over his people was for the purpose of teaching them necessary obedience and acceptable service; and this principle holds as true respecting God's revelation of himself to man in Christ Jesus, as made known in the New Testament Scriptures. That which it is of supreme importance for men to learn is the testimony that God has given concerning his Son, which testimony is God's ordained means of inducing and supporting faith in that Son as an only and all-sufficient Savior. No reader of the New Testament will meet with any difficulty in learning that the thing of supreme importance to lost men and women is faith in Christ as the Savior, and that this Christ as revealed to us in the Scriptures is the only object toward which the heart's faith can be savingly directed. When this truth that he is God's Son and God's ordained Savior of men is believed in a sufficient degree of strength to induce an unswerving, obedient trust in him as the one alone who can save from the ruin of sin, we can cast aside all other matters of belief, and opinions which are held as beliefs, for through the knowledge of the all-sufficiency of this faith in Christ we know that these beliefs and opinions are worthless. In praying for the unity of his people our Savior conditioned it upon faith in himself. through the word of his apostles, and did not condition it upon any formulated items as a church creed. For this the Christian can always give a "Thus saith the Lord" as the reason for his hope.

Soon after the death of the last of the apostles, and even during the lifetime of the apostles, through misunderstandings, men began drifting away from this simple faith of the gospel, and the groundwork for humanly devised creeds was laid. The apostasy resulted, and the great apostate defender of what was called "an orthodox catholic creed," the church of Rome, was brought into existence. Since the time of this first apostasy and this first formation of a general church body, especially since the time of what is known as the Reformation, creeds, and organized denominational churches in defense of accepted creeds, have continued to multiply; and they will continue to multiply until all true Christians become sufficiently acquainted with the Scriptures to learn that the Christ himself, and not doctrines, is the one only object of the Christian's faith. Even among those who claim to be loyally standing upon the plea for a return to New Testament teaching and practice there appears to exist the same harmful misunderstanding that caused the first apostasy, and which has been the cause of so much confusion, strife, and divisions which have disgraced the cause of Christ through the centuries. Dominated by the notion of an itemized body of tenets which are to be understood and accepted as the truth to be believed, there are honest, conscientious brethren among us who are continually contending for things which have no connection whatever with gospel faith, nor have any bearing upon either scriptural worship or service. Even if some of these good brethren succeed in showing that through the study of the Scriptures they have learned some things that others do not know, and which others are neither prepared to learn nor appreciate, it then becomes their duty to show the vital connection between these things and the gospel of salvation. If it be admitted by these brethren that men can receive the remission of sins, and worship and serve God acceptably and go to heaven when they die without believing the doctrinal tenets they are contending for, they are then admitting that they are calling on men to believe things that are no part of the gospel of Christ; for, as Benjamin Franklin loved to quote, "he that believeth not the gospel shall be damned." In their preaching and contending for these things that are really no part of the gospel, these brethren are bringing themselves under condemnation, and in addition to this they are most certainly doing what the foundation principle of our plea for unity upon the basis of the simplicity and purity of the gospel forbids being done. In exact conformity to New Testament teaching, the original of our plea was that we would not seek to bind anything upon men as a matter of belief which does not essentially belong to the gospel that presents Christ to the world as a Savior, and that in the worship and service of Christians we would require conformity to nothing that is not expressly taught in the New Testament Scriptures. Only the things expressly taught as matters of duty to God and man are vital in worship and in Christian living. A man's opinion that the church and kingdom are equal to the same thing, his opinions regarding the fulfillment of prophecies, or his opinions as to the existence of an indefinable something called the general church, or opinions concerning a coming millennium on earth, are things that have nothing to do with his being fellowshiped in a congregation of New Testament Christians, provided he holds such opinions as personally private property and makes no effort to force their acceptance upon others. However, when a brother gets the erroneous notion in his mind that any one of these opinions is a part of the gospel truth that must be believed, and, therefore, begins to preach it, write it, and contend for its acceptance by others, he becomes a factionist, and should be disciplined as such. In the light of New Testament teaching, the man who creates divisions among brethren by teaching things that are no part of the gospel is committing as great a sin in the sight of God as is the man who causes divisions by introducing worldly innovations into the worship.

Upon the principle of the plea that we are endeavoring to place before the world for acceptance, a Christian brother is always within his rights in demanding a "Thus saith the Lord," showing that what is being taught is essentially a part of the gospel that must be believed, or that it belongs to the wholesome New Testament teaching necessary to the living of the Christian life. In truth, it is the duty of Christians to demand such a "Thus saith the Lord;" and the elders of a congregation, as spiritual overseers, should be well enough informed in the New Testament Scriptures to be able to enter a righteous decision as to whether or not the teacher is giving a competent "Thus saith the Lord." Simply making a matter look plausible, or the presenting of some passage of scripture in support of an opinion when the meaning of such passage is involved in doubt, will not answer the purpose of a positive "Thus saith the Lord." If it is not a part of the gospel that saves from the ruin of sin, its acceptance should not be insisted upon as a test of Christian fellowship, nor when inability to understand it causes wrangling and contentions among the brethren. Some of the deeper things of Bible teaching may be sufficiently apprehended and understood by close students to enable them to arrive at assured conclusions which the vast majority can neither understand nor appreciate; and it is the privilege of such Bible students to hold such conclusions, provided they are not pressed upon those who are not prepared to receive them. Whether true or false, such conclusions held as matters of opinion or belief are no part of the word of God that saves, and, therefore, should not be preached.

The New Testament Scriptures furnish us with two phases of doctrine, or teaching, which preachers or Christian teachers can use without bringing themselves under condemnation. The one is that part of gospel teaching which gives faith in Christ as the Savior, including that which increases or strengthens faith, and the other is that which informs men in regard to duty. Faith causes men to ask, what must we do? And the instruction in regard to duty answers the question by telling what is to be done as well pleasing to God. After men and women have become Christians by being made believers in Christ as the Savior, there is no such thing as searching the New Testament Scriptures to find out what to believe. The faith that is made perfect in obedience to gospel commands places under obligation to study the inspired writings for the purpose of learning duty, and not for the purpose of learning things to believe. The truth that makes free from bondage in sin is the truth that Christ, as God's Son, is our Savior. This truth must be known and obeyed in order to prepare for the life to come.

SOURCES OF THE INSPIRATION OF THE EARLY CHURCH.

BY K. C. MOSER.

Religious indifference is the besetting sin of the churches to-day. Every leader of a congregation knows that to maintain the proper degree of interest is the perplexing problem that always confronts him. It is, of course, comparatively easy to create a temporary enthusiasm. But the reaction that follows a brief revival of interest is so deadening that all the benefits of the revival are lost.

When the leaders of a congregation are compelled to confess that a state of indifference exists, what are they to do? Of course, they have the choice of doing at least two things—the wrong thing and the right thing. By doing the wrong thing, it is possible to appeal to the unspiritual part of the congregation; and here is such an inviting field for the introduction of things that corrupt the worship and service of the Lord that many have been overcome by the temptation. Is it not a fact that an attempt to appeal to the unconverted has been the occasion of the introduction of every innovation into the work and worship of the Lord? But we must not do wrong. Let others set aside the Lord's way for the sensational in order to interest the worldly-minded, if they will, but let us not thus bring ourselves under the condemnation of God.

If, then, we are not to appeal to the lukewarm members, what is to be done? Let us do the right thing; and the right thing is to adopt the Lord's plan. Paul wrote to Timothy: "Every scripture inspired of God is also profitable for teaching, for reproof, for correction, for instruction which is in righteousness: that the man of God may be complete, furnished completely unto every good work. I charge thee in the sight of God, and of Christ Jesus, who shall judge the living and the dead, and by his appearing and his kingdom: preach the word; be urgent in season, out of season; reprove, rebuke, exhort, with all long-suffering and teaching. For the time will come when they will not endure the sound doctrine; but, having itching ears, will heap to themselves teachers after their own lusts; and will turn away their ears from the truth, and turn aside unto fables." (2 Tim. 3: 16, 17; 4: 1-4.)

Every evil with which it is possible for any church to be cursed can be cured, if at all, by the preaching of the word. The itching ear does not need to be satisfied with fables. What it needs is teaching, reproof, correction, and instruction which is in righteousness. A failure to adopt this course results in a twofold evil. The unscriptural are kept in the church, and the church is corrupted also with the innovations that retain the unspiritual. But let us study the sources of the inspiration of the first Christians. First, the novelty of Christianity inspired the early church. Every one is more or less acquainted with the psychological effect of any new enterprise, religious or secular. The first love and interest are probably the most intense. The gospel was something new. Some of the first Christians had witnessed the scenes of the crucifixion or had talked with those who had. The cross was still stained with "the precious blood" of the "Lamb of God;" and the resurrection, the greatest event of the ages, had but recently "abolished death, and brought life and immortality to light," blessing alike both Jew and Gentile; and still fresh in the minds of the apostles were the Lord's ascension and the blessed promise of his return, and the holy enthusiasm thus received was imparted to the young churches as they were stirred with the majesty of the ascension and consoled with the promise of the Lord's return; and then the glorious Pentecost, when the church was sent forth on its mission of saving souls, was the inspiration of every congregation, if not of every individual Christian.

But Christianity is no longer new. If the novelty of Christianity once furnished the early churches with enthusiasm, does not its age now justify, in a measure, a state of indifference? Not at all. If Christianity now lacks the inspiration of the new, it furnishes us with additional proofs of its divinity and worth. It has successfully stood the test of the ages, as it was openly opposed by its enemies and neglected by its friends. But what has Christianity lost by its age? What blessings did it offer the first Christians that it does not offer us? What hope did it furnish them that cannot now serve us as the "anchor of the soul?" Christianity has lost nothing. We have the same Savior, the same offers of mercy, and the same "precious promises." If these things once inspired the children of God, why not now? And they can to the exact degree that we have faith.

But what served to the early church as a source of a more abiding enthusiasm than did the novelty of Christianity was its attitude toward the religion of the Lord. The first Christians were intensely earnest. They had to be, for it cost something to be a Christian then. The price of discipleship was paid with their homes and with even their own lives. Religion with them was not a pious pastime or a convenient avenue of social, financial, and political advantages, nor was the worship of the church an occasion to display their pride before an unconverted world. The issues of Christianity they considered to be eternal. They considered themselves once lost, and realized to an appreciative degree what it means to be saved by the grace of God. They had such a faith in the existence of heaven and hell that they were willing to pay any price to gain the one and evade the other. In their tribulations they rejoiced in hope. Christianity was put first. With them it came before business, pleasure, convenience, and even before life itself. They considered that everything else gained and heaven lost meant eternal ruin. They remembered that Christ had died for them, and they were determined to live and, if necessary, to die for him. They had really been born again; they were new creatures. Their affections were on "things above" and not on this world.

- R. B. Henry, Camden, Tenn., September 4: "I closed a twelve-days' meeting at Carpenter's Schoolhouse last night. One erring child came back and confessed her faults. May the Gospel Advocate and its editors ever live in the hearts of the brotherhood and accomplish great things for our loving Master."
- A. B. Barret closed at Swallowfield, Ky., Friday night, August 28, with one from the Christian Church and one baptized. Brother Barret preached at Chapel Avenue, this city, August 29. He expects to assist in meetings at Ephesus, near Columbia, Tenn.; Hartsville, Tenn.; Waverly-Belmont, this city; and Monticello, Ky.
- Tice Elkins, Dyersburg, Tenn., September 7: "The meeting at Curve, Tenn., closed last night with a number baptized and great encouragement to the church. I found a few homes blessed with the Gospel Advocate, and I can tell its influence wherever I find it. May you live long to bless mankind." It is a shame that Brother Elkins does not find every home blessed with the Advocate. No home can morally, spiritually, intellectually, or financially afford to be without it. We request preachers and elders to suggest to their congregations that every member subscribe for the Advocate.

Two of those restored were from the 'digressives.' The audiences ran from three hundred to fifteen hundred the last night."

- Dr. S. T. Hardison, Lewisburg, Tenn., August 31:
  "Hall L. Calhoun began our meeting on August 16, preaching morning and night for thirteen days, resulting in sixty additions—about fifty baptisms, ten restorations, and memberships taken. One addition by confession and baptism since he left us. Brother Calhoun is a fine preacher, being loyal to the Book and very earnest in his appeal for more work in the church."
- W. M. Oakley, Nashville, Tenn., September 1: "Our meeting at Double Springs, of fourteen days' duration, closed on Sunday night, with five baptized and three restored. Interest in this meeting was fine from start to finish. Notwithstanding the overflow crowds each night, good order prevailed, and the people seemed glad to hear the truth. This meeting is to be under the direction and coöperation of the churches at Sparta, Spencer, and Doyle. After November 1 we will move to Hartsville, Tenn."
- W. H. Neill, Huntsville, Ala., August 30: "R. A. Largen recently closed at Union Grove with thirty-eight baptized and four restored. James M. Neill preached twice to the Merrimac congregation, with one added by baptism; while the writer preached four times to the congregation which meets at W. E. Jackson's, with one restored. L. F. Browning will begin a meeting at Brother Jackson's, Flintville, Route 2, on the third Lord's day in September, in a tent. Brother Browning is to begin at Honeycomb Valley on the first Lord's day in September."
- J. O. Blaine, Portland, Tenn., September 7: "Our annual gospel tent meeting closed yesterday, with thirty-two baptisms, one restoration, two from the Baptists, and one from the Methodists who had been baptized. We, however, do not measure the success of our meeting by the number of additions to the church. The gospel was daily preached to splendid audiences of fifteen or sixteen hundred people who were anxious to hear it. The intolerably hot weather, with the air filled with choking hot dust, hindered much, but we had a glorious meeting which will not soon be forgotten. Brethren, if you want your friends and neighbors to hear the gospel, get a big tent, spread it in some shady grove, and invite N. B. Hardeman to do the preaching. You cannot beat it. Elam Derryberry led the singing."

The following item, clipped from a daily paper, was sent from Henderson, Tenn., August 24: "A surprise wedding happened yesterday when C. M. Foy and Carrie Neal Hardeman ran away and married at Pinson. The parties had kept the matter of their coming marriage to themselves, and the families were surprised, as well as their many friends. The bride was the youngest daughter of Professor and Mrs. N. B. Hardeman, and one of Henderson's most popular and accomplished young ladies. Her winning way and social manner always kept her with a host of friends, besides her wonderful musical talent. She was one of the prettiest and most popular girls ever reared here. The groom is the oldest son of Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Foy and is one of the fine, clean boys of the town. He owns half interest in the ice plant here. Both bride and groom have a large host of friends in this city and section who wish for them a long and happy married life." Sister Hardeman says: "The wedding surprised us greatly, but such things happen in the best regulated families."

"HOW OLD ART THOU?"

BY F. W. SMITH.

"And Pharaoh said unto Jacob, How old art thou?" (Gen. 47: 8.) This question propounded to Jacob, father of the twelve tribes of Israel, by Pharaoh, king of Egypt, is worthy of serious consideration.

Jacob, under the guiding hand of an all-wise Providence, had been led from his native land, the land of Canaan, to scjourn in the land of Egypt. At this time Jacob was very dependent because of a famine that had spread discouragement and desolation broadcast over many lands. But through his son, Joseph, who was the food administrator of Egypt, he was brought to a land of plenty. Through the kindness of the king, Jacob and his sons were settled in the land of Goshen, the most fertile pasture lands in the empire, so well adapted to a pastoral people such as the Israelites had always been.

THE GREATER MEETING THE LESSER.

Upon the arrival of Jacob, the father of the distinguished official, Joseph, the news spread rapidly and soon reached the ears of the king, who spoke to Joseph regarding the proper settlement of his father and brethren. Joseph, filled with gratitude for Pharaoh's benevolence toward his aged and dependent father, presented Jacob to the king, who graciously received the old patriarch, who, in turn, blessed the ruler of Egypt. There was something connected with this meeting that inspired the king's question, "How many are the days of the years of thy life?" Whether it was the "appearance" of Jacob, or the fact of his "numerous posterity," we know not. But the question, with Jacob's answer, is quite suggestive, and I think we may draw some helpful lessons from it.

Replying to Pharaoh's question, Jacob said: "The days of the years of my pilgrimage are a hundred and thirty years: few and evil have been the days of the years of my life, and they have not attained unto the days of the years of the life of my fathers in the days of their pilgrimage." (Gen. 47: 9.) Notwithstanding Jacob's poverty and dependence upon the king of Egypt, he was an infinitely greater man than Pharaoh, and it was in truth the greater meeting the lesser.

LIFE IS A PILGRIMAGE.

The first lesson we may glean from this bit of sacred history is, we are pilgrims on the earth. Jacob so regarded his life in the answer he gave to Pharaoh, and so did all of the ancient worthies. "These all died in faith, not having received the promises, but having seen them and greeted them from afar, and having confessed that they were strangers and pilgrims on the earth." (Heb. 11: 13.) With such a conception of life, Jacob, with all the saints of old, was inspired with a zeal and hope expressed as follows: "For they that say such things make it manifest that they are seeking after a country of their own." (Verse 14.) That country is described as "the city which hath the foundations, whose builder and maker is God."

Yes, the saints are pilgrims, travelers from time to eternity, and we may very aptly apply the words of Joshua addressed to Israel, "Ye have not passed this way before," to saintly pilgrims; and we may go further by saying of the pilgrims from time to eternity: "Ye will not pass this way again."

When about to cross the border between the wilderness and the promised land, Joshua gave instructions for the march. The people were to follow the ark of the covenant, where God's presence abode, as their only safe guide. (Josh. 3: 1-4.) How fitting and applicable was this journey to that of the pilgrim whose face is turned toward the heavenly Canaan! His only safe guide is the Lord Jesus Christ. And since the saint passes through this life but once, how precious should be the moments, and how they should be utilized in a preparation for crossing the "border land!"

THE EVIL OF JACOB'S LIFE.

In his answer to Pharaoh, Jacob said: "Few and evil have been the days of the years of my life." Taking the word "evil" to mean the hardships, disappointments, and struggles of life, Jacob had a bitter experience. He was a deceiver of his old blind father, brought about by a sharp bargain with Esau, his brother, buying the "birthright" with a mess of pottage. (Gen. 25: 29-34; 27: 1-29.) Because of this deception he became a fugitive from the wrath of Esau, sleeping upon the plain with a stone for a pillow, and finally being deceived by his uncle, Laban, laboring "fourteen years" for his wife, Rachel. (Gen. 29: 13-28.)

The "fewness" of Jacob's years were measured, of course, in the light of a never-ending life beyond the grave. The sojourn of man on this earth is brief, indeed, when compared to an endless existence awaiting him on the other side, and for this reason the matter of existence here becomes one of the most serious concern because of its weighty consequences.

ONE MAY BE OLD IN DIFFERENT WAYS.

The question, "How old art thou?" may be considered not only in the literal sense of days, months, and years, but also in the sense of experience, or the mode of living. Many are "old" in the ways of the world and the service of Satan ere the bloom of youth has faded from the cheeks. In this age of revelry there are boys and girls as old as were their grandparents in middle life. They know much more of things about which they should be profoundly ignorant than did their parents at marriage. One may be old in sin and young in years, and because of the excesses in dissipated lives many young people bear upon their persons the marks of age caused by traveling in the way of transgression.

Hence, the question should become a personal one, propounded as follows: "How old am I?" The solution should not be sought from the family record, but from a searching inquiry into personal experience. What has been and is the record of our lives? Are we filling our lives with the dreadful things that will eternally damn us? "How old art thou?"

THE INFLUENCE AND EXAMPLE OF PREACHERS.

BY E. A. ELAM.

Continuing from last week, it must be said that the influence which preachers exert, the example which they set, and their responsibility for their example and influence should be emphasized with much force. They cannot lose sight of their example and influence.

Preachers cannot fail to realize that they set some sort of example, exert some sort of influence, and are responsible to God for their conduct. Closing their eyes to such things wholly disqualifies them as preachers of the gospel. One who feels no sense of responsibility for his example and influence cannot in such condition of heart become a Christian, to say nothing of being a teacher in Israel. Yet, if these reports referred to be true, some preachers bluster along regardless of responsibility to God and men. Their main purpose seems to be to "get by," to use a colloquialism, with their dishonesty, immorality, or otherwise questionable conduct. If they can hold their place as "evangelists," their reputations as preachers, and continue their shady practices, they seem satisfied, regardless of what their private lives may be.

The influence and example of preachers and other teachers are matters of very great importance, as is learned from the teaching of the Bible. This is true from the fact that God has made them an object of clear and strong teaching. Paul emphasizes the fact that he had not only taught the church at Ephesus the whole counsel of God. but that he had set the proper example in all things. (Acts 33: 35.) He exhorted the Corinthians to be imitators of him, even as he was also of Christ. (1 Cor. 11: 1.) He furthermore exhorted them to receive him, saying: "Oen your hearts to us: we wronged no man, we corruped no man, we took advantage of no man." (2 Cor. 7: 2) While he was at Corinth eighteen months at the firstand worked at times with his own hands for his support (Acts 18: 3; 1 Cor. 4: 12; 2 Cor. 11: 7-10; 12: 13), he le't there not owing any man a dollar; neither did he compain that he could not pay his debts because the churc had not paid him. In no respect did he take advanage of any man. He was thoroughly honest, and not ony paid all his bills, but set the church the example of doirs the same. He corrupted no man by any sort of bad example. He was true and righteous in all his dealings wih men. He was clean, pure, and chaste in all his assolations with women. He declares that he brought every "hought into captivity to the obedience of Christ." (2 Cor. 10: 5.) His sole desire in his deportment in public orprivate life was to win souls to Christ.

Paul's instructions to Timothy was that he should live the samepure and holy life. For instance: "Keep thyself pure." 'But flee youthful lusts, and follow after right-eousness, faith, love, peace, with them that call on the Lord out of a pure heart." (2 Tim. 2: 22.) He should treat "the lder women as mothers; the younger as sisters, in all purty." (1 Tim. 5: 2.) "Let no man despise thy youth; bu be thou an ensample to them that believe, in word, in manner of life, in love, in faith, in purity." (1 Tim. 4: 12.)

Paul says the same to Titus: "In all things showing thyself an example of good works." (Tit. 2: 7.) "Let no man despise thee." (Verse 15.)

This is sufficient for all preachers who desire to obey God, to exert an influence for good, and to win souls to Christ. Men who have not this desire, however learned, eloquent, or entertaining as speakers they may be, are not only unfit to preach, but are dangerous characters. It is the duty of elders and all other members of all congregations to see that all preachers whose services they seek are such in life and character as the Lord commends.

That elders should be qualified to teach the word of God and should set a pure and good example are matters of little or no importance to many. The teaching of the New Testament on this subject is almost out of use in not a few places. "Neither as lording it over the charge allotted to you, but making yourselves ensamples to the flock." (1 Pet. 5: 3.) "Considering the issue of their life, imitate their faith." (Heb. 13: 7.) "Take heed unto yourselves, and to all the flock, in which the Holy Spirit hath made you bishops [overseers], to feed the church of the Lord which he purchased with his own blood." (Acts 20: 28.) What is meant by taking "heed unto yourselves?" This must be done first; afterwards the flock must be attended to. This means, of course, that elders are to guard their own hearts and lives and to keep them worthy, pure, and holy. Also, they are to consider and work for and pray for the harmony, peace, and spiritual development of the church. They should by example and teaching see that all the church are truthful, honest, upright, meet their obligations, worship God truly, and make proper spiritual development.

But all who read the New Testament at all know that it teaches preachers and elders all these responsibilities and duties. We do not feel that we are teaching something which they do not know. We are studying and praying and trying to learn how to induce some preachers and some elders to live the pure and consistent lives which they should.

But all, whether preachers or not, exert an influence. One cannot live without exerting an influence either good or evil. Some kind of influence goes out from one as heat and light go out from the sun. One's deportment, one's dress, one's conversation, one's associations—each carries its influence, and all together exert a still greater influence.

Men are known by the company they keep. Birds of a feather flock together. Water seeks its level. But water cannot rise higher than its source. Neither can a preacher. The fountain cannot "send forth at the same opening sweet water and bitter." Make the fountain pure and the water will be pure; make the tree good and the fruit will be good. Every one should believe God when he says: "Be not deceived: evil companionships corrupt good morals." Like attracts like. If preachers are frivolous, like to gossip, are scandalmongers, heresy hunters, etc., they will be attracted by such persons, and will listen to their stories. Turn an innocent, humble lamb on a farm, and it will seek and find the sheep; but turn a goose on a farm, and it will seek and find the geese.

Walk with wise men, and thou shalt be wise; but the companion of fools shall smart for it. (Prov. 13: 20.)

All the teaching of God on these points should be accepted with all faith and firmness, and should be practiced with all the self-denial and earnestness as all other commandments of the gospel. These points should be made just as clear and strong and as often as the teaching of Christ against any sectarian teaching contrary to the Bible. Is not he who does not so teach a sectarian? It is a heroic and glorious thing to teach the whole will of God, and especially when it condemns oneself. "Happy is he that judgeth [condemneth] not himself in that which he approveth." How appropriate the scripture, "Physician, heal thyself;" and:

Thou therefore that teachest another, teachest thou not thyself? thou that preachest a man should not steal, dost thou steal? thou that sayest a man should not commit adultery, dost thou commit adultery? thou that abhorrest idols, dost thou rob temples? thou who gloriest in the law, through thy transgression of the law dishonorest thou God? (Rom. 2: 21-23.)

What if a preacher is strong in the pulpit and in public discussion against denominationalism and sectarianism and all sectarian teaching, but will not pay his debts, or defrauds others in some other way, or steals otherwise, or commits adultery; how does he stand before God and all true and good men? God's teaching here comes against him with divine force. How can such a man face an audience, claiming to be a follower of the pure, sinless Christ and a servant of the righteous and holy God, as a teacher of the truth? One is not sinless and perfect in holiness; but one should not act a Pharisee or play the hypocrite, but should keep unspotted from the world.

One is responsible to God and men for the influence one exerts. For the good influence one is greatly blessed; for an evil influence one is cursed. This is taught with great force by the Savior in declaring that his disciples are the "salt of the earth" and "the light of the world." "A city set on a hill cannot be hid." "Even so let your light shine before men; that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father who is in heaven." This teaching was applied to the apostles as much so as to all Christ's disciples. It applies with the same force to preachers of to-day. The influence is exerted by their good workstheir private and daily lives. All see this. Then why do not all try to live as Christ directs? There is nothing more clearly and strongly and abundantly taught in the New Testament than this. If the salt has lost its savor, it is fit neither for the land nor the dunghill. disciples of Christ have lost their influence for good by a failure to live the Christian life, they are good for nothing as Christians. How much less are preachers and elders fit for anything when they have lost their influence?

Another forceful consideration is: Preachers are much more responsible for their influence, because they have set themselves up as teachers of babes, as guides to the blind, as lights in the church, and as examples to the world. Their clearest, strongest, most logical, and most convincing preaching is their humble and consistent and godly Christian life. Without such life they are not only hindrances, but curses to the church.

FAITH ALONE AND FAITH WITHOUT WORKS.

BY F. B. SRYGLEY.

From the Program and Bulletin of the Trinity Methodist Church, of Los Angeles, Cal., Robert Pierce ("Bob") Shuler, pastor, I take the following, which is given as a portion of "the creed on which we stand:"

We also believe that Christians should be good Americans, upright citizens, standing for decency, morality, right, and justice, and representing Jesus Christ in daily deportment. We believe that Jesus Christ must save this world by saving the souls of individuals, and we also believe that every saved soul should eagerly join in the program of Jesus, as taught by him, in helping humanity, in lifting the fallen, in driving back evil conditions, and in making this old world a better world in which human beings may live. We believe that faith alone is sufficient to salvation, a salvation perfectly accomplished and altogether complete, but we positively hold that faith without works is dead.

It is not clear to me what the gentleman means by "a salvation perfectly accomplished and altogether complete." Does Christ offer any other salvation to the world than a salvation which is "perfectly accomplished?" Since Christ saves, how could be save imperfectly, and how could the salvation be anything but complete? Does he mean to intimate that any one believes in a salvation that is not "perfectly accomplished" or that is in any way incomplete? It is not certain what he means by "faith alone," which he says he believes "is sufficient to salvation," and yet "we positively hold that faith without works is dead." He either holds to a thing which he does not believe, or else he believes he is saved by a "dead faith." Faith with works would certainly not be faith alone. Faith alone is faith without anything, or "alone" does not mean what I thought it did. Faith alone, I think, means faith by itself, or faith without anything but faith. That would exclude the blood of Christ, the life of Christ, or the gospel of Christ. If a sinner is required to repent in order to be saved, then salvation is not by faith alone. If one must both believe and pray in order to be saved, then salvation is not by faith alone, or one and one do not make two. If faith can include repentance and prayer and still be faith alone, why can it not include baptism and still be faith alone? "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." In that sentence faith seems to be one thing and baptism another, but both come before the promise of salvation. What right has "Bob" Shuler or any one else to promise salvation on less conditions than Christ has promised it? Christ is the one to save, and he ought to have the right to give the conditions. It does not make any difference what Mr. Shuler believes or what he holds to, he cannot save a sinner in any way. Since Christ alone can save, one had better believe in his conditions and hold to them. "Even so faith, if it hath not works, is dead, being alone. Yea, a man may say, Thou hast faith, and I have works: show me thy faith without thy works, and I will show thee my faith by my works." (James 2: 17, 18.) How can a sinner show his faith without works? And if he cannot, how can Mr. Shuler know that he has faith? he has any faith, it is dead; and certainly a dead faith cannot save. Mr. Shuler had better believe what he holds to, that "faith without works is dead," and stop trying to teach people to depend on a dead faith to bring to them a salvation that is "perfect and complete."

JUDGE M. H. MEEKS. BY T. B. LARIMORE.

"Friends who have loved me are slipping away."

Marcus Henry Meeks was born near Stantonville, Ic-Nairy County, Tenn., May 9, 1852. His father, Cen. John Henderson Meeks, was a typical Southern gentlenan of the very finest type, who, through his famous kinsnan, John Henderson, for whom he was named, was cleely related to Revolutionary heroes who fought under Washington for the freedom that we enjoy. I lived in the lome of General Meeks so long, and was treated so much lke a bred and born member of the family, that I cannot write what I want to write about his son without writing something about him. Sterling integrity and absolute ferlessness are prominent characteristics of the Meeks amily. Notwithstanding General Meeks' son John fought Gant at Shiloh, April 6, 1862, General Meeks visited Genera Grant, a few days after that sanguinary struggle, and, s Free and Accepted Masons, they enjoyed a fraternal coversation. Thenceforth General Meeks, who never weered in his loyalty to the Democratic party or to the Soutl always believed and said Grant was a good man, wb deeply deplored the death, destruction, devastation, an desolation incident to the war.

I knew M. H. Meeks as Judge Meeks, but muh longer, better, and more intimately as "Henry," my fiend, my pupil, and my partner in many of the minor bates of life, and I never saw him manifest fear or an incuation to shift responsibility from his own shoulders and thus burden another. He was always willing to ber his own burdens and help his friends bear theirs. Onc, when his office and that of his friend, H. C. Lassing, were nearly one and the same, Mr. Lassing had an important case in Kentucky; and when the case was to be tried, Henry went with him for the rest and recreation the trip might afford him. However, having heard the evidence, believing Mr. Lassing's client to be in the right, Henry made one of his characteristic speeches in his favor. Mr. Lassing's client, having gained the case, asked Henry: "What do I owe you?" "Not a cent," was the reply. But the grateful man handed Henry a check for a thousand dollars, and the incident was closed.

As lawyer and judge, Henry made an enviable record, as is well known. Early in his public career he served as attorney-general in one of Tennessee's circuits, was a highly honored member of the Nashville bar, served as judge of the Second Circuit Court twelve years, and also served as State Senator from Davidson County.

As cheerful as he was bright, he had at command an almost inexhaustible fund of incidents, amusing and interesting, that he had gathered in his work in various fields, and he told those incidents in a most delightful way. Nine years his senior and a long time his teacher, he never grew so great or rose so high as to fail to manifest toward me the deference he deemed due; and yet our relations were so easy and so cordial that I always thoroughly enjoyed being with him, talking to him and listening to him.

He obeyed the gospel in his early youth and became somewhat prominent in religious activities; but, if I understood him—and he was not hard to understand—he withdrew from all affiliation with the congregation with which he had long worshiped and said he would work and worship the remnant of his days with the Central church of Christ our great and good brother, A. M. Burton, is establishing south of and very near to the McKendree Church, in Nashville. He was fully in sympathy with that work, and would have helped it had he lived—and what a wonderful helper he would have been!

He was a tender, considerate husband to the bereaved wife who mourns him; a loving father to the two daughters and the son he leaves behind, as also to the well-beloved older son who preceded him to the grave a few years; an affectionate brother to his two sisters, who alone are left of the once large and happy family of which he was a beloved member; faithful to all his kindred and friends. In his passing many have lost much, and I believe to a majority of them I could truthfully say, "I have lost more." Once when I was about to begin a long journey, he said to me: "If at any time in all this wide, wide world, you get into trouble and need me, just touch the button, and I'll be there." Few losses can be greater or sadder than the loss of such a friend. Good-by, Henry—good-by—but not forever.

IN MEMORIAM. BY F. W. SMITH.

Miss Margaret Roberts was born in 1849, in Williamson County, Tenn., near Triune, in the house her grandfather built on removing from Wythe County, Va., and in which her father and mother were married, and where she graced the family circle with the charm of her beautiful life so long.

About five years ago, she, with her sister-in-law, Mrs. Mamie Cayce Roberts; her sister, Mrs. Bettie Ogilvie; and her nephew, Dan H. Roberts, left the old home of hallowed and blessed memories for Franklin, Tenn., where she remained until crossing over to the other side, May 7, 1925.

Her going away was sudden and without any apparent pain, she having eaten supper with the family and conversed until ten o'clock; but within two hours she had crossed the border between time and eternity, thus reminding us how quickly and unexpectedly we may be called from home and loved ones. Having known this good woman for several years and having had the opportunity to study her character, I hesitate not to say the following: Miss Margaret was a perfect type of that noble womanhood for which the South has ever been noted. She combined all the graces of true womanhood—modest as an angel, refined and cultured, cherishing only the loftiest ideals of life, and with a tenderness of heart and benevolence of soul that endeared her to all with whom she came in contact. She was educated at Mary Sharp College, Winchester, Tenn., a female institution which, during its existence, was unsurpassed by any in the land. Her home training and that received at college developed the native powers of this gentle woman, fitting her for the duties of life which she so nobly performed.

With a gentleness of speech and frankness of manner, she reminded one at once of being in the presence of a queenly woman, one that challenged the greatest respect and highest admiration. Such women exert an influence upon the hearts and lives of people that tend to mold characters of the highest and best type. Hence, while Miss Margaret is dead, she yet lives, as Enoch of old. We can, therefore, say:

Were a star quenched on high,
For ages would its light,
Still wandering downward through the sky,
Beam on our mortal sight.
So when a good woman dies,
For years beyond our ken
The light she leaves behind her shines
Upon the paths of men.

This good woman was never married, but she was indeed a mother to nieces, nephews, and orphans, who now rise up and call her blessed. She was baptized by James E. Scobey, of blessed memory, and attended, when able to do so, the church in Franklin. She leaves one brother, T. B. Roberts, and one sister, Mrs. Bettie Ogilvie, to mourn their loss.

The writer conducted the funeral services in the presence of a large number of friends and relatives, and the remains were gently laid to rest in beautiful Mount Hope, to await the resurrection call.

Lee Jackson, Oakland, Miss., August 27: "J. Ridley Stroop, of David Lipscomb College, closed a meeting with the Sylvan Knoll congregation, four miles west of Coffeeville, Miss., with two baptisms. Brother Stroop next went to Jackson's Grove, in Tallahatchie County, where he preached six sermons to large and interested audiences. Jack Meyer began our meeting in Oakland on Tuesday night."

J. S. Newman, San Antonio, Texas, August 17: "It is refreshing and gratifying to read the reports of so many good meetings in the Gospel Advocate. Sin appears to be raging, and false teachers are still abroad in the land, not sparing the flock. Regardless of the conditions that exist, there are many who will hear and give heed to the message of life. The cause at 3432 South Flores Street has had a steady growth for several months. There were two baptisms on the second Sunday in this month, and two identified themselves with the congregation last Sunday. I appreciate the many good things brought to us by the Gospel Advocate."

QUERY DEPARTMENT

BY H. LEO BOLES

What does Christ mean when he says, "Every plant which my heavenly Father planted not, shall be rooted up?" (Matt. 15: 13.)—L. H. SHOULDERS.

Jesus is here answering a complaint which was made by the Pharisees to his teaching. He compares the Pharisees to plants in a garden that were not put there by the owner of the garden and declares that they shall be rooted up. The Pharisees were teaching certain things without any authority from God, and Jesus was teaching them with others that anything and everything that did not come from the authority of God should be destroyed. While it had direct application to the false teachings of the Pharisees, it has application to any false teaching of to-day. The principle is a general principle.

I am under the impression that I have read somewhere (perhaps in the Gospel Advocate) that Brother David Lipscomb never took a formal confession from a candidate for baptism. Why should it be taken, seeing that all Greek scholars admit that the thirty-seventh verse of the eighth chapter of the Acts of Apostles is an interpolation and not in the Greek manuscripts? And why do our preachers use the American Revised Version until they get to Philip and the eunuch, and then go back to the King James translation?—G. F. Mills, Midlothian, Texas.

I think that our brother is mistaken in his impression that Brother David Lipscomb "never took a formal confession from a candidate for baptism." Brother Lipscomb taught, as do the Scriptures, that only believing penitents are to be baptized, and that the administrator should know, if he can, that the person to be baptized is prepared in heart and life for baptism. One of the ways that the administrator has of finding out whether the candidate is a believer is to ask the candidate. This is done by what is usually termed "the formal confession." Of course the Rible teaches nothing about "a formal confession." Brother Lipscomb taught that "the confession" was not essential to salvation, as is baptism and repentance. We have great respect for what Brother Lipscomb and other great Bible scholars taught, but we should be more interested in what the New Testament teaches. I am sure that if Brother Lipscomb were living now he would commend, not his own teaching, but the teaching of the New Testament. Many preachers learned to quote from the Authorized Version before they began using the Revised Version and learned the thirty-seventh verse of the eighth chapter of the Acts of Apostles from the King James Version. I suppose this is why they continue to quote it. * *

We have Sunday school at 10 A.M. and preaching at 11 A.M., at the schoolhouse. The Baptists have what they call "B. Y. P. U." at 3:30 P.M. The Baptists use the organ. Is it scriptural for the Christians and Baptists to unite and have an all-day singing, leaving off Sunday school and preaching, but pushing the organ aside and taking the Lord's Supper the last thing before closing?—MRS. I. B. WILSON.

Why "push the organ aside and take the Lord's Supper?" Why should the organ be "pushed aside" at all? If it is wrong to use the organ in one item of worship, it is wrong to use it in others. Eating the Lord's Supper is one item of the worship and should not be corrupted any more than other items, and the other items should not be corrupted any more than the eating of the Lord's Supper. The query shows a confusion of the scriptural items of worship. I would suggest the following admonition: "Be not unequally yoked with unbelievers: for what fellowship have righteousness and iniquity? or what communion hath light with darkness? And what concord hath Christ with Belial? or what portion hath a believer with an unbeliever? And what agreement hath a temple of God with idols? for we are a temple of the living God; even as God said, I will dwell in them, and walk in them; and I will be their God, and they shall be my people. Wherefore come ye out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch no unclean thing; and I will receive you, and will be to you a father, and ye shall be to me sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty." (2 Cor. 6: 14-18.)

If husband and wife are separated for the scriptural cause, is it right for the innocent party to marry again?—X.

I think so. The Scriptures teach that there is but one cause which justifies an absolute divorce. Jesus teaches as follows: "It was said also, Whosoever shall put away his wife, let him give her a writing of divorcement: but I say unto you, that every one that putteth away his wife, saving for the cause of fornication, maketh her an adulteress: and whosoever shall marry her when she is put away committeth adultery." (Matt. 5: 31, 32.) Again, it is said: "And there came unto him Pharisees, trying him, and saying, Is it lawful for a man to put away his wife for every cause? And he answered and said, Have ye not read, that he who made them from the beginning made them male and female, and said, For this cause shall a man leave his father and mother, and shall cleave to his wife: and the two shall become one flesh? So that they are no more two, but one flesh. What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder. They say unto him, Why then did Moses command to give a bill of divorcement, and to put her away? He saith unto them. Moses for your hardness of heart suffered you to put away your wives; but from the beginning it hath not been so. And I say unto you, Whosoever shall put away his wife, except for fornication, and shall marry another, committeth adultery: and he that marrieth her when she is put away committeth adultery." (Matt. 19: 3-9.) The Scriptures abundantly teach that there is but one cause for absolute divorce. It has always been a disputed question whether or not one has the right to marry again. Many have contended that there is no scriptural authority for marrying again while both parties are alive; other good and wise men have held that the innocent party may marry even while the guilty party is still alive. We know that it is safe not to marry.

(1) Can the church withhold the Lord's Supper from a member that has been withdrawn from? Does not 1 Cor. 11: 28 teach that every one must prove himself, or examine himself? Does not 1 Cor. 5: 11 refer to the temporal meal?—George J. Hipp, Fort Pierce, Fla.

1. Christianity is preëminently a voluntary service. No force or coercion can be used, scripturally, to make any one do anything in the service of God; neither can any force or coercion be used to keep any one from doing what that one wishes to do in the service of God. No church has any power or authority to keep any one from eating the Lord's Supper. The scripture bearing upon this question or point is: "But let a man prove himself, and so let him eat of the bread, and drink of the cup. For he that eateth and drinketh, eateth and drinketh judgment unto himself, if he discern not the body." (1 Cor. 11: 28, 29.)

2. The scripture referred to reads as follows: "But as it is, I wrote unto you not to keep company, if any man that is named a brother be a fornicator, or covetous, or an idolater, or a reviler, or a drunkard, or an extortioner; with such a one no, not to eat." (1 Cor. 5: 11.) Paul is here giving instructions to members of the body of Christ and teaching them that they cannot encourage sin or wrongdoing in any one, and especially other members of the church. They are to have no interchange of hospitality which would encourage or imply brotherly recognition of the wrong or evil that is done, so that the church should not be put to shame by such evil. The eating referred to seems to be a common meal in the home.

THE SUPREMACY OF WOMAN.

(Speech of James A. Allen at the second annual banquet of the Jeffersonian Club, Nashville, Tenn., about 1908.)

Mr. Chairman, Ladies and Gentlemen: It is with pleasure that I rise to lay a flower at the feet of that gentle and lovable goddess that we call "Woman." What propriety, let me ask, would there be in raising the question at this late day as to whether or not she reigns supreme? Though she was created of a rib of man, she has shown that she can upset the head of man and make him bite the dust in his homage and in his worship. At her feet man lays down all that he possesses: he gives her his wealth, his fortune, and his fame; he begs her, as he trembles and quivers, to picase take his heart; and there is nothing that man possesses that he would withhold from her-except his seat on a street car.

I need not inform you, ladies and gentlemen, that woman's first home was in Eden. There man married woman. It is strange to us, who inhabit single blessedness, that that event should have suggested to Milton a "Paradise Lost." A deep sleep fell upon man, and as he slept he dreamed of sweet eyes and sunny curls. A rib was taken from his side, and some evil-minded persons have said that that first sleep of man was his last repose.

Woman, indeed, is a queenly tyrant. Men who have led armies from conquest to conquest have trembled before her bewitching eyes. Her beauty is a cruel despot that has caused men to become enemies and struggle to the death. and there is no tyranny like the tyranny of her smiles. I pity the poor man to whom Fate has dealt a losing hand in the great game of Hearts, and I recommend to Mr. Blank to look up through his tears and thank the great Matchmaker that somewhere in this wide world there is a mate for every one. I hope we may all learn great diplomatic lessons from Mr. Blank, who has informed us that bitter experience has taught him that when one's rival has a standing date on Sunday night the "jig is up" and the game is over.

Woman is a tyrant. She is a beautiful rod that sways over man; but, gentlemen, take my advice and kiss the rod. She is the greatest conundrum of the twentieth century; but if we cannot guess her, we will not give her up.

Gentlemen, if you will listen to the conversation of a crowd of ladies for just a few minutes, you will discover that one of the chief ambitions of woman is to learn how to manage man. We remember that all down through the ages the dazzling beauty of woman has enabled her to wind a dozen men around her finger, and that in the beginning, when our Mother Eve found that there was no other man in the garden but her husband, she took to flirting with the Devil. And this is a more cruel decree of Fate than to live in that sad land of Utah, where a single death may make a dozen widows.

Gentlemen, if I had the eloquence of Demosthenes, or if I could wield the word-building powers of Patrick Henry, or if I could speak with the tongue of an angel, I would make haste to acknowledge my inability to offer an adequate tribute to the power and supremacy of a noble woman. Her smile is a reward that stimulates men to genius and industry, and her sympathy in adversity, like a beacon of hope, throws a light upon a cloud of gloom. As both a business and social partner, I recommend her to every young bachelor around this banquet board.

I have no wish to lisp a word against the supremacy and glorious despotism of beautiful woman. Every good man is willing for her reign to be supreme. I remember the

A MARRIAGE CEREMONY.

(The following ceremony was used by Brother E. A. Elam in a Tennessee wedding in July, 1911.)

Amidst the music, beauty, and magnificence of his Edenic home, "Man, the hermit, sighed 'till woman smiled." For what to him was the bright sky that shone not upon another; or what the beauty of such rich profusion of variegated flowers and luscious fruits hanging from perfumed bowers, without the rose-tinted cheek, the coral lips wet with the dew of love, and the sparkle of the love-lit eye; or what the music of rippling brooks, humming bees, and sweet-voiced birds, without the soothing tones of woman's voice? "For the world is full of beauty when the heart is full of love," So, when it was not good for man to be alone, God made a helpmate for him. Of the dust of the earth God created man, akin to the hard rocks and the strong fibers of the trees, able to suffer and endure: but of man, and for man, God made woman-not, says one, from his head, to be his ruler, nor from his heel, to be trampled beneath his foot, but from his side nearest his heart, to be loved and protected by him and to love him in return, bone of his bone and flesh of his flesh, as pure as the lily unkissed by the morning sun, as beautiful as the full-blown rose, as modest as the daisy of the field or the drooping violet, as sweet as the pink all covered with the dew, as graceful as the fern, and as trusting as the clinging vine. "For this cause," says God, "shall a man leave his father and mother, and shall cleave to his wife: and the two shall become one flesh." [Here the marriage vows

Like two streams flowing from opposite mountains, sparkling, laughing, and leaping from cleft to cleft, and drawing nearer together until they unite in the river below, so these young lives now unite in the pure, deep stream of love, which becomes purer and deeper, broader and stronger, as the years come and go, until it is lost in the ocean of God's eternal love. [Here a prayer was offered by Brother Elam.]

May you both ever prove true to these sacred vows, and may your married life be as smooth and peaceful as "the unruffled water of a moonlit lake, kissed by gentle dewdrops distilled by angel hands."

Every great school, college, or university has been built around the personality of some one man. The educated men of America can, as a rule, recall some personality in early youth who largely shaped their des-tinies. The dominating personality of Robert K. Morgan makes him such a man. She was married to T. Doak Pigg on December 20, 1882. This was a happy union, to which were born nine children—four boys and five girls—who were reared in such a way as to reflect credit upon their parents. Sister Pigg was a very thoughtful and industrious woman, looking "well to the ways of her household," and always to the things that would be for the best interest of her family. She loved the plain truth that would be for the best interest of her family. She loved the plain truth of the Bible. She often said to me: "I love your preaching because you make things so plain." God's picture of the home woman (Tit. 2: 5) she filled well. Sister Pigg filled well her mission in life. She fought the fight and kept the faith, hence the crown. Our beloved sister in Christ, Josephine Williams Dowdey, was born on February 22, 1846, and departed this life on June 5, 1925. She was married in 1855 to M. Harris Dowdey, who died on June 23, 1899. Sister Dowdey was the mother of thirteen children, only four of whom are living—H. M. Dowdey, Albertville, Ala.; J. E. Dowdey, Jasper, Ala.; Mrs. Laura Payne, Oklahoma; and Charles B. Dowdey, with whom she had made her home since the death of her husband. She joined the Baptist Church in Georgia when about sixteen years of age, but learned "the way of the Lord more perfectly" under the preaching of Brother J. M. Joiner, becoming one of the charter members of the church at Hopeful, Ala., and her body now lies in the cemetery there to await the resurrection. Knowing her as we did, her faithfulness and devotion to the cause she loved so well, we believe that her spirit has been joyously received in the land of continued joys and eternal rest. She has left to her children, all of whom are members of the one body, a Christian character that stands as a monument to the cause of Christ.

HILL.

William C. Hill, son of Barney and Nancy J. Hill, was born in 1842, in Roane County, Tenn. He died of pneumonia on February 10, 1925, at his home near Rockwood, Tenn., after a few-days' illness. He enlisted as a Federal soldier in the War between the States on November 10, 1862, and made a brave and faithful soldier through this unfortunate and unhappy struggle till he was mustered out on August 3, 1865. He served in Company E, but was mustered out in Company B, First Tennessee. The war closed and the smoke of battle settled down, he returned to his home, Company B, First Tennessee. The war closed and the smoke of battle settled down, he returned to his home, and on October 31, 1866, he was married to Miss Nancy D. Rector. To this union fifteen children were born, ten boys and five girls. Two of the boys and one girl died before he did. He is survived by one brother, J. A. Hill, of Rockwood, and his widow and twelve children—namely: J. B., W. C. (Jr.), I. A., W. E., and Frank, of Rockwood; A. T., of Isabella, Tenn.; Wiley, of Oneida, Tenn.; Bob, of Ashland, Ky.; Nancy D. Shillings and Norah Tedder, of Rockwood; Myrtle Tedder, of Danville, Ky.; and Maggie Sisco, of Farmersville, Texas. He was an industrious and hard-working man, cultivating the soil, making good crops, and providing well for his family the things that made for their temporal needs. He tried, to the extent of his ability, to send his children to school and give the advantages of a liberal education. He was a natron of mine in school work for dren to school and give the advantages of a liberal education. He was a patron of mine in school work for three years, and a good one he was in point of numbers and coöperation. For twenty years he was a member of the County Court, and during that time had much to do with the affairs of his county. In 1866 he obeyed the gospel and went into the church at old Post Oak Springs, under the teachings of Brethren Gilbert Randolph and J. W. Owings. Later he was made an elder of the congregation, and remained so till he moved down on the Tennessee River, getting was made an elder of the congregation, and remained so till he moved

I. A. Hill, was a member of the same and for this the church preferred a few years ago. Only a few evenings before his death he talked quite freely, going over the case of Naa-man, the Syrian leper, taking the po-sition that we must obey God before we can claim the blessing, which is certainly correct. Man is a fallible creature. None live—yea, none will ever live and not make some mistakes ever live and not make some mistakes some time along the line of life. I believe those elders made a mistake when they withdrew from that brother because he was a Mason, and I believe Brother Hill made a mistake when he withdrew from the church because of their action, and I know he made a mistake when he did not change his mind and go back into he made a mistake when he did not change his mind and go back into full fellowship of the church. Christ says: "Apart from me ye can do nothing." I look upon it as being a most serious thing to live out of the fellowship of the "household of faith." I say this as one who loved Brother Hill, and I love his family and wish for them all the very best. But he is in the hands of a just God, and he is a God of love, mercy, and wisdom, and doeth all things well. To Brother Hill's dear family, permit me to suggest that each of you avoid your father's mistakes, emulate his many fine traits, "fear God, and keep his comandments," and "God will take care of you."

GOSPEL ADVOCATE

The GOSPEL ADVOCATE is the oldest living periodical published in the interest of the church of Christ. It is now in its sixty-seventh volume, and it has a larger list of regular, paidup subscribers than it has ever had before. Its circulation is increasing rapidly, and it is daily growing in favor with the people. It contains twenty-four pages, and is issued every week. It is printed in large, clear type, on good paper, and is neatly pasted and trimmed. It has by far the largest circulation of any periodical published south of the Mason and Dixon Line in the interest of the church of Christ. It has regular editorial writers, besides a large number of able and regular contributors. It has all of the regular departments of the best religious periodicals.

In editorial policy it stands for individual consecration, against ecclesiastic organizations, as the scriptural and best method of doing missionary work. It recognizes no organization but the church of Christ as a scriptural medium of converting the world and developing the Christian character.

It opposes all human creeds and ecclesiastic councils, and pleads for the right of each individual to study the Scriptures for himself and formulate his own faith, without dictation or hindrance from churchly dignitaries. It opposes all clerical assumption of official authority in the church, and stands for the scriptural doctrine that each Christian has an office to fill, a work to perform—that all are kings and priests unto God.

It stoutly advocates the doctrine of missions, and argues unceasingly that every Christian is a divinely commissioned missionary and every church is a scripturally organized missionary society. The mission of every Christian and the design of every church is to preach the gospel to all the world.

It believes in, and stoutly advocates, congregational singing, as opposed to select choirs and instrumental performances, as the best and most soul-stirring church music. Let all the people sing. Provide a book for everybody in the house, and let us all make a joyful noise unto the Lord. Sample copies mailed free to any address.

DID THE PREACHER DO THE RIGHT THING?

BY ROBERT E. WRIGHT.

Several months ago one of our preachers of no mean standing was holding a meeting at Bradentown, Fla., and people were coming forward almost every night to make the confession and be baptized. One night a little girl came forward with others to make the confession and be baptized. She, I suppose, was about ten or eleven years of age. Her father and mother were both members of the church, and sometimes the father takes a public part in the services of the church. After the invitation song was sung and the people had taken their seats, the brother who was doing the preaching asked me to take the confession of those who had come forward. When I came to the little girl, I asked her several questions, for in my heart I doubted whether she really understood the gospel well enough to become a Christian. Some of the questions I asked her were as follows: "Have you repented of all the sins of your life, and do you want to live for Christ?" She replied that she had not repented of her sins, but wanted to be baptized. I said: "You have repented of your sins, haven't you?" To which she replied: "No, sir; I just want to be baptized." I then asked her what repentance was, and she replied: "I don't know; I only want to be baptized and be a member of the church." I soon saw that according to my Bible this child did not need baptism at all, but needed teaching; so I simply said to the people that the little girl needed further instruction in the gospel. The father and mother did not think well of me for so doing; and after some days I called on them at their home and the question was brought up, and the mother had somewhat to say in defense of their side of the question. "The reason the child told you that she had not repented of her sins was that she thought that she had to be baptized, and then she must repent after being baptized." I told the mother that I could not baptize the child in justice to the word of God and my conscience; but if the father thought she should be baptized, let him go and baptize her, and that I would not further open my mouth on the matter. The mother further said: "You have greatly discouraged the child in this matter, and she says that she will never be baptized now." This time a bad spirit creeps out, and I was more confirmed than ever that the child was not ready for baptism. Again, did the preacher

BIBLE CROSS WORD

THIS square cross may seem to be composed largely of short words, but look closely and you will see four nine-letter words which cross towards the center. With those worked out and in their places, you will find that many others fall into line. It is a puzzle that deserves your best effort, however, for there are several pitfalls to catch the unwary.

© 1925 THE J.O.W. CO.

How to Solve a Cross Word Pu :...e

To work out this puzzle, the white spaces must be filled with letters forming words answering to the various horizontal and vertical definitions given below. The horizontal and vertical words are not the same, but each gives a clue to the other. The first letter of each word is indicated by a number which refers to the definitions listed below.

It is advisable to first fill in, in both directions, those words which you know to be correct. These will furnish hints to those words which you do not know or had merely guessed at. When the puzzle is solved correctly, the letters in the white spaces will spell words both horizontally and vertically. The black spaces are the blind spots of the puzzle and merely form the pattern, incidentally designating the ends and beginnings of the words contained in the puzzle.

most natural things in life for it to want to become a Christian, or go to the Christ. The child will feel the need of Christ and want to go to Christ, but it cannot go without teaching. It has to be taught of Christ. (John 6: 44, 45.) Think of one who is responsible to God and vanting to go to the Savior and be saved and can't! Fathers and mothers all over this land, better wake up and teach your own children the way of salvation, or you will be lost world without end. If that child which the Lord placed in your care is lost because you were filled with the things of this world and would not help it find the Christ, God will damn you in hell without mercy forever and ever. When a child becomes accountable to God, no father or mother should rest until they have taught it the way of the Lord and then leave the child to act on its own responsibility in the saving of its own soul. Teach it what it means to be lost forever, and its little heart will soon respond to the loving call of the Savior.

DO WE LOVE TO STUDY GOD'S WORD?

BY H. M. PHILLIPS.

In Ps. 1: 2, David speaks of the blessed man as one who delights in the law of the Lord. Now, the question is, do we? I feel sure all who respect the word of God will say we ought to study it; for we are so taught by Paul to Timothy. (2 Tim. 2: 15.) Then, the very fact that the word has been preserved by divine power is evidence that it is here for more than just to decorate the table or bookcase. We know that in the word is salvation revealed and man's whole duty is told. For many reasons we ought to study the word; but the question is, do we "delight in the law of the Lord?" It is one thing to do as a duty because we feel we ought to, and another thing to do because we love to do it. Many a person goes to the place of worship, not because he is glad to go to worship, but as an act of duty, feeling that he has done fully what God wants. We may do all the things commanded, so far as action is concerned, and leave out love, and it will avail nothing.

To a man of God, the word of God is as a love letter, and it is not read just as a matter of duty. What would you think of a young man who was dearly in love with a young lady and she should write him a letter, and when it came into his possession he should say: "Well, I guess I ought to read it. I just read it because I feel it is my duty to do so." Would he speak in such terms, or even have a faint thought of such? Not if he loved the lady. Just so, my kind reader, if you love God. You claim to be a Christian. Well, you cannot be one without loving God. If you, then, do not love to read the word or delight in the law of the Lord, you neither love the Lord, nor are you a Christian.

A sinner may not love to read the word, because he is not in love with the Author nor desires to follow the word of God. But what think you of a man who claims to love God and is trying to obey the word and does not delight in the study of it? Suppose you were to get a sinner, and say: "I expect to give you a real feast of pleasure. I want to read you about a dozen chapters of God's word." Would he rejoice and be exceedingly glad? In all probability he would say: "Good-by. I will see you later." But what about a man who poses as a Christian, and cannot stand the preaching of God's word for only a few minutes at a time? Is he God's blessed man?

Why do people not like to listen to the word of God more than they do? I think they are choked by something. Jesus said the cares of this world, riches and pleasures, choke out the word. (Matt. 13: 22; Luke 8: 14.) Could that same one watch a ball game and delight in it for hours at a time? Could he spend his time in the care of riches with pleasure and not tire in making dollars by the hour, rather than just for a few minutes? Does this same man spend hours at home or in his place of business studying the word of God, actually loving to do so?

Then, if we desire to be blessed of God and claim to love God and at the same time do not delight in the law of the Lord, what hopes do we have of God's blessing us? Do you love to read the word? If so, how often do you read it? How much do you read, and do you meditate on it day and night? The blessed man does.

COMMENDATIONS OF BIBLE LESSON HELPS

"I am delighted with your Lesson Helps, and regard them as the best I have examined." (C. W. Thompson.)

"We have been using the Lesson Helps for fitteen years or more. I noticed the change, and, in my humble judgment, think it good." (W. G. Harrison.)

"I have received sample copies of your Lesson Helps and examined them. I pronounce them as good, so far as I can think, as can be made." (Ira C. Moore.)

"We are using your Sunday-school Lesson Helps at Fairfax church of Christ, this city, and think they are good. We have no criticism to offer." (M. P. Lowry.)

"I am glad to commend the Bible Lesson Helps issued by the Gospel Advocate Company. They cannot fall of being helpful to any church using them." (C. A. Norred.)

"The Quarterlies are fine. They should be a great help to the Bible student. I would be glad if Bible classes that do not now have them would take up their use." (R. P. Cuff.)

"Your Quarterlies received and briefly examined. They show that much time and care have been exercised in their preparation. They are clear, scriptural, and to the point."
(E. L. Whitaker.)

"I think the Quarterlies very instructive and helpful in the study of the Scriptures both in the home and in the public assembly, and it will give me pleasure to commend them to all the faithful workers in my field of labor." (J. D. Jones.)

"The Sunday-school literature that is published by the Gospel Advocate Company I can heartily recommend to any one who is in search for good helps on our Sunday-school lessons," (Robert E. Wright.)

"A complete assortment of the Sunday-school literature published by the Gospel Advocate Company was sent me recently. Having examined it carefully, I am glad to say I consider it excellent, and gladly commend it to congregations, teachers, and classes." (T. B. Larimore.)

"As a whole, I think your Lesson Helps far surpass other literature of its kind. Here in this great mission field (Louisiana) where we have placed them, many comparisons have been made between them and both the denominational and our society brethren's literature, and at no time have your Lesson Helps come off second best." (C. C. McQuiddy,)

"It is a pleasure to write a word of commendation of Brother Elam's Notes on Bible School Lessons. They are the product of one who has given the greater part of his life to the study and teaching of God's Word. They are true to the Bible, comprehensive, and scholarly. If you love the truth, you will be delighted to study with him these wonderful lessons." (A. G. Freed.)

"Brother E. A. Elam's Notes, as published annually, is, in my judgment, seriptural and the best thing of its kind I have ever seen or that is published to-day, Everybody ought to have a copy and preserve it for study and reference. Brother Elam's twenty-five years' work, if every year should be bound in a separate volume, the twenty-five volumes would be a great addition to any library. (C. M. Pullias.)

"At the Central church of Christ in Fort Worth we have been using in our Bible school Elam's Notes and other literature of his. For a great number of years the writer of this has felt that Brother Elam was one of the best-prepared men in the brotherhood for the preparation of such literature. His Notes, in our best judgment, represent, or reflect, the best efforts he has ever made. Both as an elder of the congregation and as a teacher in our Bible School, I have very great pleasure in indorsing his Notes. To the extent that an expression of our views is of value, I assure you we are very pleased to give it." (J. G. Wilkinson.)

"I have used Elam's Quarterlies for years.

"I have used Elam's Quarterlies for years. They are superior to any that I have seen. Elam's Notes on Bible School Lessons are much fuller than they. They give the historical setting as to time and place that is needed and valuable. They give so many scriptural citations and references—Bertytures that introduce the text or corroborate the text—that the average student may know the geography, the history, and the full meaning of the lesson. They give so many lessons, deducted from the copious citations of Scriptures, that the student may know more perfectly God's will. For years I have used Peloubet's Select Notes. I compare them weekly. I do not hesitate to say that Elam's Notes are infinitely superior, if you want to know the Bible." (C. F. Holt.)

From the Brethren

Tupelo, Miss., August 15.—Brother C. P. Roland, of Henderson, Tenn., recently closed a most successful meeting in the new church house at this place, with nine additions—five baptisms and four from other congregations taking membership. The church was much strengthened and edified. Brethren passing through Tupelo are cordially invited to meet with the brethren on Sunday morning at ten o'clock and on Wednesday night at the church of Christ on North Gloster Street.—T. D. Long.

Malden, Mo., August 25.—I began preaching at Christian Chapel, Dongola, Ill., on Wednesday night of last week and closed on Lord's-day night. I preached six sermons and made a lot of calls among those with whom I had labored much in the past. This congregation has a history of at least sixty years, and has stood firm against all innovations in all these years. They have had some discouraging days and some trouble with bad preachers. But there is still a good band of faithful Christians doing service for the Master. I am now on my way to Greenway, Ark., for a fewdays' stay.—Andrew Perry.

days' stay.—Andrew Perry.

Granite, Okla., August 24.—I began a meeting at Baxter, Tenn., on Tuesday night, July 28, and continued it until the following Saturday night, with two baptisms. I went next to Jester, Okla., where I began a meeting on the second Sunday in August, which continued until Thursday after the third Lord's day. Ten were baptized, six were restored, and one took membership. The singing was led by Brother Cute Moore. I am now in a meeting at Lake Creek, near Granite. I go from here to Eastview, Okla. Brother W. Don Hockaday, of Granite, has just closed a meeting in his home town, with forty-eight baptized and eleven restored.—W. T. Beasley.

and eleven restored.—W. T. Beasley.

Clovis, New Mexico, August 25.—
The Floyd meeting closed on the night of July 30, and I began the next night at Portales. As I already had an appointment for the eleven-o'clock hour the first Sunday, Brother W. A. Barnhill, who lives at Portales, preached, and had two confessions, and the persons were baptized that afternoon. At night I came back to Portales, and Brother Barnhill went to preach for me at Clovis. On Monday morning we went to work and made ready for an open-air meeting on a corner lot by the courthouse square, and by night we were ready for the meeting, and we had the people to hear. The first week we were almost rained out, but the last week we had good weather and our crowds were large and the attention good. The meeting closed on Sunday night with ten more confessions and baptisms and the brethren and sisters greatly encouraged in the Lord's work.—D. S. Ligon.

McQUIDDY'S RUDIMENTS OF MUSIC

Reading music is purely a mechanical problem, and a too liberal use of theory will confuse rather than help in attaining desired results.

Any one may learn to read music accurately and rapidly who will never be able to sing acceptably, for various reasons. Some sing naturally, as do the birds, while others must have long and thorough training before the ability is acquired to sing the Major Diatonic scale correctly; others are unable to sing in "tune," and consequently must have severe drill under a competent instructor before the voice is brought under control. The student will, therefore, understand that neither theoretical technicalities nor voice building will be discussed in this book —merely the art of reading music.

There is no better music composer in this or any other country than is the editor of "McQuiddy's Rudiments of Music." Price, 20 cents, single copy, prepaid; $2.25 per dozen, not prepaid. Address

A WORD TO OUR READERS

FROM THE BRETHREN ..... 903, 906, 908, 909

The reading season is rapidly approaching. Every father and mother should see that the right kind of reading is placed before their children. It is to be deeply regretted that so many Christians take more interest in reading the sensational news contained in daily papers and the injurious and harmful things contained in trashy magazines than they do in reading journals devoted especially to the propagation of the Truth and to the dissemination of news concerning the progress of the kingdom of God.

The Gospel Advocate is earnestly endeavoring to propagate "the faith which was once for all delivered unto the saints." It stands upon the grounds once occupied by that body of people who "were called Christians first in Antioch." All who subscribe for it may rely on the fact that, to the best of its ability, it will publish "all things that pertain unto life and godliness" as they are revealed in the writings of those who "spoke from God, being moved by the Holy Spirit."

We wish to solicit the hearty cooperation of all our readers in the great work that we are endeavoring to do. The Advocate can do good only to the extent that it is read. Our readers can greatly assist us by sending in new subscribers, and in so doing will accomplish good that eternity alone can estimate. The people appreciate the stand the Advocate has taken for the primitive order of things in the church of Christ, and many who are not now subscribers will subscribe if you will only ask them. You will be surprised to find your friends subscribing so readily for the Advocate if you will only make the suggestion.

Preachers and elders would do great good by making an effort to get the Advocate into every home of every congregation. No man can estimate the increased zeal and activity in the work of the church that would result from every family in the church reading the Advocate. We earnestly suggest that preachers and elders publicly make this suggestion to their congregations.

SCRIPTURE STUDIES

BY JAMES A. ALLEN

The old world was tottering on its foundations when Christianity appeared. Clouds of incense from myriads of temples arose from every city, town, and hamlet in honor of the gods of pagan superstition. The Jews, while professing to believe in Moses, had long corrupted his teaching by their traditions; the temple of God had been impiously converted from a house of prayer into a den of thieves; the throne of David and of Solomon, the greatest throne that monarch ever had occupied or ever will occupy, had been overturned, and the scepter was merely lingering with Judah until Shiloh should come. In this singular crisis, when idolatry was at its zenith in the pagan world and the Jews were well-nigh distracted by faction, the star of the Messiah was seen in the east.

The earth is too small to contain books enough to present a full chronicle of the sufferings, toils, and labors of Jesus Christ. Other prominent characters have performed prodigious amounts of work, and have waded through nights of toil after days of labor; but all of them together never accomplished a tithe of this Person's performance. He bore, upon his shoulders, the burden of the guilt of the world: "As a lamb that is led to the slaughter, and as a sheep that before its shearers is dumb, so he opened not his mouth." He commissioned his apostles to announce the proclamation of the gospel of redemption and to preach repentance and remission of sins unto all the nations. Simon Peter, in Jerusalem, by virtue of having been assigned the keys of the kingdom, delivered the commencement speech in the cause of evangelical Christianity; multitudes, both of men and women, were immersed into the Lord under the personal superintendence of men who preached "by the Holy Spirit sent down from heaven;" and churches, established and duly set in order, "continued steadfastly in the apostles' teaching and fellowship, in the breaking of bread and the prayers."

* * *

The fortunes of Christianity have been varied and remarkable. An apostasy was predicted, a "falling away" from the primitive faith of the church. Under no former dispensation could the people be held loyal to God or be prevented from corrupting the law long at a time. At the death of every reformer, defection would again set in, and the Jews would indulge in the abominations of the nations around them until some bold servant of God would dare to institute another reform. In all ages, under every dispensation, the cause of truth has advanced in this alternate rotation of apostasy, revolution, and reformation, one generation endeavoring to tear down what its predecessor labored to build up.

We need not attempt to prove, in this place, that the Protestant reformers aimed no higher than a reformation of popery. Emerging from the smoke of the great city of mystical Babylon, they saw as clearly and understood as much as any persons could in such a hazy atmosphere. Many of their views, if carried out to their legitimate issue, would result in an arrival at the truth. But, unfortunately, while much truth was elicited in the controversy, their followers, at their death, soon converted themselves into numerous sects and schisms, all of which retained various relics of popery, and which eventually proved that the only difference between the Catholic and Protestant popes was that the one was older than the other.

章 章 章

The first effort known to us to abandon the whole controversy over creeds and dogmas, and to return to the original grounds occupied by the apostles in the beginning, was made about the beginning of the last century. A. Campbell, in the spring of 1823, in issuing a prospectus for the publication of the first regular periodical, said: "The Christian Baptist shall espouse the cause of no religious sect, except that ancient sect called 'Christians' first at Antioch. Its sole object shall be the eviction of truth and the exposure of error in doctrine and practice. The editor, acknowledging no standard of religious faith or works, other than the 'Old and New Testaments, and the latter as the only standard of the religion of Jesus Christ, will, intentionally at least, oppose nothing which it contains, and recommend nothing which it does not enjoin."

The avowed object of this first effort was "to restore a pure speech to the people of God; to restore the ancient order of things in the Christian kingdom; to emancipate the conscience from the dominion of human authority in matters of religion; and to lay a foundation, an imperishable foundation, for the union of all Christians, and for their coöperation in spreading the glorious gospel throughout the world."

Ecclesiastical society, like the sea, is purified by continual agitation; and such an effort, not to reform old parties, but to abandon them entirely, as being unauthorized in the Bible, soon involved the religious-speaking world in convulsions. Extremes, as ever in the past, still beget extremes; and one of the most laborious tasks that confronted Campbell, Scott, Stone, and others, was to prevent the friends of truth from carrying it into unscriptural and hurtful absurdities. Our own times, after the work of reformation has gone on for almost a full century, are still full of the drones, dwarfs, and cranks that inevitably follow in the aftermath of a great revolution. As proof of this, I only say that if the reader will examine the back volumes of the Gospel Advocate for the last fifty years, he will get a good specimen of the hobbies, fads, and extremes with which this paper has had to contend.

No man, I presume, did more to hold the churches to the apostolic institutions of Christianity than David Lipscomb. I aspire not to either eulogy or criticism upon the long employment of Brother Lipscomb's splendid talents, or upon the great ability shown by him in the management of complicated affairs. I leave things personal, for the present at least, to a better pen and to a more mature critic. But, laying this aside, in view of the crisis through which we are passing, I may be excused in speaking of the influence that Brother Lipscomb so long exerted. An age of investigation is consequently an age of extremes. Minds long chained in theological fetters, when loosened, like a convict out of prison, rapidly tend to run riot in a new freedom. When the winds of doctrine rage upon the great sea, boisterous waves transcend the limits of all reason and revelation.

In the Gospel Advocate, Volume L., Number 1, Brother Lipscomb said: "Our position has been a peculiar one. We have been identified with a people that started out to return to unsectarian, Bible Christianity. They have divided into two parties, each turning in different directions. We have stood between them. It is part of human nature to form parties, become sectarian, and reject the oneness of the people and church of God. We have tried to stand between the two parties on the foundation of truth."

Both of these parties, in their misguided zeal, have lost their identity with the principles of the reformation. The original basis of "the Bible alone," discarding all matters of human opinion or that stand in the wisdom of men, upon which all started out to unite as Christians, has been violated by the introduction of instrumental music and human societies into the church; and, on the other hand, some have bent so far the other way, in their opposition to human inventions, as to become entangled in unfortunate hobbies and extremes. We cannot now speak particularly of the Sunday-school hobby, nor of the endless jangling over the use of literature, meetinghouses, and hymn books, but the progress of truth is thus retarded by the fanatic zeal of its friends; and, we might add, the life is well-nigh stifled out of congregations so infected. The clashing between the rebaptists and the loose Baptists comes perpetually before us; laying on of hands, woman's work in the church, and the right hand of fellowship have been duly and long debated; and yet, in the midst of such a clashing of elements, Brother Lipscomb stood, like a balance wheel, endeavoring to adhere always to the rational mean. Continual discussion, though carried to an excess, proves a blessing to the world; and we thank God that things naturally regulate themselves, and that they eventually settle down on the true foundation.

The Gospel Advocate to-day stands upon the same platform upon which it stood, and adheres to the same policy to which it adhered, for so many years, under Lipscomb, Sewell, Srygley, and McQuiddy. It will continue to so do unto the end. We propose to follow them as they followed Christ. We stand to-day, like they stood, upon the ground that was occupied by the apostles of Jesus Christ in the beginning.

The general public is rapidly approaching a better understanding of the Christian institution. "Many are running to and fro," and knowledge certainly is on the increase. The Bible is gradually slipping from the hands of the clergy into the hands of the people. The necessity of producing Bible authority for religious practices is more generally recognized; and such an impression, every day widening and becoming stronger, is certainly calculated to loosen the shackles upon pope-trodden and priest-ridden communities. The prophet, standing in the midst of the valley of dry bones, was asked: "Son of man, can these bones live?" The flat has gone forth: "O ye dry bones, hear the word of Jehovah."

The people are reading the Bible. Publishing houses and book concerns are selling Bibles with a new impetus; and we cannot but hail it as being auspicious of a better era, and as being significantly indicative of the advancement of the cause of the Lord. The church of Christ, the custodian of the truth, should exert new efforts and with renewed zeal strive together for the faith of the gospel. Bickerings and wranglings among brethren should give place to "the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace." Truth, in the providence of God, shall be exalted and exonerated; and those who love it, and strive for it, shall, in the end, "shine as the brightness of the firmament" and "as the stars forever and ever."

Do something to associate yourselves with Christ's apostles—something that, in another life, you may look back upon as having contributed, however little, to the carrying on of the great enterprise that began when our Lord bade these simple Galileans make disciples of all the nations, and that will only end with the last hour of time.—Liddon.

A REAL "PREACHER FACTORY."
BY JOHN T. HINDS.

In the August 6 issue of the Gospel Advocate I find this statement: "The Twelfth Avenue congregation, this city, had eight of their brethren filling various pulpits in Nashville last Lord's day. Every congregation should be a 'preacher factory.'"

The above is suggestive of some things that all congregations-particularly the elders-might well think about. The two biggest problems that concern any congregation are how to accomplish the proper growth and development of the members and do the missionary work that the Lord requires. The latter depends upon the former, and will never be done until the proper development is accomplished. I shall not stop here to show by scripture teaching that each congregation is under obligations to do missionary work. I presume that any one who knows enough Bible to be saved understands that. The very fact that one man is saved implies that others should be, and that the saved man, realizing the vital necessity of salvation, should do all he can to save others. Since God is no respecter of persons, this conclusion is so evident that it admits of no question. Also, it must be true that congregations are not only responsible for doing all the mission work they can now, but all they can do after the greater development that is possible. Since congregations are composed of individuals, that puts the responsibility on each individual to the extent of his ability, or the ability that he may have by proper development.

These unmistakable facts show that probably the question of greatest importance is the proper development of the membership. We are plainly told that it pleased God to save the believers "through the foolishness of preaching." We cannot dodge the issue by saying Paul meant that God pleased to save men by the thing the apostles preached. As a matter of fact, that is true, and Paul may have meant that in this passage; but, if so, still that truth has to be believed and obeyed, and Christians are under the necessity of getting it to people. Personal preaching has always been the most effective way of doing this work.

But where shall these preachers come from? Shall congregations, mail-order-house fashion, always send for their preachers "readymade?" If all congregations do that, where will the supply come from? Sometimes colleges are charged with being "preacher factories." That might be true in some instances, in some sense, but the right kind of a college will help any one to learn all he can. Whether this knowledge will be used in preaching the gospel depends upon the use the student wants to make of it. Far more students who attend Bible colleges never expect to preach than those who do. But granting that Bible colleges might be of some benefit to those who want to preach, where does that kind of student material come from, and how does it happen to be that kind? The desire to preach and to get more knowledge to more efficiently do the work is created in the congregation, and before the student ever goes to college, as a rule. The real "preacher factory" is the congregation; and that is just what it should be. There the desire is usually created, there encouragement is given, and there the final indorsement is received. Each congregation is duty bound, if at all possible, to furnish as much preacher work to other places as it receives from others, and a little more; for, if we only furnish as much as we receive, the problem of growth is not taken care of. Any congregation that does not realize this is falling below its responsibilities to God. Any set of elders who are not trying to bring their congregation up to this standard are sleeping on their task.

But how shall this desire to preach be created, and how shall the proper encouragement be given? There is really no secret about this matter. Putting every man and boy in the congregation to taking part in the church services, if wisely done, will most likely bring to the surface all the preacher material you have. The proper encouragement in taking part will hasten the development of that preacher material. Those that do not become preachers will become excellent workers in the church. This is of great importance to the successful work of the church. Nothing else can be substituted successfully for taking part in the regular church services. The young and inexperienced should begin with passing the emblems, reading the Scriptures, and so on up to addressing the congregation. is far better for those taking part than to sit still while a preacher does all the talking and a regular set of elders and deacons do all the balance from Sunday to Sunday. It will also be better for the congregations, as a means of development and preparing material for the work of preaching the gospel. In fact, if the result cannot be accomplished without it, I am fully convinced that it would be better to dispense with the sermon at the hour of worship, and have that attended to by the membership.

But perhaps some one is ready to say that people will not come if we do not have a preacher. When Christians learn that the worship is the way each one can honor and praise God, then they will want to worship if there is not a preacher in a thousand miles. When members of the church are not as willing and anxious to attend the worship to personally honor God and Christ when no preacher is present as when one is, they need conversion. I doubt very much that members who will not attend unless some one is to preach will be saved if they do attend. To say the least, they have never fully appreciated their personal responsibility to God, and do not have the Spirit of Christ, without which Paul says we are "none of his," Such members need to be shamed for their low conception of Christianity and their lack of personal service.

Members who want to be entertained by the preacher, rather than to render some personal part in the service, have imbibed the spirit of the world, and need to be told so in plain terms. Those who have cultivated such a sensitive nature that they cannot endure the efforts made by those striving to grow in efficiency, but must always have the "best" preachers, have not touched the hem of the Savior's garment, so far as missions are concerned.

I am heartily in favor of every congregation supporting one or more preachers for their whole time if at all possible; but it is my candid opinion that we should have the preacher give the major part of his time to doing real missionary work and let the congregation in the main be a self-edifying and self-developing body. The preacher can be preaching practically all the time-real mission work-and be in close touch with the home congregation. If this plan in some reasonable measure is not put into effect, I have despaired of the churches of Christ ever getting anywhere in the real work of spreading the king-As long as the preacher-"pastor" or "located evangelist," or whatever you wish to call him-does practically all the public work, we will never develop enough preachers to look like even a start at real missionary work. When every available member is pressed into taking some active part in the services in the home church, backsliding and indifference will be almost banished, Christians will be glad to worship and be present, and the preacher can be released for an amount of mission work that will spread the kingdom.

Now, I sincerely trust all the writers will not jump on me about my suggestions; but if any one can present a better and more scriptural way to worship as a congregation and do effective missionary work, I shall be glad to see it.

TOPIC AND TEXT

BY A. B. LIPSCOMB

James says: "Pure religion and undefiled before our God and Father is this, to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep oneself unspotted from the world." This text, which is a favorite one, is frequently misinterpreted. For example, I heard a preacher on one occasion say it was "the shortest but most perfect definition of Christianity ever given." An unbaptized person said, too, by way of excuse: " No, I have never been baptized, but I am trying hard to live the Christian life according to James' high ideal." We may be sure that the inspired writer never intended this fine text to be a complete definition of Christianity; for Christianity in the true scriptural sense embraces not one or two or a few, but all the teachings of Jesus Christ and his apostles. The record of that teaching is found in the New Testament. True enough, there are prophecies that foretell the blessings of Christianity, and types that prefigure them; but to avoid confusion of the old with the new, we must confine our definition to the New Testament. Christianity does not consist in a heterogeneous collection of doctrines, creeds, and denominations, but in doctrines of unquestionable authority; "in things that are true, whether men believe them or not."

Furthermore, it is the height of nonsense and folly for any person to attempt to use this passage as an excuse for the neglect of baptism, for it is easily seen that the whole letter is addressed to baptized believers. We need not get away from the text to prove this statement. Therein we read, "keep oneself unspotted from the world." Plainly, it is addressed to those who have been called out of the world through obedience to the gospel.

A REBUKE TO THE NOMINAL CHRISTIAN.

While never intended to be a complete definition of the Christian religion, the text deserves unusual attention because it states a very vital and important principle of that religion. Evidently it was written for the special benefit of those who were mere professors of that religion. That person who is a Christian in name only is found in every age, in every community. He is a problem to be dealt with by every congregation in the fear of God. Theodore Cuyler once said: "It is always a terrible condemnation of a church member that no one should ever suspect him of being one." I have read with good impression the story of a florist who used to go round working in gentlemen's gardens. He was a joyful old man, an earnest Christian worker, and no one would be in his company long without knowing he was a follower of Christ. One day he went to work in the garden of a gentleman whom he knew fairly well, and after some time he said to him: "Dear brother, are you a Christian? Are you a lover of the Lord?" With some show of indignation the gentleman replied: "Of course I am." "Praise God," said the gardener, "for that. I never should have known it if you hadn't told me so."

APPLYING THE TEST TO OURSELVES.

It usually pays to ask heart-searching questions. The hour of the Lord's Supper is not the only occasion for self-examination. Am I a Christian? Are you a Christian? We may do well to apply the acid test that James' text suggests. Better still, we should examine ourselves in the light of the teaching of the whole epistle, noting especially what it has to say about faithless, empty praying; about partiality and fawning on the rich; about the mistreatment of the poor; about the deadly evils that are wrought by gossiping tongues.

James' letter is undoubtedly the most practical of the New Testament. It does not deal with theological and dogmatic problems, with abstract and intellectual questions. On the other hand, it reduces to a marked simplicity the fulfillment of the moral law, written in the Old Testament, interpreted anew, purified and completed by the teachings of Jesus. We may well appreciate the thought of an Italian writer who calls it "The Sermon on the Mount of the Epistles." While the writer was not one of the twelve, he must often have sat at the feet of the Great Teacher; for in his letter time and again we are forcibly reminded of what Jesus had said. In it we find, for instance: "Be ye doers of the word, and not hearers only, deluding your own selves." (1: 22) "If any man thinketh himself to be religious, while he bridleth not his tongue but deceiveth his heart, this man's religion is vain." (1: 26.) "If ye fulfill the royal law, according to the scriptures, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself, ye do well: but if ye have respect of persons, ye commit sin, being convicted by the law as transgressors." (2: 8,9.) Where in all the Bible could we find a better complement and corollary to Jesus' vivid picture of the judgment, as given in Matt. 25: 31-46, than to read what James has to say about faith without works, and then to repeat the text: "Pure religion and undefiled before our God and Father is this, to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep oneself unspotted from the world?"

Luther said of one of his opponents: "He is nothing but words, words, words." Just so, when we get tired of rhetorical and empty phrases, of theological discussions, of blatant infidelity, of boastful self-assertions, of hypocritical cant, of the venting of personal spleen, whether in sermon, debate, or on printed page, and long for reality, for facts, for practical demonstration of Christ's teachings, we can always turn to this letter of James for relief and inspiration.

THE MEANING OF THE CROSS.

BY JAMES E. CHESSOR.

WHAT THE CROSS MEANT TO CHRIST.

What did the crucifixion mean to Christ? Perhaps we may never know the full meaning. There is much that is revealed, and there may be much that is not revealed. We know that by the cross is brought salvation, but to look at the cross from the viewpoint of the Savior who bore it and died upon it is a different matter. It is worthy of reverential study.

First, let us go back to the time. Indeed, we must orient our minds, and by the aid of the imagination put ourselves back in the stream of time to the point where the cross was a symbol of shame and to hang upon the tree an accursed thing. We are, in fact, to study the very experience of Christ which turned the shame to glory and the curse to blessing.

The following study is not exhaustive. It is but a few glimpses of the moving tragedy gathered up from the four unique accounts written by Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John.

"NOT MY WILL, BUT THINE, BE DONE."

The cross meant to Christ the conformity on his part to the will and plan of God. "It is written," he often said, "The Son of man goeth as it is written of him." "The cup which the Father hath given me, shall I not drink it?"

Therefore, the submission of Jesus was not an impersonal and inevitable fate. He did not bow to an unseen decree. He felt that the living will of God, his Father, was leading him on to whatsoever end. He would submit to that will, whatever the cost. He cherished the thought, though his death was indicated, that God could intervene, and would do so if such were his good pleasure. And so he prayed: "Father, all things are possible unto thee; remove this cup from me: howbeit not what I will, but what thou wilt." Other records of this prayer vary the words, but not the sentiment of submission. "If thou be willing," reads one. "If it be possible," reads another. Another utterance of his indicates his voluntary submission. "Thinkest thou," he said to Peter, who had drawn a sword, "that I cannot beseech my Father, and he shall even now send me more than twelve legions of angels?"

So the cross meant that he was doing the will of God, for which purpose he was sent and came. Note again his submissive words. "My Father, if this cannot pass away, except I drink it, thy will be done." "Father, if thou be willing, remove this cup from me: nevertheless not my will, but thine, be done."

"YE SHALL BE OFFENDED IN ME."

The cross meant to Christ the betrayal by one disciple and desertion by all. He was to be betrayed into the hands of his enemies by a friend, a guest, one of the twelve, and by a kiss. "He that eateth my bread lifted up his heel against me." Jesus was "troubled in spirit" at the thought of being betrayed, at the sense of woe impending over Judas. "It is one of the twelve, he that dippeth his hand with me in the dish, the same shall betray me. For the Son of man goeth as it hath been determined, even as it is written of him, but woe unto that man through whom he is betrayed! Good were it for that man if he had not been born!"

But it was not alone betrayal by a trusted friend that Jesus had to anticipate at the time of his trial and continuing temptation; there was also desertion and denial. "And ye shall be offended in me this night." "And they all forsook him, and fled." "And Simon Peter followed Jesus afar off, and so did another disciple," "Then he [Peter] began to curse and to swear, and saith, I know not this man of whom ye speak."

And the Lord turned and looked upon Peter with tender reproachfulness for not having heeded the warning. Betrayal, desertion, denial, by those who had ever reason to be loyal—this was a part of the sorrow of the "man of sorrows."

And then the cross meant also the delivery of the betrayed into the hands of sinful men. This, too, he had foreseen. "The Son of man shall be delivered up into the hands of sinful men," he had said before. This man, of whom the dying thief could testify that he had done nothing amiss, of whom the Roman judge could say, "I find no fault in him at all," was to be adjudged worthy of death by religious leaders of his own people, was to suffer indignities at their hands, was to be delivered to the hated Roman oppressors, was to be mocked as a king, spit upon in contumely, scourged as a criminal, crucified as a malefactor, and done to death. This, too, Jesus, knowing the customs of the Sanhedrin and the processes of Roman law, had anticipated, though he was undeterred thereby, setting his "face steadfastly to go to Jerusalem," saying to his disciples: "He shall be delivered unto the chief priests and scribes and shamefully entreated; and they shall condemn him to death, and shall deliver him unto the Gentiles; and they shall mock him, and shall spit upon him, and shall scourge him, and crucify him, and kill him."

"MY SOUL IS EXCEEDINGLY SORROWFUL."

The cross meant to Christ an agony of soul in the garden. We are not sure of all the elements entering into this anguish. "Being in agony, he prayed more earnestly; and his sweat became as it were great drops of blood, falling down upon the ground." "My soul is exceedingly sorrowful, even unto death." We reverently inquire into the sources of such sorrow. Did the weakness of the flesh shrink at the torture just ahead? Could he have been fearful lest he fail to endure? Was the overwhelming sense of the impending disaster greater than he had anticipated?

Whatever the nexus of causes of his great amazement, exceeding sorrow, and sore trouble, it is clear that it was difficult for him to finish his appointed mission. It is clear that he prayed to escape drinking the cup if it were possible; that he felt himself undergoing the temptation again (he prayed thrice); that he relied upon the Father ("O my Father," "Abba, Father"); that he felt the need of human companionship ("Abide ye here and watch with me"); that he brought his will into submission to the divine will of his Father with the heart-wringing adversatives, "howbeit" and "nevertheless." The ultimate of all prayer is: "Not my will, but thine."

"Into the wood my Master went Clean forspent, clean forspent. Into the wood my Master came, Forspent with love and shame."

Then also the cross meant the enduring of undeserved ill without murmur, complaint, or self-pity. The trial was unfair, the witnesses suborned, and Pilate's attitude that of a vacillating demagogue rather than that of a vindicator of justice; the bearing of his own cross an imposition; the transfixing of the quivering flesh with crude nails most excruciating; and the railing, taunting, and jeering, inhuman and fiendish. Yet he opened not his mouth, save to bid the daughters of Jerusalem not to weep for him, but for themselves and their children.

"IT IS FINISHED."

Next we come to the desert place in the meaning of the cross. It brought to Christ the sense of being forsaken of God. "It was now about the sixth hour, and there was darkness over all the land until the ninth hour, the sun's light failing. And about the ninth hour Jesus cried out with a loud voice, saying, Eloi, Eloi, lama sabachthani? which is, being interpreted, My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?"

Does this cry from the depths of divine despair suggest that until this time Christ had indeed thought that God might intervene? Or that the actual withdrawal of the divine favor and sustenance was a necessary part of the awful price of man's redemption? Whatever the secret of this anguish, the "Eloi" of Christ on the cross is the most tragic cry of human history. At this point the crucifixion means that Christ plumbed the depths of human woe. "There came one moment, bitterest of all."

And then came the end. And here the cross meant to Christ the finishing of his ministry on earth. Hitherto for six hours, without anæsthetic, he had faced death with undimmed consciousness, enduring the agonizing thirst of the mortally wounded. At last he received the vinegar, and said: "It is finished." The work was done; the cup was drained to its last bitter dregs; the Father's will was accomplished. Jesus was satisfied. The storm was over, and in the eventide there was light.

"And then Jesus, crying with a loud voice, said, Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit: and having said this, he bowed his head, and yielded up his spirit."

IS THE BIBLE SCIENTIFIC, AND WILL THE OLD BOOK STAND?

BY S. H. HALL.

One of the outstanding characteristics of those who claim to be "scientists" to-day, and especially those who espouse the Darwinian theory of evolution, is that they sneer at the Bible and speak of it as being unscientific, and would like to make the impression that its Author was cursed with ignorance.

For years I have contended that the Mind that wrote the Bible anticipated every erroneous idea that would ever arise, from the time it was finished, more than eighteen hundred years ago, until the end of time. One is safe in challenging the infidel world to name one irreligious thought that has ever been advanced since the Bible became a finished product that the Mind that wrote the Bible did not foreknow would be advanced, and intentionally put something in the Book to shield and protect his disciples from the same. This should be expected, as a matter of course, since the book that John wrote on the isle of Patmos finished written revelation; and, as a finished or completed book, it was designed to meet man's every need in his battles with error until the heavens and the earth are removed and the new heavens and the new earth take their place.

In 1 Tim. 6: 20 we read: "O Timothy, keep that which is committed to thy trust, avoiding profane and vain babblings, and oppositions of science falsely so called: which some professing have erred concerning the faith." The American Revised Version and others use "knowledge" for "science." Weymouth says: "Shunning irreligious and frivolous talk, and controversy with what is falsely called knowledge." Goodspeed says: "Keep away from the worldly, empty phrases and contradictions of what they falsely call knowledge." Weymouth says: "Which some have spoken boastfully in connection with the truth."

We could not find a better description of the devotees of the Darwinian theory of evolution. They do speak "boastfully." They are connecting their speaking with the truth. We even have the theistic evolutionists, who claim that they want our Lord, that they are Christians. But they cannot have him. They confess him with their mouths, but in their acts deny him and put him to an open shame; for Christ indorsed the Mosaic account of creation, and all evolutionists deny it. Christ says: "For had ye believed Moses, ye would have believed me: for he wrote of me. But if ye believe not his writings, how shall ye believe my words." (John 5: 46, 47.)

But let those evolutionists who say they are Christians say what they please. It is a known fact that they all would have us believe that there are "unscientific" expressions in the Bible, such as the sun's rising and setting, the four corners of the earth, etc. But it cannot be shown that there is even one expression that can be proven "unscientific" in the true sense of this term. The very fact that the Author of the Bible warns us against "false science" declares that he knows that there is such a thing as "true science," and this puts him on the side of the true.

"Science" defined: "Knowledge gained and verified by exact observation and correct thinking, especially as methodically formulated and arranged in a rational system; also the sum of universal knowledge." (Standard Dictionary.) This is the first definition of the term as given by most of the dictionaries, and there is no book in existence that meets every thought in it so completely as does the Bible.

Certainly the Bible makes no claim to being a book of science on biology, zoölogy, botany, astronomy, etc.; but it is correct to say that whenever it touches a point that belongs to such books of science, it shows beyond a doubt that its Author knows true science in those fields.

The specific purpose for which the Bible was written is declared to be man's good. All of its statutes were given "for our good always." (See Deut. 6: 24; 10: 13.) And it claims that all things else revealed along with the statutes, or "the law of right living" that it contains, were revealed to encourage us to "do all the words" of God's law to man. (Deut. 29: 29.) The Bible makes no claim to having been written to teach all about animal life, plant life, and the heavenly bodies; but it does claim to have been written for the specific purpose of showing man how to live for his greatest good and the greatest good of those with whom he daily associates. The question is: Is it scientific here? The answer is: One hundred per cent so. For, though it was finished more than eighteen hundred years ago, it has not been capable of a revision; for all the men that have lived on the earth since this law was given to man have been unable to give us another law just as good, to say nothing of giving us a better one. And here is a miracle within itself. All the books of science that man has written have to be revised because of mistakes he made while writing it and of facts he would learn later that he did not know while writing it. But here is a book finished centuries ago in which not one mistake can be found on how best to live, and out of which not one good thing was left on how best to live. Do you think uninspired man could have put up a job like this? As friends of the Book, we worry not, but, Jacoblike, we lie with our heads pillowed upon an immovable stone, and look at our enemies and smile, and tell them to get busy and write a book just as good as the one we have and we will listen to them. We will not impose upon them by calling for a better book, but one just as good as the Bible. Let fathers and mothers, parents and children, governments and peoples, all conduct themselves toward each other just as our Bible teaches them to do, and then let the infidel tell us how much better we could live than this, and what course we could pursue that would bring us and those with whom we live a greater

Not only does the Author of the Bible claim that man's greatest good is to be found in walking in the law he has given, but he selected one man and permitted him to try to find something else that would give man a greater joy. This man was Solomon. In the book of Ecclesiastes we find him going forth as a seeker till he should "see what was that good for the sons of men, which they should do under the heaven all the days of their life." (Eccles. 2: 3:) At the conclusion of his years of quest he says: "Let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter: Fear God, and keep his commandments: for this is the whole duty of man." (Eccles. 12: 13.)

So we have divine knowledge telling us how best to live. This knowledge is "verified by exact observation and correct thinking" by man. This makes it about as near universal knowledge as we could find. Yes, indeed, God's law on right living has been corroborated by every thoughtful soul that has known it and by it lived. And not one who has put it to a whole-hearted test has even dared suggest that man can find a greater good in some other way of living. And as to being "methodically formulated and arranged in a rational system," it is enough to say that "the wayfaring men, though fools, shall not err therein."

But just a word about the Author of the Bible's not knowing the earth is round and that it revolves on its axis as it journeys around the sun. I am glad to say that our Lord knew all about this before man ever dreamed of it. He permitted us to know that he knew that there is darkness on one side of the earth and people in their beds sleeping, while the other side is flooded with light and men in the field at work. Hence, he tells us that when he comes again it will be both day and night. Two will be in the bed, one taken and the other left; two will be in the field, one taken and the other left. He clearly shows that he knew it would have to be both day and night. (See Luke 17: 34; Matt. 24: 40, 41.)

Will some one tell-me how he knew this fifteen hundred years before man dreamed about such a thing? It was in 1543 that Copernicus published an exposition of his system of astronomy, in which he advanced the thought that the earth revolves on its axis about the sun. This position was taken also by Galileo, and he was put to death for so believing and teaching.

It would have been wholly unscientific for our Lord to have so come out on such questions as to raise them for controversy. He would have created another difficulty in his way in his effort to teach man how best to live. Would it have been scientific for our Lord to have gone about his teaching in a way to wholly thwart the purpose he had in view? Here is the wonder of the Bible. In all the efforts its Author made to show what is good for the sons of men, did he do one thing that would raise questions the settlement of which was germane to getting man to see how he ought to live? And the very way our Lord incidentally allows us to know that he knew the facts about the earth goes beyond man. What man could have had such knowledge, and so skillfully made it possible for subsequent generations to know that he knew all about it, yet so speak of it as to not raise that question in the minds of people who would have thought him crazy if he had come out fully on the facts in the case?

The Author of the Bible declares that he speaks of "things which be not as though they were." (See Rom. 4: 17.) He wrote a book for all time and for all the people that have lived and may yet live, for the ignorant and the learned. He had to speak of things as they appear to be, and not as they are. Hence, he speaks of the sun as rising and setting because it so appears to all observers. He speaks of the corners of the earth because it certainly appears that it is flat. For our God to have adopted that style of speech that would have made it necessary for him, along with the law on how best to live, to explain to an ignorant world every fact about the heaven and the earth and all things else that man did not know would have made it utterly impossible for him to teach man how to live, hence would have been absolutely unscientific in the true sense of the term.

Take the style of speech used by the Author of the Bible for the purpose intended, and let the enemy tell us what other style of speech he could have used and accomplished his purpose so well as he has. We have a book adapted to all ages and to all peoples on the earth. The purpose of the Bible demanded such. And its style of speech is so good that it is used even by those who have come to know many things the people did not know when it was finished, even by our "scientific" critics. Hence, we go on talking about the sun's rising and setting, the four quarters or corners and ends of the earth, and will ever continue to so do; for it is perfectly scientific, according to all the laws of language known to man, to speak of things as they appear to be.

No, the friends of the Bible are not worrying. We have nothing to fear. Let the enemy bray as much as he pleases. We quietly listen. And after they have done their talking, we, Samsonlike, can take the jawbone of the asses they make of themselves and drive the whole army to flight.

REAL HEROES.

BY HALL L. CALHOUN.

When the day seems dull and commonplace, too, And nothing seems really worth while to do; When you are sick at heart and tired in mind, And you get no response though thoughtful and kind;

When the load seems heavy and the road seems rough; When you long for kindness and meet with rebuff; When you are lonely and weary and all out of heart, And no one cares to take your part—

Then is the time to prove you're a man,
To take up your arms and do what you can.
'Twould be easy to quit and say, "I don't care"—
To show the white feather to all who are there.

But that's not the way to be brave and true, To show you have courage your part to do. So plunge in and fight, e'en if you fall; 'Twill prove you can rally at Duty's call.

'Tis then you'll be worthy the crown to wear, When you've proved you are willing His cross to bear. Then fight like a hero, do not falter nor quail; You'll surely win out, you never can fail.

The world may not heed it nor care at all, But your own heart will feel it and answer its call, And you'll stand a bit firmer for all that is right, If you do your best bravely in this hard fight.

Then stand true to duty whate'er it may be, The reward of your labors you some day will see; And when the real heroes in heaven are crowned, Among that blest number you are sure to be found.

There were no baptisms, but a new congregation was started with thirty-six members. Three confessed their wrongs in that they had been neglecting their duty in failing to attend church anywhere. They will meet in a hall, on the second floor, corner Spadia Road and Wilshire Avenue."

THE RIGHT MOTIVE, THE RIGHT PURPOSE, THE RIGHT THEME.

BY E. A. ELAM.

We should remember that the right motive for preaching and the right purpose to be accomplished by it suggest and lead to the right theme. A wrong motive and purpose suggest and lead to improper or wrong themes, because one's theme depends upon one's motive and purpose.

To begin with, Paul was a very great preacher, not in the eyes of the world and not in the eyes of the so-called "church" to-day, but in the eyes of God, because he was prompted only by the right motive and led only by the

One great thing with him was to have always a conscience void of offense toward God and men. After he became a Christian, and as a preacher of the gospel and teacher of the word of God, he said he "wronged no man," "corrupted no man," "took advantage of no man," and so deported himself if by any means he might win some

Just after his conversion, recorded in Acts 9: 1-18, he was certain days with the disciples that were in Damascus"-that is, he remained some time there, including his trip into Arabia and return to Damascus, which embraced three years. (Gal. 1: 17, 18.)

"And straightway," as he declares in Gal. 1: 16, without conferring "with flesh and blood," but by Revelation from God (Gal. 1: 12), "in the synagogues he proclaimed Jesus, that he is the Son of God," and "increased the more in strength, and confounded the Jews" who dwelt there, "proving that this [Jesus] is the Christ." (Acts 9: 20-22.) What a wonderful theme! To this all the promises and prophecies of the Old Testament led. Of Jesus of Nazareth, "Moses in the law, and the prophets, wrote." (John 1: 45.) "And beginning from Moses and from all the prophets, he interpreted to them in all the scriptures the things concerning himself." (Luke 24: 27.)

Emphasis must be placed on that which Paul and the apostles and evangelists of the New Testament preached. Paul charged Timothy to "remember Jesus Christ, risen from the dead, of the seed of David, according to my gospel: wherein I suffer hardship unto bonds, as a malefactor; but the word of God is not bound." (2 Tim. 2: 8, 9.) Paul "determined not to know anything, save Jesus Christ, and him crucified." (See 1 Cor. 2: 1-5.) In Thessalonica he affirmed and proved "that it behooved the Christ to suffer, and to rise again from the dead; and that this Jesus, whom, said he, I proclaim unto you, is the Christ." (See Acts 17: 1-3.) In Corinth, Paul testified "that Jesus was the Christ," and Apollos "powerfully confuted the Jews, and that publicly, showing by the scriptures that Jesus was the Christ." (Acts 18: 5, 28.) The main point of Peter's sermon on Pentecost was to convince the Jews "that God hath made him both Lord and Christ, this Jesus whom ye crucified." (Acts 2: 36.) Convinced of this, they asked what to do to be saved. "Every day, in the temple and at home," the apostles "ceased not to teach and to preach Jesus as the Christ." (Acts 5: 42.)

Jesus says it was necessary for him to "suffer, and rise again from the dead the third day," before "repentance and remission of sins" could "be preached in his name unto all the nations, beginning from Jerusalem." (Luke

Two things are true concerning Jesus of Nazareth, the Son of Mary-not of some other man whose name is "Jesus"-namely, he is (1) "the Son of the living God," "the only begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth," and (2) the Christ. He is the central figure of the Bible. All the promises and prophecies of the Old Testament find their fulfillment in him, because he is the fulfillment of the law and the prophets. (Matt. 5: 17, 18; Luke 24: 27, 44, 46.) All truths of the New Testament come from him. He is the embodiment of truth, the living Way, and the light of the world-" the way, the truth, and the life." (John 14: 6.) Without him, the whole Bible is false and the world is without a remedy for sin or a Savior. Thousands of preachers and tens of thousands of other people to-day seem not to know this central truth of the Bible, the power of God to save, and the only thing to be preached and practiced.

The preachers and churches, as a whole, to-day, instead of preaching as did the apostles and setting before the world Jesus as he is-the Son of God, the Christ, the Savior, "the King of kings, and Lord of lords "-leave him in the background and preach and teach almost everything else. Some seem to have but little regard for the word of God. This is said because they heed not God's charge to "preach the word," to know nothing "save Jesus Christ, and him crucified," and disregard all he says about avoiding strife, untaught questions, and many other things.

The Jews, as a people, did not believe that Jesus of Nazareth was the Messiah. Convinced of that, they were ready to become Christians. Depreciating Jesus to-day as Prophet or Teacher, Priest and King, is infidelity. All learning and all knowledge which is not sanctified by faith in him and which is not used to his glory is a curse. All theories and all teaching in schools, colleges, universities, and by all preachers, which depreciates his authority as Lord of lords and King of kings, is a partial denial, at least, if not a complete denial, of him as the Son of God and Savior of the world, and destroys faith in the Bible.

Moses and Joshua accomplished much because they were willing for God to be commander-in-chief .- Exchange.

NOTES ABOUT THE WEST.

BY F. B. SRYGLEY.

I closed the work that I went to the West to do on the second Sunday in August, but at the solicitation of the Sichel Street Church, of Los Angeles, Cal., and my friend and brother, E. C. Fuqua, I spent fifteen days in a meeting with the Sichel Street Church.

About thirty-eight years ago, when Ed Fuqua was a boy twelve years old, I baptized him, with about thirty-seven others, at Berea Church, in Wilson County, Tenn. I was his moderator in his first public discussion, which was with a Baptist preacher and school-teacher. Ed was a boy then, and a little awkward in his manner, but it was clear to all that he was equal to the occasion, and I am sure that the truth has never suffered in his hands in a public discussion. He is familiar with the Bible, and nothing that his opponent can do or say can possibly disturb him. His work as a preacher has been of the pioneer character, and he has endured hardships "as a good soldier of Jesus Christ." He has only stopped for an indefinite period with the Sichel Street Church; and while he preaches for the church on Sunday when not otherwise engaged, he is busy all the time through the week printing tracts and circulating them wherever he can do good. It is fortunate that he should have fallen among such good people who can and will help him in all of his needs. There have been few more self-sacrificing men than E. C.

I preached fifteen days with and for the brethren who worship on Sichel Street. There was a good audience at every meeting, and there were eight baptized and one reclaimed. The visible results were good, they said, for Los Angeles. I have preached for larger congregations, but I do not know that I ever preached for one where as near all the membership attended every service. I have held meetings where many of the members loved the ancient gospel and liked to hear it preached plainly, but I do not know that I ever preached for a church where all the members loved all the gospel any better than the church at Sichel Street does. No one, so far as I could tell, desired to hear anything but the word of God. They are a quiet people, not especially running around over town trying to "build up the church," but are content to have the word, which is the seed, preached, both by precept and example, and allow the church to "grow up" as the result. Those who know G. W. Riggs, W. F. Andrews, E. C. Fuqua, and others of that church, will not expect them to resort to claptrap and other fads and fancies to build up anything. These men will rely on the gospel as the power of God unto salvation, and that which the gospel builds up will be a divine building.

Mrs. Srygley was with me in this meeting, and the whole church did all they could for our pleasure. We saw more wonderful things than we ever expected to see in this life. I would say they carried us everywhere, but some of my Northern friends object to the word "carry" in this connection. Well, they hauled us through the orange groves, the walnut groves, and the flower gardens. They took us to every prominent beach and across a part of the sea to Catalina Island. This entire island, save, perhaps, the town of Catalina, is owned by William Wrigley, the chewing-gum king, of Chicago. This man also owns a fine home in Pasadena, and this is but a small portion of his property. Some people have been chewing to "beat the band," or he never could have bought all this property. It seems to me that the American people have spent a lot of money on chewing gum and moving pictures, as well as We made our home with W. F. Andrews, whom I knew at Schocho, Ky. Brother F. W. Smith claims the honor of starting him on the divine way. That was a great meeting, Brother Smith, if no others made the start at that time, Brother Andrews never fails to say a tender word for F. W. Smith, and it will be a happy meeting when these two strike hands on the golden shore of eternity.

We left Los Angeles for San Francisco on the morning of August 31. We spent that night with W. Halliday Trice in San Francisco. We had a pleasant visit with Brother and Sister Trice and their five fine boys. They love the church and are especially interested in its growth in that city. We visited the Golden Gate Park, which runs entirely across the city a distance of some four miles and ends on the bluff overlooking the Golden Gate. We saw many strange and beautiful things in this park, but we were especially interested in the many fish which we saw there. They were of all sizes and all colors. The heads of some were golden in color back to and including the gills, while the body was as black as coal and had the appearance of velvet. They were so strange that Mrs. Srygley insisted that they had been painted; but if they had, they must have used very fast colors, as I saw no tendency in them to fade. I did not know that the waters of this country contained such a variety of fish. We followed the park till we stood on the bluff overlooking the Golden Gate. Here stands a flagpole at the western end of the Lincoln Highway. I have traveled that same road in Colorado and in Indiana and perhaps some other States. It runs from the Atlantic on the east to the Pacific on the west, and in doing so it belts the best country on the face of the earth. God has done much for this country, but the country as a whole has not appreciated it by even acknowledging the existence of God. Here for the first time I saw the Golden Gate, which is the narrow passage from San Francisco Bay into the great Pacific Ocean. It was named "Golden Gate" by Sir Francis Drake, probably in 1578. I had heard of the Golden Gate all of my life, but this was the first time I ever saw it.

We left San Francisco at 4 P.M., September 1, crossed the San Francisco Bay in a large transport boat, and saw the sun through the Golden Gate as it was nearly ready to set. It was a great sight to me, and I will never forget it. After crossing the bay, we took passage on a Southern Pacific train for Chicago. We reached Chicago at 4 P.M., September 4, having traveled twenty-two hundred and sixty miles in seventy hours. I had to move up my watch twice, and I got so I had little idea of the time of day or night. If I had stopped the thing, it would have been right twice each day; but as it was, it may not have been right at all. I am now back in Nashville, and it is a good place to be; but I must confess that it appears a little hot to me just now, as I have been in the high altitude of New Mexico and Colorado and the ocean breezes of California for seventy and two days. I traveled about seven thousand miles, preached sixty-seven times, and never missed a meal or an appointment.

"THE AGE OF CONTROVERSY."

BY F. W. SMITH.

Under the subject, "Vast Changes in Religious Thinking," W. D. Van Voorhis, in the Christian-Evangelist of July 30, says many fine things, especially regarding the effect upon the religious world of the "Declaration and Address" by Thomas Campbell and the movement inaugurated to restore the church of the New Testament.

But, to my mind, a complete surrender is made of the ground gained by the heroic souls who fought under the motto, "Where the Scriptures speak, we will speak; and where the Scriptures are silent, we will be silent," by the following:

How any man can fail to become enthusiastic about the "Declaration and Address" when he considers the state of religion in 1809, I cannot understand—warring sects, clashing creeds. No wonder good men were sick at heart. No wonder they longed to be at rest. But many changes have come since then. For thirty years I have been a member of ministerial associations. I have received nothing but courtesy from my brethren. What changes have been wrought in the minds of ministers and the policies of denominations! Our older men still remind us that "without controversy great is the mystery of godliness"—with their own interpretation—but the age of controversy is the problem of the problem. happily past, and we are busy to-day getting the will of God done on earth as it is in heaven.

It must be a strange enthusiasm generated by the "Declaration and Address" that causes one to write as does the author of the above excerpt. It seems that our brother is wholly unconscious of the fact that he is woefully out of harmony, not only with that "address," but with the whole life work of those grand men who sought to restore New Testament teaching.

It seems that not only has there been a radical change in our brother's "thinking," but also in his religious practice, if he was ever in harmony with what are termed "the fathers of the restorative movement."

That "movement" in its clearly enunciated principles left no room for a compromise with denominationalism, the doctrines and traditions of men, with which Brother Van Voorhis has been affiliating for the past thirty years as "a member of ministerial associations." In such associations, he says, "I have received nothing but courtesy from my brethren."

Exactly so. Why should he not receive such courtesy while surrendering the truth by such affiliation? Did his "brethren" of the "ministerial associations" discard their denominational tenets, human creeds, and sectarian names in order to promote such courteous treatment toward our brother?

At the time of his membership in those "ministerial associations," did Brother Van Voorhis ever even intimate to his very courteous brethren that the New Testament taught "immersion" only as baptism, and that baptism was in order to the remission of past sins? Did he ever contend with his "ministerial brethren" that denominational organizations were unscriptural and should be abandoned? Did he combat the theory of a direct or immediate operation of the Holy Spirit upon the heart of the sinner to convert him? In short, did Brother Van Voorhis contend against any of the errors and unscriptural practices of his "ministerial brethren" in a way to impress them that he did not indorse such?

Had Brother Van Voorhis obeyed the injunction, "Contend earnestly for the faith which was once for all delivered unto the saints" (Jude 3), does any one believe for a moment that he would have received such "courtesy" from his "ministerial brethren?" If so, the "ministerial brethren" in that neck of the woods differ very materially from those in these parts.

THE CHANGES WROUGHT.

With an exclamation our brother says: "What changes have been wrought in the minds of ministers and the policies of denominations!" The brother is seemingly in the condition of the man who was so intoxicated that he thought everybody was drunk. He has become so liberal (?) in his views that he imagines a great change has taken place with "ministers and the policies of denominations," when, in fact, the only change that has taken place is in himself.

If Brother Van Voohis will point out one vital change that has taken place in the preaching of his "ministerial brethren" regarding conversion and the conditions of salvation, and the polity, or church government, in the denominational world, this journal will take pleasure in publishing it.

THE AGE OF CONTROVERSY.

Our brother says: "But the age of controversy is happily past, and we are busy to-day getting the will of God done on earth as it is in heaven." Now, this would be deliciously sweet if one could conscientiously shut his eyes to the actual state of things and swallow it. But those who love the truth of God are constrained to ask: With whom is the "age of controversy past," and with whom did controversy for the truth's sake begin?

It certainly did not pass with either Jesus Christ or his apostles, and neither will it ever pass with the true followers of Christ so long as religious error is taught and practiced. No one to-day, any more than in the days of our Lord's personal ministry, can be "busy getting the will of God done on earth as it is in heaven" without opposing the doctrines and commandments of men.

The kind of religious teachers that Van Voorhis shows himself to be is what has played "havoc" in many quarters with "our plea," or the movement to restore the church of the New Testament. He has become so denominationalized and sectarianized that he does not know himself from his brethren of the "ministerial associations."

Whenever a preacher or a church begins to "oppose" henorable and gentlemanly controversy over religious matters, they are too soft to preserve, too tender-footed for good soldiers of Jesus Christ. All such are real hindrances to the progress of Christianity, and they, in justice to the cause of our Lord, should go to the people with whom they are in harmony,

A CLEARER RING.

The Christian Standard, while somewhat besmirched itself with sectarianism, is a decided improvement over the Christian-Evangelist. On the subject of "Federation vs. Unity," the Standard remarks:

Unity," the Standard remarks:

It was no sadder day for the Hebrew people when they exchanged the worship of the true God for the idolatry of the nations than for the church of Christ when it exchanged the Christ himself, as the center of the Christian system, for denominational doctrines and the tenets of sectarianism. The former was no more a flagrant wrong than is the latter. Sin is sin, idolatry is idolatry, disobedience is disobedience. The mystic union of the denominationalists and the spiritual unity for which the Savior prayed are as far apart as the poles. The Savior prayed not for federations of sects, but for the unity of his followers. Only by the destruction of sectarianism can unity be restored.

All this talk, so popular in denominational circles, about unity in diversity is the silliest possible avoidance of the issue. Think of a church which is a federation of sectarian churches! Who is able to make plain to an ordinary mind the faith of such a church? Yet, we are asked to believe that such is the church of our Redeemer. What alternative has it between calling upon the man out of Christ either to choose his own way of salvation and accept an alignment that must put up walls of partition in the very house of God, or else of swallowing apostolic succession, special call, foreordination, predestination, free salvation, and the whole of the foibles of theologians at one and the same time? What explanation can such a church have for its existence, in the light of the Word, beyond the desire to camouflage the sin of sectarianism? Its very formation is a confession of both the presence of evil and the purpose to compromise with it rather than eradicate it.

Had the Standard adhered as closely to the Book in eradicate it.

Had the Standard adhered as closely to the Book in former days on this and some other things as it does in the above, it would not now be calling for "Restoration rallies" in an effort to get its forces back to New Testament teaching.

OPENING OF DAVID LIPSCOMB COLLEGE.

David Lipscomb College began its thirty-fifth session last Wednesday. Opening exercises were held in the chapel at 10 A.M., in the presence of a large audience of friends and patrons of the school. Gordon H. Turner, superintendent of Public Instruction, Maury County, Tenn., and G. C. Brewer, of Sherman, Texas, made addresses. Addresses were also made by E. A. Elam, president of the Board of Directors, and G. M. Pullias, secretary and treasurer of the board.

H, Leo Boles, president of the college, announced that the faculty had been strengthened by the addition of Prof. E. L. Darnell, Prof. Leonidas T. Holland, and Prof. C. P. Poole. Prof. Darnell will have charge of the Commercial Department, Professor Holland will have charge of the Music Department, and Professor Poole will have charge of the Department of Science. Nine of the men on the faculty hold M.A. degrees.

David Lipscomb College begins this session with the largest enrollment in its history. Many States are represented in the student body. The school offers a four-year college course, and there is a good enrollment in senior college work. During the summer many improvements have been made on the college buildings. All available space has been taken, students having to be turned away.

Christians should rejoice over the existence of such schools as David Lipscomb College. The problem of educating our children is a serious one. What are we to think of parents who send their children to schools where pert and egotistical, infidel teachers slyly poison their minds and blast their happiness for time and eternity? Let us have more schools and better schools, and let our great brotherhood patronize them and sustain them.

FANNING ORPHAN SCHOOL OPENING.

The Fanning Orphan School opened its forty-second session on September 7. Under the efficient management of Brother David Lipscomb, Jr., it opens with the largest enrollment in its history. The buildings are filled to their capacity, Brother Lipscomb having had to reluctantly turn away ten applicants in the last few days.

None of the pupils pay the rates usually charged by boarding schools. All charges are low. The school is carrying entirely free of charge more than sixty pupils. Certain of the churches are supporting pupils in the school, paying the low charge. Churches so doing are to be commended. Other congregations desiring to support pupils may so do. They may assist the school in the good work it is doing by selecting any of those being carried free and making arrangements for their support.

The Fanning Orphan School, in a quiet and unpretentious manner, is accomplishing a great work. Churches and individuals will honor God and do good to themselves and others by assisting in its maintenance. Let us remember the unfortunate condition many would be in were it not for such institutions. Every pupil studies a Bible lesson under a competent teacher every day.

- F. B. Srygley began a meeting at Yell, near Lewisburg, Tenn., last Lord's day.
- J. D. Matthews changes his address from Marietta, Okla., to Davenport, Okla.
- W. H. Neill, Huntsville, Ala., September 8: "Luther F. Browning closed a meeting with the Shiloh congregation on August 31, with four baptized. I preached twice for the Merrimack congregation on last Lord's day, and two were restored."
- C. E. Holt, Iron City, Tenn., September 8: "The meeting at Richmond, Tenn., resulted in eighteen baptisms. Our meeting at Iron City is making good progress, with eight baptized to date. Gilbert E. Shaffer, of Lawrenceburg, Tenn., is our song leader."

- W. F. Lemmons, Tyler, Texas, September 12: "I preached on Saturday night, Sunday, and Sunday night at Bogata, Texas, to interested crowds. I am to hold a mission meeting at Giles, near Pecan Gap, a community well located and thickly settled with Baptists and other sects. The meeting will begin on September 19."
- F. F. Hickey, Coal Creek, Tenn., September 9: "After teaching a neighbor the truth as it is in Christ Jesus last Lord's-day night, he demanded baptism at my hands the next afternoon, at which time he was buried with his Lord in baptism, to arise to walk in newness of life. This was my first convert to baptize. Pray for me, that I may live a life worthy to preach the gospel."
- T. B. Larimore, Cookeville, Tenn., August 31: "I came to Cookeville last Friday, expecting to preach here twice yesterday and start to Washington this morning via Knoxville; but I have been unable to sit up since I came, and am still in bed—trouble with my back—lumbago, Dr. McClain says. Of course, I did not expect to be sick when I came to Cookeville, notwithstanding I had a touch of this trouble in Nashville, but it was certainly fortunate for me that I reached the Whitson home here before I submitted to the inevitable. I hope to be well within a few days, and we shall reach Washington as early as we can."
- J. L. Hines, Mount Juliet, Tenn., August 28: "For nearly two weeks I preached under a tent at Adams, Tenn., closing last night. We had overflowing crowds from the start. There were eight baptized (all, except one, over fifty years of age), one from the Baptists, and one from the Methodists. Prejudice was to a great extent removed. People attended these services who had never before heard a Christian preacher preach. Emerson Simpkins led the songs, and did it well. Last night a business meeting was called, plans were laid for erecting a church home and one thousand dollars raised. I am to begin on September 2 at Cold Springs, Tenn."
- M. L. Moore, Sellersburg, Ind., September 1: "We started a revival with the church of Christ at this place in the name of the Lord on Sunday. Just before coming to this place I was with the church at Red Boiling Springs, Tenn., in a meeting of two weeks' duration. The Lord greatly blessed us in the meeting, and six were added to the congregation there. While there I was within sixteen miles of my old home in Clay County, Tenn. A number from the old home came to the meeting, and I had the pleasure of hearing Willie Hunter, of Tompkinsville, Ky, in the schoolhouse in my old home district. From here I go to Lynchburg, Tenn., where I feel that the Lord has used me at least in a small way for his glory."

QUERY DEPARTMENT

BY H. LEO BOLES

Was Judas Iscariot saved? Some Baptists say he took the Lord's Supper and repented and was saved.—R. C. Wharton, Martin, Tenn.

No. I do not believe that Judas Iscariot, who betrayed the Savior, was saved in heaven. Peter, in leading in the selection of one to take Judas' place, quotes as follows: "For it is written in the book of Psalms, Let his habitation be made desolate, and let no man dwell therein: and, His office let another take." (Acts 1: 20.) After Judas betrayed the Savior, he committed suicide. He hanged himself. His betrayal was committed after the Lord's Supper had been given. He could not have repented of hanging himself after his death. The New Testament Scriptures were all written by inspiration after Judas' death, and there is no intimation whatsoever that he was saved. Every reference to him brands him as a traitor and leaves the impression that he was unsaved.

Please answer the following questions as fully as your space will permit: (1) What should be the attitude of other members of a congregation toward members that have been withdrawn from? (2) When persons have been scripturally withdrawn from and some one denies the authority of the church to exercise discipline, should be be dealt with, and how?—J. G. ALLEN, Muskogee, Okla.

1. It all depends upon whether one has been scripturally withdrawn from. If a member has done wrong, and all scriptural ways and means have been used in a scriptural way to get the wrongdoer to repent and he still remains impenitent, and if the church follows the Scriptures in the spirit of Christ and withdraws from a member, then every other member should sustain the same attitude toward the one from whom the church has withdrawn that the church itself sustains. In fact, when the church withdraws, that means that every member of the church withdraws fellowship. So often blunders are made in attempting to discipline a member. Frequently one faction of a congregation attempts to discipline another faction. scripturally bound to respect any action of a faction of the church when that faction has acted in a partisan spirit. Matters are always made worse by such action.
